Now, as to the question of prohibition and kindred topics. Whenever the advocates of that policy convince me of the truth of three propositions, or any one of them, then my convictions will be changed, and I will be prepared to go any lengths with them in suppressing the making, selling or using of all wines and liquors. The three propositions are these:

1. It is inherently sinful to use wines or spirituous liquors.

2. Jesus committed a great sin when he wrought his first miracle by turning water into wine.

3. The advocates of total prohibition are wiser and better than their Lord and Master.

All of which propositions it is needless to say I deny first, last and always. Furthermore, I contend that it is neither right nor expedient that either the church or the State should undertake to prohibit the use of liquors, because it is not morally wrong to drink wine or whisky. To drink to drunkenness is no greater sin than to eat to gluttony or to fast to excess to illthinness.

T. L. MELTON.

Obituaries.

LEWIS.—Died in Jackson parish, La., [illegible] January 1, 1881, Mrs. MARY REBECCA LEWIS, of the late Hon. Thos. H. Lewis, of Opelousas, about seventy-five years.

My mother was born on the Blue Juniata, in Sylvania, about the year 1805. Her maiden was Pennepacker, and she was descended Henrich P., noted in the early history of that She became a Methodist when quite young, perienced some sort of trouble in consequence her early life, however, I know but little. She married at the age of seventeen, but lived, I believe, scarcely a year; and left She then moved South, taught school three Memphis, and thence to New Orleans, In 1834 she married my father, Fisher Rawwhom she lived until his death in 1846. She mained in New Orleans until she married Col. an old friend of both my parents, in 1858, removed to Opelousas. Col. Lewis died war, and she lived in Opelousas until years ago, when she came to live with me. not at all satisfied with her surroundings character of the country, church privileges being so very different to what she had been used to. Her mind also lost its tone, and childish. Always given to melancholy, year of her life was sad in excess thereof. bore her trials and privations with patience mother was too well known by a large friends to need much from me, yet I desire the story of her life, like that of many other ful ones, will prove a blessing to the reader.

She had but three weeks schooling and inspired a respectable education and a good knowledge. She had very diverse experiences those surrounded with the comforts of life others battling with poverty, yet under all stances she was ever the faithful Christian, and spending to the full limit of her [illegible] young Christians owed their first impressions to her warning and counsel. My minister has been encouraged by her words and comfort. She loved the church, Methodist without bigotry or selfishness, just, as she had opportunity, labored for church and her race. It was her [illegible] and only to hark in her bible the texts of the preachers she heard, but also [illegible] their sermons, and among her papers was this made of the ministers who officiated since for several years past. She kept up with most of her late pastors until her eyesight failed so much. The Sunday school was her joy, letters among her papers from several who thus communed with her after the parish. I could say more, must fear to exceed due limits. I have by means "As one mourneth for his mother I could have her again, and yet I have wish for her. I have no doubt she is freed from all infirmities of flesh and the robes of the redeemed, and with [illegible] fingers the harp of a heavenly was no worker with Whom to make others who crossed the flood, and I see as she walks those golden streets with who preceded her, and I fancy I can their voices as they tell their wanderer glorify his name whose grace led them

Dying in her condition there was [illegible] her departure for some days before did not speak, and when she spoke words, but if I read the Lord's will doubt as to meeting her among the CAMMACK.—Mrs. ALICE CAMMACK Simpson county, Miss., July 6, 1831, home in Tipton county, Miss., forty-nine years, eight months and was the daughter of Pheriba and E and my father were married February was converted and joined the Methodist in 1853.

How dear to my heart are the memories mother! yet how difficult for me to picture the many beautiful traits of her plainly manifested in the every-day life; her sweetness of temper, her gentle position; her gentle spirit; her sacred and happy smiles which greeted every one she met; her desire to please everybody; ing efforts to support, train and educate her unceasing prayers at the throne of little ones, her words of advice and counsel none but a loving mother knows how patience of hope, and labor of love in ness; her devotion to God, and really meek submission to all the dispensations dence, these are some of the lovely traits which beautified and adorned the mother, and rendered her a model in the of life, as a mother devoted and tender and daughter, obedient and affectionate, ber, true, thoughtful and obliging as than, forgiving and forbearing.

My mother was energetic, industrious, in all her household affairs. She was grateful in entertaining strangers, her open-hearted, her table bountifully supplied, often has the weary itinerant minister, while journeying from post to post in the of his duties, found a well prepared and lodging under her roof.

My mother made no loud profession religion. She was not demonstrative, but ever ready on suitable occasions to the hope that was in her, and like a [illegible] ready, willing and anxious to go and to be buried with the people of

This being the way and manner of her then how easy to tell how she died. glorious and triumphant. She passed spirit land as quietly, calmly and sun on a still October evening. No [illegible] to die. She only began to [illegible] without a mother to teach and [illegible] my mournful pleasure to be present [illegible] visited her last illness, but I never see her again in the flesh. I [illegible] to return to my distant field of [illegible] preaching her on the subject of [illegible] am just here, I know not why. I am willing and ready to die, perfectly happy; I feel that God [illegible] release from all my bodily suffering and in a short time I received the [illegible] aged and bereaved father: "Mother is dead. She passed away like the [illegible] until the oil is spent. She suffered a cough was almost incessant, no rest, sleep, but her body, which [illegible] now at rest. Oh, how calm and [illegible] will never see her dear face in this [illegible] in this life, but there is a [illegible] vision made for a happy reunion [illegible] where there will be no more pain [illegible] with friends, but all will be [illegible] ever. One more day and I shall [illegible] mother's face for the last time in [illegible] final bye for you and me. The [illegible] have is the hope of meeting again [illegible] of the river of death, where [illegible] and where beauty smiles like a [illegible] flower."

Yes, dear father, you have lost a [illegible] have lost a tender mother. The [illegible] friend and the church a consistent [illegible] has gained heaven. She has conquered enemy. She has fought the last battle won and she has gone to inherit the [illegible] which remaineth for the people of God. the sunshine of bright delirance, to the angels, to sing sweet songs of [illegible] gaze with wonder and admiration upon [illegible] powers and wisdom, and goodness God, forever and forever. Then to ones, a mother, two brothers, two sisters, ten children, ten grandchildren, many friends, weep not, but say the will of [illegible] and endeavor from this moment to [illegible] broken family in heaven. What a [illegible] be!

KEITH.—Died, March 12, [illegible] Daisy, infant daughter of Rev. W. [illegible] Keith, of the Arkansas Conference, [illegible] in Northport, Alabama, February [illegible] indeed, a lovely infant—beautiful [illegible] perception, and sweet disposition, [illegible] developing into the most promising [illegible] loss is the more painful because [illegible] child in that happy little home.

Marriages.

BARHAM—PARHAM.—At St. Charles Avenue Methodist Church in New Orleans, on Tuesday, April 12, 1881, at 1 P. M., by Rev. John Matthews, Miss Mary Hunt Parham, youngest daughter of John G. and Mrs. Mary T. Parham, of New Orleans, to Dr. David Barrow, son of Mrs. Susan A. and the late David Barrow, of East Feliciana parish.

Nashville and Richmond Christian Advocates please copy.

ROSE—HOPE.—At the residence of the bride's mother, March 24, 1881, by Rev. T. S. Ruddle, Mr. R. F. Rose to Miss Ida K. Hope, all of Morehouse parish, La.

NEWTON—ROSS.—At the residence of the bride's mother, April 13, 1881, by Rev. T. S. Ruddle, Dr. L. J. Newton, Jr., of Hamburg, Ark., to Miss Lucie Ross, of Bastrop, La.

ROGERS—WYNN.—At the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Wm. Wynn, April 13, 1881, by the Rev. George W. Brown, Mr. John F. Rogers, of Louisiana, to Miss Mary F. Wynn, of Attala county, Miss.

FINLAYSON—THORNTON.—At the residence of the bride's father, Dr. Thornton, at Centreville, Newton county, Miss., April 10, 1881, by Rev. J. L. Peebles, Mr. D. G. Finlayson to Miss Alice Thornton.

EDWARDS—MAGEE.—At the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Gabrielle Collins, April 14, 1881, by Rev. B. S. Rayner, Walter Edwards, son of Major Edwards, to Miss Mary William Magee, all of Washington parish, La.

BRACEY—RAWLS.—At the residence of the bride's father, in Terry, Miss., April 20, 1881, by Rev. W. H. Leith, Mr. Geo. G. Bracey to Miss Augusta A. Rawls.

FORD—NEELY.—At the residence of Mr. Benjamin Washburn, in Franklin parish, La., March 24, 1881, by Rev. A. C. Coney, Mr. S. J. Ford to Miss Emily Neely, both of Franklin parish, La.

LEA—PURTLE.—At the Methodist Church in Wesson, Miss., March 9, 1881, by Rev. W. B. Lewis, Mr. L. L. Lea and Miss Rispie Purtle.

KIMBALL—LEA.—At the residence of the bride's mother, in Wesson, Miss., March 31, 1881, by Rev. W. B. Lewis, Mr. S. T. Kimball and Miss Lea.

HOSKINS—McLEAN.—At the Methodist Church in Brookhaven, Miss., April 5, 1881, by Rev. W. B. Lewis, Mr. J. W. Hoskins and Miss E. B. McLean.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, APRIL 28, 1881.

WAITING.

wailing and wishing our courses we pave;
ail for the port as we battle the wave;
railing forever from cradle to grave.

ing for morn, so serene in its light;
ng for noonday, so brilliantly bright;
ng at eve for repose in the night.

ng for zephyrs in spring time that blow,
ng for summer and flowers that grow;
ng for winter and swift falling snow.

ng is ever the bosom's refrain,
oments of pleasure and moments of pain,
ng, though stricken again and again.

ng in childhood for youth's joyous time;
ailing," says youth, "but I'll certainly climb
e top of the ladder on reaching my prime."

anhood awaiting the time when he may rest in a calmer, a happier day, are shall relieve from the worrying fray.

ng when fortune spreads brightly her smile;
choice are the pleasures the pathway be-ile, always is something to wait for the while.

ng in poverty, anguish, and grief,
ng for heaven to send us relief,
g the heart that the trial is brief.

ailing for joys that will never appear;
g for voices we never shall hear;
g for moments that never are near.

g when sinning and worn in the strife,
weetest forebodings the bosom is rife,
g the dawn of a holier life.

ng at last for the spirit's release;
g a rest in the Dwelling of Peace, wailing and longing forever will cease.

Missionary Address.

ed by MRS. E. C. DOWELL, President of the Alabama Conference Woman's Missionary Society, at the session at Union Springs, Ala., April 8-9, 1881.

words, "I that speak unto thee" was the first distinct announce- recorded of the Messiahship of ord. He had left Jerusalem after assover, going into the country his disciples. Hearing of the im- ment of John, he sought to re- himself and his followers, yet from the dark shadows of the San- n, and the immediate vicinity of ody-minded tyrant, Herod.

iding the beaten track of the val- the Jordan, he takes the more ri- ute to Galilee, through the bean- historic, but despised country of maritans. At noon, foot-sore and , they arrive at the memorable of Sychar. The disciples left ffere alone, while they repaired neighboring city to buy food. It ot the hour the women of the city y resorted thither; but for some , wonderfully momentous to her, an of Samaria came, at that ha hour, to draw water. Who could gested the result of that inter- tween Christ and the despised -sinner in the worst acceptation term, as applied to womanhood; versation, introduced by our was not so much to satisfy thirst, draw her away from her low plane ught, up to the comprehension of me truths about to be revealed . I. That God is a spirit, and hat worship him, must worship spirit and in truth, and then, therto unrevealed fact, that he, pe of Israel, the Messiah, who tell her all things was even peaking to her. The revelation ade in this obscure, sinful wo- was received with unquestioning , and, immediately obeying the impulse within, she forgot her ot, forgot she was of no repute, everything, but that Messiah had and going to the city, she, the issionary of the new dispensa- vited to Christ the men of her and "many believed on him, for ying of the woman." This led o Jesus, and many more believed, two days he tarried with them, ring on the inhabitants of that songs, eternity can alone unfold. e been thus minute in the narra- the story, so familiar to the read- the New Testament, that you directed to one point particu- The use our Saviour makes of ry lowliest, poorest, most insig- t ones. In his moulding hands ullest clay becomes the life ing, beautiful statue, the veriest d reed, gives forth music, charm- ieglected ears. Timid, shrinking an, women, take courage from l know that whatsoever is com- d you of the Lord, you will be strength for the doing. Recall ur, when first you recognized a personal Saviour. You re- with a glad heart the one talent and with no thought of hiding he precious gift, the impulse was, , without choice language, to o the good news abroad, to give he glory, and induce others to nd partake alike of this priceless ng as this spirit of loving grati- l-obedience was followed, the rned brightly on the altar of eart, and the fruits of the spirit ours. But soon, alas too soon! merciless foe, Satan, not with d frost and frost greet," but in rs low, soft and sweet suggests: give yourself all this concern, wenty one talent, others possess- , five, ten, are comfortably com- and not wearing themselves out g so rapidly in this race; take e quietly, reflect on the best s of investment and be sure you ber, first of all it is written, y begins at home." "Well," you shall I build a family altar, o lay securely the precious e? That is rather a public place, might be misplaced by strangers n where, oh where shall I my Lord's money, that it may nd increase mightily for him?" you are shrinking and hesita- our arch enemy comes again, is his wont, quotes scripture: into thy closet, shut to the door." eans family religion, home in- You accept this cross, so for it is so easy to carry it a lit- le in the closet; no danger of under it in the public high- of being thought a "fool for sake," or beside yourself, and erly come to the conclusion, or better say, yield to the ten- and your one talent is safely away in the closet under lock . There is no danger now, says who since the hour the words oken: "the seed of the woman ruise the serpents head," has been 's unrelenting, unflagging foe; in his persistent efforts for her nd through her, the ruin of the take your talent out with you, n the spirit's pleadings. "Oh ys Satan, "take it out occasion- w it to the children and a few friends; indeed, you may even carry it to church or commune, if you desire; but keep it in your own bosom. If a revival occasion comes, you will thus be ready and can easily double it."

All will be decently done. No fanaticism, no conspicuous peculiarity, and be certain you remember, it is also written: "If you wish to learn anything, ask your husband at home." Be quiet, be gentle, hush, hush; and the world approves this sentiment and the flesh shrinks back, and you give place. Meanwhile the utterances of the spirit grow fainter and fainter, until at last only its sighings are heard at long intervals, and you sink back into that common and respectable type of passive Christianity which now so effectually hinders the progress Zion. What at the beginning, was felt to be the natural emotion of a free born child of God, is now characterized as the untempered zeal of a young convert; something to be endured by those who have outgrown that sort of demonstration, sneered at by the large majority of the unconverted church members who fill our pews so comfortably. Satan is delighted—he has us now where he can softly leave us, at ease in Zion—slumbering, sleeping, your precious one talent, robed in its snowy garment, refined, buried.

When the Master comes demanding his own with usury, what will be your plea? Lord, I was a woman, ignorant, timid, had no influence; I was not constituted like Hannah, nor Ruth, and you did not place me in responsible positions like Deborah, and Esther, and as for Phebe and Dorcas, they were dubbed the Mrs.-Jellabys of modern times, and so it was impossible to take their roles. Not being a strong minded person of the women's rights order, I left to my more prudely organized sisters, church work and missionary enterprise. But, notwithstanding all this, I am esteemed an excellent woman, and will adorn heaven if all that is said of me is true. I bestow all of my goods that I can spare from my comfort, to feed the poor. I go regularly to church, pay my dues, am not forgetful to entertain all the distinguished persons who visit our city, ministers included. I think on the whole I have done my duty; and though I only claim to be an humble, poor Christian, yet I am a very good woman. Do I overdraw the picture? Is not the church filled to-day with a self-complacency, a selfishness astonishing to angels, amusing to devils, and is it not this spirit that will at last boldly assert; "I knew thee, Lord a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strewn; and I was afraid and went and hid thy talent, lo, there thou hast that is thine." Our dear brethern of the ministry are party responsible for this, for they tell us constantly we are the life of the church, the Aarons, and Hurs, who are holding up their hands in all church enterprise. My sisters, let us not deceive ourselves, nor forget we are the wives and mothers of the malefactistic, worldly men of the age, and the churches. We have failed to impress even our own households with the divine reality of our religion.

Come then, while we have opportunity from this strong little citadel of self, that the chivalrous world, and also the church, has so kindly helped us to build around ourselves. Here in this organized field of labor, the Woman's Missionary Society, we offer you a place for your undeveloped energies—here you may put out at interest your one talent. Those who have already entered upon this work will bear me out in the statement, that not so much for the heathen world after all are we laboring, but we find that this work is telling on our own homes and churches, for good in a greater rate, than it is for China, Mexico or Brazil. Ours is a faithful God, and it is true, eternally true, that "there is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." Proverbs xi, 24. Read the Prophet Haggai, and consider the condition of those living temples of the most High God. To you he saith: "Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat but ye have not enough; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages, earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes. Ye looked for much, and lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it. Why? saith the Lord of hosts. Because of mine house that is waste. Therefore, the heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit."

In the survey of the work proposed by our organization, I confess to a decided opinion that to concentrate our efforts on China would best advance the kingdom of Christ in the whole earth. It is unnecessary that I quote Bishop Marvin's utterances on this subject. He felt this empire was the key to all heathendom, and possessing this we had the whole. I would call your attention to another fact in this connection. The Chinese women need our help more than do those of Mexico or Brazil. The women of the last mentioned countries, have a form of idolatry as far above that of the Eastern World, as of old, the art culture of the Greek exceeded that of the Roman. The sorrow-laden woman who bows before the crucifix, and looks up at the thorn crowned brow of a suffering God, feels there is compassion in that divine face; and oftentimes her faith is lifted up from the shadow to the substance and her heart renewed. The man who has through his said his prayers to the virgin, and been familiar with the beautiful conceptions of the Madonna and Child by Raphael or Murillo, could scarce turn on the woman at his side with brutality. So I conclude those women with their homes, their altars, their sweet faced Madonnas, their images of Christ are a thousand-fold better off, than their Chinese sisters, whose habitations are those of cruelty and darkness; their worship that of demons and monsters of hideous mein. The one is recognized as a human soul; the other, a soulless beast of burden. I think I can bring this even more nearly home to every mother's heart. If an edict had gone forth, that the beautiful girl baby in your arms must be torn from you, and consigned to the tender mercies of the inhabitants of either of the above named countries, which would you choose for your bright-eyed darling? I need not answer, never China, never, never. Then if these women be in such hopeless bondage, let us throw all our weight on the lever, resting on Mount Calvary, and being now by our Lambuths and Allens, so successfully adjusted for the prizing up of these women, from darkness to the marvelous light of the gospel.

Think of the capacity for endurance exhibited by these women of the celestial empire. Despite the fact, that for lo, these six thousand years Satan has had them bound, they have had the strength to bring forth and rear one-third of the human race—and this, in the face of the most grinding tyranny and degradation hellish ingenuity could devise.

Shall we not try to God, day and night, cry mightily—loose this woman and let her go; unbind her feet from the shackles and snares of idolatry; lift her up and let her go leaping and praising God; looking away from the earth, so full of the tears and blood of her daughters; away to the heaven above her, where from Jesus she shall hear at last, the sweetest words that ever fell on the listening ear of womanhood: "Come unto me all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

For this let us work, and pray, and give; and when it is accomplished let every thing that hath breath praise the name of the Lord. And we, with the blood-washed millions from China, India, Japan, Mexico, Brazil, the Isles of the sea, will join in the mighty chorus; Lift up your heads, oh ye gates; and be ye lifted up, ye everlasing doors; and the King of Glory shall come in. Who is this King of Glory? The Lord of Hosts, he is the King of Glory.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—Lady Li, wife of the viceroy of the Province of Peh-Chili, was very sick, and could get no relief from Chinese treatment. Miss Howard, an American missionary physician, was called in, and Lady Li recovered. Full of gratitude for the results of Western medical skill, the viceroy established a dispensary, which has now developed into a fine hospital, established by native funds, for the benefit of sick and suffering Chinese, and in charge of Drs. McKenzie and Howard. The cure of Lady Li and the opening of the dispensary in the governor-general's own official residence, are already known to our readers; but the erection and formal opening of the London Mission Hospital are an outcome of a most notable event in Chinese missions, not expected so soon. The Rev. Henry D. Porter, who writes for the Advance an account of the opening of the hospital, regards the movement as very auspicious, perhaps special. The opening took place in December, and was attended by the viceroy in state, many other Chinese officials, and a number of foreign consuls being present. When the governor had been seated in the place of honor, an address, written in "elegant classical Chinese," was read by a young preacher of the London Mission. The viceroy received the paper after it was read, and rose and said: "Truly, Dr. McKenzie, you make a fine account of my little effort to assist the poor. How am I worthy of your many compliments?" The viceroy then inspected the rooms and apparatus, and then he heard more addresses from foreign consuls. To these a reply was read by the viceroy's interpreter, "in correct and elegant French." Following this came the feast, after which the governor left, and the boom of cannon and the sound of music. On the Sunday following a union service was held in the hospital, at which the four societies at work in Tientsin, with their one hundred or more communicants, were represented. The building is in the Chinese order of architecture and cost 4,000 taels—about $6,000. The whole amount, except about 500 taels, has been subscribed. The dispensary and hospital together involved an expense of 7,000 taels, of which the viceroy gave 1,000 and other high officials the remainder.—New York Independent.

—While the missionaries of the Church Society in Uganda are waiting for a return of friendship on the part of Mtesa, they are busy translating. Mr. Mackey, at Kagri, has translated the Gospel of St. Matthew into the language of Uganda and is preparing a simple catechism. The last letter received from him was dated November 1st. Mtesa had sent canoes to Kagei, for reinforcements for the French Catholic Mission. The canoes, which were three months on the voyage, brought a letter from Mr. Pearson, dated Rubagi, July 29th. Mr. Pearson stated that the affairs in the capital had not improved and he had difficulty in getting food. Mtesa was talking of going to war with Miramho. His army had recently returned from a war against Usoga, and Mr. Pearson saw the king's share of the captives—three hundred women, more dead than alive, being marched to the palace. He had understood that a thousand of the captives died on the march to Rubaga. The Waganda envoys reached Usui November 23, on their way to Uganda. They were accompanied by Messrs. O'Flaherty, Stokes, and Litchfield.

—The invasion of Persia by the Koords is at an end. They desolated and laid waste the land. The missionaries in Persia have been wonderfully protected in the midst of great dangers. Recently the Rev. B. Labaree, of Oroomiah, had an interview with the Minister of War, the next in power to the Shah. The great man received the missionary with great cordiality, and assured him that he had just received a communication from Teherni, stating that Earl Granville had, at the request of the American Government, telegraphed to the British minister in Teheran, directing him to ask the Shah's Government to efficiently protect the American missionaries against the reported animosities of the Persians of Oroomiah. Mr. L. says: "I doubt if ever hard-pressed missionaries in a foreign land experienced a more grateful surprise."

The missionary expedition of the American Board to Bihe, Central Africa, has arrived at Benguela. Mr. Bangster writes very favorably of the present healthfulness of Benguela, of the herding of the Portuguese officials, and of the accounts he has received of Bihe. The Governor is to give him a letter to the King of Bihe, whom he hoped to see by the end of January, though he had been told he would have to wait three months for porters. Of the Bihenans he heard glowing accounts. They are strong and lusty and live in a climate where no quinine is needed. He was very anxious to leave Benguela before the heavy spring rains come on, when the place is very unhealthy. Communication can be had from Bihe with the coast monthly.

The New York Christian Advocate says, "Under the direction of William Taylor, a party of three started for the mission-field of Chili Feb. 1: Prof. Lemon, bound for Santiago; and Misses Potter and Spink, for Concepcion. The Rev. G. M. Jeffrey, of the Des Moines Conference, started February, month to join his brother in the educational and evangelical work at Concepcion. He is an alumnus of Iowa Wesleyan University and Boston University. On Wednesday last, Feb. 9, at a special service held at 805 Broadway, he was ordained deacon and elder by Bishop Harris, assisted by several elders. Mr. Jeffrey goes by the way of the Isthmus of Panama; thence by steamer to Valparaiso; and thence by railway to Concepcion. The trip will require about thirty-five days."

—There are nine principal Baptist Mission stations in China. The Board of the Southern Baptist Convention has three—Canton, Shanghai, and Tung Chow. The American Baptist Missionary Union has three—Ningpo, Tsahyfeg, and Swatow. The English Baptists have two—Talyuenfu and Tsingchowfoo. The Seventh-Day Baptists, of the United States, have one—Shanghai. At these stations there are something over 2,000 communicants.

—William Hurr, an Ottawa Indian, was recently ordained by a Baptist council in Indian Territory. The second chief of the Sacs and Foxes was present, to ask that Mr. Hurr be sent as a missionary to his people. "The Shackles," said he, "are not inclined to listen to the pale-face," and then he quoted the words of Gray Eyes, the principal chief: "Send us an Indian on whom we can depend. Then we will hear him."

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The Waldensian Church reports that progress has been made in all departments the past year. Matteo Prochet writes of changes in public opinion as follows:

"At Pighorol, at the very gates of the Vaudois Valleys, clerical agitation, which has for its center the pulpit of the Catholic Cathedral, has had the effect of bringing hundreds of hearers to the meetings of our evangelist and to the funeral services conducted by him in the cemetery. All honor to the authorities who have done away with the distinction between a Protestant and a Catholic cemetery! The good example which they have given in this matter has greatly contributed to remove the prejudices of the middle class of society. At Susa the gross attacks of the Canon Pelnotti have also served to bring us a number of hearers. At Aosta the front of our chapel, decorated with the inscription Capella Evangelica and the escutcheon of the Vaudois Church, is set exactly opposite and in contrast to the famous fountain erected in memory of the flight of Calvin. At Ivrea a pastoral diatribe of the bishop, directed expressly against the Evangelicals, has called forth on the part of our evangelist a pamphlet, 800 copies of which have been sold. At Favale (Elgura,) where itinerant evangelization is pursued with success, many thousands of copies of the most beautiful of our hymns have been bought up, and may be heard sung in stables, houses, schools, in the fields, and even in certain Catholic Churches."

—The preservation of the renowned Exeter Hall, London, for religious and philanthropical purposes, when it was on the eve of passing over to trade, was made the subject of rejoicing at the re-dedication the 20th ult. The building was purchased for £20,000 by four worthy gentlemen and presented to the Young Men's Christian Association. In the renovation of the building there has been spent £3,000, and of this all had been secured except £500 at the time of the re-opening. While the meeting was in progress, an anonymous contributor sent in £500 and the Lord Mayor added £100. The Archbishop of Canterbury made one of the most thorough-going speeches on the occasion and deeply deplored that only 3,000 young men belonged to the Association in London, inasmuch as there are 250,000 engaged in business houses in the city.

—The Rev. Mr. Hale, of Baltimore, writing of his visit to the Old Catholic Congress of Baden-Baden, says: "On five consecutive Sundays I assed five different liturgies. At Baden-Baden, with Bishop Reinkens, an Old Catholic German liturgy; in Lincoln, the Anglican liturgy; in Inverness, the Scottish liturgy, and in Queenstown, the Irish liturgy." "Thus," he continues, "in a little over six weeks, I was welcomed as a brother Churchman by representatives of six Churches besides our own, with all of whom we are in communion. Besides this I enjoyed fraternal intercourse with the Holland-ish Old Catholics at Utrecht, and had attended service with my old friend, the Archpriest Pribojeff, in the Russian Church at Paris."

—The Waldenses have a new church nearly ready for occupation at Milan. The edifice is, externally, 60x80 feet, with an extension on the front at the left. One of the side chapels of the old church, with part of the porch, was saved intact. In the porch at the right end there remains an ancient winding stone stairway, which leads to the choir and organ loft above. These Waldenses, who, in the persons of their ancestors, stood firm in defense of their views and principles in the centuries before the Reformation, and suffered therefore, at the hands of Papal Rome, persecutions and martyrdom, now at last have found a permanent home on this spot, consecrated a thousand years ago to the service of God.

—The Protestant theological professors of the Reformed Church of France do not get very large salaries from the State. According to an order issued February 12th, five professors of the first classs in Paris are to receive 5,000 francs each; one of the second class is to have 6,000 francs. In Montauban the professors of the first class are entitled to 5,400; those of the second class, 5,000; and those of the third class, 4,000. The Catholic professors in Paris receive 6,500 and 5,500; and in the provinces, 5,000, 4,500, and 3,500.

—The Prussian minister of public worship, Herr Von Puttkamer, claims that the Ultramontanists exaggerate the condition of the Catholic Church in Prussia. He presented in the House of Deputies statistics showing that, out of 2,418 priests excluded by his predecessor from giving instruction in the schools, 1,369 had been readmitted under the present administration, and the number of parishes without spiritual care had been reduced.

—An article in the Episcopal Recorder calls upon Low-Churchmen to unite with the Reformed Episcopal Church, for the following reasons: "1. Because of the Romish germs in the Prayer-book of the Protestant Episcopal Church. 2. The sad results thereof as it is seen in a general advance all along the line into High-Churchism and Ritualism. 3. Evangelical Episcopalians desire a scriptural and liturgical form of worship."

—Mukrakis, a fervent evangelist in the Greek Church, who was educated in Germany, and has been trying to introduce new ideas into the church in which he still labors, after suffering several months' imprisonment last year, is again before the courts of Greece on a charge of heresy. He is a stalwart advocate of religious liberty, and has many followers among the clergy.

—The Emperor of Austria, who had previously given 120,000 francs to the Catholic Churches of Jerusalem, has given the Sanctuary of Nazareth a magnificent Gothic altar and a beautiful statute of our Lady of the Rosary in marble of Carrara, besides a gift of 14,000 florins.

The Salvation army has been divided and the two wings are now arrayed against each other.

Our Young People.

THE TWIN BOYS.

A FAMILY SCENE.

Crawling and walking,
Jabbering and talking,
Riding and peeping,
Running and leaping,
Stumbling and falling,
Crying and squalling,
Fighting and fussing,
Hugging and bussing,
Sulking and pouting,
Laughing and shouting,
Coming and going,
Singing and crowing,
Playing the men with papa's old hats,
Riding the dogs and teasing the cats,
Then shouting aloud with joy and glee,
O mamma and papa, come and see!
The mother, alive to all their joys,
Quickly responds to her darling boys.
Now papa, won't you lay down that pen
And take a look at your little men?
Why mother, are those our little boys
That are the candy and broke the toys?
But now I see them riding their horses,
Acting the men and playing the bosses
If "variety is the spice of life,"
Then you and I enjoy it, dear wife.
What a paradox these children are,
That bring so much joy as well as care!
But so the Lord doth wisely ordain
To mingle pleasure along with pain.
Then let us pray that our noisy boys
May lighten our cares, lighten our joys,
May prove our staff and comfort through life,
Then smooth our pillows in death, dear wife,
And when all the scenes of life are o'er,
We may greet them on the other shore.

—A. H. Cabaniss

From Our Little Friends.

LETTER FROM TEXAS.

TERRYVILLE, TEXAS, April 12, 1880.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I hope for once you will not mind my entering your little circle, as I would like to tell you of some of my wanderings in Texas. It is now nearly a year since papa brought me to Victoria. I was very much pleased with the place and people. Through the efforts of our dear good brother Wools, whom we all love very much, and the help of the Presbyterians, they had just completed a pretty, neat little church, and we had a fine Sabbath school, as well as a large interesting Bible class. We only remained there a few months however when my Uncle concluded to move to the country. We had a delightful ride through the vast prairie covered with flowers of every hue.

The prairies are very beautiful, reminding one of the ocean, the waving grass as far as the eye can reach, a fit emblem of the waves of the mighty deep. But the eye wearies of the glare and never varying scenery of the prairie, and it was quite a relief when about three o'clock that hot August afternoon we drove into a beautiful Post Oak Glade. Here we halted for a rest, and a most delightful one it was to get out of the cramped back and stretch full length, (big folks as well as little ones) on the cool green grass, feasting at the same time upon delicious water melons. An hour or so later, feeling quite refreshed we resumed our journey, as we had yet quite a distance to go. Some time after dark Grandma remarked: "I think we are nearing our home, as I see the lights of the town." The driver smiled significantly, and replied, "he thought she was mistaken," and the next morning we discovered the cause of his amusement. What grandma thought was the lights of the town, proved only to be fireflies, which are very large and beautiful in this part of the country; but the town, "Oh, where was it?" Well it remains still in our imagination, for we have never found it. It is true we have a store, and several very pleasant neighbors, and since we have gotten acquainted, find it much more pleasant than at first. The country is thickly settled with a good, honest, industrious and very religious class of people. We have preaching once a month. Mr. Duval is our pastor, and is a good, earnest preacher. We have a regularly organized Sabbath school of about fifty attendants. There was a very good camp meeting held about two miles from here last year, and they intend to have another this summer, the later part of June. I would like very much to attend as I have never been to a camp meeting, and perhaps may give you a description of it later.

But for fear of getting my letter too long, and of its getting into that interminable "waste basket," I sign myself your little friend, ANNIE DYER.

ORVILLE, ALA., April 13, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: As I am going to school, together with my two brothers, and we all have to make speeches for every Friday evening, I write to thank you for the poetry which is in your paper. This is a nice little village. We have a tolerable good Sunday school every Sabbath, evening at 3 o'clock. I go with my brothers, little sister and auntie. Our superintendent has left us to go to school, but left his brother to fill his place. My papa preaches here, every first Sunday. I am a little girl nine years old and would like to have a place in your paper to write once in awhile to you

MAGGIE ESTELLE GILLIS.

FLOYD, LA., April 15, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never seen a letter from this place, I thought I would write one. Papa takes the ADVOCATE, I like it very much. I live in the country, four miles from Floyd. I do not go to Sunday school, it is too far. I don't go to school, Mamma teaches me at home. I have two sisters, one older than me and one younger. I am fourteen years old. Don't drop my note in the waste basket. Yours respectfully,

LIZZIE CASSETTY.

Johnny's Nap.

Johnny's room opened out of Sister Mac's and after he had gone to bed he heard Mac reading aloud to Cousin Helen who had come for a little visit. It was a funny story, about Rip Van Winkle, who went to sleep upon a mountain and slept for twenty years. When he went to sleep this country was governed by the King of England, but before he woke the war for Independence had been fought and now the people were choosing a president. Everything was changed, and he couldn't understand it all. At first he couldn't find any one who knew him, for most of his friends were dead. At last he found his daughter and went to live with her, where he was very happy.

Johnny did not feel sleepy at all, strange to say. But as he lay there listening to Mac's pleasant voice, he thought how nice it would be if he could take a good, long nap, and wake up to find that schools were all out of fashion, and boys could play all the time and never have any lessons to learn. How nice to go fishing in the river every day in summer, and skate and coast all winter long! Then he wouldn't need to eat his breakfast so fast, for fear of being late. He wouldn't have to study verbs and map questions, and, best of all, there wouldn't be any sums to do. "Oh, but wouldn't it be nice to be like Rip Van Winkle?" he thought. "I'd just like to try it for a little while, any way."

Johnny thought he did go to sleep, but all at once it was daylight, and there was a loud shouting in the street below. He hardly knew how he did it, but he was dressed in a jiffy, and running along in the midst of a crowd of boys towards the river.

"Why, here's Johnny Blake, sure's the world!" cried Sam Green, one of Johnny's best friends. "Where have you been all this long time, Johnny?"

"What do you mean?" asked Johnny.

"Why, it's more'n a year since I saw you!" said Sam, "and I'm glad enough you've come back again, for it's dreadful hard for a feller to find anything to do nowadays, no school, and nothing to do but play from morning till night. I'm so tired of it I don't know what to do."

"Hurrah!" cried Johnny. "You don't mean it, though, Sam? Isn't there any school any more now, honest?"

"Not a bit of it," said Sam. "Didn't you know that?"

"Hurrah!" cried Johnny again, "I declare, I do believe I've been and taken a nap like Rip Van Winkle. That's just what I wanted—no school, and plenty of time to play. But where are we going now?"

"Oh! don't you see? Ned Jones is going to duck Freddy Nye in the river, and we're all going down to see the fun," was Sam's reply.

"That's mean!" said Johnny. "I don't call that fun, for a big boy to treat a little chap that way."

"I know it," answered Sam; "but, you see, we don't know what to do with ourselves nowadays. We must have a little variety. We can't play all the time. Oh dear! I wish they'd have a school again. Mother doesn't have dinner ready, either, till I'm just about starved. She says it doesn't make so much difference now there isn't any school. We can eat one time as well as another."

"Ho! that's nothing," cried Johnny. "I guess I'll have time enough to eat all I want to now."

The river was half a mile away from the village. Before the boys could reach it they had to turn down a broad cart-road shaded on one side by trees. On the other side was a sloping bank facing the south and Johnny was suprised to find that it was covered with boys lying at full length on the grass. Such a sight as that was! All had unwashed faces and tumbled hair. Some were fast asleep, and others were lazily blinking at the sky.

"What are they doing there?" asked Johnny.

"Nothing," said Sam; "what else have boys got to do, nowadays, anyhow?"

Just then they reached the river, and Johnny saw Ned throwing off his jacket and getting ready to put Freddy overboard.

"Wait a bit, Ned!" he called out; "I won't see Freddy treated that way. Come Sam, he's in my sister's Sunday school class, and let's stand by him, won't we?"

"Sunday school?" said Sam. "Oh dear! I should think you had been asleep, Johnny. Why, don't you know there isn't any Sunday school either now? Folks think there isn't any use of having them any more than the other kind of schools, nowadays. You see the boys almost forgot how to read the Bible, or any thing else, by this time, and the little ones don't learn how, and so 'tisn't any use to try to know anything any more, I s'pose. I tried to get a place in a shop the other day, but the man said they'd have to give up keeping shop pretty soon; for if the boys don't study 'rithm'tic, they can't learn how to make change, and how can they buy or sell anything?"

"That's true," said Johnny. "I didn't think of that. But oh! the Sunday school's the worst thing to give up. It's wicked to play Sundays, and I don't see what we can do all day. Miss Morant tells us such splendid Bible stories, too, after we have said the lesson. And the library books and papers, don't you have any now?"

"Course we don't," said Sam.

Just then there was a splash in the water. Ned Jones had pushed Freddy off the bank, and Freddy called out, "Johnny! Johnny!"

Johnny sprang to help him, but why what was the matter? Ha, ha! sure enough, he had been asleep, and it was all a dream, for there were the bed-clothes tucked in so tightly that when he tried to spring he could only struggle to get out. And Mac's voice was calling from down-stairs, "Johnny! Johnny! come down to breakfast, or you'll be late at school."

Johnny was glad enough to go to school that day, and when he told Sam Green about his dream, they agreed together never to say they hated school again.—Eliza Payson, in the Sunday School Times.

HE COULD BE TRUSTED.—Rev. Richard Cecil, who lived to be a greatly useful minister, was born in London, in 1748. When a boy he was strong-willed, but brave, straightforward and thoroughly to be trusted, hating all that was mean, shuffling or deceitful. One day his father, who had business in the city, took little Dick with him and left him at the door of the East-India House, telling him to wait there till he should finish his business and return to him. Taken up with other matters his father forgot all about him, and left the house by another door. Richard, in the evening, was missed by his mother. His father now remembering where they had parted, said: "Depend upon it, he is still waiting for me where I left him." Immediately returning to the spot, there, to be sure, he found poor Dick faithfully waiting, as he had been for hours, and as he had been ordered to do.

Christian Advocate.

Organ of the Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences of the M. E. Church, South.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

Rev. J. W. Hunt, Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt,
Rev. C. B. Galloway, Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D.

THURSDAY, APRIL 28, 1881

Busybodies.

These persons are thrice referred to by name in the Epistles. It describes those who attend very diligently to other people's affairs and neglect their own, Paul avers concerning one church: "For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busybodies." History repeats itself. Under given conditions the same traits of character are developed. In what church, ancient or modern, or in what religious society, or secular for that matter, has not this mischievous, idle activity prevailed more or less? Diligent in meddling, but utterly lazy as to any useful industry.

The same apostle, with true Pauline force and point, referring to certain women of the Christian society, says: "And withal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not." Of the three places where busybodies are mentioned, it is fair to say, that only this one applies wholly and unmistakably to the better sex. There were such women in the church in apostolic times, women who gave both Paul and Timothy no little trouble, we should judge. They were women of a social turn, who neglected their domestic duties, and devoted much of their time to neighborhood and society gossip. It does not appear that this running about and tattle were connected with sewing societies and missionary meetings, or with women's exchanges or temperance circles. It was gossip, pure and simple, connected with no kind or pretence of useful work. It was perhaps merely tattle about other people, the unbridled tongue turned loose upon the world in general, and the members of the church at Ephesus in particular. Idle hands and busy, flippant, bitter tongues! How naturally, and almost necessarily, they go together! Modern society is not clear of this evil. Female busybodies we may hope are rare, but one sinner of this sort destroyeth much good. A woman perverted into a busybody is an angel fallen; the noblest work of God blighted, frightfully distorted and horribly deformed.

Peter places the busybody in very disreputable company: "But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil doer, or as a busybody in other men's matters." An overseer in the concerns of others seems to be the character here described; assuming to be bishop in another's diocese. To put the busybody in such company is significant. Not as bad as a murderer, or a thief perhaps, but bad enough to be named in the same connection. The Christian may go out of his own proper province or sphere, and thus awaken an opposition, or even persecution, greatly to his own detriment and to the damage of the cause of Christ.

These busybodies, so clearly described and pointed out in Scripture, are of various classes. There is the social busybody, who is always stirring up strife among neighbors, retailing and even manufacturing domestic scandal, and ferreting out and giving publicity to the private and domestic affairs of families. Everything of this kind discovered is a sweet morsel too good to be kept. Friendly confidence and hospitality are abused, every principle of good breeding is trampled on, and there is nothing concerning the homes and circumstances of others too sacred to be proclaimed abroad. Throw out the mischievous and meddlesome gossip, and nearly one-half of the current talk of the world would be silenced. Taboo the weather and personalities, and what would many of the most voluble people have left to talk about?

There is the religious busybody, one who neglects his own soul, and his own religious character and duties, in looking after the conduct of his brethren; in censuring the conduct of church affairs, or in keeping a sharp eye upon the pastor and his family. There are these religious busybodies who make the church a means and convenience of gratifying their love of tattle, and their lust of censure and fault-finding. Nothing pleases them better than to awaken feelings of jealousy and suspicion, and to keep the society in a buzz of excitement and strife. There is a good church activity, and also that which is only and supremely evil.

And then there are other busybodies in the religious and political world, who attend to every mission to set things right, and to reform other communities than their own. Our national politics, for the last few years especially, illustrate this proclivity to interfere with the affairs of others. Hoards of reformers leave their own section filled with licentiousness, illiteracy, and pauperism, to improve a civilization already better than their own. They would reform the South, while their own section is reeking with infidelity and vice. Blind to the needs of their own people, they see nothing but ignorance, ungodliness and barbarism elsewhere. This class of busybodies is a strange compound of conceit, arrogance, sectional prejudice and fanaticism. They are busybodies in other men's matters, and so absorbed therein as to overlook the work to which they are called nearer home. They know the South and its needs, the negro and his interests and capabilities, better than those who have made a lifetime study of these matters, and who, by long experience and observation, are perfectly familiar with every aspect of them.

For the offices of charity, fellowship and mutual improvement there is an open door. But this is something different from a dogmatic, officious and sectional meddling. There is a line in manners, morals, religion and politics, to be distinctly drawn and carefully observed, between our own business and other men's matters. Socially, religiously, politically, the busybody is a great evil, and a curse to the whole world, and all the greater curse when he affects the rolls of piety, patriotism and benevolence.

Ad Clerum.

The ambition that is allowable or possible, in the minister of spiritual mind, is to be largely useful. His supreme aim, after being a completely consecrated and holy man himself, must be to save as many souls as possible, and in all things to glorify his divine Master. Place-seeking is scarcely admissible at all. If he makes the most of his powers, by diligent study, by living close to God, and by self-sacrificing labor, the place will take care of itself. Let him seek to be a good minister of Jesus Christ, and a field worthy of him will always be open. He may never reach the largest and most important churches, because, when he has done his best, he may not be equal to these positions. But he will find a work suited to his capacity, and one in which his maximum of usefulness will be developed. If he cannot tolerate the conviction that there are abler and better men than himself, he will probably be always dissatisfied, and regard himself as a wronged and injured man.

A preacher may feel that the motive which underlies his desire for an important appointment is the wish to be more useful. He has thought of the greater personal prominence it would give him, and also of the liberal salary, but he does not imagine that these considerations have had undue weight. They may, however, have influenced his mind more than he is aware, and, while endeavoring to persuade himself that his eye is single, an unhallowed ambition is at the bottom of his aspirations. It may not be possible for even devoted men to be indifferent to position and salary, but, where these rise into prominence, the ministerial character is already wrecked.

There are some things that must be accepted as belonging to the preacher's lot. Beecher, Talmage, Hall and some others do well financially. They have a wide fame, and large pay. But such prizes as these are few, even in the wealthier denominations, and are only for such exceptional men. In the itinerancy, with salaries ranging from three or four thousand to three or four hundred dollars, the high places and high pay are very few, and these are only for those who have capacity and availability to fill them. It must be so in the nature of things. Some men are better than others, and some have larger gifts and attainments than others. The man who, on entering the ministry, sets out to win the best places and the most ample support is likely to fail, because the place-hunter is not fit for any place, and because he is little better than spiritually fallen from the start. If he be truly great and good, and endowed with gifts for usefulness and success, he will reach the high places from force of character, and without desiring or seeking them.

It is true that God alone can fully estimate men, but a man's brethren, and the churches, are tolerable discerners of spirits. They may not think as highly of him as he thinks of himself, but their judgment may come nearer the divine estimate than his own.

In any case a faithful minister ought to be comfortably supported. We do well to insist upon this as a duty the people owe to those who [illegible]. But, in fact, it has never been so, and probably never will be until righteousness prevails over covetousness. Those who enter the ministry have the prospect of inadequate support and poverty before them, and expecting it, they are not likely to be disappointed. It is to be endured for Christ's sake and for his kingdom.

In old age there is poverty. The young minister knows this, at the first, as well as anything can be known. It ought not to be so. It is a shame that men, who have given their active years to the church, should be doomed to an old age of dependence and want. But with this prospect before them they choose the path of duty, and accept the consequences. There is necessity, as things are, that the gospel be preached at this terrible sacrifice. It has always been so; perhaps it always will be. Heroism in the ministry is probably worth all it costs. The men who do their best to make things better, but without murmur face and accept the inevitable lot, will have their reward hereafter.

Death of Dr. Punshon.

Rev. William Morley Punshon died, in London, April 14. He was the foremost orator of the British Wesleyan Conference, and also, in almost every respect, one of the greatest and best of English Methodist preachers. His death takes from the approaching Ecumenical one of its most prominent attractions. Those who are looking forward to that occasion will deeply regret that they shall not see and hear Dr. Punshon. He was a man of large brain and also of large heart, capable of rising above sectional prejudices, and utterly incapable of narrowness, or bigotry. He was eminently an ecumenical man, broad and catholic in his views and sympathies, and possessed of a noble and generous spirit.

Several years ago he spent a few days in New Orleans, and, on a week night, preached in the Carondelet Street Church. He was a burly, rugged looking Englishman, of large stature, and with a face indicating gravity and strength, rather than brilliancy or spirituality. The sermon was on the text, "Ye are the light of the world," and, in beauty of style, melody of tone, gracefulness of manner, and quality of thought, was in striking contrast with his personal appearance. Our interest and delight in the sermon were complete, and only marred by the feeling that he might stop too soon. The preacher and the sermon reminded us of a great mountain, whose massive form is adorned, with silvery cascades, bright flowers, and lighted up and glowing in the softest sunshine. The impression of reserved power, of forces partially deployed, of abundant resources but little drawn upon, was too marked to be forgotten. The sermon was rich enough, but we felt that there was a mint behind it whose vaults had scarcely been touched. We have reason to believe that he had a specially warm fraternal feeling for Southern Methodism. From Zion's Herald we take the following outline of Dr. Punshon's life:

He was born in Doncaster, England, in 1824, and fell in the prime of his life and intellectual ability. He early exhibited his remarkable power of descriptive eloquence, becoming a loved preacher in 1850. He was a pupil of the Wesleyan College at Richmond, and soon after entering Conference became one of the most popular of the young preachers of England, drawing great crowds wherever his name was announced. He entered the lecturing field, his subjects being portraitures of character and historical themes, exhibiting great brilliancy and wealth of illustrations. He won a remarkable reputation with his "Daniel," "Bunyan," "Wesley," "The Huguenots," etc. By his lectures, although at a severe draft upon his physical powers, he contributed $50,000 to the Wesleyan Chapel fund. The death of his wife, leaving him with young children, for whose care no one seemed so well adapted as her sister, who had been a member of his family a marriage to whom is still illegal under English law—occasioned his removal to Canada in 1868. His ministry in Toronto was eminently successful; the finest church edifice of the denomination in the Dominion remaining as a permanent monument of his success and vigor. A beautiful volume of his lectures and sermons, published in this city in 1873, bears on its cover a miniature outline of this elegant structure—the Metropolitan Methodist Church, Toronto; and as its frontispiece has a very finely-engraved and excellent likeness of the now departed and much lamented minister. Upon the death of his second wife he returned to England. In the interim he was a delegate to our General Conference at Brooklyn. No one who heard his address to the Academy of Music on that occasion will be likely to forget it; it was a marvelous exhibition of chaste, moving and melting eloquence. In 1874 Mr. Punshon was chosen president of the Wesleyan Conference; finding in the various occasions offered a large opportunity for the illustration of his remarkable platform and pulpit power. He was then elected a missionary secretary, which office he filled, with his usual ability, up to the hour of his failing health.

Lessons from the Census.

Another national census has been taken, and its publication daily expected. Last summer the enumerators were abroad in the land. They literally went from house to house, and asked for an inventory of our goods and chattels, tenements and hereditaments, our names, ages, occupations, etc. But for the authority of a great nation behind this enumerator, his interrogations would have been resented as an impertinence. We are not usually favorable to those who are curious about our private affairs, and especially when they come with a purpose to reveal them. Yet all had to yield and disgorge. The ages of many—a secret of the old family register—had to be told, however reluctantly. Endeavoring to ascertain this little chronology, the enumerators had some amusing episodes with certain ancient maidens and their anxious mothers. Miserly possessions, unknown to the community or the tax collector, were forced to record under the imperative exactions of solemn oath. But the purpose of this article is to gather some lessons for practical, future good. If God has written for us "sermons in stones," we ought to find a "sermonette" in the census.

1. The mistakes of the census. After every possible care and precaution mistakes will occur. Either the enumerator failed to visit each home or made mistakes in the general summary. The most skillful, expert accountant will not escape error. An absolutely correct census return is a human impossibility. But in God's books—the census of the skies—there will be infinite exactness. Neither omission nor exaggeration will be found. Every column will be correct to the last conceivable decimal. Not a name will fail to appear, nor a virtue or deed escape the record. There will be no confusion in the tabulation. In the column of saints will be all the sanctified, both great and small, from all lands and times. Not one too obscure to be counted, and not one in that column "without a wedding garment." In the column headed "The Wicked," with wide, dark leaded lines, will be found all that knew not and hated God. Not a saint in that calendar, and not a mistake in that dark summary. Reader, God is now taking his census. His enumerators are now hovering over the earth, and shadowing our daily walks. In which column shall our names be found? What will the infallible and imperishable census of God reveal concerning us?

2. Disappointments of the census. The full returns, when published, will bring to many disappointment and mortification. Their exaggerated hopes are doomed to be unrequited. Patriots and publicists may have extravagant estimates of the decade's increase. We will not attain the grandeur of wealth and population so fondly anticipated by some. Different departments of labor, commerce and manufacture will share in this feeling. Then, again, one section is disappointed, if not infuriated, at the unexpected progress of another. Partisans, in anticipation, have been mortified to madness, and the cry of "fraud" is heard. Special agents have been sent South to verify certain returns. Nor will the churches escape. Their comparative strength in numbers and wealth may not equal the estimate of sanguine sectarians. They will now be tempted to suspect sister denominations of liberal counting. This writer listened, a few days ago, to a warm discussion concerning the relative numerical strength of the Methodist and Baptist denominations in Mississippi.

And so God's census will reveal disappointment and despair. Names we fondly hoped were recorded among the just will be found among the lost. Deeds of our own we had credited to Christian charity will be charged to fulsome vanity. Children, for whom parents prayed and hoped to meet again, will not be seen in all the ranks of the glorified. Heaven will have its surprises. No doubt that was truth, quaintly expressed, when an old divine said: "In heaven I shall have three surprises: first, in not finding some I had expected to see; second, in finding some I did not expect to see; third, in finding myself there."

3. Value of the census. As a national enterprise, it has great value. The composition of the lower House of Congress is controlled by it. Tax levies are based upon it. Revenues and expenditures are connected with it. Statesmen and political economists are eagerly awaiting its publication. Other nations will read it with amazement, and John with Mr. Gladstone in his estimate and prophecies of "our kin beyond the sea." So the churches prepare and publish statistics. From these they estimate their popular claims and influence. Thus they measure growth, and take courage for the future. But here our analogy and enumeration fail us. Statistical tables are inadequate measurements of Christianity. Spiritual things are not capable of computation by arithmetic process or algebraic equation. Largely intangible and invisible, they are known only to the eye of God, and are recorded in the census of the skies. Our pride of numbers may avail us nothing with the Lord. There is but one census mentioned in the Bible, and a curse fell upon that. Bishop Huntingdon has well and aptly said: "God does not count his followers, but weighs them. He delighteth not so much in numbers as in character."

But God's census books in heaven will have their value. They will vindicate the divine administration. Every saint from every world, and every fallen spirit from outer darkness, will acknowledge that the Judge of all the earth did right. They will see that God dealt justly, and will give him additional praise. Justice and mercy were the habitations of his throne. And now this moralizing will cease, with the prayer that all who read these lines may have their names enrolled among the glorified in the census reports of the new Jerusalem.

C. B. G.

Book Burning.

Mr. Editor: Did I do right or wrong in burning those misleading, polluting and trashy novels? I will tell you the circumstances that led me to do it. In what most people call the middle of life, wife and I had a large family of children, growing up to man and womanhood, under our parental and guardian care—five of our own and seven fatherless and motherless orphans, making a round dozen in all. I think we felt the great importance of training up those five boys and seven girls to be intelligent and good citizens and Bible Christians in all the relations of this life, and to be ready for a better life hereafter. As they all came into our hands in infancy, or nearly so, it gave us the opportunity of training them early to walk in the way they should go, and it gave us great pleasure to see them, so early in life, embracing our views of a theoretical and practical Christian life. But it required a persistent and ceaseless effort on our part to keep them from the evil influences around them. We determined to give them all at least a good business education. One result was we had a reading family. But when several of them had advanced several years in their teens we began to notice that sundry books and pamphlets, "which do not tend to the knowledge or love of God," but in a contrary direction, had come into their possession, and were being read by them. Some were premiums for good lessons from irreligious teachers, some in the way of special gifts, and some, after having been read by the gay young people of the neighborhood, were put by them into the hands of our children with a high commendation. Wife and I protested against such trashy, and too often impure, books as injurious, both to their minds and morals, but still they were being read. In 1853 we had a camp meeting at old Springhill, in Jefferson county, and we were there with our large tent and large family. The Lord was with us in great spiritual power. Among the numerous conversions we had the unspeakable joy of numbering several of our dear little lambs. When our meeting closed our presiding elder, Rev. B. M. Drake, D. D., gave us one of the best valedictory exhortations, as to what should be our future walk, I ever heard. To the young converts he spoke at full length. Among the dangers to be guarded against he emphasized that of reading books of fiction, especially the yellow-backed frothy, trashy and polluting literature of the day, which he believed had the foundation for the downfall of many a promising boy and girl. He advised them, in order to their establishment in a life of holiness, happiness and usefulness, to confine their reading mostly to the Bible and the orthodox and substantial literature of the church. I could sanction all he said, and it put my conscience to work about those novels that had crept into my own household. I had never approved of it, but they were there and being read. Would I permit any one to introduce sugar-coated poison into my family, that might undermine the health, perhaps, endanger the lives of my dear inexperienced children? No! Why, then, should I permit their minds to be poisoned and polluted, and the final salvation of their souls endangered by reading such books as our old experienced presiding elder had earnestly advised them not to read? My course of action was soon determined on. While at camp meeting the yellow fever had been declared epidemic in Natchez, and several ladies concluded to go home with us and remain until it abated, one of whom had been greatly blessed at the meeting. That afternoon they were all too weary to do much with books, but next morning they began to look for something to read. I reminded them of the fatherly advice of our presiding elder, as, with tearful eyes, we were closing our happy camp meeting, and told them that I had hundreds of such volumes in my library as he had recommended them to read, but after awhile I saw some of them looking over those books of fiction. My mind was made up, but I said nothing. They soon laid down their books for dinner, and then they went out calling on some of our near neighbors. I got me a cotton sack, and gave the book cases and tables a close examination, and bagged every book which I honestly believed might warp or pollute the minds of our dear children; then, taking a box of matches, I repaired to a cane brake near by, put them in a pile and touched them off, and, after sitting by and stirring up the burning mass until the last leaf and letter was gone, I quietly returned to the house. The next morning there was much inquiry and diligent search made for missing books. Ma, or Aunt Jane as our orphans, who were our nephews and nieces, called her, have you seen anything of that book of fashions, the "Reverie of an Old Bachelor," etc." She answered she had not seen them since yesterday morning; perhaps they had been ask their Uncle John about them. After awhile one, as the representative of the party, ventured to ask me. I pleasantly replied that the last I saw of them they were passing off in smoke and ashes. I did not scold, speak a harsh word, but told them plainly I could not risk having their minds and morals endangered by such books any more, and if I found them about the house I would dispose of them in a similar way. My house has not been troubled with methodistically proscribed (?) novels from that day to this. Of twelve children all became members of the church during their minority. Four of our wards are dead, but it is the assurance that they were taught right or wrong in forever those books of fiction and fashion I have no regrets to utter about. My conscience still approves the course I took, and have kept it now. I learned to burn bad books from the Bible. See Acts xix. 19.

J. G. Jones.

Port Gibson, Mississippi.

General Knowledge in the Pulpit.

Dr. John Hall, in a recent lecture, as reported for the Methodist Recorder, says:

"This is an age in which general knowledge is very widely diffused. The causes are patent to all: cheap literature, magazines, newspapers, the rostrum, scientific discussion. This factor must have some reaction from the pulpit. But how is it done?

1. Not by setting ourselves up in the pulpit as teachers of science, art or history. Because, in the first place, our sermons will become devoid of spiritual power. The Head of the church has not promised to bless these. His promise is to the preaching of the Gospel. In the second place, we will be putting ourselves in competition with those who give their life time of study to these things, and who are better qualified to teach them than we can hope to be.

2. Not by trying to settle scientific disputes in the pulpit. We must accept the results of scientific investigations when they are firmly established, and we can reason upon them and draw our own conclusions from them. But it is not best for us to enter into the turmoil of discussion over them.

3. Not by attempting to settle the so called "conflict between science and religion," for we will be almost sure to magnify the danger in the minds of those who hear us. We perhaps start doubts that we will not be able to allay. But we can make use of attained results in science as illustrations of divine truth. We must not forget that there are two kinds of scientists. So much has been said about the conflict between science and religion, that the term "scientist" has come to be almost synonymous with opponent of Christianity. But there are Christian scientists who hold the same truths that we hold, and look at religious questions in the same light that we do. Again, there are undevout scientists. Some are open to conviction, and are partly open. We must not denounce them prematurely, we must have respect for the difficulties which they think themselves involved, and for their weakness. We must recognize this difference in knowledge in substance, but not in the form of our sermons. Drop a word of the evidences of Christianity now and then, not formally, but incidentally, by way of illustration, so that those who have heard the other side, will say, "Our minister knows about it."

You will have professional men in your congregations—doctors and lawyers; but do not preach law to lawyers, or materia medica to physicians, but let them see that you can comprehend something of legal science and are not ignorant of the importance of the medical profession. A acquaintance of mine tells of a lawyer who sat for several years in his congregation without seeming to be touched by religious influences. One day he met him, took him by the hand, and said, "I have been pleasing this case before you for several years now; do you not think I have won it, and are you not ready to give me a verdict?" The words came to [illegible] ed from his own profession, and at the next communion, he presented himself for admission to the church.

We remove difficulties without knowing it sometimes. There are young men in New England who think they holda monopoly of a certain kind of ideas. And they think that if their ministers knew these ideas, they would not preach as they do. We must dissipate the hallucination. Show men that we have weighed what can be said against Christianity as well as what can be said for it. This we must do informally, not formally. Suppose that a man were to go into the pulpit and announce that he was going to preach on the Divine existence, that first he should present the cosmological argument, then the theological, and follow that by the ontological. Why, the young people would not know what he meant, and the children would go to sleep. But there are ways in which all these arguments can be presented in their substance, without formally doing so. In this way we will cultivate religious tolerance in ourselves. Those who have never mingled much with men will think that the line of ideas they have is the best, and the only one of any worth. We must avoid this, for we will find people of very different cast of mind and ilnes of ideas from our own. We will find the scientific mind, the æsthetical, the philosophical. The Bible recognizes these. They must not all be compressed into one mold. We must lead them to use their peculiarities in Christian ways, so that like the trees of paradise they will each bring forth fruit after his own kind. We must likewise come in contact with them, and study so as to know how to feed the various minds.

Missionary Items.

Our name

"Little Workers for Missions."

Our motto,

"The World for Jesus."

Our prayer

"Thy Kingdom Come."

Our Purposes

1. To give ourselves to Jesus.

2. To pray for our missions and missionaries.

3. To increase our knowledge of mission work and our mission fields.

4. To make all we can, and give all we can to the missionary cause.

MR. EDITOR: The Sunday-school children of Franklin Street Church, Mobile, have for many years contributed a large part of the amount raised in the church for domestic and foreign missions. So it must not be understood by the announcement that they have just organized themselves into a missionary society, that they have only now become awake to the importance of our missionary work. For purposes of education, I have thought best to form them into a society, and the foregoing is our constitution. The name is not poetic, but very clearly describes the nature and objects of the society. No one who hears the name will ask what is proposed to be done by the organization. It is pretty to be called "Rose Buds," or "Busy Bees," but it was thought best that the name adopted should be significant. These children are to be workers, not buzzers, and they are going to work for missions. The motto, too, is good, and the prayer is in the very words of Jesus. The purposes of the members of the society will commend themselves to all.

I hope to hear of other societies organized on this plan in the bounds of the Alabama Conference. They have the "Rose Buds" in Virginia, and, under the able management of Uncle Barry," they are doing a noble work. Let us have a similar institution in Alabama, to be known as "Little Workers for Missions." I shall be glad to hear from any preachers or members of the church, who will enter into this work. As soon as societies are organized let that information be communicated to the ADVOCATE, and let correspondence be at once begun between the societies organized. I will cheerfully do anything in my power to assist in this work, and, if the matter grows, I am sure the editor of the ADVOCATE will do as much for the children as does the editor of the Richmond Advocate, who gives sufficient space in his paper for all communications on the subject. Let us have a hundred or more societies of "Little Workers" before the next session of our Conference.

HENRY D. MOORE.

Mobile, Alabama.

Note by the Editor: Let us hear from the little workers. Our columns are open to them.

The Louisiana Sugar Bowl, of April 14, published at New Iberia, La., speaking of the crop prospects says:

During the past week the weather has been much warmer, and, aided by the good rain which fell last week, the cane crop, both plant and ratoons, has shown more vitality than it was thought it possessed. At last the young sprouts commence to show themselves above the ground, and if the warmth but continue and the drying winds abate, we hope yet to see a good "stand" in most fields.

We cannot, however, now reasonably hope for a large crop this year, for it is at least a month late, and even under the most favorable circumstances, we need not expect it to attain the size, and maturity it had done at the commencement of the last sugar-making season. Besides, there is no disguising the fact that the prolonged cold of the spring has done considerable damage, certainly to the stubble crop, and perhaps to the plant cane. The fall planting, from which the most is generally expected, seems to be the worst of all—quite rotten in many places. We learn from Mr. A. Boucherenu, who has lately passed over nearly the entire sugar district, gathering statistics for his annual report, that this complaint about fall planting is almost general, while everywhere the planters were despondent about their stubble crop.

A RELIABLE WITNESS.—Rev. J. M. Weems, writing from Moss Point, Miss., says:

We would be glad to have you with us during our District Conference. We expect to lay the corner stone for our new house of worship at that time, and are hoping for a revival. I have received seven members this year, and the work is moving forward satisfactorily. Preaching, prayer and class meetings are well attended. I am satisfied that the results of my efforts to get the ADVOCATE into every family is yielding a hundred fold to the glory of God. Hereafter this shall be my first work at the beginning of each new year.

Bro. Weems is one of our best agents; his people take the ADVOCATE, and read it, and his work prospers. Working for the paper "yields a hundred fold." That is the testimony. Let our pastors in Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana all try it. Send up a rousing list of subscribers for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and we will underwrite for the result.

Our Temperance Delegate.

At the late session of the Louisiana Conference, Rev. John Pipes was elected delegate to the National Temperance Convention, to meet at Saratoga Springs, June 21. Bro. Pipes has arranged his work so as to go, but his expenses ought to be paid by the Conference. Brethren should remit to him at once. It will require about $20 from each District. Pastors and presiding elders can easily raise this amount. Bro. Pipes address is Mansfield, Louisiana. The money should be collected and remitted within the next two weeks.

Methodism in Nashville seems to be moving forward. Rev. J. M. Wright, in Nashville Christian Advocate, April 16, says:

McKendree, Rev. Jos. S. West, D.D., its able pastor, will soon be fully recovered from the fire; and with her elegant and capacious church, she will be ready to take her place in the very front of the great contest. The class-meeting, the Sunday-school, the Woman's Missionary Society, and other organizations, proclaim this great church a working church.

Elm street, under the pastorate of Rev. R. K. Brown, is a working church, and the Lord has blessed them abundantly. The pastor has admitted to membership, about one hundred since Conference. The missionary spirit abroad in this church has prompted them to establish a mission at Tindall Hall, where they have accomplished much good. The pastor has recently closed a meeting there with ten conversions.

The other Methodist charges in Nashville are also reported as highly prosperous.

Rev. D. C. Langford, of the Mississippi Conference, has met with a deep domestic affliction. Writing from Beauregard, Miss., April 21, he says: "The angel of death has visited our family, and has taken our precious little Mazie Hannah, who was six years, nine months, and twenty-one days old. She died on the nineteenth instant. Our hearts are so sad, because our most precious and brightest jewel is taken. Pray for us, and ask the church to pray for us, that this sad affliction may be sanctified to our eternal good."

A protracted meeting in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Lebanon, Tennessee, of fifty-eight days' recently closed, resulted in 238 conversions. The pastor, in closing his account of the meeting in the Nashville Christian Advocate, significantly adds: "We are taking steps to give our church edifice a thorough overhauling." This is certainly one indication of the genuineness of the work of grace.

Rev. E. B. Foust, writing from Mountingsport, La., April 20 says: "We have been well received on the Mountingsport circuit. We do not think the spiritual condition of the church is as it should be, but there are some signs of prosperity. I trust that the Lord will revive his work this year."

Rev. Dr. Theo. S. Savage, district superintendent of the American Bible Society for Kentucky and East and Middle Tennessee, has been spending a few days in New Orleans. Bro. Savage resides in Covington, Ky., and is a member of the Kentucky Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The pastors of our city churches were greatly gratified by his presence at the preachers' meeting on Monday last.

that his special work is prospering, and that many of our churches in Kentucky are enjoying refreshing and powerful revivals.

—We give on our third page, the missionary address of Mrs. E. C Dowdell, president of the Alabama Conference woman's missionary Society. We commend this excellent address to the prayerful consideration of all the women in the church. Sister Dowdell makes a special plea for China, and her reasons are strong ones. Some will agree with her that China should have the preference, others may direct their offerings to other fields, and yet others will divide their gifts and labors among all our foreign missions. There is an earnest call for all to work and pray.

—Our Sunday School periodicals, for May, are hard to excel in beauty of typography, and in the excellence of their contents. Dr. Cunnyngham's work displays learning, diligence and good taste. The Visitor is a gem of rare beauty, the Magazine a storehouse of biblical knowledge. All our schools should be liberally supplied with our Nashville Sunday School literature.

—We regret to learn that Rev. R. A. Davis and wife have recently experienced a sad bereavement. Their little daughter, Mary Leona aged 18 months died at the parents' residence in Bossier parish, La., April 14. May the afflicted family be graciously supported in this hour of sorrow.

—The Central Methodist, Callettsburg, Ky., has come out in a new dress, and form. It is exceedingly bright and attractive in appearance, and is a live sheet, edited with vigor and ability.

Rev. John Pipes, writing from Mansfield, La., April 16, says: "Between Railroad and Local Option, our people are excited above fever heat."

Rev. Dr. Leftwich, writing to the Wesleyan Christian Advocate from Pulaski, Tenn, April 13, says:

Five weeks ago a revival of religion literally "broke out" in my congregation and, increased in power and extent until it absorbed everything and has failed to convert the town to Christ. Up to date over one hundred and seventy souls have been converted who are known to me and whose names I have recorded, with many more in many places, as the revival influence extends all over the town and for out in the country; and hundred and forty have united with my church, with more to follow. "At least one hundred backsliders have been reclaimed, not counted as the converts, many drunkards have been reserved, whisky has been emptied in the streets, and many old hardened sinners have been born again." More than fifty families now have family worship where the voice of prayer and praise was never heard before. Old feuds have been settled and love reigns in the hearts and homes of the people. We know not whereunto this will grow.

MISSIONARY WARFARE IN MEXICO. A note from the City of Mexico, April 7th, says:

"A recent letter of excommunication, etc., by the Bishop of Querétaro against the missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in that city, in imitation of the Archbishop of Morelia against the Southern Methodists, has created great excitement in that city and this. Serious results are feared. On Sunday the mission house was attacked, but the mob of fanatic Romanists was dispersed by a detachment of Federal troops stationed there. It is understood that the city police and governor are on the side of the Bishop. The telegram of to-day says without Government help the missionaries will have to retire for safety.

"The increased number of Americans coming into the country has given occasion for the Romanists to urge their argument against American missionaries that their object is the subjugation of Mexico, which argument has been urged also by the Mexican Church of Jesus, although professing to be Protestant, and receiving its support from United States." Richmond Christian Advocate.

A letter from Elam Johnson, Atlanta, Ga., conveys to us, says the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, of April 20, the gratifying intelligence that sister Mr. Lane is rapidly recovering from her severe attack, which the doctor denominates great nervous prostration. She has a host of friends who have been greatly distressed at the accounts published, and will be glad to hear of her prospect of entire recovery.

Brother McLaine will remain with her in Atlanta, and will probably take work in that vicinity.

The anniversaries of the Baptist benevolent societies are to be held at Indianapolis, beginning May 18. May 20 a General Conference will be held, at which the question, Whether a General Conference representing the Baptists of this continent is desirable? will be discussed.

Postponement of the Mississippi State Sunday School Convention.

In response to urgent expressions from various parts of the State, and believing a fuller attendance will be secured, the time for holding the State Sunday School Convention has been changed, to Wednesday, July 20th.

Vice Presidents representing the twenty districts are urged to organize each county and report as soon as practicable. Members of Executive Committee are ready to extend any aid within their power.

We hope every town and county will have a delegate at Jackson, July 20th.

The prayerful efforts of all interested in Sunday School work are earnestly requested.

Delegates to the International Convention at Toronto, Ontario, June, 22-24, who can not attend are requested to give notice by 10th of May, in order that vacancies may be supplied and a full State representation secured.

L. P. BROWN,
Ch'm'n State S. S. Executive Committee.

Meridian, April 12th, 1881.

The Secretary Explains.

MR. EDITOR: Your correspondent, Bro. H. D. Moore, in discussing the missionary movement in the Alabama Conference, says that an explanation is due from me showing how a resolution, adopted at a missionary mass meeting, came to be incorporated with and published in the official report of Conference proceedings. I would reply that there was no order of Conference to that effect, nor was any needed, as it was published under the head of "Miscellaneous," and captioned "Missionary Enterprise." The matter was mentioned on the Conference floor; its advocates claimed for it unanimity; no one seemed to dispute their position, hence I inserted it as an item of general interest, as also the accompanying resolution requesting presiding elders to hold special missionary meetings during the sessions of their District Conferences.

R. B. CRAWFORD,
Secretary Alabama Conference.

EUFAULA, ALA., April 23, 1881.

NOTICE.—The commencement sermon of Port Gibson Collegiate Academy will be preached Sunday, June 19, by Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., president of Centenary College. Gen. J. D. Vertner will deliver the address to the Alumni Association June 21.

The manuscripts of the first volume of "History of Methodism in the Mississippi Conference," by Rev. John G. Jones, has been forwarded to publisher.

J. A. B. JONES.

Alabama S. S. Convention.

The Superintendents of Sunday Schools in Alabama are requested to send the names of parties who expect to attend the State Sunday School Convention at Gadsden, June 10, 11 and 12, to J. R. Nowlin, Chairman of the Committee of arrangements, that homes may be provided.

GADSDEN, ALA., April 25, 1881.

NOTICE.—Rev. B. T. Pearson, preacher in charge of the Amite City circuit, Woodville district, Mississippi Annual Conference, has begun, at his own request, for sufficient reason, removal from said circuit, and Rev. F. W. Barrier, of the Texas Conference, appointed in his stead.

JAS. A. McGEHEE, P. E.

GREENSBORO, LA., April 26, 1881.

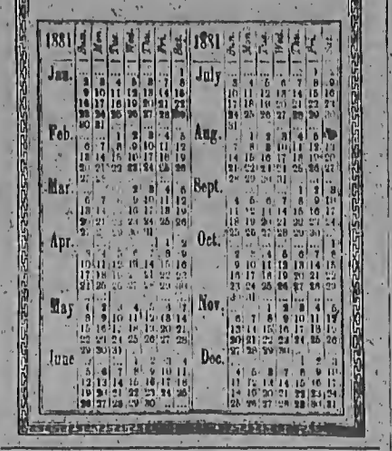
CORRECTION.—Mr. Editor: The membership of Chipola mission should be 135, instead of 233, as stated in the printed minutes.

R. V. WILLIAMS.

MARIANNA, FLA., April 20, 1881.

Books and Periodicals.

"The Beacon Light" is the title of a New Book of Hymns and Tunes, for Sunday-schools, by J. H. Tenney, and E. A. Hoffman. Oliver Ditson & Co., publishers, Boston. We have not examined the work with care, but it appears to be equal to the most of such publications. It certainly has a number of excellent hymns and tunes.



Scribner's Monthly, May, 1881, has: Frontispiece Portrait of Thomas Carlyle; The Wild Sheep of the Sierra, illustrated; Calpurnia, illustrated; Macaire Dolphide, I, by George W. Cable; Lucia; In and Out of London with Dickens, illustrated; Artemus Ward, his Home and Family, illustrated; Sant Terenzo; The Mutineers of the Bounty, the Pitcairn Islanders, from 1856-80, illustrated; The Sanitary Condition of New York, with map and diagram, by George E. Waring, Jr.; Among the Esquimaux with Schwatka, Illustrated; Impressions of Thomas Carlyle in 1818, by Ralph Waldo Emerson; The Literary Work of Thomas Carlyle; The Stirrup Cup; Honi Soit Qui Mal y Pense; An Antique Intaglio; Post Office Savings Banks in Great Britain; Jenny Lind, with Portrait; Peter the Great as Ruler and Reformer, 5, illustrated; Tirconaly, by J. G. Holland.

Wide Awake, for May, is full of the freshness and beauty of the Spring. The illustrations are numerous and spirited. Among the articles are: A King's Bed; Henrietta's Heroism; On Moving Day; Rocky Fork, chapter II, 12. The Woos of Spoodlink; Some Queer Americans; Cousin Sallie's Wedding Slippers; The Story of Honor Bright, chapters 9 and 10; Borrowed Plumes; The Story of a Good Little Mother; An Evening with Columbus; Polly Pologard little folks Series, chapter 3; Supplement, Warlock O'Glen Warlock, by George McDonald.

The North American Review, May, 1881, has: 1. Centralization in the Federal Government, David B. Field. 2. The Old Version and the New, Dr. Philip Schaff. 3. The Needs of the Supreme Court, William Strong. 4. Utah and its People, George Q. Cannon. 5. Shall Americans Build Ships? John Roach. 6. The Life Saving Service, S. S. Cox. 7. The ruins of Central America, Part VII. Desire Charnay. 8. What Morality have we Left? A New-Light Moralist.

—Appleton's Railway and Steam navigation Guide, May, 1881, has been received. It is a work of great value to business men, commercial travelers, and tourists. Published by D. Appleton & Co., New York. Price twenty-five cents.

ADVOCATE CALENDAR.

Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and to us our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

Many years ago a political meeting was held in a log church at a Michigan village on Sunday, and a clergyman who did not sympathize with it had gone there from mere curiosity. A thunderstorm gathered, the rain fell in torrents, the lightning flashed fiercely, it grew so very dark that the inmates of the church could scarcely see. The clergyman suddenly leaped up and said that he regarded the terrific storm as a manifestation of God's wrath for desecrating his holy day by such a meeting. He admitted that he had done wrong in coming, and said that he was afraid to stay. Splendor Tenth, who was present, rose slowly, and pointing her long, thin hand at him shouted, "Don't be afeerd, honey, don't be afeerd. You won't be hurt, shuah. I kin tell by reckonin' dem's dat God's never heerd tell of you."

A clerk, who was stopping to wash his hands in a creek, didn't notice the peculiar actions of a goat just behind him; so, when he somersaulted out of the water, and was asked how it happened, he answered: "I thought I felt tentacles like shore kinder hoisted and rowed me."

Our readers are directed to the card of Messrs. Ogden & Rayne in our advertising columns. This is a new firm, though both are old and well known names in the city, and to most of our readers. The house carries a large stock of Bagging, Ties, Twine, Belting for saw and grist mills, and the celebrated E. Carver Cotton Gins. They are located in Union street, and will be pleased to see or hear from any of our friends.

An old Highland clergyman who had received several calls to parishes, asked his servant where he should go. "The servant said, "Go where there is most sin, sir." The preacher concluded that was good advice, and went where there was most money.

A conscientious student in Brown University once told Dr. Wayland that he thought it would be easy to make proverbs like those of Solomon. The reply of Dr. Wayland was: "Make a few."

A person leaving a crowded stage on Madison Avenue, the other day, steadied himself by resting his hands on the knees of the passengers. "What a savage," exclaimed one lady. "Yes," replied her companion, "He's a pawnee."

A plumber had an Irish lad in his employ, and one day having occasion for a piece of pipe of four inches square, he said to Pat, "Twelve inches square, Pat, how long?"

A young officer thought to puzzle the editor of the Figaro, by asking him when two men of equal age and rank met which should be the first to bow. The editor calmly replied, "The more polite of the two."

"Whom do you love?" said James to his sweetheart. "Sally, sister." "I love no," was the reply. "And whom does Sally love?" "Jones." Mr. Smith, does he deserve it? Exchange quotes.

A young farmer's wife made her first boy's jump to some fruit set behind on which the farmer exclaimed: "Goodness, he will not know whether he is going to school or coming home?"

"Dutton's Vegetable Discovery" is very highly recommended by the oldest ministers of the gospel in Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, and is sold by many of them. "Try it." It is really wonderful. Some write us testimonials.

Compassionate old lady: paying her dues: "How indeed your horse looks, coachman, he has the bit quite out of his large mouth." Coachman: "Bless the dear old lady, it's the small bit of his stomach, mum."

If it cost anything to go to church, people who never go now would run around like wild men for free passes.

Mr. P. Werlein, 135 Canal street, New Orleans, deals in the leading pianos and organs. He requests you to send for his catalogues and prices before purchasing. Low prices, liberal dealing, and full guarantee are to be had at this old house.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co. American Chinaware, breakfast and tea set, 100 pieces, for $15. Equal in looks and usefulness to French China.

"Sambo, why does the colored man choose to sweep the chimneys?" "Dunno." "Why, 'cos it wants his own kind of work." "Oh, 'way."

Business Notices.

Wilbor's Compound of Pure Cod-Liver Oil and Lime. The advantages of this compound over the plain Oil is, that the disgusting taste of the Oil is entirely removed, and the whole rendered entirely palatable. The offensive taste of the Oil has long acted as a great objection to its use; but in this form the feeble is entirely obviated. A host of certificates might be given here to testify to the excellence and success of "Wilbor's Cod Liver Oil and Lime," but the fact that it is regularly prescribed by the medical faculty is sufficient. For sale by A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston, and by all druggists.

For sore lips from fever, colds and chills, apply Burnett's Kalliston, which at once allays the burning pains and irritation, and heals as by magic.

Faded or Gray Hair gradually recovers its youthful color and lustre by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, an elegant dressing, admired for its purity and rich perfume.

CANVASSERS make from $25 to $50 per week selling goods for E. G. RIDEOUT & CO., 10 Barclay St., New York. Send for Catalogue and terms.

JOSEPHUS' COMPLETE WORKS.

Comprising the History and Antiquities of the Jews, with the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and dissertations concerning Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, James the Just, and the Sacrifice of Isaac, together with a discourse on Hades or Hell, with his autobiography. Translated by William Whiston, A. M., to which is added an analytical index to the entire work.

This large octavo work of 780 pages, bound in cloth, $2.00, or in full leather binding, $2.50; mailed post-paid on receipt of price.

LATHROP & WILKINS,
New Orleans.

You are Welcome to it

Without money and without price.

THE FARM ENGINEER,

A semi-monthly journal, full of valuable, useful and interesting information for the farmer, planter and mechanic, will be sent to any address until the first of July next

Free of Charge.

F. P. GRAVELY,
16 Union Street, New Orleans.

Send your address for it immediately, either by postal card or letter, saying that you saw this in the ADVOCATE.

FRED. N. OGDEN. BENJ. A. RAYNE

OGDEN & RAYNE,

DEALERS IN

BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,

AND AGENTS FOR THE

Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,

AND

Shultz Belting Company,

18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

FOR SALE.

A desirable residence in Ocean Springs, Miss. For particulars apply to or address the subscriber at that point.

A. C. RAMSEY.

"CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S EXCHANGE"

FOR WOMAN'S WORK.

This Association has opened a salesroom at No. 11 and 13 Bourbon Street, where all kinds of plain and fine sewing, ornamental and fancy needle work will be received and sold.

Orders will also be taken for preserves, jellies, pickles, cake, ice cream, etc., samples having first been tested.

All work must be entered through a member, the price fixed by the owner, carefully executed by the artisan, and the commission charged will be ten per cent.

The Annual Subscription of Members is Five Dollars, which entitles such to elect the work of three persons for one year.

Women of all denominations in this city or State, as well as of all other States, are urgently requested to become members of this Exchange.

Besides the option of becoming members as above by applying in person or by letter, at our Rooms Contributions of any kind will also be gladly received, or information given, at the same place.

We shall rely, first, on the public generally will lend us its hearty co-operation and aid, to this worthy charity, with the assurance that the Managers will spare no effort for its success.

The benefits of this association are open to good women without regard to religious belief.

MANAGERS.

Mrs. G. W. Pattenhall,	Mrs. E. John Ellis,
Miss M. W. Hollins,	Mrs. Gilbert Green,
Mrs. D. A. Gross,	Mrs. M. R. Conger,
Mrs. T. G. Richardson,	Miss K. Fuhr,
Mrs. R. M. Withersley,	Mrs. T. V. Copeland,
Mrs. S. De Grade,	Mrs. Perry Smyth,
Mrs. Albert Baldwin,	Mrs. J. B. Wallace,
Mrs. T. H. Robbins,	Mrs. E. J. Wharton,
Mrs. Percy Roberts,	Mrs. C. E. Kells,
Mrs. J. H. Allen,	Mrs. E. E. Simpson,
Mrs. P. N. Spring,	Mrs. S. B. Davis,
Mrs. J. R. Foden,	Mrs. G. C. Westfeldt,
Mrs. L. C. Wayne,	Mrs. M. C. Jennings,
	Miss M. A. Wyckoff.

OFFICERS.

President, Mrs. M. W. BALLIET.
Vice Presidents, Mrs. R. M. WATERSLEY, Mrs. T. G. RICHARDSON, Mrs. J. R. ALLEN, Mrs. E. E. SIMPSON, Mrs. ALBERT BALDWIN
Treasurer, Mrs. CHAS. E. KELLS.
Recording Secretary, Mrs. THEO. ATZE.
Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. E. J. WHARTON.

1000 AGENTS WANTED!

Young men in every town and neighborhood in Mississippi and Louisiana, to sell

Dr. Dutton's Vegetable Discovery.

Has sold easily to 11 Duke agents.
It is the best BLOOD AND LIVER Medicine we ever handled. Write for terms. It will pay you.

J. L. FITZELL, General Agent,
Jonestown, Miss.

OUR BROTHER IN BLACK,

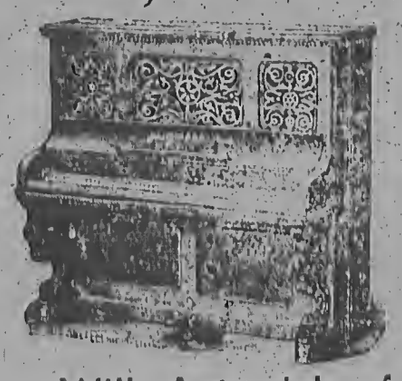
HIS FREEDOM AND HIS FUTURE.

By

ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD, D.D.,

President of Emory College, Oxford, Ga.

Nashville: Southern Methodist Publishing House.
New York: Phillips & Hunt.
1881.



Will be issued simultaneously by both Houses May 1.

12 mo.; Price $1.

Sent to any address, post paid, on receipt of price. Address, the publishers; or the author.

1000 MORE CUSTOMERS

My Prices

Will Astonish.

PIANOS!

ORGANS!

AND

Musical Instruments.

Write to

P. WERLEIN,

No. 135 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

Agricultural.

IN A CORNFIELD

A great brown field where the planters go,
Steadily walking to and fro,
And each one carries a broad bright hoe.

At every stroke of the flashing blade,
A bed in the waiting earth is made,
And there the kernels of corn are laid.

Ten days—and green is each long straight row
That shows where the tiny corn-blades grow;
And then the plow must begin to go.

For the weeds are ready to play their part,
Like evil thoughts in the human heart
That never wait for the good to start.

Twenty days more; and the field that was bare
Now looks like a meadow, wide and fair
As the corn leaves wave in the changing air.

Yet fourscore days—and the forests stand
In tall straight ranks like an army grand,
On the self same spot of brown bare land.

And the columns are clothed in fine array
Of nodding plumes and of tassels gay,
And swords of green that have grown in a day.

Of the wonderful mystery who can tell?
For this no less is a miracle,
That every year is wrought so well.

We talk of the sun, the air and the rain,
And the action of heat on the soil and grain,
But the reasoning yet is far from plain.

This beauty must bow to the frost and snow,
And soon the stubble alone will show
Where the stately corn plants proudly grow.

For the time of the gathering is near,
And the ripened stalks and the golden ear
Are the full reward for the toilsome year.

—Country Gentleman.

CONCERNING BEES.—The growing World, discoursing on the subject of bees, tells us that the first thing done by a swarm upon taking possession of their new home is to see that it is free from spiders and other insects which are their enemies. They then cement the surface of their new home with propolis, being especially careful about the top of the hive.

The comb building is next in order, wax for which is formed in the body of the bee and exudes in thin scales from the segments or ring-like places observed under the abdomen. In this work each bee in the hive forming the pendulous cluster contributes its share, while others are already scouring the fields in eager search for honey. As fast as the comb is sufficiently built out, the queen and her attendants, by common consent, take possession of the central and lower portions, in each shell of which she deposits an egg, then passes to the opposite side and repeats the operation. The borders of the comb are appropriated to honey storing. The cells first built are very uniform, and average about twenty-five to the square inch.

The eggs deposited in these cells develop into worker bees. Later on, as the bees emerge from the cells and the colony becomes more populous much larger cells are built, and in these the queen deposits eggs which develop into drones or male bees.

When the hive becomes very crowded with bees, so much so that there seems scarcely room for all inside, and the combs are well filled with young bees and honey, an observation of the inside of the hive will reveal the existence of several conical protuberances, not unlike small thimbles with the apex inclined downward. These are queen cells, and are found sometimes projecting from the edges of the combs and frequently from the centre or face; sometimes singly, and again in groups of two or three. The queen cells are an after consideration, and are not built except to supersede a queen with a new one, or where a colony has become queenless from some cause, or to provide a successor for the parent queen, to insure a continuance of the community after the queen and bees have swarmed out. When a queen cell is far enough advanced in its construction, it is supplied with a worker egg or a young larva, and this, with the enlarged cell and plentiful supply of "royal jelly," develops a queen.

RAISING CELERY.—This delicious and wholesome vegetable is more largely used and more thoroughly appreciated every year, and no one who has a garden should fail to raise it. A correspondent of the New England Farmer gives some instructions for raising it. He says: "Celery demands the very best of land, the best of skill and more labor than any other crop. The land should have been tilled with some hoed crops for at least two years previously, and if, in these years, it has been very heavily manured, and kept free from weeds, it will be in pretty good order. Celery requires heavy manuring to do well, and it is a good plan to plow in coarse manure in the fall as a preparation for the crop; but if the manure must be applied in spring, it should be worked very fine and mixed thoroughly with the soil in the rows where the celery is to be grown. It is sometimes grown as a second crop, after onions, early cabbage, lettuce, potatoes, or greens. The land is made ready as early as possible in April, and when raised with onions, every sixth or seventh row is sown with celery at the same time as the onion seed is sown. As celery seed is very small, it takes a good deal of preparation to make the land fine enough to insure its germination.

"As weeds of all sorts grow so very much faster than celery, many gardeners prefer to start their celery under a hotbed about April 1st. For this purpose very little heat is required, but care must be taken to keep the bed moist, and the best way to do this is to spread over it a piece of old bagging (burlap) which must be removed as soon as the seed begins to sprout. The plants can be taken from this bed and set out in the field in May, when the sod is moist, after a rain. If it is required to clean up a piece of lettuce or greens or other early crop in June, and then plant celery, the plants will need to be pricked out from the seed bed in May, into a plant bed set about three inches apart, where they can stand till June, or even July, before transplanting to the field. The more celery is transplanted, however, the more likely it is to go to seed, instead of growing a good stool."

"Celery is planted in rows seven or eight feet apart, and one foot between the plants in the row. The old plan of setting the plants in trenches is not practiced now; the plants are set on level land and need frequent hoeing and hand-weeding until the final banking up, which is done about two or three weeks before it is wanted for use or market. Thus, if wanted for use in September, the weather being warm, the celery will blanch in ten days after the last banking. In October, when the weather is colder, it will take two or three weeks."

OLD COWS UNPROFITABLE.—The Cincinnati Gazette says on a great many farms there are cows being kept over winter each season, which entail an actual loss instead of profit to the farmer. When a cow has gone past her prime there is a tendency to a rapid waste of tissues of the animal structure; and to keep her in condition, a much greater amount of food becomes necessary than would be sufficient for a younger beast.

But how shall we despose of our old cows? If we feed them corn, and fatten them for the butcher, they will more than eat their heads off. Now, we very well know that old scrubs would be likely to do this. But there is a way in which the veriest hide-bound scrub can be made rapidly to thrive and put on flesh. Commence feeding her in fall with potatoes or turnips cooked. In the beginning feed a half bushel in the morning and the same at night. Over each of such mess, sprinkle a quart of cotton oil-cake. After a while increase each meal to three pecks or a bushel, and increase the cotton seed meal to two quarts in the morning and two at night. Fed in this way almost any animal will fatten with great rapidity and in a month or six weeks will be in good condition to turn over to the butcher.

OVER SIX MILLIONS.—What do the farmers of the South think of a crop of cotton running up to six and a quarter millions of bales, with prices they already, consider unremunerative? If such has been the crop for 1880-'81, as indicated by Liverpool estimates, what must we expect for the next cotton year, with good seasons, and our great stretch to hire more hands, buy more guano, and plant more cotton? Over seven millions will have to be our next report, if we succeed. And we are told that not only has the cotton area been greatly increased, but that more cotton is now produced by white labor, than formerly by slave labor—and yet we are on the wild hunt for immigrants to plant more cotton. Why will we continue to complain of low prices? And this white labor seems to be considerably on the "up grade," for the census, we believe, shows that, notwithstanding the great decrease of colored labor, the cotton area has steadily enlarged. "Exodusting," therefore, and huckstering, social reuniouing, preaching, fishing, hunting, tramping soldiering, schooling and general free perambulating, are none of them to impede the march of King Cotton. The half a million of Southern white youths who set up for themselves every year, with the usual influx of citizens from other parts, will be amply sufficient, not only to keep up, but to augment his forces.—Maj. Bryan, in Southern Farmer's Monthly.

THE MILK PERIODS.—The periods of milking may be classed in three parts. For the first six or seven weeks after calving the largest quantity of milk per day is produced. After this the yield falls off pretty considerable, but then remains at about the same figures for two or three months, when a steady decline sets in until the cow is perfectly dry. By careful feeding the best parts of the milking periods may be prolonged, and this ought to be the aim of all milk producers. If green fodder, and other food which stimulates milk secretion, can be used at the right time, a considerable extra quantity of milk may be produced. During the milking periods the proportion of caseine increases, and that of butter decreases. Milk produced by cows soon after calving contains, therefore, more butter and less caseine than later, and the difference is great enough to make itself felt in the larger dairies, if the cows calve about the same part of the year. Professor Sheldon.

HOW LONG TO KEEP SHEEP.—Maj. L. C. Bryan, of Georgia, writes in his Southern Farmer's Monthly, that there are few animals kept on the farm which, in their prime, pay as well as do sheep, and there are very few, if any others, upon whom old age has such a damaging effect. As the sheep is much shorter lived than any other of our domestic animals, it is not strange that many farmers attempt to keep them too long. At ten years of age a horse is in his prime, and the cow is then as good as ever, with the prospect of remaining so several years longer, but the sheep is very old when it reaches the age of ten, the natural limit of the term of its life. After reaching this age, sheep are very likely to be injured by the slight exposures which would do young animals no harm. They are more liable to be attacked by disease, and if they live they will be likely to produce less wool and smaller lambs than they have done previously. We do not think it pays, except, perhaps, in special instances, to keep sheep after they are six or seven years old.

The attempt to make sugar from beet-roots appears to be a financial failure in this country. The Portland sugar factory was the first started in New England, and the first to succumb. The machinery has been taken out of the building and is to be devoted to other purposes. It was stated about the time of the failure of the Portland company, that want of capacity and imperfection in the machinery were the causes of this failure. Another company was, therefore, formed in Franklin county, Mass., composed chiefly of farmers; machinery of the most perfect kind was procured from Germany. This mill had a capacity of over one hundred tons per day, and was worked up to its full capacity; everything, indeed, was satisfactory to the company except the profits; these were not two per cent. on the capital invested. In an article on this subject something over a year ago, we stated, "that the cost of labor in this country, and the low price of cane sugar would preclude the possibility of beet-sugar coming into competition with the product of the cane" and we have, as yet, seen no reason to change this opinion.

TO MIX CORN.—Plant a hill or so of some particular variety in the midst of a field of some other variety. When the hill or so has tasseled out but not yet silked, remove the tassel entire. The silk will then form, and the ear, if fertilized at all must be fertilized by the variety making up the field. Such experiments would be very interesting, to say nothing of the fact that they might turn up a new and valuable variety of corn.

SICKLY PLANTS.—The Floral Monthly says the best thing for sickly plants is to turn them out of the pots, shake or wash off all the soil from the roots, and if any are decayed cut them off; also prune the stems and branches severely, and pot again in fresh soil. Set them away in a shady place, after giving water sufficient to settle the soil, adding a little from time to time as returning health and growth appear.

Roses need very rich soil to bring them to perfection, thriving best in a mixture of well-rotted manure, sand and garden loam. To stint them of nourishment is poor economy.

One gallon of white paint should cover forty four square yards of surface.

Household.

HOW TO MAKE GOOD CANDY AT HOME.—We condense from The Country Gentleman the following:

MOLASSES CANDY.—One cupful of molasses, one cupful of sugar, and a piece of butter the size of an egg. Flavor as you like.

COCOANUT DROPS.—One grated cocoanut, four tablespoonfuls of flour, one pound of sugar and four eggs, the whites beaten to a froth. Stir the mixture well, and drop on pans with a tablespoon.

CREAM COCOANUT.—Boil the syrup as above. When it begins to thicken, add the meat of one cocoanut coarsely grated, and pour in flat pans about an inch thick, or less. While cooling, cut in broad strips. This is very fine. Cream candy is not soft until kept a week.

CREAM CANDY.—Two pounds best powdered sugar, just water enough to dissolve. Boil in a clean covered kettle or saucepan very briskly, without stirring. When it begins to thicken (which will be soon), add as much cream of tartar as may be heaped on a five-cent piece. Be sure to watch that it does not burn. Try often and speedily by taking a small round stick and dipping into cold water. When it breaks short and crisp, pour it out on a large greased pan or plate, and pour on the flavoring, and when cool enough to handle, work until white. Cut into flat sticks. When hard, place it in a glass jar and keep a week or ten days, when it will become creamy and delicious.

CHOCOLATE CREAM DROPS.—Take two cupfuls of white sugar, half cupful of milk; put them into a saucepan and beat until it boils; then boil hard five minutes precisely. Set the pan in a dish of cold water; stir until the mixture creams and cools enough to handle; then mold into small drops, laying them on a buttered platter. Flavor if you prefer. Take half a cake of Baker's chocolate, scrape fine, put it into a bowl and set in the top of a steaming (not boiling) tea-kettle till dissolved; then take the creams, one at a time, and drop in the chocolate, roll over quickly, take out with a fork and slip on a buttered platter. Be careful not to let the chocolate cook, or it will harden.

CHOCOLATE CARAMELS.—1. Take of grated chocolate, milk, molasses and sugar, one cupful each; piece of butter the size of an egg. Boil until it will harden when dropped in cold water; add vanilla; put in a buttered pan, and before it cools, mark off in square blocks.

2. Two ounces of chocolate, two gills of milk, two gills of white sugar, two tablespoonfuls of molasses, vanilla.

3. Four ounces of chocolate, two pounds of light brown sugar, two gills of cream, four ounces of butter; vanilla.

4. Four ounces of chocolate, one and a half pounds of brown sugar, tumblerful of milk, four ounces of butter.

5. Six ounces of chocolate, a cupful of white, and a cupful of brown sugar, cupful of milk, butter the size of an egg, two tablespoonfuls of flour.

6. Eight ounces of chocolate, two pounds of white sugar, cupful of cream, heaping tablespoonful of butter, and vanilla extract.

7. Seven tablespoonfuls of grated chocolate, a cupful of white and a cupful of brown sugar, cupful of milk, tablespoonful of butter, the same of cornstarch, soda the size of a pea. Boil all the ingredients (except the chocolate, vanilla extract, and half of the milk) half an hour, stirring all the time to prevent burning. Wet the chocolate with the milk; draw the saucepan to the side of the range, and stir it in well; boil ten minutes longer. After taking it from the range, add the vanilla.

HOW CORN IS CANNED.—The Boston Cultivator tells us that there are now, in the New England States, numerous large establishments devoted exclusively to canning green corn. Everything connected with the business is very simple. The corn is planted expressly for this purpose, and when it is in condition to can, it is stripped of its husks, after which it is thoroughly wiped to remove the silks. It is then passed along to another set of hands, who, with knives made for this purpose, cut off the kernels from the cob. This work is done over a large wooden hopper, there being generally four hands at work at one machine, and the corn is allowed to drop through into a tub. When this is full, it is taken to another room, where it is weighed out in small quantities, each amount just sufficient to fill a can, the corn being forced into the can by means of a powerful automatic press, which operates very rapidly. The cans are then taken to the soldering room, where each is carefully wiped and the top soldered on, a small hole being made in the cover to allow the escape of air. The next step is the cooking, which is done by placing the cans in wooden vats, filled with water and kept at the boiling point by steam heat. After being cooked awhile, the cans are taken out, the air holes newly opened, and they are subjected to a thorough shaking to force out the air, which operation is most important. After this, the corn is again cooked, the cans sealed air tight, and they are then ready for market. All articles are treated in a similar manner, with the exception of preparing them for the cooking process, and when finished they are practically imperishable, as they will keep for years in any climate.

We use a great deal of canned corn in the South, but we don't prepare it. Why? It seems to us that Texas, when corn can be grown with such extraordinary profit, ought to take a hint from the foregoing.—Mobile Register.

MRS. CURTIS' VIRGINIA CRUMPETS. One half gill yeast, in one quart warm milk, one teaspoonful salt, flour to make a stiff batter; put it in a warm place to rise; when raised very light, add one cupful melted butter, and bake in muffin rings.

YEAST.—Take one coffee-cup of grated potato; pour it in a pan, and put in it two and a half pints of boiling water; let it boil, and when done put in one cupful of sugar, one half cupful of salt; when nearly cold put in a yeast-cake and let it rise.

SPONGE CAKE NO. 2.—Two heaping cups of powdered sugar, four eggs; beat well together. Two scant cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder; flavor with lemon; two-thirds cup of boiling water. Add water just before putting into the oven. Bake in a hot oven.

CORN BREAD.—One cupful milk, one cupful Indian meal, one egg, one-half cupful flour, two tablespoonfuls sugar, three teaspoonfuls yeast powder, (good sized ones.)

GRAHAM SCONES.—One pint graham meal, one large tablespoonful butter, one pinch salt, one cupful cold water; chop together, and bake very, very thin.

Educational.

THE Model School at Brussels.—From information received at the Bureau of Education, it appears that the Ecole Modele, or the model school, at Brussels, contains four hundred boys, aged from seven to fourteen. It is not a free school, the annual tuition fee being one hundred and fifty francs. There is a Kindergarten attached, where boys from five to seven are received. The regular school has three departments; the primary, consisting of boys from seven to nine; the intermediate, of boys from nine to twelve; and the highest, of boys from twelve to fifteen; who are prepared for industrial pursuits. There are twelve classes, each containing about thirty-four boys. The hours of study are from eight to twelve, and from half-past one to four o'clock. Each lesson lasts three-quarters of an hour, and is followed by a quarter of an hour's recreation, while every Thursday is a half-holiday. Seven hours are devoted every week to gymnastics. No home work is given, and no corporal punishment is allowed. Religious instruction is excluded from the school, as is also Euclid and demonstrative geometry. The classrooms are carefully lighted from the left, and great pains is taken to make them cheerful. Drawing has an important place in the curriculum, and is taught in all classes. Language holds the first place in the list of subjects taught. Grammar is not taught, but translations from Flemish into French, and from French into Flemish are freely practiced, and, as a very important practical aid to correct language, no incomplete sentences are allowed in answering questions. Next to language comes science, and this is taught with great precision. There is a museum, which is constantly increased by the boys themselves. Every teacher teaches without a book.

—The Evansville Courier claims that Indiana has the largest school-fund of any of the States. The available fund now amounts, it is said, to more than $9,000,000. This is the permanent fund drawing interest, the State having $4,000,000 of it loaned at six per cent., the rest being loaned to individual borrowers in the various counties at eight per cent. The law permits no loan to any individual borrower to exceed $1000, and none is loaned to corporations. The security demanded is land of estimated value, exclusive of all improvements, of twice the amount of the loan. There are now at least four applicants for each $1000 loaned. The fund is constantly being increased, from $10,000 to $50,000 annually, by fines under the penal law of the State. In addition to this permanent fund, the school property of the State, was valued at $11,536,637 39 last year; this year Prof. Smart estimates that it will amount to something over $12,000,000.

—The winter term of the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, O., closes on the 25th inst. The term in all respects has been eminently satisfactory, and the attendance has been very large. Efforts are constantly and successfully made to strengthen the several departments of the University. Both sexes enjoy equal advantages, and the ladies are constantly increasing in number, and advancing in higher and more extended courses of study.—Central Christian Advocate.

—The pupils of the Indianapolis public schools are said to be overworked, and efforts are being made to shorten the hours and to cut down the course of study. A similar movement is on foot in Kansas City, Missouri. The State law fixes the school day at six hours, and the school superintendent of that place protests that it is too fatiguing for children of from five to ten years of age, especially when consideration is taken of the fact that pupils are frequently detained after school-hours, as a punishment, or to learn lessons not properly prepared.

—The Texas University fund amounts to $461,335 90, and the Agricultural and Mechanical College fund to $200,000. The annual interest of the University fund amounts to about $25,500, sufficient at this time, to support a State university; and if the interest and land sales should be reinvested in bonds as they accrue, enough would soon be realized to build, as well as to operate such an institution.

The students of Columbia College have decided to wear the Oxford cap, commonly known as "mortar-boards," in and around the college. The introduction of this custom has been frequently attempted in several American colleges; but has not met with a very flattering success. Some years ago the students of Columbia endeavored to make the wearing of the college cap universal; but the project failed and the custom was short-lived.

Boston has expended $800,000 upon a new High School building, and this magnificent structure which is generally admitted to be without a rival in its line was built, according to the Boston Transcript, at the lowest possible cost, the contracts being taken at a time when land, labor and material had reached their lowest figures.

The latest report of the Minister of Education shows a steady increase of public instruction throughout the Japanese empire. The school attendance is now 35,000; the males unduly preponderating. There is a good deal to do yet in the proper payments of teachers in Japan. School teachers' wages in that country are rather infinitesimal, something less than $25 a year, sufficing for the average schoolmaster.

—It is said that old President Day, of Yale College, when asked what was the first requisite for the Presidency of a college, replied, "Financial skill." Some of our educational institutions seem to have found men highly endowed with this prime quality. It is an endowment which has much promise in it for the institutions which are so fortunate as to secure such men.

—Mr. Theodore Thomas, in an article in Scribner's, makes a much-needed protest against the careless way in which music is taught, and children's voices abused in our common schools. If we are ever to become a musical people, the foundation must be laid in a correct and simple method of training the voice and teaching the elements of music to school children.

—There are 86,000 schools and colleges in India, with an attendance of 1,900,000 boys and girls. The intellectual portion of the instruction given is extended to literature, history, and all included under the general term of the "humanities."

—More than thirty-seven per cent. of the classes in the College of Liberal Arts of Boston University last year were young women.

EDUCATIONAL.

WANTED—A SITUATION FOR AN experienced and well qualified teacher. Reference to members of faculty of Vanderbilt University. Address, JOHN HUGHES, Jackson, Miss.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Owned, controlled and managed by the Louisiana Annual Conference.

Course of study equal to any college in the South. Its roll of pupils has nearly doubled in three months, and still they come. Noted for healthfulness of locality. All at living rates.

Total expense for Spring term, commencing February 14, 1881, only $75 in literary and classical course. Music $30. No extras. Let Louisianians build up their own schools.

A specimen copy of College News free on application. Address REV. J. LANE BORDEN, President.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. V. Kneringer, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $50 additional.

Spring session begins February 4, 1881. A discount of twenty per cent. to Methodist preachers, and Publishing House bonds taken from them at par.

Send for catalogue to REV. E. E. HOSS, President.

HAMBURG (ARK.) HIGH SCHOOL,

Thirty Miles North of Bastrop, La.

This Institution, for both sexes, now in its fourth year, has 64 months yet remaining. Its facilities for educating are peculiar, and its charges are moderate. All modern improvements introduced. Faculty full and experienced. The principal boards his teachers and pupils, regarding the latter as his own children.

One hundred and twenty-five dollars will cover all school expenses, except Music.

City inquirers are referred to Judge R. B. Todd, J. M. Bonner and J. M. Lewis, Esqs.; to Rev. Dr. C. W. Carter and Bishop Keener.

D. C. B. CONNERLY, Principal.

January 6, 1881.

READVILLA SEMINARY,

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

A home school for girls. Thorough training in all departments. Full corps of efficient Teachers. Expenses moderate. Numbers limited.

For particulars address MRS. MARY W. REED, Principal.

Memphis Conference Female Institute.

JACKSON, TENNESSEE.

REV. A. W. JONES, A. M., D. D., President.

This well known College of the South and West begins its Fall session the First Monday in September. Quieting Concert and Address Tuesday, September 7, 1880. For thirty-six years there has been an average of more than twelve graduates annually.

The Faculty is full and efficient. The determination is to stand among the foremost in the progress of Science, Language and Art.

For further information apply to the President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin September 29, 1880.

This is a family Boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Use of the parents. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. H. N. MAGRUDER, Baton Rouge, La.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Opens September 6, 1880. The last session was the most prosperous one since the war. The whole cost of board and tuition need not exceed $144 in the Preparatory Department, nor $164 in College classes for the scholastic year. Send for a Catalogue.

C. G. ANDREWS, President.

East Mississippi Female College,

MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.

REV. J. W. ARKINSON, A. M., PRESIDENT.

A chartered and prosperous Southern school for girls and young ladies. Few schools have grown more steadily and rapidly in public confidence and patronage. Increased in numbers during the past seven years as the following figures show: 5, 6, 8, 9, 4, 9, 8, 9, 7, 143. Commanded per centage the last year from Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee and Alabama. Its past history, increasing facilities, accessibility and methods of close and thorough instruction assure the friends of a long and prosperous future for the institution. Send for catalogue.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

EAST TENNESSEE.

Founded 1849, and located where
Pure waters flow,
Sleek cattle low,
Cool breezes blow,
Ripe apples grow.

Excellent and tried teachers. Terms very favorable. The Female Department is at SWEETWATER, on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad. The Male Department, at HIWASSEE COLLEGE POSTOFFICE, seven miles out in the country. A neat monthly paper, the "Hiwassee College Reporter," at fifty cents a year. Address J. H. BRUNNER, President.

JEFFERSON COLLEGE.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN.

Six miles from Natchez, Miss. Session begins September 16. Full corps of instructors. Course of study thorough and extensive. Nearly fifty boarders from abroad. Pupils from a distance board with the principal. Entire expense for ten months, $145. For catalogues address the principal.

J. S. RAYMOND, Washington, Adams county, Miss.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.,

Will begin its forty first session October 4, 1880. Great attention paid to the regular course. Teachers in the Music and Art departments selected with reference to special duties. Charges moderate.

For further information address R. M. MOSS, A. M., President.

HOMER MALE COLLEGE

THE TWENTY-FIRST SESSION

will begin the

FIRST OF SEPTEMBER, 1880.

Address R. A. SMITH, President.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Crescent Insurance Co.,

67 & 69 Camp Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

ORGANIZED 1849.—REORGANIZED 1880.

Cash Capital $400,000.

SOLICITS

FIRE, RIVER AND MARINE RISKS.

W. R. LYMAN.....President.
S. B. NEWMAN.....Vice President.
CHAS. E. RICK.....Secretary.

My New Illust. $4 Pamphlet describing over 100 Gold and Silver Waltham Watches sent for 6c stamp. It tells how I send watches to all parts of U.S. to be examined before paying any money. Undoubted reference. N. H. White, Jeweler, Newark, N. J.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHERS,

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

in the South-west is now in stock and ready to fill all orders, large or small at Publishers' prices at

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at the native, and prices guaranteed as low as they can be had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application.

Also a general line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER,
SLATED CLOTH,
LIQUID SLATING,
BLACKBOARDS,
BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,
CHALK CRAYONS,
MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,
NUMERICAL FRAMES,
SCHOOL SATCHELS,
BOOK STRAPS,
WRITING PAPER,
DRAWING PAPER,
BLOTTING PAPER,
WRITING BOOKS,
COMPOSITION BOOKS,
SLATES AND PENCILS,
INK, INK STANDS, PENS,
PENHOLDERS, CALL BELLS,

Kindergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

Send for anything you want or address for prices.

LATHROP & WILKINS, New Orleans.

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors, members and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

South-western Agency for

Readers' and Writers' Economy Co.

LATHROP & WILKINS, New Orleans.

"FOR ORGANISTS!"

ORGAN GEMS. ($2 50.) By F. L. RAVENPORT.

ORGAN SELECTIONS ($1 50.) By PETERS.

BATISTE'S ORGAN VOLUNTARIES. $2 50

BATISTE'S LAST COMPOSITIONS. $2 50

ORGANIST'S RELIANCE. (10 Nos., each $1 25. Complete $6.) By EUGENE THAYER.

ZUNDEL'S ORIGINAL ORGAN COMPOSITIONS. $1 25.

In these six well-made books will be found a very large number of voluntaries, some classical, some new and light, but all good. Organists will be glad to use the longer ones listed, and to adopt the shorter compositions as themes from which to vary.

Billee Taylor, price reduced to 50 cents.
Olivette, price reduced to 50 cents.

Johnson's New Method for Harmony. ($1.) By A. N. JOHNSON. "The best book in the world" (for its object,) was the commendation bestowed by an enthusiastic pupil on a former book by the same author. However that may be, this is his newest treatise, and can hardly be excelled for plainness of explanation, ease and thoroughness. It does not attempt counterpoint, or any of the higher problems of composition; but confines itself to those that every organist, every good player, and every composer of "the peoples music," ought to know.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston

C. H. DITSON & CO., 843 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Christian Advocate.

Shop Words.

"Nonsense!" said Mr. Wheaton shortly.

Mrs. Wheaton's face flushed scarlet; she looked up at him, and, if I mistake not, a sharp reply got up as far as her throat, but she choked it down; it did not part her lips. She looked furtively at me, but I looked steadily at the fire. Mr. Wheaton all the time was quite unconscious of the stir his word had made in one tender and sensitive heart. Then Mrs. Wheaton murmured something about her scissors and slipped out of the room.

Mrs. Wheaton had ventured to make some remark on some business question; I think it concerned the morality of some Wall street operations. The subject was one with which she had no great acquaintance, and perhaps her woman wit was at fault. Indeed, I remember thinking at the time that it was, at least in part; but what she said was not nonsense.

After Mrs. Wheaton had gone out there was a moment or two of silence; then I broke it. Mr. Wheaton and I are old friends, and I presumed a little on that fact.

"Tom," said I, "how long have you been married?"

"Twenty-four years next May," said he. "A year from next May, if we both live so long, will be our silver wedding. And yet it seems but yesterday that Lucy and I were sleighing it in the moonlight that Christmas that I ran away from home for my holidays, much to the chagrin and vexation of my sisters, because I found greater attractions at Lucy Vine's."

"I wonder," said I, speaking slowly and musingly, and as it were to myself "I wonder if that Christmas holiday you would have spoken to Lucy Vine as you spoke to your wife just now?"

"How?" said Mr. Wheaton; and he turned sharply upon me.

"Nonsense!" I repeated; and I threw into my own voice all the vigor and the sharpness there had been in his. It was a hazardous experiment, but Tom and I were old friends; and at all events, there was no drawing back now.

He looked at me sharply for a moment, and I looked at him; then his eyes went back to the fire. "Shoh!" said he, speaking to himself. "I wonder," and then quickly turning back to me, "do you suppose she minded it?"

"What did she get up and go out for without a word in reply?" I asked.

"To get her scissors, I believe," said he.

I laughed at him. "It is taking her along time to find them," I replied.

"Yes, she did mind it. If you had seen the quick flush in her face, and the quick look, first at you and then at me, and the choking at the throat, and the nervous movement of the hands, you would not have doubted that she minded it. Suppose she had said to you, 'Nonsense!' and I fired it at him again as explosively as I could: 'how would you have liked it?'"

He shook his head slowly; he was still studying the fire.

"Suppose I had said to her, 'Nonsense!' explosively as before 'How would you have liked it?'"

"I would have said you were no gentleman," said Mr. Wheaton; "but—but"

"But what?" said I.

"Dear me! John, a fellow can't be studying all the time how he'll talk to his own wife, you know. If he can't be free at home, he can't be free anywhere. She ought not to be so sensitive. She knows I didn't mean anything."

"Tom," said I, "if any one else accused you of saying something when you didn't mean anything, you'd get redder in the face over it than she was just now. You meant exactly what you said. You thought what your wife said was nonsense, and blurted it right out."

"Well, it was nonsense," said Mr. Wheaton.

"I am not so sure of that," said I, "but if it were, that was no reason why you should tell her so."

"Do you always weigh your words when talking with your wife, as if you were in a witness box before a Philadelphia lawyer?"

"No matter what I do," said I. "Perhaps I have learned a lesson here to-night that will make me more careful hereafter. Of one thing I am very sure, Tom, if we were as careful of our wives after twenty-five years of married life as we are of other girls in courtship,"

But I did not finish my sentence; for just at that moment the door opened and Mrs. Wheaton came in. I had barely time to note that she had forgotten what she went for, for she held the scissors in her hand, when Mr. Wheaton, in his warm, impulsive way, reached out his hand, caught hers, drew her to him and said, "Lucy, my dear, Mr. Talcenhope has been giving me a regular going over for speaking to you as I did just now. It was nonsense, you know; but I had no business to tell you so, at least, not in that brutal style."

She flushed redder than before, then stooped down, brushed the rich, black hair off from his forehead, put a kiss upon it, thanked me with her eyes, and then said, "I declare, I forgot my scissors, after all," and slipped out of the room again.

"Indeed, John," said Mr. Wheaton, grasping me by the hand, "I am much obliged to you. I remember Lucy always had a sensitive soul; I wonder if I have been pricking it with sharp words without knowing it all these years. I think I have learned a lesson to-night which I shall not soon forget."

"I think I have learned one, too," I replied. Christian Union.

The Transitional American Woman.

The expression in the faces of the past and present woman indicates a change. A certain physician, on receiving a new case, always calls for earlier and later photographs of his patient, that he may compare the changes wrought in the course of years, which may have contributed to the present condition. Such a gallery of portraits might help in a diagnosis of our modern woman. The peace and equipoise, the hauteur, united with unconsciousness of self, are all gone. The face of to-day is stamped with restlessness, wandering purpose, and self-consciousness. The religious aspect has vanished from conversation. A modern "lunch" affords opportunity for testing ordinary feminine talk, which is never bad or vulgar, but the whole not even frivolous, but is marked by superficiality in its discussion of novels and subjects, though showing great familiarity with all known and to-be-known publications. Each woman could talk far better than she does, if she were not hampered by self-consciousness. An Englishwoman said: "At home politics and party measures are discussed at our ladies' lunches; in America one must first go to a circulating library before accepting a noonday invitation." Gossip—not scandal—and allusions to conventional modes of philanthropy take the place of discussion of yesterday's sermon. If one wishes a foreigner to form a favorable opinion of women, apart from any special vocation they may have, he should be invited to a ladies' lunch, pure and simple, and he will be compelled to admit that our American women are easy, brilliant, kindly, cultivated, and altogether charming. But he will read restlessness in many a face, will notice an empressement of manner, a little hurry in the gait, quick tones of voice, a business air, suggestive of the surmise that all these women are "in" or "at something." The leisurely, graceful element is wanting.

Society has grown so complex in both town and country that it is difficult to assert any universal predicates of either, without fear of contradiction. The New England woman should be taken as the largest representative of the whole country, because the Southern woman is minus her driving qualities, plus and added grace and piquant deportment; and the Western woman is minus the Southern charm and the New England self-consciousness and morbid conscientiousness, plus an active self-assertion that has already resulted in successful individual and concerted measures. In all these women, however, "progressive desire," the one characteristic that separates the human from the animal race, has made havoc, till now we have a few marked features, constituting the battle-ground of which will be fought out the results of this emancipation from old lines of conduct.—Atlantic.

Schools in Old Rome.

Prof. Leighton.

At seven years of age the Roman boys studied Greek and Latin grammar together. The sons of centurions went to school at five a. m., with their satchels and countless cables slung over their shoulders, and strolled in schoolrooms on the ground floor, where they were so well and thoroughly flogged that their howls aroused the neighbors at very unseasonable hours. Martial and other satirists spoke of their cries and blubberings as one of the chief nuisances of the early morning hours, almost as great a pest to late risers as our street cries in fact.

The masters were great disciplinarians, and esteemed corporal punishment, one of the chief means of inducting that precious boon, knowledge, into dull heads. If a boy pronounced a single syllable wrong he was beaten black and blue, and his body so covered with weals and welts that it resembled a patchwork coverlet or a coat of many colors. The ancients believed that boys were naturally vicious and required taming. So great a teacher as Plato laid down the axiom that "A boy was the most ferocious of animals."

Others, like Quintilian, protested against indiscriminate flogging. Pictures found in Herculaneum showed that the English system of flogging was likewise in vogue; also, that in some schools, both sexes were together although the education of girls was comparatively neglected. In the higher social circles girls were taught music and dancing and other fashionable branches, as now-a-days. School books were as cheap as with us fifty years ago. A text-book with seven hundred verses could be had in separate editions for eighty, thirty and even as low as eight cents. Tuition was very cheap, less than a cent a day.

The boys had holidays in March and December, and a long vacation in the summer, from June 24 to October 23, a great part of which time was spent with their parents at Roman Newports and Coney Islands. At fourteen they were put into high schools, where they studied rhetoric, poetry and belles lettres generally, their previous efforts having been confined to reading, writing and arithmetic, with Greek and Latin grammar and verses. The younger children were taught their letters and numerals by means of small ivory blocks, as at the present day. The pay of a teacher was thirty dollars a year, about one hundred times less than a tailor's dancer.

The Inconsistency of Agnosticism.

How can it be that man is so unstable of that unity that the very tendency of seeing anything like himself not is the greatest of all philosophical mercies? Does not the very possibility of science consist in the possibility of reducing an natural phenomena to purely mental conceptions, which must be related to the intellect of man when they are worked out and apprehended by it? And according to the latest theories, man is himself a product of evolution, and is, therefore, in every atom of his body and in every function of his mind, a part and exhibit of nature, is it not to the highest degree illogical so to separate him from it as to condemn him for seeing in it some image of himself? If he is its product and its child, is it not certain that he is right when he sees and feels the indissoluble bonds of unity which unite him to the great system of things in which he lives? This fundamental inconsistency in the Agnostic philosophy becomes the more remarkable when we find that the very men who tell us we are not one with anything above us, are the same who insist that we are one with everything beneath us. Whatever there is in us or upon us which is purely animal and moral, we delude ourselves if we think we see it everywhere. There are abundant homologies between our bodies and the bodies of the beasts; but there are no homologies between our minds and any mind which lives or manifests itself in nature. Our livers and our lungs, our vertebræ and our nervous systems, are identical in origin and in function with those of the living creatures round us; but there is nothing in nature or above it which corresponds to our forethought, or design, or purpose to our love of the good or our admiration of the beautiful to our indignation with the wicked; or to our pity for the suffering and the fallen. I venture to think that no system of philosophy that has ever been taught on earth lies under such a weight of unrevelent improbability; and this improbability increases in direct proportion to the success in tracing the unity of cause and sequence in tracing the unity of nature, and in showing, step by step, how its laws and their results ran to bring more and more into direct relation with the mind and intellect of man.—The Duke of Argyll.

—Two young men have been sent out by King Kalakaua to Germany for naval and military education.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The leading Scientists of to-day agree that most diseases are caused by disordered Kidneys or Liver. If, therefore, the Kidneys and Liver are kept in perfect order, perfect health will be the result. This truth has only been known a short time, and for years people suffered great agony without being able to find relief. The discovery of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure marks a new era in the treatment of these troubles. Made from a simple tropical leaf of rare value, it contains just the elements necessary to nourish and invigorate both of these great organs, and safely restore and keep them in order. It is a POSITIVE Remedy for all the diseases that cause pains in the lower part of the body—for Torpid Liver—Headaches—Jaundice—Dizziness—Gravel—Fever, Ague—Malarial Fever, and all difficulties of the Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs.

It is an excellent and safe remedy for Females during Pregnancy. It will control Menstruation and is invaluable for Leucorrhœa or Falling of the Womb. As a blood purifier it is unequaled, for it cures the organs that make the blood.

READ ITS RECORD.

"It saved my life."—E. B. Lakely, Selma, Ala.

"It is the remedy that will cure the many diseases peculiar to women."—Mothers Magazine.

"It has passed severe tests and won endorsements from some of the highest medical talent in the country."—New York World.

"No remedy ever discovered can be held for one moment in comparison with it."

—Rev. C. A. Harvey, D. D., Washington, D. C.

This Remedy which has done such wonders is put up in the LARGEST SIZED BOTTLE of any medicine upon the market, and is sold by druggists and all dealers at $1.25 per bottle. For Diabetes, inquire for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE. It is a POSITIVE Remedy.

H. H. WARNER & CO., Rochester, N. Y.

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER.

The only improvement ever made on the Common Porous Plaster

Over 2,000 Druggists have signed a paper stating that

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS are superior to all others.

Price, 25 Cents.

Seabury & Johnson, Pharmaceutical Chemists.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION DEPOSITORY.

With a full line of Question Books, Catechisms, Hymn Books, Class Books, Library Books, Rewards, and everything needed in the Sunday-school. Send for catalogue.

Also, Sankey & Bliss' Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs, Teachers' Bibles, Concordances, Bible Dictionaries, Commentaries, etc., at the Depository.

LATHROP & WILKINS,
New Orleans, La., and Houston, Tex.

E. HEATH,

IMPORTER AND DEALER IN

Carpets, Floor Oil Cloths,

UPHOLSTERY GOODS, Wall Paper, Window Shades, Cornices, Lace and Nottingham Curtains, Mirrors, Moldings, Chromos, Engravings, etc.

Frames made to order—a specialty.

No. 99 Camp street, New Orleans.

All Farmers, Mothers, Business Men, teachers, and professional men, all broken down by constant work and worry, and all who are miserable with Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sleeplessness, or with Bowel, Kidney or Liver Complaints, should at once begin using Ale and Cereal tonic.

PARKER'S GINGER TONIC

If you are wasting away with Consumption, Female Weakness, age, dissipation or any sickness or nervousness, and your blood needs purifying, use PARKER'S GINGER TONIC. It is the Best Health & Strength Restorer you can use. It is better than Bitters, and other Tonics, as it builds up the system, but never intoxicates. It Has Saved Hundreds of Lives; and May Save Yours.

Buy a good bottle, and be sure the signature of H. H. WARNER & CO., N. Y. is on outside wrapper.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM Restores Health, Elegantly Perfumed, Restores Color, Prevents Baldness.

NO MORE RHEUMATISM OR GOUT
ACUTE OR CHRONIC
SALICYLICA
SURE CURE.

Manufactured only under the above Trade Mark by the EUROPEAN MEDICINE CO.,

OF PARIS AND LEIPZIG.

IMMEDIATE RELIEF WARRANTED. PERMANENT CURE GUARANTEED. Now exclusively used by all the celebrated Physicians of Europe and America for curing a Simple, Harmless and Reliable Remedy on both continents. The highest Medical Academy of Paris offers $8,000 cash if not in 100 cases, within three days, Special. The only dissolver of the Uric Acid which exists in the Blood of Rheumatic and Gouty Patients. $1 a flask; 6 flasks, for $5. Sent to any address on receipt of price. Issued by Physicians. Sold by all Druggists. Address:

DANIEL ROMMEL, Sole Proprietor,
Office: 162 Fulton Street, New York.

For sale by H. T. Lyons and E. J. Harra & Co., New Orleans.

THE MILD POWER
CURES
Humphreys' Homeopathic Specifics

Proved from ample experience an entire success. Simple, Prompt, Efficient, and Reliable; they are the only medicines adapted to popular use.

1. Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations,	25
2. Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
3. Crying Colic, or Teething of Infants,	25
4. Diarrhœa of Children or Adults,	25
5. Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
6. Cholera Morbus, Vomiting,	25
7. Coughs, Cold, Bronchitis,	25
8. Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache,	25
9. Headaches, Sick Headaches, Vertigo,	25
10. Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach,	25
11. Suppressed or Painful Periods,	25
12. Whites, too profuse Periods,	25
13. Croup, Cough, Difficult Breathing,	25
14. Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Eruptions,	25
15. Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains,	25
16. Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Ague,	50
17. Piles, Blind or Bleeding,	50
19. Catarrh, acute or chronic; Influenza,	50
20. Whooping Cough, violent Coughs,	50
24. General Debility, Physical Weakness,	50
27. Kidney Disease,	50
28. Nervous Debility, Spermatorrhœa,	1.00
30. Urinary Weakness, Wetting the Bed,	50
32. Diseases of the Heart, Palpitation,	1.00

For sale by druggists, or send by the Case, or single Vial, free of charge, on receipt of price. Send for Dr. Humphreys' Book on Disease, &c., (144 pages), also Illustrated Catalogue, FREE.

Address, Humphreys' Homeopathic Med. Co., 109 Fulton St., New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

25,000 SOLD!

FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S MANUAL

Edited by GEO. E. WARING, Jr.,

Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

500 Octavo Pages—Over 200 Illustrations.

Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assured analysis and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, in Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $3 50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address

LATHROP & WILKINS,
New Orleans, La., or Houston, Tex.

YOUNG MEN'S Christian Association,

OF NEW ORLEANS.

ROOMS, 87 CAMP STREET,

Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M. except Sunday, and on Sundays from 2 to 6 P. M., where may be found the leading daily and weekly papers of the most important cities of the United States.

SERVICES.

Tuesday, 7.30 P. M.—Devotional

Thursday, 7.30 P. M.—Singing Class.

NOON-DAY PRAYER-MEETING.

Daily, 12 to 12.30.

Rule—Prayers and Remarks are limited to three minutes.

FURNITURE

JOHN BOIS,

DEALER IN

Parlor, Bed and Dining Room FURNITURE.

291 Camp St., cor. Calliope, New Orleans.

Repairing, Upholstering, Varnishing, etc., promptly done. Country orders promptly attended to. Spring, Hair and Moss Mattresses made to order. A full line of common Furniture on hand; suitable for the country.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at

JOHN GAUCHE'S MAMMOTH QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 160 pieces, for $12.

ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $10.

REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.

ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3 50.

ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.

ENGLISH CHINA GOLD BAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5 50.

THE BEST SELECTION OF

CROCKERY

Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods

OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.

REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS

JOHN CAUCHE,

AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,

109, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street,

Branch House, Nos. 108 and 110 Chartres Street.

FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

THE BEACON LIGHT.

"The true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

The Beacon Light is an unusually attractive and beautiful Sunday School Song Book; by J. H Tenney and Rev. E. A. Hoffman, who have had a very successful experience as song writers, and composers. Their book is one of the best ever made. THE BEACON LIGHT has many noble hymns, and the sweetest of melodies. Specimen copies mailed for 30 cents (liberal reduction for quantities.

Cantatas. Choirs and Societies will do well to end the musical season by performing either a Sacred Cantata as Buck's 46th Psalm, ($1.) or Chadwick's splendid Joseph's Bondage, ($1.) or Butterfield's Belshazzar, ($2.) or try the very easy Esther, (50 cts.) or Root's always popular Haymakers, ($1.) or Buck's classical Don Munio, ($1.50.)

The Emmerson Method for Reed Organs. ($2 50.) By EMERSON and MATHEWS is among the very best, and has a good collection of instrumental and vocal music.

Any book mailed, post free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston,
C. H. DITSON & CO.,
No. 843 Broadway, New York.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.

SIZES AND PRICES.

Diam. of Bell.	Wt. with yoke & frame.	Cost of Bell & Hang's.
No. 6,	25 lbs.	$ 25 00
No. 6½,	27 lbs.	30 00
No. 7,	30 lbs.	50 00
No. 8,	340 lbs.	75 00
No. 9,	730 lbs.	130 00
	925 lbs.

RUMSEY & CO.,
Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A.

MISCELLANEOUS.

D. H. HOLMES,

155 Canal Street. - - - - 15 Bourbon Street.

Our Stock of Spring Goods is now complete, consisting of the latest novelties in

Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales.

HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.

D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street, New Orleans

SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE.

WHEELER & PIERSON,

(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Hewes.)

CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,

Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.

Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40. | Business Suits, $12 to $25
6 Shirts for $9 | Collars, $1.50 per Dozen.

Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.

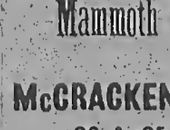
Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.

Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department up stairs.



THE NEW DICTIONARY HOLDER.

These holders are so arranged that they press the book firmly together when it is closed; in short the Dictionary Holder is perfected in form, finish and operation, and will be found one of the most elegant and desirable articles for schools, literary or professional reference and library use. Every one who uses a dictionary should have one of these patent holders, and have the unwieldy, cumbersome page for reference. Place the dictionary in the holder and keep it there. There is no more awkwardness in taking it out of the holder than out of its binding. Children and grown people refer to a dictionary if mounted in one of these holders, and the book does not become racked, soiled and spoiled. You have but to open the book and it remains open; close it and it remains closed. If placed by your side when reading, or writing, the task of looking up words is not deferred and then forgotten, but done instantly and easily. The holder is light enough if you stand, low enough if you sit, and has received unlimited praise from clergymen, and has far surpassed all others who have used it. The Unabridged Dictionary, either of Worcester or Webster, fits in them exactly.

Paper finished in dark or light Japans, $2.50
" " while or marble wash 3.00

Address LATHROP & WILKINS, Agents for the Southwest, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

CATARRH Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects—corrupting running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, nasal deformities, and finally consumption. From first to last it is ever aggressive. Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. If neglected while a cure is possible, it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, safe, speedy and pleasant treatment is

Dr. M. W. CASE'S CARBOLATE of TAR INHALANT

FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, Bronchitis & Deafness.

It does not require ten minutes to demonstrate the value of Carbolate of Tar, the most healing remedial agent known to science. Balsamic and Carbolic vapor, the most healing and soothing preparations are so combined with Pine Tree Tar, that the mere breathing converts them into a dense smoke or vapor. This is inhaled—taken right to the diseased parts. No heat, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel the healing power at once. This treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by thousands, who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FULL TREATMENT—Circulars, etc., Sent Free—Sent on Satisfaction Always Guaranteed. Address, DR. M. W. CASE, 933 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

HOW TO PAINT.

A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain common sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint up oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes

Every Man His Own Painter.

Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, glue, pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—

Paint for Out-Buildings,

—Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut staining, decalcomanie, making rustic pictures, painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing, furniture waxing furniture cleaning paint—

Paint for Farming Tools,

and for machinery, and household fixtures.

To Paint a Farm Wagon,

to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.

The work is neatly printed, with illustrations wherever they can serve to make the subject plainer, and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.

Price by mail, post paid, $1.

LATHROP & WILKINS,
New Orleans, La., and Houston, Tex.

Good News! Good News!

Mammoth Furniture House

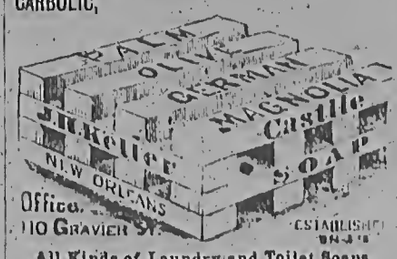
OF

McCRACKEN & BREWSTER,

33 & 35 Royal Street,

Now have the largest stock of Fine and Medium Chamber Sets, Ebony Gilt and Walnut Parlor Sets, Dining Room and Hall Furniture to be found in the South. Also a large and various stock of cheap and durable Furniture suitable for the country trade

THONET BROS., VIENNA,
BENT WOOD FURNITURE



Our motto—small profits and quick returns.

McCRACKEN & BREWSTER.

J. H. KELLER,

MANUFACTURER OF

CARBOLIC,

Office, 110 Gravier St. ESTABLISHED 1843

All Kinds of Laundry and Toilet Soaps.

Send for Circular.

RENT WASHER AND WRINGER

in the World. Guaranteed to do perfect work or money refunded. Warranted for 5 years. Price of Washer, $8. Sample to agents, $5 50. Price of Wringer, $7 50. Sample, $4 75. Circulars free.

ERIE WASHER CO., ERIE, PA.

MENEELYS' BELLS.

For Churches, etc., known to the public since 1826, are made only at "THE MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY," West Troy, N. Y. Catalogues free.

WATCHES.

LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upward.
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $15 and upward.
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward.
BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward
All guaranteed.

A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.,
Cor. Canal and Royal Sts.

BUCK'S IMPROVED

BRILLIANT STOVE

Is acknowledged to be the Best Cook-Stove Made.

SOLD BY

H. HALLER,

NEW ORLEANS.

DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

Cooking and Heating Stoves of the most improved makes, Stamped Plate and Japanned Tin ware, Tinned and Enameled Hollow ware, Iron and Clay Furnaces, Thaller's Stock, Granite Iron ware, Lamp burner, and Wick to suit, Tinned Iron Spoons, Forks, Coffee Mills of all kinds, Tinsmiths' ware, Irons, Fire-Grates, Fluting Machines, etc.

H. HALLER,
No. 55 Camp St., New Orleans.

Price lists mailed on application.

GRATEFUL COMFORTING.

EPPS'-COCOA.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette

Made simply with boiling water or milk.

Sold only in tins (¼ and ½ lb.) labelled

JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists
London, England.

Also makers of Epps' Chocolate Essence for afternoons

AGENTS WANTED.

AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE to sell the best Family Knitting Machine ever invented. Will knit a pair of stockings, with HEEL and TOE complete, in 25 minutes. It will also knit a great variety of fancy work for which there is always a ready market. Send for circular and terms to The Wambly Knitting Machine Co., 409 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell CHASE'S 2000 RECIPE BOOK. Sells at Sight. Double your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$777 A YEAR and expenses to agents. Outfit free. Address P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE, ... 1881.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Ast.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	6¼	6¼
Ordinary	7¼	7¼
Good ordinary	8¼	8¼
Low middling	9¼	9¼
Middling	10⅛	10⅛
Good middling	11⅛	11⅛
Middling fair	12⅛	12⅛
Sales to-day	1,000 bales.
Receipts since our last	4,508 bales.
Receipts previously	1,447,861 bales.
Sugar, ₱ lb.:
Fair	7⅛ @	7⅛
Fully fair	7⅝	7⅝
Prime	— —	7⅞
Choice	— —	— —
Yellow clarified	8¾	8¼
White clarified	9¼	9¼
Powdered	— —	— —
Crushed	— —	— —
Molasses, in bbls., ₱ gallon:
Common	26	28
Fair	28	33
Prime	38	40
Choice	—	—
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common	3¾	4¼
Fair	4¼	5¼
Prime	5¼	6¼
Choice	—	—

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.
Western	8	25
New York	20	30
Coffee, ₱ lb.
Rio ordinary	9¾	10
Rio, fair	12	12¼
Rio, prime	13	13¼
Cheese
Western factory	— —	— —
English dairy	— —	— —
Candles, ₱ lb.
Best brands	— —	12
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl.
Choice K D	2 70	2 75
Flour:
Superfine	4 00	— —
XX	4 75	4 90
XXX	4 75	5 25
Choice	— —	— —
Fish:
Mackerel No 1 in tubs	— —	8 00
Half tubs	— —	4 50
Kits	— —	95
Mackerel No 2 in tubs	— —	6 75
Half tubs	— —	3 50
Kits	— —	85
Mackerel No 3 in tubs	6 50	6 75
Half tubs	3 00	3 70
Kits	75	— —
Codfish	5¾	6
Herring, ₱ box	30	35
Oils, ₱ gallon:
Coal, in cases	— —	— —
Coal, in bbls	— —	— —
Linseed, raw	58	60
Linseed, boiled	61	63
Cotton seed	50	60
Lard	— —	87
Soap, ₱ box:
Marseilles	— —	2 10
Olive	— —	2 50
Palm	— —	— —
Castile	— —	2 75
Soda	— —	— —
Starch	— —	3½
Salt, ₱ sack:
Coarse	1 00	1 02½
Fine	1 37½	1 40

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel
Yellow	— —	60
White	— —	57
Mixed	— —	60
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western	— —	— —
Red rust-proof	— —	45
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs
Choice	— —	85
Hay, ₱ ton
Prime	27 50	28 00
Choice	29 00	30 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel
Mixed	2 25	2 40
Clay	2 50	2 60

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb:
Breakfast	— —	10
Shoulders	5	6
Sides, clear rib	8½	9
Sides, clear	— —	9
Hams, sugar-cured	10	11
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl	17 75	18 00
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb
Clear rib sides	— —	8¼
Clear sides	— —	8¼
Shoulders	— —	6
Lard, ₱ lb:
Choice, in kegs	— —	— —
Choice, in tierces	11	12

ESCULENTS.

Potatoes, ₱ bbl.
Irish	— —	— —
Sweet	3 00	3 50
Onions, ₱ bbl	4 50	5 00
Apples, ₱ bbl	2 50	3 25
Cabbages, ₱ doz	— —	— —
Sour Kraut, ₱ bbl	14 00	16 00

BALING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard
India	— —	— —
Jute	— —	— —
Baling Twine, ₱ lb	— —	17
Ties, ₱ bundle
80 ties and buckles	— —	1 00

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ dozen
Grown chickens	4 25	— —
Young do	3 25	— —
Ducks	4 00	— —
Geese	4 00	6 00
Turkeys	18 00	20 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen
Western	11	14
Southern	11	16
Honey
Strained, ₱ gallon	— —	— —
Comb, ₱ lb	— —	— —
Pecans, ₱ lb:
Louisiana	— —	— —
Texas	— —	— —
Oranges
Louisiana, ₱ bbl	— —	— —
Foreign, ₱ box	3 00	4 00
Wool, ₱ lb
Louisiana	32	37
Texas	— —	— —
Feathers, ₱ lb
Geese	— —	— —
Hides, ₱ lb
Country green	6	8
Dry salted	14	16
Dry flint	— —	— —
Ox Horns, each	— —	— —
Tallow	— —	— —
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton
Oil cake	31 00	— —
Meal	— —	— —
Oil cake	— —	— —
Cooperage, ₱ each:
Sugar hogsheads	— —	1 75
Molasses do	— —	1 50
Half barrels	— —	1 00
Kegs	— —	90
Oak Staves, per M
Kegs	— —	— —
Barrels	— —	— —
Extra barrel	— —	Scarce
Extra hogshead	— —	— —
Extra pipe	— —	— —
Tobacco:
Low lugs	— —	— —
Medium	— —	— —
Good to fine	— —	— —
Low leaf	— —	— —
Medium	— —	— —
Good	— —	— —
Fine	— —	— —
Selections	— —	— —

There is More Strength

restoring power in a wine glassful of Parker's Ginger Tonic than in a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and in all it is a wonderful invigorant for mind and body. See other column in Rochester that Mr. Wm. M. Armstrong. With a countenance beaming with satisfaction he remarked, recently: "Blessings upon the proprietor of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. It saved me."

There is no Happier Man

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MERIDIAN, Miss., April 19.—A fire last night in this city originated about 12 o'clock, in or near the European Hotel, on the corner of Commerce and Rhodes streets. Some say in an old building of the hotel and that it was accidental; others that it originated in the rear of a frame building adjoining the hotel that was occupied as a barber-shop, and it was the work of incendiary.

The whole block was consumed except two buildings, Washington Hotel, a three story brick building on the corner of Front and Hale, and the Brosch brick building, corner Hale and Commerce streets.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, April 20.—The Executive Committee of the Western section of the Ecumenical Conference of the Methodist Church, to meet in London in September next, had a session here yesterday with four members present, namely:

Bishop Simpson, Rev. A. C. George, Bishop McTyeire and Rev. D. Byers. This section embraces all branches of the Methodist Church in America.

The object of the meeting was to assign nineteen speakers and the same number of essayists. That work was done, but the list will not be made public until acceptances are received.

It is understood that Bishop Simpson will make the opening address.

NATCHITOCHES, April 20.—A terrible fire occurred in Natchitoches last night about 12 o'clock. The fire broke out on St. Denis street in the building known as Fronfenot's Hotel, which came very near destroying all the principal stores in this place.

Among the unfortunates were Hyman Bath, S. Nelkins, Mrs. J. P. Campbell, Herman Lichtenstein, Levy & Phillips, J. A. Decourdieuil, two saloons, occupied by G. W. Krie and C. J. Smith; the Vindicator office, livery stable, H. A. Wahnsley's residence, and nearly all the buildings on St. Denis street.

The loss is very great and insurance unknown. Grate demoralization prevails.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., April 23.—Gustav Stumpf, Past Grand Chancellor and Supreme Representative of the Knights of Pythias died suddenly this morning from heart disease.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, April 23.—The situation of the river at this point continues to grow worse, and it is not only serious but desperate. The water has been rising at the rate of an inch an hour all day, and the entire bottom lands are inundated at a depth from one to six feet. The tracks of all railroads leading to the Union depot, are under water from two to three feet, and no passenger trains run to or from it, all stopping at the city local depots.

BOSTON, April 25.—James T. Fields, the author, publisher and lecturer, died this morning.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 25.—The statute of Admiral David G. Farragut, recently erected in Farragut Square, at the intersection of Connecticut avenue and Seventeenth street, was unveiled this afternoon with appropriate ceremonies.

HANNIBAL, Mo., April 25.—The Ivy Levee broke at three o'clock this morning at a point about a mile and a half above East Hannibal. The crevasse is 130 feet wide and is still cutting below the break, and above East Hannibal there are several weak points liable to go at any moment. Up to this time the loss of lee is about 28,000 tons. The river is about nineteen feet one inch above low water mark and is still rising very slowly.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., April 25.—Dispatches to the Evening Journal from points along the Minnesota river state that the flood has apparently reached its height, and is above anything ever known. At Montevideo several houses have been washed away, together with the wagon bridge.

FOREIGN.

PARIS, April 19.—The International Monetary Conference was opened here at 2 o'clock this afternoon, by M. Barthelmy St. Hilaire, Minister of Foreign Affairs, who welcomed the foreign delegates. He said the object of the Conference, was to endeavor to establish a normal monetary standard instead of the shattered equilibrium of the past, and to consider the best means for preventing the recurrence of a disastrous crisis. He excused himself from entering further, on so complex and difficult a question, upon which abler minds than his had adopted most opposite opinions. He concluded by declaring that if the Conference did not achieve immediate success, it would at least have raised controversies which are indispensable to unify and establish a principle which will bear fruit in the future.

The motion of Mr. Evarts, delegate from the United States, M. Magnin, French Minister of Finance, was elected President of the Conference.

LONDON, April 19.—Lord Beaconsfield's renewed debility began on Sunday night, when an east wind commenced to blow. He continued to lose ground throughout Monday, the influence of the wind continuing and constantly increasing. He died at half-past 6 o'clock this morning, as calmly as if he were asleep.

The announcement of his death was immediately dispatched to the Queen, Prince of Wales and other members of the royal family, and to Mr. Gladstone who is now at Edwarden.

The news became generally known throughout the city by 9 o'clock, when special editions of the morning papers were issued containing the announcement, though not unexpected, in view of his physician's statement.

Last night his symptoms gave grounds of more grave anxiety than at any period of his illness. His death creates deep sympathy.

It was observed, at 3:15 this morning, that Lord Beaconsfield's end was near. His physicians think it was only his strength of will that enabled him to struggle on as long as he did.

Specials gathered from his physicians show he retained his cheerfulness, the several times during his illness stated his belief that he would die.

One of the doctors says drowsiness, which had been apparent earlier in the night deepened toward midnight into stupor, from which he was with difficulty roused. He then took a stimulant at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock. About 2 o'clock he became comatose, breathing with much difficulty. Drs. Kidd and Hunt were once applied the usual restoratives, but for the first time since his illness they failed to produce any effect, and it became evident that death was imminent.

Five minutes before he expired, his breathing became slow and gentle, his face was very placid. His heart action and pulse continued a few minutes after his breathing ceased to be apparent. His friends and nurses continued around his bed a few minutes after his pulse ceased, as the end was so quiet that it was difficult to realize that he was dead.

LONDON, April 21.—Mr. Gladstone has written the following letter to Lord Rayton: I learned of the decease of Lord Beaconsfield with sad surprise. I shall be prepared to give directions for a public funeral.

Sir Nathaniel Rothschild, on behalf of his executors, replied, thanking Mr. Gladstone and stating that he be buried at Hughenden by the side of his wife.

LONDON, April 23.—The Daily News says: It understands that since the publication of Carlyle's damaging reminiscenses very little advance has been made in the collection of subscriptions for the proposed memorial; contributions which before the reminiscences were published, were largely and freely made, have almost entirely stopped since their publication.

LONDON, April 25.—The house of commons reassembled to-day. Lord Richard Grosvenor, Liberal, announced that Mr. Gladstone would, in a fortnight hence, move a vote of funds to erect a monument in honor of Lord Beaconsfield in Westminster Abbey. The announcement was received with cheers.

NATURAL GAS.—The city of Bradford, Pa., and other places in the neighborhood are all lighted and heated with gas from a well bored for oil, but found to be unproductive. The force of the gas was such that when lighted, a pillar of fire fifty feet high was formed, with a roar that could be heard for a mile or more. The well had been burning for a long time before the feasibility of utilizing it was thought of. A company was formed for the purpose of carrying the gas into the city, and it is now distributed all over the place in pipes. A gas pipe with jets attached is run into the parlor or kitchen stove, and when a fire is wanted, a lighted match is thrown in and the gas turned on. The gas possesses great heating qualities, and apartments are warmed as quickly and better than if coal was used. For illuminating purposes it was not good at first, but processes for refining were applied, and now the natural illuminator is unsurpassed by the finest artificial gas. It is so cheap being supplied at a monthly rate, instead of by the thousand—that the people seldom put out their lights. It is burned all day and night in stores, hotels, private houses, and even in the streets, municipal moonlight being unknown. Gas wells have come to be more valuable than oil wells, and the sudden and phenomenal appearance of oil in some of the principal wells has created consternation among the owners and consumers. A few days ago one of the wells ceased in its gas supply, and on examination it was found to be half full of oil. Fifteen barrels of excellent crude oil were pumped out, and the gas flowed again. One or two of the other wells have exhibited the same phenomenon, and it is necessary to pump out the oil daily before the gas will flow. The sudden appearance of oil in a territory that was considered dry, has not yet been satisfactorily explained.—Baltimore American.

QUININE IN INDIA.—The British Government solved the quinine problem in 1861 as far as India is concerned by setting out the cinchona tree in the Neilgherry hills of India and in Ceylon. This was done with such care and in such numbers that last summer the Indian journals reported "millions of cinchona trees already yielding the Peruvian bark were in healthy growth. The price of quinine had already fallen in Ceylon from fifty to seventy cents an ounce." Indian farmers prophesy that in six or seven years the yield in bark will be large enough to admit of exportation. In the meantime the fall in the price has brought it within the reach of millions of the poorer classes who have never heretofore been able to buy it. It is urged that as soon as India can export quinine it will largely supply the present demand for opium and push that drug out of the market. The English press rejoice that Great Britain can "replace the poisonous drug in her exports to China by one so beneficient in its effects." England, as we all know, has persisted for years in thrusting the drug into China, which she knew was causing the physical and moral death of a majority of its people, against the earnest protest of the Chinese Government. And we should be at a loss to understand her sudden awakening to conscientious scruples if the reason was not given. Quinine will prove a much more profitable export than opium. In the meantime, why should not the cultivation of the cinchona tree be attempted in our Southern States? It is the more probable that it would succeed, as an inferior species of the tree is already indigenous in Georgia and the upper part of the other Gulf States.—America.

NEW USE FOR COTTON SEED OIL.—Dr. E. Bourne, of New Iberia, who for many years has shown great mechanical genius, at one time inventing a plow which attracted much attention, has finally succeeded in manipulating cotton-seed oil, so that in the future it is likely to supercede linseed oil in painting. Cotton seed oil has not hitherto been employed, because it would burn at 300 degrees Fahrenheit, and that degree of heat was not sufficient to prepare it for properly mixing with paint. By his new process, Dr. Bourne is able to put it in condition to mix with white lead or any pigment by simply heating it to 212 degrees. Even linseed oil, which by the old process has to be heated to 400 degrees Fahrenheit, prepares by his process, at 212. He finds that cotton seed oil, thus prepared, is really superior to the best linseed oil, for paint or any kind of varnish. This opens up another large field for one of the principles of our cotton fields, and we hope Dr. Bourne will soon reap the reward which his genius deserves.—Louisiana Sugar Bowl.

There is now in the vaults of the Treasury Department, a larger amount of gold than was ever known to be in one place in the history of modern times, and probably more than could be attributed as existing in a single treasury at any time before in the world. There is now about $173,000,000 of gold coin and bullion, exclusive of some $55,000,000 in silver, while the Bank of England has only about $75,000,000 in gold. What is more singular is, that it stays in the vaults, no matter what the demand recently, for as fast as it is paid out it returns, showing that as long as confidence is unfaltained it is not a favorite currency.—Mobile Register.

—Preparations are in progress at St. Petersburg for a fresh "scientific" expedition of rather a novel kind. The country to be explored is the Balkan Peninsula. The expedition is being arranged by a number of Russian men of science, under the patronage and with the co-operation of the St. Petersburg Academy.

—Sorrocco Academy, New Mexico, is constantly increasing in numbers and usefulness.

CAMP MEETINGS.

SEA SHORE CAMP MEETING.—The Camp Meeting for 1881, on Sea Shore Camp Ground, will commence on Wednesday, July 13, 1881.

PHILIP GALLAHAN, Secretary. W. H. FOSTER, President.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

The Vicksburg District Conference will be held at Fayette, June 3-5, Bishop Keener presiding. The change of time is made to enable Bishop Keener to be with us. JOHN A. ELLIS, P. E.

Pensacola District Conference, Alabama Annual Conference, will convene at Georgiana, April 28, at seven o'clock, P. M. Preachers in charge will please be prepared to give full accounts of their charges as specified by the Discipline. Make an earnest effort to raise the collections ordered by the Discipline and Conference. I hope the Stewards of the several charges will make liberal payments on their pastor's salaries, so that it can be reported at the District Conference. Pastors will send the names of their lay delegates and local preachers to Rev. L. Patterson, Georgiana. Let earnest prayers be made by the churches for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the District Conference.

S. H. COX, P. E.

Quarterly Conferences.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MOBILE DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Franklin Street	Apr. 24
Eastern Shore, at Daphne	30, May 1
Tonihatville, at Tonihatville	May 7, 8
Citronelle, at Citronelle	14, 15
Grand Bay, at St. Elmo	21, 22
Saggsville, at Ft. Madison	28, 29
Grove Hill, at Coffeeville	June 4, 5
St. Stephens, at Andrew Chapel	11, 12
Bladon Springs, at Mt. Zion	18, 19
Okatuppa, at Jones' Chapel	25, 26

16 O. R. BLUE, P. E.

MARIANNA DISTRICT.—SECOND ROUND.

Marianna station	Apr. 2, 3
Cerro Gordo mission, at Mt. Ida	9, 10
Geneva circuit, at Friendship	16, 17
Big Creek circuit, at Mt. Zion	23, 24
Greenwood circuit, at Andrew's Chapel	30, May 1
Chipola mission, at Dogwood	May 7, 8
Headland mission, at Blackwoods	14, 15
Holmes' Valley circuit, at Orange Hill	21, 22
Freeport and Walton, at Freeport	June 4, 5

The District Conference will convene at Freeport, Thursday, June 2, at 7 P. M.

14 A. J. COLEMAN, P. E.

GREENSBORO DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Greensboro circuit, at Union Chapel	Mar. 31
Newberne circuit	Apr. 2, 3
Greensboro station	9, 10
Havana circuit, at Carlinge	16, 17
Forkland circuit, at Trinity	23, 24
Livingstone and Eutaw, at Eutaw	30, May 1
Green circuit	Thursday, May 5
Belmont circuit, at Jone's Bluff	7, 8
Gainesville circuit, at Sumpterville	14, 15
Demopolis station	21, 22
Cuba circuit, at Carl's Chapel	28, 29
Gaston circuit, at Christopher's Chapel	June 4, 5
Choctaw circuit, at Brightwater, Thursday	9
Butler and Mt. Sterling, at Mt. Sterling	11, 12

13 H. SUBMART, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

BRANDON DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Brandon station	Apr. 9, 10
Family circuit, at New Providence	16, 17
Marvin circuit, at Poplar Springs	23, 24
Cato circuit, at Lindsay	30, May 1
Ludlow mission, at Mt. Zion	May 6
Trenton circuit	7, 8
Mt. Hebron	13
Philadelphia circuit, at Hester's Chapel	14, 15
Walnut Grove circuit, at Scotland	21, 22
Beech Springs	28, 29
Carthage circuit, at Carthage	June 4, 5
Newton circuit	11, 12
Lake circuit	18, 19
Raleigh circuit	25, 26
Forest circuit, at Forest	July 2, 3

12 J. McGANN, P. E.

SEASHORE DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Ocean Springs, at Scranton	Mar. 12, 13
Handsboro, at Handsboro	26, 27
West Pascagoula, at Mt. Pleasant	Apr. 9, 10
Whittington, at White Plains	23, 24
Pearlington, at Log Town	May 7, 8
Biloxi, at Biloxi	14, 15
East Pascagoula, at Zion	21, 22
Moss Point, at Moss Point	28

District Conference, at Moss Point, May 27, 28, 29.

12 T. S. WEST, P. E.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

DELHI DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Delhi and Madison circuit, at Delhi	May 7, 8
Winnsboro circuit, at Winnsboro	14, 15
Oak Ridge circuit, at Good Hope	21, 22
Rayville circuit, at Girard	28, 29
Trenton and Monroe, at Trenton	June 4, 5
Colony circuit, at Faulk's Chapel	11, 12
Lind Grove circuit, at Schumanhurst	18, 19
Bastrop circuit, at Island	25, 26
Floyd circuit	July 2, 3
Providence and Pecan Grove circuit	9, 10
Tensas Chapel, at Tensas Chapel	16, 17
Tensas circuit at Wesley	23, 24
Witherproof, at Vidalia	30, 31

The District Stewards will convene at Delhi, on Saturday, May 7, at three o'clock P. M. The District Stewards are: D. S. Travis, L. S. Womble, J. S. Beazley, P. A. B. Williams, T. C. Standifer A. J. Gilson, John Conner, A. S. Hedrick, G. H. Johnson and S. T. Jackson.

16 B. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

OPELOUSAS DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Morgan City	May 7, 8
Franklin	14, 15
French Mission	21, 22
New Iberia	28, 29
Abbeville	June 4, 5
Mermillionville	11, 12
Lake Charles	18, 19
Sugar Town	25, 26
Opelousas	July 2, 3
Plaquemine	9, 10
Washington	16, 17

District Conference will convene in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Franklin, May 12, at nine o'clock P. M. District Stewards will meet one at four o'clock P. M., Saturday, May 14.

5 S. M. JOHNSTON, P. E.

SHREVEPORT DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Caddo circuit, at Bethel Bower	Apr. 16, 17
Logansport at Reynold's School House	30, May 1
South Bossier, at Pilmore	May 7, 8
North Bossier, at Concord	14, 15
Mooringsport at Mooringsport	21, 22
Shreveport	28, 29
Coushatta, at East Point	June 4, 5
Springville, at Armstead Chapel	11, 12
Many, at Prospect	18, 19
Converse, at Pulog	25, 26
Natchitoches	July 2, 3
Mansfield	9
Natchitoches circuit	July 9, 10
Pleasant Hill, at Marvin Chapel	16, 17

District Conference will convene at Mansfield, June 30, 1881 T. H. M'CLENDON, P. E.

HOMER DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Sparta	Apr. 16, 17
Tuth	23, 24
Homer	30, May 1
Vernon	May 7, 8
Indian Village	14, 15
Rochester	21, 22
Haynesville	28, 29
Downsville	June 4, 5
Farmerville	11, 12
Webster	18, 19
Minden	25, 26
Arcadia	July 23, 24

24 J. A. PARKER, P. E.

NEW ORLEANS DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

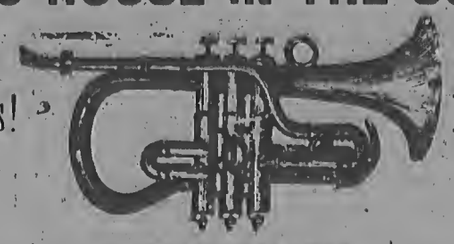
Morris street	Apr. 17
Algiers	May 1
Louisiana Avenue	8
Lafourche, at Donaldsonville	15
Felicity street	22
Baton Rouge	29
Plaquemine and Gross Tete, at Plaquemine	June 5
Carondelet street	12
St. Charles Avenue	19

14 J. H. WALKER, P. E.

ALEXANDRIA DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Bayou Boeuf and Evergreen	Apr. 2, 3
Rapides	9, 10
Cotile	Wednesday 13
Winnfield	16, 17
Jena	23, 24
Castor	Thursday 28
Columbia	30, May 1
Harrisonburg	7, 8
Shelly Island	14, 15
Little River	21, 22
Alexandria	28, 29
Spring Creek	June 4, 5
Avoyelles French mission	9
Sunsport	11, 12

The Alexandria District Conference will convene on Thursday, May 26, at ten o'clock, A. M., at Pineville, La.



The District Stewards will please meet on Friday, May 27, at Pineville, La.

12 F. G. HOUTT, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LARGEST AND MOST POPULAR

MUSIC HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

Easiest Terms! Lowest Prices!

General Agency for the Celebrated

Steinway, Knabe, Pleyel, Weber, Fischer Pianos,

And the Popular Organs of

CLOUGH & WARREN AND PELOUBET, PELTON & CO.,

Everything in the Music line at rock bottom prices. Send for illustrated catalogues.

LOUIS GRUNEWALD,

Grunewall Hall, New Orleans.

EXCELSIOR

CORN SHELLER.

Ahead of all others for Simplicity, Speed, Good Work, and Durability. Will shell a bushel of corn in four minutes. Samples sent on receipt of $3. Agents Wanted. For Terms Address

GEO. S. GETTY & CO., Alliance, O.

Indian Turnip

COMPOUND.

PECTORAL BALM

For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle $1. Prepared and for sale by

B. LAPLACE, Druggist, 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street.

And the jobbing Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

UNITED STATES

Four Per Cent. Bonds

BOUGHT AND SOLD BY

New Orleans National Bank,

58 CAMP STREET.

LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT:

OFFICE: CORNER CARONDELET AND GRAVIER STREETS.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

Fire assets, excluding paid-up capital	$9,831,426 21
Paid-up capital	1,228,200 00
Total fire assets	$11,109,626 21
Fire liabilities	3,944,358 23
Making the surplus for policy holders	$7,165,267 98

Losses by Chicago Fire in 1871 $3,239,091

Losses by Boston Fire in 1872 $1,129,720

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city, thus placing the Company on an even footing with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS:

J. F. SCHRODER, Esq., Chairman, of Leopold Christ & Co.
NEWTON BUCKNER, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERRY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Lallande.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson and Simpson.
HENRY V. OGDEN, Resident Secretary.
JULES P. ROUX, Ass't Resident Secretary.
NEW ORLEANS October 20 1880.

B. J. MONTGOMERY. C. KIRSCH

R. M. & B. J.

MONTGOMERY FURNITURE

AND

MIRROR EMPORIUM,

Corner Camp and Poydras Sts.

After a sojourn of over six weeks among the Factories North, East and West, we open this Fall and Winter Trade with the largest and best selected stock of Furniture, French and German Plate Mirrors, Ornamental and Fancy Goods, Upholstery Goods and Cabinet Makers' Hardware ever brought to this city. We select our goods in person from the best factories and are determined not to be undersold. Our assortment including extensive and varied to be enumerated in detail, we request our customers and the general public to call and inspect for themselves. Our stock a full line of the celebrated Vienna Bent Wood Work and Invalid Wheel Chairs. Goods packed and delivered F. O. B.

$25 TO $35.

STEWART'S NEW IMPROVED

SINGER Sewing Machine.

Great Reduction in Prices!

Down with Monopolies!

Hard Times Demand Low Prices

We warrant all our Machines to be NEW, LATEST IMPROVED and PERFECT for

FIVE YEARS.

Our NEW MACHINE is supplied with a LOOSE BALANCE-WHEEL, which is a great improvement over the old SINGER, as it enables the operator to wind the bobbin without running the machine, or removing the work from the needle. This is the most important improvement ever put on the Sewing Machine.

Also dealer in all first-class Machines, such as the

WHEELER & WILSON, DOMESTIC, GROVER & BAKER, WILSON, WEED, &c.

Cotton, Silk, Flax, Oil and Needles for all kinds of Machines. Address

M. A. PECK,

General Sewing Machine Agent

188 CANAL STREET,

Next to Holmes' Dry Goods Store,

New Orleans.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT,

RICHARD RHODES,

55 ..... ST. CHARLES STREET 56

NEW ORLEANS.

Articles for Fishermen of all Kinds.

Rods, Nets, Hooks, Lines, and every desirable article for the Angler, wholesale and retail. Guns imported to order. J. R. Comer's Breech and Muzzle Loading Guns always on hand. All kinds of improved artificial Baits. Repairing of Guns carefully done by experienced workmen, and Fishing Rods made to order. Address Postoffice Box 1599.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co.,

AMERICAN CHINA HOUSE,

49 Camp Street, New Orleans

We append a few prices.

The American China Dinner, Breakfast and Tea Set, comprising 160 Pieces, for $12.

A Real French China Dinner Set, 118 Pieces, for $17.

English Stone China Dinner Set, 124 Pieces, for $10.

English Stone China Chamber Set, comprising 10 Pieces, for $2 50.

Decorated Chamber Sets, with different Colored Bands, 10 Pieces, for $2 50.

Glass Goblets, from 60 cents to $1 per dozen.

Particular attention given to Novelties and Specialties pertaining to the House Furnishing Department. Orders promptly attended to. We have just received a full and complete stock of holiday goods. Call and examine before purchasing.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO

Carpet and Oil Cloth Warehouse.

ELKIN & CO.,

101 - - - CANAL STREET - - - 108

New styles of

MOQUETTE, VELVET, BODY BRUSSELS, and TAPESTRY BRUSSELS, with border to match.

3-PLY and INGRAINS in great variety.

OIL CLOTHS of all widths.

WINDOW SHADES and CURTAINS, new patterns.

CORNICES and CORNICE POLES.

MATTINGS of every description.

CURTAIN GOODS, TASSELS, CORDS, GIMPS, Etc.

Our prices for corresponding qualities of goods are as low as any house in the South or West.

FURNITURE.

W. G. TEBAULT,

47 Royal Street,

desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. G. TEBAULT,

47 Royal Street,

New Orleans.

D. MERCIER & SONS,

Better Known as Cheap John:

80 BRANCH STORE IN TOWN

MEN'S, BOYS' AND YOUTH'S

CLOTHING,

HATS, BOOTS, SHOES, FURNISHING GOODS ETC., ETC.

Cor. Dauphine and Bienville sts.,

New Orleans, La.

Orders from Country Merchants promptly executed on most reasonable terms.

DR. BLY'S CELEBRATED PATENT ARTIFICIAL LEGS AND ARMS have all the motions of natural limbs. Perfect satisfaction or no pay. Prices reduced. Pamphlet.

MCDERMOTT, Manufacturer.

158 Camp St., New Orleans

PERRY & CO'S TRADE MARK

STEEL PENS

(Superior English make) famous for durability and elasticity; great variety of styles suited to every kind of writing. For sale by dealers generally.

A TWENTY-FIVE assorted samples for trial, including the "F" AND "EAGLE" pens, by mail, on receipt of Twenty-five Cents.

VISON, BLAKEMAN, TAYLOR & CO.

SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. S.

NEW YORK.

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 27.—NO. 18. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MAY 5, 1881. WHOLE NO. 1352.

PUBLISHED FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

G. T. LATHROP & CO., Publishers.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Subscription, . . . $2 per annum.

Ministers and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

All Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.
REV. H. D. MOORE.
REV. O. R. BLUE, D. D.
REV. J. O. ANDREW.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. W. H. WATKINS, D. D.
REV. JAMES A. GOUFREY.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. JOHN MATHEWS, D. D.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

BLUE GENTIAN A THOUGHT.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "JOHN HALIFAX, ETC."

I shall never be a child
With its dancing footsteps wild,
Nor a free-footed maiden any more,
Yet my heart leaps up to see
The new leaf upon the tree,
And to hear the light wind pass
O'er the flowers in the grass,
And for very joy to hover o'er,
As I kneel and pluck the store
Of blue gentian.

I shall never climb thy peak,
Great white Alp, that can not speak
Of the centuries that float over thee like dreams
Dumb of all God's secret things
Sealed to beggars and to kings
Yet I sit in a world of sight,
Color, beauty, sound and light;
While at every step, meseems,
Shall sweet joys spring up, like gleams
Of blue gentian.

I shall not live o'er again
This strange life, half bliss, half pain;
I shall sleep till thou call'st me to arise,
Body and soul, with new-born powers.
Ethna, waken est, these poor flowers,
Will they not awaken me,
Who am thirsting after thee?
Ah, when faith grows dim and dies,
I can think of Alpine skies
And of blue gentian.

—Good Words.

Thirty Conferences. No. 3.

BY REV. F. M. SPEECE.

The Alabama Conference for 1853 was held in Tuskaloosa. The Bishop failing to be present, Greenbury Garrett, one of the pioneers of Methodism was elected President. This action of the Conference indicates the honor in which Brother Garrett was deservedly held; but some of the "boys" would amuse themselves occasionly by asking Brother G. to tell them about their appointments. "Joe Cottrell, just kiss the bottom of my fut" would be about the style of the old man's answers.

The first year's class was examined by a committee composed of Neely Gallespie and Olin Capers. They were three young men of brilliant talent and genial disposition, and constituted a kind of coterie, which the older and more solid members dubbed "Young America." They rather prided themselves in throwing off some of the old fogy notions about dress, and cherished a fear of being considered as belonging to the "unco gigle." They affected literary tastes and habits, read new books, wrote and read or recited their sermons, and won the applause of the world. Methodism was then rapidly growing in wealth and popularity, and they believed, no doubt sincerely, that some of its more rigid and hide-bound customs might be laid aside. Hence they were not willing to enforce the rule making class meeting a test for membership, nor did they favor low salaries and hard living on the part of the preachers, while the membership abounded in wealth and luxury. It is needless to say that this drift of things went on, and that the sentiments above attributed, have become the prevailing ones in our times, but whether for the advantage of the cause of religion is an open question. The brethren here mentioned have all passed to their dread account, and two of them attained distinction and eminence in the church, but their sentiments and some of their practices at that day were an offence to their older brethren. Whether their early departure from the standards of Methodist usage was best, "the dry shall declare."

There was a visiting brother at this Conference, whose name I will not mention, but who will be recognized by those who knew him. He came from Virginia, was then presiding elder of the Petersburg District. Of almost feminine form and feature, he was highly cultivated. His learning in ancient languages and literature as well as modern was described as something prodigious. To this he added the ornament of peculiar personal sanctity. Sanctification was his theme in almost all places and in every company. Some of the brethren were wonderfully captivated, and the sisters were almost ready to fall down and worship him. He soon after went West, was the president of a rising university, raised a legion for the Confederate army, was captured and imprisoned, went into politics in the stormy reconstruction period in Louisiana, was speaker of the House of the Radical Legislature or Convention of 1866 in New Orleans, and is now, I understand, private secretary of Senator Bruce of Mississippi. To such base uses do we come at last. The new wine in the old bottles broke.

This was a delightful Conference to the first year's men. Thrown together for the first time at the preceding Conference, they had barely got acquainted with each other's names and faces. Now we had met after an intercourse of ministerial service running through a year; our maiden swords fresh from the fields of strife, and rejoicing in the consciousness of our new-found powers and opportunities. It had been a year of great mortality. No fewer than ten preachers had died, one of whom was of our own class. John W. Starr, Jr. was the first fruit. He died of the dreadful epidemic in Mobile.

Gone to the grave in all his glorious prime,
In full activity of zeal and power,
A Christian cut off in the before his time
The Lord's appointment is the servant's hour.

Brother LeVert preached a most impressive sermon on the memorial occasion. But the great sermon of the Conference was said to have been preached on the Sunday night before by Brother Linfield. As it was described to me by Brother Blue, the pastor, it was overwhelming, especially a passage in which he described the moral condition of the world as an immense graveyard, introducing Mercy as an angel, sitting upon a monument smiling at Grief.

In order to suggest some idea of the social status of Tuskaloosa in those ante-bellum days, I will give some account of the manner in which my friend Harriss and myself were entertained at the residence of Gen. King, a brother of the Vice President, Wm. R. King. I do this without trespassing on the rules of hospitality, inasmuch as every one of the participants have passed away, save one who is now an honored matron to whom these reminiscences of early days can not be unpleasant. The family consisted of the General, then aged and invalid, his wife, son and daughter, and niece who was a widow, Mrs. Ellis. They resided a mile from the business part of the city, quite out of town. They kept two carriages in waiting, one for the family, the other for the guests. We rode to and from Conference at our pleasure. Young King was educated in Paris, an elegant and intelligent gentleman, who lost his life in battle. Mrs. Ellis had spent many years in Washington City, and was familiar with all the great men of a former generation. From her I learned much of their personal history. She was beyond comparison the most charming conversationalist that it has been my pleasure ever to meet in society. Without effort or affectation, she entertained you, apparently just for her own happiness and satisfaction. She gave Harriss and myself each an elegant religious token when we parted. God bless her memory, she sleeps somewhere near Selma since the war in sorrow and dejection, after having spent a life in the highest circles of the nation, never having entered into the presence of any company without bringing something to beautify and adorn it. She was a dear old Episcopalian. Miss Margaret, the wild, good-natured but highly cultivated daughter, took her pleasure in teasing Brother Harriss and myself about our sweethearts, for we both had them and she managed, with womanly tact to find out all about them. Brother Cottrell was with us at times and had to take his share, being in love like us. His good wife, who is, by the way, a sister of the celebrated Dr. Marion Sparks, will not object to being told that Joseph at that Conference carried her photograph in his pocket, and freely exhibited it to Harriss and myself. The next year he married her, having courted her as he says thirteen times in one day.

Nor were the Methodist families of those days less elegant and wealthy than the members of other churches. Our congregation in Tuskaloosa contained at that time such honored citizens as Gov. Collier, Judge Dargan, Dr. Gould, Mr. Harris, Mr. Vaughan, Alfred Battle, Dr. Garland, Prof. Balch, the Owens and many others who were cultivated and refined people. They were both wealthy and liberal, and it was regarded as one of the best stations in the old Conference. Drs. Hamilton, Summers, Mathews, Cottrell and Bishop Keener, and many other distinguished preachers, have been at different times its pastors. But these halcyon days have fled. Harriss and myself set out together for our appointments, the one at Eutaula and the other at the Navy Yard.

That Unanimous Resolution.

MR. EDITOR: The one fact which strikes me most forcibly in connection with the discussion of the Abolition Missionary Resolution, is, that that minority whom some of your correspondents are supposed to be attempting to drive into measures, are taking matters very coolly, considering the fact that the interests involved are pecuniary. They not only failed to make known their dissent when the resolution was passed, either by speaking or voting against it, when the opportunity for doing both was presented, but ever since the matter has got into the paper, not one, so far as heard from, has thought it worth his time, his paper, envelope and postage and the wear and tear of his pen to give notice of his opposition through that channel.

It reminds one of the "masterly inactivity" which we of the South maintained with so much dignity during the era of reconstruction, when with an equanimity born of the "Mens conscia sibi recti," we declined to vote, hold office or engage in public affairs, while the party of the second part seized upon all the public offices and levied taxes upon us ad libitum.

If appears magnanimous upon the part of those brethen who are so friendly to the resolution, and so anxious that it should not prove a failure, to take upon themselves the defense of the rights of the supposed minority.

Permit me to put forth a parable. There was in a certain village a church steward of large means, who, as the leading man of the community, felt himself called upon to pay annually the entire sum of ten dollars to the support of the minister; and there dwelt in that village a certain widow, whose possessions were less than his, and she said in her heart: forty dollars ought I to pay to the minister. And it came to pass at the first quarterly meeting, that she came to the steward, and handing him ten dollars, said: "Here is my mite, and I will pay you ten dollars each quarter." Then he opened his mouth and spake unto her, saying: "This is a big mite for you, and I don't think you ought to pay any more. Wouldn't you rather wait until the fourth quarter to pay this? Money is going to be very scarce this year."

Verily, I say unto you, at the end of the year, the preacher's salary was in arrears.

Who can estimate the good done by this faithful steward and friend of the preacher, when at one stroke he saved thirty dollars for a poor widow, relieved her conscience of its burden, and helped his pastor to cultivate the graces of self-denial and poverty of spirit.

But brethren are needlessly alarmed. I think there is no intention to drive any one. All that is expected or desired is that the brethern come up at Conference and do what they, by vote or by silent consent, obligated themselves to do. I will hold myself ready to move, that every brother who was present when the resolution was passed, and spoke or voted against it, and every brother who was absent and will state that if he had been present he would have voted against it, be excused from paying his assessment. The motion would prevail, I have no doubt, and this arrangement will excuse all the minority, whether they be few or many. But all these brethren who were present and consented to the resolution but repented afterwards, I would exhort to imitate the example of the good man described by the psalm, "who sweareth to his own hurt and changeth not."

In conclusion I will quote a few sentences from the article of Brother Moore, in the ADVOCATE of April 7, and make a few comments. He says:

"If the acceptance of this proposition had been unanimous, than all would be bound by such acceptance; but there was not unanimous agreement to its conditions, even among those preachers present. The negative side in such cases as this is not usually called out. It frequently occurs, at our annual meetings, that a brother proposes to unite with others in raising a certain sum for a specified object, and those who are willing to join him are asked to signify the fact in some way designated. Who ever heard, in such a case, of asking the unwilling to show, in the same way, their unwillingness? This, they have already done, by refusing to vote in the designated manner. If there are any that thus refuse to join in the proposed measure, then there is not unanimous agreement to the proposition."

The first sentence in this quotation is open to that objection known among logicians as the Petitio Principii, which consists in assuming the very point at issue.

The second sentence is irrelevant because that in this instance the negative vote was called for.

The remainder of the paragraph very strangely assumes a state of facts directly opposite to what occurred.

The motion was in form of a written resolution, properly seconded, and began: "Resolved, that the preachers of the Alabama Conference pledge themselves to raise, etc.," and the mover of this resolution stated that the reason for presenting this plan was that the plan alluded to by Brother Moore had been repeatedly tried in the Alabama Conference and had failed, and that the resolution embodied a plan which if adopted would make the sum a certainty, and distribute it equitably among the preachers.

This article will be read by the preachers of the Alabama Conference and I have no hesitation in making statements of the facts in connection with the resolution knowing that their memories will sustain my statements. J. M. MASON.

The Methodist Ecumenical.

IMPORTANT TO DELEGATES.

The Western section of the Ecumenical committee, at its recent session in Cincinnati, selected essayists and invited speakers to fill that part of the programme of exercises which devolves on the American representatives. The names of those designated will not be given to the public till the parties have been notified and the positions assigned accepted. The chosen themes were allotted to delegates from the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the Methodist Protestant Church, the United Brethren in Christ, the African Methodist Episcopal Church, the Evangelical Association, the Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, the American Wesleyans, the Independent and Congregational Methodists, the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church of America, the Free Methodists, the Methodist Church of Canada, the Methodist Episcopal Church of Canada, and the Primitive Methodists in Canada and in the United States. The most distant mission fields of Methodism are represented in the selections, and it will of course be some time before the list can be made complete.

The following points of general interest to the church may properly be stated: Rev. Bishop M. Simpson, D. D., LL. D., will preach the opening sermon before the Conference, after which the sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered. Rev. Bishop H. N. McTyeire, D. D., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Rev. Bishop H. W. Warren, D. D., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Rev. George Douglas, LL. D., of the Methodist Church of Canada, have been selected to respond to the address of welcome. The members of the business committee from the Western section are as follows:

Third Episcopal Division—Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, Methodist Episcopal Church, New York city; Rev. Alpheus W. Wilson, D. D., Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. Bishop Thomas Bowman, Evangelical Association, Allentown, Pa.; Rev. James Gardiner, D. C. L., Methodist Episcopal Church of Canada, Ingersoll, Ont.; Rev. Benjamin F. Lee, D. D., African Methodist Episcopal Church, Wilberforce, O.

Alternates—Hon. Edwin O. Stanard, Methodist Episcopal Church, St. Louis, Mo.; Prof. R. W. Jones, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Oxford, Miss.; Rev. D. B. Byers, Evangelical Association, Ergeport, Ill.; J. H. Robinson, Esq., Methodist Episcopal Church of Canada, Bellerville, Ont.; Prof. Wm. Howard Day, Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, Harrisburg, Pa.

Fourth (non-Episcopal) Division—Hon. Charles W. Burton, Methodist Protestant Church, Lynchburg, Va.; Rev. E. Hartley Dewart, D. D., Methodist Church of Canada, Toronto, Ont.; Rev. B. T. Roberts, Free Methodist Church, Rochester, N. Y.; Rev. Charles Spurr, Primitive Methodists in United States, Mahanoy, Pa.; Charles J. Baker, Esq., Independent Methodists, Baltimore, Md.

Alternates—Hon. Frank H. Pierpont, Methodist Protestant Church, Fairmont, W. Va.; David Allison, LL. D., Methodist Church of Canada, Halifax, Nova Scotia; Rev. Joseph Travis, Free Methodist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.; Rev. J. Cooper Antliff, D. D., Primitive Methodist Church of Canada, Toronto, Ont.; Prof. E. G. Paine, American Wesleyan Church, Wasioja, Minn.

The members of the business committee for the first and the second divisions are to be chosen by the Eastern section.

A committee on publication of proceedings, to co-operate with a similar committee on the other side, was selected, as follows: Rev. Dr. J. M. Walden, John M. Phillips, Esq., Oliver Hoyt, Esq., W. C. De Pauw, Esq., Rev. J. W. Lewis, Edward H. East, Esq., Hon. J. J. Gillespie, and Rev. Dr. S. G. Stone.

It is desirable that every essayist and invited speaker bring to the Conference a copy of his essay or address, written only on one side of the sheet, and in every way ready for print, to be passed into the hands of the committee on publication, that such documents, if so ordered, may appear in the published volume of proceedings.

The English committee on entertainment will provide for members of the Conference from Monday, the fifth of September, till Wednesday, the twenty-first. The families opening their doors to receive delegates will not look for them before the first named date, and will not expect them to remain beyond the last named. Entertainment will be furnished to the wives of delegates, if notice of their coming be given to the chairman of the entertainment committee. Delegates who expect to be accompanied by their wives, or who have friends in London or vicinity with whom it would be pleasant to stay, should write without delay to Rev. Richard Green, 11 Dowis Park Road, Clapton, London. The English committee will, as far as possible, notify delegates of their places of entertainment, and if they arrive in London on or after September 5, they are desired to take cabs and go directly to their assigned homes. The committee of arrangements, together with the secretary of the Western section, will be present in City Road Chapel, Monday and Tuesday, September 5 and 6, to introduce members, verify their credentials, and procure for them tickets of admission to the Conference. Trustworthy information in regard to hotels can be obtained of the committee at the same time, or previously by correspondence.

The Western section adjourned to meet in City Road Chapel, London, Monday, September 5, at four o'clock P. M. A. C. GEORGE, Sec'y. W. Sec.

CINCINNATI, April 27, 1881.

Tribute of Respect.

ASYLUM MISSISSIPPI COMMANDERY, No. 1,
JACKSON, MISS., March 6, 1881.

Whereas, Since the last conclave of this Commandery, it hath pleased the Supreme and Sovereign Grand Commander of heaven and earth, to remove from our midst one to whom we were most tenderly attached, by personal and fraternal ties; be it therefore

Resolved, That in the death of our beloved friend and frater, Sir Knight Wm. H. Watkins, D. D., we recognize the hand of an overruling, all-wise Providence, that doeth all things well; and although our imperfect faith will sometimes suggest doubts as to the propriety of his dealings with us, yet we know that all things work together for good to those who bow in becoming submission to the orderings of his Providence. Sir Knight Watkins had well-nigh filled out the measure of time allotted to man. In early manhood he espoused the cause of Prince Immanuel, and there never was, in any age or clime, a more faithful, valiant soldier of the cross. His life was as a shining light, and in his daily walk and conversation among us he exemplified the purity and power of the gospel of love and peace that it was his public mission to proclaim. On the Sabbath afternoon of February 5th, 'mid the gloom of a winter's storm, when the material heavens were in unison, not only with the feelings of the people of this city, but with thousands who loved and cherished him as a Father in Israel, he was borne to the city of the dead," and we may well add what has been so fittingly expressed by another, "to the church which he loved and served so well for more years than most of us have lived; to the community at large, and to the Masonic Fraternity, his death is a calamity of no ordinary proportions; so long as life endures to those who knew and loved him, so will the remembrance of his venerable form, and the kindly accents of that voice which pleaded so eloquently with us for his Master's cause, continue to be an inspiration. The good old man will ever continue to beckon us to cross the river and rest with him beneath the trees in the Paradise of God."

Resolved, That to Rosalie Commandery, No. 5, of which he was a Past Eminent Commander, we tender our fraternal sympathy. While he could not meet with the fraters of his own command, it was our high privilege to enjoy his presence, his counsel and his cheer in our Asylum. What was their loss, was our gain. His life and memory will be to us

"A thing of beauty and joy forever."

Resolved, That to his bereaved and afflicted family, we most respectfully and sincerely tender our hearty condolence. To be the wife of such a husband, to be the children of such a father—to be his companions on earth, and to be re-united to him in heaven—is a joyful memory and anticipation that will go far to sustain them in the great grief of temporary separation. We commend to them his teachings to life, and his unfaltering submission and faith in the hour of dissolution.

Resolved, That this imperfect expression of the sorrow and respect we feel, be spread upon our minutes, that copies of the same be sent to the family and to Rosalie Commandery, and that the papers of Jackson, Vicksburg and Natchez, and the New Orleans CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE be requested to publish the same; also that a copy be furnished to the officers of the Methodist Church in this city, of which Sir Knight Watkins was so long the faithful and acceptable pastor.

ROBERT HARLEY,
WM. J. BROWN, J. D.,
J. G. POWER,
Committee.

From Natchitoches, La.

MR. EDITOR: A fire broke out here, in Natchitoches, in the Planter's Hotel, on the night of April 19, which destroyed twenty-seven houses, among which were three or four dwellings. Mr. H. V. Walmsley lost his dwelling. The loss to the town is estimated at about $150,000, one-third of which was insured.

The burning interests are greatly behind in this country, owing to too much rain and cold weather in the beginning of the season, and no rain afterward, which caused the land to dry and harden before the crops could be put in; but we have just had a very fine rain, and trust that all will move forward now, and that the remainder of the crop will soon be planted.

Our church here has received the great favor of $175, to be appropriated to the payment of accounts against us, $150 from Mrs. C. Vanderbilt and $25 from some friends in Caddo, Bros. C. J. Foster, J. H. Fullilove, J. H. Fullilove, H. Sinclair, Jacob Williamson and J. M. Nelson for which we are very thankful, and it has greatly encouraged our congregation. As much more from some other friends would place us in a situation to remove the whole amount shortly.

The church on the whole work is doing well, and we are expecting that much good will attend us this year through God's presence and power. Yours fraternally,

ROBERT HANDLE.

Our New Church at Vidalia, La.

We would most heartily second the following appeal in behalf of the Vidalia church. It is a most worthy object, and money contributed will be well bestowed.

NATCHEZ, MISS., April 25, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: By special request I beg leave to call your attention to the church in Vidalia. The members need help. They are few in numbers, but earnest and zealous. They have put up a handsome house of worship, costing $2,000. They need $500 to free them from embarrassment. The burden thus far has been borne by two big hearted men, not members of the church, but whose preferences are for Methodism. Their liberality has been large, though their incomes are limited. Will you not appeal to the Methodists in Louisiana to aid an enterprise so worthy? Remember it is the first house ever dedicated to God by white people in the old and wealthy parish of Concordia. It is the only house of worship for white people on the western bank of the Mississippi between Waterproof and away down below the mouth of Red river. Although our church building in Natchez is still incomplete, and every effort is being made to raise money for work now required and soon to be done, yet some money will be contributed by our members to help the Brethren in Vidalia. It is to be hoped the churches in New Orleans will respond with proportionate liberality. Let all the churches in Louisiana do what they can in their behalf.

Respectfully, T. L. MELLEN.

Fannin Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Fannin circuit embraces all of Rankin county north of the V. and M. R. R., and a small portion of Scott, and is very pleasant indeed in summer time, muddy in winter. We have seven organized churches, all in tolerably good condition. We also have a parsonage located in the pleasant little town of Fannin, in the midst of a people who know how to appreciate the gospel and how to take care of their pastor and his family. May God bless the people of Fannin circuit. Our Second Quarterly Conference convened at New Providence Church, April 16 and 17; and the people of New Providence manifested their appreciation of a Quarterly Conference by the handsome entertainment prepared on Saturday, and also the large congregation of each day. Our beloved presiding elder was at his post in the spirit of the Master, and delivered two most excellent sermons to the edification of all that heard them. Thank God for the Quarterly visits of those holy men of God. We have recieved about twenty members to date. Finances coming up pretty well and health good. Farm work tolerably well advanced. Your brother in Christ. A. D. MILLER, P. C.

APRIL 28, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: The election in regard to the liquor traffic in this Clinton county was held the twenty-sixth of this month. The prohibitionists were defeated by a considerable majority. The best citizens, of course, voted for prohibition; and they, no doubt, will try to make those feel, who voted for the whisky, that they will be held responsible for what whisky does, or at least, what their dram under its influence. The church is quiet, its members are peaceable, but finances are low. The health of the country is good, and it is lively in business operations.

A. C. CALHOUN,
CLINTON, Alabama, April 26, 1881.

The most unhappy of all men is the man who can not tell what he is going to do, that has got no work cut out for him in the world, and does not go into any. For work is the grand cure of all the maladies and miseries that ever beset a thinking, honest work which you can find getting done. Carlyle.

Our brother Paul, the apostle once said, "I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." Some of our modern preachers seem to know a great deal more than this. It is better not to know so much, than it is to know so many things that are of no value. —Christian Index.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, MAY 5, 1881.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

BY INVALID.

A flash of sunlight o'er the plain,
A shower of pearly tears of rain;
Ten thousand voices tuned to sing
Glad heralds of the dawning Spring!
Æolian harps—Spring's Ruby breeze
Awoke sweet music in the trees;
A veil of gossamer it weaves,
Encompassing all with emerald leaves.

Fine gleams of sky, thro' rifts of gray,—
Thro' which the "glints of sunlight" play—
Smile on the flowers looking up
The fairy-jeweled lights to sip,
Whose buds of beauty shall unfold,
Revealing chalices of gold.
Fair modest violet's blue eyes
Reflect the hues of sunlit skies.

The snowy lily censers filled
With sweet ambrosia magic stilled!
I see one now—a fairer white—
Like spotless snow in sunshine bright.
Did any fairy "moonbeam sprite,"
Leave there her lily cup veil of white
Or one of Flora's maidens fair,
At midnight drop it from her hair?

Be as it may, I'd rather think,
That this pure found where will bees drink,
Was made by our Creator's hand,
To gladden this dark desert land,
For when I see a lily fair,
I read the Saviour's language there,
Oh daily I wear a robe as white,
When I awake from death's dark night!

The flowers are waking from their sleep,
While sighing zephyrs o'er them sweep,
The dew-drop smiles kiss the leaves away,
Then fold from weeping clouds of gray
Perhaps to mirror in the pool,
The pebbly "sparkling" cataract's spout,
All these will make the earth look bright,
I hope when you read this you'll say so, too.

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHARLES GILLESPIE.

Second Quarter Lesson VII.

Gospel [illegible]
wicked [illegible]
Practice [illegible]

SUNDAY, MAY 15, [illegible]

The story of Dives and Lazarus follows the parable of the prodigal son. If the exceeding unlikeness of the immitable parable yielded any true conception of God's character in the minds of those who heard it, this narrative of Dives and Lazarus was suffering to dispel them at once. The immediate occasion, however, of the delivery of this lesson was the Savior's defining Christ's mission, the "reproof" of sin, righteousness, and judgment, together. And it answers to that description, in giving this story. Read here the preceding chapter.

The story of Dives and Lazarus is the best known of Christ's parables. It may be called a veritable history, and yet it is a parable. It may be called a history of two individuals, but the Master, who tells it, and who knows the history of all men, does not so affirm it to be. Neither does it have the features of a parable or mythical legend. It is as the actors speak in their own proper persons. A rich man speaks, for example, and a poor man for a pair of men. The dreadful fruit of the false theory have sometimes driven men to say that they have no original to whom the points of this story refer, but it is a mistake. The subterfuge is in saying this in declarative language, and is not to be literally understood. To take this ground we must deny that truth can be taught in figures, and that in any degree and language can convey ideas, for all language is figurative. Truth can be taught in pictures; a picture is a figure; figures are as real as words; perhaps as real as pictures, and this parable is as applicable to the rich man by the hand of the Divine Master, We know of no better way of [illegible] lesson than by [illegible] picture. Behold a contrast, in two lives, both in death and in eternity.

The contrast in their lives is told in a few words, just a few strokes by the hand of the Master, each of the two in contrast. Here the words:

19. There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day.

20. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores,

21. And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table: moreover the dogs came and licked his sores.

Now here the contrast in their lives, in their circumstances, in their conditions. How marked! The extremes of all human conditions, social position and wealth, poverty and misery, are presented in the persons of this rich man and this beggar. The dreadful contrast in their circumstances; the one's riches and the other's poverty did not of itself constitute the contrast. A man's treasures do not consist in what he has, but in what he is. Riches are no more a crime than poverty is a virtue. The love of money is the root of all evil, and not the love of anything else before God, the root of all evil. Dives' crime was not his wealth—Abraham was wealthy—but his was his godless use of his money. He permitted it to take the place before God in his heart. Lazarus' poverty was not his piety, but rather his pagan want of God in his poverty. Both was poor. The contrast in their characters is to be found in the character of the men themselves, of which their circumstances were significant.

In their deaths the contrast maintains.

22. And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom: The rich man also died, and was buried.

We can see no difference between them as to their circumstances. We see the rich grow richer and the poor grow rich; the tables often turn in this life, but not so with these two. Dives held his wealth, and Lazarus his poverty, down to the last day and hour of their lives.

They were separated in their lives, but, layin death they for a moment are equal, but just for a moment, and the contrast of their lives in time widens to eternity. Their dying was in contrast; they lived differently, they die differently; their beds were different, their views of death were different. One well-clothed, as the captive would deem, the other decked it as the criminal dies the dungeon to which he must be dragged by the strong arm of the law. I have seen a beggar die, and I have seen the rich go down into the valley of the shadow, but they meet on the brink for a moment; both are dead; come, view the two; which has the advantage; both cold, still, dumb, ghastly. If there is a choice I would choose the dead beggar; angels come to bear home the soul; the features of death show the likeness of weight; corpse in rags, and one in purple. Oh, death shows an awful leveler; there makes all men equal. Poor Lazarus died a beggar in appearance, in misery, and there ends; and where is the wealth of the one and the poverty of the other? They are men, [illegible] equals, facing eternity. The rich man dies, his body was buried, of course, with just such magnificence as his money could afford; for is the last use of money for the owner; it flies from sight. The town authorities attended to the body of Lazarus. Did the dogs carry away the [illegible] which [illegible] long desired? One must have looked there when, in his agony, for the first time he saw the angels coming. Hasting, they are coming home! They bear him away to his eternal home. Oh, the regret, the sweet, in the flash of a celestial bird, one and only thought, the glory, heaven, through the gates of paradise. Oh, the rapture of the greeting! There reposing in Abraham's bosom; Abraham is the host. Welcome, my son, thy place is here. The starving beggar of earth sits down to eat forever in the Kingdom of God.

There he married, and was buried. There is no record of any angels coming for him. He took rooms as he was able, with no guide, but the dreadful gravity of a sun sinking down. They are each in the land of departed spirits, but under circumstances as different as their lives had been. In hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. Hear the prayer across the chasm. Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue, for I am tormented in this flame. Dear Abraham, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime received thy good things, likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. And, besides all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed, so that they which would pass from hence to you can not, neither can they pass to us that would come from thence. He sees that for him there is no hope of escape, and he turns, as he thought earthward. Then he said, I pray thee, therefore, Father, that thou wouldst send him to my father's house, for I have five brethren, that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment. Abraham said unto him: They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them. And he said, Nay, Father Abraham; but if one went unto them from the dead they will repent. And he said unto him: If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead. This prayer is one of despair. It is made to the wrong father. Because we have Abraham for our father is no surety of our salvation. His prayer for his brethren is a defense of himself. If I had better evidence I would not have come to this place. It teaches us that there is no communion of lost and damned spirits. That the lost souls in torment take no pleasure in company of the damned. Counted as usurpers of a devil's home, and shunned of each other, they long to escape from the crowded prison, but never come out. It teaches that all testimony is given that we shall receive. Hell shall never come nearer than it is to-day. Heaven shall offer no greater inducements for men to enter its joys than are offered to-day. It teaches that here character is made, that here destiny is fixed for eternity. It is an awful and exact illustration of the indexibility of the law. The drop of water refused is the one-jot or tittle of the law failing not.

Domestic Missionary Work.

A BETTER PLAN.

MR. EDITOR: J. W. Solomon, in the Advocate of March 17, calls the attention of your readers to "Missionary Ground in Alabama," and says "there is a large scope of country along the line of the Mobile and Grand railroad with no churches or preacher," and he has heard of some persons, in the same region, "actually not having sermons for years." I am glad Bro. Solomon wrote and that you published that article. That territory ought to be invaded by the Methodists, the standard of the cross unfurled, and the country claimed for Christ, and all this ought to be done as soon as possible. There is a field as "ripe unto the harvest" as Dr. Chalmers saw in the suburbs of Edinburg. The glorious work of planting the church was done by Methodist preachers before the days of missionary appropriations. Men imbued with the love of Jesus, and fired with zeal for the salvation of souls, hurried to the places where "Christ had not been named." There they made known their high commission, and there were sinners "by thousands converted to God." In their itinerating tracks were left Methodist Churches, which, by our itinerant plan, have since been regularly supplied with pastors. And now Methodism is pretty liberally diffused throughout the country, and by means of foreign missions the conquests of the gospel are being pushed into "the regions beyond." Domestic missionary appropriations serve very well the purpose of aiding in the support of pastors in places where the church, though already organized, is financially weak. But for the purpose of propagandism our domestic missionary plan will not answer. The writer of this thinks there is a better plan to inaugurate the gospel into the region pointed out by Bro. Solomon. Let us make an appropriation of mission pay funds and send a little fat preacher to it. Let the pastors of Abbeville and Clanville and Troy, of Montgomery and Eufaula, and any other two stations in east Alabama correspond with each other, and agree upon a time to unite their forces and invade the region in question. Let them about the 1st of August, make a raid or invasion, and one of these stations, or circuits, get up the best camp house, if possible, and, if not, rear a brush arbor, call the people together, preach, hold a protracted meeting, get the sinners converted, baptize them and their children, or organize a church, start a church building enterprise, appoint class leaders, sell Disciplines and hymn-books, get subscribers for the ADVOCATE, and go back home to their congregations after a two weeks' absence. What is to hinder the churches at Troy, Clanville, Eufaula, Montgomery, etc., from being strong enough to spare their pastors for missionary work for two weeks? I will assert that the churches at these places will grow stronger by this. Where are Bishops G. Crook, T. W. Solomon? Where are R. B. Crawford, T. F. Mangum and A. M. Bolan? That they do not episcopally reanimate the talented preachers of east Alabama to do some missionary work in that beautiful field? The circuit preachers have as much as they can do on their circuits during the protracted meeting season, but the station preachers can set up the standard of the cross in destitute fields if they will. If they will go and establish a church, or churches in the missionary ground pointed out by Bro. Solomon, no doubt the Missionary Board of the Alabama Conference, will do what it can to sanctify the permanency of Methodism there. If those brethren have to hire horses, or others wise incur expense, the Missionary Board will probably reimburse them; but, if not, this writer and you, Mr. Editor, may furnish his name whenever necessary, will raise the money in some way, or pay it himself. Much is being done through the efficiency of our domestic missionary plan to prop and strengthen Methodism (and by Methodism I mean "earnest Christianity") and much remains to be done. We must collect more money, and use more men in this home work. Let every preacher give to his domestic missionary collections its due proportion of his attention, that our Conference Missionary Board may continue to be perfectly solvent. In the Alabama Conference there are nineteen pastoral charges which are aided by the Missionary Board, with appropriations averaging one hundred and four dollars to each charge. These charges themselves pay their pastors an average of one hundred and thirty-nine dollars, so that the pastors receive for their services an average of two hundred and forty-three dollars. The number of members on these charges average one hundred and forty-four. The membership on these charges are scattered over large areas of territory, in sparsely settled countries in many instances. The pay on them is small, the country for the most part rural; parsonages there are none. Our best preachers think their services are needed in more desirable fields. Young preachers and fifth-rate older ones are sent to these missions. They begin their work in winter, preach in private houses, school-houses and comfortless churches, Thursdays, Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays, at from twelve to twenty different places each month. They do much good, and we should encourage them and help them. But any one can see that such small pittances for salaries can not and do not command the services of first-rate preachers. These stationed preachers must stir out, go after them, Mr. Editor; be up and awake up and do more for the Master. Let first-rate preachers raise more foreign and domestic missionary money, let all the other rates stay the same; let first-rate preachers do more missionary work in person, and the fifth-rate preachers take heart as they see the field for the employment of their talents widening. Who says our Conference is crowded? There were thirteen charges left to be supplied at the last session of the Alabama Conference. Come in thirteen more, even if you are fifth-rate; there is room. There is work to do, plenty of it; let every person, of every race, in Alabama have opportunity to hear the gospel within the next twelve months. Show me a destitute field in my reach, Mr. Editor, and I promise to invade it this year.

Colportage Sketches No. 3.

BY W. S. [illegible]

BEEVILLE, TEXAS.

"Well, these are nice books, and the cheapest I ever saw. We have a Bible but if I had the money I would have one of the larger size. A great many people need Bibles in the community, and I am glad to see you here supplying them. I am not like many of my brethren, who oppose everything of the sort. Some people call selling Bibles God's work. God has no more to do with it than I do. It is only man's work. The Scripture teaches me that God is able to do his own work when he wants it done. Almighty himself came to buy house, a long time ago, and sold for washing God's work, when he was going about selling Bibles and giving them to the poor. I told him, then, it was only man's work, for God never sold a Bible nor give one away in his life. And there was a Methodist preacher, who made quite a fuss, he was mighty high-toned, but I don't think he was pious, who went off and round on his circuit and said he was disturbing God's work. He said he could go anywhere his brethren, I believe he called him Bishop, wanted him to go, if the stars fell on the 21st of August, and say to all sinners, that the day of judgment was to-day, and go to God's work and save souls. I knew the foolishness of such people's sport, and he knew it, too. And when he was taken to task, I am glad he was a hypocrite. The very next year his brethren, or Bishop, told him to go to a certain circuit and say souls where he didn't want to go, and he got mad and quit, and went and joined the Missionary Baptists. I don't think he bettered it much, for the Missionary Baptist is as much of a hypocrite as the Methodist. I reckon he is still saying souls." After the conclusion of the above speech, he shaded his eyes with his hand, and, looking at the sun, continued: "It is now about eleven o'clock, and a warm day for March. Let's, dear, your horses, rest awhile, and take dinner with us."

The above sentences were uttered by an aged minister of the gospel, of the Primitive Baptist persuasion, who had the pastoral care of three or four large congregations. I was a stranger in a strange land, and not willing to offend his distinctions against my church, yet the invitation to rest and dine was no small temptation. The horses were sorely in need of rest, and we were seated in the hall. Early in the morning of the day which follows the venerable divine said: "The Scripture teaches me that God knows everything, and predestinated all things as they now exist, from before the foundation of the world, and man has nothing to do with his salvation." In reply to this I quoted Isaiah: "Let the wicked forsake his ways, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, who will have mercy upon him, and to our God, who will abundantly pardon." "That sounds like Scripture," said the gray-haired gentleman, "but I have never read it in my Testament. If it is there at all it is Christ speaking to some of them educated scribes and lawyers." In mysterious silence I said a little impromptu: "Let me have your Bible, and I will read the passage." "I stand by the New Testament, and hardly think you will find it there." "John, bring me that little Bible." John was a sprightly, clever boy of about twelve years. He looked in all the rooms, went to the kitchen and returned, and, from the noise I suppose searched every old trunk and box about the place. Finally he came to the door, and timidly said: "Pa, I can't find the Bible." "Tell Sally to get it then. She knows where it is. She is always reading the Bible." Sally came from the kitchen, and searched longer than John did, but made the same report—she could not find the Bible. "I can get it myself, I reckon," said the venerable man, as he left his seat and went into the room. I had almost forgotten the topic under consideration, when he returned and reported that the Bible could not be found, at the same time giving it, as his opinion, that his son James had taken the Bible to Texas with him when he moved there last fall. This aged minister, of the only church in the world, did not have a Bible from October to the following March, and, what is worse still, did not even know that his house was destitute of the Holy Scriptures. By this time dinner was announced, and I thought it prudent not to press the Bible question further. While at the table I innocently asked his mode of preparation for the pulpit. "Preparation for the pulpit? What do you mean?" "I mean how do you prepare your sermons?" "Prepare my sermons? I never know what my text is until I get into the pulpit. Don't you reckon God would give me a text before he wants me to use it." I expressed my astonishment at such a course, and spoke at some length of the responsibility of preaching, and of the earnest prayer and profound thought which are necessary for a suitable preparation for the sacred desk. "That will do for young people, who preaches from book learning; but God fills the mouths of his servants with just such things as he wants them to say." To conclusion, I spoke of the danger of a preacher getting preparation, in getting the habit of using the same words in every sermon, and, though he might take a new text, yet preach the same sermon all the time. As we rose from the table he said: "They praise me of that, but I am doing what God directs, and do me care what educated people say." My horses were soon moving on, and I felt that my visit had not been in vain, as there he had discovered that he had no Bible.

Marriages.

[illegible] CHRISTIAN, at the residence of Mrs. [illegible] Miss., April 14, 1881, by Rev. J. [illegible] Mr. Jno. E. Allen, of Warren county, Miss., and Miss Lena A. Christian, of Pontotoc, Miss.

[illegible] HOLMES—At the residence of Mr. [illegible] Natchez, April 21, 1881, by Rev. W. C. Black, Mr. R. Percy Peterson and Miss Mattie E. Holmes, all of Natchez.

PETERSON—HOLMES—At the residence of Mrs. [illegible] Natchez, April 21, 1881, by Rev. W. C. Black, Mr. R. Percy Peterson and Miss Mattie E. Holmes, all of Natchez.

[illegible] HOLMES—At the residence of Mrs. [illegible] Natchez, April 21, 1881, by Rev. W. C. Black, Mr. R. Percy Peterson and Miss Mattie E. Holmes, all of Natchez.

Obituaries.

MRS. ELIZABETH [illegible] was born in Franklin [illegible] Ohio, [illegible] and died in Vernal [illegible] Miss., [illegible] She was a [illegible] of the Methodist [illegible] Church, and lived a consistent [illegible] life. She was [illegible] and [illegible] of Christ [illegible] and was willing to [illegible] when it was [illegible] to God's will. By [illegible] she was [illegible] a Savior [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Christian Advocate.

...RDAY, MAY 5, 1881.

CASTING ANCHORS.

...ght is dark, but God, my God,
...ve and in command;
...re am I, when morning breaks,
...ill be "all the land."
...ce I know the darkness is
...m as sunniest day,
...t my anchor Patience cast,
...wish, but wait for day.

...drives the storm, but winds and waves
...ds in His hand are held,
...sing in omnipotence,
...fears are quickly quelled.
...ked, I'm to His faithful grasp,
...ives him through the stay;
...ting on the anchor Faith,
...wish, but wait for day.

...and the moments dreary, long
...upon the Lord;
...on His "eternal years,"
...feast upon His word.
...ness, so rich, so great,
...ing support and stay;
...on the anchor Hope ahead,
...wish, but wait for day.

...ious Infinite, O high
...f supreme, divine!
...ot feel one fluttering doubt,
...ch so dear as thine."
...ay my Best Beloved,
...Heart with Heart lay
...the sanctuary Love,
...wish, to wait for day.

—Presbyterian

...ness and Personality of Revelation.

...BY J. B. WALKER, D. D.

...t is from with Deputies when ...ge with these, and the looks for ...ments of humility ...

...n probable that some of ...ering this and analogous Scrip...s wondered why they were ...ven from revelation, ...and not these personalities have ...e a postscript, or private ... We think it may be ... The Spirit ...has also to reckon to the in... ...sagacity, and dignified, a ...e Book of various interests ...ess glance more important, ...ance of the grandiloquent and ...ecting, from the failure to ...unmeaning beings. Birds, for... ...ge to be reached by man's ...ow eagles are not to be lured ...to pull the same plow ...ke is not to be tolled ...ed's flock. Ministers of the ...go from house to house ...ge, but to preach where ... Timothy is to go ... every, but a little wine for ...sake and things often ... ...ssimilitude and figurative ...ge directors will all be ...ssigned with care, to ...ge sagacity, to cultivate ...ties, and to reveal the ...d offer favor of God towards ...ings even the least and lowly ...e merely regarding to us most ...and trust inspiring trait of ...g character.

...such revelations and in... ...being incompatible ...ring idea of a revelation from ...ld depend upon more full and ...amination, that such teach... ...ge to be expected, and if not... ...what we, in our short-sighted ...e fitted to dignify with the ...new principles and great truths ...ld begin found in the Bible, it ...well have been urged as a pre... ...against its superhuman claim. ...reader ask, why? We an... ...because such a book would be at ...analogies of nature, unlike ...he has been pleased to reveal ...creation. It is true the ...sun is near 2,500 in circumference, ...sun is thirteen hundred thou... ...larger than the earth; that ...stars in the immense space ...ds of times larger than the ...that God has scattered these ...ons of ...ly millions along the ...way. Shall we some of the sub... ...revelations of the telescope, and ...ts of the mathematics of ...

...the microscope equally reveals ...ness of God; as well as his ...ld all, in unmeasurable mi... ...The microscope reveals the ...ame, the economy of a teem... ...creatures capable of ...sensation of life and death, ...ould that a million of them ...ion's square inch of space. ...in the large, peculiar and ...ing provisions and enjoyments ...minated from each ...ly as can the cow, the ...horse. These animalcules ...ished into orders, gen... ...species with as much precision ...ities; they have the ...t, digest and assim... ...they control their tem... ...ing, or retreating at ...ese minute creatures exist in ...that no man can number, ...grass and flowers, on the ...in the water, still and fresh, ...and at all altitudes, ...ere are, and ...ical skill and power. ...provision to pur... ...ge minute intelligences, ...ere nothing. Yet ...n we wonder then, ...ellow does not fall to the ...without his notice, and that he ...for ever." Much less can we ...the cares for man, number, ...ed his head and visiting ...the ministrations of his prov... ...and grace. These terms, great ...are purely relative, and have ...ious to God. When we ...God is the infinite, the om... ...all its vastness is infinitely ...such considerations fully vin... ...Bible from the charge, as an ...sense of busying itself about ...the sun, seemingly unimportant. ...consider the moral significa... ...of facts, there are no trifles in ...; all that in any sort shapes ...ders our character, is fraught ...momentous significance. It is ...as true in view of our needs, ...influence of all acts upon des... ...that "all scripture is profitable ...the man of God may be thoroughly ...

...think this seemingly obscure pas... ...elected for our text, when ma... ...and broadly considered, will be ...and only a proof by analogy of ...divinity of the Scriptures, but ...the profitable suggestions. Great ...and obvious lessons all will see, ...may be at a glance—not so with ...and analogous passages, and ...the need of exposition.

...by an reading, we shall think ...quest of the apostle to Timothy to ...the "cloak" which he had left ...in the care of Carpus, proves ...was a selfish age, which per... ...its greatest human benefactor to ...so poor, that even a "cloak" ...was a necessity to his comfort. But what... ...ever we may think of the selfishness, or ...may be, the poverty of the church; we ...the unselfish devotion of Paul's consecrated life. Thirty years of toil, self-denial and suffering had passed away, during which this great man had labored in perils, and often in hunger and nakedness, but he was still poor, so poor that this "cloak," for he had no other, was needed to protect him from the chill of winter.

The Mohammedan, the Mormon, and the whole race of impostors, have accumulated wealth and revelled in luxury, and sensual indulgence. If Paul had left no written record, not only of the sanity, but of the vigor and clearness of his mind, as a mind developed and brightened by various learning; scepticism would have disposed of the argument deducible from Paul's holy and self denying life, by soundly affirming that he was an amiable and crazy enthusiast. But the argument is not thus to be met and disposed of. Paul was not only an ardent and untiring philanthropist, but he was a profound thinker, a great reasoner. The only solution is, the gospel is the power of God; that it prompted and sustained Paul in all his long, arduous and disinterested career.

But Paul also desired Timothy to "bring the books which he left with Carpus, especially the parchments." This would seem to indicate that age, toil and suffering had done nothing to abate his thirst for knowledge and devotion to books. Paul was growing old, he knew that the shadows were growing long, the night when no man may work was near; but he knew no pause, he proposed still to study, and coming nally add to his mental store; to grasp at once to study and to live. What a rebuke is such an example to the indolent and sparing spirit which says, "I am too old to learn, my days of improvement are past," and to that egotistic intellectual pride which insists, "I need to know no more, in the world of thought I have gone deep enough, I have exhausted enough; I need no further inquiry." It is matter of thankfulness that these are not the world's, always, and many noble examples of enlightened and consecrated old age illustrate the saying of the sage, "The hoary head is a crown of glory if it be found in the way of righteousness." Let the aged Christian who reads the words of the inspired apostle not forget the noble example of Him who, girding himself, washed the disciples' feet, and took a child in his arms and blessed it. Wash, brethren, one another's feet, the feet of the weary, the footsore, the dusty, the aged, the feeble, the babes in Christ. Bless the little children. Let this same mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus. Minister to the necessities of others, and you will be ministered unto. Be clothed with humility, for God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. Be not weary in well doing, for in due season you shall reap if you faint not. Let your conversation be as becometh the gospel of Christ, that whether you come and see you, or else be absent you may hear of your affairs that you stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel. Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say rejoice. Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand. Be careful for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus. Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things. Those things which ye have both learned and received and heard and seen in me, do; and the God of peace shall be with you. Such was the glorious and heavenly close of the most illustrious and shining minister of God. Labor and poverty of mind-desertit, leaned us to the Cross that forgotten of past sins—all in view of glory. Let us not rob the Parkhurst himself in whatsoever state he was, therewith to be content. May there rejoice always in the Lord, and in everything to give thanks.

This plain and aged prisoner of Christ had, in near prospect, an inheritance richer than the wealth of kings, a richer than Rome's widest marble pile, and a crown more resplendent and honorable than the imperial conferors ever wore. He was on the frontiers of a better land, where he was—"the crest and of the palace of angels and God. And what was best of all he was "ready for his departure." His work was all that done, and he was ready for his coronation, and his everlasting song unto him who loved us.

Eyes plucked out by Birds.

(Proverbs xxx, 17.

It is said by naturalists that ravens, in attacking their prey always aim at the eyes, and after blinding the animal, and thus rendering it mad with terror, confusion and pain, leisurely proceed with the work of destruction. Other fierce birds, such as hawks, act on the same plan; and it is asserted that in Persia and Asia Minor, falcons were formerly trained to attack men in the same way. It is a matter of doubt, however, if ravens ever attack living men. The passage may mean that those who rebel against their parents shall die in battle, and become the prey of ravens and eagles, some of them being devoured by the one class of birds, and some by the other; or it may express the popular belief of the age in which the proverb was made, that those who rebelled against their parents would meet with some signal and terrible punishment.

—Biblical Things Not Generally Known.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—Some of the most satisfactory testimony to the success of missions in India comes from eminent civilians and military officers who have been connected with the Government or the Army. The celebrated engineer of Southern India, Sir Arthur Cotton, who has spent sixty years in that country, made the following statements at a recent meeting of the Church Missionary Society in the Town Hall at Oxford, England: For years after I went to India the Government of Madras used to send the heads of police in state to present a grand dress to the principal idol of Madras, and a collector of a district would go out in full state, attended by his peons, at the annual drawing of the idol car, and dismounting from his horse put himself at the head of the thousands of poor degraded creatures to take hold of the great rope by which the car was dragged, himself by far the most degraded of the whole assemblage. Such was the state of things long after I went to India. Compare the state of things of late years, when Governor-Generals have not been ashamed of their God and Saviour, and have sedately declared themselves most anxious to lead the natives to turn from their idols. And what has been a consequence of this blessed change? Idolatry, the Missions so despised at first, have been practically instrumental in converting the rulers into what more becoming their position as Christian men. All of what has been done in their days is the result of the Church Missionary Society. Dr. Hough's book, published in 1823, the number of Christians is unwisely [illegible] the Church Missionary Society [illegible] Missionaries [illegible] Missions more than [illegible] has been [illegible] and [illegible] Missions [illegible] what is now [illegible] Christians [illegible] Missionaries [illegible] Christians [illegible] Missionaries [illegible] Christians [illegible] Missionaries

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
Rev. J. W. Rush. Rev. W. L. C. Rusicutt.
Rev. C. B. Galloway. Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D.

THURSDAY, MAY 5, 1881.

Disabilities of Age.

A visiting brother in the preacher's meeting recently said that in his section there was a recognized ministerial "dead line," drawn somewhere in the neighborhood of fifty or fifty-five. It is probably true of all sections and churches that the preference is for ministers from twenty five to fifty years of age. The rule, however, is by no means universal; as some preachers are in demand until well up in the sixties. And it should be noted that this preference for comparatively young ministers is mainly confined to the pastoral work. Older men are effective as theological and wailenjoil professors, as presiding elders, Bishops, book agents and secretaries. For the pastorate in the stations especially, the demand seems to be for men in the early prime of life. The youthful Timothy is preferred to Paul the aged.

In proof of the unreasonableness and injustice of such discrimination, we are cited to the fact that lawyers, judges, doctors, financiers and business men generally, are at their best, and doing their most effective work at a period of life when ministers are regarded as no longer desirable. But it must be considered that the qualifications which give efficiency in obtaining professional and business men, can not by themselves sustain men successfully as preachers and pastors. A pastor must be nimble of foot and capable of marvellous physical activity. Elderly men become legweary, even as is the case with old horses, otherwise in good liking and capable of considerable service. They also lose somewhat in buoyancy of spirits, are more weighed down with cares, and have passed the point at which sympathy with the average of people is most complete. The old preacher, in this respect, finds himself almost alone, lingering among the elder members of his flock, while the younger are largely out of the sphere of his personal influence. What we call personal magnetism is the result of temperament, swift-circulating blood, and nervous organization. As a magnetic battery in middle life, the same man at sixty-five no longer sends through his hearers the tingling, thrilling and rousing sensations. The machine that has generated the electricity, and kept up a steady light for thirty years, is wearing out. Enough of everything else, of knowledge, piety, wisdom, there is lack of magnetism.

With age men grow away from the mental tastes and capacities of the multitude. The same subjects, and the same aspects of truth, do not interest them equally. With some exceptions, the imagination yields to the less attractive faculties, and the emotional nature becomes more sedate. Then, again, preaching is not wholly spiritual and intellectual. It is largely physical. It is vocalization. When the voice becomes cracked and husky, or tremulous and quavering, when its sweetness and compass are gone, and modulation is no longer possible, one important condition of acceptability and popular interest is lost. Great vocalists usually retire early from public life. Jenny Lind knows more of the science of song now than she did thirty years ago, and, though not more than sixty, she has for many years lived in retirement.

It is different with men in secular pursuits. The capacity to manage finance, to direct large commercial enterprises, does not depend upon a sympathetic or magnetic temperament, upon vocal powers, or even physical activity. Powers of detail, sagacity, mathematical calculation, and a ripe experience, though accompanied by the most heartless selfishness and unrelenting greed, will ensure success. In critical sickness, or at the crisis of an attack, we seek the services of the most experienced and skillful physician. If over fifty, all the better, if his mind is still clear, and mental forces unabated. We may not like the man, but we need and trust him professionally. Where great interests of property, or of personal rights, depend upon a counselor learned in the law, the gray-haired advocate is the one we go to for advice, and to him we most confidently entrust our case. His step may not be firm, his voice may not be musical, we may, on some accounts, dislike him, but he is sought for because he knows the law, and can take care of the rights of his clients.

Thus it happens that a merchant doctor or lawyer, who is at his best at sixty or seventy, would ordinarily

A written brief, or a very dry and profound argument, will secure a favorable decision from a bench of jurists, while a sermon, in that style and manner, would disgust a congregation. The most accomplished and successful lawyers do not win their laurels nor their fortunes in jury cases. The eloquent jury pleader at forty, may gain his greatest triumphs before the Supreme Court at seventy. Preachers, however, have none but jury cases. Their pleadings are always with popular assemblies, and with people that are free to hear or to depart. It is certain that learning, experience and goodness will not in themselves attract largely. Retaining these in ever-increasing excellence, if the imagination becomes dull, the mental action slow, and the voice and manner languid, there will be a loss of popular interest.

It is a fault of the churches that they do not tolerate old preachers, and that they do not prize them more. While they love and respect them, still they do not much care to hear them, or to have them as their pastors. It is also a fault of the preachers of many of them—that they become prematurely old—old in their ways, in their spirit, and in their manners. The period of decadence comes earlier with some men than with others, and without blame. But the effective years, with the most can be much prolonged by keeping mind and body in tone, and by a divine renewal of their youth. It may be important for the preacher, as the current phrase is, to keep abreast of the times, but it seems to us, to be much more important that he should lag behind with the young, and keep himself familiar with the temper, thoughts and needs of the common people.

The last words of famous people are always of interest. It is supposed that there is truth and sincerity in such words, and that they give the final conclusions and convictions. It is certain that they are apt to be characteristic, and that they throw a last beam upon a career that may have been a perplexing and almost insolvable problem.

A London dispatch to the New York Herald has this concerning Lord Beaconsfield:

Many interesting anecdotes about the late Lord Beconsfield are published in this morning's papers. He occupied himself during a part of his illness with correcting his last speech, delivered in the house of lords on the vote of condolence on the occasion of the czar's assassination. "I will not go down to posterity," said he, "talking bad grammar." The Times relates one or two other sayings of the distinguished dirt during his last illness, one of which corrects a popular misapprehension. Lord Barrington asked him one day where he was born. "I was born in the Adelphia," he replied; "and I may say in a library." My father was not rich when he married.

"He took a suite of apartments in the Adelphi, and, as he possessed a large collection of books, all the rooms were covered with them, including that in which I was born." Another remark of his was the following characteristic one: "I had rather live, but I am not afraid of death. I have suffered so much that were I a Nihilist I should confess everything." This was a humorous allusion to the mistaken but prevalent idea that the Nihilists were subjected to torture after arrest. Lord Rowton is left by Lord Beaconsfield sole trustee of all his private papers, with full power to do what he thinks right with them. Several times in the course of his illness Lord Beaconsfield alluded to certain memoranda which he had, but these have not yet been found.

He was very anxious about the completion of his portrait by Millais. His great political opponents, Bright and Gladstone, had been painted by Millais, and he thought it was no vanity that he too might go down to posterity on the canvas of the great portrait painter of the day. The Times also says that before leaving Buckingham Palace her majesty communicated to Lord Barrington her particular desire to visit the patient, but the reply of the physicians was that only complete quietude was likely to restore Lord Beaconsfield to health. They begged her queen under the circumstances not to covet but her desire. By a singular coincidence Lord Beaconsfield died on the anniversary day on which, twelve months before, he had left Windsor Castle after tendering her majesty his resignation as prime minister of England.

The noble lord seems to have died and given no sign religiously. He wished to go down to posterity on the canvas of a celebrated artist, in company with two of his most eminent political antagonists, and that this same posterity should not condemn him for using bad grammar. He was not afraid of death, had rather live, but great suffering reconciled him to death. Better to die than to continue in this rack of pain. These were among the last things that occupied his mind, and are selected and published as most worthy of notice. If he said anything about Christ, or his hope beyond the grave, it was not regarded as worth the mentioning in comparison with these items about bad grammar, and the completion of his portrait by Millais. What he thought about Christianity, and what he knew of its experience, are matters of solicitude to those who care for the souls of men, and to whom all worldly grandeur is as nothing compared with the eternal destiny. But his last utterances shed no light—perhaps they do throw a shadow of darkness upon those greatness. If he had lived as a Christian we should have no concern as to how he died. In his case the last hours were in accord with his life—not more religious, but just as full of vanity, ambition and worldliness.

The lessons of the floods now pouring down upon us through the Mississippi are diverse, and some of them not easily applied.

The floods this year have been less sectional than usual, the North and West suffering as much, if not more, than the South. Many who suffer have only themselves to blame, because they have been tardy in preparing for the emergency. If they had strengthened their levees betimes, and guarded them vigilantly afterward, their crops and homes would not have been swept away. It is less difficult, however, to blame our neighbor, whose broken embankment has flooded us. If ours had flooded him we should have been altogether absorbed with our own misfortunes. But, as it is, we can not sufficiently condemn this criminal neglect.

Alike giving way in one place, by reducing the pressure elsewhere, relieves a large scope of country. One estate is sometimes saved by the ruin of another. Which is the nobler man, the one who, in his calamity, finds some alleviation in the thought that others have been saved by it, or the one who regrets a deliverance secured at the expense of his neighbor? Perhaps such golden-rule nobility is rare in the world, and specially rare, when the deluge is growing wider and stronger.

The swampers, log men, and wood choppers have their harvests during the overflow. Their winter's store of logs are easily floated out and to market now, and what threatens bankruptcy to the planters enriches the lumbermen.

There is the rich alluvial deposit which these reckless overpourings bring. If there had been no levees for the past hundred years the delta of the Mississippi would have been pretty well filled up in this natural way by this time. As it is, an overflowed plantation has this considerable compensation. If not for the present owner, yet for it there is good in the long run. Thus God enriches the moral world by trouble. The floods of misfortune that seem to sweep everything away, bring us great riches, and leave a lasting deposit of benefits, even though we think little about them.

It is declared in Holy Writ that "the Lord sitteth upon the flood." Why should he not be upon this flood? The Psalmist's world was our world, and nature and law were the same then as now. But David's God, and the way he thought of him, and his trust in him—this is all the difference.

Communion With God.

How exalted is the privilege which we poor mortals have, and how little appreciated it is by us! The heavenly Father condescends to invite us to commune with him. How like a true Father this is! How much love and tenderness are exhibited in the invitation, "call upon me!" The loving heart of God seems to yearn for communion with the hearts of his creatures! How wonderful this is! How little we do know of God, and how little do we appreciate this greatest of all our privileges! The man who communes with God has an advantage over other men, for this intercourse expands the intellect and enlarges the soul and purifies the affections. It is an intercourse with unsullied light, with immaculate holiness, with pathless purity, with infinite wisdom, with unbounded goodness, and must exert a beneficial influence upon the whole nature. This intercourse gives the Christian the advantage over all other men in the attainment of happiness, for it is the channel through which flow down the bright streams from the fountain of all blessedness! This communion is the panacea for all the ills of life. It is the "philosopher's stone," which transmutes all it touches into the pure gold of happiness. It is the divine alchemy which collects all the discordant elements of life and throws them into the crucible of God's providence, and they come out bright and beautiful blessings. It is the sparkling elixir that pours along all the deeps of the soul streams of the purest, truest, noblest life this side of heaven. No wonder the Psalmist should say: "It is good for me to draw near to God." It is good at all times. In trouble there is no friend so near and so true as God and communion with him; then brings a precious balm of healing to the soul. In prosperity there is no friend so wise in counsel as the heavenly Father, and communion with him, then, secures teaching of inestimable value. In the perplexities of life there is no friend so patient as God, and communion with him, then, unravels the tangled skein of providence, and we go on our way feeling that "all things work together for good to them that love the Lord." In sickness there is no friend so sympathetic as God, and communion with him, then, produces a patience in bearing suffering that is one of the clearest evidences of the truth of religion. In poverty there is no friend so benevolent as God, and communion with him, then, introduces to the true riches which will supply the wants of soul and body forever. No wonder the Psalmist should say: "It is good for me to draw near unto God." Oh, brother! appreciate the blessed privilege, and make the best possible use of it during probation, and then enjoy it, without interruption, forever.

C.

Prohibition.

THE SPIRIT OF THE MOVEMENT.

The emancipation of the human mind from the dominion of deep-seated or hereditary error is usually a work of time, and always a work of difficulty. When such error lies not merely in speculative belief, but has embodied itself in widespread vices of conduct, and especially when the appetites and pecuniary interests of thousands conspire to perpetuate the error, its extirpation requires longer time and stronger effort. The present attitude of the public mind, with relation to ardent spirits, is a case directly in point. Except in those instances in which appetite has supplanted reason, the great practical evil of intemperance rests upon an erroneous popular belief. Any attempt to suppress the evil without first correcting the error would be apt to prove as unsuccessful as it would be unwise. To insist hastily on the discontinuance of the practice, regardless of the faith on which it is founded, would be to outrage human nature, provoke opposition, and so to weaken if not defeat the cause of temperance. If all laws, asked for by the advocates of prohibition, were passed against the wish of the majority, such laws would be difficult to execute, and might be repealed. Men must believe the true before they will be willing to do the right. We can not raise men above their own conceptions of propriety. We can not dragoon men into temperance. For these reasons, no doubt, most legislatures have up to this time refused to pass prohibitory laws.

Great moral revolutions should never be precipitated. A memorable instance of hurtful haste in this respect was exhibited in the final abolition of slavery in the United States. In the Northern States slavery had ceased at such times and in such manner as the duty and interest (which, when properly viewed, always coincide) of master and slave mutually required. In the South the relation between them was disrupted with a violence which well-nigh neutralized the evangelical efforts of half a century in behalf of the slave, and thrust him suddenly into a position for which he was so entirely unfit that his progress may be impeded for half a century to come, while the master was only less injured, as his mental and moral superiority gave him greater power to resist the shock. Existing institutions are not always the best, but they are often a great deal better than the means which their opponents would adopt for their destruction.

It is to be hoped that the friends of the great temperance movement now going on in America will not fall into the error of rashness, vehemence or intolerance in the promotion of their cause. Let it be remembered that the strength of the liquor traffic lies not simply or chiefly in the vile appetite of the drunkard, nor in the unscrupulous greed of the dram-seller, but in the sincere conviction of a large part, possibly a majority, of the people that the various forms of alcoholic drinks are more or less essential, not only to the comfort, but also to the health and lives of men. This conviction they have drawn from the teachings of the medical faculties and practicing physicians of the world. These convictions can not be driven away by denouncing drunkards, nor by threatening dram-sellers, nor can they be frightened out of men by figures of amazing import. Nor can either wit or ridicule banish from the minds of anxious parents the belief that stimulating spirit has its necessary uses in the family. Almost everybody believes that, upon the whole, it is the most extensively useful of remedies. It is the faith in it as a medicine which supports all its abuses. Take away its reputation as a medicine, and we shall have no difficulty in getting rid of it altogether.

For the sake of justice and the cause of temperance, let there be no denunciation of the sellers of ardent spirits. They are engaged in a lawful employment. If they violate the law regulating their business, prosecute them; but do not abuse them simply because they avail themselves of their rights as citizens. Legislatures are more to be blamed for the liquor traffic than the dealers in the article. Yet we need not denounce even a legislature which passes a "pint law." The pint law may do more toward the utter prohibition of the sale of intoxicating drinks in Mississippi than any other law ever passed in the State. The chief evidence against many evils is to be found in their effects alone. This is emphatically true of the whisky traffic. No argument from abstract reason or Scripture precept can be brought against it. If the pint law increase the sale and use of intoxicating drinks, as its opponents assert that it is doing, it will help to exhibit the effects of the traffic in so offensive a form as to disgust all good citizens. Why not remove all restrictions, and let all people be free to sell it? If it is good, let us have plenty of it; but if it is bad, let the sale be prohibited altogether. Just here, however, the great difficulty lies. It is not wholly good, nor is it believed to be altogether bad. To find out how little of good and how much of evil there is in it, and to make all see, as some now do, the vast preponderance of the latter should be the aim of the present temperance movement. Surely no good was ever so over benedictioned as this; surely no other evil ever so delusively assumed the office of a minister of grace.

More to be blamed than either sellers or legislators are the voters, who elect the legislators and sign the petitions of the sellers. The evil would not exist but that the people will it. The chief mitigation of the people's responsibility is found in the teachings of the medical profession. The doctors have prescribed it for many diseases, and the people have adopted it as the remedy for all existing, and the preventive of all anticipated ailments. Yet the people are not wholly insensible to the great evil they authorize and perpetuate. They are beginning to be prepared to appreciate the probably unanswerable question: Which is the more deluded, the drunkard who thinks he can regulate safely and prudently his own drinking, or the State which thinks it can safely and wisely control the selling of ardent spirit within its bounds?

Solemn conviction of the immense and awful preponderance of evil in every form and use of intoxicating drink is daily growing like a giant in the public mind, while the spirit of fealty to God and duty, typified by the unshorn hair of Samson of old, is preparing thousands to risk the chances of themselves dying for the lack of it rather than see thousands annually slain by this wiley foe. Increasing light shall ere long rouse this giant from his slumbers, and he shall subdue this mighty enemy that has so long held him captive. The devil of the bowl has thus far outwitted us all. But a resistance awaits him, before which he shall fall like lightning from heaven. Only let all its friends speak temperately for temperance, and fail not to distinguish between whisky and those who handle it. This is not a war against men, but a redemption of our race from one of the direst forms of the curse. Christ, the Master, denounced Pharisees and hypocrites, but reproved outside sinners with compassionate forbearance. We want not "hot shot" nor damnatory phrase, but words of wisdom, love and power.

W. L. C. R.

A Missionary at Home.

Rev. W. W. Royall is writing unusually interesting letters to the Richmond Christian Advocate from China. We give an extract from a letter dated Nezjang, February 23:

This was one week ago to-night. Now we are in our pleasant and comfortable house; and though as yet we are necessarily a little strange to this place and people and find it of course. Out living here is a very different affair from living in Shanghai, and we are grateful for the many comforts we have. This house was built by Brother Reid, and it is a credit to him as well as a valuable property to the mission. There are three bed-rooms, study, sitting-room, dining-room, pantry, clothes-closet, and kitchen, also a large verandah, an upstairs in stronger, a good back porch, servants' houses on the lot—"compound" they call it here, and a good well, conveniently located. Reid—there is to me something of promise even in the sound of the name—is to be the Illinois of China for Southern Methodism, evidently. There is a good deal of building to be done in Suchow. It will be done the better for his being there. Brother Parker will do well in Shanghai; and I well, the future is to decide that. If coming into a Chinese city to live in the third month of one's stay does not make a person feel a sense of smallness, then I don't know what to recommend. I have a great help in Brother Lizan. Rev. C. F. Marshall, who is kindness itself.

Some of the home people will hardly know what to make of our sitting down to breakfast with some dozen to twenty Chinese flattening their noses against the window panes; but we are getting accustomed to it. When we go out we will perhaps have twenty or thirty of them about us, calling us "go this way" carrying us into the premises of their parents for them to see us. Saying, "Yah ngun kah"—he won't bite—when a dog moves out and barks at us, and making us a regular show generally. Speaking of these Chinese dogs, they are very much like wolves, having short ears and a very savage appearance. They bate foreigners, and will never let one pass without barking. Those immense, disgusting creatures, the water-buffaloes, are also, it is said, very much averse to foreigners, and will attack them if suffered to do so.

There is a temple just back of our house, and there are several idols there. One of these is in a part of it that is ruinous, and this one is a great plaything for the children. One of them ran up and bestrode the head of the god, patted his cheeks, breast and stomach, and treated the "lan ya" with freedom that seemed hardly consistent with any degree of reverence. We have seen more kites and a greater variety of them since we got to China, than I ever imagined we should. They are made to represent men, birds, dragons and other objects, and are flown not by children alone, but by men of all ages. One near here was composed of a central figure of circular shape, surrounded by some seven others. It had a sort of reed attachment which vibrated in the wind and made a dismal drone like holding a stick against the spokes of a wheel in rapid motion, while at night, three lamps were suspended to the string, leaving no doubt as to its whereabouts. Our boys don't know the alphabet of popping fire crackers. You can hear any time a whole park go off like hail on a roof. Outrageous noises appear to possess a peculiar charm for the Chinese ear.

Roman Catholic Fanaticism in Mexico.

From the New York Christian Advocate we take the following statements concerning the recent assault of the Catholic mob on the missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal Church:

The Rev. Charles W. Drees, superintendent of missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in Mexico, writes to our missionary secretaries, under date of April 13: "And now I have very sad news to communicate to you. As our Bro. Epigmelio Monroy was returning last Friday evening from Santa Anita, where he has been gathering a small congregation, to Apizaco, the place of his charge as our preacher, he, with two companions, was attacked by a number of men armed with swords and flintlocks. All were wounded, Bro. Monroy so severely that he died at midnight of Saturday following. Another brother was shot by mistake by some who came from a neighboring house to give assistance. Bro. Monroy was a good man, faithful in all his work. He leaves a wife and two children, who will need assistance."

The attack of the mob on our mission premises in Queretaro, Mexico, was noticed last week. As we go to press we have intelligence from Superintendent Drees, who writes from the City of Mexico, that threats of another attack were numerous and alarming, and that the Governor of the State of Queretaro had urged our missionaries to leave the city. Seeing no prospect of protection the missionaries took this course and fled to the City of Mexico, leaving Queretaro by night. On application to the American Minister and to the General Government, the latter requested our missionaries to return to Queretaro, promising them all needed protection. Mr. Drees writes: "I think we must avail ourselves of this protection and return at once to Queretaro. It is a stronghold of fanaticism, which must be broken up by some such action, or else the example will be followed by other cities where we already have work, and the lives of our missionaries and people will be jeopardized. We seek divine guidance and strength for this work. Pray for us." The church needs no further exhortation. Its full sympathy will be called out for our brethren in their peril and heroic devotion.

The Texas Christian Advocate, writing of the license law of Texas, says:

As our readers have been informed our legislature abolished the bell-punch law, and enacted another granting licenses on certain conditions. The law was approved by Gov. Roberts on the 11th of March, and went into effect from and after its passage. The following is the first section:

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the legislature of the State of Texas, that hereafter there shall be levied upon and collected from any person, or firm or association of persons, engaged or engaging in the business of selling spirituous, vinous or malt liquors, or medicated bitters, an annual tax upon every such occupation or separate establishment as follows:

For selling spirituous, vinous or malt liquors, in quantities less than a quart, $50 00
For selling such liquors or medicated bitters in quantities of one quart and less than five gallons, 25 00
For selling such liquors in quantities of five gallons or more, 50 00
For selling malt liquors exclusively in kegs and barrels, 25 00

Provided that nothing in this section shall be so construed as to prevent wholesale liquor dealers or merchants who pay occupation tax as such, from selling unbroken packages containing less than five gallons, without being required to pay an additional tax as apart dealers."

The second section authorizes the county to collect a tax equal to half the above amount; and incorporated cities to collect as much more. The third section requires these sums for license to be paid twelve months in advance. Section four requires every one who engages in the sale of liquors to give a one thousand dollar bond, which obligates them to keep orderly houses; not to suffer gambling; not to sell to minors, or students of an institution of learning; and not to sell to any habitual drunkard, or to any person after being notified in writing by the wife or daughter of the person, not to sell to such person." The additional sections require civil officers faithfully to execute the law. This law is simple in its provisions, and may readily be enforced if civil officers are disposed to enforce it. We believe it is, on the whole, the cet law Texas has ever had on the ubject, though we are opposed to the ale business of licensing whisky elling.

The Southern Presbyterians have a chool at Tuskaloosa, Alabama, for he training of colored preachers. The Southwestern Presbyterian says: Our Institute at Tuscaloosa for the raining of a Colored Ministry, is oing a good work, and prospering. he number of students is on the ncrease, the system of teaching is nore advanced, and the methods of nstruction perfected under the adantages of enlarged experience. hat this should be so, is due in a ery great degree to the faithful perevrance and self-sacrificing labors f Dr. C. A. Stillman, whom the ssembly wisely put in charge. ost men would have been discouraged by the slow progress of the nstitution during the experimental ears; by the lack of sympathy and elp, and by the disparaging criticism, with which the worshipers of he golden calf harped incessantly on he needed amounts of money used put the Institution on its feet. hese are embarrassments which ery sensitive man must feel, and e have no doubt that those charged ith the interests of the Institution t them. Yet, so far as we know, ey did not complain, but have ne on manfully with their work, eptly plodding to secure a sound d serviceable education for young, n qualify them to preach among eir own people, with a good prosect of permanent results. It will necessarily a slow process to establish sound religious teaching among e negroes. It implies years spent preparation. It implies the conct and discomfiture of some over sensationalism. Sensationalism is colored man's weak side. On subject he is as weak as his hite brother, and perhaps more so. e must, therefore, be patient in king for results. They may come wly, and may seem to be long in ming, but they are worth waiting. These brethren at Tuscaloosa ve felt this from the first. We ve that the church will do justice their fidelity.

The diocesan council of the Protant Episcopal diocese of Louisiana its annual session in New Orans last week. From proceedings orted in the city papers we give following:

The committee on state of the ocese respectfully stated that it was possible to make a full report, beuse of the meagerness of data furshed, but that, from the intelligence received, they judged that the neral state of country churches as promising. The committee gs that parishes comply with the uon of the church, which demands t every church make a full report ch year, and feels that upon the attion of country churches, being alled to this error of omission that will be corrected. The committee so calls attention to the condition St. John's church, New Orleans, d insists that mission Sunday-hools, under the supervision of lay-en, be opened in different parts of city.

This committee has had laid before the address of the Bishop, on the scarcity of clergy, and the inadeuate supply of the ministry," and gress with the Bishop in the view ich he takes of the subject, but nsiders that the laity is to blame in matter, and that the inadequate pport of the ministry is the fundaental reason of the scarcity of ergy. This report was read by Dr. ldwell, and received by the council. A communication was read from e lodge of the I. O. T., begging at the council petition the Legisture to enforce the Sunday law relave to the sale of intoxicating liquors, rgorously discussed and laid on the ble.

We deeply regret the death of John Y. Robinson, of Jackson, Miss. At session of the Mississippi Conferce in Jackson several years ago we joyed Mr. Robinson's hospitality, d retain a very pleasant recollecon of him and his family. The larion, referring to his much lamentdeath, says:

It has been many a year since the ath of a citizen of Jackson has caused ch profound sensation as the announceent, on yesterday afternoon at four o'clock, that our esteemed townsman, n. W. Robinson, had departed this e. Although for some time in feeble alth he was on our streets until t two weeks past, giving his usual tention to business. On last Sunday ek he was prostrated by a chill, when ammonia set in, which yielded not to edical skill or careful nursing. The emy of man had resolved to ke his power and presence felt by ling from our midst one who cannot be spared. Not only are his family d a wide circle of relatives bereaved, t an entire community is in grief this unexpected calamity. The ath of such a man is a public loss.

The resignation of the pulpit of the cond Presbyterian Church, Louisle, Ky., by Rev. Stuart Robinson, D. ., LL. D., says the Christian at Work, an vent in its way. Dr. Robinson has en pastor of that church (the Southern rst Presbyterian) for twenty-two years, d is the most prominent minister in Louisville; perhaps the most prominent in the Presbyterian Church South. Dr. Robinson was born near Lonnderry, England, Nov. 26, 1810, and is consequently 71 years of age. He graduated at Amherst College, studied theology at Union Seminary, Va., and spent a year at Princeton; was a professor in Danville Theological Seminary, and became pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Ky., in 1858. He has put forth several theological works of great power, and has also published many pamphlets. Some years ago he was the subject of an unfortunate charge, which was false through out, as was subsequently proven. Dr. Robinson retires from his pulpit in the full vigor of his intellectual power, with a reputation for purity of life, and for pulpit ability, which many may envy, but which none surpass. He will be missed by his congregation; but it is to be hoped his ripe mind will still keep busy a pen that should yet do important service in the field in which Dr. Robinson has won such high honor.

BISHOP WIGHTMAN.—The Southern Christian Advocate, of April 3, says:

We are asked for more definite information about Bishop Wightman's health and about the probabilities of his soon reporting for duty. The Bishop has been confined to his premises ever since his return from the mountains of North Carolina about the middle of last October. For a greater part of this time he has not been able to leave his room; he has not once been outside of his yard. Just now he reports himself as feeling very considerably improved. He walks about the house, and, in favorable weather, about the yard. He will scarcely be able to get to the Bishop's meeting next month in Nashville. He would like to be at work again; but he sweetly illustrates, in his resignation to the Divine will, the grace of the Master he has served so long, and will cheerfully be still while he so ordains."

The Richmond Christian Advocate reports Bro. Hannon's charge in Richmond as a growing church. It says:

The net increase in the Park Place Methodist Episcopal Church for this Conference year, five months, has been over sixty. There has been one hundred and sixty-four on the roll of the Sunday-school, and on last Sabbath there were one hundred and sixty-two present. It would be well if the officers of this school would publish the secret of their success for the help of others not so fortunate; great good might be the result.

The Christian Index, a Baptist paper published at Atlanta, Ga., and one of our best religious exchanges, says:

We heard of a man recently who being in a community where he was a stranger, was suspected, on account of his conversation of being a Christian. We think that some members of Baptist Churches, among strangers, would be regarded as angels unawares.

The same might be said, we fear, of some members of other churches, including our beloved Southern Methodist.

Bishop Kavanaugh, it seems, is to remain on the Pacific coast until after the fall Conferences. The Pacific Methodist of April 2, says:

We are glad to say to the church on the Pacific Coast that our venerable and venerated Bishop Kavanaugh has received the consent of his colleagues to remain with us until after the fall Conferences. This is a boon which will be thoroughly appreciated.

We learn, says the Shreveport Standard of April 30, from Dr. Walker, that the vote on local option in the Mansfield ward, of DeSoto parish, at the election held last Friday, was a tie. This is claimed as a victory by the prohibitionists, as by the terms of the ordinance of the Police Jury submitting the question, an affirmative majority was required before license should be granted to retail ardent spirits within the limits of the ward.

—The commencement exercises of Huntsville Female College, Huntsville, Ala., begin on Friday May 27. Dr. A. W. Wilson is to preach the commencement Sermon Sunday, May 29. Rev. R. T. Nabors preaches on Sunday night. The programme sent us by President Jones is generous and attractive.

—Rev. W. H. Millarn, D. D., is on a visit of a few weeks to New Orleans. He lectures on Thursday night of this week at Grunewald Hall, and will preach at the Carondelet Street Methodist Church next Sunday morning, May 8.

There are, in New Orleans, nine Presbyterian Church Sunday-schools and seven mission schools. These schools contain 591 teachers, and 3,089 scholars.

A Great Sorrow.

The subjoined communication brings us heavy tidings. Our brother, Rev. R. S. Isbell, Floyd, La., has been suddenly bereaved by the death of a son by drowning. We have no doubt the afflicted family will be graciously sustained. Surely they will be remembered by many at the throne of grace.

FLOYD, LA., April 25, 1881.

DEAR BRO. PARKER: A great sorrow has fallen upon the hearts of our dear brother, Rev. Robert S. Isbell, and his family. On Saturday, April 23, his youngest child and only son, Robert Howard, was drowned in a small bayou passing through the lawn of Floyd, La., and connecting with Bayou Macon. The little boy was fishing in this bayou, only a few yards from his father's house. The stream was very narrow, and the water not more than three feet deep. It is supposed that he was suddenly attacked with some sickness that deprived him of the use of his powers of mind and body. No one saw him when he fell. No hand was there to help. Bro. Isbell was absent from home, attending quarterly meeting at Oak Grove. I die what I could to comfort my mourning brother and his sad family. But o who is sufficient for these things?

H. P. ALEXANDER.

Rev. F. M. Grace, writing from Hiwassee College, Tenn., April 25, says: "Dr. Cottrell, of Kentucky, will deliver a literary address before societies, Monday, May 23. Rev. Frank Brandon, of Alabama, will preach the commencement sermon on Sunday, May 22. District Conference is determined to build a parsonage for the preacher in charge at Cleveland. We have had great revivals at Bristol, Pulaski, Lebanon and other places in Tennessee lately. Spring opened on Easter Sunday, and was very sudden and rapid. The wheat crop is very fine. No fruit but apples."

Rev. Inman W. Cooper, writing from Greensburg, La., April 30, says:

"Our precious little Keener Walker was buried last Thursday. Our hearts are full of sorrow. O! how Christ can comfort in such sorrow! We have the sympathy and attention of our beloved charge. My dear doctor, pray for us."

May the gracious heavenly Father comfort and sustain our bereaved brother and sister.

A VALUABLE LIBRARY FOR SALE. Rev. J. Bancroft writes us from Tuskegee, Ala., April 29: "Please call attention to the fact that Bro. Hudson has left a large and valuable library, which Sister Hudson desires to dispose of at reasonable rates to his brethren. She invites correspondence, and orders, addressed either to herself or to me."

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—Mr. Editor: The Rev. J. M. Johnston, presiding elder of Opelousas district, Louisiana Conference, writes me to have you acknowledge the gift of Sister Gerard French mission property. Bro. Fulfleet, of Keachie, La., is the kind donor.

W. L. PRICE, Missionary.

Vicksburg District Conference.

Preachers in the above district will please send me at once the names of the delegates from the stations, circuits and missions who will be in attendance at our District Conference. I would be glad to know whether you will come by public or private conveyance, that arrangements may be made for horses. Delegates who read this notice will be kind enough to drop me a "card" by first mail, and let me know how you will come. Those coming from Vicksburg, and north of there, would do well to take the steamer Natchez, which reaches the city of Natchez Wednesday night. Train leaves Natchez for Fayette at three P. M. By seeing Bro. T. L. Mellen before you take the train you can get half fare tickets over the road. Train leaves Martin at seven A. M., and gets to this place at eight. Mr. Editor, I will expect a "card" from you, saying what day you will be on hand. Yours,

D. C. BRADFORD.

FAYETTE, Miss., April 27, 1881.

Personal and Other.

—Mary Allerton, who came over in the "Mayflower," and afterward married Thomas Cushman, who was a ruling elder of the Church at Plymouth, was born in 1609, in the reign of James I., and died at the age of ninety, in 1699. At the time of her death Ebenezer Cobb, of Plymouth, was five years old, and he died in 1804, and was 107 years, eight months, and six days old at that time. Mr. William Thomas, now living at Plymouth, saw Mr. Cobb in 1799, he being then ten years old. These three lives thus cover a space of 271 years, and go back within six years to England's maiden queen. The first white child born in New England was Peregrine White, and Mr. Cobb saw the procession at his funeral in 1704. Mr. Thomas was born in 1789, and is a graduate of Harvard.

—Among the trustees, thirty-two in number, appointed to supervise the plans for the erection of the new Methodist Episcopal Hospital, in Brooklyn, for which Geo. I. Seney has contributed $200,000 cash, and a $50,000 site, are the following: Judge George D. Reynolds, the Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, W. M. Ingraham, Commissioner John Fretch, Ex-Mayor Booth, James M. Tait, and the Rev. Dr. D. A. Goodsell of Brooklyn; Oliver Hoyt, of Stamford, Conn., and Chancellor Runyon of New Jersey. The site is bounded by seventh and Eighth avenues and Sixth and Seventh streets, one of the choicest in that part of the city.

—Sir Anthony Panizzi, who was knighted by Queen Victoria and received the Cross of the Legion of Honor from the President of the French Republic, and whose monument is said to be the library of the British Museum, was once so discourteous, through the fear that he himself might be deprived of favoritism, as to refuse the use of a private room to Mr. Carlyle, whose organization made it difficult for him to pursue his studies in the general reading-room.

—A number of Roman tumuli have been dug up outside the railway station at Metz. Among them are three skulls; which, according to Prof. Schaffhausen, of Bonn, belonged to three different peoples. One is that of a civilized German, another that of a low German of the tribe of the Frisians, and the third is of Lappish origin. There were thirty-five vessels, four metallic objects, three coins, and two tombstones with inscriptions found. The spot on which all the objects were dug up was, it appears, the chief burial ground of Roman Metz.

—A Neapolitan antiquary has put up an iron railing around Virgil's tomb at Posilippo, near Naples. His first intention was to get school-boys everywhere to contribute pennies toward a superb monument over the bard's grave, but this proposition was promptly opposed by the boys of Naples, on the ground that the Aeneid has caused them so many floggings that they hated its very name, and its author's too.

—President Chadbourne told the Williams Alumni in Cleveland, Ohio, that it has cost him $40,000 to be President of the College, and that he will retire at the end of the present college year, because a $10,000 business has been awaiting him for months, and he thinks he had better take that than $4,000, and leave the place to some younger and better man.

—President Grevy, of France, has a salary of $240,000 per annum. His regular salary is $120,000, to which is added $60,000 for receptions and $60,000 for traveling expenses. As the President is not given to grand balls, and prefers to remain at home, it is estimated, as he has no rent to pay, that he is laying up a snug sum against the next revolution.

—The Jesuits are reported to be negotiating for the Imperial Hotel at Dover, England, which is to be occupied by a number of the sect expelled from France. They have leased Peak House, near Sidmouth, a large, fine place on the road to Budleigh Salterton, in extensive grounds and commanding charming views of the sea.

—James Mackay, the California millionaire, has promised President Chamberlin $50,000 to endow a scholarship at Bowdoin College, and a Philadelphia gentleman has offered the same. Mrs. Valeria G. Stone has added $5,000 toward repairing the foundation for the college building.

—Jewish Millionaires.—New York city has a dozen, and there are a large number whose wealth ranges from $500,000 to $800,000, while at least 100 are worth from $200,000 to $400,000 each, and 10,000 are worth from $20,000 to $50,000 each. They own an immense amount of real estate.

—Prof. C. H. Toy, a former professor in a Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, and the author of the notes on the International Lessons which appeared in the Sunday School Times two years ago, has been called to the professorship of Hebrew in Harvard College.

—Mr. Elisha Gray, the inventor of the telephone, is said to be receiving an enormous revenue from his invention. As he is a remarkably generous man, he finds no difficulty in getting rid of a good deal of it. He is about to give a course of lectures in dynamic electricity at Oberlin.

—John Smithson, founder of the Smithsonian Institution, at Washington, was buried at Genoa, Italy. His tomb having become somewhat decayed, the regents of the Institution have authorized that the necessary repairs be made.

Books and Periodicals.

FROM EXILE TO OVERTHROW; a History of the Jews from the Babylonian Captivity to the Destruction of the Second Temple. By the Rev. John W. Mears, D. D. Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Publication. Price $1 50.

This is a neat little book of 178 pages, with map, illustrations and index. The scope of the work covers a very important and interesting part of Jewish history. It is specially full and graphic in its account of the conquest and overthrow of Jerusalem by Titus. The author displays much research and familiarity with his subject, and has produced a book that is both instructive and interesting.

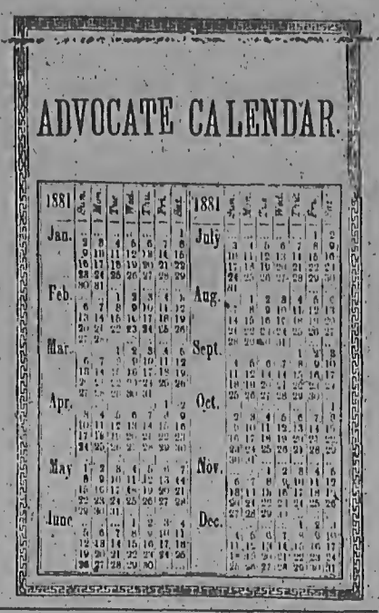
THE SCOTTISH COVENANTERS. By James Taylor, D. D., F. A. S. E. Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co.

We have been able to merely glance at the contents of this volume. The exciting and ever memorable story seems to be well and fairly told. The scenes are vividly portrayed, and the events are narrated with clearness. The book is a small 12 mo in paper covers, and belongs to Cassell's Popular Library. We are disposed to regard the work as one of decided merit, and well worth a careful reading.

—The American Sunday-school Union, Philadelphia, has recently published a very neat pocket atlas of the lands of the Bible. It shows the recent discoveries and explorations, and contains twelve colored maps. Price 25 cents.

—We have received a copy of the proceedings of the trustees of the Peabody Education Fund, at the nineteenth meeting, Washington, February 2, 1881.

—The Contemporary Review, April, 1881, has: 1. The Unity of Nature, Duke of Argyll. 2. The South African Question, the Boers at Home, by J. J. Muskett. 3. On the Management of the Native Tribes by Rev. Brenshy Key; 3. Edgar Quinet, Richard Heath; 4. Some New Philosophical Views, by the Editor; 5. Three Poems; 6. The Arrogance of Modern Skepticism, a Layman's Protest, by Francis Peek; 7. A Study of Carlyle; 8. Prince Bismarck's Scheme of Compulsory Insurance, by Rev. W. H. Buckley; 9. Hebrew Ethics in Evidence of the Date of Hebrew Documents; 10. Turkey and Greece; 11. The Count de Hunover, an Introduction to some Chapters of Secret History; Also, The Black Robe, by Wilkie Collins.



St. Nicholas, May 1881, is up to its usual high standard in the beauty of its illustrations, and the variety and interest of its contents. Among the articles are: Pippa's Ransom; The Bottomless Book Pond; My Great-Grand Mother; The Royal Stag; Mary Queen of Scots; A chapter on Soap-Bubbles; Preston Rogers; The Prince of the Birds; In Nature's Wonder Land; Waifs from the Gulf-Stream; Story of Armoni Artis; Saltillo Boys; Head Dresses of Animals.

The Fortnightly Review, April, 1881, George Munro, Publisher, New York, has: 1. England and Ireland; 2. The Fruits and Seeds; 3. Carlyle's Reminiscences; 4. The Cost of the General Elections of 1880; 5. Indian Balance Sheets; 6. Silicine; 7. The Morality of the Profession of Letters; 8. Political Heads Chiefs, Kings, etc., by Herbert Spencer; 9. Home and Foreign Affairs. Also, the Errors, of Mrs. Alexander.

—The Popular Science Monthly, May, 1881, has: Story of a Salmon; Physical Education; Mineral Springs of Saratoga; Another World Down Here; Origin and Structure of Volcanic Cones; Egypt and School-books; Deep Sea Investigations; Some Pre historic Vessels, Illustrated; Color Blindness; The Eucalyptus in the Campagna; Sketch of Edward D. Cope, with portrait and other articles.

—The Growing World is an excellent monthly, handsomely and profusely illustrated, and devoted to nature, animate and inanimate. The history and characteristics of wild animals are specially related and illustrated. It is conducted by John R. Coryell, New York. Price $1, per annum.

—The American Agriculturist for May, is finely illustrated, and altogether a number of superior merit.

Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

Whereas on sundry boughs and sprays
Now divers birds are heard to sing,
And sundry flowers their heads upraise,
Hail to the return of Spring.

The signs of these said birds rejoice
The memory of our youthful hours,
As green as those said sprays and boughs,
As fresh and sweet as those said flowers.

The bird-stars said, happy pairs,
Love amid their greenest boughs enshrines
In field and nest themselves, their heirs,
Administrators, and assigns.

Oh! busiest bevy of Cupids' court,
Where tender plaintiff-actions bring,
Season old-decreed or sport,
Hail, as aforesaid, coming Spring.

Two ornaments made of plaster of Paris, flavored with sugar, were delivered on a Cornish meeting with the usual warning: "Don't eat them, whatever you do, they will poison you." For some time they were regarded with much curiosity and admiration, by him and his younger brother, and for absolution by their mother missed one. "Tom," said she to the owner, who was just getting ready for school, "what have you done with that ornament I gave it to you?" "Why, mother," replied the young man, "I was so hungry when I came home, I ate it up all by myself."

THE FARM ENGINEER. This is a home paper, published twice a month by M. F. Gravely, 164 Union street, New Orleans. It is an honest effort to put a check to the dishonesty of the manufacturer and merchant, and is designed to give great much useful information. Do not advertising columns the other is made to send a copy free, from now to July 1, to any of our readers, writing such a request. Send and see what it is, it will cost you nothing.

"Young man," says a quaint writer, "if you are to be married, your choice wife is now living, therefore pray for her. And while you are about it, don't forget to pray for her future husband, he needs praying for as much as she does.

The Germania Savings-Bank announces, in another column, that they are ready to receive deposits of one dollar and upwards, and give three per cent. interest per annum. No one should spend the full amount of their income, and this bank offers security for savings and allows a rate of interest that is fair and can be added. The names appended as directors are well known business men of this city, who give this enterprise their careful consideration.

"The head of the family is about to cut an apple. Mother "Sam, father, give us a piece." Daughter "O, mother, give me a piece." Son "O, father, I want a piece." Niece "Won't you please give me a piece, too?" Father disgustedly "Here, the rest of you go take the apple and give me a piece."

"My love for you is like that glowing fire," said Adolphus, as he blinked at the burning anthracite and then at the object of his affections. "What a grate full," she interrupted. And the spark got quite warm trying to think how she spelled the sentence.

In every case where it has been tried Laplace's Indian Tonic Pectoral Balm has given complete satisfaction in the cure of bronchitis, coughs, colds, pulmonary and bronchial affections it has no equal.

"If you marry Grace," exclaimed an irate father to his son, "I will cut you off without a cent, and you won't have so much as a pierced penny to bestow in the pot." "Well," replied the young man, "I crave before meal," and he immediately went in search of a minister.

The doctor's daughter: "I declare, you are a dreadful tomboy. Mrs. McCuzzum: "Indeed, how you think nobody will be saved but you and your minister?" Daughter: "Sweet, my dear, I whistles like my brother, and not like the mechanic."

"Shon," said a Dutchman, "you may say what you please about the neighbors. I have had to worst neighbors ever was. Mine pig eat up his house and his pig eat up mine, and finally we two of them quite house using."

A college student, in replying to his father on account of his many expenses, says: "In charity, Hotty dollars." He failed to get that charity entered as a credit to his account.

Mr. E. Wolfen, 124 Canal street, New Orleans, deals in the leading pianos and organs. He requests you to send for his catalogues and prices before purchasing. Low prices, reliable dealing, and full guarantee are to be had at his old house.

It was an Albany schoolboy who, believing in translations as little as the politics of our country, translated dies Romanus pro by the fact that he was one week sick.

W. C. STEPARD & Co., American China dinner, breakfast and tea set, 100 pieces, for $15. Equal in looks and usefulness to French China.

A little three-year old boy ran to his mother the other day with a bunch of corn silks crying, "Ma dog some hair for papa's bald head."

Business Notices.

For sore lips, from fever, colds and chills, apply Burnett's Kalliston, which at once allays the burning pains and irritation, and heals as by magic.

Faded or Gray Hair gradually recovers its youthful color and lustre by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, an elegant dressing, admired for its purity and rich perfume.

CANVASSERS make from $35 to $50 per week selling goods for E. G. RIDEOUT & CO., 10 Barclay St., New York. Send for Catalogue and terms

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW REVISED EDITION
EVERYBODY'S LAWYER
AND
BOOK OF FORMS.

A complete guide in self-law and business transactions and negotiations
FOR EVERY STATE IN THE UNION
Containing plain and simple instructions for transacting business of every description, and legal forms for drawing all necessary papers in accordance with the laws of the several States regulating the Civil and Commercial Relations of Every-day Life, together with the Constitution of the United States and Amendments, with much useful information concerning the General Government and the various State Governments, the Copyright Law, Post Office Regulations, Patent and Pension Laws, etc., etc., thoroughly revised to date, by
A. G. FEATHER, ESQ., Counsellor at Law.
Strongly bound in cloth, with leather back, containing 702 pages. Mailed post paid on receipt of $2.
LATHROP & WILKINS,
New Orleans.

GERMANIA SAVINGS BANK,
No. 31 CAMP STREET.
Capital, ... $100,000.
This Bank is now ready to receive deposits of ONE DOLLAR and upwards, at 3 per cent. interest per annum; payable semi-annually.
DIRECTORS:
H. ZUBERBIER, J. HASSENGEL,
S. HERNSHEIM, J. E. MERRILL,
FRANK T. HOWARD, EMIL MAYER,
H. ZUBERBIER, President.
J. HASSENGEL, Vice President.
TH. HATRY, Cashier.

WANTED: U. S. LAND WARRANTS CASH paid for old United States Bounty Land Warrants and Land Scrip. G. M. BALLARD, Indianapolis, Indiana.

DR. C. J. BICKHAM,
RESIDENCE AND OFFICE,
220 Jackson St., Bet. Chestnut and Coliseum
NEW ORLEANS.
Office Hours: Eight A. M. and three to four P. M.

DR. EDWARD HARRISON,
112 Canal Street, from 11 to 1 P. M.
NEW ORLEANS.

W. F. MELLEN,
Attorney at Law,
12 CARONDELET ST.,
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

You are Welcome to it
Without money and without price.
THE FARM ENGINEER,
A semi-monthly journal, full of valuable, useful and interesting information for the farmer, planter and mechanic, will be sent to any address until the first of July next
Free of Charge.
F. P. GRAVELY,
164 Union Street, New Orleans.
Send your address to-day immediately, either by postal card or letter, saying that you saw this in the ADVOCATE.

OGDEN & BAYNE,
DEALERS IN
BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,
AND AGENTS FOR THE
Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,
AND
Shultz Belting Company,
18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

FOR SALE.
A desirable residence in Pecan Springs, Miss. For particulars apply to or address the subscriber, at that point.
A. P. RAMSEY.

Indian Turnip
COMPOUND
PECTORAL BALM.
For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle $1. Prepared and for sale by H. LAPLACE, Druggist, 55 and 57 Elysian Fields street. And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

1000 AGENTS WANTED!
One man in his own neighborhood in Miss., Ark. and Louisiana, to sell
Dr. Dutton's Vegetable Discovery.
Has sold twelve to twenty gallons in a day. It is the best BLOOD AND LIVER Medicine we ever sold. Write for terms. It will pay you.
J. L. FITRELL, General Agent
Jonesboro, Miss.

OUR BROTHER IN BLACK;
HIS FREEDOM AND HIS FUTURE.
By
ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD, D. D.,
President of Emory College, Oxford, Ga.
Nashville: Southern Methodist Publishing House.
New York: Phillips & Hunt.
1881.
Will be issued and ready for delivery May 1
12 mo. Price $1.
Send to the address, post paid, an order for a copy of the work. Address the publishing agent of the nearest.

BEE CULTURE.

MANUAL OF THE APIARY.
By A. J. COOK,
Professor of Entomology in the Michigan State Agricultural College.
THIRD EDITION.
Revised, enlarged, mostly rewritten, and beautifully illustrated. Being now it is fully up with the times on every conceivable subject that interests the apiarist.
It is not only instructive but intensely interesting. This work is a masterly production, and one that no bee keeper, however limited his means, can afford to do without. It is printed in the best style on fine book paper. Price, bound in cloth, $1 25 post paid. Address, LATHROP & WILKINS,
12 Camp Street.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Styles, 10c. Agents want'd. L. JONES & Co., Nassau, N. Y.

Agricultural.

We can fully repeat the observations of last month, the warm season is approaching, when many crops cease growing. Fresh sowings of young crops from the second or third sowing will continue to grow wherever moisture is supplied. Irrigation and good cultivation is the whole secret in successful culture in dry, warm climates. Sweet potato sprouts, for a late crop, should be planted. Cabbage plants, prepared in every variety of cooking, are a grateful dish on our table three times a day.

Plant snapshort and pole beans for a succession; sow late cabbage for winter heading; also cauliflower and brocoli; sow perpignan lettuce. It is the only variety that will now stand the heat without shooting to seed. Sow yellow summer and white summer radish. Melons, cucumbers, and squashes may still be planted for a succession. Look out for weeds, as they will now rapidly overgrow your crops.

Corn, for late roasting ears, should be planted in the early part, and also the last of this month. The old-fashioned New England sugar and stowell's evergreen are the best.

THE FARMER'S HORSE.—According to the Live Stock Journal, writers frequently advise farmers to raise only one kind of horse, either fast or slow, heavy built, or light built, and so on; but these writers and many others seem to forget, that, strictly speaking, there is no such thing as a single variety of the horse which is the best, under all circumstances, for a farmer to raise even for his own use. The average farmer of any progressive community has a variety of services to be performed by his horses—some slow, steady heavy work, which even oxen would not be unsuited to, and other fast work, for which the animal can scarcely possess too much speed or spirit. No single animal could do both classes of work, pleasantly or with entire satisfaction. Besides, the farmer is accountable for the general good feed, and the kindness of the family; he admits of various degrees of speed, the heavy kinds of wholesale teamsters, carters, manufacturers, brewers, distillers, express companies, etc., are the slowest with a very few of the finest animal, weighing from 1,200 to 1,500 pounds, whose only fault is speed.

The fast family companions, light express horses, and many other kinds of service, of a medium sized animal, weighing from 900 to 1,200, with moderate speed, is more than either style of horse. Between the coach-horse, carriage, and saddle horse, of medium size, in which style, speed and pace are more considered than price. And still again, comes the back horse, chiefly for wheres, combining the purity of value. Each of these is the "farmer's horse," inasmuch as the farmer raises the animal, uses them on his farm, and sells them as the product of his legitimate industry. At present the market is mostly supplied with the draft horse, the roadster, the carriage horse, or the trotter, while there is an over supply of the medium, and descriptive horses of all work, too many of which are well described as "culls, fire-brands." If, however, the farmer must select a single variety to perform as best he may, whatever service may be demanded by his own occupation, as well as to sell on the general market, we are well convinced that the 1,200 horse, with a dash of blood, with good sense and good temper, will come nearer satisfying his wants than either of the others. But it is just as idle to talk about the best horse for the farmer, as it is of the best cow for the farmer. Everything depends upon the use to be made of it, and no single sort is adapted equally well to every purpose.—Mobile Register.

HEDGE PLANTS FOR THE SOUTHERN STATES.—Several correspondents in the Southern States have asked which are the plants best suited for hedges in their climate. We would suggest to these that there is a more important question than the kind of plant—do they want a hedge at all? There is so much to be said on both sides of the hedge question, that we do not propose to discuss it now. Whatever the kind of live fence it requires, in order to keep it in serviceable condition, more or less yearly care. Hedges differ in the amount of attention they demand, but all must have some, and the ability to give this must be taken into the account, in deciding whether or not to establish a hedge. We assume that our correspondents refer to hedges as barriers to turn stock, and not to those for ornament. When a mere screen is required, or it is desirable to separate the lawn or ornamental grounds from the kitchen garden and the like, ability to turn animals is not looked for; a hedge to such a place should be evergreen, that it may appear at its best all the year round. There are many shrubs and trees which may be employed for such a hedge—kinds of hardy in the Northern States. The European laurels, Japan Euonymus, Cape Jessamine, Laurustinus, Pittosporum, and others, known with us only as greenhouse shrubs, will make hedges beautiful for flowers as well as for foliage. But to make a thorny barrier the number of plants is much less. The two most useful plants in the Northern States, Osage Orange and Honey Locust, will answer in Southern localities also, but are open to the objection that they are not evergreen, and of too vigorous growth. The late Mr. Affleck, of Texas, who gave much attention to the subject, regarded the Osage Orange as inferior to several other plants for southern localities, and his objections to that the most of race it must have would apply with more force to the Honey Locust. One of his favorite hedge plants was the Evergreen or Pyracantha Thorn, Cratægus Pyracantha, from the south of Europe. This has fine dark, persistent foliage, and abundant white blossoms succeeded by a profusion of red haws. As it is naturally a bush, it does not require severe cutting to form and keep it as a hedge. It is not scarcely hardy north of Virginia, but its white-berried variety is said to be much more hardy, and endure the winters of New York State. That which was preferred by Mr. Affleck to all others as a general hedge plant, is the Cherokee Rose Rosa Sinica. This is of Asiatic origin, though long supposed to be a native. It makes shoots twenty to forty feet long, which are very thorny and clothed with shinning evergreen leaves, and bearing large, single, pure white flowers. This is not cut back to form a hedge, but the long shoots are heaped up and form an impenetrable barrier. Upon rich soil this rose is too rampant, and Mr. Affleck, in such cases, preferred the Macartney Rose, another foreign species. We know that the Pyracanth Thorn is offered at the nurseries, and suppose that the Roses may be had also. The Thorn is propagated by cuttings and from seeds, while the Roses are almost wholly raised from cuttings. Being very hard-wooded species, they strike root slowly, hence they are set in beds in the open air, in autumn, and are allowed to grow two years before planting out.—American Agriculturist.

BE SURE TO PLANT GOOD SEED.—Now that the season has arrived for planting most kinds of field and garden crops over a large portion of the country, it is in order to attend to the matter of seeds—their quality and purity. The injunction to "plant good seed" is a somewhat hackneyed one we are aware, but it is very important at this juncture, and should be heeded by all engaged in field or garden husbandry. Indeed, the planting of good, pure seed, is a prime factor in the profitable production of almost every crop, for upon it often depends a proper remuneration for the season's labors. Few, we fear, realize the fact that the seed exerts, in most instances, a controlling influence upon both the quality and quantity of the crops produced. Although many farmers understand this and exercise proper care in the matter, it is notoriously true that a larger number are altogether indifferent or pay too little attention to the quality of the seed they plant. Many a man takes great pains to enrich and prepare his soil for a bountiful yield, and then "misses it" by neglecting to secure good seed, so that frequently, instead of proving profitable, the crop grown is not worth the labor bestowed upon its cultivation.

The purity of seed, especially of grains, is of vital importance to all who wish to grow good crops and obtain the highest prices for their produce. No farmer worthy of the name should sow a bushel of grain unless it is sound, of one variety, and free from any mixture. By using good seed, of undoubted purity, the crop will be uniform in ripening—not one part ripe while the other is green, and right for harvesting. But the most forcible and convincing reason why only strictly pure seed should be planted, and the one which touches the purse, is that the product will usually command a much better price than can be obtained for mixed grain. This is no mere gossamer work, but emphatically so, especially in regard to the cereals. Such buyers are usually good judges and will not pay as much for a mixed as for a uniform article of wheat or corn, for instance. A bushel of corn is neither more nor less than a bushel of any other kind known, variety the shrewd buyer will pay as much for it as if it were pure and unmixed. And the same is true of most grains, and many vegetables, as purchasers distinguish by appearance.

The question of pure seed as one which no farmer or gardener can afford to neglect, for so long as effect follows cause so long will it be impossible to obtain first-class crops of either grain or vegetables from inferior seed. For, as a rule, it is as true in the vegetable as in the animal kingdom that like produces like. Every one, therefore, should see that only the best seed is planted on his farm or in his garden. No matter about a little extra cost—get the best—for inferior seed is generally expensive, even if obtained for nothing. Plant good seed, on well prepared soil, giving proper after culture or management according to the crop, and you will be entitled to a commensurate reward for your attention and labor. But to start right, heed the heading of this article—be sure to plant good seed.—Christian at Work.

STRAWBERRY CROPS.—A writer in the Fruit Recorder says: "I have used rock salt, both fresh and refuse, coarse and fine, before and after plowing, for strawberries in spring, and have also applied it in autumn; but with only partial success, although I apply twelve to fifteen bushels to the acre. Many grubs fail up and quit business, but usually enough are left to carry out the contract to destroy one-half to three-fourths of the first setting of strawberry plants and take a grub (or grub) mortgage on the next. It is well to apply salt freely, but something more is needed to protect strawberry plants. If strawberry growers would experiment carefully, and not jump at conclusions, some poison like Paris green or London purple, in water, for dipping the roots of plants before setting, might be found to be effectual; or, better, some substance invigorating to the plants and offensive to the grubs may be discovered. I have heard the statement that grubs would not touch roots of strawberry plants that were dipped in wood ashes and water mixed—about one pint to a pailful—and that plants were not at all injured by the liquid. I would recommend careful trial of it and accurate report by strawberry growers. Possibly soot may be as good or better, as it is specially obnoxious to worms and bugs."

GREEN PEAS.—To raise green peas in perfection, requires good garden land; a dry, sandy loam will bring them earliest; but, in time of drought, the quality of the crop upon such land will be very inferior; still, since earliness is very desirable, it usually pays to risk a small piece of early peas upon poor, sandy soil, and to depend upon better land for the later crop. Peas, being perfectly hardy, may be sowed as soon as the land will work mellow; sometimes this can be done in March. The manure for peas is usually spread along the furrow from the cart and covered lightly with the hoe before sowing the seed, which is then covered with a rake or hoe, about half an inch deep. The manure should be as fine as it is possible to get it. The champion of England, is also a champion of America, as a late pea for the private garden. It is the sweetest and best of all; but it makes long vines, and does best when staked with brush, which, of course, cannot be done on a large scale profitably.—N. E. Farmer.

HOW A WHIP FRIGHTENED HORSE.—Never whip your horse for becoming frightened at any object by the roadside, for if he sees a stump, a log, or a heap of tan bark in the road, and while he is eyeing it carefully, and about to pass it, you strike him with the whip, it is the log, or the stump, or the tan bark that is hurting him in his way of reasoning, and the next time he will be more frightened. Give him time to examine and smell all of these objects, and use the bridle to assist you in bringing him carefully to those objects of fear.

The best deodorizer in stables is ground plaster. It may be sprinkled about the stalls and over the manure heap daily. It will absorb the ammoniacal odors and retain them, thus increasing the value of the manure.

GEESE.—Clover is the best forage for geese, and one acre is sufficient for fifty birds. Young ducks and geese until three weeks old should be fed on bread soaked in cold water. That made from coarse flour is best.

Among the English farmers it is the custom to charge one-half of the cost of the feed to the animals that are being fed, and the other half to the manure.

Household.

PURE WATER.—Prof. Chandler, writing to the Boston Journal of Chemistry, on the subject of the preservation of eggs has attracted a great deal of attention, and many methods of effecting it have been published, though none are altogether perfect, for the simple reason that the temperature of the spoiling of the egg is either unknown by those who have attempted to furnish us with direction, or has been lost sight of by them. There are two efficient causes for the spoiling of eggs, and unless one or both of these are avoided, we cannot hope for success. The first is exposure to a high temperature, and the other is access of air. It may be safely affirmed that, at a temperature below thirty-two degrees, nearly all change ceases in organic bodies, while very few organic substances will bear continual exposure to a temperature above ninety degrees. The freezing point is rather too low for the preservation of eggs in good condition, as freezing affects the flavor, unfavorably; but if we desire to preserve eggs in the best manner, we must keep them cool—say at a temperature below fifty degrees, if possible, a temperature which is frequently maintained in good cellars. But it will be of no use to place the eggs in a cool cellar if they have been previously exposed for hours to a temperature of over ninety degrees.

The collection of eggs must, therefore, in the first place, engage our attention. Those who raise poultry, and especially those who keep fowls for the sake of their eggs, commit a great error when they fail to remove from the yards those birds that are inclined to set, and which, consequently take every opportunity of warming the eggs in the nests. If any one will attempt to preserve eggs that have been subjected to the hatching process for one or two days, he will discover the force of this statement.

Kohler, of Germany, an extensive poultry raiser, who preserves thousands of eggs without scarcely ever loosing one, has given the following rules for securing favorable results:

1. The nest must be put in a cool position.

2. The fowls that show a tendency to set, must be removed at once, and placed in separate inclosures, until this propensity has left them.

3. If many hens be confined in the same inclosure, or use the same nests for laying their eggs, the eggs ought to be removed from the nest several times a day.

4. The eggs ought to be assorted according to age, and preserved in boxes with the covers partially open. These boxes must be kept in a cool, airy and perfectly dry place.

5. At the commencement of winter, the store of eggs is placed in some room that is not heated by fire, but that is, at the same time, thoroughly protected from frost.

6. The packages are so arranged that the oldest may be used at first.

Eggs treated according to these rules do not acquire the peculiar taste which is generally the result of the receipts in vogue for preserving eggs.—Mobile Register.

WHITE BED SPREADS.—An excellent way of making a bed spread out of white materials, which is very handsome and durable, is as follows: Take five yards and a half of unbleached cotton cloth, ratherfine. The forty-inch cloth makes it right in width, and as it should be just square, the length of the spread is determined by the width of the cloth. Sew two breadths together, with an over-and-over seam; and rub the seam down flat. Sketch some pretty pattern, like a bouquet of lilies for the centre, and a vine of lilies or grapes, for the border; a black lead drawing pencil answers every purpose to outline the design, as it will not rub off, and when the work is done it can be easily washed out. Colored crayon lines rub off too easily to serve the purpose. Next procure the same measurement of very thin cloth, and tack on the quilting frames as you would a quilt, then spread the outside on with the pattern lying up. Baste it firmly to the lining on the edges. Neither outside nor lining must be wet, as the work is much more rapid and easier to do before shrinking. Run with a fine stitch on the upper side, all around the pattern drawn. For the stems and vines, two runs must be taken, a little less than a quarter of an inch apart. It is very quick, easy work to do. When the pattern is all finished, take it off the frames, and have ready a pound of cotton batting and a ball of smooth wicking. Turn the spread, the thin side up, you can let it lie upon your lap, and take a tape needle, and thread it with your wicking; draw it through the thin cloth, and fill up the stems and vines with the wicking; cut it off at the ends close and square, and with a needle close the apertures over the ends. As the woof of the cloth is not broken, the apertures close up firm. For the leaves, lilies or grapes, make an opening in the cloth, and tack in the wadding, so as to have it even. It takes little time, and looks beautifully. Finish up the edge of the spread by hemming the outside over the lining. No fear but that the quilt will be satisfactory, as it is really a very nice affair, and makes a nice bed linen.

The best material for cleaning coat-collars and grease spots of all kinds is pure benzine. The article is sold at the principal drug stores in cities. That used by painters is not pure enough, and has a very unpleasant odor, which the pure article has not, and the little which it has, soon disappears. If this cannot be obtained, strong alcohol ninety-five per cent. will do as well. A mixture of equal parts of strong alcohol and water of ammonia is also used. The trouble with all these liquids is that not enough is used; a small quantity only softens and spreads the grease spot; they should be applied in sufficient quantity and repeated, to not only dissolve the foreign matter, but to wash it out.

CRANBERRY ROLLS.—Stew one quart of cranberries in sufficient water to keep them from browning. Make very sweet, strong and cool. Make a nice paste, and, when the cranberries are cool, spread them on the paste about an inch thick. Roll it, tie close in a linen cloth, boil two hours and serve with sweet sauce.

GENUINE BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—Sift together three teacupsful of Indian meal; two of rye meal, not flour; one of wheat flour; a teacupful of syrup or molasses; a teaspoonful of salt; mix with one quart of sweet milk, in which one tablespoonful of soda has been dissolved. Bake four hours in a moderate oven in a covered pan.

A teaspoonful or more of powdered borax thrown into the bath-tub while bathing will communicate a velvety softness to the water, and at the same time invigorate and rest the bather. Persons troubled with nervousness or wakeful nights will find this kind of a bath a great benefit.

Scientific.

ELECTRIC LIGHTING.—Mr. Edison, writing to the Boston Journal of Chemistry, on the subject of the preservation of eggs has attracted a great deal of attention, and many methods of effecting it have been published, though none are altogether perfect, for the simple reason that the temperature of the spoiling of the egg is either unknown by those who have attempted to furnish us with direction, or has been lost sight of by them. There are two efficient causes for the spoiling of eggs, and unless one or both of these are avoided, we cannot hope for success. The first is exposure to a high temperature, and the other is access of air. It may be safely affirmed that, at a temperature below thirty-two degrees, nearly all change ceases in organic bodies, while very few organic substances will bear continual exposure to a temperature above ninety degrees. The freezing point is rather too low for the preservation of eggs in good condition, as freezing affects the flavor, unfavorably; but if we desire to preserve eggs in the best manner, we must keep them cool—say at a temperature below fifty degrees, if possible, a temperature which is frequently maintained in good cellars. But it will be of no use to place the eggs in a cool cellar if they have been previously exposed for hours to a temperature of over ninety degrees.

The collection of eggs must, therefore, in the first place, engage our attention. Those who raise poultry, and especially those who keep fowls for the sake of their eggs, commit a great error when they fail to remove from the yards those birds that are inclined to set, and which, consequently take every opportunity of warming the eggs in the nests. If any one will attempt to preserve eggs that have been subjected to the hatching process for one or two days, he will discover the force of this statement.

Kohler, of Germany, an extensive poultry raiser, who preserves thousands of eggs without scarcely ever loosing one, has given the following rules for securing favorable results:

1. The nest must be put in a cool position.

2. The fowls that show a tendency to set, must be removed at once, and placed in separate inclosures, until this propensity has left them.

3. If many hens be confined in the same inclosure, or use the same nests for laying their eggs, the eggs ought to be removed from the nest several times a day.

4. The eggs ought to be assorted according to age, and preserved in boxes with the covers partially open. These boxes must be kept in a cool, airy and perfectly dry place.

5. At the commencement of winter, the store of eggs is placed in some room that is not heated by fire, but that is, at the same time, thoroughly protected from frost.

6. The packages are so arranged that the oldest may be used at first.

Eggs treated according to these rules do not acquire the peculiar taste which is generally the result of the receipts in vogue for, preserving eggs.—Mobile Register.

WHITE BED SPREADS.—An excellent way of making a bed spread out of white materials, which is very handsome and durable, is as follows: Take five yards and a half of unbleached cotton cloth, ratherfine. The forty-inch cloth makes it right in width, and as it should be just square, the length of the spread is determined by the width of the cloth. Sew two breadths together, with an over-and-over seam; and rub the seam down flat. Sketch some pretty pattern, like a bouquet of lilies for the centre, and a vine of lilies or grapes, for the border; a black lead drawing pencil answers every purpose to outline the design, as it will not rub off, and when the work is done it can be easily washed out. Colored crayon lines rub off too easily to serve the purpose. Next procure the same measurement of very thin cloth, and tack on the quilting frames as you would a quilt, then spread the outside on with the pattern lying up. Baste it firmly to the lining on the edges. Neither outside nor lining must be wet, as the work is much more rapid and easier to do before shrinking. Run with a fine stitch on the upper side, all around the pattern drawn. For the stems and vines, two runs must be taken, a little less than a quarter of an inch apart. It is very quick, easy work to do. When the pattern is all finished, take it off the frames, and have ready a pound of cotton batting and a ball of smooth wicking. Turn the spread, the thin side up, you can let it lie upon your lap, and take a tape needle, and thread it with your wicking; draw it through the thin cloth, and fill up the stems and vines with the wicking; cut it off at the ends close and square, and with a needle close the apertures over the ends. As the woof of the cloth is not broken, the apertures close up firm. For the leaves, lilies or grapes, make an opening in the cloth, and tack in the wadding, so as to have it even. It takes little time, and looks beautifully. Finish up the edge of the spread by hemming the outside over the lining. No fear but that the quilt will be satisfactory, as it is really a very nice affair, and makes a nice bed linen.

The best material for cleaning coat-collars and grease spots of all kinds is pure benzine. The article is sold at the principal drug stores in cities. That used by painters is not pure enough, and has a very unpleasant odor, which the pure article has not, and the little which it has, soon disappears. If this cannot be obtained, strong alcohol ninety-five per cent. will do as well. A mixture of equal parts of strong alcohol and water of ammonia is also used. The trouble with all these liquids is that not enough is used; a small quantity only softens and spreads the grease spot; they should be applied in sufficient quantity and repeated, to not only dissolve the foreign matter, but to wash it out.

CRANBERRY ROLLS.—Stew one quart of cranberries in sufficient water to keep them from browning. Make very sweet, strong and cool. Make a nice paste, and, when the cranberries are cool, spread them on the paste about an inch thick. Roll it, tie close in a linen cloth, boil two hours and serve with sweet sauce.

GENUINE BOSTON BROWN BREAD.—Sift together three teacupsful of Indian meal; two of rye meal, not flour; one of wheat flour; a teacupful of syrup or molasses; a teaspoonful of salt; mix with one quart of sweet milk, in which one tablespoonful of soda has been dissolved. Bake four hours in a moderate oven in a covered pan.

A teaspoonful or more of powdered borax thrown into the bath-tub while bathing will communicate a velvety softness to the water, and at the same time invigorate and rest the bather. Persons troubled with nervousness or wakeful nights will find this kind of a bath a great benefit.

superable obstacle existed to complete success, in the liability of sudden extinguishment. To illustrate, if the dynamo electric machine ceased to rotate, and this machine is the only mode now used to generate electricity for illuminating purposes, if a belt slips, or a valve ceases to act in these machines during the hours in which lights are to be maintained, the incandescent carbons turn to blackness, and night instantly succeeds the brightness of artificial day. The case was entirely different with gas, a reservoir of this illuminant was constantly on hand that could be drawn upon at will. But the matter of storing electricity, looking at it in the light of our present scientific knowledge, seemed to be a problem environed by difficulties impossible to be overcome. It is easy, says one to hold back gas, but electricity is a wild bull not to be kept in stall or pasture by any device at present known to science. This difficulty has, however, been successfully met; a gentleman of France, Mr. Planto, found that by interposing a battery, consisting essentially of two plates of lead between the electrical generator and the lights, that one of the plates becomes powerfully oxidized on the surface and at the same time charged with electricity; if it is then detached from the battery, it is in a condition to give out at any future time a current of electricity of its own. When the charge is expended the plates are like an empty gasometer in just the condition they were before receiving the charge, and ready to be filled again. The leaden plates have been charged in the morning and the following night the electricity utilized for all purposes for which it can be employed, thus showing that this force can be held in readiness for future use at will. We believe that this is the key if this statement prove true, that unlocks the door to an apartment of vast extent. This discovery, when perfected, may be found to remove one of the greatest obstacles to electric lighting and is a discovery therefore, calculated to inspire hopes of ultimate success.—Northern Christian Advocate.

WHY THE NEEDLE POINTS TO THE NORTH.—Why the magnetic needle points to the north is thus explained by Prof. C. T. Patterson, of the United States coast survey: "The earth is itself a magnet, and attracts the needle just as ordinary magnets do, and it is found to be affected by the action of the sun in a manner not yet fully understood. The magnetic poles of the earth are not in line with geographical poles, but make an angle with them of nearly twenty-three degrees. At the present time the northern magnetic pole is near the arctic circle, on the meridian of Omaha, and, from the nature of the case, the polemay be better described as a region rather than a fixed point. The needle does not always point to the true astronomical North, but varies within certain limits. At San Francisco it points seventeen degrees east of North, and at Calais, Me., as much to the West. At the northern magnetic pole a balanced needle points with its north end downward in a plumb line; at San Francisco it dips about sixty-three degrees, and at the southern magnetic pole the South end points directly down. The action of the earth upon a magnetic needle at its surface is of about the same force as that of a hard steel magnet forty inches long, strongly magnetized, at a distance of one foot. It is very probable that a study of dynamo-electric machines, now so much used in electric illumination, will soon reveal some far-reaching truths regarding magnetism in general." This will do for a hypothesis; of the new and plausible theory that magnetism is in the atmosphere and does not inhere in the earth, Prof. Patterson says nothing.—Christian at Work.

ADVANCE IN PHOTOGRAPHY.—Mr. E. Anthony, in the January number of Anthony's Photographic Bulletin, writes of the prospects of the art of photography as follows: The advances now in progress and impending are as extraordinary as anything in the past.

The gelatine dry plate is rapidly being adopted by all progressive photographers, and will soon take the place of collodion plates everywhere.

Instantaneous printing by gas or lamp light is already being done.

Instantaneous negatives by gaslight we already hear murmurings of, and shall probably see in the near future.

We look confidently forward to the time when evening meetings will be photographed instantaneously by gaslight, and we think it not too much to say that thrilling scenes on the stage will be instantaneously photographed, and prints be ready for delivery to the audience before the play is ended.

M. Daubree recently read a paper before the French Academy of Sciences on the contemporaneous production of native sulphur in the subsoil of Paris. This sulphur, which occurs abundantly in some parts of the city, is due to the simultaneous presence of the sulphate of lime of plaster-rubbish and organic debris, with which the ancient meat of the center of the city was filled up two hundred years ago.

Some fresh-water mollusks can endure a long time without water. This is shown by the reappearance and activity of the creatures after the tall rains in ponds and ditches that have been dried up during the summer months. A correspondent of Science Gossip tells of some specimens of Limnæ Stagnalis, that had been kept perfectly dry for more than two months, which swelled out and became of a healthy appearance as well as before on being put into a pan of water.

Mr. Chance, of the Geological Survey of Pennsylvania, has called attention to a remarkable parallelism between the stratification of the millstone grit (the carboniferous formation immediately underlaying the coal beds in Pennsylvania and England. Seven series of strata, almost identical in character, succeed each other in the same order in both countries.

A NEW STEAM BOILER.—A new form of steam boiler, invented by Mons. Bernard, has been tested on a French vessel with such satisfactory results that the naval authorities in France have directed a careful examination of it, with a view to its adoption for war steamers. It is shaped like a gasometer-receiver, and its chief advantage over other boilers is said to be superior economy in the consumption of fuel.

THE TELEPHONE.—By means of an improved telephone, the Adelaide, Australia, post office chimes have been clearly heard at a distance of two hundred and forty miles. It is said that a stenographer sat at a telephone, seventy-eight miles from Elmira, and took down the sermon of Thomas K. Beecher who was preaching in his own pulpit at Elmira.

EDUCATIONAL.

WANTED A SITUATION FOR AN EXperience member of faculty of Vanderbilt University. Address, JOHN HUGHES, Jackson, Miss.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE,

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Owned, controlled and managed by the Louisiana Annual Conference.

Course of study equal to any college in the South. Its roll of pupils has nearly doubled in three months, and still they come. Noted for healthfulness of locality. All nationalities.

Total expense for Spring term, commencing February 14, 1881, only $75—in literary and classical course. Music $30. No extras. Let Louisianians build up their own schools.

A specimen copy of College News free on application. Address REV. J. LANE ROBERTS, President.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garlend, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. W. Kneringer, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200, paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is an additional.

Spring session begins February 1, 1881. A discount of twenty per cent. to Methodist preachers, and Publishing House bonds taken from them at par.

Send for catalogue to

REV. E. E. HOSS, President.

HAMBURG ARK. HIGH SCHOOL,

Thirty-Miles North of Bastrop, La.

This institution, for both sexes, now in its fourth year, has 6 months' out terms. Its buildings for recitation, are pleasant, and its charges are moderate. A thorough English course is taught. Particular attention paid to the morals of pupils. Healthfulness of locality unsurpassed. Pupils from a distance boarded with the principal. Entire expense for ten months, $145. For catalogues address the principal,

J. S. RAYMOND,

Washington, Adams county, Miss.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.,

Will begin its forty first session October 1, 1881. Great attention paid to the regular course. Teachers in the Music and Art departments selected with reference to special fitness. Charges moderate.

For further information address

H. M. MOSS, A. M., President.

HOMER MALE COLLEGE

THE TWENTY-FIRST SESSION

will begin the

FIRST OF SEPTEMBER 1880.

Address B. A. SMITH,

President.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Crescent Insurance Co.,

67 & 69 Camp Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

ORGANIZED 1839.—REORGANIZED 1880.

Cash Capital $100,000.

SOLICITS

FIRE, RIVER AND MARINE RISKS.

W. R. LYMAN.....President.

S. B. NEWMAN.....Vice President.

CHAS. E. RICE.....Secretary.

My New Illust'd 4 Page List describing over 100 Gold and Silver Waltham Watches sent for a 3c stamp. It tells how I send watches to all parts of U.S. to be examined before paying any money. Unlouded reference. N. H. White, Jeweler, Newark, N. J.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHERS,

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

In the Southwest is now in stock and ready to fill all orders large or small at Publishers' prices at

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at about same rates and prices quoted as below, if they can be had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application.

A full line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER.

SLATED CLOTH.

LIQUID SLATING.

BLACKBOARDS.

BLACKBOARD RUBBERS.

CHALK CRAYONS.

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS.

NUMERICAL FRAMES.

SCHOOL SATCHELS.

BOOK STRAPS.

WRITING PAPER.

DRAWING PAPER.

BLOTTING PAPER.

WRITING BOOKS.

COMPOSITION BOOKS.

SLATES AND PENCILS.

INK. INK STANDS. PENS.

PENHOLDERS, CALL BELLS.

Kindergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

Send for anything you want or address for prices,

LATHROP & WILKINS,

New Orleans

To addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors, members and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

Southwestern Agency for

Readers' and Writers' Economy Co.

LATHROP & WILKINS,

New Orleans

"FOR ORGANISTS!"

ORGAN GEMS. ($2 50.) By F. L. RAVENFORE.

ORGAN SELECTIONS ($1 50.) By PETERS.

BATISTE'S ORGAN VOLUNTARIES.—$2 50

BATISTE'S LAST COMPOSITIONS. $2 50

ORGANIST'S RELIANCE. 2 vols. Nos. 1 each $1 25. Complete $3.) By EUGENE THAYER.

ZUNDEL'S ORIGINAL ORGAN COMPOSITIONS. $1 25.

In these six well-made books will be found a very large number of voluntaries, some classical, some new and light, but all good. Organists will be glad to use the larger ones to-day, and to adopt the shorter compositions as the urgency may vary.

Bliss' Taylor, price reduced to 50 cents.

Olivette, price reduced to 50 cents.

Johnson's New Method for Harmony.

($1.) By A. N. JOHNSON. "The best book in the world" (for its object,) was the commendation bestowed by an enthusiastic pupil on a former book by the same author. However that may be, this is his newest treatise, and can hardly be excelled for plainness of explanation, ease and thoroughness. It does not attempt Counterpoint, or any of the higher problems of composition; but confines itself to those that every organist, every good player, and every composer of "the peoples music," ought to know.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston

C. H. DITSON & CO.,

843 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Christian Advocate.

Mrs. Carlyle.

When Carlyle's mood was stormiest, [illegible] the lion was fed us by a little child. She sat a gentle invalid on the sofa, and in the end, whatever has been the outburst of indignation, justice was sure to be done, and the mitigation sure to be remembered. I can hear her voice now—"But, Mr. Carlyle, you remember he did act very nobly toward that poor man," etc., followed from the just now Rhadamanthus with, "Ah, yes; he had, after all, a vein of good feeling in him;" and then came the neatest summing up of virtues concerning some parsonage whose fragments we had despaired of ever picking up. Mrs. Carlyle had a true poetic nature, and an almost infallible insight. In the conversation which went on in the old drawing-room at Chelsea there was no suggestion of things secret or reserved; people with sensitive toes had no careful provision made for them, and had best keep away; free, frank, and simple speech and intercourse were the unwritten but ever-present law. Mrs. Carlyle's wit and humor were overflowing, and she told anecdotes about her husband under which he sat with a patient look of repudiation until the loud laugh broke out and led the chorus. Now it was when she described his work on Frederick as one of those botanical growths which every now and then come to a knot, which being slowly passed, it grows on to another knot. "What Mr. Carlyle is when one of those knots is reached, must be left to vivid imaginations." Again it was a translating book, who served up daily some mess described by Carlyle as "Stygian," with "diarrhœa" for a variant. She being dismissed, another applicant comes. "Carlyle having, you are aware, deep intuitive insight into human character, goes down to speak to the new woman, and returns to announce that a most worthy and honest person. The woman next comes to me, and a more accomplished Stygian lump my eyes never looked on. The great orange creature comes close, eyes me from head to foot, and finishes by telling me, 'When people dies, I can lay out most perfect.'" "Surely" was not retained, though I had no doubt whatever of her ability to lay any of us out perfect." One evening the talk fell on the Brownings. Carlyle had given us the most attractive picture of Robert Browning in his youth. "He had simple speech and manners, and ideas of his own; and I recall a very pleasing talk with him during a walk somewhere about Croydon, to the top of a hill. Miss Barrett sent me some of her first verses, in manuscript, and I wrote back that I thought she could be better than write verses. But then she was again saying: 'What else can I do? Here am I chained to my sofa by useless,' I wrote then, taking back all I had said. Her father was a physician of the old school, a harsh impracticable man, as I have heard, his lightest word standing out like laws of the Medes and Persians. One day she read some verses Browning had written about her. 'Oh no,' interrupts Mrs. Carlyle, 'she wrote something about Browning.' 'Ah, well,' continues Carlyle, 'you shall give the revised and corrected edition presently.' As I was saying, she wrote something about him, comparing him to some fruit.' 'Oh, Mr. Carlyle!' exclaims Mrs. Carlyle, 'she compared him,' continues Carlyle, 'to a nectarine.' 'That's too loud,' says Mrs. Carlyle; 'she compare the poetry to a pomegranate it was suggested by the title of his poems, Bells and Pomegranates.'"

And so Browning came to be known with [illegible] as a loud humanity.

"I stand corrected," says Carlyle, "and the verses are very sweet nevertheless," and he then proceeded to spoil the pleasant romance on which he set out with a subtle appreciation and sympathetic admiration which made it sweeter than the tales of the Sleeping Beauty. M. D. Conway, in Harper's Magazine for May.

The Rev. Richard Watson.

The crowning excellence of Mr. Watson's character was its piety. It was this that gave him early inspiration of his talents, and gave a supernatural zeal and energy to his mind. There was nothing visionary and mystical in his piety. It was thoroughly scriptural and practical. He cherished deep and impressive views of the glory of God, the purity and spirituality of the moral law, and of the holiness and justice of God; and from merely abstract conceptions of the divine nature he never derived hope. It was the appointment for sin in the death of Christ that all his confidence rested; because he saw that this sacrifice is one of the most prominent truths in the Bible, and reconciles the exercise of mercy to sinners with the strictest regard to law and the forms of justice.

His piety was at once improved and manifested by a deep and spiritual habit. He evidently spent much time in secret prayer, and in daily converse with God; and he diligently studied the Scriptures, not merely to find matter for the pulpit and the press, but with a reference to the regulation of his own heart and life. When he read the sacred Scriptures in his family, or with the social party, his manner was reverential and devout; and he often paused, as if to receive the full impression of the hallowed sentiments to which his lips gave utterance, and to which others were listening with fixed attention. It was the gracious feeling thus excited, and which, by the divine blessing, he succeeded in communicating to his hearers, that gave the principal charm to his public ministry. The strong and permanent effects produced by his sermons were not occasioned so much by the comprehensiveness and sublimity of his views, the force of his reasonings, and the richness and power of his imagination, as by the tone of piety by which they were characterized, and the holy influence by which they were attended. He felt the truths which he delivered in all their weight and importance; and under a corresponding impression his hearers became serious and prayerful, and were moved to a surrender of their hearts to the Lord. The more pains he labored, the more they valued his preaching. He showed them not only the external magnificence and beauty of the temple of truth, but he conducted them into the interior of the sacred edifice, and led them from one compartment to another, till he placed them in the holiest of all, and fixed their reverent gaze upon "the cherubim of glory overshadowing the mercy-seat." The same remark will apply to his conversation, which was intellectual and instructive in the highest degree; but it was also directed to holy purposes. He spoke of public events in their connection with the providence of God, and the interests of the church of Christ; and of personal religion, and the progress of Christianity in the world, in connection with the mediatorial scheme, and the work of [illegible] party was, by his wisdom and cheerful piety, rendered a means of grace.—The Rev. Thomas Jackson.

How to Grow Old.

The way to grow old is to be economical of life. If it be carelessly squandered in any way, it can not last so long as it otherwise might. Overwork kills a few. Overwarry kills more, because it is more depressing and exhausting. The indulgence of the appetites and passions is still more fatal. Men who eat more than they need, drink more than is good for them, and indulge in other kinds of riotous living, spend life as they spend money.

If within certain limits the young can be lavish of life without apparent injury, this is not the case with those who have passed its meridian. As the nervous power or vital force is expended, we must husband it more carefully and expend it more economically. We must limit our labor; we must guard against exposure to extremes of temperature; we must be more careful to get needful rest and sleep; and, above all, we must lessen the quantity of food we take, and be more careful as to its quality. The aged do not need so much food as the young, because waste is slower, the absorbents are less active, digestion is weaker. As the demand is less, the supply must be diminished. A child wants its food often, and requires a much larger quantity in proportion to its bulk than the adult. The aged, with slower movement, less expenditure, and failing powers of digestion, assimilation, secretion, and excretion, need still less of food; and the safest way to live long and well is to gradually lessen the quantity, keeping just within, so as never to overtask, the digestive powers.

"Experience ought to tell every man of seventy years what kind of food is best for him." But seventy in their early years continue and never try experiments. The Scotchwoman in the Orkneys who lived some months ago at the age of [illegible] evidently [illegible] with [illegible] to [illegible] and eggs, milk, beer and brandy to her, promoted longevity.

Try for a week a less gross food and a few weeks at a time upon what is made strong work of the digestive apparatus. Each will suit quite, when in harness, as he said, but a little past fifty, in what should have been the prime of life. Both lived generously, but worked upon simple fare, both ate and drank too much for more than was good for them. Gifted with powerful constitutions and high vitality, both so far as a physiologist can judge, might have lived fifty years longer, fifty years of useful, honorable life.

The last published letters of Charles Dickens show how his life was thrown away. We see how he ate and drank and worked, carrying the Caribbean fortress up to the last moment. Wise as he was in many things, and kind and generous as we know him to be, he was ignorant of the science of life. And never was a valuable life more recklessly wasted and destroyed. The world is full of such examples; and though there are now a few medical men like Sir William Gull, Sir Henry Thompson, Dr. Richardson, and Dr. Norman Kerr, who see the evils of stimulation, and have some proper notions of right, the great mass indulge in excess of food and stimulation, with the results that we see all around us. They [illegible]

The Plainness of Persian Dress.

The Governor of the Burgenez is a fine looking man, with gaol-black beard, over the middle height, and apparently about forty-five years of age. Like most people of high rank in Persia he dresses with an excessive plainness, which might be selected, did one not know that all external luxury in dress is despised as worthless, and rejoice the regret of the Sovereign on state occasions, for in exception, but even he, on [illegible] wears no jewels, no [illegible] whatever except his [illegible]

In these districts, [illegible] all [illegible] those with gorgeous trappings [illegible] to seek with a heavy silver [illegible] with earrings, [illegible] the rider, [illegible] himself, so [illegible] dress is considered, being [illegible] [illegible] own property [illegible] ing no gift [illegible] in accordance with the same custom in Persia.

[illegible] a gold ring [illegible] and [illegible] of silver and of the shepherd's most [illegible] pattern. A Turcoman will wear absolutely nothing in the shape of jewelry, except a signet [illegible] and even this is [illegible] [illegible] which, when [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, May 2, 1881.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Sat.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	6	6
Ordinary	7	7
Good ordinary	8⅝	8⅝
Low middling	9⅝	9⅝
Middling	10⅝	10⅝
Good middling	11⅛	11⅛
Middling fair	12	12
Sales to-day	2,600 bales.
Receipts since our last	8,812 bales.
Receipts previously	1,467,412 bales.
Sugar, ₱ lb.:
Fair	7⅛	7⅛
Fully fair	7⅞	7⅞
Prime	—	—
Choice	—	—
Yellow clarified	8⅝	8⅝
White clarified	9⅜	9⅜
Powdered	—	—
Crushed	—	—
Molasses, in bbls., ₱ gallon:
Common	25	28
Fair	28	33
Prime	38	40
Choice	—	—
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common	3¾	4¼
Fair	4⅞	5⅛
Prime	5⅝	6⅛
Choice	—	—
GROCERIES.
Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western	9	35
New York	20	32
Coffee, ₱ lb.:
Rio ordinary	9¾	9¾
Rio, fair	11¾	12
Rio, prime	12⅝	13
Cheese, ₱ lb.:
Western factory	—	—
English dairy	—	—
Candles, ₱ lb.:
Best brands	11⅝	12
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl.
Choice K. D	2 85	2 90
Flour, ₱ bbl.
Superfine	3 00	—
XX	3 75	4 00
XXX	4 75	5 00
Choice	—	—
Choice high	—	—
Fish:
Mackerel, No. 1, in bbls	—	8 00
Half barrels	—	4 50
Kits	—	95
Mackerel, No. 2, in bbls	—	6 75
Half bbls	—	3 50
Kits	—	85
Mackerel, No. 3, in bbls	5 50	6 75
Half bbls	3 00	3 70
Kits	75	—
Codfish, ₱ lb	5½	6
Herring, ₱ box	30	35
Oils, ₱ gallon.
Coal, in cases	—	—
Coal, in bbls	—	—
Linseed, raw	58	60
Linseed, boiled	61	63
Cotton seed	30	35
Lard	75	87
Soap, ₱ box
Magnolia	—	2 10
Olive	—	2 50
Palm	—	—
Castile	—	2 75
Soda, ₱ lb	—	—
Starch, ₱ lb	—	3½
Salt, ₱ sack:
Coarse	1 00	1 02½
Fine	1 37½	1 40
GRAIN AND FEED.
Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow	—	—
White	—	67
Mixed	58	60
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western	—	47
Red rust-proof	—	—
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs
Choice	—	87½
Hay, ₱ ton:
Prime	—	27 00
Choice	25 50	26 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel:
Mixed	—	2 85
Clay	—	2 50
PROVISIONS.
Bacon, ₱ lb:
Breakfast	10	10½
Shoulders	6½	6¾
Sides, clear rib	9½	9¾
Sides, clear	10	10
Hams, sugar-cured	10	11
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl	16 50	18 50
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb.:
Clear rib sides	—	8½
Clear sides	—	8¾
Shoulders	5¾	5¾
Lard, ₱ lb:
Choice, in kegs	—	—
Choice, in tierces	—	11¾
ESCULENTS.
Potatoes, ₱ bbl:
Irish	2 85	3 25
Sweet	—	2 75
Onions, ₱ bbl	5 50	6 00
Apples, ₱ bbl	1 50	2 50
Cabbages, ₱ box	—	—
Sour Kraut, ₱ bbl	15 00	16 00
BALING STUFFS.
Bagging, ₱ yard
India	—	—
Jute	—	—
Baling Twine, ₱ lb	—	8
Ties, ₱ bundle
30 lbs and Buckles	—	1 65
SUNDRIES.
Poultry, ₱ dozen:
Grown chickens	4 50	4 75
Young do	3 00	3 50
Ducks	—	4 00
Geese	4 00	6 00
Turkeys	18 00	21 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen
Western	15	17
Southern	15	17
Honey,
strained, ₱ gallon	—	—
comb, ₱ lb	—	—
Pecans, ₱ lb
Louisiana	—	—
Texas	6	8
Oranges,
Louisiana, ₱ bbl	5 50	6 00
Foreign, ₱ box	3 50	4 00
Wool, ₱ lb.:
Louisiana	18	19
Texas	—	—
Feathers, ₱ lb
Geese	—	—
Hides, ₱ lb.:
Country green	6	8
Dry salted	9	10
Dry flint	12	12½
Ox Horns, each	—	6
Tallow, ₱ lb	5½	5¾
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton
Hunsucks	—	—
Meal	21 00	22 00
Oil cake	23 00	23 50
Cooperage, ₱ each:
Sugar hogsheads	3 00	3 25
Molasses barrels	1 30	1 35
Half barrels	—	1 05
Kegs	—	70
Oak Staves, per 1200
Kegs	—	—
Barrels	—	—
Extra claret	95 00	100 00
Extra hogshead	135 00	140 00
Extra pipes	145 00	150 00
Tobacco:
Low lugs	—	4½
Medium	—	—
Good to fine	—	—
Low leaf	5½	6½
Medium	6½	7
Good	7½	8
Fine	8	8
Selections	10	12

The Second Colored Baptist Church of Richmond, Va., is a hard working society. It has just built a church worth $18,000, amid many discouragements, and without the help of a pastor. A few days ago it gave a liberal collection to missions.

There is More Strength

restoring power in a 50 cent bottle of Packer's Ginger Tonic than in a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body. See other column.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

LOUISVILLE, April 23.—What is regarded as an incipient volcano has broken out on the farm of R. A. Jarnagin, in the southern portion of Ohio County, in this State, one day last week. Mr. Jarnagin was attracted to the place by noticing gas escaping from the earth and he found upon examination that the ground was seemingly on fire. There was a pile of corn shucks over the place and the heat caused it to ignite. Many persons have visited the spot and it is a source of great wonder to all.

PHILADELPHIA, April 26.—Rev. Alexander H. Vinton, formerly rector of St. Mark's Church, New York, died here this morning of pneumonia.

ST. LOUIS, April 26.—The drivers and conductors of the Olive street and Market street railroad lines, who are now out on the strike, together with a crowd of their sympathizers, made hostile demonstrations to-day at several points against the cars and new employees of the railroad companies.

On the Chestnut street, between Twelfth and Thirteenth, the crowd removed four cars from the track, and compelled the drivers to take them back to the stables. At other points the mob stopped the cars, smashed their windows, plastered them with mud, and would not allow railroad employees to come near them.

The police made several arrests, but the crowds were so great they could not preserve order or prevent the bespattering of the cars with mud and abuse of new conductors and drivers.

At 2 P. M., the streets were, however, partially cleared, and comparative order prevailed.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 27.—Dr. W. J. Hall, the eminent physician, of this city, died this morning. He was one of the young Americans who, after completing study in Paris, entered the service of the Russian Government in the medical department during the Crimean war.

JACKSON, Miss., April 27.—John W. Robinson, the largest property holder and a leading merchant of Jackson, died of pneumonia at his residence this afternoon.

Before the war he was a partner of Col. E. Richardson. He was one of the early settlers, and has ever been esteemed one of the most liberal and public-spirited citizens of Jackson, and in his death, society loses a good and useful member, and enterprise one of its chief props.

He lived respected by his fellow men, and his death causes universal sorrow.

ST. LOUIS, April 28.—The street cars began running at 9:30 this morning without opposition from the strikers. The entire police force of the city was on duty with a large number of special men, and strong squads of mounted police patrolled the streets along which the cars run.

MOBILE, April 28.—The Port Commissioners of Mobile have granted the right of way to the Mobile and South Gulf Railroad, under restrictions, and in response to a petition of the latter, to build a road to Cedar Point, thirty miles from this city, where deep water communication can be had quicker, cheaper and more effectively.

WASHINGTON, April 29.—Telegrams from the West report the rivers still rising and much damage to property, and thousands are being driven from their houses by floods. At Armoursdale, near Kansas City, five colored persons were drowned.

CHICAGO, April 29.—The total loss of property by flood on the Missouri River and its tributaries, between Sioux City and Bismarck, is estimated at $2,500,000; below Sioux City, including damage of $1,000,000 at Omaha, Council Bluffs, Kansas City, and great overflows on both sides of the Missouri between those cities and St. Louis, amount of loss is computed at $1,500,000.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 30.—The rise in the river during the past twenty-four hours has been about twenty inches, but the waters have made no further encroachments upon this city. The ice houses of Fowler Bros. and Wood Bros. are giving way and will probably be lost. There is a great deal of suffering among six or seven thousand people, driven from their homes by the flood, but active measures of relief have been instituted.

The tracks of all roads, excepting the Chicago and Alton, are more or less under water, and business with the last is almost entirely suspended. A man was killed by the government steamer crashing into a house, on the balcony of which he was standing. It is expected the river will be at a stand by to-day, and then a rapid decline will soon commence.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 1.—Dr. Lewis Swift discovered another new comet at 2 o'clock this morning. Its location is about right ascension, 0 hours and 6 minutes declination, north 37 degrees in constellation Andromeda. This is the first comet discovered this year.

ST. LOUIS, May 2.—Very serious apprehensions are beginning to be felt for the safety of the property along the river front. The water is now nearly a foot and a half above danger line and still rising. The low lands south of Canotean Avenue and east of the high embankment of the Iron Mountain Railroad is submerged.

The Musser Iron works, on the eastern side of the river, opposite Carondelet, are surrounded by water and have suspended operations, though there is not any immediate danger. South of this, however, is that portion of the city occupied by the Union stock yards and the great lumber interest, there is much trouble. In East St. Louis, there is great danger of a general overflow.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, April 26.—From early this morning railway trains have been arriving at Wycombe, bringing large numbers of people, of all classes, for Hughenden, to be present at the obsequies of Lord Beaconsfield. The weather is rather showery.

The Prince of Wales, Duke of Connaught and Prince Leopold, the latter bearing a large wreath from the Queen, left Paddington about 1 o'clock. The same train took the Duke of Richmond, Marquis of Hamilton, and a number of the members of the late Government. The Marquis of Hartington left Paddington somewhat later.

Mr. Gladstone, according to the latest accounts, has gone to Hughenden.

Flags are at half mast, and other signs of mourning are displayed in various towns throughout the country.

The crowd at Lord Beaconsfield's funeral is somewhat less than expected. Many persons who intended to be present have probably been deterred by occasional sharp showers of hail.

The Empress of Wales sent a wreath. When the burial service was completed all the principal mourners entered the vault and placed wreaths on the coffin, and before the vault was closed it was literally crammed with flowers.

LONDON, April 27.—Lord Beaconsfield's will leaves Hughenden Manor and all his other property to his nephew, Coningsby Ralph Disraeli. The estate is strictly entailed in the male line, with reversion to female heirs, provided all successors of the latter take the name of Disraeli—not in conjunction, but with "but instead" of their own surname.

All his letters, papers, manuscripts, etc., are left in the custody of Lord Rowton, with full discretion regarding their publication, except private correspondence, the use of which is to be governed by the wishes of the parties interested. There is special direction that no part of his correspondence with the Queen shall be published without her consent or that of her successors.

LONDON, April 29.—A dispatch from Paris says: A prominent diplomatist at St. Petersburg, reports that the Czar and his favorite counsellors are disposed to adopt rigorous repressive measures having no example in Russian history.

PARIS, May 1.—Recent reports from Tunis that the principals of the Arab Theological Institute had resolved to unfurl the standard of the prophet and proclaim holy war against infidels is now confirmed. Bey's police have discovered indications of the plot and made several arrests. Domiciliary visits result in a large quantity of bullets and powder being discovered.

All Bey, Tunisian commander, has removed the Tunisian camp, south of Béja. M. Rouston; French consul general, has received telegrams from the governor of Algera, announcing that the French have occupied the Kroumirs' hill camp. The Kroumirs' are now practically surrounded.

LONDON, May 1.—The Standard's Tunis correspondent reports that four French iron clads took possession of Biserloon Sunday.

PARIS, May 2.—It is rumored that Abdel Kader, the famous Algerian chief, now in retirement at Damascus, has written from that place, warning the French to prepare for a serious rising in Algeria.

LONDON, May 2.—The Times, in a leading article this morning, says: It has been our painful duty to record, during the past two or three weeks, repeated outrages in the west and south of Ireland, scarcely inferior in atrocity to those which awakened the national conscience four months ago. To-day the record of agrarianism is more serious than at any time since Parliament met, in January.

Good Templars.

THE ANNUAL SESSION OF THE GRAND LODGE OF ALABAMA.

The eleventh annual session of the Grand Lodge of Alabama, I. O. G. T., was held at Uniontown on April 12, and lasted two days. Major W. O. Baldwin, Jr., welcomed the members of the Order to the privileges of the city and the protection of its authorities. Mr. W. F. Willhains, of Mobile, replied in appropriate terms, and Jas. A. Herman, of Nashville, replied in behalf of the Grand Lodge. A correspondent gives the following account of the proceedings:

The report of the G. W. S. and T. shows the order to be in an improved financial condition, while the membership was placed at about the same number as was reported last year, viz., 2000. The roll of attendance showed the presence of representatives from lodges throughout the State, and the work opened up harmoniously and auspiciously. After transacting the regular routine of business, including a resolution authorizing the calling of a State Temperance Convention of all the friends of temperance, at some central point, this summer, to consider and adopt some plan to secure unity and harmony of sentiment and action among all the friends of temperance reform, the following officers were elected and duly installed:

G. W. C. T., Hon. R. H. Powell, Union Springs; G. W. Comm., W. F. Willhams, Mobile; G. W. A. S., Miss Ida Wiley, Troy; G. W. S. & T., M. M. Sweatt, Montgomery; G. W. A. S., J. S. Howell, Jr., Montgomery; G. W. C., Rev. S. A. Pilley, Uniontown; G. W. M., D. A. Clement, Cross Plains; G. D. M., Miss Ella Cdlaway, Troy; G. Guard, Miss Mollie King, Union Springs; G. S., Sentinel, R. M. Guy, Bay Minette.

Arrangements were made to that end, and it is expected that Col. Powell, G. W. C. T., will at once enter upon a vigorous campaign throughout the State on behalf of the cause and Ordr. Col. R. H. Powell, was elected Regular, and Br. J. G. Patton Alternate, Representative to the Right Worthy Grand Lodge, which meets in Topeka, Kansas, on the 4th Tuesday in May next.

The next session of the Grand Lodge is to be held at Uniontown, on the 2d Tuesday in April, 1882.—Mobile Register.

A Correction

MR. EDITOR: Looking over the minutes we find an error or a great omission. Brother Jackson, our preacher in charge, says he has examined the record of this circuit. I find about two hundred dollars in all collected, and paid out to preachers and presiding elder. And there is no account in the minutes of any money paid to the preachers or Presiding Elder, and no assessments for either. There was assessments made for both and many paid over, and we ought to have credit for it. Brother Jackson is doing well, is in the new parsonage built at the camp ground, he is having good congregations, and several joined the church.

DANIEL BREWER.

SCIENCE HILL, Alexandria District, April 20, 1881.

ENGLISH SKY-LARKS IN AMERICA.—Mr. John Burroughs, in his "Notes of a Walker" in a recent number of Scribner's Magazine, described the delight with which he heard a stray English sky-lark, which had evidently either escaped from a cage, or was a survivor of those which were liberated in Long Island several years ago. He suggested that there was "no reason why the lark should not thrive in this country as well as in Europe." Acting on this suggestion, Mr. Charles R. Rowe, of Cornwall, England, an enthusiastic admirer of Mr. Burrough's writings, has sent him a number of English sky-larks, which arrived in New York on Saturday last, and have been forwarded to Mr. Burrough's at Esopus on the Hudson, where they will be set free.

The statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church, for the year ending, Dec. 31, 1880, as published in the New York Christian Advocate, show 61 Annual Conferences; 12,695 traveling preachers; 1,361,104 lay members in full connection; 178,817 lay members on probation, and 1,824,708 Sunday-school teachers and scholars. The Connectional Benevolent collections, for the year 1880, aggregated $917,158.41.

CAMP MEETINGS.

SEA SHORE CAMP MEETING.—The Camp Meeting for 1881, on Sea Shore Camp Ground, will commence on Wednesday, July 13, 1881.

PHILIP CALLAHAN, Secretary. W. H. FOSTER, President.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

The Vicksburg District Conference will be held at Fayette, June 3-5, Bishop Keener presiding. The change of time is made to enable Bishop Keener to be with us. JOHN A. ELLIS, P. E.

Pensacola District Conference, Alabama Annual Conference, will convene at Georgiana, April 28, at seven o'clock, P. M. Preachers in charge will please be prepared to give full accounts of their charges as specified by the Discipline. Make an earnest effort to raise the collections ordered by the Discipline and Conference. I hope the Stewards of the several charges will make liberal payments on their pastor's salaries, so that it can be reported at the District Conference. Pastors will send the names of their lay delegates and local preachers to Rev. L. Patterson, Georgiana. Let earnest prayers be made by the churches for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the District Conference.

S. H. COX, P. E.

Quarterly Conferences.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MOBILE DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Franklin Street	Apr. 24
Eastern Shore, at Spanish	30, May 1
Toulminville, at Toulminville	May 7, 8
Citronelle, at Citronelle	14, 15
Grand Bay, at St. Elmo	21, 22
Suggsville, at Ft. Madison	28, 29
Grove Hill, at Coffeeville	June 4, 5
St. Stephens, at Andrew Chapel	11, 12
Bladon Springs, at Mt. Zion	18, 19
Okatuppa, at Jones' Chapel	25, 26

16. O. W. BLEY, P. E.

MARIANNA DISTRICT.—SECOND ROUND.

Marianna station	Apr. 2, 3
Cerro Gordo mission, at Mt Olive	9, 10
Geneva circuit, at Friendship	16, 17
Big Creek circuit, at Mt. Zion	23, 24
Greenwood circuit, at Andrew's Chapel	30, May 1
Chipola mission, at Hogwood	May 7, 8
Headland mission, at Blackwoods	14, 15
Holmes' Valley circuit, at Orange Hill	21, 22
Freeport and Walton, at Freeport	June 4, 5

The District Conference will convene at Freeport, Thursday, June 2, at 7 P. M.

14 A. J. COLEMAN, P. E.

GREENSBORO DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Greensboro circuit, at Eufaw Chapel	Mar. 31
Newberne circuit	Apr. 2, 3
Greensboro station	9, 10
Havana circuit, at Coldsboro	16, 17
Forklandcircuit, at Trinity	23, 24
Livingstone and Eutaw, at Eutaw	30, May 1
Green circuit	Thursday, May 5
Belmont circuit, at Jone's Bluff	7, 8
Gainsville circuit, at Sumpterville	14, 15
Demopolis station	21, 22
Cuba circuit, at Curl's Chapel	28, 29
Gaston circuit, at Christopher's Chapel	June 1, 2
Choctaw circuit, at Bright water, Thursday	9
Butler and Mt. Sterling, at Mt. Sterling	11, 12

13 H. CHRISTMAS, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

BRANDON DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Brandon station	Apr. 9, 10
Pamelia circuit, at New Providence	16, 17
Marvin circuit, at Poplar Springs	23, 24
Cato circuit, at Goodwater	30, May 1
Ludlow mission, at Mt. Zion	May 6
Trenton circuit	8
Mt. Hebron	13
Philadelphia circuit, at Hester's Chapel	14, 15
Walnut Grove circuit, at Scotland	21, 22
Beech Springs	28, 29
Carthage circuit, at Carthage	June 1, 5
Newton circuit	11, 12
Lake circuit	18, 19
Raleigh circuit	25, 26
Forest circuit, at Forest	July 2, 3

12. J. M. GANS, P. E.

SEASHORE DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Ocean Springs, at Scranton	May 12, 13
Handsboro, at Handsboro	26, 27
West Pascagoula, at Mt. Pleasant	Apr. 9, 10
Whitfingoon, at White Plains	23, 24
Pearlington, at Log Town	May 7, 8
Biloxi, at Biloxi	14, 15
East Pascagoula, at Zion	21, 22
Moss Point, at Moss Point	28

District Conference, at Moss Point, May 27, 28, 29.

12 T. S. WEST, P. E.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

DELHI DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Delhi and Madison circuit, at Delhi	May 1
Winnsboro circuit, at Winnsboro	14, 15
Oak Ridge circuit, at Good Hope	21, 22
Rayville circuit, at Girard	28, 29
Trenton and Monroe, at Trenton	June 1, 5
Colony circuit, at Faulk's Chapel	11, 12
Mud Grove circuit, at Schumanhead	18, 19
Bastrop circuit, at Bastrop	25, 26
Floyd circuit	July 2, 3
Providence and Pecan Grove circuit	4 to 10
Tensas Chapel, at Tensas Chapel	16, 17
Tensas circuit, at Wellers	23, 24
Waterproof, at Vidalia	30, 31

The District Stewards will convene at Delhi on Saturday, May 7, at three o'clock P. M. The District Stewards are: D. S. Travis, A. S. Womble, J. S. Beazley, P. A. B. Williams, T. C. Stoddfer, A. J. Gibson, John Gomer, A. S. Helmick, G. H. Johnson and S. T. Jackson.

16. H. P. ALEXANDER, P. E.

ORLEANS DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Morgan City	May 7, 8
Franklin	14, 15
French Mission	21, 22
New Iberia	28, 29
Abbeville	June 4, 5
Vermillionville	11, 12
Lake Charles	18, 19
Sugar Town	25, 26
Opelousas	July 2, 3
Plaquemine	9, 10
Washington	16, 17

District Conference will convene in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Franklin, May 12, at nine o'clock P. M. District Stewards will meet me at four o'clock P. M., Saturday, May 14.

5 J. M. JOHNSTON, P. E.

SHREVEPORT DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Caddo circuit, at Belle Bower	Apr. 16, 17
Logansport, at Reynold's School House	30, May 1
South Bossier, at Fillmore	May 7, 8
North Bossier, at Cotton'd	14, 15
Mooringsport, at Mooringsport	21, 22
Shreveport	28, 29
Coushatta, at Red Point	June 4, 5
Springville, at Mossbead Chapel	11, 12
Many, at Prospect	18, 19
Amorco, at Union	22
Natchitoches	25, 26
Mansfield	29
Natchitoches circuit	July 9, 10
Pleasant Hill, at Macvin Chapel	16, 17

District Conference will convene at Mansfield, June 30, 1881. T. H. MCLENDON, P. E.

HOMER DIST. SECOND ROUND.

Sparta	Apr. 16, 17
Tulla	23, 24
Homer	30, May 1
Vernon	May 7, 8
Indian Village	14, 15
Rochester	21, 22
Haynesville	28, 29
Dawnsville	June 4, 5
Carlisle ville	11, 12
Webster	18, 19
Minden	25, 26
Arcadia	July 23, 24

24 J. A. PARKER, P. E.

NEW ORLEANS DIST. SECOND ROUND.

Morgan's Street	Apr. 17
Algiers	May 1
Louisiana Avenue	8
Lafourche, at Donaldsonville	15
Felicity street	22
Baton Rouge	29
Plaquemine and Gross Tete, at Plaquemine	June 5
Carondelet street	12
St. Charles Avenue	19

14 J. B. WALKER, P. E.

ALEXANDRIA DIST. SECOND ROUND.

Bayou Beouf and Evergreen	Apr. 2, 3
Rapides	9, 10
Cattle	Wednesday 13
Whitefield	16, 17
Jena	23, 24
Castor	Thursday 28
Columbia	30, May 1
Harrisonburg	7, 8
Shelly Island	14, 15
Little River	21, 22
Alexandria	28, 29
Spring Creek	June 4, 5
Avoyelles French mission	9
Simsport	11, 12

The Alexandria District Conference will convene on Thursday, May 26, at ten o'clock, A. M., at Pineville, La.

The District Stewards will please meet on Friday, May 27, at Pineville, La.

12 F. G. HOCUTT, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT:

OFFICE: CORNER CARONDELET AND GRAVIER STREETS.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

Fire assets, excluding paid-up capital	$9,881,426 21
Paid-up capital	1,228,200 00
Total fire assets	$11,109,626 21
Fire liabilities	3,944,358 23
Making the surplus for policy-holders	$7,165,267 98

Losses by Chicago Fire in 1871..$3,239,091
Losses by Boston Fire in 1872..$1,120,729

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city, thus placing the Company on an even footing with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS:

J. F. SCHRODER, Esq., Chairman, of Leopold Christ & Co.
NEWTON BUCKNER, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERRY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Lallande.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson and Simpson.
HENRY V. OGDEN, Resident Secretary.
JULES P. ROUX, Assist Resident Secretary.
NEW ORLEANS October 20 1880.

B. J. MONTGOMERY. C. KIRSCH

R. M. & B. J.

MONTGOMERY FURNITURE

AND

MIRROR EMPORIUM,

Corner Camp and Poydras Sts.

After a sojourn of over six weeks among the Factories North, East and West, we open the Fall and Winter Trade with the largest and best selected stock of Furniture, French and German Plate Mirrors, Ornamental and Fancy Goods, Upholstery Goods and Cabinet Makers' Hardware ever brought to this city. We select our goods in person from the best factories and are determined not to be undersold. Our assortment being too extensive and varied to be enumerated in detail, we request our customers and the general public to call and inspect for themselves.

On hand a full line of the celebrated Vienna Bent Wood Work and Invalid Wheel Chairs.

Goods packed and delivered F. O. B.

1000 MORE CUSTOMERS

My Prices

Will Astonish.

PIANOS! ORGANS!

AND

Musical Instruments.

Write to

P. WERLEIN,
No. 135 Canal Street,
NEW ORLEANS.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2,000 RECIPE BOOK. Sells at sight. You double your money. Address Dr. Chase's Pictorial Home, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$25 TO $35.

STEWART'S NEW IMPROVED SINGER Sewing Machine.

Great Reduction in Prices!

Down with Monopoly!

Hard Times Demand Low Prices

We warrant all our Machines to be NEW, LATEST-IMPROVED and PERFECT in

FIVE YEARS.

Our NEW MACHINE is supplied with a LOOSE BALANCE WHEEL, which is a great improvement over the old "SINGER," as it enables the operator to wind the bobbin without running the machine, or removing the work from the needle. This is the most important improvement ever put on the Sewing Machine.

Also dealer in all first-class Machines, such as the

WHEELER & WILSON,
DOMESTIC, GROVER & BAKER,
WILSON, WEED, Etc.

Cotton, Silk, Flax, Oil and Needles for all kinds of Machines. Address

M. A. PECK,
General Sewing Machine Agent
158 CANAL STREET,
Next to Holmes' Dry Goods Store,
New Orleans.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ADVANCE AND RETREAT!

Personal experiences in the
UNITED STATES and
CONFEDERATE STATES ARMIES

BY J. B. HOOD,
Lieutenant General in the Confederate Army

Published for the Hood Orphan Memorial Fund by Gen. G. T. Beauregard.

Price in cloth binding, $3; in leather, $3 50. Mailed, post paid, on receipt of price by

LATHROP & WILKINS,
New Orleans.

UNITED STATES Four Per Cent. Bonds
BOUGHT AND SOLD BY
New Orleans National Bank,
88 CAMP STREET.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT,
RICHARD RHODES,
55.....ST. CHARLES STREET.....
NEW ORLEANS.

Articles for Fishermen of all Kinds

Rods, Nets, Hooks, Lines, and every description of article for the Angler, Wholesale and retail. Fine imported to order. J. R. Cooper's Breech and Muzzle Loading Guns always on hand. All kinds of approved artificial Baits. Repairing of Guns carefully done by experienced workmen, and Fishing Rods made to order. Address Postoffice Box 1599.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co.

AMERICAN CHINA HOUSE,

49 Camp Street, New Orleans.

We append a few prices:

The American China Dinner, Breakfast and Tea Set, comprising 160 Pieces, for $12.

A Real French China Dinner Set, 130 Pieces, for $17.

English Stone China Dinner Set, 130 Pieces, for $16.

English Stone China Chamber Set, comprising 10 Pieces, for $2 50.

Decorated Chamber Sets, with different Colored Bands, 10 Pieces, for $3 50.

Glass Goblets, from 60 cents to $1 per dozen.

Particular attention given to Novelties and specialties pertaining to the House-Furnishing Department. Orders promptly attended to. We have just received a full and complete stock of holiday goods. Call and examine before purchasing.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.

Carpet and Oil Cloth Warehouse,

ELKIN & CO.,

110 - - - CANAL STREET - - - 112

New styles of

MOQUETTE, VELVET, BODY, BRUSSELS, TAPESTRY BRUSSELS, with border to match, 3-PLY and INGRAINS in great variety. OIL-CLOTHS of all widths. WINDOW SHADES and CURTAINS, new patterns. CORNICES and CORNICE POLES. MATTINGS of every description. CURTAIN GOODS, TASSELS, CORDS, GIMPS &c.

Our prices for corresponding qualities of goods as low as any house in the South or West.

FURNITURE.

W. C. TEBAULT

47 Royal Street,

desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. C. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,
New Orleans.

D. MERCIER & SONS,
Better Known as Cheap John's,
NO BRANCH STORE IN TOWN
MEN'S, BOYS' AND YOUTH'S
CLOTHING
HATS, BOOTS, SHOES, FURNISHING GOODS, ETC., ETC.
Cor. Dauphine and Bienville sts.,
New Orleans, La.

Orders from Country Merchants promptly executed on most reasonable terms.

DR. BLY'S CELEBRATED PATENT ARTIFICIAL LEGS AND ARMS have all the motion of natural limbs. Perfect satisfaction in cases or no pay. Prices reduced. For pamphlet.

A. McDERMITT, Manufacturer,
183 Camp St., New Orleans.

PERRY TRADE & MARK

PERRY & CO

STEEL PENS

of superior English make; famous for durability and excellence; great variety of styles suited for every kind of writing. For sale by dealers generally.

A "TWENTY-FIVE" assorted samples for examination, including the "E" AND "FALCON" pens, delivered FREE, by mail, on receipt of Twenty-five Cents.

IVISON, BLAKEMAN, TAYLOR & CO.
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. S.
NEW YORK.

Christian Advocate.

27.—NO. 19. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1881. WHOLE NO. 1353.

PUBLISHED FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ...AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

...ristian Advocate.

...S PARKER, D. D., Editor.

..., LATHROP, Publisher.

...12 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

...on, . . . $2 per annum.

...t wives of deceased Preachers half price.

...y of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.
H. N. MOORE.
O. R. BELL, D. D.
J. O. ANDREW.
MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
W. H. WATKINS, D. D.
JAMES A. GODFREY.
W. L. C. McNUTT.
LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
JOHN MATHEWS, D. D.
LINUS PARKER, D. D.
CHRISTIAN KEENER.

SPEND THE YEAR.

...BY HART LYMON.

...ve in the spring-time
...of sweet April showers,
...the breath of the woodland
...filled with flowers.

...song in the silence
...ge, and fell
...through the fragrant twilight
...ver to know well,

...glides slowly on to the Summer
...days of its fervent heats,
...of the resting season
...of rest healing hearts

...with its shadows,
...no longer hot
...pulse,
...and spring were not.

...alive with the Winter
...beauty and grace had fled;
...ows of March I left her,
...press wreath of her head.

—Harper's Magazine

Whitworth College.

...JOHNSON, D. D.

Editors: My attention has ...to a statement by "Guzman," in the St. Louis Advocate, in ... to my having transferred ... Whitworth College to a ...nty lady. "Guzman" is ...t in his interpretation of ... It may be well for the ... that I make some explana... My position in the college is ...erstood; and probably never ... I dislike, however, to pre... before the public.

... I was president of Madi... The trustees met every ... two to provide money, to ...tions, etc. They were fail'e ... did the very best they, ... financial troubles arose ... unavoidable. I was elected ... of Whitworth College in ... the distinct understanding ... could employ my own teach... their salaries, manage the ... under the Methodist Church; ... my administration proved ...factory, retire. This under... was the result of my expe... at Aaron.

...college was already in debt; ... debts were made providing ... and a new building, also ...essary, in all about $10,000. ...lege was in danger of being ...by the sheriff's hammer. At ...t request of the trustees, I ... college for twenty years, ... all the debts, and undertook ... repairs with the understand... the college should remain ... the direction of the church. ... I consented to the lease, I ... Whitworth to deed in ... to the college an additional ... of land, and one-fourth of ... block for twenty years, ... cheerfully did. At the next ... a distinguished minister ... speech against confirming ...tion of the board, because ... years is a long time, and the ... would cease to be a church in... When he was told that the ...s necessary to give me credit, ... the builders had released ... on the college and ac... my individual notes, he with... objection and the action of ...rd was confirmed. But that ... brought forth fruit, and to ... from that and other causes, ...ith has been regarded by ... Johnson's College, a mere ... institution.

... having recovered from ill... pressure on account of the ... of the college, I proposed to ... the lease and let the college re... under the management of ...stees; but they positively de... for the reason that I was ... to keep up the college, and ... all they wished. During ..., I put up another building, ...ed steam heaters, and made ... improvements. I got no ren... and asked for none, there... encouraging the opinion, I sup... that the college was my own. ...5, I bought three-fourths of ... in front of the college, and ... improvements which cost ...,000. In 1878, I put up the brick building worth about $15,000 including steam heaters. I gave a written pledge to the board that I would convey the land to the church if they would aid in the work, but no aid was granted by them.

It was objected by some persons that the new building was not put on church land; but the church had no land to put it on. Others said that here is a college going up on a lot adjoining Whitworth, and that it would swallow Whitworth up, as the lean kine did the fat ones, but it was replied that the two should be one, and both should be the property of the Methodist Church. But the opinion was strengthened that Whitworth was a private school.

In June, 1879, I transferred the new brick building and the lot on which it stands, not including furniture and heaters, to the church, unencumbered in any way whatever. I transferred the other part of the block which belonged to me, on which there was a lien of $3,000 to the church reserving a life estate for myself, wife and youngest child. Bro. Nugent, of Jackson, gave $1,000 and Bro. Millsaps, now of St. Louis, gave $2,000 on the brick building at the time of the transfer. I also surrendered my lease which the board accepted. The board accepted my deed on condition that the church would pay me $4,000 in addition to the subscriptions of Bros. Nugent and Millsaps, and this action was confirmed by the Conference at Meridian in 1879. The payment of the $1,000 was intended to meet the $3,000 and interest, for which I was bound, and thereby relieve me and the church property under mortgage and aid me in putting up the centre building, very much needed now.

During this year and last, improvements have been made costing about $1,500. The board has not been consulted. The improvements were necessary. I asked for no contributions and no advice, except from mechanics, knowing that the board would not object, but would approve. But this course of mine, which perhaps is not the best, fosters the opinion among outside people, that the college belongs to Johnson. But it does not any more than Vanderbilt belongs to me. The board can turn me out of office to-morrow, just as readily as the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt can discharge any professor in that university.

Therefore, I have not sold one-half or one third of any part of Whitworth College to any one, and never expect to; for it is not mine and can not possibly become mine to sell. But on account of the large increase of my labors and Mrs. Johnson's, and for the better working of the college, I have accepted a proposition of Mrs. Kidd, a most estimable lady who has been two years in the college and has given the very best satisfaction. By that agreement, Mrs. Kidd becomes the owner of some personal effects in the college; becomes identified with the success of the college; gives her time, her talents, her enterprise to the college. She is willing to work with her head, her heart, her hands in the building up of the college. And I believe otherwise, or that it would not conduce to the greater success of the college, I would not have consented to any arrangement by which she probably becomes permanently connected with the school. I remain here as president of the college, Mrs. Johnson will aid all she can, my daughters will continue to work in their proper places; the faculty will continue a unit and work as faithfully as ever; the trustees will smile upon us; "Guzman" will write approvingly, and let all the people say: Amen.

But if the trustees do not approve and the Mississippi Conference objects, their let them speak, and their voice will be heeded.

I have recently discharged the $3,000 mortgage which was held by Bro. Millsaps. So there is now no lien upon the real estate. I had hoped that the church would do this, but it was overlooked or the church had not the ability. Where does the money come from?

By strict economy, working hard, five members of my family working without a salary, faithful teaching, caring for all our pupils, the school yields the money, and it is all turned back into the college.

Bro. "Guzman," do you think that there is much danger of the church losing Whitworth College?

I am thinking of erecting the center building, but bishops and other leading men say no. Has any one any advice to give or money?

WHITWORTH COLLEGE, April 23, 1881.

Clerical Criticism.

In this hasty world, where people jump at conclusions, an indictment is often mistaken for a verdict. Accusation is almost equivalent to conviction. A man criticised is a man convicted. Suspicion is certainty, at fault. Suspicion is certainty. Hear say, second handed rumors become valid, pertinent testimony. When the jest-end is applied to the gold, the crowd does not wait for the result, but cries aloud, a base counterfeit. When the sun is in eclipse, some fools will always be found who think it night.

Be cautious, brother. The critic himself may be in error. It is but a step from the province of honest criticism and just censure into that of harsh judgment and uncharitable comment. And that step is so easily taken!

This line of thought is historical, current, prophetic. It is suggested here by an actual occurrence. The critic was a preacher. The subject of his criticism was his predecessor. The accused was absent and could not defend himself. The case went against him. The hearers were the people. Harm was done. I would tell all about it, but I fear I should thereby transgress the law in expounding it. As the preacher talked on of the unfaithfulness and shortcomings of his absent brother, of whom I had lately seen him take leave with many fervent protestations of regard and fidelity, I silently prayed that I might avoid the dangerous error into which he so patently fell. There is doubtless a proper time for one preacher to speak of the faults of another; but this bitter, unjust, persistent, prominent, public criticism is wrong in many ways.

It is ungraceful. The code of courtesy among professional men would not sanction such a proceedure. The ancients condemned slander and defamation of character as the basest of crimes. It does not comport with even the least pride of personal purity, nor the most commonplace laws of honor and friendship. Much more is it unbecoming the high dignity of the ministerial office.

It is so finically. Backbiting is the essence of cowardice. Civil and ecclesiastical law unite in avoiding the prosecution of the absent. The public debate provides for the reply and the rejoinder. Even the rabble ring formed to witness a brutal physical contest demands fair play. Have you not sometimes, in the absence of a brother, said what you would not care, nor even dare to say in his presence? Beware. Remember that Paul, when he withstood Peter, did so to his face.

It is unprofitable. It diverts attention, and consequent removal, from the overlooked beam in the critic's own eye. It substitutes other and more edifying subjects of thought and speech. It uselessly detracts from the reputation of a man whose fair character may have hitherto greatly enforced and supported his teachings and his works. Bearing with the minor faults and common frailties of a noble man is not equivalent to countenancing imposture.

It is unscriptural. The Old and New Testaments condemn it. Solomon and Peter unite in the power of the Holy Ghost to declare and enforce that spirit of love which covers a multitude of sins. On the contrary, this carping, chronic criticism uncovereth the multitude of sins. It is not more heinous in itself than it is as the index of an impure heart. The preacher mentioned above seemed actually rejoiced at the discovery of guilt in his brother. The emphasis of another's downfall, you know, exalts the contrasted position of self. Reader, when we view the faults, the follies, the failures of our friends, let us ascend the slope of Calvary, and spy them out from the summit of that hill where Incarnate Love, though possessed of an infinite knowledge of human error, could yet pray: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

Generally the people themselves will quickly discover and promptly condemn any grave error committed by the preacher. They know him. His very thoughts are their servitors. His acts are held aloft, through the necessity of their position for usefulness, to the inspection of the world; and the power of a verdict is abundantly vested in their hands. Of course, you, as a preacher, have many "latch-keys" to the inner life of your brethren. But, brother, use them to reveal to a mistaken public the misunderstood intention, the misinterpreted motive, the hidden beauty of heart, rather than to gloat over an error which, if of serious moment, has already doubtless met a fitting reward in public sentiment. And if the fault be unknown or unnoticed by the many, and its disclosure be not of supreme importance and wholesomeness, regard it with the silence of charity, albeit with aversion, as a secret shoal, the knowledge of whose location and bearings concerns you, and you alone.

P. A. STOR.

BRANDON, Mississippi.

Arkansas Letter.

BY REV. JULIUS P. RAWLS.

Only within the past year or two has anything like a correct idea of Arkansas gained credence east of the Mississippi River. By some unfortunate combination of circumstances this has been considered the last place to which a man's migratory instincts should lead him, especially if he sought a permanent home and wished to better his earthly fortunes while rearing a family to perpetuate his name. The story of the "Arkansas Traveller," the exaggerated statements of emigrants passing through to Texas, the unconscionable newspaper reports, the stories circulated by ubiquitous newspaper reporters, have all conspired to give an unhealthy odor to the name Arkansas, and to prevent an influx of the better class of people from afar, while in a measure progress has been retarded in every department. Light is breaking, however, and the true valuation is being put upon our society, and the immense resources that lie buried beneath our soil, incomparable for fertility and natural adaptation to the wants of the cultivator. The section of Arkansas covered by the White River Conference is unequalled in any land so far as fine agricultural—cotton raising—advantages are concerned. The rich alluvial soil lying on both sides of White River and extending hundreds of miles westward, is, in point of fertility, beauty and capacity, unequalled by any State in the Union; and the many churches, school-houses, and costly residences bear testimony to the moral inclination and amassed wealth of the people. This White River Conference, so seldom mentioned in our church papers, so seldom thought of or looked to by the church at large, it may suprise the reader to learn, is one of the richest and best in all this western field, and even now, though but partially developed, it ranks with any west of the Mississippi. A large per cent of the population to which the White River Conference preachers preach are old North Carolina, Virginia, Alabama and Tennessee emigrants, who settled here years ago and gathered wealth, to which they have held, when not laying it out for the education of their children, or to put in some visible and substantial embodiment the religious and moral ideas they brought with them to the country. The people are liberal, generous and earnestly believe in supporting moral institutions—have a kind of pride that way—and the result is, ministers are paid their salaries and the church prospers. Augusta Station, one among several, has for years paid promptly from $1,000 to $1,300 to the pastor and no deficit. There is no grumbling, growling and consequent friction in the machinery of the church; it moves smoothly without jar or creak, both pastor and people understood, endeavoring to do their entire duty. Our preachers of the Conference are earnest, consecrated men of God and they love the church better than themselves.

Harmony and perfect good-will with fellowship are observable everywhere among the preachers.

We are willing out here to take all young men and give them an equal chance with the older ones.

All who will work and work well, are welcomed here. The glory of God and advancement of moral and religious interests are things of greatest moment, aiming, as consecrated and devoted a set of men as ever composed a Conference in the West; and he, who will come this way and work in this spirit will be welcomed right heartily and will gain ample reward.

AUGUSTA, ARK., April, 1881.

Temperance in Louisiana.

On Tuesday, twelfth of April, the Grand Lodge of the I. O. G. T. of this State, was called to order in this city, in its sixth annual session the fourth having been held in Baton Rouge, the fifth in Morgan City, by Dr. Watkins, P. G. W. C. T. The attendance of the membership was excellent. The officers of the Grand Lodge residing in Morgan City, together with Bro. Samuel S. Keener, the delegate from No. 5 were present.

After conferring the Grand Lodge degree on new members, the regular business of the session was immediately taken up. The Grand Secretary, Bro. Bavilla, read his report showing a total of nine Subordinate Lodges and a membership of two hundred and twenty-one, together with two Juvenile Temples with a membership of seventy-three. A letter from Bro. J. T. Sawyer was then read by the secretary, stating that he had just established a Lodge of our order in Shreveport under the most favorable auspices. Under the head of "Reports of Committees" and "New Business," much valuable work was accomplished. The sessions of each day were occupied in the transaction of business relative to the advancement of temperance throughout the State, and for the wider spread of its principles among our people. The great interest which all manifested in the work, and the unity of sentiment which prevailed, give us much encouragement in entering upon the labors of another year. The meeting adjourned on Thursday night, to meet at the Bible House in this city on the second Tuesday of April next.

GOOD TEMPLAR.

From the Work.

SATARTIA, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. Editor: The second quarterly meeting for Mt. Olivet circuit, Vicksburg district, Mississippi Conference, was held at Wesley Chapel on April 16 and 17. The congregation on Sabbath was very large, serious and attentive. The seed was faithfully sown, and we trust on good ground. Our presiding elder, Bro. J. A. Ellis was at his post and fully adequate to the emergency and importance of the occasion. His sermons were well timed and in the spirit of the Master. He is decidedly adapted to the office of a presiding elder. Our communion service, on Sunday, will long be remembered—the bread and wine—the symbols of the broken body and shed blood of the Saviour of sinners in its spiritual significance and import was felt and realized by many who communorated the solemn feast. We felt, it was good to be there. Our finances were not satisfactory—attributable to the stringency in monetary affairs. Our Sunday schools have all emerged from their winter quarters—have all been reorganized and equipped, and the superintendents and teachers are toiling nobly in this more than interesting field of church work.

The planting operations of this section of the State, are at least one month behind the operations of last year, and, a few at least, are looking forward with some apprehensions to the fulfillment of old Mother Shipton's prophecy in November. Our fruit crop is an entire failure. Peaches, apples, pears, apricots and figs were all killed by the late frosts. Hence, no luxuries in this direction. Our people are becoming very much aroused on the subject of prohibition, and temperance will be a prominent factor in the election, to be held in this State next fall. Notwithstanding, a legislator of legal attainments and Methodist proclivities, can boast of having advocated and spoken in favor of the passage of the "Pratt Law." We will endeavor to keep the ball in motion, until this demon King Alcohol shall be dethroned and banished the State. Up to this time we have had three accessions to the church and have baptized seven children.

W. W. HURST.

SATARTIA, Miss., April 29, 1881.

HOLLY SPRINGS, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: I am at home again, after an absence of eleven days, which were spent chiefly in visiting from house to house, praying with and for the people of my charge, preaching, holding church conferences, and uniting in holy wedlock one couple, viz: Walter Buie and Miss Georgia Magee, both of Franklin county, Miss. An interesting couple. I find an abundance of good, hard, healthy work to do among the good people of my circuit—some of which is very pleasant, and, to me at least, and I trust to others, profitable and some not altogether so pleasant, but perhaps just as essential to the spiritual growth and prosperity of the church. We are having a little trouble—just a little. Not among those who love and obey our discipline and pray for and read our ADVOCATE. No; such people give us but little, if any, trouble. At least my experience has taught me that those who read our church papers are our best supporters in more respects than one. Hence I insist on every one taking a church paper; but I confess I am not as successful in this work as some preachers are. Whether it is because I have a more difficult field to operate in, or from a want of skill on my part, I can not say. Any way, I fail to get all the brethren to see the great advantage to be derived from reading a good church paper. Some I know are very poor, too poor, they say to take a religious paper; but not too poor to take some worthless, fashionable magazine, or attend the last circus that came along; not too poor for that, but too poor, absolutely too poor, to pay two dollars a year for a good religious paper. Not too poor to spend money for whisky, or tobacco, or both, or some other useless article, but too poor to take the ADVOCATE. Their sons are so stingy a hard word, but it is only too true. I once tried to get a member of my charge to subscribe for the Sunday School Visitor. I told him of some of the advantages of having such a paper in a family where there were children, etc., but he objected because there were, he said too many pictures in it. I told him children were naturally fond of pictures, and would read about them when they would not feel any special interest in the matter if there were none. He then objected to a song being put to music in the Visitor, which he said his children could not sing, and he thought it took up too much space. Oh, that miggardly narrow heartedness that is so prominent in some of our people! What a curse it is to the cause of Christ! Some I am willing to admit, have some little reasonable excuse for not taking the paper. The want of mail facilities, and of means to pay, prevent some honest, good people from taking our papers. But what a blessing would it be to us all if our people would read our books and papers! I have sold four or five hundred dollars worth of books during the last few years, such as Bibles, Testaments, Hymn Books, Disciplines, Marvin's Travels, New Life, Catechisms, etc., and the people are still poorly supplied with books. I am rather a poor hand to sell books anyhow, yet I keep trying.

Our people are passing away. Sister Rachael Tarver has passed away; Brother Arthur Rawls is waiting for the summons; Brother John Freeman, a young brother whom I received into the church three years ago, passed triumphantly into the beyond a few days ago.

Farmers are moving on briskly. The young crops are beginning to look well. Oats are beginning to head; cotton is coming up; corn is being worked; potato seed are very scarce; the peach crop is a total failure, but the blackberries bid fair to be abundant.

H. P. LEWIS.

ROLLESVILLE, April 26, 1881.

MILLVIEW, FLORIDA.

Mr. Editor: Millview, Fla., and Ross Point, Ala., were formed into a separate charge, from different circuits or missions, at the last session of the Alabama Conference, and your humble servant was sent to watch over the interests of the new work. Our second Quarterly Conference was held by Dr. Cox, at Ross Point, April 14. I do not think that a single charge in the district can show a more gratifying report. Financially and spiritually, the church is in good condition. Our only cause for mourning is so few souls are saved. Our Sabbath-schools are excellent; $125 has been raised during the year for various Sabbath-school purposes. It is a general remark everywhere that so few children are converted in the Sunday-school. Our schools draw children to Christ.

We protracted our meeting, auspiciously begun by Dr. Cox, for a week. Seldom, if ever, have we witnessed such workings of the Spirit. A number of penitents had been to the altar at every service, but had experienced no relief up to the last night. We worked and prayed with them till quite a late hour, and were ready to give up in despair. What was to be done! The meeting must close, but how could we leave these souls unconverted! We seemed specially directed to have another prayer, during which four were converted. Another prayer for the remaining one followed, and he was converted. There were seven conversions and seven additions to the church, and I believe all of them have reached their majority. No one who is unacquainted with the family ties that were strengthened, and the happiness of the whole congregation, can tell the blessings of that meeting. We have had thirteen applicants for membership within the last two months; the future is still more radiant and hopeful. We have had to war with whisky, and other lesser evils, and believe that we have gained ground. We feel safe in telling our friends that they need no longer regard this work as an experiment, but as a permanent success.

W. F. HURST, P. C.

MOLINO, FLA., April 25, 1881.

LIBERTY, MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Doctor: The Lord is blessing our labors abundantly. During the last twelve months many a wandering sheep has been brought back to the fold, within the bounds of this work.

The attendance on public worship is good, we have prayer-meeting all over the work; the membership is greatly revived, and sinners are being converted to God, without distinction of age or denomination. The demand for hymn-books and Bibles is increasing, and we are endeavoring to obtain a supply. Our people are singing and praying members, their souls have been ignited by the energizing influences of the Holy Ghost, and they manifest the inner life accordingly.

The new converts take up the cross as soon as they are converted, get a hymn-book and Bible and lead in prayer in the public congregation. I am almost tempted to say that the pastor need not sing, or pray either; for the people do both, and rejoice in the privilege. All our male members with few exceptions, lead in prayer in the public congregation.

We have had twelve accessions, though we have not held any of our annual meetings yet.

The work still progresses, and we hope to realize still greater blessings before the close of the year. We are profoundly thankful to Almighty God for this dispensation of his grace, and rejoice that he has raised up laborers to aid us in this great work. We have licensed two exhorters, real, primitive Methodist exhorters, who are doing a great work, and we will license a young man to preach at our next quarterly conference. These facts can not fail to have a salutary effect on the heart of a young preacher.

We praise the Lord, day and night, and devote our time and energies exclusively to his service.

Yours in Christ,

R. F. FLOWERS.

GREENWOOD, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

To-day the workman laid the foundation for a parsonage in Greenwood, one of the oldest charges in this part of North Mississippi Conference. With the agitation of the movement, numbers have prophesied its ultimate failure, and yet there are ominous shakes of the head. What trouble is yet to be encountered, we have no adequate conception. Since engaging in this enterprise, I have thought of the dream I heard one of our present bishops relate while editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, struggling hard against unforeseen difficulties to make it a success. I suppose few would be the enterprises undertaken if we could always foresee the cost, the trouble and labor to succeed. But with putting in our prayers and faith, and building our very blood and muscles into it, we expect to carry the cap-stone up with a "shout of grace unto it."

We have two Sunday schools and good congregations.

J. D. N.

April 23, 1881.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1881.

From the Baltimore Christian Advocate

THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD.

The church and the world walked far apart,
On the changing shore of time;
The world was singing a giddy song,
And the church a hymn sublime.
"Come give me your hand," cried the merry world,
"And walk with me this way."
But the good church hid her snowy hand,
And solemnly answered: "Nay,
I will not give you my hand at all,
And I will not walk with you;
Your way is the way to endless death,
Your words are all untrue."

"Nay, walk with me but a little space,"
Said the world with a kindly air,
"The road I walk is a pleasant road,
And the sun shines always there.
My path, you see, is a broad, fair one,
And my gate is high and wide,
There is room enough for you and me
To travel side by side."

Half shyly the church approached the world,
And gave him her hand of snow.
The old world grasped it and walked along,
Saying in accents low:
"Your dress is too simple to please my taste,
I will give you pearls to wear,
Rich velvets and silks for your graceful form,
And diamonds to deck your hair."
The church looked down at her plain white robe,
And then at the dazzling world,
And blushed as she saw his handsome lip
With a smile contemptuous curled.

"I will change my dress for a costlier one,"
Said the church with a smile of grace.
Then her pure white garments drifted away,
And the world gave in their place
Beautiful satins and shining silks,
And rose and gems and pearls,
While over her forehead her bright hair fell,
Crisped in a thousand curls.

"Your house is too plain," said the proud old world,
"I'll build you one like mine—
Carpets of Brussels and curtains of lace,
And furniture rare and fine."
So he built her a costly and beautiful house,
Splendid it was to behold,
Its doors and its windows and beautiful draperies dazzled there,
Gleaming in purple and gold.

The Angel of Mercy hovered over the church,
To gather the children in,
But some were off at the midnight ball,
And some were at the play,
And some were drinking in gaudy saloons,
So she quietly wept her way.
Then the shameless world gaily said to the church,
"Your children mean me no harm,
Merely indulging in innocent sports,"
So she leaned on his proffered arm,
And smiled and chatted and gathered flowers,
As she walked along with the world,
While millions and millions of deathless souls
To the burning pit were hurled.

"You give too much to the poor," said the world,
"Far more than you ought to do.
If the poor need shelter and food and clothes
Why need it trouble you?
Go, take your money and buy rich robes,
And horses and carriages fine,
And pearls and jewels and dainty food,
And the rarest and costliest wine.
My children they do on all such things,
And if you their love would win,
You must do as they do and walk in the ways
That they are walking in."

Then the church held tightly the string of her purse,
And, gracefully lowering her head,
And stumpered: "I've given too much away,
I'll do, sir, as you have said."
So the poor were turned from her door in scorn,
And she heard not the orphan's cry,
And she drew her beautiful robes aside
As the widows went weeping by.
And the sons of the world, and the sons of the church,
Wicked, beastly, fiend and beast,
And only the Master, who knoweth all,
Could tell the two apart.

Then the church sat down to her ease, and said:
"I am rich and in goods increased;
I have need of nothing, and naught to do,
But to laugh and shrug and feast."
The sly old world heard her and laughed in his sleeve,
And mockingly said aside:
"The church is fallen, the beautiful church,
And her shame is her boast and pride."

The Angel drew near to the mercy seat,
And whispered in sighs her name;
The saints their anthems of rapture hushed,
And covered their heads with shame.
Then a voice came down through the hush of heaven,
From Him who sat on the throne:
"I know thy works, and how thou hast said,
'I am rich,' and hast not known
That thou art naked, poor and blind,
And wretched before my face;
Therefore from my presence I cast thee out,
And blot thy name from its place."

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

Second Quarter—Lesson VIII.

GOLDEN TEXT. "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Luke xi, 9.

SUNDAY, MAY 22, 1881.—LUKE XVIII, 1-14

1. And he spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray and not to faint;
2. Saying, There was in a city a judge, which feared not God, neither regarded man.
3. And there was a widow in that city; and she came unto him, saying, Avenge me of mine adversary.
4. And he would not for a while: but afterward he said within himself, Though I fear not God, nor regard man;
5. Yet, because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me.
6. And the Lord said, Hear what the unjust judge saith.
7. And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them?
8. I tell you that he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?
9. And he spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others:
10. Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican.
11. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican.
12. I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess.
13. And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.
14. I tell you this man went down to his house justified rather than the other: for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

Verse 1. And he spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint.

Here is a parable whose design and teaching are pretexsl. This bold comparison, which nonehut the Son of God might venture to use, can not be left to the uncertain explanation of man. The key to its meaning is given us by inspiration. Having the key, we can unlock the door, and venture into the mysteries of this parable. Had this parable been left us without the key hanging out, what could we have made of it?

"There was in a city a judge, which feared not God, neither regarded man." "And there was a widow in that city; and she came unto him, saying, Avenge me of mine adversary. And he would not for awhile: but afterward he said within himself, Though I fear not God, nor regard man, yet, because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me."

We can not but be startled at the thought of God being compared with this unrighteous judge. Notice his character: Not merely was there wanting in him the higher motive, the fear of God, but even its poor and miserable substitute, the respect for the opinion of the world, was wanting. What a hopeless case this widow had; though her cause was just, she must bring it before an unjust judge. But she goes to him and presents her petition, not for revenge, but for simple justice—deliver me from my enemy, obtain justice for me. She succeeds, not by the justice of her cause, nor through the integrity of the judge, but by dint of her continual asking. The judge is impelled to justify this woman in spite of his selfishness. I will grant her request, because if I do not she will worry the very life out of me. "Hear what the unjust judge saith. And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you that he will avenge them speedily."

To read this aright the emphasis must be given to the word unjust. Hear what the unjust judge saith: "And shall not God," who is perfectly just and good, "avenge his own elect?" If a man, caring not for right or wrong, could be persuaded to do a justice by persevering asking, will persevering asking fail to persuade God, who loves right and justice when they who ask are his own chosen people. How precious is this Evil-gion, to the people of God. In times of distress "they cry day and night unto him," and sometimes it seems as though he heard not. Yet it is not so. "Sure I am that Lord will avenge the poor, and maintain the cause of the helpless." "Though he bear long with them." This does not mean though he bear long with their sins, but means though he delay long with them, though he may seem to us slow in executing vengeance, God will not leave his people a moment longer in the fires of affliction than is needful; he delivers them from it the instant patience has its perfect work. The relief, which to man's impatience seems to tarry long, indeed arrives speedily. It could not have arrived a moment earlier. The trouble is not on God's side, but on man's; notwithstanding all the willingness upon the part of God to answer speedily, yet men are not found asking and expecting, but when praying they are quick to despond, and, instead of adding to faith virtue, they faint. With such a prayer answering God as ours, men ought always to pray, and not to faint. How many fainting spells Christians have when they pray. The long winter between the sowing time and the reaping time of prayer discourages the faint-hearted. God wants us to importune him, not that he does not know before we ask him the very things we need, but our importunities are the gauge of our faith. They are the preparation of our heart to receive the answer to our requests. The lesson in this parable is to encourage us to greater persistence in prayer. We all pray too short; we faint too soon. The time spent by Christians in private devotion is, in its shortness, amazing. Who gives one hour to prayer out of the twenty-four of each day? Pray intensely. Pray longer, name it all over, plead the promise of this text, and you will realize that upon yourself is resting the personal regard of our Father, sympathizing with you in all your trouble, and listening to your complaints with a view to mightily and speedily avenging you.

This parable of the importunate widow is to show the intensity in prayer, and now he proceeds to tell us something about the spirit of prayer. "He spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others." The persons for whom this parable is spoken are designated, and it is to you and all other persons that may come within this description. Trusters in self and despisers of others. What a vast company of auditors has this parable.

There seems to be only two qualifications to bring us under the range of its truth; but really there is but one, for he that trusts in himself, that he is righteous, must despise others, for the spirit which exalts self is identical with that which debases others. This is in essence the thing so hateful to God, which men call egotism; but God calls idolatry. I, is the idol that is set up to receive the adoration and reverent service which our God demands of every man, and which he will have. The first born lord into the world was one of these trusters in self and despisers of others. He has many followers in the world to-day. Let all such listen to the lesson of the parable.

"Two men," therefore two sinners, "went up into the temple to pray." However they may have been unlike in other respects, they were alike in that they were both children of wrath. "One was a Pharisee, and the other a publican;" the one a church man and the other a worldling and an outsider. They both prayed, but in such different ways and with such different results. The one had his answer from God and the other from his god, which was his own self.

These two worshipers are the exponents of all the worshipers in the world. One prayer is an exponent of the religion of self, and the other of the religion of faith.

We notice the religion of self, or natural religion, as it is portrayed before our eyes in the prayer of the Pharisee. He stood and prayed thus with himself, and it might have been added, "to himself," though he did mention the name of God. He took his position to himself like a true separatist. He prayed; that is, he boasted a little confidentially in the ears of God; with a slight phase of thanks he told God how good he was. He praised rather than prayed, and praised himself rather than God; in fact, he was so full of himself that he forgot to pray at all; as if he had no sin, he asked no forgiveness; as if he had no defect or weakness, he asked no aid; as if he had no wants, he asked no favors. Under the name of thanks he enumerates other men's faults, "extortioners, unjust, adulterers," and informs God that he has none. He confesses sin, but not his own. Other men's failings are the foil for his virtues. By an unfortunate slip he shows his false heart by referring to the publican. He now tells what he does. He fasts twice a week, and gives tithes of everything. He even counts the herbs in his garden, and gives every tenth sprout. What I am and what other men are not, and what I am not and other men are. He rings the changes on this narrow and imaginary margin, that even the eye of God can not see. His righteousness was a minus quantity, as it consisted in what others were not. This prayer gives us this man's religion. It was self-made; God had no hand in it. The religion of God humbles self and exalts others, but this man's exalted self and debased others. He trusted in himself that he was righteous. This man thinks he is moving upward because he watches the souls of men falling downward. He is as much deceived as the child who thought the station house was swiftly moving when he awoke and saw the express train thundering by the window. When the train had passed he found out his mistake. And so will this man when the judgment day comes. But notice the religion of faith in the prayer of the publican. He stands with eyes averted, smiting upon his breast, for it pained him, and cries: "God be merciful to me a sinner;" be propitiated for my sins. He had no place in heart or mind for any other thing than me a sinner. My sins, not mother's. He cannot think of another who is in more need than himself. He comes with an awful secret in his breast. Me a sinner, a sinner against God. He made no preparation before he went to the temple; he could make none, he was a sinner. He repents his cry, and at every repetition the term sinner had a new meaning. All the sins of his life came up, multitudinous in variety, and each variety made the name sinner take on new significance.

How swift the processes of the soul under the contrition of a thorough repentance. My sins, their enormity, their consequences, their guilt. He feels and hears the sentence of death passed upon him; his feet take hold upon death; despairing he cries again: "Be merciful!" In this extremity God whispers peace to his soul. Son, be of good cheer, thy sins be forgiven thee; go in peace.

This is the prayer of faith; this is a prayer that God will always answer. How different are these prayers. One is mockery, the other is music the angels rejoice to hear. The one goes down to his house justified rather than the other. Rather. There are no degrees in justification. When God makes a man just he is altogether just. But both these men are spoken of as justified. But one had the justification which is by faith, which brings with it peace with God, and the other was justified by himself, which brought him no peace with God, but peace with himself. One went down to his house justified; he came up unjustified. If it was late in the evening when he went up to the temple, then the next morning was the first time in his life he saw the sun rise. If it was morning, then that evening he saw for the first time the sun set, for he was a new man, with new eyes and new soul. Do you remember the day you went down to your house justified? Oh, that day! that hour! Can Heaven reveal a brighter one? How many come to the temple and go to their homes, come and go again and again, and never know the joy of pardoned sins. Would you know this joy, say this prayer as the publican did?

Methodist Schools in Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: To say, as some believe, that Methodist schools in Alabama have been a failure is not the truth. But a fact is stated when it is said that the results have not been commensurate with the expenditures. Their history, in some respects, presents to us a sad reflection. Some of our best colleges, male and female, have passed entirely out of our hands. The present condition of others, their probable future, and what can be done, involve a question full of anxiety and perplexity.

The Alabama Conference says "the Southern University ought to be endowed," and so says every friend to that institution. But how is it to be done? That the Methodist Church in Alabama is able to endow it does not admit a reasonable doubt. That the church is willing to do it may be so. But why is it not done? The chief reason lies in a want of confidence that the fund, if raised, will be securely invested and properly managed. In spite of all, you may say about the sequences [illegible] we meet at every town with the question: What has become of the large amounts donated to the church for educational and other purposes? The lamented Hamilton confronted this difficulty, and the last agent, Bro. Powers, would tell you that this is the chief obstacle. Now, if there is any way to remove this difficulty, and inspire confidence, as layman says, there are many, very many, poor men who would give from $100 to $1,000 to save an institution so important to the church and rising generation. Who will suggest the method for removing the difficulty?

In conclusion, Mr. Editor, while it does not come exactly under this head, here is such a good place for it, you must allow me to say, ought not the Methodists in Alabama, guided by the "lamp of experience" on the educational question, learn wisdom on the subject of multiplying church papers?

GEO. F. ELLIS.

SHILOH, ALA., April 10, 1881.

In Memoriam.

REV. D. M. HUDSON.

Rev. Daniel Mason Hudson was born in the State of Ohio, February 12, 1822, and died, in the town of Tuskegee, Ala., on the night of April 12, 1881. He was converted at the early age of twelve years, but, being prompted to delay a profession of faith in Christ, by a formal reception into the church, he lost the fervor of his first love, and lapsed into a state of lukewarmness and spiritual indifference. His father was a minister, and a physician in the Baptist church, for whom he ever retained the deepest regard and affection. He received the advantages of classical training, and was graduated with credit to himself, in his native State, paying his board by chopping fire-wood. At the age of twelve years, such were his thirst for knowledge and mental advancement that he completed the reading of "Josephus," thus laying the foundation for that historical taste and accuracy for which he was in after years so remarkable.

At the age of twenty-four he came South, and soon thereafter was engaged in teaching school at McKinley, Ala. While there the Spirit of God touched and moved his heart under the preaching, as I am informed, of Rev. Andrew J. Crawford, whose name and memory are cherished by many of his surviving brethren in the ministry and laity. The writer makes no attempt to penetrate into the inner chambers of our brother's soul, as, under the light and power of the Holy Ghost, his past imperfections and delinquencies in his religious life were revealed to his sight. We essay not to lift the veil, and reveal those secret and profound emotions of contrition, awaked by the faithful preaching of the word, and the recollections of paternal counsel. Sufficient is it to say that our brother's repentance was strong enough to produce the fruits of a thorough reformation in his spiritual life and experience. A positive call to preach the gospel of Christ was involved with an increased clearness and emphasis in this restoration to the favor of his Lord, and, after having passed through an ordeal of mental struggle, which words are inadequate to express, he consented to render obedience to the voice divine, and become a messenger of salvation to lost men. The church regarding him a proper person to minister at her altars, added her official approval to the higher call of God, and thus bade him go forth to his "work and labor of love." The most gifted pens have ever refused to record those profound emotions that thrill and shake a preacher's soul, when for the first time he looks upon the fragment of paper, bearing upon its face a license to preach the gospel. No one has ever yet given adequate expression to the tossings of soul, produced by fears, and a sense of those weaknesses which even St. Paul tells us were his when he surveyed the vast responsibilities involved in the ministry of the word. "Who is sufficient for these things?" is the apostle's cry, that merely utters its exclamation at the magnitude of the work. I doubt not that our brother entered upon his ministry fully impressed and moved by the fact that "It is not a cause of small import

The pastor's care engrands;
Do what might fill an angel's heart,
And filled a Saviour's hands."

In the winter of the year 1853 he knocked at the door of the Alabama Conference for admission on trial, and it was opened to him. At the close of his four years, after having stood an approved examination before the Conference committees, he was ordained an "elder in the church of God" by the imposition of the hands of Bishop Early, in the city of Selma, Ala. As one of his class-mates, it may not be improper for me to state that during those years of examination Bro. Hudson ever evinced a familiarity with the "books of study," and a ripeness of general scholarship that placed him for four consecutive years, at least, among the first of his Conference associates.

During his itinerant ministry among us, reaching through a quarter of a century, he has served on stations, circuits and districts, filling the office of presiding elder for eight years. While serving on the Canton district he was "in labors abundant," and such was the exposure of health, to changing weather, that asthma developed itself, and began its assaults upon a constitution not naturally strong. He, however, retained his "effective relation" to the Conference, laboring even beyond his bodily strength, so that I doubt not our brother's life was, even before superannuation, marked by many a page and chapter of unrecorded weakness, prostration and suffering. He was last appointed preacher in charge of Tuskegee circuit, where he labored for four consecutive years. But health and strength were failing more rapidly than ever, and the preacher, weary and weak, would not unfrequently almost drag his effeebled body to the post of duty. "Faint but still pursuing," he "went to his appointments," preaching to congregations that were perhaps not aware of the suffering and increasing infirmity of the man of God.

At the Conference before the last, held in Tuskegee, his brethren, seeing at a glance that his health and strength had so far yielded to the attacks of disease, asked for him a superannuated relation, which was granted. What a test to a preacher's faith and patience is superannuation, specially so when preceding years have been filled up with unremitting toil in the vineyard of his Lord. To be called in from the midst of the strong reapers, gathering sheaves for the garner of God, and "laid on the shelf," is indeed harded to bear than the most onerous labors. To learn to labor and to wait is a lesson not easily mastered by him who has "a mind to work." But when our brother hung his trumpet on the wall, he did it with the same spirit of obedience that prompted him to obey the voice of the Master bidding him, years before, "Go ye and preach the gospel."

For the space of two years he spent scarcely an hour free from pain, and at times such was the severity of his suffering that it was feared that life itself would yield to the unspeakable anguish.

But a more resigned and patient sufferer has seldom if ever been seen, for even amid the severest paroxysms of pain he never murmured, and, saying, even amid his struggles for breath: "If God sees fit to afflict me it is all right."

Just before consciousness left him Bro. W. D. Owens, preacher in charge of Tuskegee circuit, with the attending physician, held a brief service of reading, prayer and song with him, into the spirit of which he most heartily entered. That grand old song, "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord, is laid for your faith in his excellent word," etc., was sung, and the dying preacher, catching the glowing inspiration of the sentiment of the hymn, grasped the hand of the writer, as we stood beside his death-bed, exclaiming: "Christ is my Rock and my Foundation." Just before this, he said, with joyous assurance: "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want," etc.

His last moments were indeed those of a well-grounded trust in that Saviour whose gospel he had preached so broadly and fully to others.

Free from struggle, either of body or of mind, the lamp of his life went out, and was lost amid the richer light of the paradise of God, just as the morning star fades before the clearer rays of the rising day.

A few minutes before the clock struck the hour of nine, on the night of April 12, his head was adjusted upon its pillow, and gently, as an infant falling asleep upon its mother's bosom, the soul of Daniel M. Hudson passed away to God who gave it. Our brother has now entered into that rest remaining to the people of God. Though so long tried by "torture's fiery test," he is forever free from pain and struggle. Lo! the prisoner is indeed released, and life's warfare is followed by the victor's crown and palm. Happy, thrice happy, therefore, the exchange for him.

We mourn not as do the hopeless. We remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said: "I am the resurrection and the life."

His remains were taken to the church, by cherished and beloved friends, and the funeral services were conducted by the writer, introduced by Bro. Hudson's favorite funeral hymn, and used at the request of his bereaved wife.

"Unveil thy bosom, faithful tomb;
Take this new treasure to thy trust."

Psalms cxvi, 15: "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints," was selected as the text, and, after interpreting a presentation of its delightful truths, we sang the hymn:

"What though the arm of conquering death,
Does God's own house invade."

Conveying his remains to the cemetery, and using the beautiful and impressive service of the church in their interment, we left the mortal body of our brother to repose in death until Christ shall bid it rise. Our brother leaves a widow, whom he married September 8, 1856, and seven dependent children.

Sister Hudson is nobly exerting herself to secure a support for her children, and we pray that strength may be given her to bear the burden of her responsibility and labor.

But here we arrest the further progress of this imperfect tribute to the memory of our departed friend and brother in Christ. God grant us a happy reunion on "the other side."

J. HANCOCK.

TUSKEGEE, ALA., April 29, 1881.

—At the Free School in Telegraphy at Cooper Union, New York, there are twenty-five young women. The school hours are from nine to two. There is no fee, a teacher having furnished it without charge. One term is usually sufficient to qualify one for an ordinary position.

Marriages.

DICKSON—DICKSON.—At Whistler, Ala., April 24, 1881, by Rev. J. J. Grace, M. D., Mr. Wm. H. Dickson to Miss Lucy A. Dickson.

HAWKINS—HAWKINS.—At Whistler, Ala., April 1881, by Rev. J. J. Grace, M. D., Mr. Chas. H. to Miss Mary Ann Hawkins, both of Whistler, Ala.

RHODES—RIGGLES.—At Whistler, Ala., May 1881, by Rev. J. J. Grace, M. D., Mr. William Rhodes, of Moss Point, Jackson county, Miss., to Miss Laura Riggles, of Whistler, Ala.

MURPHY—CULBREATH.—At the residence of the bride's father, April 25, 1881, by Rev. W. F. Watkinson, Mr. J. L. Murphy, of Barbour county, Ala., to Miss Leila A. Culbreath, of Loachapoka, Ala.

SISK—HUDSON.—At the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Tuskegee, Ala., May 3, 1881, by Rev. J. Bauercroft, Mr. F. M. Sisk and Miss Carrie M. Hudson, eldest daughter of the late Rev. D. M. Hudson, of the Alabama Conference.

PACKARD—WILLIAMS.—At the residence of the bride's father, J. B. Williams, Esq., April 27, 1881, by the Rev. Lewis A. Reed, Mr. Charles W. Packard, Jr., to Miss Sarah E. Williams, all of Algiers, La.

JOHNSON—GORDY.—At the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Franklin, St. Mary parish, La., April 26 at eight o'clock, P. M., by Rev. T. K. Le Roy, Mr. Louis Frank Johnson and Miss Gertrude Gordy, both of St. Mary parish, La.

RAHUN—SHOEMAKER.—At Trenton, La., May 6, 1881, by Rev. B. F. White, Mr. William Rahun to Miss Mary Shoemaker.

BUIE—MAGEE.—At the residence of the bride's father, in Franklin county, Miss., April 21, 1881, by Rev. H. P. Lewis, Mr. Walter M. Buie to Miss Georgia Magee.

Obituaries.

RUTLEDGE.—SAMUEL RUTLEDGE was born in State of Georgia, November 11, 1799, and died at his residence, near Hazlehurst, Copiah county, Miss., March 9, 1881, aged eighty-five years.

Father Rutledge made a profession of faith in Christ at an early age, and united with the Methodist Church under the pastorate of Rev. T. L. Wilson. For more than half a century his shining embodiment of that primitive type of Methodism which has been aptly characterized as "Christianity in earnest."

Until the infirmities of age militated against it, he constantly filled some one of the various offices of the Church, manifesting in the discharge of his duties a zeal and energy worthy of imitation.

Few men understood the doctrines of Methodism better than he, and few more faithfully sing, "I love thy church, O God." The writer has been favored with the friendship of many good, pious persons, but the example of spotless integrity was to him "a light upon a candlestick," he has yet to see. In piety shone with a more steady and consistent lustre. His pastor, calling to our fold, was not specially impressed with the fervor of his prayers on the week day as well as on Sabbath in the social circle as well as in the sanctuary of the Lord, but the worrying cares of business, the oft-repeated prayer closet, and the short, but prevailing communion of soul with God. Yet his piety was not of that kind which is chiefly to be seen, but was of that genial, mellow and a sanctimonious air, and regard for the rights of others, which was the spirit of which the most heartily entertained. That grand old song, "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord, is laid for your faith in his excellent word," etc., was sung, and the dying preacher, catching the glowing inspiration of the sentiment of the hymn, grasped the hand of the writer, as we stood beside his death-bed, exclaiming: "Christ is my Rock and my Foundation." Just before this, he said, with joyous assurance: "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want," etc.

His last moments were indeed those of a well-grounded trust in that Saviour whose gospel he had preached so broadly and fully to others.

Free from struggle, either of body or of mind, the lamp of his life went out, and was lost amid the richer light of the paradise of God, just as the morning star fades before the clearer rays of the rising day.

A few minutes before the clock struck the hour of nine, on the night of April 12, his head was adjusted upon its pillow, and gently, as an infant falling asleep upon its mother's bosom, the soul of Daniel M. Hudson passed away to God who gave it. Our brother has now entered into that rest remaining to the people of God. Though so long tried by "torture's fiery test," he is forever free from pain and struggle. Lo! the prisoner is indeed released, and life's warfare is followed by the victor's crown and palm. Happy, thrice happy, therefore, the exchange for him.

We mourn not as do the hopeless. We remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said: "I am the resurrection and the life."

His remains were taken to the church, by cherished and beloved friends, and the funeral services were conducted by the writer, introduced by Bro. Hudson's favorite funeral hymn, and used at the request of his bereaved wife.

"Unveil thy bosom, faithful tomb;
Take this new treasure to thy trust."

Psalms cxvi, 15: "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints," was selected as the text, and, after interpreting a presentation of its delightful truths, we sang the hymn:

"What though the arm of conquering death,
Does God's own house invade."

Conveying his remains to the cemetery, and using the beautiful and impressive service of the church in their interment, we left the mortal body of our brother to repose in death until Christ shall bid it rise. Our brother leaves a widow, whom he married September 8, 1856, and seven dependent children.

Sister Hudson is nobly exerting herself to secure a support for her children, and we pray that strength may be given her to bear the burden of her responsibility and labor.

But here we arrest the further progress of this imperfect tribute to the memory of our departed friend and brother in Christ. God grant us a happy reunion on "the other side."

J. HANCOCK.

TUSKEGEE, ALA., April 29, 1881.

RUTLEDGE.—SAMUEL RUTLEDGE was born in State of Georgia, November 11, 1799, died at his residence, near Hazlehurst, Copiah county, Miss., March 9, 1881, aged eighty-five years.

Father Rutledge made a profession of faith in Christ at an early age, and united with the Methodist Church under the pastorate of Rev. T. L. Wilson. For more than half a century his shining embodiment of that primitive type of Methodism which has been aptly characterized as "Christianity in earnest."

Until the infirmities of age militated against it, he constantly filled some one of the various offices of the Church, manifesting in the discharge of his duties a zeal and energy worthy of imitation.

Few men understood the doctrines of Methodism better than he, and few more faithfully sing, "I love thy church, O God." The writer has been favored with the friendship of many good, pious persons, but the example of spotless integrity was to him "a light upon a candlestick," he has yet to see. In piety shone with a more steady and consistent lustre. His pastor, calling to our fold, was not specially impressed with the fervor of his prayers on the week day as well as on Sabbath in the social circle as well as in the sanctuary of the Lord, but the worrying cares of business, the oft-repeated prayer closet, and the short, but prevailing communion of soul with God. Yet his piety was not of that kind which is chiefly to be seen, but was of that genial, mellow and a sanctimonious air, and regard for the rights of others, which was the spirit of which the most heartily entertained. That grand old song, "How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord, is laid for your faith in his excellent word," etc., was sung, and the dying preacher, catching the glowing inspiration of the sentiment of the hymn, grasped the hand of the writer, as we stood beside his death-bed, exclaiming: "Christ is my Rock and my Foundation." Just before this, he said, with joyous assurance: "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want," etc.

His last moments were indeed those of a well-grounded trust in that Saviour whose gospel he had preached so broadly and fully to others.

Free from struggle, either of body or of mind, the lamp of his life went out, and was lost amid the richer light of the paradise of God, just as the morning star fades before the clearer rays of the rising day.

A few minutes before the clock struck the hour of nine, on the night of April 12, his head was adjusted upon its pillow, and gently, as an infant falling asleep upon its mother's bosom, the soul of Daniel M. Hudson passed away to God who gave it. Our brother has now entered into that rest remaining to the people of God. Though so long tried by "torture's fiery test," he is forever free from pain and struggle. Lo! the prisoner is indeed released, and life's warfare is followed by the victor's crown and palm. Happy, thrice happy, therefore, the exchange for him.

We mourn not as do the hopeless. We remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said: "I am the resurrection and the life."

His remains were taken to the church, by cherished and beloved friends, and the funeral services were conducted by the writer, introduced by Bro. Hudson's favorite funeral hymn, and used at the request of his bereaved wife.

"Unveil thy bosom, faithful tomb;
Take this new treasure to thy trust."

Psalms cxvi, 15: "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints," was selected as the text, and, after interpreting a presentation of its delightful truths, we sang the hymn:

"What though the arm of conquering death,
Does God's own house invade."

Conveying his remains to the cemetery, and using the beautiful and impressive service of the church in their interment, we left the mortal body of our brother to repose in death until Christ shall bid it rise. Our brother leaves a widow, whom he married September 8, 1856, and seven dependent children.

Sister Hudson is nobly exerting herself to secure a support for her children, and we pray that strength may be given her to bear the burden of her responsibility and labor.

But here we arrest the further progress of this imperfect tribute to the memory of our departed friend and brother in Christ. God grant us a happy reunion on "the other side."

J. HANCOCK.

TUSKEGEE, ALA., April 29, 1881.

Christian Advocate.

NEW ORLEANS, MAY 12, 1881.

IN IDLENESS.

Master Thou whose wisdom every secret
Might'st still see,
Whose mercy judgeth kindly, look, and judge
My work and me.

How did I linger-hearted did I hasten at thy Call,
I, part of laborers I have not been idle,
Not all?

And rising early, for the sun and for the Rising in Thy dear service sweat of brow and Heart's blood.

Master, dost thou care not that my hands
Have lost their skill?
And while the nerveless, unresponsive to Thy will,

Careless just me where I droop upon
Some happier reapers sheats from slopes
Of sun.

Leaves on without me, and thy fields no
Thing to my service, O my Lord,
Could I gathered wrought offered at Thy word.

Yet I brought thee there were
Days to bless thee when the sunshine
Of Thy countenance upon the reapers' words
Of cheer fell.

Yet just the time was but
Of precious—yet it was my love.

The Churchman

Notes of Life.

Bryant Stronghorn, a resident of Person county, North Carolina, died November 12, 1799. His wife was Lucy Paine. My mother's name was Mary Ann Stronghorn. She was born in Oxford, N. C., where her father, Col. John W. Walker, resided. Her father, Capt. Ralph Williams, was an officer in the War of the Revolution, and fought it out. Bartram Stronghorn left Person county after the death of Lord Cornwallis, when he returned to his long his residence, and gathered his horses and fencing together, his stock and most of his negroes, taken away by the British. His wife and children, fugitives, found a refuge in the house of his cousin, Col. Early, and Thos. Logan Douglass, in 1780. They belonged to the Virginia Conference, and I was born and raised, young, attended by a nurse that Conference.

As to the brothers of my grandfather, the writer knows but little. John settled in Person county at a place well known fifty years ago as "Palmer's Ordinary." He raised one son, John, a very popular citizen, who represented his county in the Legislature of the State whenever he chose to forego the pleasure of domestic life. His daughters, who by marriage became respectively, Mrs. Carter, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Walthall and Mrs. Gen. Atkinson, were wealthy and prosperous ladies, some of whose descendants still live in that and other Southern States. James resided all his life in Warren county, N. C., and his many descendants have scattered widely in the Southwest. The same remarks apply to William's posterity. He also died in his native county. Nashville Christian Advocate.

Combining the Graces.

The sister of a little boy had died. It was before the age of photographs, and no likeness remained of the dear one, but in the fond memories of her friends. The little brother was inconsolable. "Couldn't somebody paint a picture of sister?" The parents reasoned, "But you have no little picture, or anything, to show the painter. How could he tell what your sister looked like?" "I could tell him," said the boy. At last, to gratify and console the boy, he was sent to Boston on a visit to friends, and authorized to make the attempt to find a painter who could produce the likeness of a girl he had never seen, and of whom no likeness remained. He went to one painter, and then to another. But they shook their heads. "At last one, younger, perhaps, and more enthusiastic, said to the boy, "Come with me where we will see many pictures of people, and point out one that looks like your sister." They went to a gallery of portraits. "That is like her eyes," he said, pointing to one. "Her hair was just like that," he again exclaimed. "Her mouth was just like that." "That is her forehead;" and thus, feature after feature, he pointed out the likeness of his dead sister. And the painter, by combining all these in one, made a portrait that all her friends said was a perfect image of the loved and lost! So in the likeness of Christ among men; you can't find it, or anything nearly approaching it, in any one man, or any one circle of men. But pick out the likeness of Christ among Christians, feature by feature, and there is more of the likeness of the great Master than we imagined!

CHRISTIAN "GIVING UP." It is a pitiful thing to see a young disciple going about and asking everybody how much he must "give up" in order to be a Christian. Unfortunately, many of those who take it upon themselves to instruct him, give him the same impression of Christian discipleship that it consists chiefly of giving up things that one likes to find pleasure in. But a man in solitary confinement might as well talk about what he must "give up" if he is pardoned out of prison, or a patient in consumption about what he must "give up" in order to get well. The prisoner must give up his fetters, and the invalid his pains and his weakness: these are the main things to be sacrificed. It is true that the one has the privilege of living without work, and the other the privilege of lying abed all day; these are privileges that must be relinquished, no doubt. And so there are certain sacrifices to be made by him who enters upon the Christian life; but they are "not worthy to be compared" with the liberty, and dignity and joy into which the Christian life introduces us; and to put the emphasis on this negative side of the Christian experience, as so many are inclined to do, is a great mistake.—Sunday Afternoon.

A HAPPY RELIGION. Charles Finney and Judge Andrews once went to see an old Christian lady. The judge was then a stranger to religion. This woman, who was no half-hearted, but a full-souled disciple, and whose religion made her happy, began to tell what Christ had done for her with so much cheerfulness, that she riveted the attention of Judge Andrews. It was not long before a tear moistened his eye. She continued her discourse, evidently happy and joyful in God, and he listened on for forty-five minutes, and became deeply impressed. When he and Mr. Finney left, he said to him, "If this is the religion of Jesus Christ, I am determined that I will not rest till I possess it and know what it is."

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—Educational movement in the Foochow mission. A remarkable interest has lately developed in this direction in our Foochow mission, which is shared by other parts of our work in China. Our missionaries feel deeply the necessity of advanced action in the establishment and endowment of a higher institution of learning, a college or university under our auspices, which shall fill the demand of the awakening youth of China for instruction in English, as well as the Mandarin, and in all the Western Sciences. Dr. Maclay was profoundly interested in the subject during his stay in Foochow. He is fully convinced that an important crisis has arrived in the history of our mission, when to advance in any degree as we ought, education must become a more prominent element of our work. He writes to this effect, in a letter dated Feb. 3, at Nagasaki, Japan. Our missionaries at Foochow also present, in their letters, the claims of this enterprise with the same urgency. Our native preachers are quite alive to it. Next to gospel preaching, nothing is so much needed, at this moment, in Southern China, as a Protestant University. Let the wealthy men of our Methodism who want to put a mighty lever under humanity and lift it, in God's strength to the full height of his truth, ponder the claims of this great cause which speaks so loudly in Foochow, nor ponder long before the gifts shall follow the instruction with life and magnificent promise.—Central Christian Advocate.

Dr. Maclay's arrival in Yokohama, Feb. 4. He was there tendered a formal reception by the members of our mission force in Yokohama and Tokio, which was, to the much beloved superintendent, a perfect surprise and an occasion of great joy. In his absence he spent twenty-two days at Shanghai, a month at Foochow, and eight days at Kinkiang. He has assumed, in addition to his own duties, part of the work of Rev. Mr. Cornet, who is en route for America. Our brethren in Japan express an earnest desire for the full restoration of the superintendent's health. Rev. C. S. Long writes from Nagasaki: "We cannot yet afford to lose him from the mission. His long experience in the work greatly qualifies him for superintending the affairs of this growing mission."—Zion's Herald.

Dr. Frederic T. Brown favors the Foreign Missionary with the following extract from a private letter from President Angell, Minister Extraordinary to China: "We are all much interested in the work of the large company of missionaries in and near Peking. Representing different societies, English and American, they live in beautiful amity. They are working under many discouragements with a patience and devotion which are Christlike, and are reaping more fruits than I had expected to find."

—A case of human sacrifice has occurred in the Vizagapatam Hill Tracts, India. A number of hill-men, who had planned a raid on a neighboring police station, sought to procure divine favor by the offering of a sacrifice. They made a descent on Chitrakonda, and carried off several villagers, including the head-man. After the usual ceremonies, the heads of the victims were cut off by the leader of the party, who has been tried and sentenced to be hanged. The other eight accomplices have been released.

A month ago a fanatical mob broke into the Wesleyan Church at Marsala, Italy, and, despite efforts of the police, carried out all the books and furniture, of which they made a bonfire in the Piazza del Duomo. On subsequently entering the cathedral they are said to have received the solemn benediction of the archbishop and clergy. The minister, Signor Lottieri, with difficulty escaped. The prefect of Trapani has telegraphed to the Italian Minister of the Interior, expressing the hope that the ringleaders have already been arrested.

It is the intention to purchase a steamer for the missionaries on the east coast of Africa, as a memorial of the late Rev. Henry Wright, Honorary Secretary of the Church Missionary Society; for this purpose £6,000 will be required, and more than half of that sum is already in hand.

China consists of eighteen vast provinces, densely populated, but nine of these provinces have scarcely been so much as entered by the Protestant Church. Within this vast area little or no mission work has been established. In the far-west of the empire, just adjoining Thibit, is the province of Szechuen, inhabited by more than twenty two millions of souls, all without the Gospel.

The death is announced of Father Ho, the head of the native staff of Methodist New Connection preachers and catechists at Taon Ling, China. He was a man of marked ability and influence among the native teachers and converts, and his death will be a great loss to the mission. He was ordained about two years ago, and the hope had been entertained of his being able to pay a visit to England.

The people of Tapitonea, one of the Gilbert Islands, have gathered together all their weapons of war and burned them. They have also passed strong prohibitory laws, and enforced the sanctity of the Sabbath by imposing heavy fines for games or labor on that day.

Rev. Arthur Chaplain, of Southern Africa says: "I never saw the equal of a good Zulu Christian anywhere for zeal in seeking the salvation of his own brethren. It is a passion with him, which puts many of us to shame.

The building of the Tuskaloosa Mission and Manual Labor School at Muskogee, Indian Territory, has been destroyed by fire. It was built over 30 years ago, and the present superintendent of the mission opened the first school among the Creek Indians in this building.

Rev. George M. Jeffrey of the Des Moines Conference, has been appointed missionary to Chili, South America. He was ordained as an elder, Feb. 9, in the Mission Rooms, New York, by Bishop Harris, assisted by Dr. Reid, Rev. L. A. Bell and others, and sailed for his destination Feb. 10.

—There are in Syria, after many years of hard labor, only about 1,000 communicants to the various mission churches. The congregation average about 1,500 in all.

—The Lutheran Mission Board has received from a lady, whose name is not given, a gift of two thousand dollars as a fund for training native preachers in India.

—Brooklyn has two Chinese Sunday schools.

MISCELLANEOUS.

UNDER THE SOUTHERN CROSS. In South Australia there are 212 Wesleyan churches, and the percentage of debt on them is upon an average 22½ per cent. —The Victoria and Tasmania Conference reported a membership of 12,016; a decrease of 81. Thirty delegates to the General Conference were elected. The New South Wales and Queensland Conference adjourned after a session of thirteen days. The full members numbered 6,667, an increase of 301. Sixteen delegates were appointed to the General Conference. A stone church has been erected at Unley, in one of the Adelaide circuits, South Australia, at a cost of £2,500. It will seat 350 persons. Ex-president Burgess preached the dedicatory sermons. The eighth annual Conference of the Wesleyan Church in New Zealand was held in Nelson from Jan. 21 to Feb. 3. After a long discussion, it was determined by a vote of 31 to 9 to constitute New Zealand an independent Conference. The matter goes to the General Conference, to be held in Adelaide in May, for approval, to which 9 ministerial and 9 lay delegates were appointed. Eighty-four preachers received appointments. Two representatives were appointed to the Ecumenical Conference.—Western Christian Advocate.

To speak of a "book concern" in India we are aware will sound oddly enough among our friends at home. But there is such an institution here. We do not now refer to the establishment hereafter to be known as the "Methodist Publishing-house," but to an institution operated in the interests of the superstitions and errors of the country. The Rev. Mr. Craven, of Lucknow, introduced us to the proprietor of this concern, an individual of great business energy and tact. We found him to be a perfect gentleman, a person of exceedingly pleasant address, and kindly communicative. It is understood that he has engaged in the work of publishing simply as a business matter. He therefore publishes religious books suitable and popular among both Mohammedans and Hindus. He has about 1,100 men employed, scattered at Lucknow and also at Cawnpore. All of these men can do under the lead of their wise and energetic head they are doing daily in the publication of so-called religious books. They are engaged in the stones, used in lithographing various editions of the Koran. There are on the premises in Lucknow almost enough of books, etc., to freight a large steamship. The proprietor has just organized a company to run a paper mill so as to furnish him a supply of paper without the expense of import duty. Such facts as these and others that we will hereafter advert to, indicate the magnitude and character of the work in which the friends of Gospel truth must direct their attention and energies.—Exchange.

The progress of protestant civilization in France is shown by the interest in higher education of girls outside of Catholic institutions. At present the chief resort of girls pursuing the higher branches is the convents, where they have the advantages of good teachers and spacious and attractive surroundings. But, comparatively few parents are willing to send their daughters to convents, and to meet the want, efforts are making to throw open the deserted palaces of the old empire. The magnificent palace at Compeigne, built in the time of Louis XV. and XVI., where the former welcomed Marie Antoinette, and the first Napoleon received Marie Louise of Austria, and Leopold, King of the Belgians, married the Princess Louise, and the last Napoleon held his court in the hunting set on, has been asked for as a normal school for female teachers of the highest class: and it is thought the audacious request will be granted.

—The Free Church of Italy, according to the tenth annual report, made little advance the past year. There are fourteen ordained ministers, a decrease of one; fifteen evangelists; forty elders, a loss of one; seventy deacons, a gain of three; 1,758 communicants, a loss of twenty; 251 catechumens, a loss of eleven; thirty-five churches, a decrease of one; thirty-seven outstations, a gain of two. There was an increase of nearly 3,000 francs in the collections, the total being 15,000. The receipts 32,961 francs were from America. The Report, the first signature to which is Alessandro Gavazzi, speaks of "an eloquent sermon" by Gavazzi, "the powerful preaching of Gavazzi," "the indefatigable Gavazzi," "the valuable prelection of Mr. Gavazzi," etc.

A canvass recently made as to sectarian preference of the Harvard University student shows that the Episcopalians outnumber the Unitarians at that institution. Out of a total of 1,009 students, 28.8 per cent. belong to the former denomination and 22.5 per cent. to the latter. The remainder are appointed as follows: Congregationalists, 17.8 per cent. Baptists, 4.3; Roman Catholics, 3.4; Presbyterians, 4; Swedenborgians, 2; Universalists, 1.8; Methodists, 1.6; Hebrews, 1. About 10 per cent. are non-sectarian and 1 per cent. class themselves as agonistics or atheists.

The "Salvation Army" was recently attacked by a mob in the streets of Enniskillen, Ireland, and stoned; in consequence of which the authorities forbade the Army to hold open-air meetings. The "Salvation Army" has rivals, it seems, in the "Salvation Mission" and the "Hallelujah Army." Each publicly disavows connection with either of the others. A detachment of the "Army" in Paris was assaulted by roughs, who mistook them for Jesuits in disguise. The meetings have been prohibited.

—The "Year Book" of Trinity Episcopal parish, of New York city, shows that the clerical staff consists of the rector, Dr. Dix, and sixteen assistant ministers. There are 4,214 communicants. The baptisms last year numbered 1,194 and the confirmations 497. Besides 4,871 scholars in the Sunday-school, there are 453 in parish and 2,276 in industrial schools. Contributions by the churches and chapels, $11,681; appropriations by the vestry, $81,237.87 these appropriations being for parochial objects.

—The New Testament has just been translated in the Corean language. Mrs Arthington of Leeds, provided means for purchasing paper, and printing 3,000 copies of the gospels of Luke and John. A lady of Glasgow has promised to provide half the salary for three years of the first Corean evangelist.

—Two new Catholic bishops are announced in the United States—Vicar-general Janssens, of Richmond, for Bishop of Natchez, and J. C. Neraz, for Bishop of San Antonio. The former is a native of Holland and the latter was born in France.

Our Home People.

THE MOTHER APPLE BLOSSOM

BY CHRISTINE GRAILS HUNT.

Of all the joys of happy spring,
I dearly love the sight
Of apple-boughs all set about
With knots of pink and white.

The mother-blossom in the midst,
With lady-buds around,
I hear the infantes she sings
In breaths of fragrant sound.

She tells them apple-stories too,
Which happened long ago
The fairest in ple Eden grew,
The fruit of sin and woe;

Of Venus' golden apple and
Of the apple trees
Beside the Dead Sea, and of those
In famed Hesperides,

Of her old English ancestors
Crossing the ocean foam,
Brought to the Mayflower. She had heard
To cheer the Pilgrims' home.

Stamped as the Puritans were they
And lasting as their fame.
An island bay in Boston Bay
Still blossoming with their name.

"Ere long," she said, "your little gowns
Loosen and float away—
Fear not! The apple-spirit still
Abides through night and day.

"And I shall be an apple first,
Then you may grow bright
I'll show you how to find your shocks,
And mellow in the light.

"An apple may as dainty taste,
And show a cheek of red,
Yet prove no trouble, dears, to be
The sweetest fruit you own."

Wide Awake

The American Bison.

H. S. TUPMAN.

It is not many years since that the bison roamed over the plains of the far west in vast herds; but for some time, as advancing civilization has rendered access to the great hunting grounds easier, the destruction of this noble animal has been carried on at an almost incredible rate. It is estimated that in one year the shipments of hides from various frontier stations has not been less than one hundred and fifty thousand. As each hide represents a slain bison, those figures convey a terrible thought not a full idea of the magnificent butchery which has been going on among these monarchs of the plains. It is not only its hide for which the bison is killed. Its flesh is made into "jerked" beef and pemmican, and its bones are turned into knife handles and buttons.

If the true sportsman-like method of hunting the bison were followed, the animal would not be so near extinction. But not content with a single victim, or even a half dozen, the Indians as well as the white hunters have not infrequently caused the destruction of hundreds at one time. This is done by frightening a herd of the animals as they feed, and then chasing them over the edge of a precipice. Terrible slaughter is caused in this way.

A bull bison is one of the most magnificent looking animal in existence. His head and shoulders are covered with a mass of curling red-black hair, which almost sweeps the ground and partially conceals its fore-legs. This mass of hair, combined with a huge hump at the shoulders, gives the animal a massive appearance in front, while the naked hind-quarters make it seem lacking in strength in those parts. The bison is not, however, in the least wanting in power, and fulfills every expectation raised by the huge proportions of the forward half of his body. The horns are short and sometimes are scarcely visible through the mass of hair covering the forehead. The eyes, too, are so hidden as to seem like half-concealed coals of fire, glowing under the early frontlet.

The female is much less formidable looking than the male, but is well able to care for herself and her calf against any ordinary foe. She is not so quarrelsome as her mate, however, and is for the most part content to let him do all the fighting for her. And plenty of it he does, too; and at times a bison feeding ground is a sort of battle-field upon which the rival suitors for the hand, or hoof, perhaps, of some fair cow, contend in mortal combat.

Each herd has an acknowledged leader, who has proved himself the oldest warrior of the assemblage of bulls. The position of leader is no sinecure, for it can only be retained by continual proofs of worth. When the leader has grown old and somewhat feeble, perhaps, he is sure to be challenged by some younger bull, who aspires to the high honor of leadership. A struggle of this sort between ambitious young bull and his former superior is thus graphically described in an old copy of the Kansas Magazine:

The challenger advanced from the herd within some four feet, gazing angrier and angrier as he came. Suddenly there was a crash, which had in it something Homeric. A rattling onset of that kind leaves one no longer in doubt as to why the short, strong horns of the buffaloes have a slant of appearance on the poles. Then there was a long, steady push, in which every tendon of the buffaloes was strained to the utmost. Then there was a strategic side-step, then a sudden gladiatorial thrust, which pressed the huge heads to the ground in an even balance of strength. Neither dared relax a muscle or retreat an inch, for fear of that fatal charge upon the flank; or that dangerous twist of the neck which means defeat. A momentary relaxation of the tremendous strain only resulted in the shaggy heads coming together again with a dull thump, and a renewal of the dogged pushing which might have moved a freight train. It was a matter of lungs and endurance, and the white froth began to drop in long, tenacious strings from their lips, and the red eyes to glare dimly through what seemed to be clots of blood. I could hear the labored breathing where I lay, and see the tendons stand out across the thighs and along the thick necks. But this dead set of strength could not last always. Every moment of time was telling disastrously upon the shorter wind and decaying strength of the old crusader, who still fought for the loves of his youth. His foot slipped and the untoward grace of this slight disaster seemed to reach his antagonist quicker than a flash of light. No gladiator ever urged his advantage more suddenly. There was a huge lunge, a sound of horns slipping upon each other, a spring forward; and the horn of young bull had made a raking upward stroke through his antagonist's flank. The fight now became brisk. Again and again the old one turned and tried to make the young one stand off hand to hand, and often his more active antagonist caught him behind, the shoulder. With the red agony of defeat in his eye, and the blood trickling from the wounds in his flanks, he still refused to be conquered. With failing strength and limbs, which refused any longer to serve him, he finally stood at bay with open mouth and hanging tongue, unable to fight and disdained to retreat. His antagonist pushed him, and he yielded doggedly. He made no attempt to shield his flank, and pitifully endured all that came. The original plan of non-interference was abandoned, and the young lords gathered around him, and snorted and shook their heads, and gave him an occasional dig in the ribs by way of expressing their contempt for him. The cows came and smelled at him, and indulged in spiteful feminine butts and walked away. Their manner implied that they had always regarded him as a disagreeable old muff, and they were glad he finally understood their heartfelt sentiments in regard to him. Through all this the old fellow stood unresisting, whipped, but still obstinate. Gradually they all left him to himself, and the herd wandered farther away. He did not even look around; he was probably forced to accept his sentence of banishment, and go and live as long as he could alone, and fight his last fight with the coyotes and the.

The cunning wolves know by long experience that in the quarrelsome disposition of the Bison lies their profit; for when a bull has been badly wounded and deserted by his fellows he is no match for the combined efforts of a pack of hungry wolves. The prairie wolves, therefore, may be always seen hovering near a herd of bison waiting for the battle which is sure to result well for them. The Growing World.

A Black Hen Lays a White Egg.

The egg is white enough though the hen is black as a coal. This is a very simple thing, but it has pleased the simple mind of John Ploughman, and made him cheer up when things have gone hard with him. Out of evil comes good, through the great goodness of God. From threatening clouds we get refreshing showers; on dark nights men find bright jewels; and so from our worst troubles come our best blessings. The bitter cold sweetens the ground, and the rough winds fasten the roots of the oak trees. God sends us letters of love in envelopes with black borders. Many a time have I plucked sweet fruit from bramble bushes, and taken lovely roses from among prickly thorns. Trouble is to believing men and women like the sweetbriar in our hedges, and where it grows there is a delicious smell all around in the stew, so let it fall upon it from above.

Cheer up, mates, all will come right in the end. The darkest night will turn to a fine morning in due time, only let us trust in God, and keep our hearts above the waves of fear. When our hearts are right with God everything is right. Let us look for the silver which lines every cloud, and when we do not see it let us believe it is there. We are all at school, and our great Teacher writes many a bright lesson on the black board of affliction. Scarlet fever teaches us to live on heavenly bread, sickness leads us send off for the good Physician, loss of friends makes Jesus more precious, and even the sinking of our spirits brings us to live more entirely upon God. All things are working together for the good of those who love God, and even death itself will bring them their highest gain. This the black hen lays a white egg.

Sin shall that I more shall work for my good.
The bitter is sweet, the medicine is food;
Though painful at present will cease before long
And then, oh how pleasant the conqueror's song!

John Ploughman's Pictures by C. H. Spurgeon.

THE MISCHIEF IS A COLT. When I was a very small child we lived in a farmhouse which had a side-door opening into an orchard. There was among the sheep a cosset that when fall came refused to stay at the barn with the flock, and persisted in hanging about this door to upset the family and be petted. A well-grown black colt, two or three years old, was pastured in the orchard, and could fling his heels as high as any animal of his size; but he could not have been of vicious habits, for the children had the run of the orchard as well as he, and even the youngest was not in the least afraid of him; I used to sit by the hour under a sweet apple-tree I called mine, and amuse myself by watching his pranks.

One woful day for old Nanny, the discovered that wool, if it could not be pulled over her eyes, could be stripped off her poor body. Perhaps he considered her an intruder in his precinct and meant to serve a writ of ejectment on her; it seemed, however, that he was simply boiling over with fun. I remember perfectly how he would cut a big circle up the slope among the apple-trees, and coming down at a tremendous gallop past the kitchen door, would snatch at the cosset and keep straight on with a great lump of her fleece in his mouth.

Before anybody that could interfere was aware of the high jinks he was playing he had taken toll of Nanny so often that the field was littered with wool, and the poor helpless creature, dumb before her tormentor, stood shivering at the threshold with her back completely stripped of its warm covering.

My father made Nan the best recompense in his power, by fitting her with a brown blanket, made from wool that had gone your see, for higher uses than being lime-plastered on fence rails and apple-tree sprouts in coltish depravity; it was snugly tied on and kept the robbed party comfortable, but she never could have imagined how the suit became her! Watchman.

"HE'S A BRICK." Very few of the thousands who use the above slang term know its origin or its primative significance according to which it is a grand thing to say of a man, "He is a brick." The word used in its original intent implies all that is brave, patriotic and loyal. Plutarch in his "Life of Agesilaus, King of Sparta," gives us the meaning of the quaint and familiar expression.

On a certain occasion an ambassador from Epirus, on a diplomatic mission, was shown by the king over his capital. The ambassador knew of the monarch's fame, knew that though nominally only king of Sparta, he was ruler of Greece, and he had looked to see the massive walls rearing aloft their embattled towers for the defence of the city, but he found nothing of the kind. He unveiled much at this, and spoke of it to the king. "Sire," he said, "I have visited most of the principal towns, and I find no walls reared for defence. Why is this?"

"Indeed, Sir Ambassador," replied Agesilaus, "thou canst not have looked carefully. Come with me to-morrow morning, and I will show you the walls of Sparta."

Accordingly on the following morning the king led his guest out upon the plain where his army was drawn up in full array, and pointing proudly to the patriot host, he said, "There thou beholdest the walls of Sparta—ten thousand men, and every man a brick."

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. J. W. ROSS, REV. W. L. C. RUNNICUTT,
REV. C. B. GALLOWAY, REV. C. W. CARTER, D. D.

THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1881.

The Golden Rule.

This is a measure of duty and of right which each man has in himself—one that he carries, not in his pocket, but in his reason and conscience. He is disposed, of course, to do well for himself, but he is required to do equally well by his neighbor. The difficulty of its application lies in human selfishness. The law that demands of us, that we love our neighbor as ourselves, is put in practice by this rule: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." So far as relative duties are concerned, nothing can be more simple or clearer. Whatever occasion arises, here is the principle, and the application. A man's religion must be judged by this. His Christianity is genuine, and his profession true, just in proportion as he faithfully applies the rule. What is reasonable and right that others should do to us, it is reasonable and right that we should do to them. What we could rightly desire of them is to be accorded by ourselves. The prisoner at the bar can rightly wish for no more than the law and evidence will warrant. The juror may love the accused as himself, and yet bring in a verdict of guilty. The Governor may refuse pardon, and sign the death warrant, and at the same time be within the meaning and spirit of the precept. Common sense and a good conscience are sufficient to guide in the application, provided we are willing to make it. To know duty, however, is one thing; to have the grace to do it is another. The golden rule is simply practical religion, and it shows how much or how little of this we have. It is the law and the prophets. It is also the gospel of life and character. Do Christian people conform to it?

In business matters, do they love their neighbors as themselves? Their employees, do they pay them and treat them according to the royal law? The necessities of a servant, or of a laborer, may compel him to work for almost nothing, or for much less than his services are intrinsically worth. The employer, perhaps, pays as little as possible, without regard to the comfort and well-being of those who work for him. He does not give his laborers a fair share of the profits of his business. The vexed questions of capital and labor could be easily solved by this precept of Christ if all parties were willing to obey it. The main trouble is that they are all supremely selfish, and bent on getting as much out of each other as possible, without regard to the equities involved. It is generally true that a thing is worth what it will bring. This is a commercial or business standard, but there are expedients and tricks by which speculators put things up or down in an arbitrary way for their own advantage. They prosper on the misfortunes of others; they reduce others to beggary that they may themselves become suddenly rich. Corners in stocks and commodities are gotten up, and powerful combinations of capitalists dictate their own terms. Where a monopoly exists there is no end to the exactions. The robbery is only limited by the interest of the robbers.

As between man and man, in business transactions, the Christian buyer would wish to do as well by the seller as by himself. If there is an equal and mutual advantage, he rejoices in it. He can not ordinarily pay more than the market price, nor can he ask for more, but he will be glad if his neighbor gains in the transaction as much as himself. He will sell as low and pay as high as sound and safe business principles will allow. He will not only do justly, but he will love mercy. There will be in his dealings no lying, no extortion, no trickery. The Christian man in business will not, of set purpose, pull another down that he may profit by his misfortune.

As between the rich and the poor, let the rich man put himself in the poor man's place, and consider what, under these changed conditions, he could reasonably wish. He would not that the millionaire should give him his fortune, or half of it, but he would desire the offices of mercy, kindness and helpfulness in his distress. Instead of grinding and crushing his impoverished neighbor, he ought to help him up, and make the way open that he may help himself.

Socially, we have only to think of the cruel liberties which people take with the character of their neighbors to see how wide a field is here opened for the application of the law of love. Talk of others as you would wish them to talk of you, and think of them and judge them in the same way. How envy, jealousy, evil surmisings, and all malice, would be driven out of the heart by this unselfish love? How quickly would this celestial ray expose all selfish meanness, and quicken into life every noble and benevolent impulse? To be as careful of another's good name, as of our own, is one of the plainest of Christian duties.

Who first called this precept of the Master "the golden rule" we do not know, nor wherefore. Golden, because the most essential and comprehensive, perhaps, and also because it is the regal and dominating principle of the religious life. Golden, because it is the true standard of piety, exposing the base alloys of selfishness and hypocrisy. Golden, because it is the expression of a perfect love, and the description of true and exalted Christian character. Whatever is less, or different from this, is mere dross and rubbish. The moral philosophy of the gospel is in this brief rule. What a world this would be if all men were governed by it! There would then be an end of war, of sectional bitterness, of personal wrong, of individual crime. The golden rule, observed, would bring about a golden age, transform the world and transfigure the human race.

The Poor-Mouth Delusion.

It is about time that the South should cease to make a "poor mouth," and that our people, instead of complaining of the losses of the war, cultivate the grace of liberality. For many generations, we fear, the war will be pleaded as an apology for our withholding "more than is meet."

The truth is the Southern people are generally in very good circumstances. With a cotton crop of over six millions of bales, and with sugar, rice, tobacco and corn in proportion, the country can not be said to be very poor. Many are now poor that once were rich, but many others have made or increased their fortunes. There is money, productive property and prosperous business almost everywhere. There are not many large capitalists, or individuals who would be called rich in London or New York, but there are a few. The average condition, however, is probably better in the former slave States than in any other country in the world. There are fewer persons of great wealth, but more who are in comfortable circumstances, and there is far less abject pauperism. The South is comparatively peaceful, prosperous and happy, and she is growing rich rapidly.

We may not have recovered fully the values destroyed by the war, but enough remains to meet every need of our religious and educational enterprises. The Methodists have probably a fair share of the resources of the section. Enough, certainly, to sustain and endow our colleges, and to push the work of church extension and missions with vigor. Millions in many hands ought to contribute more than the same millions in possession of a single individual. If all would give as the Lord has prospered them we should scarcely miss what the war destroyed, nor should we look to the Vanderbilts and Seneys of the North for help. We are abundantly able to help ourselves if we only think so, and have the self-respect and largeness of heart to attempt it.

No greater misfortune can happen to us than to settle down with the conviction that we are dependent upon the bounty of distant sections. This would be a fatally damaging perversion of the few very large gifts that have been bestowed by the wealthy men of other communities. There is Methodist wealth enough in Tennessee alone to have built and endowed the Vanderbilt University. Enough in Georgia to have given Emory and the Wesleyan all they needed, and enough in Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana to establish and sustain our schools in these States.

It is wonderful how much capital people will make out of some past misfortunes in staving off the claims of God upon them. However much they prosper afterward, they never seem to get over it. Some people, who are richer now than they were before the war, still bank upon it when the collection is pressed. The poverty of the South is only comparative, and is not such as to excuse our neglect. There is money enough if there were only the disposition to give, and that laudable pride which leads people to help themselves. If our own people would do their duty there would be no call for aid from abroad. The South has the resources to meet every legitimate demand, to pay her debts, to build her institutions of learning, and to meet all the growing wants of her increasing population. The goodly land is before us, and we are well able to go up and possess it. We are rich enough and numerous enough. We must uproot this chronic delusion about the poverty of the South, and quit ourselves like men in meeting our own responsibilities.

The May Meetings at Nashville.

The May meetings here during the week have been of unusual interest. In addition to others held annually, this year we have had a convention of Conference Sunday-school secretaries. This body met on Tuesday morning, over which Dr. Cunnyngham was called to preside, with the Rev. C. R. Williamson, of Alabama, as secretary. All the secretaries of the connection were present, except those in the far West. Most of them are Sunday-school men of experience and enterprise. Their reports from the different sections of the church encourage the belief that this department of our work is moving forward with increasing and intelligent zeal. The various phases of our Sunday-school cause and machinery were discussed, and some action had looking to improved legislation by the next General Conference. But the full proceedings of the body will soon be published.

Only four of the Bishops are present—Bishop Wightman being yet confined to his home by protracted illness, and Bishop Kavanaugh detained on the Pacific coast until after the Fall Conferences there. Bishop Paine looks rather better and stronger than a year ago. Bishop Pierce, though much enfeebled and even emaciated, is full of hope and determination. Bishops McTyeir and Keener are capable of great labor, but in view of their increased list of Conferences, and the probability of having to meet some assigned to their other colleagues, they should not be urged to attend District Conferences. The general expression, so far as I have heard, from the representative men of all parts of the church present here, is that the next General Conference will elect four new Bishops.

The report of the Book Committee will make glad the heart of the church. Their success has been a marvel. Everything and everybody about the Publishing House wear an expression of hopefulness. They have reduced the debt one hundred and three thousand dollars. The Interest account is now less than ten thousand dollars. Action was had providing for the retirement of the bonds of smaller dimensions at once. This will be done without cramping the facilities of the House in cheapening and enlarging our publications. Contemplated changes and improvements in our Sunday-school periodicals will greatly enhance their value without increasing the price.

The meeting of the Board of Missions was full, and of special interest. Several brethren from the mission fields have been in attendance—Drs. J. W. and R. W. Lambuth, from China, and Rev. T. B. Norwood, from the Mexican Border Mission. Reports from all our missions will greatly stimulate the faith of the church and increase her offerings. Relying upon the development of missionary faith and intelligence in the church, the board has advanced the appropriations for the coming year to one hundred and eighty thousand dollars. Would to God that her response to this call may be as generous as the urgency of the cause. An anniversary meeting was held, on Wednesday night, in McKendree Church. Dr. Summers presided, and Drs. Wilson and Carlisle delivered addresses. It rarely falls to our lot to hear missionary speeches so well-timed, able and instructive. There was nothing amusing—no laughter-provoking anecdotes—but an eloquent presentation of the great gospel claim of foreign missions upon the faith and means of the church.

The Ecumenical delegates present have perfected arrangements for their foreign tour. On the sixth of July, in the "Bothnia," Bishop McTyeire and daughter, Dr. A. W. Wilson and daughter, Dr. Winfield, of Arkansas, and others, will take passage. Dr. McFerrin and daughter, Rev. David Morton and others will leave on the sixth of August. Vacancies in the delegation have been filled by the Bishops this week. Some of the appointments have escaped secrecy. In place of Bishop Wightman, Dr. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, has been appointed. No other man could better represent a Bishop. With special thanks to Dr. R. A. Young and his charming family, whose hospitality he shared, this writer turned his face homeward on Saturday morning, May 8.

C. B. G.

Mississippi Notes.

The prospect for crops is now good. We were ushered out of winter into summer in a day. Spring seems to have been omitted in the programme of the seasons. Four days after the last frost my thermometer stood at ninety degrees in the shade. Hence the cotton has sprung up with surprising quickness, and corn seems about to regain somewhat of its lost time of growth, it being more than a month behind its usual height at this time of the year. Winter did not end till the middle of April. It began with October. Never, perhaps, was so much fuel burned in one winter. There was scarcely a day when it was not cold enough to kill and save meat; the previous winter it was difficult to find a time when pork could be killed with safety. So it seems that the weather has chills and fevers a year apart. Periodicity of heat and cold is not peculiar to man. Who has not noticed that almost all trees and perennial plants bear full and sparse crops on alternate years? Do not all these things say that the author of all nature is one God? Is not the unity of authorship demonstrated by the varied, striking and ever-maintained analogies found to exist, not only between all the departments of physical creation, but between physical and spiritual things?

The weather has influence on health, and even on the souls and spiritual interests of men. We should have had a parsonage at Free Run, on Tranquil circuit, but for the unprecedentedly long, cold, wet winter. The floods and freezes past, they are now trying to build. They said two successive pastors had failed to build after collecting some means for a parsonage. If a parsonage is not now built, a committee of laymen will fail to build it.

The new parsonage at Sharon is completed. The boarding department of Sharon Female College was burned in 1868. The scholastic department has, by permission of the Mississippi Conference, been used as a parsonage for several years. By a very great architectural error in the locating of its gutters, the house was rapidly approaching self-destruction. Hence the trustees and Quarterly Conference had it taken down, and a parsonage built of the materials. The parsonage stands on the site of the college, and thus preserves for church purposes that classic spot, hallowed in the memory of thousands, especially of devout women, who, between the year 1837 and the year 1870, were educated, in whole or in part, at Sharon Female College.

The churches in the Jackson district are all served by pastors who seem to be striving to make full proof of their ministry. Their labors are evidently not without good results, and the promise of support is not discouraging. If our people will plant and cultivate corn and cotton for God's service they will not lack means to support his worship.

A love-feast is held at the close of each Sunday morning's service at every quarterly meeting on the district. They do not interfere with the Sunday-schools, which, of course, it is a prime object everywhere to encourage, nor are they interrupted by persons coming in or trying to do so, if the doors are shut, as would be the case were they held before the service. The members and others remain patiently, and we usually have a time of refreshing. The customary introductory services and ceremonies of a love-feast are omitted, and half an hour or three-quarters is spent in the narration of Christian experience or the expression of Christian sentiment. These never drag, as those have often done which were held at four or five o'clock in the afternoon. The spirit of class meetings is certainly not dead, albeit we have but few class meetings after the regular form. These love-feasts have often strengthened and comforted my soul, and I commend them to others as "good to the use of edifying." The love of Christ still constrains men to speak in his name. Only give them a suitable opportunity, and the "fruit of their lips" will be offered in his praise, while mutual sympathy and united hope shall conspire to make them one in him.

W. L. C. R.

CANTON, Miss., May 5, 1881.

Dr. Punshon.

At the funeral of Dr. Punshon, Rev. E. E. Jenkins, president of the Conference, delivered an address of great fitness and power. We quote nearly in full, as reported in the Watchman, London:

There had been, as you are aware, considerable, but we scarcely believed ominous, physical derangement, but there was no doubt in the mind of any one of us, including, I believe, his medical adviser, that perfect and prolonged rest would bring back to their wonted tone a heart strained to exhaustion by sorrow and care, and a mind overtaxed, not only by official obligations, but by engagements to help everybody and every cause made in fatal forgetfulness of self. We know now that the provision for repose, to which we compelled our dear colleague to consent, ought to have been made several months ago, and would have been made but for the stubborn reluctance with which he received every proposal to go out of harness, even for a week; and even his holidays were not seasons of relaxation, but variations of toil. His public movements were watched, his resting for a night in town or village was an event for the Methodists in the place, a service was exacted, and the largest rooms to be had were obtained and crowded with people anxious to hear the great orator. It was this tension of energy, never relaxed, never graduated to meet just the requirements of a service—for he gave out all his strength, whether the audience numbered 500 or 5,000—it was this prodigal expenditure of force from a very early period of his remarkable career, and during a life charged with the excitements, the anxieties, and the vicissitudes of an unequalled popularity, that bowed down in the prime of his life the Samson of our Israel. There is no ground for surprise at the event which has made the Connection at home and abroad mourn as one man, and has pierced the hearts of multitudes who belong to other churches acknowledging Christ, our common Head, and who share our loss in that a prince and a great man has fallen this day in Israel. We may rather wonder in reviewing calmly Dr. Punshon's career, and recalling the work which he did during a ministry of thirty-six years in this country and in Canada and America, the quality of his work and its results, and remembering his acute personal sufferings and bereavements and griefs—that enter into a man's heart and life, especially of a popular man—I say we may rather wonder, even with strength such as he possessed, that he did not under such a strain collapse long ago. In Dr. Punshon our church possessed a rare gift from the Father of lights. His mind possessed two classes of faculties not often found together in eminent prominence—the imaginative and the practical; and an imperious intellect governed both, giving to the imaginative power a definite work, and to the practical a logical coherency and consistency. The surpassing endowment of his youth was memory, and it made his mind a vast storehouse of knowledge, much of it in the very word form in which it was acquired. He not only forgot nothing, but he commanded everything he had learned. It is not unlikely, though I can not speak with precise knowledge, that in the time of his earlier growth his memory had somewhat fettered the action of his other powers; these, at any rate, asserted themselves conspicuously in his later years, when called into use by the various responsibilities of official life. The gifts which I have mentioned, when there is a commanding physique, make the orator; or, if education and opportunity concur, the statesman; or, if tastes and the success of earlier attempts determine it, the poet. William Morley Punshon selected none of these professions; he was led by the star of Providence to the place where the Young Child lay, and brought the tribute of his life, the gold, the frankincense, and myrrh of his genius, and placed them at the feet of Jesus, all unconscious of the worth of his offering, and if he had suspected it, he would have considered it too mean to merit his Lord's acceptance. The calling of a Methodist preacher was the first and last distinction of his life; he aspired to no loftier place on earth than the Methodist pulpit, and it soon became apparent that God had raised up a messenger to the churches endowed with exceptional power. I believe he had little professional training for the pulpit, but whether eminence were granted to him or denied to him, he purposed, by Divine help, to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth. He knew there was no royal road to pulpit power; he knew that being called into the ministry the pulpit was the central position of his calling, and not a stepping-stone to something else. He was sometimes found elsewhere, but he brought with him the inspiration of the preacher, and rendered eloquent service out of the pulpit in the cause of the pulpit. He would have deemed his life a failure, if not a mockery, if, whatever else had prospered, his pulpit had failed; his more careful work, and his chief joy to the last, was preaching Jesus. Morley Punshon was eminently the servant of his people. It was his pride, if I may use that expression, to represent Methodism in high places; to prove, in itself, and on behalf of his brethren, that God had not only called us to do evangelical work, but had raised up among us a ministry containing in itself, under the Head of the church, the ultimate authority of a ministry. His unfaltering independence was all the more remarkable because his reverence for antiquity was sensitive and enthusiastic; this manliness explains in part his popularity among his brethren; I say in part, because there was another prevailing charm in the genial and modest temper which marked his intercourse with other ministers, and the absence of all pretensions, and flourish of power, making his great qualities even more conspicuous as they were winning and accessible to all who desired to engage them. He did not, so far as I know, mark his dissent from other churches, or obtrude the peculiarities of his own church when an unsectarian pulpit borrowed his defence and advocacy on behalf of some catholic institution or society; I always considered his behavior on these occasions an excellent pattern of charity and moderation; his theme generally transcended party limits. The bearing of his mind towards the sceptical spirit of the day was equally remarkable; happily for the power and usefulness of Dr. Punshon's ministry he had no intellectual sympathy with doubt, but he had much sympathy with doubters whose distrust was timid and tentative and anxious, not because of any reserved questioning of his own, but mental solicitude of this class appealed to his love and honesty, and his tenderness for distress. Moreover, his mind was too large and too generous to consider everybody in the wrong place who did not stand just where he stood, or who reviled their standpoint by other steps than those which had conducted him to his position. In his own case between conviction of sin and the cross of Jesus he knew doubt, and no space, either by halting in indecision, or by hesitating reasoning, and he proclaimed salvation not discovered by reason manifested to faith. He [illegible] with a kind of untutored sincerity and preached results rather than processes; and he preached to the people and for the people, and although he sometimes soared high or dived deep, it was seldom in pursuit of abstract ideas; in such instances as I have referred to he was generally following the issue of some well-known truth, demolishing the refuge of less security of the sinner, or throwing in a new light upon the spirit of the inquirer. Wherever his mind was, his hearers he was never in doubt. He had his own style, and it was not another's; it was the visible impress of his own mind, a body that grew out of it and not a robe woven for it. No imitator may take the picture of this great preacher, and use it, and be unintelligible, as a ridiculous. He was never vague in his language, though never [illegible] mon, his robust sense, and his earnestness, made eloquence a passion to contribute to the power and force of his meaning. Sometimes, when under the [illegible] feeling, his style assumed an ordinary simplicity and conciseness and vigor. Many of us remember that in preaching he had a pausing at the close of an argument or on the winding-up of an impassioned declamation, and of turning from a personal appeal to those whose case he had been reviewing and suddenly changed the tone of his voice and began a strain of pathos to hear him now—of pathos so melting, so impressive, so irresistible that you felt that in this case it was not in words only, but in power and the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance, and that the preacher had won the souls he was seeking to win and secured them. For the sake of those who remember one instance that occurred in this chapel, where he was preaching in this pulpit, and pressing upon men to look to the Lamb of God, when one of the most intelligent of his hearers ventured to say, as he thought, the truth, to look up, and was received in an instant. There was no doubt, that in this quiet way many multitudes were delivered under the ministry which God gave to his servant, and received the final assurance of redemption. I never knew a mission intimately before my appointment to the Mission-house. His missionary life had enabled me to appreciate the services which he rendered the Society on the platform, and I think that not even in the Exeter Hall—mighty as he was there—was his oratory half so impressive as on the platform of a missionary society. The prophetic elements of his fascinated him; it was gifted to kindle his imagination, arouse his overflowing sympathies, then his grasp of detail, his strong faith in the ultimate triumph of his Lord; all these qualities combined to make him one of the most powerful missionary speakers I ever heard. But I said just now that I did not know him intimately when he went to the Mission-house. I never knew until then how much his heart was in this missionary work. I never knew it until my close association of counsel and mutual responsibility I discerned what I can not otherwise describe than as a very sacred word; that is, the travail of his soul, when the pressure and stress of administration threatened to impede the glorious work of the advancement of which his heart was set his. I heard him say painfully not long before his death that he was risking the little reputation he had, as a platform speaker, by perpetually dwelling upon the necessities of finance; but even then he was not one whit less powerful than when speaking under the highest impulses. So far as I could judge from near and constant observation, he was diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord; not untiring, in co-operation with others of, but jealous for, his own work, making their care and help almost a cherished appropriation of his own. And then to go back to the Mission-house, to its vast responsibilities, with the critical condition of its resources, and miss him! He had been our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble! The closing of his life was a very beautiful one. There was no evening, and no twilight, in his season of work. His day was like a day in the East, where there is no interval between fading and twilight—the sun is shut up in a moment, and all is light. Until within the last few days he was not aware that his end was approaching, and yet he must have had intimations of it in his own mind. He had no fear of death. He said to a friend who asked him if he had any fear of death, "No fear of rapture of living; the rapture of dying; I do not like to feel that my work is done." Not long before his death, he said to his medical attendant, "Doctor, am I going?" The doctor replied "Yes." He replied, "Thank God; Jesus is to me a reality." I believe his last words were uttered to Mrs. Punshon, and they were these: "Love to meet me in this presence." He went into the problem of life as he understands it. "Absent from the body, present with the Lord."

OUR CITY CHURCHES.—Christian Keener is now in the second week of protracted services at Louisiana Avenue Church. Twelve persons have been converted, and have applied for membership. On Sunday night he preaching by Dr. Walker, the result a number of penitents at the altar. The interest is increasing. Dr. R. Duval, of Virginia, has been assisting in the meeting for two weeks, preaching nearly every night. Dr. Duval leaves this week for Galveston, Texas. Our Texas brethren find him a devoted and useful evangelist, and we commend him to them as a minister worthy of their confidence and esteem.

Dr. Milburn preached at the Carondelet Street Church, Sunday morning, May 8. The sermon for substance was edifying, calculated to dispel doubt, and to confirm believers. In elocution and manner Dr. Milburn has reached the highest pitch of excellence. Being blind, he recites his lessons and hymns from memory, and they are rendered with wonderful beauty and power. His lessons were the fortieth of Isaiah, and a part of the first chapter of John. The inspired words, as pronounced by him, glow with a divine radiance, and are invested with a depth, pathos and sublimity which arrest and entrance the hearer. The pastor, Rev. Felix R. Hill, of this church, is succeeding admirably. He has received about sixty members this year, the prayer and class meetings are well attended, and there are conversions at these services nearly every week.

At St. Charles Avenue Dr. Mathews is preaching to good congregations. There is a good attendance at the prayer and class meetings, and conversions and accessions constantly occur. The new chapel in the rear of the church is progressing rapidly, and will be ready for use in about two months. It will be a handsome building, and convenient.

Dr. Carter, at Felicity Street, is preaching to large congregations. The social meetings are well attended, and a goodly number of members has been received during the past quarter.

Moreau Street, Rev. J. M. Beard, pastor, in the midst of a foreign population, mostly Roman Catholic, is making some progress. Protracted services, recently held there, resulted in some conversions, and in a gracious quickening of the church.

The church in Algiers, Rev. Lewis A. Reed, pastor, has had no special services, but its condition is reported as improving and encouraging.

The Advocate of Missions, for May, is somewhat late in reaching us. But it is filled with matters of interest. This number closes the first year of the publication. We earnestly commend it to our people. It should be in the hands of every member of our church. The indefatigable editor, Dr. Wilson, says:

We enter upon the second year in the confidence that our means and area of usefulness will be greatly enlarged. An increased subscription will give us command of much material of value to our work, at present beyond our reach. With facts before us, we can not doubt that an enlarged circulation will be productive of great good. The quality and price of the paper amply justify us in asking this increase.

Every preacher, traveling and local, in the Connection ought to take the Advocate of Missions. It will give him the information that he should always have at command for the uses of the pulpit and pastoral instruction. Moreover, we earnestly request all our preachers to introduce it to the members of the church. It ought to be in every Southern Methodist household, as a stimulant to missionary interest, a means of instruction, and a help to personal religion. A little attention and effort on the part of all our preachers would multiply our circulation many times.

With due and grateful recognition of the kindness shown by many of our readers, we ask the renewal of subscriptions expiring with this number, and their aid in the extension of the list. Let every one renew, and send one, two, or more additional subscribers.

Rev. Dr. Gladdeon Draper, writing to the Northern Christian Advocate, says:

There come the glad notes of triumph from all parts of the Wesleyan Church. God grant it may be the harbinger of a universal quickening and expansion in the church of large faith for the in-coming year; that there may be a happy turn in the spiritual tide of affairs. Old City Road Chapel is witnessing once more glorious scenes, as many as fifty men Sunday night coming out as seekers of salvation, a fitting preparation for the World's Council. May the whole body be set on fire of God, and the flame extend to the ends of the earth. The same joyful tidings are received from the provinces from circuits and stations and from the circuit quarterly meetings now being held throughout Great Britain. The Isle of Man and happy Ireland share in the gracious shower. There is prospect of a more cheerful report at the next year with respect to increase of membership, an almost unprecedented number remaining on trial. Amid these jubilant scenes the voice of the most prominent Wesleyan pulpit orator is hushed in death. His fame is in all the churches and Christendom will mourn the premature and sudden death of William Morley Punshon. He was just setting his face towards the earthly Jerusalem, in a much needed respite from work, but he is now walking the golden streets of the heavenly city.

Prohibition in Mississippi.

The New Orleans Picayune says:

There is no movement that has been made in Mississippi since the war that is of more importance to the farmers and people of that State than the one set in motion chiefly by Col. Nugent, of Jackson, at a meeting held at the City Hall of Jackson, on the evening of the 20th of April. The meeting was called through the public journals by Col. Nugent. The following report of the proceedings of the meeting was made by the Secretary for the press:

On motion of Col. W. L. Nugent, Col. Daniel Dennett, of Brookhaven, was called to the chair, and H. J. Hinds acted as secretary.

After the organization of the meeting Col. Nugent, in a few well timed and appropriate remarks, offered the following resolutions, which were, after short addresses in support of the same by Messrs. Dennett, Galloway and Jenkins, unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the chairman appoint a committee of seven, whose duty it shall be, without delay, to draft and publish a call for a State convention of delegates from the several counties and towns in this State, representing those who are opposed to the continuance of liquor traffic beyond a day to be appointed, to assemble at the Capitol at Jackson on Friday May 13, and devise means for securing the passage by the next Legislature of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the liquor traffic in this State, to be submitted to the people for ratification or rejection.

Resolved, That it is not our purpose to interfere with political parties or their management, but we are sensible of the great harm done to the health, property and morals of the State by the increasing liquor traffic, and are persuaded that the time has come when all the good people of the State, without reference to party affiliations, or previous condition, or religious persuasions, should combine to arrest the demoralizing influences of the unwholesome traffic, and demand that the Legislature shall afford them an opportunity to suppress it by a fair vote upon an amendment to the constitution.

Under these resolutions the following committee was appointed, to wit: Col. W. L. Nugent, of Hinds county; Rev. Chas. B. Galloway, of Warren; Rev. J. B. Gambrell, of Hinds; Capt. Jno. T. Buck, of Hinds; Rev. S. H. Steele, of Lowndes; Col. Daffiel Dennett, of Lincoln; and Rev. E. B. Ramsey, of Tishomingo.

Mrs. Hayes in Georgia.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate says:

Mrs. Juliana Hayes, President of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, visited Macon for a few days last week. She is a highly cultivated Christian woman and devoted to the holy cause she represents, "Woman's work for heathen women." Her whole heart is in this work and she greatly enthused those who were fortunate enough to hear her talk, while with us, to a greater zeal for this noble work saving the heathen woman. She met the Juvenile Missionary Society at its regular monthly meeting, and expressed herself as being highly delighted and greatly encouraged with the progress these little ones have made in Missionary work. They raise about five dollars every month and have already sent a contribution of $15 to Mexico and have $10 in their treasury. They were organized in December, 1880. They are auxiliary to the Woman's Missionary Society of Mulberry street Church.

Friday, 29th of April, having been appointed as a day of fasting and prayer by the Woman's Missionary Society, Mrs. Hayes met with Macon Auxiliary at Mulberry street Church, and conducted the services very greatly to the edification of those who were present. The visit of this "elect lady" will long be remembered by those who were permitted to listen to the words of Christian experience that fell from her lips on that occasion. May God bless her and prosper her good works and give her many souls for her hire.

We clip the following from the Clarion, Jackson, Miss., concerning the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Mississippi:

The Starkville Times says that more than 150 students are now in the dormitory. These, with the students from the town, make about 225 now in attendance. Three hundred and fifty have matriculated this year. The recent panic, on account of sickness, Dr. Phares, of the faculty, thinks was unnecessary. President Lee thinks he should take no more students this year. He has enough. The capacity of the college is only 275. This should be the limit till further accommodations are provided. Applications are daily received for admission next year. Were the accommodations sufficient, 500 students would be at the college. Success, the Times says, is beyond a doubt.

The widow and daughter of Stonewall Jackson are among the visitors to our city. They came in order to be present at the unveiling of the Statue of Stonewall Jackson at the Metairie Cemetery. The imposing ceremony took place Tuesday afternoon May 10. The Times says:

The statue is eight feet five inches high, and represents General Jackson in Confederate uniform, his cap drawn down on his forehead, and his head inclined to his left side.

The mound on which it is to be placed, is twelve feet above the level of the main road that leads to the main entrance of the cemetery. Underneath the statue is a large vault, in the centre of which is a thick wall of masonry. The walls of the vault are partitioned off into cryptes, fifty-seven in number, which are to be used as the resting places of the comrades of the A. N. V.

The name of Mrs. Amelia A. Colds takes its place on the long list of American benefactors. Her will makes many charitable bequests, which are devoted largely to the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, $5,000; to the Board of the Church Erection Fund, $5,000; to the General Assembly, $5,000, in trust for the Committee on the Ministerial Relief Fund; to the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the West Indies, $5,000; in trust to the Theological Seminary at Princeton, $5,000; to Union Theological Seminary, this city, $5,000, and to Auburn Theological Seminary, $5,000; and to the Fourth Presbyterian Church, of Albany, $5,000. Dr. John Hall, of this city, receives $5,000. She further divides $30,000 to various friends and relatives.

Christian at Work.

A press dispatch from Nashville, dated May 8, says: The Theological Hall of Vanderbilt University was formally dedicated this afternoon, in one of its lecture rooms, which was thronged with people. Bishop Paine, Senior Bishop of the Southern Methodist Church, presided.

It being the sixtieth birthday of W. H. Vanderbilt, the donor, a full length portrait of that gentleman was hung in the hall. In his name Bishop McTyeire presented the building to the senior Bishop for formal acceptance and dedication, which ceremonies were impressively performed. A rising vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Vanderbilt by the faculty, students and citizens. The building cost over $100,000 and will accommodate 200 persons.

SENSIBLE WOMEN.—The New York Christian Advocate says:

Three thousand four hundred and sixty-four women registered as voters in Massachusetts in 1879. Of this number only 2,291 actually voted. In 1880 4,566 registered, but only 1,967 voted. The Philadelphia press affirms that this is the showing of the official statistics. If it be so, it furnishes another proof that the movement for female suffrage is not demanded by any known and felt want, but has been artificially stimulated. But whether it be so or not, a radical change must take place in the ways of thinking and feeling of women before they will wish to assume the responsibilities of government, or submit to be forced to do so by tireless and noisy agitators. The unwillingness of the great body of American women to be drawn into this movement is a proof of their sterling good sense. As one of the noblest Christian workers for temperance and Christianity says: "I see that neither sex can exert the peculiar form of influence which is natural to the other, and I will not risk the loss of my influence as a woman by seeking the responsibilities and labors which God and nature have devolved upon man."

Rev. J. P. Roberts, writing from Bay Minette, Ala., May 9, says:

The news has just reached me of the death of Mrs. L. E. A. Howard, wife of Capt. Wm. Howard of Daphne, Baldwin county, Ala., who died Saturday the 7th inst. The deceased had been for many years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on this circuit, and was a blessing to the church and to the community where she lived. Her house for a number of years was the home of the itinerant preachers on this work. Another of the good people of the world has gone from labor to rest. An obituary will be furnished.

Col. Thomas A. Scott, of Pennsylvania, has lately, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, three gifts to Washington and Lee University: his first soon after the War of 1850; the second in 1876 of $50,000; and he now gives the third, $50,000, without restriction to the general fund of the institution. Every true-hearted friend of education in Virginia will have a thrill of gratitude for this generous remembrance of a noble institution.

Rev. A. S. Whitehurst, Plantersville circuit, North Alabama Conference, writing from Aldine, Ala., April 29, says: "All things are moving off very smoothly in our little work at this time. I think I have good reasons to expect a great revival this year. This is my second year on the work, and also in Conference. We had a revival on the work last year, resulting in about sixty conversions and forty-one accessions. I have been praying for and anxiously expecting a great outburst of religion throughout the entire work this year."

Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, writing from Meridian, Miss., May 2, says: "Four months have elapsed since I arrived in this place from Canton. We have received on profession of faith seven; by certificate, nine. Our Sabbath-school is moving on well. Our superintendent, L. P. Brown, is a faithful and successful officer. We have a large membership. I recommend the Advocate to my people as I visit. The ladies are careful of the comfort of their pastor's family. Congregations good."

Rev. J. Lane Borden, president of Mansfield Female College, has been in the city for a few days. He reports the college as doing well, and with bright prospects for the future. In a few months the railroad will be completed from Shreveport to New Orleans, and Mansfield will then be one of the most accessible as well as one of the most healthy points in the South. President Borden confidently expects that the college will be full at the next session.

—Bishop Isaac Lane, one of the Bishops of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, was in the city for a day or two this week. His church has an organization in New Orleans, and several thousand members in the State. The Bishop was on his way to a district Conference at Lake Charles, La. He reports the work throughout the connection as generally prosperous.

Rev. James A. Wadlrey, presiding elder of the Woodville district, Mississippi Conference, gave us a brief call this week. He reports a revival of church building in the bounds of his district, and that the outlook is generally hopeful.

—A memorial sketch of Rev. D. M. Hudson, written by Rev. J. Bancroft, will be found on the second page of this number of the Advocate.

—Southern Youth is the title of a new monthly published at Yeroon, Miss., and Morrilton, Ark., Rev. R. G. Porter and Rev. John W. Boswell, editors and publishers. The Southern Youth is specially devoted to the young people of the South. The first number, now before us, is a handsome eight-page sheet, and well filled with original and selected articles. We wish the paper a prosperous and useful career. Price, sixty cents a year.

—Our sermon department is surrendered for the present to "Notes of Life," by Bishop Paine. We are gratified to know that our beloved senior Bishop is giving, over his own signature, the facts and incidents of his long and useful career. It will be time well spent, and prove a lasting service to the cause whose advancement lies nearest his heart.

—By notice on our eighth page it will be seen that the Executive Committee of Seashore Camp Ground have a meeting on the ground, Saturday, May 21. Those having business with the trustees will please refer to notice.

—The Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias are holding their annual convention in this city. The convention was opened at Grunewald Hall, Monday morning, April 9, John J. Scott, Grand Chancellor, in the chair. There is a large attendance of delegates.

East Mississippi Female College.

At a called meeting of some of the alumnæ, held May 2, 1881, it was resolved to arrange for an unusually interesting and important occasion in connection with the approaching commencement. Arrangements have been made with all the railroads converging at Meridian to transport visitors to and from the anniversary on round trip tickets; that is, at rates reduced about one-half. This arrangement dates from May 28 to June 2. The especial occasion will be the alumni anniversary, concert and festival on May 31. Distinguished speakers are invited to be present, and unusual effort will be made on the part of the alumni to so present the other features of the occasion so as to please and profit those who attend. An admission fee will be charged for the concert and supper, which will be appropriated toward furnishing the chapel of our new college building now being erected. A grand and delightful affair is anticipated, and the friends of the college, of the alumnæ, and of education generally, are invited to attend.

MISS ANN D. ROGER, Pres't.
MISS PINKIE MOORE, Vice Pres't.
MISS NELLIE MOODY, Sec.
MISS OCTAVIA SANDERS, Ass. Sec.
MISS JIMMIE THORNTON, Treas.
Meridian, Miss., May 4, 1881.

P. S.—Will all papers friendly to the enterprise, please publish the above notice?

Books and Periodicals.

HORÆ WITH THE BIBLE, or the Scriptures in the light of modern discovery and knowledge, from creation to the patriarchs. By Cunningham Geikie, D. D. New York: James Pott, publisher. 1881.

Dr. Geikie's "Life and Words of Christ" has been before the reading public for some time, and has been most favorably received. It is indeed a work of great merit, and it has placed the author among the very foremost writers of the day on Scriptural subjects. The purpose and scope of the present work are to explain and illustrate the Scripture history, to solve any difficulties that may appear, and to vindicate the inspired narrative by reference to modern discovery and science. It is, however, by no means a dry dissertation, but a fresh and vivid exposition, showing abundant research, and yet not overlaid with irrelevant matter, or learned and unfamiliar terms. It is for all readers, and is well adapted to entertain and instruct them. Dr. Geikie is conservative in his treatment of disputed points, and the tendency of his discussions is to confirm and strengthen the fair-minded in the truth, inspiration and exceeding value of the Bible. Beginning with the account of the creation, the volume ends with the death of Joseph. We give the headings of some of the chapters: Genesis; Ancient Legends of Creation; The Bible and Modern Science; The Age of the World; The Story of Eden; The Antiquity of Man; The Flood; The First Glimpse of National History; Palestine and Egypt in Abraham's Day; Isaac and His Sons; Joseph. The author intimates that this is the first volume of a series bearing the same title and of like character. The work is illustrated, well printed and bound, and makes a rather portly volume of five hundred pages. It is for sale by Lathrop & Wilkins, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

SERMONS ON THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. By the late Francis E. Lawrence, D. D. New York: Anson D. F. Randolph & Co.

Dr. Lawrence was pastor of the Church of the Holy Communion, New York, for twenty-seven years. This was the church built by the celebrated Dr. Muhlenberg. Dr. Lawrence succeeding him as its pastor. Dr. Lawrence died in 1879, and the sermons in this volume were preached by him during his pastorate. They are sermons on the Christian year—that is, connected with the observance of the holy days and festivals of the calendar of the Protestant Episcopal Church. They appear to be spiritual, evangelical and practical. The author was evidently a laborious and most devoted pastor, and a preacher of great earnestness, whose aim was to bring his hearers to the knowledge of Christ. The volume contains a brief sketch of the life and character of Dr. Lawrence, and thirty-six of his sermons.

—The Art Amateur for May is illustrated with greater splendor and bounty than ever. The supplement designs are also unusually fine. This valuable art periodical has well-filled departments under the following heads: Supplement Designs; Frontispiece—Union League Alcove Dining-Room; Editorial; My Note-Book; The Art Gallery; Decoration and Furniture; Art Needlework; Ceramics; The Musical Amateur. Montague Marks, editor and Publisher, New York. Price, $1 a year.

—The Southern Pulpit, May, 1881, is in its usual style, excellent throughout in type, paper and contents. It has four full length sermons from eminent living preachers, five outlines of sermons, and a valuable department of Suggestions on Texts. Homiletical Illustrations, and Book Review, are among the most interesting and instructive features of the work. Subscription price $1.50 a year. Address Jackson and Lafferty Richmond Va.

—The Louisiana Journal of Education for May is a very interesting number of that excellent publication.

Plan of Episcopal Visitations for 1881.

FIRST DISTRICT—BISHOP PAINE.

Conference.	Date.	Place.
Memphis	November 9	Bolivar.
North Mississippi	November 23	Grenada.
Mississippi	December 14	Brookhaven.

SECOND DISTRICT—BISHOP PIERCE.

Western	September 7	Howard City.
Missouri	September 14	Moberly.
St. Louis	September 21	St. Johns.
Southwest Missouri	September 28	Springfield.
Indian Mission	October 5	Caddo.
Arkansas	October 19	Dardanelle.
Alabama	November 30	Selma.
South Carolina	December 14	Cuba.

THIRD DISTRICT—BISHOP KAVANAUGH.

Columbia	August 25	Walla Walla.
Los Angeles	September 15	Carpenteria.
Pacific	September 28	Petaluma.
Denver	October 13	Denver.
Montana	October 20	Helena.
Northwest Texas	November 16	Waxahatchie.
North Texas	November 30	Greenville.
East Texas	December 14	Jacksonville.

FOURTH DISTRICT—BISHOP WILSON.

Holston	October 26	Wytheville.
North Carolina	November 23	Durham.
South Georgia	December 7	Columbus.

FIFTH DISTRICT—BISHOP MCTYEIRE.

Tennessee	October 19	Lebanon.
North Alabama	November 2	Hunstville
North Georgia	November 16	Athens.
Virginia	November 30	Charlottesville.
White River	December 7	Batesville.
Little Rock	December 14	Pine Bluff.
Louisiana	January 3	New Orleans.
Florida	January 17	Monticello.
Baltimore	March 16	Fredericksburg.

SIXTH DISTRICT—BISHOP KEENER.

Western Virginia	August 31	Ashland.
Kentucky	September 7	Danville.
Indiana	September 14	Issaquah.
Illinois	September 21	Ashley
Louisville	October 12	Owensboro
West Texas	November 16	Gothad.
Texas	November 23	Houston
German	November 30	Houston.

Bishop McTyeire has charge of the Missions in China and Brazil.

Bishop Keener has charge of the Missions in Mexico.

Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing the advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

THE CLOCK

A quaint old clock was seen wide,
Within a parlor door,
The maid who lingered by his side
Was all the world to him.

What brought that glad light to his eye?
That radiance to his brow?
Why burns his heart so high,
Though midnight's hour hath flown?

The clock drove the glowing grate
Has stopped at half past ten;
And, long as the young man may wait,
It will not strike again.

The artful warden knows full well
What makes the clock set so,
And why no earthly power can tell
The time for him to go.

The way they start a railway train in Germany is thus described: When all is ready, a bell rings. Then another rings. Then the engine whistles; or, rather, she toot-toot-toots generally. Then the conductor tells the station-master that all is ready. Then the station-master looks placidly around and says, "So?" Then the conductor shouts "Fertig?" interrogatively. Then the station-master shouts "Fertig!" positively. Then the conductor blows a horn; the engine whistles; the bell rings; the other bell rings; the station-master says, "So?" and the train starts. That is unless a belated fat man comes. Then they do it all over again.

An advertisement elsewhere explains the merits of the Daniel Pratt Improved "Revolving Head" Cotton Gin, a careful examination is asked. The revolving head gin has been in use for eight seasons, and several improvements have been added. Messrs. J. B. Wolfe & Co., the general agents in this city, are Cotton Factors of acknowledged ability and integrity, and are agents only for this and Eclipse Hulling Cotton Gin, with revolving head. Send to them for circulars while you have time to examine.

The young Chinaman who is getting an education at Andover, at the expense of the Chinese government, was reported for neglect of duty. The reply came: "Send him home, and we will behead him." Quite pleasant for John.

Mr. P. Werlein, 135 Canal street, New Orleans, deals in the leading pianos and organs. He requests you to send for his catalogues and prices before purchasing. Low prices, reliable dealing, and full guarantee are to be had at this old house.

A flower has been found in Northern Mexico that has a perfume like that of whisky; and when a lot of inspectors from California got into a field where it grew, they were just wild with excitement; until they found where the odor came from.

This happened in a primary school. Examination in geography was progressing, and the teacher asked: "What are the three grand divisions?" The answer came promptly from a wee bit of a boy: "Water, ground, and grass."

A man had the misfortune recently to lose his wife. Over the grave he caused a stone to be placed, on which, in the depth of his grief he had ordered to be inscribed: "Tears cannot restore her, therefore I weep."

"For this home mission work," says the Christian Standard, "we want the best of women." "Good, brother Standard, you are too late; we married her nine years ago.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—American China dinner, breakfast and tea set, 130 pieces, for $15. Equal in looks and usefulness to French China.

The Chinese Encyclopedia meets a long-felt want; no family should be without it. It is published in Pekin, and has only 5,020 volumes. Price $7,500.

A painter's apprentice fell off a scaffold with a pot of paint in each hand. He was taken up insensible, but as soon as restored to consciousness he murmured, "I went down with flying colors, anyhow."

It is not wise for a young man to sell his sister for the sake of buying a liver pad.

Business Notices.

For sore lips from fever, colds and chills, apply Barrett's Kalliston, which at once allays the burning pains and irritation, and heals as by magic.

Faded or Gray Hair gradually recovers its youthful color and lustre by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, an elegant dressing, admired for its purity and rich perfume.

CANVASSERS make from $25 to $50 per week selling goods for R. G. DUN & CO., 10 Barclay St., New York. Send for Catalogue and terms

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

WANTED.—A FEMALE TEACHER (COMPETENT to teach advanced course of Mathematics, French and Latin), in a family school. Apply to the undersigned. J. W. ARKINSON.
MERIDIAN, MISS.

JOS. B. WOLFE & CO.,
Cotton Factors,
59 Carondelet Street, New Orleans,
And General Agents for
DANIEL PRATT IMPROVED
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin,
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873,
—AND—
Eclipse Hulling Cotton Gin,
WITH REVOLVING HEAD.
PRICES REDUCED.

THE REVOLVING HEAD GIN has been in use for the past eight seasons, and several improvements have been added. It deviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint from the same quantity of seed cotton than any other gin in use. The Revolving Head Eclipse the draft and causes the Gin to run faster, with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while economizing steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton, on this account, of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to the repeated amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin for every two bales ginned. Testimonials sent on full application.

SELF FEEDERS and CONDENSERS with latest improvements also made by the Daniel Pratt Gin Company to work with these Gins. Send for descriptive circulars. JOS. B. WOLFE & CO.,
New Orleans, La.

H. DUDLEY COLEMAN & BRO.
No. 12 Union St. New Orleans La.
DEALERS IN
MACHINERY
COMPARE OUR PRICES
SEND FOR CIRCULAR
MACHINERY
MILL STONES, IRONS & PORTABLE STEAM ENGINES.
MAKE FLOUR CORN MILLS SAW,
AND COTTON PRESSES

GERMANIA SAVINGS BANK,
No. 51 CAMP STREET.

Capital, ... $100,000.

This Bank is now ready to receive deposits of ONE DOLLAR and upwards, at 5 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually.

DIRECTORS:
H. ZUBEMBER, J. HASSENGER,
S. BERNHEIM, J. F. MERRITT,
FRANK T. HOWARD, EMIL MAIER,
H. ZUBEMBER, President.
J. HASSENGER, Vice-President.
TH. HATRY, Cashier.

DR. EDWARD HARRISON,
112 Canal Street, from 11 to 4 P. M.
NEW ORLEANS.

WANTED. U. S. LAND WARRANTS. CASH paid for old United States Bounty Land Warrants and Land Scrip. G. M. BALLARD,
Indianapolis, Indiana.

CARD COLLECTORS.—SEND 10 CENTS for a set of my new Autumn Leaf Chromos. Something new! Only ten cents for a set of twenty Chromo Advertising Cards. Also lots for fifteen, twenty-five and fifty cents. Sure to please.
W. VAN TINE,
25 Abingdon Square, New York.

You are Welcome to it
Without money and without price.
THE FARM ENGINEER,
A semi-monthly journal, full of valuable, useful and interesting information for the farmer, planter and mechanic, will be sent to any address until the first of July next.
Free of Charge.
F. P. GRAVELY,
Union Street, New Orleans.
Send your address for it immediately, either by postal card or letter, saying that you saw this in the ADVOCATE.

OUR BROTHER IN BLACK;
HIS FREEDOM AND HIS FUTURE.
By
ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD, D. D.,
President of Emory College, Oxford, Ga.
Nashville: Southern Methodist Publishing House
New York: Phillips & Hunt.
1881.
Will be issued simultaneously by both Houses May 1
12 mo., Price $1.
Sent to any address, post paid, on receipt of price
Address, the publishers, or the author.

1000 AGENTS WANTED!
One in each town and neighborhood in Mississippi and Louisiana, to sell
Dr. Dutton's Vegetable Discovery.
It is sold only by certified agents.
It is the best BLOOD AND LIVER Medicine we ever used. Write for terms. It will pay you.
J. L. FITTRELL, General Agent,
Jonestown, Miss.

Indian Turnip
COMPOUND
PECTORAL BALM.
For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per Bottle $1. Prepared and for sale by
B. LAPORTE, Druggist,
23 and 25 Elysian Fields street.
And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

Agricultural.

WHAT IS MOST STROV. — The Petersburg, Va., Rural Messenger, which says more good things than most agricultural papers find to say, tells us that the farmer in pursuit of his daily avocation, has to do with three great books, all of which he should study with the greatest care, and any one of which is intricate enough to tattle his best abilities. These are, the soil, the plants and the weather. The farmer is obliged to deal with each of these—to know something of the common laws which govern each, and as far as may be, he should learn what he can of the wonderful secrets of all. According to his thoroughness and order in the study of these books will be his success as a cultivator of the soil.

It will be conceded, if the above is admitted, that the farmer ought to be a good, practical naturalist. And we do not hesitate to say that every truly successful farmer is in fact, a good, practical naturalist, whether he knows it or not. He enjoys a working knowledge of soils, plants, and the weather, and this is a good deal more than many a learned scientist can claim. Any really intelligent man who passes his life amid the varied objects belonging to the departments above named, must necessarily acquire knowledge about them. He can not help it, for the information is often forced upon him by accident or the stress of circumstance. Indeed, the man who does not learn something—we will say a great deal—of the three "books" named, will never do much at farming.

This being true, the young farmer who is at an addition to improve on the old methods in vogue around him, to advance to something higher in his noble calling, to lift agriculture from the reproach that has attached to it through the ignorance of its followers, will seek every method and opportunity in his reach to be one at least tolerably acquainted with the three studies mentioned. Day by day, as he goes forth to his labor, he will take up the problems in each and seek to unravel the tangled threads—still the secrets of them shall be made plain.

A perfect knowledge of agriculture can be acquired in no other way. No mere theoretical scientist could ever give us a faultless system of farming. Nor can any practical farmer do it without science. The two must be united in connection, studied long and carefully and thoroughly, or very much will be added to the calamities that have been into the proportions of a stately and finished science. Wherever we find the best practical farming it is a good sign that the lessons in nature and the methods of labor are the closest parallel.

He who does not be successful above his fellows in this art must strive to excel in each of the three great subjects deep thought and unceasing attention. No one can be content, scarcely a problem in any can be passed by in silence. But the soil, the plant, the weather, each as a whole and each in its details, must be taken up, not separately but simultaneously, and studied and systematized till out of these coming chaos the eternal roll of the man shall evolve the agriculture that shall be fit to go down to future ages as the agriculture of the twentieth century—worthy to be adopted by any succeeding century.—Mobile Register.

SUGAR CANE FOR FEEDING CATTLE. S. G. O. asks: "Can some of your correspondents give their experience in raising sorghum, or sugar cane, as a forage crop? Can as much be raised on an acre as corn, and is it not more nutritious?" And you add in a note: "Will such of our readers as have made a practical test of sorghum, please give us the result for feeding?" In response I will say that I tried the experiment of raising and feeding sugar cane last season, and my experience is worthy of note. I received last spring from the commissioner of agriculture, at Washington, D. C., a small sack of seed, perhaps containing a pound, which was labeled "Minnesota early amber sorghum or sugar cane," with the request to "note and report soil, culture, time of sowing, time of reaping, quality and quantity of crop." This I did, and will repeat it in substance, for the benefit of your readers, especially those who advocate ensilage for milch cows.

My soil is a dark, rich intervale, underlaid with a stratum of flat limestone, and equal, perhaps to any in the State. I gave it the same culture as corn, planting in rows both ways, putting in twelve to fifteen seeds in a hill. I used the Buffalo phosphate, dropping a large spoonful in each hill. As the seed was late reaching me through the mail, I did not plant until the 2d of June. I gathered the seed on the first of October; it ripened earlier. The crop grew from eight to ten feet high, and as to quantity and quality, I should say it would produce double the yield by weight of corn, all things being equal, and it is twice as nutritious for feeding stock as green corn.

There are several facts which I think I have demonstrated by my test with this distinct and very early variety of sorghum: 1. It is as much better for feeding cattle than sweet corn, as sweet corn is better than common sound corn; and every man ought to know that sweet corn planted in hills, and allowed to stand until ears are developed before feeding is twice as valuable as any sowed corn, either green or dried for fodder. 2. If this early cane is planted as soon as May 15th, it will be in to cut for fodder as soon as July 1st, and it will then yield a second crop equal to, if not greater than the first. I did not begin to cut and feed my crop until after August 10th, and yet suckers sprang out from the roots or stubs of what which was cut down, numbering three to five from each old stalk. Exhibited at the Washington County Fair, a bundle of this second growth which measured five feet in height, and was in tassel.

Again, that it is the best spring feed for milch cows, is a fact demonstrated beyond question with us. My cows ate it with avidity, and it kept up the flow of milk during the dry, short pasture in summer, affording the richest milk and making the best butter I ever produced. The seed, of which it yields large quantities, makes good feed for animals, and is especially valuable for poultry. This cane is remarkably rich in saccharine juice, yielding, it is said, one hundred and fifty gallons of beautiful golden syrup per acre. This last assertion will be tested the present season, and the facts fully published. The seed I saved has been tested, and grows readily.—County Gentleman.

MILK AND BUTTER. The Maryland Farmer says there is no other farmer's production so subject to injuries from many slight causes as milk and butter, and none other so sensitive to unpleasant odors of every kind, none other that is so much deteriorated in value as these are; hence, all kinds of uncleanliness should be avoided, and the utmost neatness should be observed in every step of their production and marketing, from the very feeding, handling and milking of the cows, as well as treatment and handling of the milk with the churning, working and putting up of the butter. All of the vessels and implements used, the water and salt used, and the rooms occupied in keeping the milk and making the butter, should be kept perfectly clean and sweet, in order to produce the best quality, to secure high and fancy prices. Nothing short of this course will do it. No other article that the farmer produces for the market, has such a wide range or difference in prices as butter, not even cheese or choice fruit. We see by quotations in all the great butter markets that the prices of table butter ranges all the way from ten cents to one dollar per pound, while greasy, cooking butter is even lower than that; even the packages in which it is put up, whether firkins, tubs or rolls, affect the prices for which it sells. Grains and meats have but a small range compared to butter; the difference in the prices of butter is much greater than the difference in the cost; it is much more profitable to make and sell a first-class article than a poor one.—Mobile Register.

A RAIN GUAGE.—We are apt to be deceived with reference to the quantity of rain that falls in a shower or in a given time, it appearing much larger to us than it really is. Contrary to what many would suppose, an inch fall of rain is a very heavy shower. One can measure a rain fall quite easily. There are rain guages made for the purpose, some of them highly ornamental and decidedly expensive, but it is not necessary for us to look after any such arrangements, unless so prompted by a mere taste for such things. Set out a common tin bucket with perfectly straight sides, that is not larger or smaller at the top than at the bottom, and when the rain is over measure with a rule the water that has accumulated in it, and you have as correct an idea of the rain fall as any costly guage could give you. A common round, tinsmith can do with the top cut squarely and smoothly, makes a very good rain guage. Of course you will understand that the vessel must be placed in a position where it will not be screened by buildings or disturbed by drippings. It must have a clear and open exposure.

PACKING SOFT FRUITS. The London Journal of Horticulture says quite as much pleasure has been left upon being informed of the satisfactory condition of soft fruits after a journey, as in winning a well contested prize at a flower show. The plan which I so proved perfectly successful and which is now invariably followed whenever fruit is sent by rail, is to wrap each bunch of grapes or fruit of other kinds in soft tissue paper, surrounding it with a slight padding of wool, bran, as the fruit is placed side by side in a box. The paper is put upon the fruit in plain folds, and not twisted into hard corners, which may press into the fruit and spoil it. Much care is taken to have each fruit thoroughly enveloped in the bran, which is also sifted into as compact a mass as possible by slightly jarring each box upon the packing bench after the top layer is put in, and when it is quite full a sheet of paper is put upon the bran and the hinged lid closed by hooks and eyelets of copper wire, and securely corded. If this excellent old method is only done correctly all risk of failure is avoided.

RICH LAN FEEDING. Farmers should bear in mind, especially during the winter season, the importance of feeding their stock regularly. The quiet and contentment produced by this mode of treating cows, will manifest itself in the increased weight of the milk pail. In the winter season the second feeding should be about two o'clock in the afternoon, which will allow them to have from that time to milking all they will eat, and giving a feed of hay when the milking is finished. The first stomach of the cow should be empty, or almost so, before more food is eaten. A cow chewing the cud can not be hungry. This regularity as regards feeding likewise applies to watering and milking. This regular system of feeding applies fully as well to pigs and sheep, when the latter are in winter quarters. Animals can be as easily trained as children, and every farmer who bears this in mind will be amply rewarded by the fine appearance of his stock and the affection which will be bestowed upon him by them.

DRAINAGE. The Country Gentleman says: "To succeed early as well as good vegetables, it is of vital importance to have perfect drainage. A wet soil may be unfit to work for weeds, and then give you a hard, or crusted, or lumpy surface. Well drained land may be worked at once, and be warm and mellow. If the ground needs it, put in pipe-tile a rod apart, and three feet deep. It will make the season a month earlier than with a water soaked soil, and be equivalent to three degrees farther south in latitude." The same journal, after giving some practical hints on the essentials to success, thus sums up its counsels: "To sum up then; provide in season plenty of manure. Arrange for all the horse-cultivation practicable. Avoid the common mistake of occupying more ground than you can keep in perfect condition. Have complete, natural or artificial drainage. If all these requisites are attended to, your vegetable garden will be found most profitable."

MANURING THE GARDEN. The cost of manuring a garden plot is so trifling, and the result so satisfactory, it is a matter of wonder that those who desire a fair harvest of fruits or vegetables do not treat the soil a little more liberally in this respect. Before getting seeds, plants, slippings or cuttings, get manure. Study the character of the soil and seek to give it the manure best calculated to enrich it, and there is nothing better than well-rotted stable manure. Let it be well worked into the soil. It is of little use to a gardener to throw it upon the ground and there leave it. Let there be as thorough pulverization as possible and then intermixture of the manure, and the land will show its gratitude in the results.

THE CORN CROP. The American Farmer, discoursing on the subject of the corn crop, says thorough preparation of the land, even if it costs some time, pays. So does ample manuring. For giving the plant a start-off use a handful of rich compost in the hill. Where other materials are used in the hill such as superphosphates, care must be taken not to bring them in too close contact with the seed, which may thereby be burned.

GROWING STRAWBERRIES. A New York farmer says that potato tops make the best mulch for strawberries. They are free from wood seeds, heavy enough not to be blown off and will not pack and smother the plants as straw or hay will sometimes do. In spring they are well rotted as not to need removal.

Household.

MAKING SOFT SOAP. Mrs. W. Menzies gives in the Chemist and Druggist the following practical recipe for making soap without boiling: "Take exactly ten pounds of double refined ninety-eight per centum caustic soda powder (Greenbank,) put it in any can or jar, with forty-five pounds (four and a half gallons) of water, stir it once or twice, when it will dissolve immediately and become quite hot; let it stand until the lye thus made is cold. Weigh out and place in any convenient vessel for mixing exactly seventy-five pounds of clean grease, tallow, or oil (not mineral oil.) If grease or tallow be used, melt it slowly over the fire until it is liquid and just warm say temperature not more than one hundred degrees Fahrenheit. If oil be used no heating is required. Pour the lye slowly into the melted grease or oil in a small stream continuously, at the same time stirring with a flat wooden stirrer about three inches broad; continue gently stirring until the lye and grease are thoroughly combined and in appearance like honey. Do not stir too long or the mixture will separate itself again. The time required varies somewhat with the weather and the kind of tallow, grease or oil used; from fifteen to twenty minutes will be enough. When the mixing is completed, pour off the liquid soap into an old square box, or a mould sufficiently large to hold it, previously dampening the sides with water, so as to prevent the soap sticking. Wrap up the box well with old blankets, or better still, put it in a warm place until the next day, when the box will contain a block of one hundred and thirty pounds of soap, which can afterward be cut up with a wire. Remember the chief points in the above directions, which must be exactly followed. The lye must be allowed to cool. If melted tallow or grease be used, it must not be more than warm. The exact weight of double refined ninety-eight per centum powdered caustic soda and tallow or oil must be taken; also the lye must be stirred into the grease, not grease or oil added to the lye. If the grease or tallow used be not clean, or contains salt, it must be "rendered," or purified, previous to use, that is to say, boiled with water and allowed to become hard again to throw out the impurities. Any salt present will spoil the whole operation entirely, but discolored or rancid grease or tallow is just as good as fresh for soap-making purposes.

If the soap turn out sticky and uneven, it has not been thoroughly mixed. If very sharp to the taste, too much sode has been taken. If soft, mild and greasy, too little soda has been used. In either case it must now be thrown into a pan and brought to a boil with a little more water. In the first case boiling is all that is necessary; in the other instances a very little oil or a very little more of the double refined powdered caustic soda must be added to the water. These things will never happen, however, if the directions are exactly followed, and after the soap has been made several times with the experience thus gained; the process is extremely easy, and the result will be always a good batch of soap. Beef tallow makes the hardest soap, mutton fat a rather softer soap; of oils, cotton seed is the cheapest and best, but the soap is much softer, lathering very freely indeed. Ordinary household fat or dripping will make a nice soap, and in many places can be obtained at a trifling cost, and in exchange for goods sold. Such grease, however, must be carefully examined for salt which it often contains. It will be evident that any smaller quantity of soap can be made at a time, according to the above directions, by taking the ingredients in exact proportion. It is not advisable to make more than double the quantity prescribed, as it is difficult to work more by hand.

CHICKEN POT-PIES. In the first place be sure and have the fowl nicely picked and dressed. Scald quickly so as to loosen the feathers without cooking the skin, if you do not want it to tear and come off. Rub the feathers downward and the pin feathers will not be troublesome. Scorch off the hair; take out the crop and entrails very carefully; cut up nicely into pieces; wash, cover with water and put over to cook about ten o'clock, if it is a spring chicken killed about this time of year. They will cook so as to do a little sooner, but we like meat a little tender, and I usually get them over about ten. When they come to a boil, skim off the blood that rises to the surface of the water. When they begin to grow tender, season; and this you will have to learn to do by experience and according to your taste; but do not get it too salt. When nearly done skim off the grease of which there will be a good deal if the fowl is fat. If you like the pot-pies rich, add some butter in the place of the grease skimmed off. It gives a better flavor than the chicken fat. Keep plenty of water in. See that the broth does not boil too low. If the fowl is a good large one, have at least a quart and a half of the broth when done.

When the meat is nearly tender enough, pour out about half the broth into a spider or small kettle to make gravy. Have the dumplings ready, made as follows: One small teacupful of sweet milk, one large tablespoonful of thick sweet cream, a pinch of salt and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder; stir in flour till as stiff as you can conveniently work with a spoon; mix the baking powder in a part of the flour; cut the dough out with a spoon into chunks and drop among the pieces of chicken; cover the kettle quickly and closely; keep up a good fire; do not uncover the kettle often, but peep in once or twice, if necessary, to make sure that it does not burn, having a teakettle of boiling water at hand from which to add a little in case of need. Put a heaping tablespoonful of flour into a bowl; add a little water and stir smooth like starch; pour this into the broth in the spider, letting all come to a boil. Take up the chicken and dumplings in a large tureen or soup dish, turn the gravy over it and serve immediately.

Sometimes I make biscuit crust instead of the dumplings. In this case I do not take out any of the broth, but boil till the chicken is tender, seasoning as before. Make the biscuits as follows: Fill a pint bowl one-third full of rich sour cream. Fill the bowl up with good buttermilk, stirring cream and buttermilk well together. Make a hole in the centre of the flour; pour this in; add a teaspoonful of salt and two teaspoonfuls of saleratus, mashed and smoothed off even—a little more if the buttermilk and cream are very sour. Mix all together lightly leaving as soft as can be handled out conveniently; roll out and cut into biscuits, and bake in a moderately hot oven. Take up the chicken; put two tablespoonfuls of flour into a bowl with a little water; stir smooth as before; pour this into the broth in the kettle, and let it come to a boil. Split the hot biscuits; lay them into a deep dish, and turn the gravy over them. They should stand a little while before serving, to be extra nice.

Educational.

—An interesting experiment is in progress in the public schools of Galt, Ontario. The younger children, in the number of about two hundred, are kept at their studies half the time, the remaining hours being spent in play under the direction of a teacher. The half-time children are divided into two sections. For the first hour and one-half one of these pursues the regular studies, while the other is engaged in play. Intermission follows, and then until noon the section which was studying in the early morning is transferred to the play rooms, and the section which has had recreation takes up the school work proper. The afternoon is spent alternately in a similar manner. The "play teacher," who has charge of the children, guides them in their amusements, and in a multitude of ways incidentally imparts instruction, while attention is paid to physical exercise. The scheme appears to be a union of the kindergarten with the class-room. Its favorites claim that under it fully as much progress is made by the children as by the present method; that school is rendered more attractive, and attendance, instead of being irksome, becomes a pleasure.

—Prof. W. R. Harper, of the Baptist Theological Seminary at Morgan Park, Ill., has organized a club for the study of the Hebrew language by correspondence. It is designed not for beginners, but for those who possess a fair knowledge of the language. The lessons are forty-eight in number, one each week, and the plan involves the reading of twenty-four chapters of Exodus during the course. The professor already has a large class, comprising ministers of nearly every denomination, in various parts of the country, who wish to brush up their knowledge of the language.

Among the decorations of the new Public Latin School building in Boston are to be portraits of former masters and of pupils who bore an honorable part in the late war for the preservation of the Union. Among the former is that of John Lovell, master of the first Latin School on School street, from 1730 to 1775, a firm Tory in the Revolution; of whom Mr. Harrison Gray Otis tells us that on the morning of the battle of Lexington he dismissed his boys with these words: "War's begun; school is broke. Deponite libros."

It is estimated that the increase in the school population of Texas is annually ten to fifteen per cent. One-fourth of the general revenue has been appropriated against one sixth last year for the public free schools, but the rate of taxation has been reduced, and the general revenue will probably be smaller. The aggregate school fund from all sources in 1880 was only $821,022. It is feared that the schools are to suffer from lack of money.

The Boston Society of Natural History will open a seaside laboratory at Annisquam, Mass., June 15th, the session to end September 15th. There will be no stated course of instruction and no lectures, the purpose being to afford opportunities for the study and observation of the development, anatomy and habits of common types of marine animals under suitable direction and advice. Those students are desired who have already made a beginning in the study of natural history.

—The Newark Advertiser addresses those whose first idea in public economy is to lower the salaries of teachers: "The public schools, unfortunately, blunt the sensibilities of private duty. Men grumble at the school tax as they chronically grumble at all taxes, while the head of a family; were there no public schools, would cheerfully pay five times as much for the education of the children as he now pays for rent, clothing, coal and provisions."

Steps are being taken toward the foundation of an industrial school for girls, the necessary subscriptions to be solicited throughout the various counties of the valley of the Hudson River. A committee has been appointed to carry out the enterprise, and a public appeal has been made. The institution is intended to be of a reformatory character, and designed to bring the inmates as nearly as possible under the influence of a Christian family. Several subscriptions have already been made, and others are expected.

The free evening drawing-schools which have been started all over Massachusetts are now closing the year, and the almost universal report is of a gratifying success. The exhibitions show that industrial drawing, such as will be of practical benefit to mechanics, artisans, etc., forms the principal part of the course, little or no time being spent in mere picture-making.

—A petition to the government for shortening the school hours is being circulated in Berne, Switzerland. Two other desirable things are included in this petition for the sanitation of schools—the erection of school workshops and a more stringent insistance upon personal cleanliness.

—The syndicate appointed to consider the memorials relating to the encouragement to be given to the higher education of women at Cambridge, recommend a scale of fees for adoption as payable by candidates for examination, varying from $5 up to $30, according to the examination gone in for.

—Bowdoin's Memorial Hall is to be completed in good style. The history of the college, left unfinished by Nehemiah Cleveland, has been completed by Prof. Packard, and only awaits a sufficient number of subscribers to be printed. It is a book of about seven hundred pages.

—The school fund in Indiana amounts to $9,065,251 73. Prof. James H. Smart, who has just retired from the post of State Superintendent which he has held for six years reports that the schools of the State have made in the past sixteen years immense advance.

—The sum of $50,000 has been promised by two Yale graduates for the construction and equipment of a physical laboratory." This will supply a long-felt need, though the sum is far smaller than is needed.

—A new building for the Indian girls is soon to be erected at Hampton, Va. There are sixteen new Indian students in the Government school there, three of them being Apaches.

—The Cincinnati High Schools celebrated recently the ninety-third anniversary of the settlement of the State, with essays and recitations bearing on the subject.

—Eton College, England, has established a factory, a building of three floors, in which various mechanical appliances are to be erected, so that boys may be taught the practical use of tools.

—The Tennessee Normal School, by an act of the Legislature, receives $10,000 a year from the State, besides a like sum from the Peabody Fund.

—The London School Board has decided that women are eligible for appointment as School Inspector—an office held exclusively hitherto by men.

EDUCATIONAL.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Owned, controlled and managed by the Louisiana Annual Conference.

Course of study equal to any college in the South. Its roll of pupils has nearly doubled in three months, and still they come. Noted for healthfulness of locality. All at living rates.

Total expense for Spring term, commencing February 14, 1881, only $75 in literary and classical course. Music $30. No extras. Let Louisianians build up their own schools.

A specimen copy of College News free on application. Address REV. J. LANE BORDEN, President.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. Vc. Kuerlinger, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $50 additional.

Spring session begins February 4, 1881. A discount of ten per cent. to Methodist preachers, and Publishing House books taken from the list at par.

Send for catalogue to REV. R. E. HOSS, President.

HAMBURG ARK. HIGH SCHOOL,

Thirty Miles North of Hasirop, La.

This institution, for both sexes, now in its fourth year, has six months yet remaining. Its facilities for educating are peculiar, and its charges are moderate. All modern improvements introduced. Faculty full and well experienced. The principal boards his teachers and pupils, regarding the latter as his own children.

One hundred and twenty-five dollars will cover all school expenses, except Music.

City inquirers are referred to Judge R. H. Todd, J. M. Bonner and J. M. Lewis, Esqs., to Rev. Dr. C. W. Carter and Bishop Keener.

H. C. B. FONNERLY, Principal.

January 6, 1881.

READVILLA SEMINARY,

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

A home school for girls. Thorough training in all departments. Full corps of effective teachers. Expenses moderate. Scholars limited.

For particulars address MRS. MARY W. REED, Principal.

Memphis Conference Female Institute.

JACKSON, TENNESSEE.

REV. A. W. JONES, A. M., D. D., President.

This well-known College of the South and West begins its fall session the First Monday in September. Opening Concert and Address Tuesday, September 7, 1880. For thirty-six years it has been in an average of more than twelve graduates annually.

The Faculty is full and efficient. The determination is to stand among the foremost in the progress of Science, Language and Art.

For further information apply to the President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin September 29, 1880.

This is a family boarding school for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough and all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or for any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. H. S. MAGUIRE, Baton Rouge, La.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Opens September 6, 1880. The last session was the most prosperous one since the war. The whole cost of board and tuition need not exceed $141 in the Preparatory Department, nor $164 in College classes for the scholastic year. Send for a Catalogue.

C. B. ANDREWS, President.

East Mississippi Female College,

MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.

REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., PRESIDENT.

A chartered and prosperous Southern school for girls and young ladies. Few schools have grown more steadily and rapidly in public confidence and patronage. Increased in numbers during the past seven years as the following figures: 54, 42, 86, 94, 96, 97, 143. Commanded patronage the last year from Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee and Alabama. Its past history, increasing facilities, accessibility and methods of close and thorough instruction assure the friends of a long and prosperous future for the institution. Send for catalogue.

RHWASSEE COLLEGE,

EAST TENNESSEE.

Founded 1849, and located where

Pure Waters flow,
Sleek cattle low,
Cool breezes blow,
Ripe apples grow.

Excellent and tried teachers. Terms very favorable. The Female Department is at SWEETWATER, on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad. The Male Department, at RHWASSEE COLLEGE POST-OFFICE, seven miles out in the country. A neat monthly paper, the "Rhwassee College Reporter," at fifty cents a year. Address

J. H. BRENNER, President.

JEFFERSON COLLEGE,

HIGH SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN.

Six miles from Natchez, Miss. Session begins September 16. Full corps of instructors. Course of study thorough and extensive. Nearly fifty boarders from abroad. Pupils from a distance board with the principal. Entire expense for ten months, $145. For catalogues address the principal,

J. S. RAYMOND, Washington, Adams county, Miss.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.

Will begin its forty-first session October 4, 1880. Great attention paid to the regular course. Teachers in the Music and Art departments selected with reference to special fitness. Charges moderate. For further information address

H. M. MIMS, A. M., President.

HOMER MALE COLLEGE

THE TWENTY-FIRST SESSION

will begin the

FIRST OF SEPTEMBER 1880.

Address H. A. SMITH, President.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FOR SALE.

A desirable residence in Ocean Springs, Miss. For particulars apply to or address the subscriber at that point.

A. C. RAMSEY.

Crescent Insurance Co.,

67 & 69 Camp Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

ORGANIZED 1849. REORGANIZED 1880.

Cash Capital $400,000.

SOLICITS

FIRE, RIVER AND MARINE RISKS.

W. R. LYMAN.....President.
S. B. NEWMAN.....Vice President.
CHAS. E. RICE.....Secretary.

My New Illustrated Price List describing over 100 Gold and Silver Waltham Watches sent for a 3c stamp. It tells how I send watches to all parts of U.S. to be examined before paying for money. Undoubted references. N. H. White, Jeweler, Newark, N. J.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHERS,

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books named in this section supplied at the lowest cash prices guaranteed as low as they can be had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application. Also a general line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER,

SLATED CLOTH,

LIQUID SLATING,

BLACKBOARDS,

BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,

CHALK CRAYONS,

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,

NUMERICAL FRAMES,

SCHOOL SATCHELS,

BOOK STRAPS,

WHITING PAPER,

DRAWING PAPER,

BLOTTING PAPER,

WRITING BOOKS,

COMPOSITION BOOKS,

SLATES AND PENCILS,

INK, INK STANDS, PENS,

PENHOLDERS, CALE HELES,

Kindergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors, members and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

South-western Agency for

Readers' and Writers' Economy Co.

LATHROP & WILKINS, New Orleans.

"FOR ORGANISTS!"

ORGAN GEMS. ($2.50.) By E. L. DAVENPORT.

ORGAN SELECTIONS. ($1.50.) By PETERS.

HATTSTET'S ORGAN VOLUNTARIES. $2.50

HATTSTET'S LAST COMPOSITIONS. $2.50

ORGANIST'S RELIANCE. (10 Nos., each $1.25. Complete $6.) By EUGENE THAYER.

ZUNDEL'S ORIGINAL ORGAN COMPOSITIONS. $1.25.

In these six well-made books will be found a very large number of voluntaries, some closed, some of a new and light, but all good. Organists will be glad of these the longer ones latest, and to adopt the shorter compositions as themes from which to vary.

Billee Taylor, price reduced to 50 cents.
Olivette, price reduced to 50 cents.

Johnson's New Method for Harmony.

($1.) By A. N. JOHNSON. "The best book in the world" (for its subject,) was the commendation received by an enthusiastic pupil on a former book by the same author. However that may be, this is his newest treatise, and can hardly be excelled for plainness of explanation, ease and thoroughness. It does not attempt Counterpoint, or any of the higher problems of composition, but confines itself to those that every organist, every good player, and every composer of "the peoples music," ought to know.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston

C. H. DITSON & CO., 843 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Christian Advocate.

A Declaration of Principles by Adventists.

The Adventists, like other bodies of Christians, exist in divisions. After the failure of Miller's predictions of the end of the world in 1843-4, his followers were scattered and divided. Thrust out of the churches with which they had been connected, as troublers and fanatics, they were compelled to form some sort of an association among themselves. Some were proud of being driven out of Babylon (as they called the denominations,) and invited others to join them; yet not to organize churches, which they held to be a sin. Another party, called the "shut-door" people, declared that Christ had come, and they were shut into the kingdom with him, while the rest of mankind were shut out. A convention of the more sober Adventists was held at Albany, in 1845, at which a declaration of principles was adopted and organization was recommended. The distinctive article of this "declaration" expressed a belief that the visible personal second coming of Christ was "near at hand."

In this Albany platform substantially that division of Adventists known as the Second Advent Christians has continued to stand. In 1855 there was a division in this body (if body it could then be called,) the new party taking the name of Evangelical Adventists. Besides these two branches, there are two others—the Seventh-Day Adventists and the Life and Advent Union. Of the various bodies stand in relation to one another, we purpose to indicate.

The Second Advent Christians believe that the second coming of Christ is "near at hand," and that the finally impenitent shall be punished with everlasting destruction.

The Evangelical Adventists differ from the Second Advent Christians in holding to the unconscious state of the dead and to the eternal conscious suffering of the wicked.

The Seventh-Day Adventists differ from the other bodies in holding that the sanctuary to be cleansed is not the earth, but the heavenly sanctuary. Christ will come as soon as he completes his "investigative judgment," to ascertain who of the dead are worthy of the first resurrection and who of the living of translation. Satan is then to reign in the earth a thousand years, after which it will be redeemed and fitted for the dwelling-place of the saints. They observe the Seventh-Day as the Sabbath and baptize by immersion.

The Life and Advent Union, which was formed in 1863, publishes as its platform life in Christ only and non-resurrection of the wicked dead.

Mr. Miller, who died in 1849, estimated that there were in his day about 50,000 Adventists. The present number is believed to be about 80,000, divided as follows: Second Advent Christians, 30,000; Seventh-Day Adventists, 15,000; Evangelical Adventists, 9,000; Life and Advent Union, 6,000.

The Second Advent Christians are more widely spread over the country than any other Adventist body. There are two publishing associations—one in Boston, the center of the churches of the East; the other in Chicago, the headquarters of the churches in the West. The Second Advent Christian Association appears to be a sort of representative organization for the Adventists of the East. It issued last year instructions for the calling of a "National Convention of Second Advent Christians, for the purpose of considering a proper system of organizing churches and a declaration of principles." This convention has just been held in Worcester, Mass. Delegates attended from the New England States, New York, Pennsylvania, and Canada, to the number of 221, of whom 81 were ministers. Among the lay delegates were a number of women.

The Conference adopted a declaration of principles, respecting creed and church organization, and a form of "advisory covenant." The first four articles state the commonly received doctrine of the Scriptures and the Trinity. The fifth article declares that Christ died to save men from eternal death, the penalty of a violated law; that the redemption he provided is twofold "redemption of all men from the penalty of Adam's sin, by the resurrection of the dead; second the redemption of believers from personal sin and its consequences." The sixth, seventh, and eighth articles treat of repentance, of baptism (of believers, should be "buried with Christ in baptism," to show their belief in the resurrection of Christ and of the dead,) of the Lord's Supper, and the "personal return of Christ." The tenth article expresses belief in the everlasting destruction of the finally impenitent and the final extinction of all evil. The eleventh article declares that the coming of Christ is near at hand. Articles twelve and thirteen express the belief that the earth will be made over, for the future abode of the saints, and that all church action should point to the personal coming of Christ. Three articles on church organization declare in favor of the congregational system. The "advisory covenant" takes the Bible as the only rule of faith, and permits liberty of thought, though protesting this privilege by refusing sanction to the "perverse" urging of doctrinal things, "not essential to salvation."—New York Independent.

How Menageries are Supplied.

Many persons must have wondered how menageries are supplied with wild beasts; and it may have been supposed that the managers of those shows send out expeditions to procure such animals as they wanted.

The truth is that one man, a German, supplies all the menageries of this country, and most of those of Europe, with their animals.

He is a trader on a large scale, but is generally very careful not to handle the live stock in which he deals; nor, for that matter to buy of his employees. His business is the importation of every variety of wild beast and bird, from an elephant to a mocking-bird, from a tiger to a dove sparrow. Does the proprietor of a menagerie lose his elephant, he applies to this gentleman's depository. He states whether he would prefer an African or Asiatic elephant. He gives warning of starting his party, and in due time the animal arrives, and is immediately shipped in whatever the new owner's caravan may happen to be. If an African is wanted, a dispatch is at once sent to Cape Town; if horned horses, giraffes, or rhinoceroses are in demand, orders are at once sent out for all that can be bought or found. The fact is, this gentleman has some fifteen employees, who are scattered over Africa and Asia, and whose sole business consists in collecting rare wild animals for him. So complete are all his arrangements that none are found to compete with him in the business. There are over thirty menageries traveling about the country every year. Every year they lose a certain per centage of their animals from natural death or by accident. Some of the more rare animals are naturally delicate, and never become acclimatized, and consequently do not live long. This makes them very costly. Others, again, like the giraffe, often die of sea-sickness on the voyage. The giraffe, too, is so awkwardly built that it does not lie down with its legs under it, like others of the antelope tribe; consequently, if the vessel rolls at sea, it looses its balance, is swung against the side of its cage, and frequently breaks its long, unruly neck. This risk runs up the price of the giraffes to a high figure. Several years ago a well-known showman, who had imported four giraffes, (through this gentleman's agency) but who took the sea risk on himself, lost them all on the voyage. He could not now get four equally good specimens under twenty-five thousand dollars. But when a cargo does come safely across, the profits to the importer are very large.

It is a great mistake to suppose that any of these animals are captured full grown. A full-grown lion, could he be trapped and put in a rage, would soon pine away and die. A full-grown wild elephant is the most savagely treacherous of animals. Even when captured young, and trained in a circus, the elephant betrays these inborn qualities more and more as it grows older. It is only of late years that elephants have been imported from Africa. Our monopolist dealer in wild beasts often obtained four young elephants from Africa, and retailed them here to different showmen at about eight thousand dollars apiece. They were "babies." The elephant is an animal of very slow growth. When five years old it does not stand more than three feet; and one of the four alluded to above was only thirty inches high. They were, however, a perfect godsend to the showman in the way of startling novelties. One thirty-inch one was vastly exhibited as a dwarf. Another was shown as the offspring of an old female elephant, which had been in this country years before the youngster first saw the light in his African jungle. Three of these young elephants are still alive and in this country, but they have grown out of all knowledge, especially the dwarf. The showman who exhibited the young calf asserted to have been born here made a great hit, although he was not nearly so successful as the owner of the celebrated "baby elephant" which was truly born in Philadelphia a little more than a year ago.

As a general thing, all animals are captured when young by the hunters, acting under instructions from the white agents. If lions are wanted, the natives sally into the country and either kill the parents and then secure the cubs, or track the lioness to her den and then, waiting till she goes hunting for food, seize the opportunity of stealing the cubs. In capturing elephants they drive them, old and young, into an inclosure, hamstring the old ones so as to disable them from protecting their calves, and then easily secure the young ones. An African lion commands a higher price in the market than an Asiatic lion, on account of his more massive and commanding appearance; his mane is much thicker and longer than that of his Asiatic brother, and is black. The quality and length of the mane is the test of the value of lions. An African lion sells for three thousand dollars; an Asiatic lion brings only two thousand dollars. The same with tigers. Royal Bengal tigers will command six thousand dollars a pair, jaguars only four thousand dollars. Camels and dromedaries bring about one thousand two hundred dollars apiece, but white camels have been sold at two thousand five hundred dollars each. A good ostrich can be bought for four hundred dollars; elephants from six thousand to eight thousand dollars; horned horses so called, though they are really only a variety of antelope from one thousand five hundred dollars upward.

The importation of animals is only a branch of the business; but it is, in this case, very extensive the value of the animals imported for the last fifteen years having averaged over one hundred thousand dollars a year. Of course, the needs of every menagerie are known; and when one wants to sell a surplus animal or two, or to replace them with finer specimens, they are almost invariably sold direct to this gentleman, or, through him, on commission, to the proprietors of other menageries. A very fair menagerie may be started for fifty thousand dollars; but some few of the giant shows value their stock of animals at two or three times that figure. The aggregate value of all the wild animals in this country must approximate two million five hundred thousand dollars. In no other country in the world are there so many kept in confinement. The show business is essentially American, and, as a general thing, is a very profitable one.—The Growing World.

Hints to Parents.

Always speak in a pleasant voice.

Teach your children how to work; how to obtain a living by their own efforts. Teach them the nobility and dignity of labor, that they may respect and honor the laborer.

Explain the reason why. The child is a little interrogation point. To it all is new. Explain the reason. Your boy will some day repay this trouble by teaching some other child.

Teach your children the evil of secret vice, and the consequences of using tobacco and spirituous liquors; teach them to be temperate, orderly, pure-minded, truthful, neat, faithful and honest.

Encourage your children to be careful of personal appearance; to return every tool to its place; to always pay debts promptly; to never shirk duty; to do more and share, and to always live up to an agreement.

Teach your children to confide in you, to counsel together. Tell them your plans, and sometimes ask their advice; they will thus open their hearts to you, and will ask your advice. The girl who tells all her heart to her mother has a shield and a protection about her which is an armor and a panoply.

Advise your children in your confidence in the affairs of your business. They in the affairs of your business will thus take interest, and become co-workers with you. If you enlist their sympathy and co-operation, they will quite likely remain by and work when you have gone to bed, and will go ahead performing what you have commenced.

I am a farmer, do not overwork your children, and thus, by hard and constant toil, drive them out to the cities, dreary like, where the poor boy and girl are in danger. Allow at least one hour in the morning, take an hour's rest after meals, and quit at five or six o'clock in the afternoon. Let young people, by economies and other amusements, have a happy time during the remainder of the day. There is no reason why a farmer's family should be deprived of recreation and amusement any more than others.

Teach your children the value of the Sabbath—the improvement of the mind; that on the Sabbath morn the ordinary work of the week should not be resumed; that the day should be passed in attendance upon religious service of some kind, of exercise that will ennoble and spiritualize the nature. While rest and suitable recreation may be a part of the day's programme, true philosophy dictates that the spiritual faculties of the nature should be cultivated by setting apart a portion of the time for their improvement.

Teach your children those things which they will need when they become men and women. As women they should understand how to cook, how to make a bed; how to preserve cleanliness and order throughout the house, how to ornament their rooms, to renovate and preserve furniture and clothing, how to sing, how to play various games, that they may enliven the household. They should be taught how to swim, how to ride, how to drive, how to do business, and how to preserve health. The mother should early entrust money to the girl, with which to buy articles for the household, that she may know its value. Think what a man and woman need to know in order to be happy, prosperous and successful, teach them that.—From Hill's Manual of Social and Business Forms.

MISCELLANEOUS.

"CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S EXCHANGE"
FOR WOMAN'S WORK.

This Association has opened a salesroom at Nos. 11 and 13 Bourbon street, where all kinds of plain and fine sewing, ornamental and fancy needle-work will be received and sold.

Orders will also be taken for preserved jellies, pickles, cake, ice cream, etc., samples having first been tested.

All work must be entered through a specialist, the price fixed by the owner securely fastened to the article, and the commission charged will be ten per cent.

The Annual Subscription of Members is Five Dollars—Will entitle each to enter the name of three to Employment each year.

Women of all denominations in this city or State, as well as of all other States, are urgently requested to become members of the Exchange.

Proposals from all regarding members may be sent in, addressed as per No. 6, or by letter, at the Rooms. Communications of any kind will also be gladly received, or information given at the same place.

We sincerely trust the public generally will, and as its charity or liberality has so often been proved, we charity, with the assurance that the Managers will spare no effort to its success.

The benefits of this association are open to all women without regard to religious belief.

MANAGERS:

Mrs. C. W. Pritchard,	Mrs. E. Jolliffe, Sr.
Mrs. M. W. Bartlett,	Mrs. Gilbert Green,
Mrs. D. A. Green,	Mrs. M. B. Conway,
Mrs. I. G. Richardson,	Mrs. Ka Fillmore,
Miss R. M. Walmsley,	Mrs. T. V. Copeland,
Mrs. S. Delsol,	Mrs. Percy Sargent,
Mrs. Alfred Baldwin,	Mrs. J. B. Williams,
Mrs. T. H. Hollins,	Mrs. T. J. Wharton,
Miss Percy Roberts,	Miss C. E. Kells,
Miss J. H. Allen,	Mrs. E. F. Simpson,
Miss P. S. Strong,	Mrs. S. H. Hawks,
Mrs. J. R. Judice,	Miss Sue R. Westcott,
Mrs. L. P. Wayne,	Miss Mary Landriau,
Miss M. A. Weskett.

OFFICERS:

President, Mrs. M. W. BARTLETT.
Vice Presidents, Mrs. R. M. WALMSLEY, Mrs. Jno. RICHARDSON, Mrs. J. F. JUDEN, Mrs. E. E. SIMPSON, Mrs. ALBERT BALDWIN.
Treasurer, Mrs. CHAS. E. KELLS.
Recording Secretary, Mrs. THEO. MAZE.
Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. E. J. WHARTON.

BEWARE OF FRAUD.

To protect the public against imitation and fraud, we specially caution all purchasers of

BENSON'S
CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER

to see that the word CAPCINE (or the letter of each plaster is correctly spelled.

BEWARE of worthless plasters offered under similar sounding names.

Remember the only object the dealer can have is that he makes a somewhat larger profit on the spurious article.

SEABURY & JOHNSON.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL
UNION
DEPOSITORY.

We keep a full line of Question Books, Catechisms, Hymn Books, Class Books, Library Books, Rewards, and everything needed in the Sunday-school. Send for catalogue.

Also Sankey & Bliss' Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs, Teachers' Bibles, Concordances, Bibles for Scholars, Commentaries, etc., at the Depository.

LATHROP & WILKINS,
New Orleans La., and Houston, Tex.

E. HEATH,

IMPORTER AND DEALER IN

Carpets, Floor Oil Cloths.

UPHOLSTERY GOODS, Wall Paper, Window Shades, Cornices, Lace and Nottingham Curtains, Mirrors, Moldings, Frames, Rug Goods, etc.

Frames made to order especially.

No. 99 Camp street, New Orleans.

All Farmers, Mothers, Business Men, Teachers, Students, and Sedentary People, and all who are troubled with Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sleeplessness, or with Bowel, Kidney or Liver Complaints, should use Parker's Ginger Tonic.

PARKER'S GINGER TONIC

If you are wasting away with Coughs, Impoverished Blood, Nervousness, Weakness, Lack of Energy, Loss of Appetite, Dizziness, Sour Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Fever and Ague, Kidney Complaints, Female Weakness, Lame Back, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sleeplessness, or with Bowel, Kidney or Liver Complaints, you need the Ginger Tonic. By using a few cents worth you can prove that it will find Parker's Ginger Tonic the Best Health & Strength Restorer you can use, and far superior to Bitters, and other Tonics, as it picks up the system, but never intoxicates. It Has Saved Hundreds of Lives, and May Save Yours.

Buy a 25 ct. bottle and be sure the signature of H. A. & Co., N.Y., is on outside wrapper.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM Restores Its Youthful Color. Especially Prepared to Prevent Dandruff.

THE MILD POWER
CURES
Humphreys' Homeopathic Specifics

Proved from ample experience an entire success. Simple! Prompt, Efficient, and Reliable, they are the only medicines adapted to popular use.

FIRST PRINCIPAL NOS.	CURES.	PRICE
1.	Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations,	25
2.	Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
3.	Crying Colic, or Teething of Infants,	25
4.	Diarrhea of Children or Adults,	25
5.	Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
6.	Cholera Morbus, Vomiting,	25
7.	Coughs, Cold, Bronchitis,	25
8.	Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache,	25
9.	Headaches, Sick Headaches, Vertigo,	25
10.	Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach,	25
11.	Suppressed or Painful Periods,	25
12.	Whites, too profuse Periods,	25
13.	Croup, Cough, Difficult Breathing,	25
14.	Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Eruptions,	25
15.	Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains,	25
16.	Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Ague,	50
17.	Piles, Blind or Bleeding,	50
19.	Catarrh, Acute or Chronic Influenza,	50
20.	Whooping Cough, violent Coughs,	50
24.	General Debility, Physical Weakness,	50
25.	Kidney Disease,	50
26.	Nervous Debility, Spermatorrhea,	1.00
27.	Urinary Weakness, Wetting the Bed,	50
28.	Diseases of the Heart, Palpitation,	1.00

For sale by druggists, or sent by the Case, or single Vial, free of charge, on receipt of price. Send for Dr. Humphreys' Book on Disease, &c. (144 pages), also Illustrated Catalogue. FREE.

Address, Humphreys' Homeopathic Med. Co., 109 Fulton St., New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

25,000 SOLD!

FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S
—MANUAL—

Edited by GEO. E. WARING, Jr.,

Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

500 Octavo Pages—Over 200 Illustrations.
Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $50 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assured analysis and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more than has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of it tending merely, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, In Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $3 50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address
LATHROP & WILKINS,
New Orleans, La., or Houston, Tex.

NEW YORK SHOPPING

Of every description for ladies and gentlemen, Household articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address

Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,
P. O. Box, 508, New York.

FURNITURE
JOHN BOIS,
DEALER IN
Parlor, Bed and Dining Room
FURNITURE.
291 Camp St., cor. Calliope, New Orleans.

Repairing, Upholstering, Varnishing, etc., promptly done. Country orders promptly attended to. Spring, Hair and Moss Mattresses made to order. A full line of common Furniture on hand—suitable for the country.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at

JOHN GAUCHE'S
MAMMOTH
QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI-PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 100 pieces, for $12.

ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $10.

REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.

ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3.50.

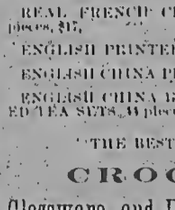
ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.

ENGLISH CHINA GOLD HAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5.50.

THE BEST SELECTION OF
CROCKERY
Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods
OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.

REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS
JOHN CAUCHE,
AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,
109, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street.



Branch House, Nos. 108 and 110 Chartres Street.

JOSEPHUS'
COMPLETE
WORKS.

Comprising the History and Antiquities of the Jews, with the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; and dissertations concerning Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, James the Just, and the Sacrifice of Isaac, together with a discourse on Hades or Hell with his autobiography, translated by William Whiston, A. M. To which is added an Index Geographical and Historical. In one large octavo volume of 780 pages, bound in cloth, gilt and marble edges, $2 50; mailed post paid on receipt of price.

LATHROP & WILKINS,
New Orleans.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.
SIZES AND PRICES

Diam. of Bell.	Weight with Yoke & Frame.	Cost of Bell & Hang's.
No 6,	25lbs.	$ 25 00
No 5,	270lbs.	35 00
No. 7,	300lbs.	50 00
No. 8,	450lbs.	75 00
No. 9,	925lbs.	130 00

RUMSEY & CO.,
Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A.

WATCHES.

LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upward
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $45 and upward
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward
BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward
All guaranteed.

A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.,
Cor Canal and Royal Sts.

YOUNG MEN'S
Christian Association,
OF NEW ORLEANS.
ROOMS, 87 CAMP STREET.

Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M., except Sunday, and on Sundays from 2 to 6 P. M., where may be found the leading daily and weekly papers of the most important cities of the United States.

SERVICES.

Tuesday, 7.30 P. M. Devotional.
Thursday, 7.30 P. M. Sharing Class.
NOON-DAY PRAYER-MEETING,
Daily, 12 to 12.30.

Rule:—Prayers and Remarks are limited to three minutes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street. - - - - 15 Bourbon Street.

Our Stock of Spring Goods is now complete, consisting in the most novelties in Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales.
HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.
D. H. HOLMES,
SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE. 155 Canal Street, New Orleans.

WHEELER & PIERSON,
(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Howes.)
CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,
Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.

Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40. | Business Suits, $12 to $25
6 Shirts for $9 | Collars, $1.50 per Dozen.

Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.
Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.
Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department upstairs.

THE NEW DICTIONARY HOLDER.

These holders are so arranged that they press the book firmly together when open, so that the Dictionary is held open in form, unstrained open position and will be found one of the most convenient and desirable articles for scholars, literary or professional persons and for many uses in every day life. Any one who uses a dictionary should have one of these patent holders, and has only to write us for circular or call at store for references. Place the dictionary in the holder and keep it there. There is no going sideways, and no injury to the binder, from out of the binding. Children and grown people refer to a dictionary more frequently when these holders and the book always stand open and ready. You have only to open the book at the word you want, place it on the holder and it remains open, even when you stand. If placed by your side when reading or writing, the face of book is not disfigured and then forgotten, but being instantly and easily referred to as you stand, how much it is used, questions answered and much pleasure and profit derived from its use. The Cambridge Dictionary, edited by Worcester, Webster, &c., fit in the holder exactly.

Price, finished in black or Japan, white or pickle wash, $1 00

Address LATHROP & WILKINS, Agents for the Southwest, 112 Camp St., New Orleans.

CATARRH Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects—corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, mental anxieties, and finally consumption. From first to last it is ever aggressive. Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. It neglected while a cure is possible it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, successful and pleasant treatment is

Dr. M. W. CASE'S CARBOLATE of TAR INHALANT
FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, Bronchitis & Deafness.

To those not required to inquire, [illegible] advocates the value of Carbolate of Tar, the most healing [illegible] known to science. Balsams, and Cordials of [illegible] must be used with and soothing properties are so combined with Pure Pine Tar, that the more breathing converts them into a dense smoke or vapor. This is inhaled—taken right to the diseased parts. No Heat, no hot water, simply breathing or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. This treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by [illegible] who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FULL TREATMENT, Circulars, etc., Sent Free. Satisfaction Always Guaranteed. Address, DR. M. W. CASE, 933 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

HOW TO PAINT.

A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain, common Sense Statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person buying anything to paint, and tells

Every Man His Own Painter.

Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, zinc, pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—

Paint for Out-Buildings,

—Whitewash, paste for paper hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut shading, decalcomanie, making rustic pictures, painting yellow shade, mahogany, polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture waxing furniture, cleaning paint—

Paint for Farming Tools,

and for machinery, and household fixtures

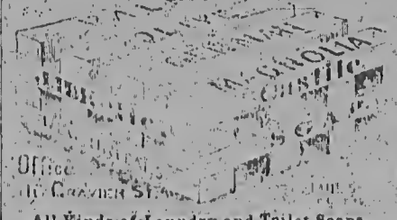
To Paint a Farm Wagon,

to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts,

The work is neatly printed, with illustrations wherever they can serve to make the subject plainer, and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.

Price by mail, post paid, $1.

LATHROP & WILKINS,
New Orleans, La., and Houston, Tex.



Good News! Good News!

Mammoth Furniture House
OF
McCRACKEN & BREWSTER,
33 & 35 Royal Street,

Now have the largest stock of Fine and Medium Chamber Sets, Ebony Gilt and Walnut Parlor Sets, Dining-Room and Hall Furniture to be found in the South. Also a large and various stock of cheap and durable Furniture suitable for the country trade.

THONET BROS., VIENNA,
BENT WOOD FURNITURE
Our motto—small profits and quick returns.
McCRACKEN & BREWSTER.

J. H. KEILER,
MANUFACTURER OF
CARBOLIC,

All Kinds of Laundry and Toilet Soaps.
Send for Circular.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell the CHASE'S 9000 RECIPE BOOK. Sells at Sight. You should [illegible] your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

MENEELYS' BELLS.

For Churches, etc., known to the public since 1826, are made only at "THE MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY," West Troy, N. Y. Catalogues free.

UNITED STATES
Four Per Cent. Bonds
BOUGHT AND SOLD BY
New Orleans National Bank,
58 CAMP STREET.

BEE CULTURE.

MANUAL OF THE APIARY.
By A. J. COOK,
Professor of Entomology and Lecturer on Horticulture in Michigan State Agricultural College.
THIRD EDITION.

Revised, enlarged, mostly rewritten, and beautifully illustrated. Price now it is fully up with the times on every conceivable subject that interests the apiarist.

It is not only instructive but intensely interesting. This work has masterly production, and one that no bee keeper, however limited his means, can afford to do without. It is printed in the best style on fine book paper. Price, bound in cloth, $1 25 post paid.
Address, LATHROP & WILKINS,
112 Camp Street.

BUCK'S IMPROVED

BRILLIANT STOVE
Is acknowledged to be the Best Cook-Stove Made.
SOLD BY
H. HALLER,
NEW ORLEANS.
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

Cooking and Heating Stoves of the most Improved makes, Stamped, Plain and Japanned Tin-ware, Tinned and Enameled Hollow ware, Iron and Clay Furnaces, Thayer's Stock, Grates, Iron wire Lamp-burner, and Wick to suit, Tinner Iron Spoons Forks, Coffee Mills of all kinds, Blanished-ware, Traps, Fire-Grates, Plating Machines, etc.

H. HALLER,
No. 53 Camp St. New Orleans

Price List mailed on application.

GRATEFUL COMFORTING.
EPPS'-COCOA.
BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Made simply with boiling water or milk.
Sold only in tins (¼ and ½ lb.) labelled
JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists
London, England.

Also makers of Epps' Chocolate Essence for afternoon.

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, May 9, 1881.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Sat.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	5⅞	5⅞
Ordinary	6⅞	6⅞
Good ordinary	8	8
Low middling	9⅛	9⅛
Middling	10⅜	10⅜
Good middling	11	11
Middling fair	11⅝	11⅝
Sales to-day	5,300 bales.
Receipts since our last	7,156 bales.
Receipts previously	1,480,711 bales.
Sugar, ₱ lb.
Fair	6⅝
Fully fair	7⅛	7⅛
Prime	7⅜	7⅜
Choice
Yellow clarified	8¾	8¾
White clarified	8⅝	8⅝
Powdered
Crushed
Molasses, in hhds. ₱ gallon:
Common	22	25
Fair	25	28
Prime	30	33
Choice
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.
Common	3¾	4⅛
Fair	4⅞	5⅛
Prime	5¼	5¾
Choice

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.
Western	7	28
New York	16	25
Coffee, ₱ lb.
Rio, ordinary	9¾	9¾
Rio, fair	11¾	11¾
Rio, prime	11¾	12¾
Cheese, ₱ lb.
Western factory
English dairy
Candles, ₱ lb.
Best brands	11¾	12
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl.
Choice K. D.	2 90	3 00
Flour, ₱ bbl.
Superfine	3 00
XX	3 75	4 00
XXX	4 50	4 75
Choice
Choice family
Fish:
Mackerel, No. 1, in bbls		8 00
Half barrels		4 50
Kits		95
Mackerel, No. 2, in bbls		6 75
Half bbls		3 50
Kits		85
Mackerel, No. 3, in bbls	5 50	6 75
Half bbls	3 00	3 70
Kits	75
Codfish, ₱ lb	6½	6
Herring, ₱ box	30	35
Oils, ₱ gallon:
Coal, in cases
Coal, in bbls
Linseed, raw	55	60
Linseed, boiled	61	64
Cotton seed	29	32
Lard	55	87
Soap, ₱ box
Magnolia		2 10
Olive		2 50
Palm
Castile		2 75
Soda, ₱ lb
Starch, ₱ lb		3¾
Salt, ₱ sack:
Coarse	1 00	1 02½
Fine	1 37½	1 40

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow		61
White	66	67
Mixed		61
Oats, ₱ bushel
Western		49
Red rust-proof
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs
Choice	87½	90
Hay, ₱ ton
Prime		26 00
Choice		30 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel
Mixed	2 00	2 15
Clay	2 30	2 50

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb
Breakfast	10	10¼
Shoulders		6¾
Sides, clear rib		9
Sides, clear		10
Hams, sugar-cured	10	11¼
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl	15 50	16 25
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb:
Clear rib sides		8¾
Clear sides		8¾
Shoulders	5¾	5¾
Lard, ₱ lb
Choice, in kegs		12¾
Choice, in tierces		11¾

ESCULENTS.

Potatoes, ₱ bbl
Irish	2 50	2 75
Sweet		1 75
Onions, ₱ bbl	4 00	5 00
Apples, ₱ bbl	1 50	2 50
Cabbages, ₱ doz
Sour Krout, ₱ bbl	12 00	12 00

BALING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard
India
Jute
Baling Twine, ₱ lb		17
Ties, ₱ bundle
30 lbs and under ties		1 65

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ dozen
Grown chickens	5 00	5 50
Young do	3 00	3 50
Ducks	3 00	3 00
Geese	4 00	5 00
Turkeys		15 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen
Western	13	15
Southern	12½	14
Honey
80 gal'ns, ₱ gallon
Comb, ₱ lb
Pecans, ₱ lb
Louisiana
Texas	8	9
Oranges:
Louisiana, ₱ bbl
Foreign, ₱ box	4 50	5 00
Wool, ₱ lb
Louisiana		19
Texas
Feathers, ₱ lb
Geese
Hides, ₱ lb
Cattle, green	6	6
Dry salted	8	10
Dry flint		12½
Ox Horns,		8
Tallow, ₱ lb	6¼	6¼
Cotton Seed,
In sacks
Meal	27 00	27 00
Oil cake	25 00	25 00
Cooperage, ₱ each
Sugar hogsheads	3 00	3 25
Molasses barrels	1 30	1 35
Half barrels		1 05
Kegs		70
Oak Staves, per 1000
Kegs
Barrels
Extra claret	95 00	100 00
Extra hogshead	135 00	140 00
Extra pipes	165 00	180 00
Tobacco:
Low lugs
Medium		6½
Good to fine
Low leaf
Medium	5½	5½
Good	6½	7
Fine	7½	8
Selections	10	12

A very interesting "find" is reported from Russia. In the library of one of the provincial capitals have been discovered several unpublished letters written by Voltaire, and forming a large portion of his correspondence with Kasumowski, the secretary of the Empress Catherine.

There is More Strength

restoring power in a 50 cent bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic than in a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body. See other column.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

CHARLESTON, May 2.—The Democrats have elected their Mayor and eight of the ten Councilmen yesterday, for the first time in eight years. All business interests united with them.

RICHMOND, Va., May 3.—The 32d annual session of the American Medical Association began here to-day in Mozart Hall.

The exercises were opened with prayer by Bishop Keane, of the Catholic Church, and an address of welcome in a happy vein was delivered by Gov. Holliday.

Dr. Hodgden, of St. Louis, Mo., opened the session with an annual address which treated mostly of the advancement of medical science, and speculations as to the superiority of new over old modes of cure.

There are five hundred delegates present, representing every State and important city in the Union.

ST. LOUIS, May 3.—The river rose about seven inches yesterday and is still rising quite rapidly.

Most of the wharf above the bridge is submerged, and in some buildings the water is standing on the first floors, necessitating the removal of goods to the second stories.

All the cellars along the river front are nearly full of water. In the southern part of the city below Chouteau Avenue, and between the Iron Mountain Railroad embankment and the river, the land is all submerged and business operations of various establishments are suspended.

In the northern part of the city more than a dozen factories, planing mills, elevators and other establishments have been obliged to stop work.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—Hon. Lionel A. Sheldon, of Ohio, was to-day unanimously confirmed as Governor of New Mexico. He will remain here two or three days longer in order to close up his business and receive instructions.

SHREVEPORT, May 5.—By authority from the New York office a party will leave here to-morrow, to locate a line of railroad from Alexandria, La., on Red River, to Little Rock, Ark., forming a connecting link between the New Orleans Pacific and the Iron Mountain roads both under the control of Jay Gould.

WASHINGTON, May 5.—The Senate transacted a remarkably large amount of business in its executive session to-day, clearing the calendar of treaties and also taking final action on eighty-eight nominations. The first matter disposed of was the Chinese immigration treaty which, after nearly three hours debate, was ratified without amendment by practically unanimous vote; there being only two Senators recorded in the negative. The Chinese commercial treaty was taken up, and after brief discussion was also ratified without opposition.

The Senate next ratified in quick succession the extradition treaty with the United States of Colombia, the Consular Convention with Italy, the Convention with Morocco, and the treaty with Japan relative to reciprocal duties of the United States and Japan in case of ship wrecks upon their respective coasts.

NEW YORK, May 6.—The forty-fourth anniversary of the American and Foreign Bible Society was held here yesterday afternoon and evening. Capt. Morgan, of Groton, Ct., presided.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 6.—The morning papers congratulate the people of the Pacific coast, on the ratification of the Chinese treaties, and say it marks the dawn of a brighter era for its industrial and social development.

ST. LOUIS, May 6.—Information has come down from Madison Levee that a cut was made in the dyke by some as yet unknown and malicious persons, about 4 o'clock this morning, and the water direct from the river has since been pouring into the bottom through an opening some fifty feet wide.

CINCINNATI, May 7.—Mayor Means has issued an order for the enforcement to-morrow Sunday of the law, which reads as follows: "Whoever sells or barters any spirituous liquors on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, except upon the written prescription of a practicing physician, shall be fined not more than fifty dollars." The police have been directed to give notice to all saloon keepers to-night.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 7.—At the session of the House of Bishops, at the Methodist Episcopal Church, yesterday, a plan of visitation for family conferences of 1881, was arranged. The following are the names of some of the Conferences and the time and place of meeting, and the name of the bishops who will preside: Alabama, at Birmingham, November 24th, Bishop Simpson, Austin, at Fort Worth, November 17th; Central Alabama, at Marion, December 1st, Bishop Simpson; Central Tennessee, at Daweltown, October 19th, Andrews; Georgia, at Gainesville, November 17th, Simpson; Tennessee, at Jonesborough, October 20th, Andrews; Savannah, at Brunswick, November 9th, Simpson; Tennessee, at Franklin, September 29th, Andrews; Texas, at Marshall, December 8th, Warren; Western Texas, at Calvart, December 13th, Warren; West Virginia, at Moundsville, October 5th, Foster.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 9. The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to-day authorized the chairman to report back, with the recommendation that it be adopted, the following resolution, recently introduced by Senator Morgan:

Resolved, etc., That the interest of the people of the United States and the welfare and security of their Government are so involved in the subject of the construction of ship canals and other ways for the transportation of seagoing vessels across the Isthmus, connecting North and South America, that the Government of the United States, with the frankness which is due to all other peoples and governments, hereby asserts that it will insist that its consent is a necessary condition precedent to the execution of such project; and also as to rules and regulations under which other nations shall participate in the use of such canals or other ways, either in peace or in war.

FOREIGN.

HAVANA, May 2. Yesterday the booming of cannon on Cabanas fortress announced the extension of the constitution of Spain to the Island of Cuba. Troops paraded and to-day was one of general festivities.

The Gazette published the constitution, and also the royal decree of April 7th, ordering its promulgation without prejudice to the observance and fulfillment of the law of the 13th of February, 1880, for the emancipation of slaves, and without prejudice to other special laws in force in Cuba, as designated by article 81 of the constitution. In accordance with article 13 the press becomes free and censorship is abolished.

LONDON, May 3.—Fresh excesses have been committed against the Jews at Argenau, West Prussia, but the gendarmerie has restored order and are now preserving it. A number of Jewish families have fled.

LONDON, May 3.—The Admiralty have received a telegram from Montevideo stating that the British war ship Dorcet was blown up on the 26th of April at Sandy Point in the Strait of Magellan. The cause of the catastrophe is not known. The loss of life is probably great, as only the commander, paymaster, engineer and nine seamen are known to have been saved. The Dolert was a sloop of 1135 tons.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 6.—Eads' ship railway contract has been unanimously approved by the Chamber of Deputies.

Many public works were inaugurated in celebration of May 5th.

It is reported that Gen. Grant has arranged his business with the Executive, subject to the approval of Congress.

LONDON, May 9.—In the House of Commons, to-day, Sir Henry Tyler, (Conservative) gave notice of an amendment to the parliamentary oath bill. It characterizes Bradlaugh as "the notorious republican publisher of profane literature and atheist."

Mr. Gladstone moved an address praying the Crown to provide a monument in Westminister Abbey to Lord Beaconsfield. He appealed to the House not to make it a subject of partisan discussion.

Mr. Labauchere, (Liberal) member for Northampton, opposed the motion. The motion was adopted—yeas, 380; nays, 54.

In the House of Lords, Earl Granville made a similar motion, which was seconded by Lord Salisbury and also adopted without division.

PARIS, May 9.—Letters from Algoria state that remnants of Col. Flatter's separated expedition were finally driven to take refuge in a cave, where they were starving and resorted to cannibalism. Fifteen were eaten, including a sub-officer named Robagnier.

PARIS, May 9. An official dispatch from Rammel Souk, dated to-day, says: The Kroumirs finding themselves nearly surrounded have evacuated, without fighting, the important position of Sidi Abdallah, which the French have occupied.

Its possession virtually decides the campaign.

Whisky and the Church.

MR. EDITOR: The local option question has been agitating this parish for the last six weeks, as perhaps, no other interest has since the war. It has been in a state of intense excitement. The cry has been made that "those who turn the world upside down, have come out hither also." The election came off on Friday last, April 22, and I am loth to say, that the anti-local optionists were by far too successful. Out of eight wards in this parish, they carried six of them. This, Mansfield ward, by far the most important one in the parish, polled a tie vote, and hence, as it required a majority vote in the affirmative, to continue the licensing of the sale of intoxicating liquors—the local optionists have carried the day. This I believe, is the universal opinion of the legal profession, and so the matter rests unless contested.

While canvassing the parish in the interest of local option with wide-awake friends and supporters of this movement, one fact impressed itself on my mind with such fearful power, that I can not keep silent with reference to it. It is the strange and dishonoring attitude the church sustains towards this matter. It does seem that if anybody in the land should be forward in putting down this monster evil, that man should be the professor of religion. Of all men, church members should be awake to this important issue, when laid before the people to determine by their votes. They should lead the van, they should be first in the efforts made, to throttle and crush this gorgon vice. To a man, the church should be heart and hand against this parent of all vice and criminality. This position could be maintained if necessary, by a hundred weighty considerations; but as it can not be denied by friend or foe, we shall not stop to defend it.

My experience and observation in this matter amount to this, that whenever local option is defeated, it is defeated by the church, by the very men professing godliness. The balance of power is in the church, with reference to this point whenever it is made a public issue by order of the Police Jury. There are numbers of men, publicans and sinners, who are strong anti-temperance men, but who, at the same time are much stronger local option men and do much for its success. They see the evils of the liquor traffic and would like to see it stopped. Many of them are drunkards, and some of them are parties interested in the sale of intoxicants. They say by their public talk and by their votes, that they wish local option a grand success. Now it is very patent to all, that if the voters in our churches should vote for local option with these subjects, it could not be defeated in any parish in this State, except perhaps, in a few of the French parishes in southern Louisiana.

Now if this be so, and it can not be questioned, it follows, that if local option is defeated at all, it is defeated by the so called church of Jesus Christ. One of these sinners of whom I have spoken above, said to me on the day of election, that "if the churches in the parish were all right, the whisky traffic would be crushed to death in every ward, without any doubt," and many more have affirmed the same thing. It takes a good deal of grace for me Mr. Editor, to suppress my indignation when I see one of these shouting or praying prominent members of some church pushing aside all of the over whelming motives in favor of local option, and being ruled by some of the petty, childish and flimsy pretenses urged against the movement. One man thinks it "will damage the town," forgetting if he ever knew the curse of God on such, when he says, "woe to him that buildeth a city with blood." A member of a Christian church in this ward, voted against local option and influenced all his laborers (colored), to do the same, urging as an excuse, that if whisky were taken away from the ward, his labourers would all go too. He will have a chance to see now. Others again, love the stuff, one of the most prominent and reliable citizens of this town told me that one member of the church, the Methodist Church, living in this parish paid out an average of six hundred dollars every year for whisky; and the assertion has been made, that ten men can be found not over a thousand miles from the court house, who will average per annum two hundred and fifty dollars each. Do you think such epistles of Christ would read "against Romans?" Here is the trouble, we have too many men in the church who drink, even to drunkenness. Some of the most bitter opponents of local option, sometimes stagger away from the Lord's supper. The drunkards and the drinkers in Zion stand first in the track of the local option car and endeavor to stop its onward movement by voting against it. Again, we have many professors of religion who are interested financially in the sale of liquor. Some of them have large vineyards and make immense quantities of wine to sell. These are [illegible] capital in, of course, others. Keep or are interested in regular whisky shops. There are between nine and fifteen whisky dens in this parish, kept by church members, some of them are prominent ones at that. Are you surprised that so many wards voted for whisky? I am not. Such a state of affairs is a stain, an unmitigated shame on the cause of our Divine Lord? Where are we drifting? And, what will be the outcome of all this? I know these are plain, burning words, but then, why keep these back, when they are working so much evil to the church and the world. But then I don't believe De Soto is an exception only to the rule. If all our preachers should have occasion to make certain disclosures, referring to this increasing evil in the church, I believe we would all be shocked as by an earthquake, so horrid and fearful would be the discoveries made.

Two things, it seems to me, are required to wipe away this foul spot from the church of God. 1. A mighty public sentiment against the traffic in intoxicating liquors. 2. Faithful pastors who will not suffer such offenders to remain in her borders. If men, after all mild and gentle means have been diligently used, still continue to offend—then let them be cut off. It matters not whether they are paying members or not, let them go. Put alas! alas! "there's the rub."

JAS. J. BILLINGSLY.

MANSFIELD, La., April 26, 1881.

Summer School of Christian Philosophy.

Several gentlemen have been interested in forming a school of Christian Philosophy, which shall consist of lectures and conversations on topics that touch the relations of religion and science. They have so far made their plans, that the place selected is Warwick Woodlands, Greenwood Lake; the time of beginning is Tuesday, 12th of July; the Dean of the Faculty is the Rev. Dr. Deems, of the Church of the Strangers; the Secretary is the Rev. A. H. Bradford of Montclair, N. J.; and the lecturers already engaged are President Porter of Yale College, Chancellor Crosby of the New York University, President Bascom of Wisconsin University, Professor Browne of Boston University, and Professor Winchell of Michigan University. A layman has guaranteed the financial success of the undertaking.

CAMP MEETINGS.

SEASHORE CAMP-GROUND.—There will be a public meeting of the Executive Committee of the Camp Grounds on Saturday May 21, 1881, for business connected with the approaching camp meeting.

All persons desiring to secure lots for building, or tents for camp meeting, or for the season, or having other business with the Committee, are invited to be present.

E. F. GRIFFIN,
Chairman of Committee.

SEA SHORE CAMP MEETING.—The Camp Meeting for 1881, on Sea Shore Camp Ground, will commence on Wednesday, July 13, 1881.

PHILIP HALLORAN, Secretary. W. H. FOSTER, President.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

SEASHORE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Meets at Moss Point, Miss., Friday, May 27, at 9 A. M. Conveyance will be at Scranton Thursday, 11 A. M. to take preachers and delegates to Moss Point. Thursday, May 26, at 3 P. M. the preachers will hold a meeting at the Methodist Church, Moss Point, to consider the interests of the district, and the best mode of promoting the interests of the church within its bounds. Friends of the cause are invited to attend and take part in the meeting. We will enquire after unoccupied ground, and how to more fully "possess the land" now but partially occupied.

T. S. WEST, P. E.

The Vicksburg District Conference will be held at Fayette, June 3-5, Bishop Keener presiding. The change of time is made to enable Bishop Keener to be with us.

JOHN A. ELLIS, P. E.

Pensacola District Conference, Alabama Annual Conference, will convene at Georgiana, April 28, at seven o'clock, P. M. Preachers in charge will please be prepared to give full accounts of their charges, as specified by the Discipline. Make an earnest effort to raise the collections ordered by the Discipline and Conference. I hope the Stewards of the several charges will make liberal payments on their pastor's salaries, so that it can be reported at the District Conference. Pastors will send the names of their lay delegates and local preachers to Rev. L. Patterson, Georgiana. Let earnest prayers be made by the churches for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the District Conference.

S. H. COX, P. E.

Quarterly Conferences.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MOBILE DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Franklin Street	Apr. 24
Eastern Shore, at [illegible]	30, May 1
Tonsbamville, at Tonsbamville	May 7, 8
Citronelle, at Citronelle	14, 15
Grand Bay and St. Elmo	21, 22
Saraggville, at Ft. Madison	28, 29
Grove Hill, at Cofeeville	June 4, 5
St. Stephens, at Andrew Chapel	11, 12
Bladon Springs, at Mt. Zion	18, 19
Tukatuppa, at Jones' Chapel	25, 26

16 O. S. BLEE, P. E.

TUSKENSHAW DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Greenhaven circuit, at Union Chapel	Mar. 31
Newberne circuit	Apr. 2, 3
Greenhaven station	9, 10
Havana circuit, at Cottage	16, 17
Parkland circuit, at Trinity	23, 24
Livingston and Eutaw, at Eutaw	30, May 1
Green circuit	7, Thursday, May 5
Belmont circuit, at Jones's Bluff	7, 8
Gainesville circuit, at Stonyerville	14, 15
Demopolis station	21, 22
Cuba circuit, at Curl's Chapel	28, 29
Gaston circuit, at Christopher's Chapel	June 4, 5
Choctaw circuit, at Brightwater, Thursday	9
Butler and Mt. Sterling, at Mt. Sterling	11, 12

13 H. URQUHART, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

JACKSON DIST.—THIRD ROUND.
In Part.

Soule Chapel	June 4, 5
Canton	11, 12
Forest Grove	18, 19
Thompsontown	25, 26
Edwards	July 2, 3
Flagg's Chapel	5, 6
Clinton	9, 10

The Jackson District Conference will meet in the Methodist Church in Canton, at 10 A. M. on Thursday, June 9. Let brethren remember to have Quarterly Conference Records prepared for examination, as the law requires.

12 W. L. C. BENNETT, P. E.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

BELHI DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Delhi and Mailet circuit, at Delhi	May 7, 8
Winnsboro circuit, at Winnsboro	14, 15
Oak Ridge circuit, at Good Hope	21, 22
Rayville circuit, at Girard	28, 29
Trenton and Monroe, at Trenton	June 4, 5
Colony circuit at Faulk's Chapel	11, 12
Lisbon circuit, at Schermanhorn	18, 19
Bastrop circuit, at [illegible]	25, 26
Floyd circuit	July 2, 3
Providence and Pecan Grove circuit	9, 10
Tensas Chapel, at Tensas Chapel	16, 17
Tensas circuit, at Wesley	23, 24
Waterproof, at Vidalia	30, 31

16 E. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT:

OFFICE: CORNER CARONDELET AND GRAVIER STREETS.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

Fire assets, excluding paid-up capital	$9,881,426 21
Paid-up capital	1,228,200 00
Total fire assets	$11,109,626 21
Fire liabilities	3,944,358 23
Making the surplus for policy-holders	$7,165,267 98

Losses by Chicago Fire in 1871..$3,239,091
Losses by Boston Fire in 1872..$1,129,729

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city, thus placing the Company on an even footing with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
J. F. SCHRODER, Esq., Chairman, of Leopold Christ & Co.
NEWTON BUCKNER, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERRY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Lallande.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson and Simpson.
HENRY V. OGDEN, Resident Secretary.
JULES P. ROUX, Ass't Resident Secretary.
NEW ORLEANS October 20 1880.

B. J. MONTGOMERY. C. KIRSCH

R. M. & B. J.

MONTGOMERY FURNITURE AND MIRROR EMPORIUM,

Corner Camp and Poydras Sts.

After a sojourn of over six weeks among the Factories North, East and West, we open the Fall and Winter Trade with the largest and best selected stock of Furniture, French and German Plate Mirrors, Ornamental and Fancy Goods, Upholstery Goods and Cabinet Makers' Hardware ever brought to this city. We select our goods in person from the best factories and are determined not to be undersold. Our assortment being too extensive and varied to be enumerated in detail, we request our customers and the general public to call and inspect for themselves.

On hand a full line of the celebrated Vienna Bent Wood Work and Invalid Wheel Chairs.

Goods packed and delivered F. O. B.

1000 MORE CUSTOMERS

My Prices

Will Astonish.

PIANOS! ORGANS!

AND

Musical Instruments.

Write to

P. WERLEIN,
No. 135 Canal Street,
NEW ORLEANS.

$25 TO $35.
STEWART'S NEW IMPROVED SINGER Sewing Machine.

Great Reduction in Prices!

Down with Monopolies!

Hard Times Demand Low Prices.

We warrant all our Machines to be NEW, LATEST-IMPROVED and PERFECT for

FIVE YEARS.

Our NEW MACHINE is supplied with a LOOSE BALANCE-WHEEL, which is a great improvement over the old SINGER, as it enables the operator to wind the bobbin without running the machine, or removing the work from the needle. This is the most important improvement ever put on the Sewing Machine.

Also dealer in all first-class Machines, such as the

WHEELER & WILSON, GROVER & BAKER, DOMESTIC, WILSON, WEED, Etc.

Cotton, Silk, Flax, Oil and Needles for all kinds of Machines. Address

M. A. PECK,
General Sewing Machine Agent
158 CANAL STREET,
Next to Holmes' Dry Goods Store,
New Orleans.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Styles, 10c. Agents wanted. L. JONES & Co., Nassau, N. Y.

MISCELLANEOUS.

W. F. MELLEN,
Attorney at Law,
12 CARONDELET ST.,
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

FRED. N. OGDEN. BENJ. O. L. RAYNE.

OGDEN & RAYNE,

DEALERS IN

BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,

AND AGENTS FOR THE

Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,

AND

Shultz Belting Company,

18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT,
RICHARD RHODES,
55 ST. CHARLES STREET 55
NEW ORLEANS.

Articles for Fishermen of all Kinds.

Rods, Nets, Hooks, Lines, and every desirable article for the Angler, wholesale and retail. Guns imported to order. J. R. Cooper's Breech and Muzzle Loading Guns always on hand. All kinds of improved artificial Baits. Repairing of Guns carefully done by experienced workmen, and Fishing Rods made to order. Address Postoffice Box 1599.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co.,
AMERICAN CHINA HOUSE,
49 Camp Street, New Orleans

We append a few prices:

The American China Dinner, Breakfast and Tea Set, comprising 160 Pieces, for $12.

A Real French China Dinner Set, 118 Pieces, for $17.

English Stone China Dinner Set, 124 Pieces, for $10.

English Stone China Chamber Set, comprising 10 Pieces, for $2 50.

Decorated Chamber Sets, with different Colored Bands, 10 Pieces, for $2 50.

Glass Goblets, from 60 cents to $1 per dozen.

Particular attention given to Novelties and Specialties pertaining to the House-Furnishing Department. Orders promptly attended to. We have just received a full and complete stock of holiday goods. Call and examine before purchasing.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO

Carpet and Oil Cloth Warehouse.
ELKIN & CO.,
100 - - - CANAL STREET - - - 100
New styles of
MOQUETTE, VELVET, BODY BRUSSELS, and TAPESTRY BRUSSELS, with border to match.
3-PLY and INGRAINS in great variety.
OIL-CLOTHS of all widths.
WINDOW SHADES and CURTAINS, new patterns.
CORNICES and CORNICE POLES.
MATTINGS of every description.
CURTAIN GOODS, TASSELS, CORDS, GIMPS, Etc.
Our prices for corresponding qualities of goods are as low as any house in the South or West.

FURNITURE.

W. G. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,

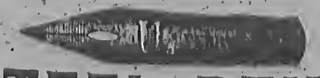
desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. G. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,
New Orleans.

D. MERCIER & SONS,
Better Known as Cheap John.
NO BRANCH STORE IN TOWN.
MEN'S, BOYS' AND YOUTH'S
CLOTHING,
HATS, BOOTS, SHOES, FURNISHING GOODS, ETC., ETC.
Cor. Dauphine and Bienville sts.,
New Orleans, La.



Orders from Country Merchants promptly executed on most reasonable terms.

DR. BLY'S CELEBRATED PATENT ARTIFICIAL LEGS AND ARMS have all the motions of the natural limbs. Perfect satisfaction in all cases or no pay. Prices reduced. Send for pamphlet.

A. McDERMOTT, Manufacturer,
153 Camp St., New Orleans

PERRY TRADE & FC O MARK & CO'S

STEEL PENS

of superior English make; famous for durability and elasticity; great variety of styles suited to every kind of writing. For sale by dealers generally.

"TWENTY-FIVE" assorted samples for trial, including the "U" and "FALCON" celebrated Pens, by mail, on receipt of Twenty-five Cents.

VISON, BLAKEMAN, TAYLOR & CO.
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. S.
NEW YORK.

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 27.—NO. 20. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1881. WHOLE NO. 1354.

PUBLISHED FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.
G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

ICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

scription, . . . $2 per annum.

iers and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

achers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.
REV. H. D. MOORE.
REV. O. R. BLUE, D. D.
REV. J. O. ANDREW.
MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. W. H. WATKINS, D. D.
REV. JAMES A. GODFREY.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.
LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. JOHN MATHEWS, D. D.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

IMPERFECTUS.

Or ever a song was sung
For the singer's heart sang sweeter
Or ever a throne was rung
By the chisel surpassed the meter
Or ever a sculptor wrought
Or the cold stone colored his ardent thought
Or ever a painter, with light and shade,
The dream of his inmost heart portrayed
Or ever a rose was found,
Or there might not be a fairer
Or ever a glittering gem was ground,
And we dreamed not of a rarer
Or ever in earth shall we find the lost
Or wait for us in the land of rest;
Or ever a perfect thing we shall never behold
Or pass the portal of shining gold.

—New York Independent.

From Hot Springs, Arkansas.

BY C. F. EVANS, D. D.

Although it rained from sunrise about four o'clock yesterday, and streets were muddy and sidewalks slippery, last night an immense audience assembled in our church, at this place, to listen to a man talk about "woman's part in temperance work." I confess I was much as I had never heard a southern woman lecture; and the average newspaper was accustomed to speak disparagingly of all such women and their public efforts, I felt misgivings as to the result when I shouldered the responsibility of asking my church to the present speaker. I had never seen Miss Frances E. Willard, and did not know what the press encomiums of her were prejudiced as I am sure many of their disparagements of other speakers are. She has brownish-auburn hair, is finely chiselled Grecian nose, thin lips, and wears glasses, has defective sight; in conversation she is a perfect encyclopedia of knowledge, and talks fluently. So much of the obtrusive, irrepressible and vitriolic fanatic might be hidden behind all these qualities, I was anxious to determine, but determined to know. So I sought her company and made her as much at ease as possible, and offered her all the facilities in my power. For the work which she is engaged I was willing to share the risks of finding her company by my hopes. But it gives me great pleasure in endorsing her work, to say, that Miss Willard fills the sphere of a woman as completely as the most fastidious could demand. Self composed, quiet, modest, gentle in voice and manner and diction, in the social circle and on the platform, she has won golded opinions of all classes for herself and her work. She had our ladies disorganized, though before they had a "Union," and yet it did not occur to her that we were either stupid or base. It was not practicable to organize afresh, and if she thought our plans were just and wise. Her address was directed to the intelligence of her audience, and was not an occasion for parading the fascinations of a graceful oratory, a fervid rhetoric. The chastened enthusiasm of a noble mind and Christian heart glistened in her eye, and trembled along the minor key of her pathetic sentences. She proposed to her sisters no Amazonian exploits of sheer wild zeal, but sitting as a queen at the fountain of public sentiment simply that they devote themselves to the revision and regeneration of public sentiment upon all alcoholic indulgences. The sexes commingle only in their leisure moments, and the crimes of society result from the abuse of the leisure which woman is recognized as having the right to direct and control. It remains for her to exert the authority with which she has been clothed by the generations of the past, and until she appears as a former will intemperance, wicked amusements and other social evils be corrected. Therefore I say, whenever she moves in the plane of a woman, "God speed" all her efforts through the press, the platform, or in the social circle, and look to the direction of "Temperance Reform." If the Woman's Christian Temperance Union have other speakers like Miss Frances E. Willard we will be glad to hear and co-operate with them.

Let me refer to the Woman's National Christian Library Association, organized here this year. Every one knows that these famous waters are the resort of all kinds of people, and that our commerce is largely dependent upon the visitors who come here. The baser elements of our resident population, combined with the same class among our visitors, have created a city of saloons. The rage and poverty of the city, together with the fact that no titles to property were considered good until within the past year, have prevented the establishment of any pleasure resorts of a high grade, and the great bulk of our visitors who come here for health have drifted almost necessarily into the grogshops and gambling hells. Our ladies have marked and mourned this state of things, and at last have determined to undertake a noble charity, one side of which contemplates the counter working of the alcoholic influence, another the dissemination of knowledge under Christian auspices, and another the relief of disease and the prevention of gambling, etc., by having constant news from home. There has already been formed an organization, with a head president, and vice presidents in other States. It is contemplated gradually, as they find suitable women, to have one Vice president in every State, for this is a National Association. Encouragement has been given to our women from all directions, and considerable funds have already been accumulated.

It is expected that the Government will donate from the "Reservation" a lot for the site of the house, but if it does not, then the ground will be purchased. A house that will cost fifteen or twenty thousand dollars, and that will be ornamental as well as convenient, is contemplated. Nothing will be done in haste, and nothing that needs to be done over. The ladies have the entire management of the association; and, being the responsibility and dreading the oft repeated reflection on their capacity for business, are using great caution, as well as great diligence in their work. For many reasons, personal to them, and for the success of their philanthropic views, I trust they may, in a year or two, have this noble house. Yours truly,

HOT SPRINGS, ARK., May 10, 1881.

Kentucky Correspondence.

Your kind invitation to write an occasional letter has been long neglected, although I purposed an earlier compliance. The doctrinal unity of Methodism is that of which we may boast. This was impressed on my mind while I was in your city. A ministerial brother from England whom I met at Dr. Mathew's church, exclaimed, "we be brethren." This led to a train of thought decidedly commenced in its character.

The word ecumenical by association brings up the great Conference where the ends of the world shall meet. Our preachers are already taking their collections for the delegates and we purpose to give our brethren "a good send-off," albeit many of us are sorely disappointed in the distribution of public honors. The writer is personally acquainted with the clerical delegates from both the Kentucky Conferences, Revs. C. W. Miller, D. D. and David Morton. Dr. Miller is a man of large intellectual calibre, scholarly attainments, a profound theologian, a very superior and successful preacher, an able debater, a fine writer, and withal a man of affairs of high administrative ability. In personal appearance he resembles Gen. John C. Breckenridge. He came in second best in his fight against that modern leviathan, Dr. Bledsoe. It was more to be attributed to his youth and immaturity at the time, than to any personal weakness. While the Kentucky Conference has many others that would have made worthy representatives, she could not have done better, had it been left to her selection, than to send Dr. Miller. He is now the pastor of the Hill Street Church in what has been called "the Athens of the West," Lexington, Ky.

Rev. David Morton is presiding elder of the Louisville district. He has been the president of a female college, secretary of the Conference several terms, and is a good business man. In the details of business he is much above mediocrity. In personal appearance he might be taken for a second edition of Bishop Kavanaugh. Mr. Morton is a lucky man, and it was predicted when he went to Montana, that Episcopal honors would one day fall upon him. Although he has many peers in his own Conference, he is one whom his brethren delight to honor. He is delightful in the social circle, and will be a reliable representative.

We have been blessed with gracious revivals during the spring months. The winter was so severe, the preachers deferred their labors later than usual, to the opening of spring. Dr. Messick of Louisville, Kentucky, delivers the commencement sermon at Vanderbilt University next week. He is an orthodox Methodist, a man of great refinement, highly seasoned with attainment, and a most accomplished preacher. We have no fears for his success.

Our Kentucky paper, the Central Methodist is prosperous. It is now, since April 1, a sixteen-page paper. Meek and Noland are enterprising and deserving men. Stephen Noland is one of the first men in the State—a many sided man. Some of us think, that so far as doctrinal orthodoxy is concerned, Noland is the ballast. Be this as it may, his brethren have no fears of that ship where his hand touches the helm. There is a place for the Central, and it fills the place admirably. Kentuckians love to fight—fight they must, and in times of peace when they have no public enemies, they bite and devour one another. The sunny-hearted Dr. Fitzgerald would be alarmed at these home thrusts and domestic brails, but Meek and Noland "to the manner born," know that no harm will come of them at home. I have touched upon this subject apologetically rather than with approbation.

At this date, May 9, the farmers are not done planting corn. Winter lingered long in the lap of Spring. Never before was this writer so glad to see "surly winter" pass away. But he is gone—

"Far to the North he calls his ruffian blasts;
His blackened sky, and spit the howling hill;
The shattered forest and the ravaged vale."

VERNON.

Pensacola District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Pensacola District Conference of the Alabama Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held its session at Georgiana, Butler co., April 29 and 30, Rev. Dr. Silas H. Cox, P. E., in the chair. It was a pleasant and harmonious meeting and the reports showed that the proper spirit is in the work of the various charges. All of the pastors were present except two out of fifteen, and one of these reported his work by letter. There was a tolerably full representation of laymen, this being a busy time of the year for farmers. Bishop Kegner stopped long enough to preach twice. His sermons made a very fine impression upon all who heard him. His call was unexpected to most of us, but such a surprise is always quite agreeable.

The spiritual state of the church is steadily improving; there is less intemperance than ever before, and more respect to church obligations generally. There is a better and firmer discipline exercised and a more outspoken approval of it by the church. The social meetings of the church and attendance upon the ordinances decidedly improved.

We appointed a committee to look after neglected points in the district, and also, mission ground; but no report. We have the work all ahead of us. There has been small, if any improvement in the Sunday school work over the two years past—I have the minutes before me to compare. The same "old reasons" assigned, of course. "Education generally" is very good in some parts of the district, very much needed in others. The financial report was very encouraging. The pastors all seem to be hopeful. The assessment plan prevails over "voluntary contributions." The spirit of building and repairing is rather predominant in the district; the churches were reported in good condition. There are several parsonages in the district and two or three in contemplation of building soon.

Our disciplinary claims were assessed by the district stewards, taking the pastor's salary as a basis, as follows: presiding elder, twenty per cent.; bishop's fund, two per cent.; Conference claims, nine and a half per cent.; domestic and foreign missions, each, eight and one quarter per cent. This seems to give better satisfaction than any plan we have been governed by heretofore.

The District Conference, by resolution passed, assessed $75 to defray the expenses of delegates to the Ecumenical Conference to be held in London. The following were elected to the ensuing annual Conference: E. M. Lazenby, Monterey circuit; T. G. McGowen, L. D. Stockton circuit; P. A. Hendrix, Milton station; R. E. Pilley, Georgiana circuit. Alternates C. J. Cody, Pensacola station; C. C. McMillan, Georgiana circuit and W. J. Williams, Pollard circuit.

Brewton on the Mobile and Montgomery railroad was selected as the place for holding the next Conference, and with the proper resolutions offered for courtesies, and the benediction pronounced, a better and holier spirit accompanied all to their homes. Prominence was given to religious services on the occasion, and the love-feast on Sunday morning was an excellent one. We thought it was "good to be there." Yours truly etc.,

T. Y. ABERNETHY, Secretary.

FOREST HOME, Ala., May 4, 1881.

North Mississippi Conference.

I am just from a trip up the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans railroad, within the territory of the North Mississippi Conference.

There was a time when the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was widely circulated over this section, especially the Southern half of the Conference. At the present time, the Western Methodist (the Conference organ) and the Nashville Advocate are taken in its stead. Yet there are many, who, selecting a religious paper for its intrinsic merits, continue their subscription to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Next year, I am told, will place another candidate in the field for Conference patronage—in fact, it will soon be seeking admittance to the homes of this section, as a home representative of Methodism. I had the pleasure of forming the acquaintance of its originator and part owner, Rev. D. D. Moore of Grenada, Mississippi. Goodman and Pickens have Rev. J. F. Evans as pastor in charge. Bro. Evans is a transfer from the Alabama Conference, and in his new field reflects credit upon his early training received there. It may rejoice the hearts of his old comrades in arms to learn that Bro. Evans is a brother beloved and a most useful minister of Christ. Of course, it is but natural that he should love the organ of his old Conference. His being a border charge, he finds the people not altogether weaned from their first love—and as far as Conference obligations permit—delights to aid in gratifying their pleasure.

At Vaiden I found the Bishop pro tem. of the North Mississippi Conference, Rev. R. A. Jones, presiding elder of Winona district. Why has not some college honored itself with conferring LL. D. of ecclesiastical law upon him? He is a born judge of law. No clearer head on knotty points can be found in Mississippi. Here I found myself at home. Bro. Jones is an old Mississippi Conference preacher—fell into the North Mississippi Conference by General Conference action at its formation. He loves his new Conference, and cherishes strong affection for his old comrades of younger days. His silvery locks—but not his flashing eye and clear, pellucid voice—declare that he is growing old. I heard him preach at a camp-meeting in Jasper county in 1857—and was startled at the voice—a voice once heard before. After meditation, I remembered it to be the voice of Bishop Marvin. Bro. Jones has been a faithful worker in the vineyard, and is duly appreciated.

Owing to the rumor of small pox at Winona, I deemed it prudent not to stop there; so I failed to see the pastor, Rev. J. W. Lowrance. Grenada is the Southern town of the old Memphis Conference, and depends upon Memphis largely for supplies, newspapers, etc., hence I was out of my natural limits. I here found some most excellent people and spent Sabbath most delightfully. As I did not have to preach, I enjoyed the faithful sermons of the young pastor, Rev. E. B. Ramsey; and thanked God for raising up young men to fill the places constantly being made vacant by death.

Grenada is to be the seat of next session of the North Mississippi Conference on November 23; and Bro. Ramsey says whoever represents the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE shall be duly cared for.

R. B. DOWNER.

From the Work.

LAKE PROVIDENCE AND PECAN GROVE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: I feel that I should write an explanation with regard to the report from this circuit as it is in the minutes; not that it is not correct, but, because it does not come up to former reports. I assure you that it is no fault of the people, for I have never found a more liberal people in my life than many on this circuit. Neither is it because no effort was made to raise the full amounts, for both stewards and preacher did their best. And that effort resulted in raising $1,220 35. This is far below the assessment, but when all the circumstances are considered, it is really a large amount. In the first place, we are but a handfull, only eighty-six members on the roll, some of them not in the circuit during the entire year. Many of the rest are non paying members; and, secondly, the crop of cotton last year only averaged about one quarter of a bale per acre, which it should have been at least a bale. Then the price realized was only about an average of seven cents per pound when we expected at least ten cents per pound; and, thirdly, the incessant rains, and deep, deep mud, prevented the people attending church; and last, but not least, the gloom and despondency caused by the short crop and prices, the rain and mud, was so great that many felt that there was even a good prospect for the country to come to actual want before another crop could be raised. Now I think these are sufficient reasons why the whole amount was not raised. And in looking over the finances of the Conference, I find we have paid as much per member as any other work in the Conference, except two, to wit: Shreveport and St. Charles Avenue. Still I am not satisfied that this circuit should be behind. But, enough on this subject; for there is another that engages my mind more than this, and that is, the spiritual condition of the church. While we have some bright and shining Christians, we have some that even engage in the ungodly sin of dancing, and one or two that drink intoxicating liquor. Oh! how sad it makes me feel, for such things to exist in the church. I have been laboring to stop these things, and to lead the church to a higher plane of holiness by the most pointed preaching I am capable of. If they will not be saved thus, there remains but one course to be pursued, and that is, a strict administration of discipline. Our congregations are large and serious. God is awakening some, converting some and some are being reclaimed. Pray for us.

H. O. WHITE.

May 3, 1881.

CHIPOLA MISSION, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This mission is nearly a complete circle. I make the round once a month. Some portions of this country are very thinly settled, and others thickly peopled. I travel sometimes from twelve to twenty miles through the piney woods and tile swamps before seeing a house. Attend thirteen appointments. Plenty of sand here. In places the pines do not grow tall, and in other parts plenty high. The grass green and the tiles thick. Some bears, panthers and other animals abound. I told you before last Annual Conference, nineteen bears were killed last year, counting these in, twenty-seven have been killed. Two panthers recently, and at least, sixty others during this last season. It is useless to mention how many deer, turkies, wild cats, raccoons, opossums, black and grey squirrels and sandy hill cranes, crows, pelicans, fish hawks, alligators and didappers. Some fish and oysters have been drawn out of the waters of St. Andrew's bay. A saw mill is being built at this bay. The ox is very useful in this country. He draws the plow during the week, and carries the family out to church on Sunday in a cart. Many orange trees were killed by the last winter's cold on this mission. Several people carry rafts of logs down the Chipola river into the Appalachicola river to Appalachicola. The missionary money placed on me to collect has been raised and part of the Conference funds. Our second quarterly meeting closed last night, church edified, one accession, many penitents were at the altar for prayer. Bro. A. J. Coleman, our presiding elder preached four good sermons. The people on this work are well pleased with him, and from what I can learn, all on the district are. A very large attendance yesterday, like a camp meeting. I am with brother W. M. Cox to-night, he seems to be doing well.

R. A. WILLIAMS.

MARIANNA, FLA., May 9, 1881.

REVIVAL AT COOPER INSTITUTE.

MR. EDITOR: I have been in school four years at Cooper Institute, and have had the pleasure of attending a school protracted meeting every year. I have witnessed many revival meetings; have seen great displays of God's wonder-working power; but have never, at any place, beheld and felt such showers of heavenly benediction, as I have felt at this place. I have seen almost a whole school, four years in succession, converted to Christ, and the church all aglow with a flame of the Saviour's love. We have just closed one of those glorious meetings, with immeasurable results. Forty-two precious souls, just in the bloom of youth, were happily converted. Every young lady and nearly every young man in school, found the Saviour, and have discovered by sweet experience that the yoke is easy and the burden light. A tidal wave of influence has gone out from that meeting, which never will or can be computed, until the harvest is over, the labor ended and the sheaves gathered home. The moral influence of this place is such, that an individual with any redeemable quality is unable to resist, if he remains under it sufficiently long. Only twenty young men have left here unconverted, since I have been a member of the school. This, I think, is enough to recommend the school to any parent who regards the best interests of his child. Other schools may have some educational advantages over this, but we can safely say, none can excell it in point of morals, and I question whether there is a school in the South that equals it as a social and moral educator. This is the twelve annual session of the school and four hundred young men have been converted under its earnest labors.

L. F. JONES.

DALEVILLE, Miss., May 2, 1881.

VERNAL, CHICKASAHAY MISSION.

MR. EDITOR: Our beloved presiding elder, Rev. D. A. Little was with us, and held his Second Quarterly Meeting, April 23 and 24, at Vernal, Chickasahay Mission, Williamsburg District, Mississippi Conference.

The prosperity of the church is not as good as it should be, but I feel hopeful of the future.

There has been a few accessions to the church. Finances are rather slow. The collections ordered by the Conference are being taken up. The Bishop's money has been paid and about two thirds of the other assessments which amounts to $40. I hope to get it all. I find the people within the bounds of this work, poor people, little means, but open, free, hospitable hearts, and I think the most of them will do what they can for the church. May the hand of Providence guide us aright and give us free access to the hearts and consciences of this people. And may the glorious gospel of the Son of God find a lodging place in every heart and soul, and bring forth and bear much fruit to the honor and glory of God, our Father.

Brethren, I have no ministerial help, no local preacher, though some laymen, who pray when called on. Yet, I bless God that I am not alone, for he is with me, as he said to Israel: "My presence shall go with thee." God is true to his promises.

J. C. WILLIAMS.

BROOKHAVEN, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: A very delightful work of grace resulted from a meeting just closed in this place. There were many clear and satisfactory conversions, at least twenty; and over forty persons, most of them pupils in Whitworth College, applied for church membership. Bro. Hopper, from Summit, assisted us the first week, and Bro. Carradine from Crystal Springs, was with us part of both weeks, and did most of the preaching. His services, in the pulpit and in private counsel with penitents, were greatly blessed of God. For reasons, we did not call for mourners around the altar; but met them after service, in the prayer-meeting, and in the pastor's office at such times as was convenient for them, and the results were highly satisfactory.

W. D. LEWIS.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS., May 13, 1881.

MANY FLOWITT, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: We preached last Sunday to a very large, attentive congregation. Five applications for membership. The Lord was with us and blessed us in our effort. A good feeling is exhibited throughout the church. We have organized two Sabbath school purposes, $8. Our prayer-meetings are well attended. Some of our churches are like the farmers. They are rather backward, but we think there has been some improvement throughout the entire circuit. There is plenty of room for missionary work here. H. A. NOLTZ.

May 8, 1881.

OXFORD, MISS., May 6, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: The University of Mississippi is located here. The faculty is composed of Christian men. A large number of students are in attendance. The moral tone of students is of a high standard. Many are church members. The outlook, at the present time, is encouraging for a good revival. Spring has decked the earth with an emerald carpet of clover and orchard grass. The shade trees are in full leaf. Health is excellent. The Cumberland Presbyterians and Episcopalians have new brick church edifices. The Presbyterians are finishing a new building. Our church building is of brick and very commodious. Rev. W. B. Murrah is spending his fourth year as pastor. He is highly esteemed. Oxford is a gem city for churches, and refined, cultivated people.

H. B. DOWNER.

SENATOBIA, Tate Co., Miss., May 3, 1881.

Our new church is completed except the furniture. We have borrowed seats and occupied the house the first Sunday in April. We have good, attentive congregations, and a large Sunday school well supplied with our own literature. The outlook is hopeful. The new church is lighted with the Bailey Reflector, a great improvement on the old way. Ours is the best lighted church I ever saw.

There is but one opinion in this part of the state, as to the Pint Law, an unmitigated curse. Sorry that any Methodist or anybody else voted for it.

A. C. SAGE.

LAKE, Miss., May 12, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: I am progressing with my work as well as could be expected. I took the whooping cough the first of February and it still holds on to me, serving me very badly. While the people had money, I was not able to try to get subscriptions for the ADVOCATE. I make it convenient, whenever an opportunity is offered, to let the people know that we ought to support the ADVOCATE, in preference to any other paper. Our Lake Camp-Meeting will begin on July 29, 1881. We wish it were so we could have our good editor with us.

J. L. PEEBLES.

KOSCIUSKO, Miss., May 2, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: Camp-meeting on Caddo circuit commences on the fifth day of August next, ministers especially invited. Rev. J. T. Sawyer will dedicate Belle Bower Church on the first Sabbath in July. It is about completed, nice, comfortable it is one the community feels proud of. If we can not boast of building up the church in numbers like some, we can say we leave the circuit well supplied with comfortable houses of worship.

W. M. LIVERMAN.

CLINTON, La., May 13, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: Our church in Clinton, La., Mississippi Conference, is prospering somewhat. Our members are not as spiritually minded as we would like to see them, but there is some improvement in this regard. We are advancing. We have a gentlemen's prayer meeting which meets weekly. It is doing well, and increasing weekly in interest. We have in process a Christian Association reading room. Congregations large and attentive.

IRA H. ROBERTSON, P. C.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1881.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

MY PRAYER.

BY FRANK E. BUTLER.

Let others seek the festive board
And in the mazy dance fly round,
Let Mammon luxury afford
And Luxury with Vice be crowned;
But let my heart with grace be stored
And let my life with prayer abound,
A servant waiting for my Lord
And in my Master's vineyard found.

I ask no ease, I ask not wealth,
I shrink not from my friends to part;
I put within thy hands my health,
And ask thy keeping for my heart.
Forbid that I by force or stealth
Should fall beneath the tempter's dart—
For I am poor without thyself,
And yet how rich when near thou art.

Oh Christ thou art the sinners' Friend;
No voice but thine can cheer my soul;
On whom but thee can I depend
When rolling me dark temptations roll?
Thou art my Life, my Love, my End
Of action, yea, the blessed goal
For which no soul shall ever tend;
Lord in this running keep me whole.

Oh, give me life to live for thee—
Thy mercy to the world to show,
To do the work thou gavest me,
To glorify thy name below,
And when thy messenger I see,
Who bids me to death's sceptre bow,
May I like Simeon prayerful be
"In peace receive thy servant now."

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KLEINER.

Second Quarter. Lesson IX.

GOLDEN TEXT.—So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God.—Romans, xiv, 12.

SUNDAY, MAY 29, 1881. LUKE XIX, 11-27.

11 And as they heard these things, he added and spake a parable, because he was nigh to Jerusalem, and because they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear.

12 He said therefore, A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return.

13 And he called his ten servants, and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, Occupy till I come.

14 But his citizens hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us.

15 And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading.

16 Then came the first, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds.

17 And he said unto him, Well, thou good servant, because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities.

18 And the second came, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds.

19 And he said likewise to him, Be thou also over five cities.

20 And another came, saying, Lord, behold here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin.

21 For I feared thee, because thou art an austere man: thou takest up that thou layedst not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow.

22 And he saith unto him, Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant. Thou knewest that I was an austere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow?

23 Wherefore then gavest not thou my money into the bank, that at my coming I might have required mine own with usury?

24 And he said unto them that stood by, Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds.

25 (And they said unto him, Lord, he hath ten pounds.)

26 For I say unto you, That unto every one which hath shall be given; and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him.

27 But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me.

Luke, in his account of this parable, gives us the Saviour's design in speaking it. The occasion of this lesson was the general opinion, prevalent among all his disciples and apostles, that the kingdom of God should immediately appear. He was near Jerusalem, only seventeen miles distant, and this all the more excited them, for the disciples, still holding very imperfect views of our Lord's office and work upon earth, expected his present journey to Jerusalem to end in the triumphant setting up of his kingdom. They were slow in learning that his road to royal glory lay through Gethsemane and Golgotha. His parable is to show that as yet there is to be no open display of his kingdom. He must himself go away in order to receive his kingly power, while his subjects must stay in lowly obedience, fulfilling the work he sets them to do.

The parable, then, is to teach us that his kingdom is not immediately to appear; it is an invisible spiritual kingdom; but tho he, the prince and heir of the kingdom, is going to be invested with kingly authority and come back king, and how his disciples are to conduct themselves during his absence.

Verse 12. "A certain nobleman." This, of course, is Christ himself. Noble, indeed, whether we think of him in his divine nature and origin, or of his earthly descent from Abraham and David. "Into a far country." This refers to our Lord's departure at his ascension. He went up to receive kingly power and authority, by which he now reigns over his church. He was King of eight before. In his exaltation to the right hand of God, he was enthroned and proclaimed King, and the day is hastening near when, as King of all the earth, we shall see him. This language was familiar and intelligible to those who heard him. Their kings had to travel to Rome to be confirmed in their throne: thus Archelaus, son of Herod the Great, went to Rome on his father's death, to be confirmed in his kingdom, and when he did so the Jews sent to Rome to beg that he might not be their king, though the petition was not noticed by the Emperor of Rome.

Verse 13. "His ten servants;" that is, ten of his servants. The nobleman had ten; he called them all, and delivered to each a pound. These servants represent all the disciples of the Lord, to each of whom he entrusts a work to do during his absence. The equal distribution suggests the equality of our responsibility. There may be inequality in opportunities and talents to do work, but never any unevenness in personal accountability. Every one of us must give account of himself to God, and each account must be rendered according to one principle—fidelity of service. They are all servants. The oneness of relation of servants to Master makes the oneness of obligation. "Occupy till I come;" that is, use in trading; employ profitably. There is not one who has not some gifts of mind, [illegible] which he is bound to employ in his Lord's service.

Verse 14. "But his citizens hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us." The Jewish people were Christ's fellow-citizens, by earthly race and country, and the most natural subjects of his kingdom; but they hated him while on earth; but after his ascension they wilfully rejected him, persecuting his servants and blaspheming his holy name. On two occasions their rejection of him was distinctly declared. Once they cried, "We have no king but Cesar;" and again they said, "Write not the King of the Jews." This part of the parable is particularly significant of the Jews, but it is also pointed for all who refuse to be his servants—"they who are not for me are against me." The world is full of men and women who are sending this message after the departed Prince. "We will not have this man to reign over us."

Verse 15. "When he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called unto him." This is a picture of the judgment of the great day. Christ is to come as King sitting on his throne and as Judge. The voice of the archangel and the trump of God shall call from the grave the dead in Christ, and all faithful followers of the Lord who may remain alive to that day, in one vast and joyous assembly.

The servants shall first be rewarded according to their fidelity, and according to the generous character of their loved Master.

Verse 16. "Then came the first;" the first; he had made himself first by his diligence; they all began trading with one pound. Thy pound, not my pound, for what had he that he did not receive. "Well, thou good servant: because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities." The reward is a royal one, just such as we should expect of a King. Fidelity in little things is fidelity in great things. A man that can be trusted in the least can be trusted in the greatest.

Verse 18. "And the second came." His pound had increased to five, showing one-half the diligence of the other, and hence his reward is authority over five cities. The equal beginning supposes equal opportunities, and the difference between these two was in diligence. We can not fail to notice this plain revelation of differences of glory in heaven.

Verse 20. "And another came, saying, Lord, behold here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin." Here it is clean and safe, neither more nor less than you gave me. My reason for doing this is, I knew your character, that you were a hard Master, severe and exacting, and demanding as yours that upon which you have spent no labor and money, and I feared you. This was a do-nothing servant, and he typifies those Christians, so-called, whose highest idea of religion is to do no harm; they do no good as conscientiously as they do no harm. Those who carry not to do God's work easily persuade themselves into some wrong notions of God's character and requirements, which serve them as an excuse to themselves; but these very excuses shall be the witnesses against them in the day of judgment. "By thy words shalt thou be justified, and by thy words shalt thou be condemned."

"Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant." If you know me to be such a character as you say I am you ought, as my servant, to have been all the more diligent in your trading, that at my coming, when I required my own with usury, you might have been able to render it unto me. The very excuses by which we justify our own sinful neglect shall be used against us in the day of judgment. Men slander God to justify themselves. This man's estimate of the character of his employer was false, as his generous treatment of his faithful servants proves. Everything is against the unprofitable servant. The very handkerchief which he sought to have used to wipe the sweat from his brow, as he labored in the Master's service, was clean and unsoiled; he worked none, and he had no use for the napkin, so he used it to wrap the pound in. He is not only unprofitable, but wicked. He falsely slandered the character of his Lord and Master. A man may wrap up a piece of gold and keep it, but no man can keep in this way that which the gold signifies; if God's gifts are not used in his service they are taken away. God gives a man a new heart and happy experience of pardon, but if he exercise not himself unto godliness, God will take it away from him, and he will have only the harrowing memory of the lost possession. Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds. Why to him? Why not to him that hath five; because "unto every one which hath, shall be given; and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him." Give to him that hath ten; because he has proved himself the most diligent and faithful in service. Notice only three servants report. Did the other seven fail even to keep the pound, but spend it on themselves? Is this to suggest the proportion of diligent servants in the Lord's work? May be the other seven gained so little that their cases were not worthy of special mention. They made the returns, some more, some less, but all enough to show that they had labored.

What showing could you make should our Lord return to-day. The servants who have faithfully served are rewarded by positions of greater trust, and now attention is turned to those who sent after him the message of rebellion and treason; "but those mine enemies, bring hither and slay them before me."

Who are these enemies? Men for whom he died and suffered and ascended; men who would not have him as their King and Redeemer; bring them up; "slay them before my eyes." This is the doom of all who refuse to have Christ to reign over them.

Whisky in One County.

Greenwood charge is made up of three appointments, one on the Yazoo river, one on the Tallahatchie, and one back in the interior. Greenwood is a village, the county site of Leflore county, and many years ago was a place of considerable business. Six or eight steamboats have been counted at her landing at one time. Since the days of railroading this trade has fallen off, until two boats a week do the business during the cotton shipping season; sometimes two or three others come in. The buildings of the town, as a rule, are not pretentious, few claiming to be more than cottages. Approaching on the river from below, or on the main road from above, it presents a somewhat picturesque appearance. The place is in great need of sewerage and ditching. Public enterprise to McAdamize, or build one or two plank roads on her main thoroughfares would doubtless command for the place a trade equal to that of Grenada or Winona, rival cities on the railroad. The people are generous and clever, intelligent and cultivated. I think quite equal in these regards to any of the rural districts of the State. This country is embraced in the richest lands of the cotton growing belt of the South, and with its resources in rich lands, and communication by water with the outside world, together with the projected lines of railroad now in course of construction, designed to pass through this very territory, it is susceptible of vast development. But there are curses on this land which will, as long as they hold the place they now do, weigh down and blast the most brilliant and feasible enterprises projected for its future greatness and prosperity. The whisky trade in this region is fearful to contemplate. There are some ten or twelve houses where intoxicating drinks are sold by the retail in the narrow limits of my visits. This is an average for this population equal, I think, to any of the ram-cursed districts in any of the large cities of the North. It is my opinion, and that of other observers here, that a bale of cotton for every inhabitant, white and colored, man, woman and child, would not more than pay the liquor bill of Leflore county. A tax, unequaled by any railroad or steamboat monopolies, more grinding than the tyranny of Russia, imposed upon an enlightened people, by a Christian Legislature, in order to secure indirectly a tithe of this enormous tax for the State. If relief comes to us by popular vote, it must come from portions of the State beyond this valley. We are glad to see that the issue is being clearly made, and the battle joined upon the question of prohibition. The preachers are waking up on this subject as they have never awoke before. They are being well sustained in this move by the religious press; a few secular papers, too, are fearless and outspoken, but others, in high places, with a wide circulation, are as silent as the grave. The popular side of this question will soon be the unpopular side, the profitable and monied side is to be the unprofitable and moneyless side. Profane swearing and Sabbath breaking are concomitants of this great evil, and, when it is suppressed, the others, in a great measure, will be subordinate. If there is any force in the denunciation of these sins by the word of God, the presence of grand steamers on these rivers, bearing upon their ample decks the freight of laboring thousands, the presence of the railroad, in prospective with the shriek of its locomotives and the rumble of its trains, will give no intelligent expression to the busy rush and seemingly cheerful scenes in farm life here, while something like a half million of dollars must go from this small county for what brings not the slightest muscular development, not a particle of clothing, nor a single morsel of food. Debt, pressure, bankruptcy and poverty must be the heritage of each successive generation.

J. D. N.

That Pint Law!

Mr. Editor: I hope you did not do me the injustice to put into your waste basket the communication I sent you last week in reply to the swarm of opponents my previous letter had stirred up. Give me a chance in this matter, for I am in earnest, and do verily believe I am right. Publish the article sent you last week, and then put this in your columns, and I will bother you no more with views so much at variance with your own. I am convinced that if the church adopts such views, and pursues such a course as are now being so vehemently urged, the church will suffer, and seriously suffer. In this age intolerance and bigotry cannot be more hurtful to a church than for the church to undertake to meddle with affairs of State. But I do not purpose to elaborate this suggestion. I only wish to expose the fallacy and folly of one point attempted to be made by Bro. Thomas P. Barr, of Jackson, in his well-written and nicely-formed letter of last week.

Quoting from my letter of March 17, whom I said we "recognized the fact that prohibition does not prohibit; that the only way to effect a cure is to reach the consciences," he adds, "in other words, moral suasion," and then goes on to say: "It will take both to accomplish the work. Temporal punishment and law were and are always necessary to regulate society, for through it we point to the higher law of God. He [I] might as well say that the only way to stop stealing, murder, fornication, adultery, etc., is by moral suasion."

In answer to all this illogical statement, I have only this to say: If to prevent drunkenness and sins or crimes resulting from the abuse of that which God intended for our use and enjoyment, we must prohibit the making, selling and using of wines and liquors; then to prevent stealing, we must abolish all property rights; to prevent murder, we must cease begetting children; to prevent fornication and adultery, we must forbid marriage and depopulate the globe. For just so long as men own property there will be thieves; just so long as men live in this world there will be murderers; and just so long as men are men and women are women there will be found those who are inclined to indulge in that which is unlawful. Must we, therefore, to prevent what is sinful and criminal, prohibit what is lacking in every element of wrong?

We are not living in Utopia, and the millennium is apparently not yet begun, although the world is better than it was eighteen hundred years ago. While I am a temperance man, and would that no man used wines or liquors any more than I do, still I can not join hands with those who are seeking so zealously for the salvation of men by means of human law-making. And, notwithstanding Bro. Barr's minor, I can not believe the use of wine or liquor to be sinful; otherwise I should accuse of sin him whom I believe to have been without spot or blemish. Neither can I indorse the absurdity so seriously propounded by two of the brethren that "a handful of raisins steeped in water" could take the place of wine in the Lord's Supper. Whenever the church thus attempts to improve (?) upon the example of Jesus Christ, I shall seek communion elsewhere, for, unworthy as I now am, how unfit I should be for companionship with men wiser and holier than my Saviour?

T. L. MELLEN.

April 23, 1881.

Dr. Rivers' Plea for Old Men Examined.

Mr. Editor: If I understand Dr. Rivers, there are some things in his article which I regard as unpardonable. I agree with him in a qualified sense, which says age is no recommendation to office. He will agree that a legislator, when he includes age and experience, is necessary to fill important offices in the church of God. I do not mean extreme age.

The Psalmist says: "The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if, by reason of strength, they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow, for it is soon cut off, and we fly away." This indicates to my mind that the cases of physical and intellectual vigor, to which Dr. Rivers alludes, are exceptions, and can not be seized upon as a rule or basis of argument. I might say I had seen many men at three-score and ten entirely prostrated, both in mind and body, and falsely argue that all are so, while the Psalmist makes exceptions, clearly indicating that an unusual weakness succeeds the age allotted to man. "There are bodily labor and sorrow of mind. Holy reason of strength they be! miserable years at best is their strength labor and sorrow. Very few men at seventy are what they were when younger." The theory is, that the mind, when continuously exercised, will sustain the body. I doubt not but that is true to some extent; but in the case of Dr. Wadsworth, to which Dr. Rivers alludes, who never surrendered his mind to rest, and in point of intellectual vigor, was surpassed by many of his cotemporaries, yet the physical man yielded, if I remember correctly, before he had arrived at the age allotted to man. So the brethren and others, to whom Dr. Rivers refers, are exceptions, and not the rule. Whom have you found men of such constitutions as Bishop Kavanaugh and Dr. McFerrin? The latter should have been one of the chief pastors a quarter of a century ago. But is he now, or is any man of his age, equal to what he was twenty-five or thirty years since? I think, take it as a general rule, Bishop Andrew was correct when he stated, in 1866, in New Orleans, that great and heavy responsibilities should be taken off of men's shoulders and hearts when they had arrived at threescore years and ten. Certainly such responsibility should not be imposed upon men of that age. He felt that the infirmity of years was upon him; this he stated to me in person, and wished younger men to have the responsibility.

I do love and venerate old men for their works' sake, for they endured hardships as good soldiers. They blazed out the way, traveled almost without safety; but they were consecrated men, and God was with them. May the heart of the church be stirred in kindness toward the few octogenarians who still go in and out among us.

In a little over twelve months the General Conference will convene, and perhaps by far the most important business of that body will be the election of several Bishops. Let the ministry and whole church pray fervently and continuously that God may direct that body in the selection of her chief pastors, that they may be men of the deepest and most profound piety, and wholly consecrated to God and to the great work assigned them. Men true to Methodism as it is, free from the spirit of dangerous innovations; we have the men; I pray to God that they may be chosen.

W. E. DOTY.

Greenwood, La., April 16, 1881.

Pray for It.

Mr. Editor: I am truly glad to see that the leaven of "prohibition" is enlarging. I would like to suggest to the lovers of temperance, who read your paper, the importance of special prayer in secret, as well as in public, for the overthrow of our great national curse—"Whisky." A day need not be appointed. In fact, we should pray for its demolition every day of our lives. I remember when the epidemic (yellow fever of 1878) was raging to such an extent that urgent prayer was offered to God, great as was the loss of life and bereavement on account of that epidemic, what was it in comparison with the loss in various ways, sustained by our country, on account of this gigantic evil—rum? And I suggest prayer, earnest, importunate prayer, because we are assured in God's word that "the effectual, fervent prayer of the righteous man availeth much." Of course we must do all in our power for its suppression in other ways; but if by prayer we can secure the aid of him "who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all we can ask or think," we need have no fear that other States will imitate the example of Kansas.

Truly yours,

A. H. STEWART.

Palmetto Home, April 30, 1881.

Obituaries.

DAVIS—ABERNATHY.—At the residence of Dr. Abernathy, of Wilcox county, Ala., April 28, 1881, by Rev. J. W. McCann, Mr. Nathan Davis, of Monroe county, to Miss Florence Abernathy, of Wilcox county, Ala.

REESE—EDSON.—In Benton, Ala., May 1, 1881, by Rev. Henry S. Neville, M. C. Wilkes and Miss Sallie Edson.

ALLEN—HARKEY.—At the residence of Mr. Jas. McCarty, Scott county, Miss., April 28, 1881, by Rev. J. W. Ellison, Mr. James Allen, of Georgia, to Miss S. E. Harkey, of Scott county, Miss.

ROSS—HOPE.—At the residence of the bride's mother, March 31, 1881, by Rev. T. S. Rundle, Mr. R. R. Ross to Miss Ida E. Hope, all of Morehouse parish, La.

Obituaries.

GATLIN.—Mrs. Rosa Lively Gatlin was born in Pike county, Miss., on the 3d of January, 1844, and on the 3d of April, 1881, she died at the residence of her husband, on the old residence which stands in front of Judge Magee's place. She was raised in the same old dilapidated dwelling, also there she married. Last January we followed her regularly to the old house, now heavy with age, the writer was impressed with the remarkable coincidence that sister Gatlin, who had lived so long, was born, raised, married, and buried within a radius of three hundred yards, and that within a mile of the same place. She was born June 19, 1844, and married to James S. Gatlin October 6, 1861. After marriage they lived on Bogue Chitto river, six miles above Hazlehurst. In the winter of 1866 they moved to Amite county, and came to Johnson Station in January, 1872. Sister Gatlin was raised by pious Presbyterian parents, and was at her marriage a member of that church, but joined the Methodist in 1868, and remained a consistent member of the same to the day of her death. She was stricken with paralysis the fourth of February, 1879, and died the third of January, 1881, thus suffering nearly two years of affliction. Our sister had spent a long and useful life of sixty-six years, six months and twenty-four days, and had raised a family of nine children, six sons and three daughters. Her heart continued to bleed for her sons lost in the war. Her oldest son was wounded near Richmond, Va., May 12, 1864, and died in Franklin county, June 20, 1864. Her youngest son died in Bienville Hospital, Richmond, Va., November 9, 1864. Her sixth son was killed at the battle of Harrisburg, July 14, 1863. Only a mother could she continued to grieve for these sons to the day of her death.

She passed away on Monday night, January 3, 1881, just as the loved ones were watching her to go to sleep for the night. Col. Gatlin was absent at the time, and was denied the privilege of witnessing her departure, for he died on Sunday afternoon at 1 o'clock, 30 minutes. The next day he reached home to find that the happy spirit who long had pleaded there had taken her flight, and nothing remained to gaze upon with grief but the cold mortal form. She died in peace, without a struggle. Her end was peaceful; her faith was strong in Christ. It would be mockery in the writer to attempt to portray the life and character of this so beautiful in piety and so widely and deservedly known by friends and relatives, and upon whom she left impressions in the last death. Josie has been the joy of our childhood, and upon whom she left impressions in the last death. Josie has been the joy of our childhood, and upon whom she left impressions in the last death. Josie has been the joy of our childhood

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1881.

INCOMPLETENESS.

BY ADELAIDE PROCTOR.

...thing resting in its own completeness
...can have worth or beauty; but alone,
...cause it leads or tends to farther sweetness
...fuller, higher, deeper than its own.

...ing's real glory dwells not in the meaning,
...Precious though it be, of her idle hours;
...is hidden in her tender leaning
...toward the summer's richer wealth of flowers.

...n is fair, because her petals fade slowly
...into day, which floods the world with light;
...flight's mystery is so sweet and holy,
...but because it ends in starry night.

...e is only bright when it proceedeth
...toward a truer, deeper light above;
...man love is sweet and true, when it leadeth
...to a more divine and perfect love.

...Without its smiles unconscious graces borrow,
...From strife that in a far-off future lies;
...angel glances veiled now by life's sorrow
...Draw our hearts to some beloved eyes.

...ves the mystery of progressing duty;
...Do not call each glorious change decay;
...know we only hold our treasures truly,
...When it seems as if they passed away.

...dare to blame God's gifts for incompleteness;
...thank Him that their beauties thus they tell
...of the infinite depth of love and sweetness,
...Waiting, yearning in each human soul.

Notes of Life.

...HISTORICAL PAPER, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

...the twentieth year of his life my father entered as a student ...niversity of North Carolina at ...ill, then recently placed under ...Joseph Caldwell as its president. ...long he continued there I do not ...ow, but long enough to obtain a fair ...ation which above his neighbors, ...ecessities in early life. A cherished ...ntage growing out of his college ...was the acquaintance there formed ...those who became prominent men ...his State, whose life-long friendship ...sought to retain. Among many ...were Thomas H. Benton and Hinton ...ker Jones. The former was his ...mate and particular friend; the ...ter being very near falling by ...of strength test of strength and ...s on the campus in a wrestling ...What agony he endured while ...ome time Jesse seemed to be ...ailing ...ether he felt when the ...victorious, I have heard him re...with the deepest emotion. I think ...was a special lesson to him for life ...ming his intimate relation to ...s between the university, while ...ver years the press was circulating ...ported, of the fact that Mr. ...n, who at Chapel Hill, had been ...of pilfering from a fellow-stu...s pocket, pocketed the culprit's sil...to the story, and asked his opin...t it. The indignantly replied ...he was there, and knew it to be ...ictions throughout. It was ...ated by partisan political hatred. ...e presiding over the Missouri ...ence in Jefferson City in my ...rs ago, I was gratified by Mrs. Hen...ying upon me to know if I were ...an to his "old colonel," and by his ...ession of esteem for my venerated ...recently deceased father.

...Upon leaving the university my ...r entered as clerk a mercantile ...se, where he acquired such knowl...ge of men and business affairs, and, ...a basis of methodical application, ...were of much benefit to him in ...ure life.

...st marriages there is some ro...nce, and so it was in this case. ...father was proud of his eldest son, ...d union she should marry a fashion...and wealthy young lady, the ...ghter of a neighbor who was his ...al friend. His son looked about ...d thought for himself. The father ...ed and urged. The son heard, ...dered, and concluded to choose for ...self. Here was rebellion. Persua...failing, it was suggested that it ...t be disagreeable for an educated ...gentleman, with soft hands and ...nail knife, to go to work with ...hoe, and plow, and without help, ...his daily food, and provide for ...family expenses when it could be so ...y avoided. Prudent, solicitous fath...had been saying this to their boys ...d girls for thousands of years, and ...th the same effect. The son under...od it. It troubled him sorely to dis...y so good a father. He had never ...ed to spend. As to his own pecuniary ...ds, that did not so much disturb ...m. He could risk that. And then ...y Williams was not poor. The ...ily lived well, had servants enough ...d to spare, and hard work, were not ...ught of, and was as good and as much ...ected as any in the country. If ...ere is some, it was because her ...band, father and first love, offered ...m in independence of his country to ...d of staying at home as many had ...e. And then, Mary, sometime sweet, ...e was no fast, bright, truthful ...d, with a heart, cheerful, observ..., always the straightest in duty, and ...ver exciting it of others. Why, ...was the first lesson of boyhood? Pretty, ...she was, the prettiest beauty of ...ty! Sterling black hair, her ...plexion, bright black eyes, mid...ss form, her cheerful temper, ...y wit, and domestic qualities, all ...ther, made her, in his bewil...ed eyes, the fairest, sweetest, flower ...creation! Suffice it to say, they ...e married, and they were married ...during several months following ...ere was some stiffness and shyness ...ong the father and son, but no re...ch of the young wife. They ...n bravely to work. He had a good ...n, a gift from his grandfather, ...e had some female servants, and ...ir work and good management ...ssisted in making a fine crop of ...n, and a handsome net income ...e sale. But grandfather soon ...the need of him. He was getting ...and suffered from gout. His child...left him, his estate needed attention, and home but James could not at...d to his affairs. My birth brought ...a hearty reconciliation. He vis...ed, rejoiced over his first grandson; ...d I must spare his name, tell in love ...ut Mary, could not do without us, so ...e gave father a farm near him, and ...as possible retained and kept me ...til he died in 1817.

...The Legislature of North Carolina, ...bout 1805, having formed the coun...y of Person, by dividing Granville ...ounty, my father was appointed clerk ...f the Superior Court of the new county. ...The county seat was not far from his ...residence, and while he resided in the ...state he continued to fill the office ...without removing his family from the ...farm. This office was of value to him, ...not only because of the annual sum ...certain income it yielded, but for the ...reputation it brought about with the ...most intelligent and influential gentlemen of the Bench and Bar of the State, who were frequent visitors of the family.

In May, 1814, my father removed to the State of Tennessee, and settled in Giles county. He had visited the country in 1807, and in the fall of 1813 had sent forward his servants in charge of my mother's brother, Robert, to make a crop the ensuing season. Thus it was that when the whole of the family got there in the ensuing spring a fine crop was growing, and a comfortable house and home awaited us. But when, after a long and wearisome trip of over a month, we had arrived in three miles of our new home we were surprised to see a number of men on the roadside in a rude kind of a military parade. Without inquiring the object of the meeting we passed on, but before we had gone out of sight were overtaken, and informed that the head of the family had just been drafted into the service for Gen. Andrew Jackson's Indian Army, and must appear at Fayetteville to be mustered into active service within a few days. Of course this was done by collusion, and for the relief of those who preferred to stay at home, if they must go, to do so as paid substitutes. They knew he could not leave his family under such circumstances, but could furnish a substitute, as he did. Who that substitute was, and what was the result to him, we shall presently see.

Our route of travel was the old west-north roughfare via Jonesboro, Knoxville, Carthage and Gallatin, to Nashville. I have a vivid recollection of crossing the Cumberland river by a ferry-boat, immediately below where now stands the Southern Methodist Publishing House, and where a bridge afterward was erected, which has long since disappeared; and of the appearance of the Public Square, and of the little town scattered among the cedars; the little white frame Bell Tavern, with its chicken-crower on the tinkling bell perched upon its top, standing on the hill; the memorable old stone jail, the whipping post and Court-house, on the Public Square; and of the planting and hedging out foundations for houses on the Square. Little did I then think I should live to see a city rise up there of such importance, in many respects, to the country and the church. In passing through Giles county, along the main road from Columbia to Huntsville, Athens, and especially beyond Pulaski, the whole country, even the highest hills, seemed a wilderness of cane-brake, Indian; the road was so narrow, and the cane so high, that they often met over the carriages, and formed an ever-green arch. It was a wonder to us. Bears, wolves and deer roamed the forest at will, and the huntsman his spoil, and his dogs, were in their glory. And although my father had neither time nor fondness for leisure for such sport, yet, in self-defense, and for the protection of his stock, he was obliged, on emergencies, to join his neighbors in such raids. I was present on a well-remembered occasion when we ousted a bear which had made a den in a hollow sycamore log, and we killed the mother and killed her young ones. Such were the hunting scenes sixty-seven years ago. The scenes and the actors have changed. Time and civilization have done it.

The subject thus heretofore alluded to was, unfortunately, my Uncle Robert Williams, my mother's loved brother. Neither the earnest wishes of father nor the entreaties and tears of mother availed aught. Father arranged for another to go, but uncle would go as a volunteer, unless a substitute for father. The call for volunteers was sudden and urgent. Jackson's need of immediate and efficient military assistance. His force had already been so diminished by repeated losses in battles, by the expiration of the time of service of some regiments, and by sickness, the want of food, and death from exposure in the swamps and bayous of the South, that fresh recruits were needed to retain possession of the territory which had been won from the Creeks and Seminoles. Florida was then a Spanish province, but was used by the English as if it were their own. Both the Spaniards and the Indians were in reality allies of the English, who were preparing a grand attack on our Southwestern coast. Pensacola soon became the head quarters of the British Commander, his residence the house of the Spanish Governor, his fleet proudly floating in Pensacola Bay. Delay was dangerous.

In a few days my uncle was equipped, and was off to the war. I was sent with him to save him from fatigue, and to bring back his favorite beautiful horse.

We arrived at the place of rendezvous, Fayetteville, at the prescribed time, and joining a large number of soldiers just coming in from various sections of Middle Tennessee, with military, floating banners, and general greetings and bruzzas, went into camp. The place of encampment was a magnificent natural forest, a mile or two from the little village. That was a sight to impress a boy. The number of men, wagons, horses, the hundreds of camp-fires scattered through the dark grove, the mingled songs, laughter and sports, kept up and repeated throughout the whole valley, continuing with few intervals of silence until the dawn of day, and then the organization of the respective companies, the cooking and eating of breakfast, followed by packing up and getting ready to march, while boy could scarcely sit this and ever forget it. But while I had to bid farewell to my uncle and turn away for home, I wished like a child, and would have given an empire to go with him.

But how, or why repeat the sad old story of heart-pangs, privations and sufferings, so maddening in a single mere, the final breaking down of a vigorous constitution and premature death. He won the respect of his associates by his virtuous and upright moral demeanor as a gentleman, and the confidence of his officers by his promptness and courage to such a degree that, being gunning as a private, he was repeatedly promoted, until, at the close of his service and the war, he was ranked as major, and was in command of an important military post.

It was a campaign distinguished by closing up and securing the results of the victories of Jackson and his brave Tennesseans, which crushed the Creeks and their allies, and permanently protected the whites' country south of the Tennessee State line from the tomahawks of their relentless and wily savages; but it was memorable also for ague-fogs; but it was memorable also for the fearful prevalence of disease and mortality among the soldiers. A most virulent form of malarial fever broke out, and soon spread to Fort Williams, where my uncle was stationed. The volunteers died as do whoopsie. The attacks were sudden, and the disease intractable. Surgeons, officers, and privates fell alike. Quinine was then priceless, medicine became scarce, provisions spoiled, and a panic was improvised. Still my uncle stood at his post, and by his constitution and premature death.

He won the respect of his associates by his virtuous and upright moral demeanor as a gentleman, and the confidence of his officers by his promptness and courage to such a degree that, being gunning as a private, he was repeatedly promoted, until, at the close of his service and the war, he was ranked as major, and was in command of an important military post.

It was a campaign distinguished by closing up and securing the results of the victories of Jackson and his brave Tennesseans, which crushed the Creeks and their allies, and permanently protected the whites' country south of the Tennessee State line from the tomahawks of their relentless and wily savages; but it was memorable also for ague-fogs; but it was memorable also for the fearful prevalence of disease and mortality among the soldiers. A most virulent form of malarial fever broke out, and soon spread to Fort Williams, where my uncle was stationed. The volunteers died as do whoopsie. The attacks were sudden, and the disease intractable. Surgeons, officers, and privates fell alike. Quinine was then priceless, medicine became scarce, provisions spoiled, and a panic was improvised. Still my uncle stood at his post, and by his constitution and premature death.

effort to cheer and relieve his men, rallied their spirits and kept things in order until they were ordered to return to Tennessee to be mustered out of service, the war having ended.

—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—The Associated Executive Committee of Friends on Indian Affairs met recently in Baltimore, delegates from eight of the ten yearly meetings being in attendance. Reports from the Cheyenne and Arapaho and Osage agencies showed that the Indians are advancing in civilization, education, and religion. "Jonathan Ozhun and his wife," it is said, "continue their teaching among the Osages and Kaws, and especially among the latter have seen the fruit of years of patient instruction by Friends in the conversion of men and women. In some way, and one which does not appear very disinterested, these Indians were formed into a Presbyterian organization. Nevertheless, all will rejoice in their becoming Christians." The Pottawatomies at Pleasant Prairie, among whom are 28 members are diligent students of the Bible. All but three eschew tobacco. "The cause of temperance receives much attention in the Ottawa Reserve, and the Sacs and Foxes, the Modocs and Shawnees, all exhibit signs of improvement. "The Modocs have lost several of their people by death the past year. Two of these, who had been noted fighters in the Lava-beds of Oregon, lived and died exemplary Christians." —Advocate of Missions.

The women of Siam are keener-witted; more energetic than the men. They do most of the work in country and city, but it is very difficult to interest them in their souls' salvation. In fact, they can hardly believe that they have souls, so long have they been taught to disbelieve it. The Holy Spirit alone can convince them of their need of a Saviour. There were no women in the church for several years, and now we have useful converts as these. The church in Bechaburi, 78 members, all of whom are women; Bangkaboon, 17 members—3 women. Mrs. Dean's letter in Woman's Work, of November, 1880, gives a picture, and a sad one, of the life of the thousand women in the king's palace. It is a life of idleness and evil doing, with no desire for a better. Woman's Work for Woman.

The Burman Missionary tells the story of an old man who, thirty or forty years ago, when a heathen, came in possession of a copy of the Psalms in Burmese, which had been left behind by a traveler stopping at his home. He began to read, and before he had finished the book he had resolved to cast his idols away. For twenty years he worshipped the eternal God revealed to him in the Psalms, using the fifty-first, which he had committed to memory, as a daily prayer. Then he fell in with a white missionary who gave him a New Testament. With great joy he read for the first time the story of salvation by the Lord Jesus Christ. "Twenty years I have walked by starlight," he said; "now I see the sun."

When the Japanese Ambassador to China, who had visited Europe and America, was at Tientsin, the guest of Li-Hung Chang, the Viceroy of the Province of Chihli, that most progressive of Chinese statesmen asked him this question: "Of all the improvements you have seen in foreign land, what one do you consider the most valuable for China to learn?" The Embassador answered, "The education of your girls."—Young Workers.

The Archbishop of Michoacan, Mexico, has issued an edict to the effect that Catholics must not join any Protestant sect, furnish house or chairs to Protestants, receive Protestant books or tracts, do any work for Protestants, or receive any gift from them, under penalty of the anathema and highest excommunication of the Holy Father.

—During the past year eighteen ministers seceded from the Independents in England. Seven of them entered the ministry of the Established church, four that of the Presbyterian, and one each that of the Unitarian, Swedenborgian and Baptists. This loss has exactly been made good by the reception of ministers from other bodies, fourteen of whom, it is said, were received from Methodism.

—There are nearly 100,000 lepers in India. About a year and a half ago the church of Scotland established a mission among those unfortunates, and it has now three asylums, with eighty inmates, and of these twelve have professed Christianity. A more unattractive missionary field can not be found.

—The United Presbyterian mission in Egypt received a grant of land near the Nile, worth $40,000, and the Maharajah Dulip Singh has given $80,000 in the last sixteen years as a thank offering for his lovely wife, whom he found in the mission.

We are constantly hearing the cry against the amount of money expended on foreign missions, but New York city spends two-thirds as much on its police as all the societies in the United States together spend on foreign missions.

—The King of Congo, Africa, has given a warm welcome to the English Baptist missionaries, and it is now reported that he has been converted and baptized. If this shall prove true, he will be the only Baptist king in the world.

The late Daniel Carpenter, of Foxboro, Mass., bequeathed $5,000 each to the Vermont Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions and the American Missionary Association, and $1,000 to other religious associations.

The Rev. Mr Baker, an English Wesleyan Missionary, appointed to organize the Government institutions of the Fonga Islands for the purposes of education, has been appointed by the king as his Prime Minister.

An Algerian missionary expedition is to be sent to Mwata Yanvo's country, on Lake Tanganyika. A second party of three missionaries is to ascend the Congo, and settle on the great northern bend of the river.

The native churches of central Africa, gathered from the Bechuana, Hottentot, and Kaffir races, have now enrolled some 5,000 men and women who have professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

There are twenty Christian churches in Antananarivo, Madagascar, a city of 100,000 population. Some of them hold more than 1,000 person, and on Sunday all are filled.

—Brunet's Lutheran Kalender for 1880 gives the following statistics of Lutherans in the United States: ministers, 3,087; congregations, 4,370; communicants, 589,195.

—The eight hundred and fourteenth anniversary of the founding of Westminster Abbey was recently observed. Canon Farrar preached the sermon.

—Rev. J. O. Westrup, missionary of the Southern Baptist board to Mexico, was attacked with his guide, Dec. 21, by a band of twenty Indians, killed, and terribly mutilated.

—A [illegible] has recently been built in the Capital of Madagascar, and is the first building erected by the Queen within the precinct of the Palace.

—Sarah Smiley, the well-known preacher among the Orthodox Friends, has joined the Episcopal Church in West Chester, Pa.

—A Christian school for girls, with more than thirty pupils, has been established in Ambohi Nazareth.

—Five missionaries in South Africa have been killed in the war between the English and the Basutos.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—Dr. Rule, a Wesleyan missionary in Spain, writes that the downfall of the Spanish Cabinet is the greatest event since the revolution of 1868, when religious liberty was proclaimed.

During the last six years king, cabinet, and priests had been steadily, yet not quite openly, united in an effort to reinstate civil and religious despotism and gradually to extinguish liberty of worship; but in one day the king found himself compelled to give up the cabinet that would have provoked another revolution and overturned his throne. The members of the present cabinet, the leaders of public opinion, and the most intelligent and influential Spaniards, are declared advocates of religious liberty; but the ground is equally open to the propagators of atheism and the preachers to the gospel. "The Spanish Liberals for Protestant and Democrats are demanding more toleration for Protestants, and Rationalists." The influence of the prelates and clergy makes it very difficult for the cabinet to pursue a policy of toleration. In March the cabinet resolved to give a free pardon and liberty to a native Protestant pastor condemned to several months imprisonment, under the Canovas cabinet, because he held prayer-meetings in Catalonia, and the village authorities prosecuted him under the law of public meetings. The judicial proceedings against several Protestants will be abandoned in the provinces, under the orders of the ministry. The reply given to the Papal Nuncio states that neither the Concordat nor the Constitution is violated by the toleration; the Government is determined to grant to Spaniards who are not Catholics, and that no interference of the bishops and the Holy See against the rights of the Government under the Constitution will be tolerated.—Advocate of Missions.

A meeting was held in London to hear an exposition of the principles and progress of Catholic Reform in Europe from Pere Hyacinthe. Members of the Church of England and Ireland, of the Greek Church, the French Reformed Church and the Scotch Presbyterian, and other churches were present. Hyacinthe told them in his address that if the church were separated from the State as the Gallican Church were recognized, as a branch of Catholicism, whose parishes would secede from Ultramontanism. It seems odd to read of Pere Hyacinthe as Mr. Loyson, as the reports call him. Pere Hyacinthe Loyson is a very interesting character, and is doing good service in doing what he calls scraping off the superstitions of Popery that people may read true and living Catholicism.—Northern Christian Advocate.

—Dr. Sommerville, of Glasgow, has been preaching with marked success in Berlin. At the first of those meetings 2,000 persons were present; and after the address, which was listened to with the utmost quiet and reverence, 1,400 "Gospels" were given away. At the second meeting, the interest had deepened, and 2,500 attended, among whom a large proportion were young men from the government offices and elsewhere, a fair representation of the Jewish community being also observed. At the third meeting the attendance reached 3,000. The fourth was a children's meeting, largely attended, 2,200 children and 1,000 adults being gathered together. At the fifth 3,500 were present, and, as they overcrowded the hall, several hundred failed to obtain admission.

—The American Church of the United Brethren in Christ, though not a distinctively Methodist body, intends sending six delegates to the Methodist Ecumenical Conference. The determination is quite recent, and grows out of a feeling on the part of some of its leaders that they do not want their church to be regarded as so anomalous as not to admit of classification, and they believe that its proper place is in a council of Arminian churches.—Exchange.

Mrs. Augustus Hemenway of Boston, with her daughter, Mrs. Eustis, and other connections of William Ellery Channing's family, have decided to put a large window back of the pulpit in the Channing Memorial Church, to be known as the Channing window. The window will be made in London, under the supervision of Mrs. Arnold, wife of Edwin Arnold, author of the "Light of Asia," and dedicated to Dr. Channing. She is described as a devout worshiper in London.

The new Hebrew college at Cincinnati was formally dedicated on Sunday, April 24, a large number of leading Hebrews from all parts of the country taking part in the exercises. The course of study includes the regular instruction in Hebrew theology, to which hereafter it has been necessary to send young men abroad. There are 278 Hebrew synagogues in the United States, owning real estate to the value of $7,000,000.

The Moravians, a region of the United Brethren in Christ, meets in May. The discipline of that church condemns secret societies; no member of a secret society is received. The Telescope thinks that the law cannot be as strictly executed as it ought to have been, and urges upon the General Conference to more positive legislation on the subject, such as will take effect, and plainly declare those who attend secret societies shall be expelled.

Exeter Hall, London, which has resounded for half a century with the voices of many eloquent men, has been sold to the Salvation Army, and is soon to be used as a public hall. It has been purchased as the home and headquarters of the Young Men's Christian Association of London.

The Christian Index (Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.) says: "So far as the Baptists of Georgia are concerned, it is very certain that they have lost their power as were increased in number. The denomination is by no means as efficient in proportion to members as it was forty years ago.

It is noted in Ireland, as a relaxation from an intense bigotry, that Trinity College, Dublin, has at last conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity on a Presbyterian—Dr. Murphy, the commentator.

Our Young People.

THE LITTLE SKIPPER.

BY F. E. BRADBURY.

They sat together, a happy pair,
In an old hall by the sea,
A maiden fair with golden hair,
And a brave, bright boy was he.
"I'm the skipper," he cries, and "you're my wife;
And over the sea we'll go!"
He cuts the rope with his little knife
And the crimson sun was low.

Up rose the storm, and roared the tide,
The boat was tilting fast;
The little wife crept to her skipper's side,
And wept at the fearful blast.
He wraps her warm in his little coat,
He cries "O weep not so!"
As swift they drift in the tilting boat
And the stormy sun is low.

If what shall be the parents' life
In their cabins on the shore!
The little skipper and his wife
Will come to them no more.
O lonely will they wander by,
And watch the ebb and flow,
And think they hear their children cry
When the crimson sun is low.

An Aged Lady to a Little Friend.

DEAR LITTLE LIZZIE: I can not let your dear papa's letter go without a tiny wee letter to you. My grandaughter, Mary Lizzie, is nine years old, and she writes me very nice little letters. She wrote me that her baby brother, two years old, had seen her put on her gloves and take her book and go to school. So he got his mother's black kid gloves, and took a book on the science of medicine, and got half way to the school-house before his mother missed him. She thought it "very funny," and so it was, but, darling, it was more than "funny," it was a striking instance of the force of example, which your precious mamma will explain to you. If your dear mother makes you a good little girl, your brothers and sisters will be good too. But if you be naughty, they will be naughty, they will follow in your footsteps. Do not forget, dear child, you are the example in your family. And when you grow up, choose your associates for their intelligence and goodness, for the force of example will make you like them.

Suppose your mamma's kind neighbor sent her seven nice, ripe peaches. The room is filled with the delightful odor, and they are tempting to look on. Your mother calls her dear little Lizzie, and gives her six, and keeps but one for herself. Now would you not be a naughty child to steal the seventh? I fancy I hear you say, "I would not do such a thing, it would be so very wicked." God has given us six days to labor and do all our work, and he has kept the seventh for himself. We are all naughty children when we steal the seventh. Enjoy all innocent pleasures, for God delights to see his children happy. But never forget God. Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Bless you darling.

From your old friend.

HARRISBURG, Louisiana, April 16th, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: Willie Owens is a little girl of six years of age, and wished to do something to pay her pastor his first quarterage. Now Willie lives in the country, and owns a hen or two. One of them had just brought out twelve little chickens, with these Willie started for the parsonage and presented them to the preacher's wife. And for the second quarter Willie had saved up a dollar which she handed to her pastor.

Willie still has a missionary hen which you will hear more of hereafter.

Yours Respectfully,

P. HOLZAPH.

A Few Ideas About Stars.

BY MARIA HAZLEWOOD.

"O aunty, dear, do tell us a story!" cried a half dozen children, who bounded into my room, and mounted even upon the arms of my easy chair. I had to concede, and as there was no time to be lost, began at once with the first idea.

"Suppose I tell you what I was thinking of?"

"O! do" came in a chorus.

"Well I was thinking of a long, low room, with an open fireplace filled with burning logs; a lady was sitting in an arm chair before it half dreaming, and half listening to the chatter of a group of children gathered in one of the deep windows. Like ourselves, they were waiting for tea, and were in the twilight. The lady was your aunty who tells you of it, and some of the children are now among your papas and mammas. Suddenly two little hands clapped together, and

Star light, star bright,
First star I've seen to night,
Wish I may, wish I might,
Get the wish I wish to night.

sung out in a hurried way, and somewhat louder tone than they had been using, drew my attention to the children, who instantly tumbled over each other in endeavoring to bring each little head where its owner could see the star, and make a wish. All was quiet for a minute, and then up they tumble like a one eyed child said:

"Cousin Lou, what are the stars?" The wee creature who asked for this vast information was your mamma, little Louise, then not more than six years old. The answer came as low as the question and was intended only for baby Charley's ears.

"Angel's eyes, I think."

"But hearty, practical Bob, aged five, had caught it, and joined in with:

"Pshaw! they're buttons, course they are; but I'd like to know who hangs 'em out."

This made the conversation general. Little May said: "I know." Then came a laugh. May was fun, and her assurance seemed very comical. The laugh made her shy, and they had a hard time coaxing her to tell; at last it came out:

"Yes, I does know, for Nurse sings it to me every night." Thereupon she sung:

Sleep! baby, sleep!
The large stars are the sheep,
The little ones are the lambs, I guess,
The fair moon is the shepherdess.
Sleep! baby, sleep!

"She sung it so sweetly, and the children were so sorry for having made her feel badly, that they did not laugh again. But Ned said:

"'Whoa, aunty, pokes the logs, and the sparks fly up the chimney. I have often wondered if they would die, and went on up, growing as they flew."

"'Of course not, little goose. Don't you see that half of them go out before they ever get up?"

"That was from Emily, rebuking in the wisdom of eight years, and the oldest of the party. But Ned was not to be shaken in his idea that way, so he said:

"'Of course, if they never get away from this world, they will not grow, this is not the place for stars: just as mamma said, when Patrick's little baby died, if the people did not leave this world they would never become angels. This world is not the place for angels."

"None of them felt equal to answering this, but Emily, again speaking, said:

"'Well, I think they are holes in the sky, and it is the light of heaven we see through, as if God rarely wished a day to pass without reminding us, by this actual sight of its glory, that the heaven was there."

"This brought Lawrence into the fold, and though a year younger than his sister, he seemed to hear and learn more about everything because he was a boy, I suppose, so now he said:

"'But I have heard, Emily, that they were worlds ours as large, if not larger than our own, and I have loved to look at them, and wonder what kind of people were there, and if God loved them as he loved us, and if some day we would all be in heaven together."

By this time my children had grown so quiet, listening to the prattle of a former generation, that I began to tell them of the ideas of one of the old philosophers, that there was music among the stars that children could sometimes hear, but grown people never, when the tea bell rang out, and the odor of broiled chicken speedily brought the little mortals from things celestial to things terrestrial.—Sunday School Times.

A Thrilling Escape.

An overhanging rock just below Kanawha Falls was the scene of a remarkable adventure, which the Louisville Courier Journal describes as follows:

The Indians were in hot pursuit of Van Bibber, a settler and man of distinction in those early times. He was hard pressed, and full access to the river below did not give being cut off, he was driven to a jutting rock, which proved to be the jumping off place for him.

He stood on the rock, in full view of the enemy above and below, who yelled like demons at the certainty of his speedy capture.

He stood up boldly, and with his rifle kept them at bay. As he stood there he looked across the river and saw his friends—his wife with her babes in her arms, all helpless to render assistance. They stood as if petrified with terror and amazement.

She cried out the top of her voice, "Leap into the river and meet me."

Laying her babe on the grass, she seized the oars and sprang into the skiff alone.

As she neared the middle of the river, her husband saw the Indians coming in full force and yelling like demons.

"Wife, wife," he screamed, "Don't jump; drop down a little lower."

With this he sprang from his crag and descended like an arrow into the water, feet foremost.

The wife rested on her oars a moment to see him rise to the surface, the little canoe floating like a cork, bobbing about on the boiling flood.

It was an awful moment; it seemed an age to her. Would he ever rise?

Her earnest gaze seemed to penetrate the depths of the water, and she darted her boat farther down the stream.

He rose near her; in a moment the canoe was along side of him, and she helped him to scramble into it amid a shower of arrows and shot that the baffled Indians poured into them.

The daring wife did not speak a word, her husband was more dead than alive and all depended on her strength being maintained until they could reach the bank.

This they did, just where she had started, right where the palm was still lying, crowing and laughing.

The men pulled the skiff high up on the sand, and the wife slowly arose and helped to lift Van Bibber to his feet.

He could not walk, but she laid him down by his babe, and then seating herself she wept wildly just as any other woman would have done under the circumstances.

That babe is now a grandfather, and the rock is called "Van Bibber's Rock" to this day.—Youth's Companion.

The Kangaroo as a Fighter.

A wild kangaroo is a dangerous formidable beast to anagonize, as I suppose. Standing at bay, in fighting attitude, on the tripod of his legs and tail, sometimes seven feet high, a solitary "forester" is not to be trifled with. The arms of such a beast are as long as those of a man, and his hind-like paws have sharp hooked claws. With these he will spar against a couple of powerful hounds like a boxer, and woe befalls the unfortunate puppy that ventures within the reach of those sinewy limbs; he will be held for a moment in a strong grip, while a downward blow from the hind foot, armed with its sharp long claw, rips him down from shoulder to tail. Sew up the gash, apply the black bottle, go readily a little dry dust and let him take his chance to come or crawl home a wiser hound. An old dog will watch his chance, make a flank attack, and get hold of the enemy by the tail when over he goes and is soon worried to death. A kangaroo always takes to the water, where he will stand as long as he can, methodically drown any dogs which venture within his reach. A stockman in America, while looking for tracks along the sandy bed of his run, heard a dog barking a signal sure to attract a human soul—for as it would portend something wrong with a flock of sheep, it rang out in the freedom of the sound he found a shepherd in the grasp of a big old kangaroo, holding on for his life to a rock in the bank of the creek. The kangaroo had been chased into the creek by the shepherd's dog, which had gone into the water after him, and would have been inconsiderately drowned had not his master gone to the rescue. The kangaroo, leaving the dog, had seized the man, and was doing his best to drown him, which he would most likely have done had the stockman not heard the frantic barking of the dog, and interfered with a big stick. The writer has never seen a kangaroo swim, though they always take to the water, when hard pressed, like deer. A mob of kangaroos running look very like fallow deer at a distance. When sitting up, invariably on the watch, they look so like gray stumps as to be indistinguishable to the inexperienced eye. They look very ghostly and uncanny as they go into the water on bright moonlight nights.—Harper's Weekly.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

Rev. J. W. Reid. Rev. W. C. Dessouttes.
Rev. C. B. Galloway. Rev. C. W. Carlisle, D. D.

THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1881.

Safety in Temptation.

How shall we secure our children from the temptations which surround them; how secure ourselves? Exemption from all temptation is out of the question. We are placed in a world of trial. We are here to be proved. A stern and fierce ordeal is inevitable. Children at home, surrounded by religious influences, meet with tests of character. There are occasions for the manifestations of temper, selfishness, pride. But, however shielded in the home, and under the eye of watchful and prayerful parents, they must at length, with appetites and passions developed, go out into the world. What has been measurably concealed from them must be revealed, and with open and curious eyes they will look upon the vices of society. They must meet the strong and turbid currents of sin as they rush across their path. Home instruction, parental counsel and example, and godly discipline, may do much toward fortifying them against the general tide of corruption, but the main safeguard is that they be converted in their early years. Very few, young men especially, will lead virtuous and pure lives long if they do not start out with this most essential preparation for the great and life-long conflict. Without such restraints and supports as a saving religious experience bring, the most will give way and fall a prey to vice of some sort. The morality that has not its roots in a genuine religious soil is at best a feeble plant, and readily withers and dies in the atmosphere of temptation.

Whether old or young, the unconverted man has small chance of keeping himself aloof from vice, and unsoiled by the general ungodliness. Conversion is the initial point of an upright and good life. Only with this divine power in him, with purified affections, a quickened conscience, and a will in harmony with righteousness, is it possible to overcome. As against intemperance, licentiousness, covetousness, there is no deliverance except in Christ as our refuge. "In the Lord Jehovah, is everlasting strength," and in no other. Resolutions, pledges and social restraints may help to keep men from falling into the pit of drunkenness and debauchery, but nothing but the grace of God, ordinarily, can pull them out. Reformation, permanent and thorough, goes along with conversion. To become a new creature, to any purpose, a man must become a new creature in Christ.

While conversion prepares us to meet and to successfully resist temptation, it does not exempt us from it. What is the believer's safety against solicitations to sin? He must, as far as possible, keep out of the way of temptation as far as possible consistently with his duties in the business and associations in the world. He can avoid bad company, he can abstain from intoxicating beverages, he can shun such pursuits as are most unfriendly to a religious life. He will have trials and temptations enough at last, but, if he puts fire in his bosom, he can not hope to escape being burned. Grace will be sufficient for all necessary trials, but there is none for self-imposed temptations. "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord, thy God." If fidelity to Christ exposes us to the furnace, the Son of God will walk with us there; but, if we recklessly rush into the fire, we shall have other company, and probably perish in the flames.

The fiercest assaults of the tempter are directed against the children of God. The sinless Redeemer "was tempted in all points like as we are." In temptation we come into the fellowship of his sufferings, and have in him a sympathetic advocate and a strong deliverer. He has taught his disciples to pray, lest they enter into temptation. Without unceasing prayer, and watchfulness unto prayer, no Christian can pass the ordeal with safety. In that prayer of prayers temptation has distinct and separate mention: "And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." Lead us not into such temptations as shall overcome us, but make us a way of escape in the hour of peril. Carry us not into the overwhelming flood, but rather pull us out. Whatever the meaning besides, this is clear, that prayer is the vital means of resisting the arts and wiles of the adversary, and of escaping from the evil that threatens our salvation.

There is no exemption from temptation in this world. The child at home, the young for the first time moving out into the world, the saint amidst the sun-lit heights of holiness, all meet with it, and they must grapple with it, for it is no part of God's plan that the conflict shall be evaded, by flying from the world, or by a cowardly attempt to hide in cloisters or hermits' caves. It is the one greatest element of manliness in the Christian character to accept and meet the inevitable battle, and through grace to conquer. Christ purposed that his followers should be thrust out into the world, and be kept there until death should crown their invincible faith. "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil." Their work is in the world; their mission is to it. In it they are to shine as lights, to be witnesses for Christ, and, by victory over temptation, to demonstrate the divine power of the gospel.

Holy character is wrought in us and developed under these conditions of trial. They are conditions full of peril, but also full of glory, honor and eternal life. Amidst these stormy billows there is danger of shipwreck. We may be driven upon the fatal rocks, or, if we will, may ride out the tempest, and reach the tranquil haven. As we struggle, let us remember that temptation is a part of our schooling for eternity. In the divine purpose it is to make us strong athletes in the moral arena of the universe, and to place us at length where we shall be forever beyond the power of evil. But, to be safe we must put on the whole armor of God, and be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might.

Not Doing It.

A city paper says:

During the morning the Mayor was waited upon by one of the largest saloon keepers in the city, who expressed his desire to have all such places closed on Sundays. He states that employes of these places need one day's rest out of the seven, but unless every house in the city is compelled to close no one or two houses can afford to do so.

So far as the record shows, no attention was paid to this request. Doubtless it was regarded as preposterous.

Why will not our New Orleans City Council take action in this matter? The saloon keeper who calls for Sunday closing ought to be strongly seconded by every good citizen. The benefits of such a measure to the moral interests of the community would be incalculable, crime would be greatly reduced, and real estate would go up at once. Have our city authorities the backbone and conscience to think of or propose such a measure? We doubt.

And, then, here is an ordinance providing for the closing of bar-rooms during the late hours of the night. As adopted a few days ago, the ordinance does not amount to much. Here it is:

A new ordinance was introduced by Administrator Huger, providing for the closing of all bar-rooms and coffee-houses where spirituous or malt liquors are sold, from midnight until four o'clock on the following morning.

The reading of this ordinance called for an expression of different views from the administrators.

Mr. Mealey wanted action thereon postponed until next week, by which time the principal saloon keepers could be heard from and some better arrangement could be effected.

Mr. Debuonoro argued that the Mayor should have discretionary power in the matter, as very often the strict interpretation of this ordinance would seriously interfere with entertainments of various kinds.

Mr. Walshe thought that the ordinance should be referred to the committee of the whole, with the object of making those places desirous of keeping open all night pay a suitable license for the privilege.

On motion of Mr. Mealey, the time for reopening the saloons was changed from four to three o'clock in the morning.

Mr. Debuonoro moved an amendment to the ordinance, which gives the Mayor discretionary power to allow proprietors of saloons, etc., to keep open after hours.

The ordinance was adopted as amended and goes into effect at once.

If we can not shut up the saloons altogether, it would be well to close them from sundown to sunrise. As it is now, according to this ordinance, they are to be closed from twelve to three o'clock, and, even respecting these three hours, the Mayor has discretionary power to release the saloons from the necessity of closing. This we should call prohibition in its very mildest form. Confessedly, the evils of open saloons at night are very great. It is the time of greatest dissipation, the hours of the power of darkness, the period of revelry, debauchery, of fights and brutal assaults and murder. This is the time especially when young men, released from employment, are lured into these dens of vice and drunkenness, and are ruined in body and soul. Why not shut up these death-traps, nights and Sundays, and thus somewhat mitigate their indescribable and immeasurable evils? The very saloon keepers themselves, in some instances, are calling for relief. Parents, wives, and all virtuous men and women, feel that it ought to be done.

Is there a local politician or a member of the city government who has the courage to favor the measure, or to take a step in this direction? The ordinance passed by the City Council shows in what a gingerly, tender-footed way our authorities touch the subject, and how, under a pretense of doing something, they do nothing whatever.

Our people may not be ready for total prohibition as yet, but we hope they will be, by the next municipal and State elections, prepared to vote for men who shall be pledged to the policy of closing saloons and all drinking houses at night and on Sundays. This much, at least, may be done, in this city and State. Our temperance friends might organize and work for this result. We advocate total prohibition, local option, and any measure to repress and lessen the whisky curse. If the traffic can be stopped on nights and Sundays, much will be gained for the general welfare, and, as the benefits are made clear by experience, something more thorough and effective may follow. We fear that New Orleans is so completely under the whisky power that nothing but a general State law can deliver us. It is time for all good citizens to wake up to the real issue, and to put their convictions into every legitimate form of influence, and into their ballots.

With a Reader.

A brother writes us as follows:

I have been very much astonished recently by hearing a minister of the gospel assert, repeatedly, that there was no such thing as conversion before the day of Pentecost, that all the distinguished characters of the Old Testament—Moses, Abraham, Daniel, Job, and even good old Elijah—were not converted, but simply inspired, and even the apostles themselves knew nothing of conversion until after the death, resurrection and ascension of Christ. Is the preacher correct? And, if not, wherein does he err? By answering the above through your columns you will oblige a constant reader of the ADVOCATE.

Much depends on what the minister means by conversion. Moses, Abraham, Daniel, Job and Elijah were holy men, and devoted and accepted servants of God. They walked with God, enjoyed his favor, and died in the faith. We call such people converted people in whatever dispensation we find them.

As to the apostles, they were good and pure men before the day of Pentecost, although comparatively ignorant of Christian doctrine as subsequently revealed to them under the promised baptism of the Holy Ghost. Christ said to them, when he washed their feet: "And ye are clean, but not all." Judas was the exception. In his sublime prayer Christ, referring to the apostles, says: "Now they have known that all things whatsoever thou hast given me are of thee. For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me." Again: "And none of them is lost, but the son of perdition." And again: "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world."

There was afterward progress in doctrine and experience, but, in the sense of being changed and devout men, and sincere followers of Christ, they were converted men—babes as compared with their subsequent growth in knowledge and grace, but still accepted of God and converted.

The baptism of the Spirit, which endued them with power, was a special qualification for their apostolical work and ministry, and a condition of privilege, experience and illumination which specially marks the Christian dispensation. As we understand the term, however, the "holy men of old" were converted, and so were the apostles before they received the extraordinary gifts of Pentecost. We suspect that the whole question is one of mere words, and that the minister referred to by our correspondent puts a meaning upon conversion which is not usually ascribed to it. As to the actual state of the Old Testament saints, and of the apostles before the day of Pentecost, we imagine that there is substantial agreement between us.

Two Revelations of Christ.

In the New Testament we find two distinct revelations in regard to Jesus Christ. Jesus, of Nazareth, walks across the stage of human life, and at every point he claims to be the Saviour of men. As soon as he was born the angel of the Lord announced to the shepherds: "Unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ, the Lord." The explicit testimony of the greatest of all the prophets was: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." In his conversation with the Samaritan woman, Jesus avowed his claim to the Messiahship. All his works proceeded along the line of this claim to substantiate it. All his words imply it and enforce it. There is no act of his life, no word of his tongue that abates in the least this claim. His ethical teachings and all his promises are based upon the truth of this claim. Everywhere he says: "God sent his Son into the world that the world, through him, might be saved." From his birth to his death, everything proceeds upon the validity of the claim to be the Saviour of men. From his resurrection to his ascension every act and teaching of his was an instruction to his disciples how to proclaim him as the Saviour of men. From the Pentecost until the death of the last apostle everything recognized this claim, and all things connected with Christ and the church bore concurrent testimony to its truth, and, by the time the canon of Scripture was completed, that truth was so firmly established that no ingenuity or power of men or devils has been able to overthrow it. Christ made no other claim for himself than that he was the Saviour of men. His disciples make no other claim for him than that "he came into the world to save sinners." And to prove the validity of his claim, he and they simply pointed to his words and works. While the Scripture gives him various names, and ascribes to him various offices, these names, when added together, make the name of Saviour and these offices all meet and blend and complement each other in the great office of Saviour of men. Everywhere, then, in Scripture Christ is revealed as the Saviour of men. This may be called the external revelation—the revelation to the mind. In this revelation of himself and his claims Christ invites investigation. In this he calmly, and without any hesitancy, places himself and his astonishing claims before the judging and critical faculty of the mind, and challenges scrutiny. From criticism of himself, of his claims, of his works or of his words, he never shrinks. In this revelation of himself he rather demands from every one an investigation of his claims.

There is another revelation of Christ, made in the New Testament. He is spoken of as revealed in men as well as to them. In his prayer to the Father, the night before his death, Jesus stated in unmistakable words this astounding fact. He said: "I in them!" The Apostle Paul's testimony to this fact is as clear as a sunbeam. He said: "When it pleased God to reveal his Son in me." He said: We preach Christ "in you, the hope of glory." He said: "God hath shined into our hearts, the light of the knowledge of the glory of God, in the face of Jesus Christ." This may be called the internal revelation—the revelation to the consciousness. This revelation is made to those only who believe in Christ—to those who recognize the validity of his claims as the Saviour of men, and yield themselves to the influences of his saving grace. The first revelation is made in the proclamations of the gospel. Wherever it is preached there Christ is exhibited as the Saviour of men. The second revelation is made to the faith that receives the gospel and acts upon it. Wherever the mind and heart are placed in proper attitude toward the gospel, Christ is exhibited as the Saviour of the individual. Personal salvation depends upon this second revelation. Christ in the heart is the only salvation. Reader, have you experienced this? Have you had this revelation?

C.

Bro. Mellen's "Practical View."

The Hon. T. L. Mellen has published two articles in the ADVOCATE on temperance—the first a defense of the notorious "pint law," passed by the last Legislature of Mississippi. He says that the Legislature took a "practical view" of the whole temperance question, and, seeing that "prohibition did not prohibit," passed this law in the interest of public revenue. He denies that the operation of the "pint law" has increased intemperance and its consequent evils, and vigorously opposes the policy of "legal suasion" to arrest the sweep of drunkenness and debauchery over the land. Honestly believing his article erroneous and harmful in its teachings, this is written to state another view, leaving the ADVOCATE readers to decide which is right and most "practical."

In the first place, Bro. Mellen and his Legislature started out with the assumption that "prohibition will not prohibit." Here we join issue and make positive denial. This has not been the history of prohibition. True; political papers here and there, with a chronic weakness for whisky, have repeatedly so stated, but facts and figures disprove the bold assertion and assumption. Prohibitory laws, in their effective administration, will compare favorably, with any criminal statutes of the country. Violations occur, but the criminal records of our courts reveal the same sad fact as to other laws. Prohibition may not be absolute, but is not the same true of laws against larceny, arson, manslaughter and murder? Suppose the Legislature should say, "seeing these laws do not prohibit crime, we will take a 'practical view,' and license such criminals in the interest of public revenue," there would be no more logical inconsistency than in the reasons given for advocating and passing the "pint law." Legislation against crime has never been, and possibly will never be, absolutely prohibitory; but is it, therefore, not effective and necessary? Such is the logic of the "pint law." But let us glance at the facts of history, and see if prohibition does not prohibit. Whether we look at the State of Maine, or any county in any State that has adopted a local option or prohibitory law, the result is the same. Statistics show that not one-tenth as much liquor, proportionately, is consumed in Maine as there was forty years ago. Fifty years ago over two gallons of rum were manufactured in the State to each inhabitant. To-day there is not a distillery or brewery in the State. Gov. Perham said, in 1873: "It is probable that less intoxicating liquors are drunk in Maine than in any other place of equal population in the country, perhaps in the civilized world." Hon. Wm. P. Frye, now United States Senator, says: "I can and do, from my own personal observation, unhesitatingly affirm that the consumption of intoxicating liquors in Maine is not to-day one-fourth as great as it was twenty years ago. In my opinion our remarkable temperance reform of to-day is the legitimate child of the law." Senator Morrill writes: "I have the honor unhesitatingly to concur in the opinions expressed in the foregoing, by my colleague, Hon. Mr. Frye." Hon. J. G. Blaine, now Secretary of State, says: "I concur in the foregoing statements, and on the point of the relative amount of liquors sold at present in Maine and in those States where a system of license prevails, I am very sure, from personal knowledge and observation, that the sales are immeasurably less in Maine." Hon. Hannibal Hamlin, ex-Senator and ex-Vice President of the United States, says: "I concur in the statements made by Mr. Frye. In the great good produced by the prohibitory liquor law of Maine, no man can doubt who has seen its results. It has been of immense value." And all the other Congressmen from that State publish their unqualified concurrence. Now, with such positive testimony from such trustworthy witnesses, who can say "prohibition does not prohibit?" If we look at the several counties in Maryland that have tried local option we find the same gratifying results. In the counties of Worcester, Dorchester, Caroline, Somerset, Calvert, Prince George, Queen Anne, Montgomery and others drunkenness and crime have greatly decreased, slums-houses have fewer inmates, the poor have become more prosperous, and, in one or two instances, the office of jailor has become a sinecure. This is history, genuine and authentic. Christian men should be slow to believe the unwarranted and wild declarations and ridicule of the whisky power and its organs.

The "practical view" of the Legislature in stressing the idea of revenue in the passage of the "pint law" is doubtful as to its political wisdom and positively wrong in morals. 1. As a political economic measure, it is doubted if the aggregate revenue will be increased a farthing. When we consider the increased expense of criminal courts, made necessary by the drunkenness and crime resulting from this law, it is just possible that the balance will be on the debit side. That this law has increased crime is the testimony of good citizens in nearly every section and community of the State. The Grand Jury of Alcorn county, among other things, reported the following: "We would further report that we find crime on the increase, as we believe, caused, to a great extent, by the operation of the pint liquor law." A similar report was made by the Grand Jury of Lauderdale county. Now, when we consider the fees of district attorneys, the per diem of grand jurors, petit jurors, witnesses, clerks, sheriffs, etc., a very few such cases would more than consume the "pint law" revenue of a whole county. 2. As to its moral aspects, there is no room for a Christian to stand or debate. To keep the eye only on the public treasury, when public morals are imperiled, would soon legislate a government out of existence. Revenue is not the only end sought in legislation. "Revenue is the principle thing, therefore get revenue" is not a maxim of soundest political wisdom. Morals are not to be compared with dollars. If the theory of the "pint law" advocates is correct and "practical," why not repeal the statute against carrying concealed weapons, and, in the interest of public revenue, let a man pay a license for becoming a walking arsenal? Gamblers would be glad to pay a heavy tax for legal protection in plying their wicked trade. Why not take a "practical view" and give them license? Why not gather large revenue into the treasury by legalizing brothels in our towns and cities? Seeing prohibition does not prohibit in these things, there are the same reasons for the same "practical view" in the passage of the "pint law."

But there is another objection to this "pint law." It makes an unjust discrimination against other men in the same line of business. Saloon-keepers are compelled to pay a license tax of $300, in addition to the expense of publishing their petition in a county newspaper. But any man can open a den and sell by the pint by simply paying $100. The injustice of such legislation is unpardonable, though the view may be "practical."

Other points in the article might be considered, but space forbids. Besides they have already been met by well-known correspondents. Methodism can not afford for any of her trusted sons to give an uncertain sound in this great struggle. We hope, therefore, that our friend and brother may modify his views, get into line, and wield his trenchant blade on the side of prohibition.

Growth of Protestantism.

Dr. Daniel Dorchester presented carefully prepared statistics to the preachers' meeting in Boston recently, showing the growth of Protestant Evangelical Churches in this country during the last eighty years. We quote from an editorial in the Herald:

Dr. Dorchester shows, by indisputable figures, that the Protestant Evangelical churches have far outstripped, comparatively, even our rapidly increasing population. In 1800 there was one evangelical Christian to fourteen and a half of the inhabitants; of all ages, in 1880 one for every five. It is an astonishing and delightful fact that the evangelical church membership of the United States is one-fifth of the population. The census of the country in these eighty years has increased nine and one-third fold, while communicants in the churches have increased twenty-seven fold. Since 1850 the era of unprecedented immigration—the population has increased 112 per cent., and evangelical Christians 300 per cent.

Instead of a loss of moral power being shown in later years, there has been a great acceleration in the progress of the church. The increase in the fifty years from 1800 to 1850 was 3,165,146, while in the next two years the increase was nearly as much—3,143,108; and in the next two years, to 1880, it was more—3,362,[illegible]. The present number of evangelical church members in the country is 10,065,963, an increase in eighty years of 9,701,091. Of this number [illegible] and a half millions belong to the various Methodist families, two and a half to the Baptists, one million to the Presbyterians, nine-tenths of a million to the Lutherans, 386,[illegible] to the Congregationalists and 300,[illegible] to the Episcopalians.

Romanism has grown very fast in the last thirty years. It makes a distinction between church members and population. Its population, as estimated by its own authorities in 1850, was 1,614,000; in 1870 it was 4,600,000; in 1880 it was 6,367,[illegible]. The increase in thirty years of 4,753,000. In this period, however, at least 1,500,000 Roman Catholic immigrants entered the country more than the denominational increase, leaving the natural increase entirely out of question. According to the calculations of their own statisticians, with their natural increase and immigration, there ought to be twenty millions of Roman Catholics in this country, which shows a loss of twenty millions. In the period of the most rapid increase of the church since 1850 the balance is more than 1,800,000 has been made up of the growth of evangelical Christians; although in the case of the former attendance, more or less regular, upon public worship is counted, and in the latter only communicants are numbered. If the regular attendants upon the latter were estimated, the increase would be at least three-fold as large.

The comparative growth of evangelical and liberal churches is equally suggestive. In 1850 the evangelical churches were thirty-two times as many as the three liberal (the Unitarian, Universalist and Swedenborgian. Since 1850 these societies have decreased 64, and the evangelical societies have increased 54,018. In the radius of ten miles, with Boston as the center, in 1800 the liberal churches were 23; in 1880 they were 58; while in 1800 the evangelical churches were 16, and in 1880 they had increased to 241, the one increasing two and one half fold and the other fifteen fold.

There really was never a period in the history of Christianity when the church grew so rapidly as it has in the last eighty years in this country. We speak of the wonderful growth in the apostolic and early Christian era, but they do not compare with this. At the close of the first century there were estimated to be 500,000 Christians; in the fourth, 10,000,000; in the eighth, 30,000,000. It took four centuries to reach the present strength of the evangelical church membership in the United States.

The thirty millions at the close of the eighth century were simply nominal; while the ten millions at the end of less than a century in the United States are already fellowship.

But the progress of the church is not simply in its census. In its morals and its ethical standards of duty, as compared with previous years, there has been an equal progress. As to honesty, social purity, temperance and sincere piety, the church will well compare now with any period of its existence. In its charities it is incomparably in advance; in schools and universities, in home missions, in hospitals, and in the great foreign field of Christian evangelization, she shows herself vital with a divine life, and is constantly yielding heavenly fruit.

The Unveiling.

On Tuesday afternoon, May 10, the statue of Stonewall Jackson, erected in the Metairie Cemetery of New Orleans, was unveiled in the presence of many thousands of people. The widow and daughter of the great Confederate warrior, Mr. Jefferson Davis, and other distinguished persons, were on the platform. The statue surmounts a large structure containing vaults for the burial of the soldiers belonging to the Louisiana Division of the Army of Northern Virginia. Gen. Fitz Hugh Lee delivered a lengthy and eloquent oration. We give a brief paragraph:

"The monument that rises here to celebrate Jackson's services to the Southern cause will also serve as a beacon light to show the coming generations how to march with steady step in imitating his virtues, in following his example. Look at it, comrades. Do you want a model of self-denial? there it is. Do you ask for a combination of moderation and justice in your hero? it stands for that. Wisdom and courage? it is there. Purity and piety, simplicity and grandeur? behold them all.

"Oh! that the eagles from the snow-clad hills and frozen lakes of the North might proclaim that the 'Blue and the Grey are the colors of God,' they are seen in the sky at evening and morning, a gallant, noble soul has found these passports to heaven, and that while the people of that section delight in erecting lofty testimonials of their admiration of the services to their cause of Meade or Farragut, they do properly appreciate and justly honor our leaders when they rise in a monument to our Jackson or Semmes. Our own Southern mocking bird would gladly hail such a happy union, and its responsive refrain would vibrate in silver thrills over the hills and valleys and plains of the sunny South. At such songs the eagle and the stars in the spangled banner would once more look down upon a united people, and we of the South would bless the lay of our bird, and say with Virginia's poet:

'Has ever heard the skylark's deathless notes
As with and delirious ring,
And more melodious song he sought to float
Almost where angels sing,
As though he sought to steal some heavenly strain
To fill the measure of his own refrain?

'Or hast thou been where Castalia's fountains start,
Nestle mystic by the skies,
And drank too deeply that from thy heart
Such glorious melodies
Leap gushing, gurgling in unnumbered throng,
Till the quivering treetop drips with song?

'God bless the Southland bird! God bless thy lay,
Like music in a dream
It floats from old Potomac's cliffs away
To Colorado's stream;
From where Virginia's mountain torrents roar
To where the warm gulf laps the Texas shore.'

At the conclusion of Gen. Lee's address, a general call was made for Jefferson Davis, who spoke as follows:

"FRIENDS, COUNTRYMEN, LADIES AND GENTLEMAN: I am thrice unfortunate in being this called upon to speak to you. First, because the address you have just listened to leaves nothing further to be said. Second, because that address was made by one who figured so prominently in the war; by one who followed old Stuart so gallantly, and who was equal in prowess and bravery to his commander.

And yet again it is difficult for me to speak, since our thoughts are now turned towards the hero whose memory we to-day are celebrating.

The character and conduct of Stonewall Jackson so sounded his glory that no encomium can neither enlarge nor abate his fame. It was complete in itself. It would be but idleness to attempt a eulogy of him now.

To that man, whose image stands there, be all honor and glory. It is well for Louisiana that the statue was made, for in the war there was nothing we needed so much as artillery, and the Washington Artillery came in the rescue of the country. Aye, it is well that Louisiana should rear the statue; for in the campaigns, where he stood alone, driving the divisions of the enemy before him, Louisiana's men, steel beside him like stone walls!

A story has been told by Dick Taylor illustrating the piety and Christianity of Jackson's character. Says Taylor, while Jackson was at Fort Republic, it was found to be absolutely necessary to climb the fortress, a hazardous enterprise. Just previous to the undertaking Jackson was found sitting alone, while the roar of guns was heard and while shells were bursting on every side he was found in deep prayer.

He was true to his country, and he did all that man could, trusting to God to sustain the right. But it would be unjust to you, friends, to continue speaking about the story of Jackson. From the time he left the Military Institute he battled incessantly for State rights, self government and constitutional liberty. No one expected that he would become the great hero of our war and stand in the minds of Europeans as the mightiest chieftain the Confederacy saw. [Slight applause.] This quiet professor rose like a meteor over the Confederate strife, and like a meteor his career was short, but it shone on until its close.

He lived for his country, never for one moment doubting that its cause was righteous.

"He died 'quoting as I do to-day' (with great emphasis, rising on tip-toe and bringing down his upraised arm vehemently) 'that the cause was founded in truth and justice. He gave his whole heart to the cause, and the country gave its heart to Jackson. You men on whom he loaned honor yourselves in honoring him.'

Our German Mission Conference.

Rev. Dr. Ahrens, writing to the Advocate of Missions, says:

Of good wives you hear but little; they are so occupied with their domestic affairs that they find but little time to show themselves, whereby to attract attention and induce remark. It is the same with our German missionaries. They quietly attend to their labor of love, preaching, praying, and saving souls. Our success has not been astonishingly great, but nevertheless satisfactory. Methodism is popular with the Tentons. It is not until they are awakened or converted that they see the symmetry, the charms, and the beauty of our church, and join it; but, having once joined, they are usually faithful unto death. At least nine of every ten of our members have been truly converted, and pray in public. Love feasts, class and prayer-meetings are being regularly held, and are usually well attended.

During last year we have lost by death two young preachers of much promise—the Rev. Herman Ebers and John C. Kopp. On the eighteenth of March, of the present year, another one was called away to the church triumphant—the Rev. J. Louis Schaper, a young man of holy fervor, and son of the Rev. J. A. Schaper, personally known to you as an old presiding elder. Our Conference is but a little more than six years old, and already we have five preachers' widows to support.

In educational enterprise we are not lagging behind. We have a Conference College at Fredericksburg, Texas, well attended and tolerably well supported. The Rev. W. J. R. Thomssens is president. The college building is a fine edifice, built of hard stone, at a cost of $7,000. No debt mantners the same. At Industry, Texas, we have a District High School, taught by a member of the Conference, the Rev. J. A. G. Rabe. The school building is deeded to our church.

To some of our American brethren it seems strange that we should preach in German to our congregation, while its business affairs can make good use of English. They do not seem to know that it is a characteristic of all men throughout the world that, though they speak the foreign tongue while dwelling in foreign lands, when they worship when they pray, they pray in accents learned while nestling in their mother's bosom, in accents sacred and sweet. Our offspring will not want German clergymen and German preaching; but in order to engage the same for Methodism we must preach to the immigrants in their mother tongue. In the Northern States the Germans have become an element of strength. It will be so with us.

Missionary Items.

From account of annual meeting of the Board of Missions as published in Nashville Christian Advocate we take the following items:

The appropriations for the next fiscal year, after patient and laborious consideration, were made as follows:

	Carey
China
Rescue Mexico	$2,500
Border Mexico	2,000
Brazil	2,000
Indian Mission	12,000
Bishop Mission	17,000
Denver Conference	1,250
Montana Conference	2,000
Columbia Conference	1,000
Los Angeles Conference	1,000
German Mission	4,000
Florida	2,000
Western Conference	1,000
North west Texas Conference	1,000
Office Expenses	1,000
Contingent	2,000
Total	$50,525

The Rev. Drs. Lambuth, father and son, were in daily attendance upon the meetings of the Board, and in considering the China Mission furnished detailed statements of the condition of that field that were very helpful.

Resolved, That in order to prevent confusion, and to promote system in the keeping of our accounts, this Board respectfully request and urge those persons who desire to make special donations to particular missions to forward their contributions through the Treasurer at Nashville.

Resolved, That the Board of Missions are convinced of the great efficiency of the Advocate of Missions, edited and published by the Missionary Secretary; and that we urge the Conference Boards of Missions to take such action as will give the paper the largest possible circulation.

Resolved, That as the Discipline makes it one of the duties of the Conference Boards of Missions to disseminate missionary intelligence, we deem it advisable that missionary mass meetings be held under the auspices of such Boards at the most eligible points in each Conference.

Rev. H. O. White, writing from Ithwara, East Carroll parish, La., May 11, says:

I write to inform you of the break which occurred in the levee about one mile above Goodriche's landing. At this time the break is about three hundred feet wide, but it is widening all the time. There is at this place a new levee about one and one-fourth miles long, and we entertain fears that the greatest portion of it will wash away as it has not been built long enough to have become compact. The water against the levee is about seven feet, so that there is an immense quantity of water going through. Church prospering.

The crevasse referred to by Bro. White will be a very disastrous one to a very rich and extensive planting region. It has already overflowed the railroad from Vicksburg to Monroe, and trains have ceased running.

Death of Sister Spillman.

Rev. W. Spillman of the Mississippi Conference writing from Enterprise, Miss., says:

My dear wife, who has been my companion in prosperity and adversity for upwards of fifty years, died today at 11:45 A. M. She has been a member of the Methodist Church seventy years, and Enoch-like "walked with God." Pray for me.

We deeply sympathize with our venerable brother in his bereavement. After so long a union the separation is peculiarly painful, and the heart and home of the aged husband are rendered desolate indeed. The time of separation however can not be long, and the reunion in heaven will be a bright reality soon.

Such commemorations of a school, as we find in the following from Hiwassee College Reporter, are worth something. A lady in Texas, who has a son at Hiwassee College, Tennessee, writes to President Brunner:

This morning I received a letter from my dear boy, telling me of his conversion, and oh! I felt like crying aloud, and thanking the good Lord for his mercy in converting my child, and to-night I felt as if I must write a few words to you, and thank you for the interest and kindness you have manifested towards him. If I had a dozen boys, and was able, I should want to send them all to you.

Rev. John Pipes, writing from Mansfield, May 5, says:

We have received from Dr. D. W. Foster of Opelousas, La., $2 50 in postoffice order, as his contribution to pay our way as delegate to the National Temperance Convention, for which he has our thanks.

We hope Dr. Foster's timely response will provoke others to help Bro. Pipes on his way to the Temperance Convention which meets at Saratoga Springs, June 21.

Rev. C. F. Munholland, writing from Mount Lebanon, La., May 11, says: "Rev. E. J. Tooke, a local elder, died to-day, in peace with God, after a serious illness of six weeks. He was well known by many of our ministers. I suppose a suitable obituary will be forwarded soon."

The programme of commencement exercises of Centenary College, Jackson, La., will be found on our eighth page. It sets forth a splendid bill of fare. There will be a feast of reason, and a flow of soul, and such hospitality as Jackson is justly famous for. Dr. Tudor preaches the commencement Sermon, Sunday, May 29. Rev. E. H. Mouinger will address the Alumni on Tuesday, May 31, and President Andrews will give one of his excellent Baccalaureats on Wednesday.

Besides all this, there will be exhibitions of the Societies, orations by the graduating class, the presence in great numbers of the fairest women in the South, and Bishop Keener and any number of other distinguished people will be there. Let every body go that can. It will pay socially, religiously, and educationally. Centenary College is an institution of prime importance to Southern Methodism, and to the Southern people. It ought to have a warm place in the hearts of our people.

The preachers especially of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences should attend the commencement, that they may gain new inspiration and zeal to work for it. Between now and commencement day, the pastors who have delayed taking the collection for the education of students for the ministry, should present the cause to their congregation. The college has had an unusually hopeful year. Let us wake up a greater enthusiasm for it, and have a Centenary College boom.

—Memphis Christian Advocate is the title of a new Southern Methodist weekly, published and edited by Rev. D. D. Moore. The first number is dated May 12, and is a very creditable sheet of eight pages, about the size of the Western Methodist. The publisher thinks there is a demand for the paper, and that the best interests of the church will be advanced by its publication. If this conviction is well founded, we shall, of course, rejoice in the success of the enterprise. We had supposed, however, that the field was quite effectively occupied by the Western Methodist. The undue multiplication of church papers is calculated to keep them all in an impoverished and struggling condition, and to deprive the church of any really first class journals. The best policy, as we believe, is to concentrate on a few papers at important centers, and to give them a patronage that will make them strong, influential and prosperous.

Rev. J. Norwood, presiding elder of San Diego district, Mexican Border Mission, is tarrying for a few days in New Orleans, on his return from Nashville. Bro. Norwood informs us that about one hundred members have been received in his district since Conference, and that the entire membership of the mission now numbers about one thousand. His paper, issued semi-monthly, El Abogado Christiano Fronterizo, has over seven hundred subscribers, and is eagerly read by the Mexican Methodists. There is now railroad connection between Corpus Christi and Laredo, and in a few months there will be railroad connection between New Orleans and that point. We learn from Bro. Norwood that the Quakers have a prosperous mission at Matamoras, and that the Presbyterians are working vigorously and successfully at Matamoras, Brownsville and other points.

—We deeply regret the sudden death of Capt. George, L. Kouns, which occurred at his residence in Algiers, Monday morning, May 16. Capt. Kouns was a native of Ohio, but had been a citizen of New Orleans for the past thirty years. He was an upright man and [illegible] member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The day before his death he was at church, but returned home slightly indisposed. He probably died of heart disease. We tender to his bereaved family and kindred our condolence. May God shield and bless the sorrowing wife and the little children.

The political sensation just now is the resignation of the United States Senators from New York. This movement of Senators Conkling and Platt is connected with a political quarrel between Mr. Conkling and President Garfield, growing out of the nomination of Mr. Robertson as collector of the New York Custom-house. The Republican party is disturbed by feuds among its leaders. By falling out among themselves possibly some good may come to the country.

Programme of closing exercises of Whitworth Female College will be found on eighth page. There is to be a feast of good things. Bishop Keener preaches the commencement Sermon, Rev. R. S. Woodward addresses the Christian Association, Hon. E. John Ellis delivers the address before the Alumnæ Association, and Dr. R. M. Palmer delivers the annual address. Commencement Sunday is June 26.

Programme of commencement exercises of East Mississippi Female College, Meridian, will be found on our eighth page. Rev. H. A. Ephhart of the Alabama Conference, preaches the sermon, Sunday, June 26. Rev. W. R. Sims, of Brandon, and Rev. Dr. Mathews, of New Orleans, deliver the addresses.

—Rev. J. T. Sawyer, pastor of our church in Shreveport, La., is moving hopefully in raising subscriptions to build a new church. In a private note of May 9, he says: "The church is doing well. Twenty-eight have joined, and nine are under conviction and coming there before they come. I am thankful to God for his blessings, mercy and grace."

Rev. Dr. Milburn lectures at the Carondelet street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Thursday night, May 19. His subject is: "John Milton and His Times." The proceeds are to be devoted to some important church enterprise. There is a rare treat in store for those who attend the lecture.

—Rev. Dr. Cox announces the camp meeting at William's Camp Ground, Pensacola District, Alabama Conference, to commence June 30. This is a very important camp meeting, some say it excels Seashore. Let everybody go. See Dr. Cox's notice on eighth page.

—Rev. J. D. Cameron, stationed at Sardis, North Mississippi Conference, was in the city for a day or two last week. He informed us that his charge is prospering, and that they have recently had a sweeping and powerful revival, and many conversions.

—Rev. F. Nordenhamnen, of the German Mission Conference, and stationed in Houston, Texas, is on a visit to New Orleans. He reports our German work in Houston, and generally in Texas, as doing well.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—If not Providentially hindered, I will be at your District Conference at Fayette to serve you in the interests of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Your can bring your monies, renewals and subscriptions, etc., and I will take pleasure in waiting upon you.

Yours fraternally,

R. H. DOWNER.

Books and Periodicals.

The New Hymn and Tune Book. A collection of hymns and tunes for public, social and domestic worship. Nashville, Tenn.: Southern Methodist Publishing House. The abridged hymn book has been out for some time, and noticed in these columns. This work is the same with the music in connection with its hymns. The old and popular tunes are nearly all gone, or the most of the new ones we are not prepared to judge. As a matter of personal taste and preference, we do not like these abridgements. They are, however, called for, and, if they displace other cheap and inferior works, they will, in this respect, do a valuable service. The hymn and tune book makes, of course, a much larger volume than the new hymn book, but it is in the same style of binding.

—The Sunday Magazine, June, 1881: Besides the great variety of excellent articles, the illustrations are unusually good. Among them is a fine likeness of Georgia's chief magistrate, A. H. Colquitt. Of the unique extended articles are: A Peep at the Mormons; The Modern Sunday-School Movement; Country Church Architecture; Dr. Deems' Prayer Meetings; A German Sister Dora; Experiences in Australia and Ceylon; Adoniram Judson; Religions of Egypt; The Methodist Ecumenical; Fairs and Pound Parties; The Invalid's Portfolio and Thoughts for the Sick-Room; Temperance Talk.

—Woman's Missionary Advocate, for May, is an interesting number. We wish all the Southern Methodist women would subscribe for it. It is only fifty cents a year. Articles for publication should be sent to Mrs. Frank A. Butler, editor, Knoxville, Tenn. Business communications and money for subscriptions must be sent to Mrs. J. W. Manlier, Nashville, Tenn.

Plan of Episcopal Visitations for 1881.

FIRST DISTRICT—BISHOP FAIN.

Conference.	Date.	Place.
Memphis	November 9	Bolivar.
North Mississippi	November 23	Grenada.
Mississippi	December 14	Brookhaven

SECOND DISTRICT—BISHOP PIERCE.

Western	September 7	Howard City
Missouri	September 14	Moberly.
St. Louis	September 21	St. Johns
Southwest Missouri	September 28	Springfield.
Indian Mission	October 5	Caddo
Arkansas	October 19	Fort Smith
Alabama	November 2	Selma.
South Carolina	November 11	Fidons

THIRD DISTRICT—BISHOP KAVANAUGH.

Columbia	August 24	Walla Walla
Los Angeles	September 15	Carpenteria
Pacific	September 28	Petaluma.
Denver	October 13	Denver.
Montana	October 20	Helena.
Northwest Texas	November 10	Waxahatchie
North Texas	November 30	Greenville.
East Texas	December 7	Jacksonville

FOURTH DISTRICT—BISHOW WILDER.

Holston	October 26	Wytheville
South Carolina	November 23	Spartanburg
South Georgia	December 7	Columbus.

FIFTH DISTRICT—BISHOP WIGHTMAN.

Tennessee	October 19	Lebanon
North Alabama	November 2	Huntsville
North Georgia	November 16	Athens.
Virginia	November 30	Charlottesville
White River	December 7	Batesville
Little Rock	December 14	Pine Bluff
Louisiana	January 4	New Orleans
Florida	January 17	Monticello.
Baltimore	March 16	Fredericksburg.

SIXTH DISTRICT—BISHOP KEENER.

Western Virginia	August 31	Ashland
Kentucky	September 7	Glasgow
Tennessee	September 14	Gibson.
Illinois	September 21	Ashley
Lauderdale	October 12	Owensboro
West Texas	November 16	Bedford.
Texas	November 23	Houston
German	November 30	Houston.

Bishop McTyeire has charge of the Missions in China and Brazil.

Bishop Key has charge of the Missions in Mexico.

Publisher's Department.

We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and to act as a guarde in delivering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns. All parties having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE, will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endeavoring our advertisers to be worthy of their patronage.

The Rev. Dr. Bishop tells himself relates the following: "As we were coming out of church one Sunday, my wife remarked, 'You had better warn that section. I don't wish to repeat any where.' 'I shall do no such thing,' I answered, a little vexed. The struggle is up to my average. She persisted, and I said little more. But a year or two after I was, on a Sunday, about Sunday in May—one of those days that make Christ's good spirit I took that same sermon again. And as we came down the aisle after service she whispered, without the slightest emotion in that she had thought before, 'I would not have preached where I am.' It is better than common."

A laughable circumstance once took place upon a trial where the Rev. Mr. Wood was examined as a witness. Upon giving his name, Orlando Wood, the judge addressing the reverend person, said: "Rev. Mr. Wood, how do you spell your name?" The gentleman replied:

O double O,
D,
Double U,
D,
Double O, D.

Upon which the astonished lawyer laid down his pen, saying it was the most extraordinary name he had ever met in his life, and after two or three attempts declared he was unable to record it. The court was convulsed with laughter.

A little five-year-old girl in the city asked her father one day last week if it would do any good if she should pray to God to let it rain. She was told, perhaps it might, and nothing more was thought of it by her parents till after Sunday evening's shower. When she waked Monday morning she asked her father if he knew what made it rain. He said no, and she replied that it was because she had prayed "last night and the night before." Her mother remarked that she did not pray hard enough, for it rained only a little, when the child answered, "Well, I didn't want to wake the baby."

We sometimes wish that white folks would follow the example of a certain colored minister. He became desperate because some of the members of his church were recreant and couldn't go by a henroost without breaking all the Commandments which begin on that subject, and posted the names of about eighty persons in front of his pulpit, putting above the list the ominous words, "Dead Limbs." When he called the attention of the congregation to the fact he said, "At de meetin' on Friday night dose dead limbs will all be cut off, shore's you'r born."

Some few years ago, in the room of a house in London, an animated discussion took place on the question, "Was Moses married or not?" The hostess (a Romanist and an authoress) said, "Protestant clergymen always know their Bibles so well, I will go and ask Mr ——." The clergyman replied, "Yes, he was married, and so was Aaron." The lady gave a shriek of horror which startled everybody, exclaiming, "Aaron married! How can you say so? Why, he was a priest."

Mr. P. Averlgin, 135 Canal street, New Orleans, deals in the leading papers and regals the requests you to send for his catalogues and prices before purchasing. Low prices, reliable dealing, and full guarantee are to be had at this old house.

"Maybe there isn't any God for the United States," said a Canadian Mayor to Col Robert Ingersoll, "but there's one for Canada" and you can't have any such in this country which to defame him."

"This is a sad commentary on our boasted civilization," the tramp despondently observed when he found out that the loaf he had taken from the front of a shop was only a wooden one.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—American China dinner, breakfast and tea set, 130 pieces, for $15. Equal in looks and usefulness to French China.

Entrapped. There is no special style of engraving engagement rings. A spider's web, with suit in it, is a very pretty device.

A lazy fellow once declared in public company that he could not find bread for his family. "Not I," replied an industrious gardener; "I am obliged to work for it."

Business Notices.

For sore lips from fever, colds and chills, apply Brown's Kalliston, which at once allays the burning pains and irritation, and heals as by magic.

Faded or Gray Hair gradually recovers its youthful color and luster by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, an elegant dressing, admitted for its purity and rich perfume.

CANVASSERS make from $25 to $50 per week selling goods for K. G. RIDEOUT & CO., 10 Barclay St., New York. Send for catalogue and terms.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE

New Orleans National Bank

AT NEW ORLEANS,

In the State of Louisiana, at the close of business, Friday, May 6, 1881.

RESOURCES.

Loans and discounts		$960,855 24
Overdrafts		11,410 25
U. S. bonds to secure circulation		200,000 00
U. S. bonds on hand		36,900 00
Other stocks, bonds and mortgages		21,500 00
Due from approved reserve agents		97,794 54
Due from other national banks		105,526 53
Due from State banks and bankers		8,475 29
Furniture and fixtures		00 00
Current expenses and taxes paid		11,667 15
Checks and other cash items	$3,179 91
Exchanges for clearing-house	35,000 00
Bills of other banks	2,000 00
Fractional currency (including nickels)	11 85
Specie (including gold Treasury certificates)	127,961 00
Legal tender notes	10,000 00
		176,989 76
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer (5 per cent. of circulation)		9,000 00
Total		$1,691,119 10

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in		$200,000 00
Surplus Fund		100,000 00
Undivided profits		10,505 27
National bank notes outstanding		178,200 00
Dividends unpaid		1,112 00
Individual deposits, subject to check	$1,099,151 81
Demand certificates of deposit	11,125 00
Cashier's checks outstanding	11,025 00
		1,101,301 81
Due to other national banks		21,053 24
Due to State banks and bankers		12,036 18
Total		$1,691,119 10

STATE OF LOUISIANA, Parish of Orleans, ss.

I, WILLIAM PATERSON, Cashier of the above named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

WM. PATERSON, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this twelfth day of May, 1881.

GEO. W. CHRISTY, Notary Public.

Correct—Attest:

SIMMONS KATZ
JOHN H. HANNA
R. E. TISSOT,
Directors.

DISSOLUTION. The firm of LATHROP & WILKINS and of G. LATHROP & CO., are this day dissolved by mutual consent. G. LATHROP is authorized to collect all debts due to said firms.

G. LATHROP,
A. H. WILKINS.

REFERRING TO THE ABOVE, I BEG LEAVE to announce that I shall continue to carry on the book and stationery business at the old stand, 122 Camp street.

G. LATHROP.

IN BREAKING UP ON ACCOUNT OF THE EXPIRATION of the firm of LATHROP & WILKINS, G. LATHROP & CO. are authorized by A. H. WILKINS, as per agreement of said firms.

A. H. WILKINS.

WANTED. A FEMALE TEACHER, COMPETENT to teach Music, also the Course of Mathematics, French and Latin, in a family school. Apply to the undersigned.

J. W. ADKISSON
Meridian, Miss.

JOS. B. WOLFE & CO.,
Cotton Factors,
59 Carondelet Street, New Orleans,
And General Agents for
DANIEL PRATT IMPROVED
"Revolving Head Cotton Gin,"
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873,
AND
Eclipse Hulling Cotton Gin,
WITH REVOLVING HEAD.

PRICES REDUCED.

THE REVOLVING HEAD GIN has been in use for the past eight seasons, and several improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking and gives a larger yield of lint from the same quantity of seed cotton than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while economizing steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing a profit on this account, of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin to every purchaser gained. Testimonial sent by mail on application.

SELF FEEDERS and CONDENSERS with latest improvements also made by the Daniel Pratt Gin Company to work with these Gins. Send for descriptive circulars. JOS. B. WOLFE & CO.,
New Orleans, La.

CARD COLLECTORS. SEND 10 CENTS for a set of my new Autumn Leaf Chromos. Something new! Delivery costs but a set of twenty Chromo Advertising Cards. Also lots for gilt-edged twenty five and fifty cents. Sure to please.

W. VAN ZINK,
25 Aldrighoi Square, New York.

You are Welcome to it

Without money and without price.

THE FARM ENGINEER,

A semi-monthly journal, full of valuable, useful and interesting information for the farmer, planter and mechanic, which will be sent to any address until the first of July, next.

Free of Charge.

E. P. BRAVELY,
Union Street, New Orleans.

Send your address for it immediately, either by postal card or letter, saying that you saw this in the ADVOCATE.

OUR BROTHER IN BLACK;
HIS FREEDOM AND HIS FUTURE.
By
ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD, D. D.,
President of Emory College, Oxford, Ga.

Nashville: Southern Methodist Publishing House
New York: Phillips & Hunt.
1881.

Will be issued simultaneously by both Houses May 1.

12 mo.: Price 61.

Sent to any address, post paid, on receipt of price. Address the publishers, or the author.

Indian Turnip
COMPOUND
PECTORAL BALM.

For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle $1. Prepared and for sale by
B. LAPLACE, Druggist,
23 and 25 Elysian Fields street,
And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

Agricultural.

VERMIN ON CATTLE.—These troublesome pests attack young animals in the winter months, and their presence is generally believed. Many of the remedies are applied so injudiciously as to be worse than the complaint itself. Tobacco water and kerosene and lard are both excellent remedies, but it is unsafe to thoroughly wash an animal in cold weather, and one whose coat is smeared with the latter mixture will suffer greatly from the cold. The safest, surest and cheapest remedy, says The American Cultivator, is tobacco smoke, to be used in the following manner: The best instrument for applying the smoke is an ordinary hand bellows, such as may be found at any hardware store, and a tube of Russia iron some nine inches in length and two inches in diameter. This can be made by any tinsmith and should consist of two compartments, one about eight inches in length to receive the tobacco, the other about one inch in length, separated from the tobacco compartment by a perforated piece of strong Russia iron nicely fitted in the tube. The end of this small compartment farthest from the tobacco should be closely stopped by a thick piece of strong metal, either copper, brass or iron, fitted with solder, so as to prevent the escape of smoke. The stopper should have a hole in the centre about one-eighth of an inch in diameter, into which should be inserted a copper tube about four inches long. The end inserted in the stopper should be about one-eighth of an inch in diameter, while the other should be only about the size of an ordinary pipe stem. The other end of the tobacco compartment of the large tube should be provided with a strong metal stopper, fitted with a thread, like a bolt, while the tube should also be fitted with a thread like a nut, so as to receive the stopper. A hole should then be made in the stopper of sufficient size to admit the end of the bellows nozzle, to which it should also be fitted by a thread, and the instrument is ready for use. Get some cheap tobacco and cut enough to fill the tube, packing it in pretty closely, being careful that a small portion of that which is next the bellows is sufficiently dry to burn readily. Screw the stopper firmly to the nose of the bellows, take a live hard wood coal the size of a small hazel nut, and place on the tobacco screw in the stopper with the bellows attached, working the bellows gently at the same time, so as to keep the coal alive; keep the bellows working until smoke comes freely from the small copper tube before leaving the fireplace, or you may be obliged to return and apply a second coal. The animals to be smoked are cattle or horses having them tied in the barn. Beginning at the lower part of the neck of the animal, place the end of the small tube about two inches from the skin and blow gently with the bellows, at the same time raising the tube and bellows so as to drive the smoke up under the hair as much as possible. One good blast in a place is sufficient, and will cover a strip from one fourth to one half an inch in width. Each time that the bellows is filled the smoke tube should be placed at the lower part of the neck about one-fourth of an inch farther from the head than the previous blast was given. It will be necessary to smoke the neck, brisket, ears and roots of the horns much more thoroughly than the body, as those parts are generally much more thickly infested with lice than any other portions of the animal. After becoming accustomed to the use of the bellows a person can smoke four full grown animals with a single tubeful of tobacco. If the tube clogs so as to prevent a free discharge of smoke, insert a strong steel knitting needle through the small one, and press it up through the tobacco till it reaches the part that is burning, when it should be withdrawn and smoke will follow. To destroy ticks the assistance of an extra hand is required in holding the sheep, and beginning at the neck, open the wool a little, then insert the tube and blow the smoke down to the skin of the animal. It requires hard work and a strong stomach to smoke a flock of a hundred sheep, but if they are covered with ticks it will pay to go over them thoroughly. It will be much easier to fight the ticks at shearing time, but the farmer who neglected to do so last spring can not afford to wait. Colts should be examined very carefully by those who have good eyesight, as they are not unfrequently covered with very small, light colored lice, that cling so closely to the skin as not to be noticed at first sight; but an application of the smoke will bring them to the ends of the hair and make them sick of life. It will require two or three smokings, at intervals of a few days, in order to effectually exterminate lice, as nits are not affected by smoke and should be destroyed so soon after hatching as to prevent an increase.—N. Y. Herald.

THE FIELD PEA.—Gen. Wm. M. Browne, of Georgia, in his late address before the Agricultural Society of that State, remarked that next to sheep, the greatest renovator of the soil was field peas. "Planting, as we generally do, corn after cotton, and small grain of some kind usually on it, after corn, and repeating this rotation year after year, the inevitable result after a few years, is the exhaustion of the land. The pea is the remedy. It restores to the soil the nourishing elements of which it has been despoiled, and if the rotation before mentioned, of cotton and from cotton to peas, the supply of the necessary elements can be fully maintained. I have tried this year the process recommended by Dr. Ravenel: peas and the ash element and will report the result when ascertained. Peas as a renovator of soil from which a small grain crop has been taken, should be sown as soon as possible after the crop has been removed; but if sown on land planted in cotton the previous year, April or May is the best time. If sown then, they may be plowed under in June, and after allowing sufficient time to elapse, say ten days or two weeks, to allow the vines to decompose partially, another crop may be sown, which may be either plowed under in the fall or allowed to lie upon the ground. I do not know of any better forage crop for stock of all kinds than pea hay properly cured and properly prepared for stock food; and even where the hay is not, only leaving the roots to fertilize the soil great improvement results. Where peas are sown for the purpose of hay, it is desirable, I think, to mix with them some millet. These give a support to the trailing pea vines and improve the quality of hay."—Mobile Register.

APPLES EVERY YEAR.—I do not know if keeping the orchard in better condition, manuring it liberally, pruning off the fruit buds in the even year, keeping hogs in the orchard to eat the wormy fruit, etc., will have the desired effect, but I do know that keeping hogs in the orchard to eat all the early fallen fruit, will certainly have a most beneficial effect in the destruction of myriads of insects, causing the fruit to be much less knotty and imperfect. Many years ago a neighbor tried an experiment on his trees with complete success. His trees, as usual, bore more apples during [illegible] off, and in the odd year not enough—so with a long pole he went to work and gave his trees a rough beating on the south side when the apples were about the size of hazel or hickory nuts, knocking off all the apples on that side he could see, and breaking the little twigs as well—the result was that his trees for many years bore full crops annually on alternate sides. As I frequently saw the trees before and afterward, I am satisfied that it was a success in his case. Probably this operation would succeed best if performed in the even year, or when the trees have too heavy a crop. Breaking off so many of the little twigs will no doubt have a tendency to cause the trees to produce fruit buds for the following season.—J. B. Garber, in Fruit Recorder.

BONE DUST.—Mr. Harris, in his talks on manure, says bone dust, like barnyard manure, does not immediately yield up its nitrogen and phosphoric acid to plants. The bone phosphate of lime is insoluble in water containing carbolic acid. The gelatine of the bones would soon decompose in a moist, porous, warm soil, provided it was not protected by the oil and the hard matter of the bones. Steaming removes the oil; and reducing the bones to as fine a condition as possible is another means of increasing their availability. Another good method is to mix the bone dust with barnyard manure, and let both ferment together, and he thinks this is the simplest and most economical method of rendering bones available. The bone dust causes the heap of manure to ferment more rapidly, and the fermentation of the manure softens the bones. Both the manure and the bones are improved and rendered richer and more available by the process. One ton of good bone dust contains about as much as eight and a half tons of fresh stable manure, and as much phosphoric acid as one hundred and ten tons of fresh stable manure. But one ton of manure contains more potash than five tons of bone dust.

CLOVER AND RYE FOR HOGS.—In my experience, says a writer, I have found nothing so profitable for hog pasture as clover and rye, and I think rye preferable, and the reason they are better than timothy, blue-grass, and all similar grasses is, they remain more tender for a longer period than other grasses, which so soon become wiry and hard, partaking of the nature of hay, and I have never known hogs to thrive on it, although other stock does. To use rye profitably for pasture, fall rye should be sown for spring pasture, and spring rye for later pasture, and by not pasturing too long and too close there will be considerable head out, which, when ripe will, with the weeds that naturally grow among grain, make good pasture until time to commence feeding corn, at least such is my experience. As to using any of the grasses named for hog pasture, I would prefer a good weed pasture, and I will here say that I am of opinion if some of the weeds so eagerly eaten by hogs were domesticated and properly cultivated, they would prove more satisfactory for hog pasture than anything used of grass kind.

APPLICATION OF LIQUID MANURE TO ROSES.—Mr. George S. Wales tells of an experiment he made last season which proved highly satisfactory. About June 1st he planted out twelve small sized plants of different varieties, about a foot apart each way, in rich, heavy soil. After each heavy rain he took from the barnyard the leachings of the manure pile; with a pointed stick he punched four or five holes in the ground a few inches from each plant, and poured in the water; the next day, or soon as the ground was dry enough, he stirred the surface with a hoe, and kept it loose by frequent hoeings until again watered during the season. He applied the liquid manure probably eight or ten times during the season. The result was wonderful. They began in five or six weeks to bloom, and until October 1, when they were taken up, there was hardly a day but that beautiful buds might be picked.

POTATOES.—A Kansas farmer says he raised some of the finest pearlidow potatoes he ever saw in the following manner: In the latter part of May I drove my two horses and plow to the patch of ground I wished to plant, and commenced plowing around it. My boy, followed, dropping potatoes, one in a place, every fifteen inches and in every other furrow. I turned a light furrow on them, and when done, covered the whole patch with straw to the depth of three inches. They needed no cultivation, and in August, when we were having our dry spell, the potato vines in fields planted in the ordinary way were drying up and dying, those potato tops of mine were growing vigorously, completely covering the ground. I shall plant again in this way; but, in the event of a wet season, I think the potatoes will be watery. It will be a good plan to plant both ways.

SAVE THE SOAP SUDS.—The Boston Cultivator says however deplorable washing day may be to the household, and the careful house mistress or tidy maid has it in her power to greatly modify its discomforts, to the garden it is a very bountiful day. Our hungry and thirsty grapevines and flowers are glad of every drop of wash water, and will repay every bit of fatigue it may cost us to give them this fertilizer. If the sun is shining hot when we go out to dispose our favor, it is best for us so dig a slight trench not far from the root of the plant, and pour the water into it, and cover again with the top soil. This makes the water go further, and at the same time does not tempt the rootlets to the surface of the ground.

Horses cough more at this season on account of dusty hay than from any other cause. The remedy is very simple. Cut the fodder and wet it and mix the meal with it. The cost of the cutting machine and the labor is well repaid by the saving in fodder and grain. If with the cough the horse has a staring coat and a tight skin, he is suffering from indigestion or from cold, or both, and should have a pint of linseed oil, and feed cut and wetted with warm water for a few days.

VERMONT MERINOS.—The noted flock of Spanish Merino sheep owned by the late Edwin Hammond, of Middlebury, Vt., has been kept intact, and is now owned by his son, George Hammond, at Middlebury. He is said to have recently refused $5000 for a two year old buck, which is considered by experienced breeders to rival the famous buck Gold Drop, owned by Edwin Hammond, who refused offers of $10,000 for him.

Household.

In a recent lecture before a class of nurses at the New York Training School, [illegible] gave some instructions in regard to the proper preparation of food for the sick:

BEEF TEA.—"If you wish to extract all the nutriment from beef," she said, "select only the lean, and chop it up very fine. In a pint of cold water put one pound of your chopped beef, and let it soak for one hour. Then put it over the fire in the same water, and let it come slowly to a boil. It is then ready for use, and may be strained off. By this process not a particle of the nutriment of the beef is lost. If you want your beef tea perfectly colorless, strain it through a fine cloth or a napkin, folded three or four times. After you have strained it, season it with salt, and perhaps a little pepper, if your patient can stand it." In the matter of seasoning, the physician should always be consulted, and the condition of the patient should be taken into consideration. Beef tea with crackers is made by simply breaking a couple of milk crackers in the tea after it has been prepared as above. Rice, barley, sago or any of the cereals can be used the same as crackers, if the patient is in a condition to receive them. If a nutrient tonic is required, beef tea with coca infusion is one of the best known to the medical profession. Coca leaves, which come from South America, can be purchased at any large drug store. The coca is used to sustain strength and to stimulate the system when it is exhausted. To make the tonic, pour a half-pint of boiling water on an ounce of dried coca leaves and let it steep for an hour, keeping the water hot, but not boiling. Strain the coca infusion, and mix it in equal parts with the beef tea, and the tonic is ready for the patient. It has an unpleasant taste, but it is very effective. Of cooling nutrients, which are, in great demand in cases of fever, crackers and orange juice and barley water are among the best known. The first is composed simply of broken crackers, milk crackers being the best, and strained orange juice, which is poured over them. This is the most refreshing and cooling nutrient which can be given to a fever patient. To make barley water, a quarter of a pound of barley is placed in a quart of water. It may be steeped in cold water over night, or boiled in water which must be allowed to come to a boil and no more. In either case, the water is to be thrown away. Another quart of water is added, and this is allowed to boil down to a pint. The mixture is then strained and cooled, after which it is ready for use. A little milk may be added, if desirable.

POISON FOR MICE.—If your correspondent will mix the strychnine with butter, spread it on thin slices of bread, and cut in small pieces, to be placed where the mice can get it, he will find it effectual in destroying them. The fat prevents salivation, and the taste is not discovered, although intensely bitter. I have never had any trouble in getting rid of mice when the poison is thus used. A minute quantity will do the business. For rats, arsenic mixed with corn meal and sugar will often tempt them, but the surest remedy is phosphorous paste, which is usually supplied by the druggist, but requires caution that the hogs or fowls do not get it, for it will kill either one very quickly, as I have found to my sorrow. Dogs or cats will not eat it, and arsenic poisons neither cats, dogs nor hogs, as they immediately vomit it.—A. P. S.

ROASTED BEEF-TONGUE.—Take a tongue—a good-sized one—and trim it neat; don't leave too much of the root; sprinkle salt on it, a very little black pepper, and rub over it a teaspoonful of ginger. Don't forget either some four cloves, which push right into the tongue. If you have a roasted-jack, put the tongue before the fire, and mind you baste it with butter and save the gravy. If you haven't got a roasting-jack, bake it; if you are driven to bake it, cover the tongue with thin layers of breakfast bacon. But the sauce is the thing. Take your gravy, ten minutes before serving, and squeeze half a lemon into it; season it to taste, with salt and pepper; let it all simmer down to a third, and serve the sauce separate.

ROAST RABBIT.—Skin and clean out the interior of the rabbit and fill it with a stuffing made of bread crumbs, butter, half a pint of shellbark kernels, chopped fine; season with pepper, salt, summer savory and a little sweet marjoram, rubbed fine; put it in a good oven, and while roasting baste it with plenty of butter and dredge it occasionally with flour. Thirty-five minutes roasting will be sufficient. Boil the liver with a dozen sprigs of parsley; when quite tender, chop both up fine, and add them to melted butter as a sauce; have also another sauceboat with plain gravy, made of the drippings from the rabbits, thickened with a little flour and water.

OAT MEAL PUDDING.—Soak in water for twelve hours half a pint of fine oatmeal; pour a pint of boiling milk over it, add a little salt, and put it in a buttered basin, just large enough to hold it, with a well-floured cloth tied tightly over it, boil for one and a half hours; turn it out and serve with cream or boiled milk thickened with flour.

NAPKINS.—A new way of ornamenting table napkins, is by drawing designs upon them in indelible ink. A chain of reeds with a stork, a mingling of flowers and vines, or a tiny comic figure may be placed in one corner with very good effect. Embroidery is more artistic, but requires more time, and does not display any more inventiveness.

APPLE FRITTERS.—Make a batter, not very stiff with one quart of milk, three eggs, and flour to bring it to a right consistency. Pare and core a dozen apples, and cut them to about the size of small peas, and mix them well in the batter. Fry them in lard, as you would doughnuts. Sprinkle powdered sugar over them.

ROAST GOOSE.—A goose should be roasted in the same manner as a turkey. It is better to make the stuffing of mashed potatoes seasoned with salt, pepper and onions to the taste. Apple sauce is good to serve with it. Allow fifteen minutes to a pound for a gosling, and twenty or more for an older one. Goose should be cooked rare.

Plaster of Paris, mixed to a thin paste with gum arabic water, is excellent for mending broken glass, china or parian ware, but must be used immediately as it soon hardens. It is best to mix only about enough at a time to impel one piece.

The best and purest sugars are the hard and white or the coarse grain ated. The fine powdered sugars are never safe or economical, as they are so generally adulterated.

Scientific.

A NEW DISINFECTANT.—When warm air is forced through a hot mixture of [illegible] and water, a disinfecting substance known in commerce as sanitas is produced. It is an aqueous solution, characterized by the presence of peroxide of hydrogen and certain camphoraceous substances. With it is found another substance, called sanitasoil, also containing peroxide of hydrogen, which possesses a high power of oxidation. According to the account given of it by Mr. C. T. Kingzett, the oil promises to become very valuable for sanitary purposes. As it has been found an efficient agent for the decomposition of so stable a substance as iodide of potassium, it can hardly be doubted that it will also affect the oxidation of any animal or vegetable substances, particularly those which are in course of putrefactive decomposition. It has also the property of being capable, after having once performed its measure of oxidation, of forming a new amount of active peroxide of hydrogen, which may be made available for further work. Several experiments, made by Mr. Kingzett, prove that this oil is a powerful antiseptic. Beef put in water containing it was kept sweet during periods of twenty-five and forty days; flour paste from thirty to fifty days; the white of eggs for fifty days; wine for one hundred days. The oil is not designed to supersede the sanitas, for it is too powerful in its action to the purpose to which the aqueous solution is applied, and is not adapted to meet the same ends, but be a valuable supplement to it. It may be added to glycerine, oils or ointments, when they are applied to the body in cases of infectious disease. It may be evaporated for the fumigation of rooms which have been occupied by persons suffering from communicable diseases. Plane surfaces, as floorings and walls, may be disinfected by wiping them with a cloth or brush which has been dipped in the oil; and only a small quantity of oil is necessary for this purpose, for it spreads freely. It is slowly volatile, and may be used as an aerial disinfectant. The emulsion in water may be applied in a great many places; and sprinkled over sawdust it may be employed as an effective deodorant.

RESEARCHES WITH THE PHOTOPHONE. After working for some time with the thermopile and galvanometer, it occurred to me several weeks ago, that the results thus obtained might be checked by a more direct and simple form of experiment. Placing the gases and vapors in diathermanous transmission of radiant heat, in bulbs, and exposing the bulbs to the action of radiant heat, the heat absorbed by different gases and vapors ought, I considered, to be rendered evident by ordinary expansion. I devised an apparatus with a view of testing this idea. But, at this point, and before any proposed gas thermometer was constructed, I became acquainted with the ingenious and original experiments of Mr. Graham Bell, wherein musical sounds are obtained through the action of an intermittent beam of light upon solid bodies.

From the first, I entertained the opinion that these singular sounds were caused by rapid changes of temperature, producing corresponding changes of shape and volume in the bodies impinged upon by the beam. But if this be the case, and if gases and vapors readily absorb radient heat, they ought to produce sounds more intense than those obtainable from solids. I pictured every stroke of the beam responded to by a sudden expansion of the absorbed gas, and concluded, that when the pulses thus excited followed each other with sufficient rapidity, a musical note must be the result. It seemed plain, moreover, that by this new method many of my previous results might be brought to an independent test. Highly diathermanous bodies, I reasoned, would produce faint sounds, while highly athermanous (lacking the property of radient transmission) bodies would produce loud sounds; the strength of the sound being, in a sense, a measure of absorption. The first experiment made, with a view of testing this idea, was executed in the presence of Mr. Graham Bell; and the result was in exact accordance with what I had foreseen. Professor Tyndall, in Popular Science Monthly.

—In an article on "Eyes and School Books," Professor Hermann Cohn, an eminent German oculist, has shown that nearsightedness is alarmingly on the increase among children in Germany and he attributes the fact in large part to the bad light of school rooms and their excessive reading of books in small type. He believes that the reading of print in which the height of the letter is less than 1.17th of an inch will eventually produce injury to the eyes. As it is generally supposed that the German type is especially trying to the eyes, he has cited a noted doctor in defense of the German letter, who says that its freedom, angular lines and the heaviness of lines at their extremities and at points of curvature must render the reading easier than our still angular Roman letter. It is nevertheless true that many German publishers are adopting the Roman letter.

—The Boston Journal of Chemistry states that vast beds of canned coal have been discovered in Kentucky, of a quality quite equal to that imported from England, from which country we have hitherto obtained all this kind of coal, and, of course, at great expense. It is believed that this Kentucky cannel coal can be had at half the cost of the English, and will be a great boon for gas making, and for parlor grates.

—Mr. John Aitken, of England, shows by experiment that dust in the air is the nucleus of fogs. By "dust" he means, of course, any solid substance existing in particles. Salt particles, he says, are most conducive of fog formations, and still more so are sulphur fumes. Possibly this theory will account for the prevalence of rain-fall after a battle, which is generally attributed to concussion of the atmosphere.

—Lead shot has been manufactured in this country in low towers, provided with an ascending stream of air drawn up by a fan worked by water power, by which means the same cooling effect is produced as by letting the melted lead fall from a great altitude.

—Make your own barometer: A sheet of paper dipped in chloride of cobalt, when the weather is to be dry and pleasant, will become blue. When the wet weather approaches it will become pink. The barometer flowers of France are thus manufactured.

—In the East Indies ice are uniformed in fresh water, which is artificially converted into ice, and then packed in ice blocks, three feet square and nine inches thick, they may be carried along distance into the interior without injury.

EDUCATIONAL.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Owned, controlled and managed by the Louisiana Annual Conference.

Course of study equal to any college in the South. Its roll of pupils has nearly doubled in three months, and still they come! Noted for healthfulness of locality. All at living rates.

Total expense for Spring term, commencing February 14, 1881, only $75 in literary and classical course. Music $30. No extras. Let Louisianians build up their own schools.

A specimen copy of College News free on application. Address REV. J. LANE BOOZES, President.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. V. Kneringer, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the winter.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $30 additional.

Spring session begins February 1, 1881. A discount of twenty per cent. to Methodist preachers, and Publishing House bonds taken from them at par.

Send for catalogue to REV. E. E. ROSS, President.

HAMBERG ARK. HIGH SCHOOL,

Thirty Miles North of Bastrop, La.

This Institution, for both sexes, now in its fourth year, has 65 pupils and is rapidly increasing. Its facilities for educating are peculiar, and its charges are moderate. All modern improvements are introduced. Excellent health and experience. The principal boards his teachers and pupils, regarding the latter as his own children.

One hundred and twenty-five dollars will cover all school expenses, except Music.

City references are referred to Judge R. B. Todd, J. M. Bonner and J. M. Lewis, Esqs.; to Rev. Dr. W. Carter and Bishop Keener.

Jan. 6, 1881. D. C. B. CONNERLY, Principal.

READVILLA SEMINARY,

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

A home school for girls. Thorough training in all departments. Full corps of efficient teachers. Expenses moderate. Numbers limited.

For particulars address MRS. MARY W. REED, Principal.

Memphis Conference Female Institute.

JACKSON, TENNESSEE.

REV. A. W. JONES, A. M., D. D., President.

This well known College of the South and West begins its Fall session the First Monday in September. Opening Concert and Address Tuesday, September 7, 1880. For thirty-six years there has been an average of more than twelve graduates annually.

The Faculty is full and efficient. The determination is to stand among the foremost in the progress of Science, Language and Art.

For further information apply to the President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin September 29, 1880.

This is a family boarding school for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. B. N. MAGRUDER, Baton Rouge, La.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Opens September 6, 1880. The last session was the most prosperous one since the war. The whole cost of board and tuition need not exceed $144 in the Preparatory Department, nor $164 in College classes for the scholastic year. Send for a Catalogue.

C. O. ANDREWS, President.

East Mississippi Female College,

MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.

REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., President.

A chartered and prosperous Southern school for girls and young ladies. Few schools have grown more steadily and rapidly in public confidence and patronage. Increased in numbers during the past seven years as the following figures show: 54, 82, 86, 94, 96, 97, 143. Commodious par's rage the last year from Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee and Alabama. Its past history, increasing facilities, successful and methods of close and thorough instruction assure its friends of a long and prosperous future for the institution. Send for catalogue.

HIWASSEE COLEGE,

EAST TENNESSEE.

Founded 1849, and located where

Pure waters flow,
Sleek cattle low,
Cool breezes blow,
Ripe apples grow.

Excellent and tried teachers. Terms very favorable. The Female Department is at SWEETWATER, on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad. The Male Department, at Hiwassee College Reporter," at fifty cents a year. Address

J. H. BRENNER, President.

JEFFERSON COLLEGE.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN.

Six miles from Natchez, Miss. Session begins September 13. Full corps of instructors. Course of study thorough and extensive. Nearly fifty boarders from abroad. Pupils from a distance board with the principal. Entire expense for ten months, $145. For catalogue address the principal,

J. S. RAYMOND, Washington, Adams county, Miss.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.

Will begin its forty-first session October 4, 1880. Great attention paid to the regular course. Two boys in the Music and Art departments selected with reference to special illness. Charges moderate.

For further information address

H. M. MOSS, A. M., President.

HOMER MALE COLLEGE

THE TWENTY FIRST SESSION

will begin the

FIRST OF SEPTEMBER 1880.

Address R. A. SMITH, President.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FOR SALE.

A desirable residence in Ocean Springs, Miss. For particulars apply to or address the subscriber at that point. A. C. RAMSEY.

Crescent Insurance Co.,

67 & 69 Camp Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

ORGANIZED 1869. REORGANIZED 1880.

Cash Capital $400,000.

SOLICITS

FIRE, RIVER AND MARINE RISKS.

W. R. LYMAN.....President.
S. H. NEWMAN.....Vice President.
CHAS. E. RICE.....Secretary.

My New Illustrated Pamphlet describing over 100 Gold and Silver Waltham Watches sent for a 3c stamp. It tells how I send watches to all parts of U.S. to be examined before paying a cent. Unequaled reliance. A. J. White, Jeweler, Newark, N. J.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHERS,

AND

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

In the South-west is now in stock and ready to fill all orders, large or small at Publishers' prices at

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at the notice, and prices guaranteed as low as they can be had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application.

Also a general line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER,

SLATED CLOTH,

LIQUID SLATING,

BLACKBOARDS,

BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,

CHALK CRAYONS,

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,

&

NUMERICAL FRAMES,

SCHOOL SATCHELS,

BOOK STRAPS,

WRITING PAPER,

DRAWING PAPER,

BLOTTING PAPER,

WRITING BOOKS,

COMPOSITION BOOKS,

SLATES AND PENCILS,

INK, INK STANDS, PENS,

PENHOLDERS, CALL BELLS,

Kindergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

Send for anything you want or address for prices.

LATHROP & WILKINS,

New Orleans

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors, members and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

South-western Agency for

Readers' and Writers' Economy Co.

LATHROP & WILKINS,

New Orleans

"FOR ORGANISTS!"

ORGAN GEMS. ($2.50.) By F. L. HAVEN-PORT.

ORGAN SELECTIONS. ($1.50.) By PETERS.

BATISTE'S ORGAN VOLUNTARIES. $2.50.

BATISTE'S LAST COMPOSITIONS. $2.50

ORGANIST'S RELIANCE. 4 in No., each 25c. Complete $1. By EUGENE THAYER.

ZUNDEL'S ORIGINAL ORGAN COMPOSITIONS. $1.25.

In these six well-made books will be found a very large number of voluntaries, some classical, some new and light, but all good. Organists will be glad to use the longer ones intact, and to adopt the shorter compositions as themes from which to vary.

Billee Taylor, price reduced to 50 cents.
Olivette, price reduced to 50 cents.

Johnson's New Method for Harmony. ($1.) By A. N. JOHNSON. "The best book in the world" (for its object,) was the commendation bestowed by an enthusiastic pupil on a former book by the same author. However that may be, this is the newest, readiest, and can hardly be excelled for plainness of explanation, ease and thoroughness. It does not attempt Counterpoint, or any of the higher problems of composition; but confines itself to those that every organist, every good player, and every composer of "the peoples music," ought to know.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston

C. H. DITSON & CO.,

843 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Christian Advocate.

The Comedy of the Duel.

They tell a good story at Toulouse of an advocate, Cazeneuve by name, who, having had a dispute with a landed proprietor residing in the neighborhood of that city, a duel between them was declared, less by themselves than by their friends, to be indispensable. Never having handled a sword or even a foil in his life, and persuading himself that his opponent must necessarily be a proficient in the use of such weapons, the lawyer resolved to consult the leading fencing-master in the town, and having acknowledged his utter inexperience in matters of the kind, asked him what he had better do. "Are you tolerably strong in the arm?" inquired the Professor. "Pretty well." "Good. Then all you will have to do is to hold your sword steadily, the point exactly on a level with your adversary's eye, remain immovable in that position, and take care not to advance a step, but wait until he rushes forward and finds himself spitted like a woodcock." "You think he will do that?" "Very probably he may. In any case, you don't risk much by keeping him at arm's length." "But if he comes nearer?" "Retreat in proportion." "I understand; and if, on the contrary he should retreat?" "Remain where you are." Thanking the Professor for his counsel, the advocate withdrew in somewhat better spirits, but determined, in case of accident, to put his affairs in order, and have his will signed and sealed. An hour later his opponent was ushered into the presence of the maitre d'armes, and in answer to the latter's inquiry as to the motive of his visit, replied that he was on the point of fighting a duel with one of the best swordsmen in the department, as he had reason to believe, the advocate Cazeneuve, and having no experience in such matters, came to him for advice. The maitre d'armes, who could hardly refrain from laughing when he heard the name of Cazeneuve, seeing the kind of individual he had to deal with, gave him precisely the same instructions he had previously imparted to his adversary, and, secretly resolving to be an unobserved witness of the combat, dismissed him. On the following day, both parties, accompanied not only by their seconds, but by their respective surgeons, arrived at the place of rendezvous, and, obeying to the letter the directions they had received, placed themselves at the stipulated distance from each other, assuming the attitude agreed upon, and stood perfectly motionless. This state of things lasted for several minutes, each supposing that the other would advance, and not daring for an instant to change his position, while the bystanders looked on in mute amazement. At length the weight of the weapons began to tell; the constant tension of the arms had become so painful as to be scarcely endurable, but they bore it like martyrs, until one of the seconds, chafing at the delay, declared that if they were not satisfied their honor was, and, with the concurrence of his colleagues, insisted on their shaking hands. "Mais," said Maître Cazeneuve, when this ceremony had been performed, "I had no idea that it did was such hard work. I would a thousand times rather plead for a dozen hours than fight as we have been doing for as many minutes." All the Year Round.

New Testament Prophecies.

In the "Life and Letters" of Horace Bushnell the following passage occurs in a letter to a parishioner:

"The question you raise, whether the world is to be generally subdued to Christ, is a sober question, worthy of a profound attention, and I wish it were discussed much more than it is.

You think there are no expressions in the New Testament that anticipate a general spread of the gospel. Let us see. Christ teaches his disciples to pray, 'Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven,' which to say the least, discloses a hope that his kingdom is to come in a very general, if not universal, spread. Else why teach us to pray thus? Why encourage us to pray for a thing not to be hoped for? Then, again, he commands his followers to 'preach the gospel to every creature,' which looks as though he expected a general triumph of his cause in the earth. He compared the gospel to a mustard seed, and also to 'leaven that should work till the whole was leavened.' He declared that his angels with his ministers and missionaries 'should go forth with a great sound of a trumpet, and gather his elect from the uttermost parts of the earth.' All of which is the high-wrought phraseology of prophecy, to denote the spread of his gospel. He declared that his coming should not be here or there, not visible, but, like the lightning, glancing from one end of the world to the other. You stand from the silence of Paul that he looked to no consummation of a general triumph of the gospel. But Paul was not silent. He says that the Jews are finally to be brought back from their apostasy after the fullness of the Gentiles is come. So the whole of Romans xi. He declares that 'Christ must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet,' that God has 'purposed in the fullness of time to gather together in one all things in Christ.' He quotes Isaiah, and says, 'All shall know me, from the least to the greatest.' The very passage to which you refer, in 2 Thess. ii. 8, proves against you: 'Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming.' The true idea is that the man of sin is to be destroyed, or have his empire demolished, by the power of Christian truth, and by the glorious brightness and diligence of the Sun of righteousness.

On the whole, I think you have cause to feel that the New Testament is silent in reference to the spread and universal victory of the gospel.—Advocate of Missions.

The Churches Against It.

A prominent ministerial brother of the Baptist Church said to us not long since, in a conversation on the growing evil of intemperance, "I think many church-members indulge secretly in the use of ardent spirits, and this is a great obstacle to the temperance cause." How sad is this. The church-members should stand shoulder to shoulder in this battle. What can we do when whisky is hid away in the houses of professing Christians and swallowed in secret. Whoever does this in any church is fighting against the cause to which his Church is, or ought to be, pledged.

We give the testimony of some of the leading churches against the making, selling, and drinking of intoxicants.

We begin with the terrible indictment of John Wesley. In his sermon "On the Use of Money," he says:

"Neither may we gain by hurting our neighbor in his body. Therefore we may not sell anything which tends to impair his health. Such is eminently, all that liquid fire, called drams, or spirituous liquors. It is true they may have a place in medicine; may be of some use in bodily disorders, although there would rarely be occasion for them were it not for the unskilfulness of the practitioner. Therefore, such as prepare and sell them only for this end, may keep their conscience clear. But who are they who prepare them only for this end? Do you know ten distillers in England? Then excuse these. But all who sell them in the common way to any that will buy are poisoners-general. They murder his majesty's subjects by wholesale; neither doth their eye pity nor spare. They drive them to hell like sheep. And what is their gain? Is it not the blood of these men? Who, then, would envy them their large estates and sumptuous palaces? A curse is in the midst of them. A curse cleaves to the stones, the timber, the furniture of them. The curse of God is in their gardens, their walks, their groves; a fire that burns to the nethermost hell. Blood, blood, is there. The inundation, the wall, the roof, are stained with blood. And canst thou hope, O man of blood, though thou art clothed in scarlet and fine linen, and farest sumptuously every day, canst thou hope to deliver down the fields of blood to the third generation? Not so. There is a God in heaven; therefore thy name shall be blotted out. Like as those whom thou destroyest, body and soul, thy memory shall perish with thee."—Southern Christian.

THE DEATH OF CALHOUN. An unpublished letter from Mr. R. M. T. Hunter, a Virginia senator, gives some interesting facts concerning Mr. Calhoun's last moments, and the views at that time of the Southern magnates. "Mr. Calhoun's death," wrote Mr. Hunter, "was eminently simple, calm, and unaffected—no display or pretension, nothing for stage effect. He knew that his mortal sickness was upon him, but he did not expect to die so soon. The evening before his death he had his mail read to him, commented upon some of the letters, and dictated his reply to them. He then, with his wife, sat down to the supper table, as was his wont every night, in the night, when he found he was dying, he directed his son to pack up his papers and watch, and to give his pencil to his son-in-law. When speech left him he still showed consciousness by signs and, beckoning to his son, squeezed his hand and expired, without pain and without fear. He had always said of life previously, and to others through his sickness, that he had no apprehensions of death; that it was an event therefore to which he felt that he had no right to entertain a wish. The wise man of few quotations, but one which he often used to quote was that there was the same Providence on the field at the mid hour. He was not conscious, as to his body, nor did he believe that his wishes ought to weigh or even exist as to its destiny; such I suppose to have been his meaning. His friends greater faith in his distractions, views and all, than any other man I ever saw, and this was his distinction as I think about death." Mr. Calhoun's death elicited glowing eulogies in both houses of Congress, but the most impressive was that of Henry Clay. Enfeebled, standing on the brink of his own grave, he went on to say, "I was his senior, Mr. President, in years, in nothing else. According to the course of nature, I ought to have preceded him. It has been decreed otherwise, but I know that I shall linger here only a short time, and I shall soon follow him."—From Atlantic Monthly.

A PLEASANT INCIDENT. There is a lady living in a little brown cottage in the environs of Boston, whose name is well known to literary people. She depends wholly upon her own exertion, for the support of herself and children, and does all her own house-work. Her cottage is the focus of the best society of the locality. A gentleman calling there recently was received at the door by a daughter of the lady, who told him her mother was too busy to be called, but that he could see her in the kitchen if he pleased; and he followed her to that room. The lady greeted him without the least embarrassment, though she had on a big apron, and her sleeves were pinned back to her shoulders. She was putting a pumpkin into strips for pies, and there sat even table, gentleman gravely paring the strips to the same form of truth for conversation. I was told that it was the best lunch he ever ate. Which a pumpkin-paring was a success, another distinguished guest called, and he also insisted upon being impressed into the service. It was a happy day, with a rollicking time generally, before the pots and pans, so they all stand as before, and no one perceives the least trace of the occasion. Speaking of this incident afterward the lady said: "My friends are kind enough to appreciate me, though the world knows me not, and see me through the kaleidoscope of their own warm hearts, but I suppose I have left my mark on some of them, and this was my distinction."

MISCELLANEOUS.

H. DUDLEY COLEMAN & BRO.
No. 12 Union St. New Orleans La.
DEALERS IN
SEND FOR CIRCULARS
MACHINERY
COMPARE OUR PRICES
MACHINERY
MILL STONES, IRONS & PORTABLE STEAM ENGINES.
MAKE FLOUR, CORN SAW, MILLS
AND COTTON PRESSES

"CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S EXCHANGE"
FOR WOMAN'S WORK.

This Association has opened a salesroom at Nos. 11 and 13 Bourbon street, where all kinds of plain and fine sewing, ornamental and fancy needle-work will be received and sold.

Orders will also be taken for preserves, jellies, pickles, cake, ice cream, etc., samples having first been tested.

All work must be entered through a member, the price fixed by the owner securely fastened to the article, and the commission charged will be twenty cents.

The Annual Subscription of Members is Five Dollars, which entitles each member to the work of three persons for one year.

Widows of all denominations in this city or State, as well as Foreign States, are urgently requested to become members of this Exchange.

Persons desirous of learning anything new can do so by applying in person or by letter, at 101 Bourbon. Contributions of any kind will also be gladly received, of information given, at the same place.

We sincerely hope the public generally will lend us its hearty co-operation, and aid in this worthy charity, with the assurance that the Managers will spare no effort in its success.

The benefits of this association are open to all women without regard to religious belief.

MANAGERS.

Mrs. G. W. Pritchard,	Mrs. E. John Ellis,
Mrs. M. W. Buckner,	Mrs. Gilbert Gayon,
Mrs. T. A. Given,	Mrs. M. E. Cooley,
Mrs. L. G. Richardson,	Mrs. K. Fabian,
Mrs. R. M. Walmsley,	Mrs. T. W. Campbell,
Mrs. S. Delgado,	Mrs. Percy Sherrill,
Mrs. Alfred Goldking,	Mrs. J. R. Wallace,
Mrs. J. Hall Jones,	Mrs. E. J. Wharton,
Mrs. Percy Roberts,	Mrs. C. E. Kells,
Mrs. J. H. Allen,	Mrs. E. E. Simpson,
Mrs. T. S. Stone,	Mrs. S. H. Davis,
Mrs. J. R. Luten,	Mrs. G. R. Westfeldt,
Mrs. E. P. Wayne,	Mrs. M. C. Jennings
Miss M. A. Wyckoff.

OFFICERS

President—MRS. M. W. BARTLETT.
Vice Presidents—MRS. R. M. WALMSLEY, MRS. T. S. RICHARDSON, MRS. J. R. JONES, MRS. E. E. SIMPSON, MRS. ALBERT BALDWIN.
Treasurer—MRS. CHAS. P. KELLS.
Recording Secretary—MRS. HUBERT AZPE.
Corresponding Secretary—MRS. E. J. WHARTON.

1000 AGENTS WANTED!

One in each town and neighborhood in Mississippi and Louisiana, to sell

Dr. Dutton's Vegetable Discovery.

It is sold only by Specified agents.
It is the best BLOOD AND LIVER Medicine we ever used. Write for terms. It will pay you.
J. L. DUTTON, General Agent
Jamestown, Miss.

BEWARE OF FRAUD.

To protect the public against imitation and fraud, we specially caution all purchasers of

BENSON'S
CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER

to see that the word CAPCINE on the label of each plaster is correctly spelled.

BEWARE of worthless plasters offered under similar sounding names.

Remember the only place the dealer can have is that he makes a somewhat larger profit on the imitation article.

SEABURY & JOHNSON.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL
UNION
DEPOSITORY.

With a full line of Question Books, Catechisms, Hymn Books, Class Books, Library Books, Reward Books and everything needed in the Sunday-school. Send for catalogue.

Also Sankey & Bliss' Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs, Teachers' Bibles, Concordances, Bible Dictionaries, Commentaries, etc., at the Depository.

LATHROP & WILKINS.
New Orleans La., and Houston, Tex.

E. HEATH.

IMPORTER AND DEALER IN

Carpets, Floor Oil Cloths,

UPHOLSTERY GOODS, Wall Paper, Window Shades, Curtains, Lace and Nottingham Curtains, Mirrors, Moldings, Chromos, Engravings, etc.

Frames made to order a specialty.

No. 99 Camp street, New Orleans.

All Farmers, Millers, Business Men, Preachers, Lawyers, Students, and all others in need of a constant, safe, sure and reliable remedy for Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sleeplessness, Stomach, Bowel, Kidney or Liver Complaints, you will never be disappointed using

PARKER'S GINGER TONIC

If you are wasting away with Consumption, Debility, Weakness, Age, dissipation or any sickness or suffering, and you are in need of a Tonic, you have tried and will find PARKER'S GINGER TONIC the Best Health & Strength Restorer you can use. Don't waste time with Bitters, and other Tonics that do not assault the system, but never injure, cure. It Has Saved Hundreds of Lives; and May Save Yours.

Buy a sure bottle and be sure the signature of H. ... & CO., N. Y., is on outside wrapper.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM Restores Dandruff Elegantly Perfumed Restores Color Prevents Baldness

—THE MILD POWER CURES:—

HUMPHREYS' HOMEOPATHIC SPECIFICS.

In use 25 years. Each is a tried and reliable remedy for a single disease or condition. Simple, Safe and Sure. All sizes for the pocket or family. Over counter or by mail.

1.	Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations,	.25
2.	Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	.25
3.	Crying Colic, or Teething of Infants	.25
4.	Diarrhea of Children or Adults	.25
5.	Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	.25
6.	Cholera Morbus, Vomiting,	.25
7.	Coughs, Bronchitis,	.25
8.	Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache,	.25
9.	Headaches, Sick Headache, Vertigo	.25
10.	Dyspepsia, Biliousness,	.25
11.	Suppressed or Painful Periods,	.25
12.	Whites, too Profuse Periods,	.25
13.	Croup, Laryngitis, Difficult Breathing	.25
14.	Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Eruptions,	.25
15.	Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains,	.25
16.	Fever and Ague, Chill Fever,	.25
17.	Piles, Blind or Bleeding	.25
19.	Catarrh, Acute or Chronic, Influenza	.25
20.	Whooping Cough, Violent Coughs,	.25
24.	General Debility, Physical Weakness	.25
27.	Kidney Disease	.25
28.	Nervous Debility,	1.00
30.	Urinary Weakness, wetting the bed,	.50
32.	Diseases of the Heart, Palpitation,	1.00

Sold by druggists, or sent by the case, or on receipt of price, and 10 cents for postage, on receipt of Price, Manual (144 pages) mailed free. Humphreys' Book of Directions, etc., (Large pages) illustrated Catalogue FREE. Address, Humphreys' Homeopathic Medicine Co., 109 Fulton Street, New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

23,000 SOLD!

FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S
—MANUAL—

Edited by GEO. E. WARING, Jr.,
Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

500 Octavo Pages—Over 200 Illustrations.
Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

This Book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assured analysis and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, In Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $3 50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address
LATHROP & WILKINS,
New Orleans, La., or Houston, Tex.

NEW YORK SHOPPING

Of every description for ladies and gentlemen. Housekeeping articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address

Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,
P. O. Box, 598, New York.

FURNITURE
JOHN BOIS,
DEALER IN
Parlor, Bed and Dining Room
FURNITURE.
291 Camp St., cor. Calliope, New Orleans.

Repairing Upholstering, Varnishing, etc., promptly done. Country orders promptly attended to. Spring, Hair and Moss Mattresses made to order. A full line of common Furniture on hand; suitable for the country.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at

JOHN GAUCHE'S
MAMMOTH
QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI-PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 130 pieces, for $12.

ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $10.

REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.

ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3 50.

ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.

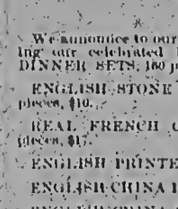
ENGLISH CHINA GOLD BAND and FLOWER-ED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5 50.

THE BEST SELECTION OF
CROCKERY
Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods
OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.

REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS
JOHN CAUCHE,
AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,
Nos. 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street,

Branch House, Nos. 108 and 110 Chartres Street.



JOSEPHUS'
COMPLETE
WORKS.

Comprising the History and Antiquities of the Jews, with the destruction of Jerusalem, by the Romans, and also Dissertations concerning Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, James the Just, and the Sacrifice of Isaac, together with a full account of Hades or Hell, with his introductory, by Rev. John Allen, and illustrated by William Whiston, A. M., to which is added an analytical index of the entire work.

The largest size work of 781 pages, bound in cloth, $3 50; in full leather binding, $4 50; mailed post-paid on receipt of price.

LATHROP & WILKINS,
New Orleans.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.
SIZES AND PRICES.

Diam. of Bell.	Wt. with Yoke & Frame	Cost of Bell & Hangings.
No 6, 24in	400 lbs	$ 75 00
No. 5, 27in	540 lbs	90 00
No 4, 30in	690 lbs	85 00
No. 3, 34in	730 lbs	75 00
No. 2, 38in	925 lbs	150 00

RUMSEY & CO.
Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A.

WATCHES.

LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upward
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $45 and upward
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward
BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward
All guaranteed.
A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.,
Cor Canal and Royal Sts.

YOUNG MEN'S
Christian Association,
OF NEW ORLEANS.
ROOMS, 87 CAMP STREET,

Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M., except Sunday, and on Sundays from 2 to 5 P. M., where one may be found the leading daily and weekly papers of the most important cities of the United States.

SERVICES.

Tuesday, 7.30 P. M.—Devotional.
Thursday, 7.30 P. M. Singing Class.
NOON-DAY PRAYER-MEETING.
Daily, 11 to 12.30.

Rule.—Prayers and Remarks are limited to three minutes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street, - - - 15 Bourbon Street.

Our Stock of Spring Goods is now Complete, consisting of the latest novelties in
Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales,
HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.

SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE.
D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street, New Orleans

WHEELER & PIERSON,
(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Hewes.)
CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,
Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.

Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40. | Business Suits, $12 to $25
6 Shirts for $9 | Collars, $1.50 per Dozen.

Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.
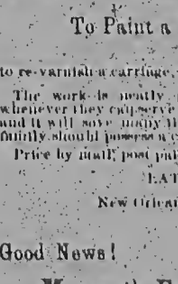
Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.
Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department upstairs.



THE NEW DICTIONARY HOLDER.

These holders are so arranged that they press the book firmly together, when it is opened, in short the Dictionary Holder is perfect in form, finish and operation, and will be found one of the most elegant and desirable articles for schools, library or professional reference and library use. Every one who uses a dictionary should have one of these patent holders, and have the pages kept straight and open. Place the dictionary in the holder and keep it there. There is no more occasion to keep it out of the holder than out of its binding. Children and grown people refer to a dictionary if the articles are in these holders and the book does not become racked, soiled and spoiled. You have but to open the book and it remains open where it and it remains closed. Displaced by your side when reading or writing, the task of hunting up words is not deferred and then forgotten, but done instantly, and easily. The holder is high enough if you stand, low enough if you sit, and has received unlimited praise from clergymen and teachers, and all others who have used it. The Unabridged Dictionary, either of Worcester or Webster, fits in them exactly.

Price finished in hard jet black Japan, $2 00.
" white, or pickle wash, 3 00

Address LATHROP & WILKINS, Agents for the Southwest, 112 Camp Street, New Orleans.

CATARRH Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects—corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, mucous deposits, and finally consumption. From first to last it is ever aggravating. Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. If neglected while a cure is possible, it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, successful and pleasant treatment is

Dr. M. W. CASE'S CARBOLATE of TAR INHALANT
FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, Bronchitis & Deafness.

It does not require the use of medicine to demonstrate the value of Carbolate of Tar, the most healing remedy of which known to science. Balsams and Cordials of the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with Pine Tree Tar, that the moist breathing converts them into a dense smoke or vapor. This is inhaled—taken right to the diseased parts. No heat, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. This treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly recommended by thousands who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FULL TREATMENT—Circulars, etc., Sent Free—Sent, Satisfaction Always Guaranteed. Address, DR. M. W. CASE, 933 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

H-O-W T-O P-A-I-N-T.

A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of Tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain, common-sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results, in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tints required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes

Every Man His Own Painter.

Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, zinc, pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—

Paint for Out-Buildings,

—Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut and satin, decalcomanie, making rustic pictures, painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture, waxing furniture, cleaning paint—

Paint for Farming Tools,

and for machinery, and household fixtures

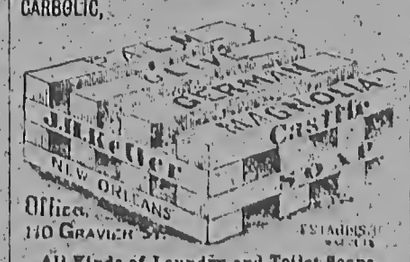
To Paint a Farm Wagon,

to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.

The work is neatly printed, with illustrations wherever they can serve to make the subject plainer, and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.

Price by mail, post paid, $1.

LATHROP & WILKINS,
New Orleans, La., and Houston, Tex.



Good News! Good News!
Mammoth Furniture House
OF
McCRACKEN & BREWSTER,
33 & 35 Royal Street,

Now have the largest stock of Fine and Medium Chamber Sets, Ebony Gilt and Walnut Parlor Sets, Dining-Room and Hall Furniture to be found in the South. Also a large and various stock of cheap and durable Furniture suitable for the country trade.

THONET BROS., VIENNA,
BENT WOOD FURNITURE

Our motto "small profits and quick returns."
McCRACKEN & BREWSTER.

J. H. KELLER.
MANUFACTURER OF
CARBOLIC,

Office, 110 Gravier St.
All Kinds of Laundry and Toilet Soaps.
Send for Circular.

AGENTS WANTED to sell the BASES BOOK, RIGHT SIDE UP. Sells at Sight. You double your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

MENEELYS' BELLS.
For Churches, etc., known to the public since 1826, are made only at "THE MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY," West Troy, N. Y. Catalogues free.

UNITED STATES
Four Per Cent. Bonds
BOUGHT AND SOLD BY
New Orleans National Bank,
58 CAMP STREET.

BEE CULTURE.

MANUAL OF THE APIARY.
By A. J. COOK,
Professor of Entomology in the Michigan State Agricultural College.
THIRD EDITION.

Revised, enlarged, mostly rewritten, and beautifully illustrated. Being now it is fully up with the times on every conceivable subject that interests the apiarist.

It is not only instructive and intensely interesting. This work is a masterly production, and one that no bee keeper, however limited his means, can afford to do without. It is printed in the best style on fine book paper. Price, bound in cloth, $1 25 post paid.
Address, LATHROP & WILKINS,
112 Camp Street.

BUCK'S IMPROVED

BRILLIANT STOVE
Is acknowledged to be the
Best Cook-Stove Made.
SOLD BY
H. HALLER,
NEW ORLEANS,
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

Cooking and Heating Stoves of the most improved makes, Stamped, Plain and Japanned Tinware, Tinners and Enameled Hollow ware Iron and Tin Furnaces, Tinner's Stock, Granite Iron ware, Lamp burner, and Wick to suit, Tinned Iron Spoons Forks, Coffee Mills of all kinds Planished ware, Irons, Fire Grates, Floating Machines, etc.

H. HALLER,
No. 55 Camp St., New Orleans
Price lists mailed on application.

GRATEFUL. COMFORTING.
EPPS'-COCOA.
BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

Made simply with boiling water or milk.
Sold only in tins (¼ and ½ labelled
JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists,
London, England.

Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence for afternoons

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, May 16, 1881.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Sat.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	6	6
Ordinary	7	7
Good ordinary	8⅛	8⅛
Low middling	9⅛	9⅛
Middling	10⅛	10⅛
Good middling	11⅛	11⅛
Middling fair	11⅞	11⅞
Sales to-day	3,250 bales.
Receipts since our last	5,618 bales.
Receipts previously	1,490,355 bales.
Sugar, ₱ lb.:
Fair	— — 60	5
Fully fair	— —	7⅛
Prime	7⅛ —	7⅛
Choice	— —	—
Yellow clarified	8⅛ —	8⅛
White clarified	8⅞ —	9⅛
Powdered	— —	—
Crushed	— —	—
Molasses, in bbls. ₱ gallon:
Common	22 —	25
Fair	27 —	28
Prime	30 —	33
Choice	— —	—
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common	3⅝ —	3⅝
Fair	4⅝ —	5
Prime	— —	5¾
Choice	6 —	6¼
GROCERIES.
Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western	— —	25
New York	14 —	20
Coffee, ₱ lb.:
Rio ordinary	9 —	9⅛
Rio	11 —	11⅛
Rio prime	12⅝ —	12⅞
Cheese, ₱ lb.:
Western factory	— —	—
English dairy	— —	—
Candles, ₱ lb.:
Best brands	11⅜ —	12
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl.
Choice K. D.	3 00	3 25
Flour, ₱ bbl.:
Soda	3 00	— —
XX	3 75	4 00
XXX	4 50	4 75
Choice	— —	— —
Choice	— —	— —
Fish:
Mackerel, No. 1, in bbls	— —	8 00
Half bbls	— —	4 50
Kits	— —	95
Mackerel, No. 2, in bbls	— —	6 75
Half bbls	— —	3 50
Kits	— —	85
Mackerel, No. 3, in bbls	6 50	6 75
Half bbls	3 00	3 70
Kits	75	—
Codfish, ₱ lb	5⅝	6
Herring, ₱ box	30	35
Oils, ₱ gallon:
Cod, in bbls	— —	—
Cod, in bbls	— —	—
Linseed, raw	57	60
Linseed, boiled	61	64
Cotton seed	30	30
Lard	75	85
Soap, ₱ box
Magnolia	— —	2 10
Olive	— —	2 50
Palm	— —	—
Castile	— —	2 75
Soda, ₱ lb	— —	—
Starch, ₱ lb	— —	3
Salt, ₱ sack
Coarse	1 10	1 02½
Fine	1 35	1 40
GRAIN AND FEED.
Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel
Yellow	— —	61
White	— —	68
Mixed	60	67
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western	— —	49
Red rust-proof	— —	—
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs
Choice	87½	90
Hay, ₱ ton:
Prime	26 00	28 00
Choice	30 00	30 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel
Mixed	2 30	2 35
Clay	2 45	2 60
PROVISIONS.
Bacon, ₱ lb:
Breakfast	10⅛	10⅝
Shoulders	7⅛	7⅛
Sides, clear rib	—	9⅝
Sides, clear	—	10
Hams, sugar-cured	10	11⅝
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl	18 00	18 25
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb.
Clear ribsides	— —	8⅛
Clear sides	— —	8⅝
Shoulders	5⅝	5⅞
Lard, ₱ lb.
Choice, in kegs	— —	12
Choice, in tierces	— —	11½
ESCULENTS.
Potatoes, ₱ bbl.:
Irish	2 40	2 50
Sweet	— —	2 00
Onions, ₱ bbl	4 00	5 00
Apples, ₱ bbl.	1 50	2 50
Cabbages, ₱ doz	— —	—
Sour Krout, ₱ bbl	12 00	4 00
BALING STUFFS.
Bagging, ₱ yard:
India	— —	— —
Jute	— —	— —
Baling Twine, ₱ lb	— —	17
Ties, ₱ bundle
30 lbs and under	— —	1 65
SUNDRIES.
Poultry, ₱ dozen
Grown chickens	— —	5 00
Young do	3 00	3 50
Do fowls	3 00	3 50
Geese	4 00	5 00
Turkeys	13 00	15 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen
Western	11	13
Southern	12	14
Honey
Strained, ₱ gallon	— —	— —
Comb, ₱ lb	— —	— —
Pecans, ₱ lb.
Louisiana	— —	—
Texas	8	9
Oranges:
Louisiana, ₱ bbl	— —	—
Foreign, ₱ box	4 00	5 00
Wool, ₱ lb.
Louisiana	— —	19
Texas	— —	—
Feathers, ₱ lb
Geese	— —	—
Hides, ₱ lb.
Country green	6	8
Dry salted	8	10
Dry flint	—	12
Ox Horns, ₱ doz	— —	8
Tallow, ₱ lb	5⅝	6⅛
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton
In sacks	— —	—
Meal	20 00	20 50
Oil cake	24 00	24 50
Cooperage, ₱ each
Sugar hogsheads	3 00	3 25
Molasses do	1 80	1 85
Half barrels	— —	1 05
Kegs	— —	70
Oak Staves, per 1200:
Kegs	— —	— —
Barrels	— —	— —
Extra claret	95 00	100 00
Extra hogshead	135 00	140 00
Extra pipes	85 00	180 00
Tobacco:
Low lugs	— —	4½
Medium	— —	—
Good to fine	— —	— —
Low leaf	5½	5½
Medium	6½	7
Good	7½	8
Fine	7½	8
Selections	10	12

—A clergyman was preparing his sermon for Sunday, stopping occasionally to review what he had written and to erase that which he was disposed to disapprove, when he was accosted by his little son: "Father, does God tell you what to preach?" "Certainly, my child." "Then what makes you scratch it out?"

There Is More Strength

restoring power in a 50 cent bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic than in a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body. See other column.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

VICKSBURG, May 10.—A special to the Vicksburg Herald, from Skipwiths, reports the levee at Alsatia, La., broken.

GREENVILLE, Miss., May 10.—The Grand Lodge of Mississippi, Knights of Pythias, convened here to-day. Two hundred past chancellors were present. The town gave the order a warm welcome and all private and public buildings were decorated in honor of the event.

ALBANY, May 11.—In the Assembly to-day, the bill to allow women to vote was defeated.

SHREVEPORT, May 11.—A telegram received to-day states that Gov. Wiltz has signed the pardon of Capt. S. M. Thomas, who was convicted of manslaughter for the killing of Hugh Dickson, his brother in-law, for outraging his daughter. The news of the pardon is received with joy by the entire community.

VICKSBURG, May 11.—The officers of the steamer Dom Adams confirm the news of the break in the levee at Alsatia, La. The break is about two hundred yards wide and spreading rapidly. The water is running through with great velocity, and the prospects of closing the break are very poor. The damage will be very great.

GALVESTON, May 12.—The Mexican telegraph line is completed to within twelve miles of New Laredo.

VICKSBURG, May 12. The Evening Commercial publishes a telegram from Major Greene, General Manager of the Vicksburg and Shreveport Railroad, that trains on that road would stop after Saturday, caused by high water from the Alsatia Crevasse.

SPARTANBURG, S. C., May 12. The Cowpens monument was unveiled yesterday in the presence of 20,000 persons.

Gov. Hagood, of South Carolina, presided and introduced the speakers.

Rev. A. Toomer Porter, of Charleston, opened the proceedings with prayer, reading from the prayer book found on the battlefield.

Thirteen hundred volunteer troops of the State of South Carolina, were reviewed by Gen. Henry J. Hunt, United States Army. Gen. A. M. Manigault, Adjutant General of South Carolina, served on Gen. Hunt's staff, by special request. Also the following descendants of the chief actors at the Cowpens: Daniel Morgan Taylor, United States Army; McHenry Howard, M. D., S. B. Pickens and John B. Washington, of South Carolina.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 13.—Prof. Edward A. Barnard, of Nashville, Tenn., has just telegraphed to Mr. H. H. Warner, of this city, claiming the second prize offered by Mr. Warner, of $500 in gold for discovery of comets. The comet discovered by Prof. Barnard makes the second discovery within two weeks; Prof. Swift having won the other prize.

ABERDEEN, Miss., May 13.—The Confederate graves were decorated here to-day under the management of the Ladies' Memorial Association. The Aberdeen Guards headed the procession, proceeded by a colored band of music. At the cemetery, which was decorated with C. S. A. flags, the Guards fired several volleys.

Gen. W. F. Tucker, of Okolona, the selected orator, delivered the finest address ever heard before this association.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 15.—The graves of the Confederate dead in Elmwood Cemetery were decorated to-day with imposing ceremonies. Hon. Casey Young delivered the oration.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16, 1881. The vice president laid before the senate the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16, 1881.

SIR—Will you please announce to the senate that my resignation as a senator of the United States from the State of New York, has been forwarded to the governor of the State.

I have the honor to be, with great respect your obedient servant,

(Signed,) ROSCOE CONKLING.

To Hon. C. A. Arthur, vice president.

This communication was received with great sensation, which was heightened when the vice president, laid the following before the senate:

SENATE CHAMBER, May 16, 1881.

To the Hon. C. A. Arthur, vice president, etc.

SIR—I have forwarded to the governor of the State of New York, my resignation as senator of the United States, for the State of New York. Will you please announce the fact to the senate. With great respect, your obedient servant.

Signed, T. C. PLATT.

A hum of astonishment followed the reading of the communication, and Mr. Hill, of Georgia, suggested (sotto voice) that this would be a good time to elect officers of the senate.

FOREIGN.

ATHENS, May 4.—The Government has been officially informed that Turkey has accepted the proposals of the powers for solution of the Greek frontier question.

VIENNA, May 10.—The marriage of the Crown Prince Rudolph of Austria and Princess Stephanie of Belgium was most imposingly celebrated at the Church of St. Augustine to-day. An immense multitude collected in the streets through which the Imperial and royal personages proceeded to the church. An hour before the commencement of the ceremony the church was densely crowded by a brilliant and striking assembly.

LONDON, May 11.—The second reading of the bill to permit clergymen to sit in the House of Commons was defeated to-day by a vote of 249 to 101.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 11.—An official dispatch announces that order has been restored at Keiff, but that there has been further serious rioting at Vasilikow, where the people attacked the Jews at the railway station, when the latter were about to leave town. Troops had to go to the rescue of the Hebrews.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 11. The Czar will hold a grand review, to-day of all the troops here.

The losses by riots at Elizabethgrod, in which the Jews suffered terribly, are officially stated at 2,000,000 roubles, and private estimates make them much larger.

The Porludok publishes a letter from Odessa which says that in consequence of disorders made there and in the district is completely paralyzed.

Serious disturbances have occurred at Baku, in Caucasus, between Russians and Mussulmans, but the military restored order. One Mussulman was killed and three were wounded. The riot lasted three days.

PARIS, May 13.—The following dispatch is published here from Tunis: M. Roustan yesterday asked the Bey to grant an audience to Gen. Breard. The Bey fixed the time at 4 P. M., for the interview. Gen. Breard proceeded to Bardo, and read to the Bey the text of the treaty in ten articles, the principal of which is, that there shall be a French Minister resident in Tunis charged to watch the execution of the treaty.

The Bey asked until 9 o'clock in the evening for consideration, but he signed the treaty at 8 o'clock. He requested that the French troops should not enter Tunis; but the French had no intention of taking that step. The interview between the Bey and Gen. Breard was marked by great courtesy and friendliness on both sides. It is believed that Mr. Roustan will be appointed French Minister Resident.

LONDON, May 14.—The Berlin correspondent of the Times, says, the Czar's manifesto has caused great disappointment in St. Petersburg. The people begin to resign themselves to the regime of reaction. Apprehensions of further disaster are rife. It is expected that the Nihilists will promptly publish a counter proclamation, and the issue will be joined. Nothing seems to be known in regard to the process by which the Czar's momentous declaration was generated, but it has taken every one completely by surprise on the bourse. Russian securities are sensibly depressed and financial journals advise holders to sell out.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 11.—The Jews of Kharkoff and St. Petersburg fear an attack by the populace. Subscription in aid of distressed Jews in Southern Russia have been opened here.

An Imperial decree has been published, which restores civil rights to persons exiled on account of the Polish insurrection, provided their behavior since it has been satisfactory.

LEMBERG, May 11.—Troops have been sent to Pojoloveska, on Austro Russian frontier, because of apprehensions that Russian peasants will violate the frontier and attack the Jewish refugees congregated there.

Mohammedism Mormonism.

The similarity of these two systems of religion is indeed striking. Mormonism is Mohammedism in America! Mohammedism, says Gibson, "consist of an eternal truth and a necessary fiction." There is but one God, and Mohammed is his prophet. Mormonism has an "eternal truth"—God, also the "necessary fiction," Joe Smith is his prophet. It is not strange that Satan should use some plan in the West, as he is using in the East with such fearful success. The sword and lust will be the religion of humanity, without the Son of God. The depravity of the human heart, prophesies the awful result of Mormonism in America. Mohammed in three years, had only fourteen followers. Mohammed had fanaticism and superstition around him, when he propagated his doctrine. Now doctrine, such as Mohammed gave, the heathen world readily accepted, but Joe Smith disseminated his doctrine in a Christian country. In thirty-one years he had one hundred and fifty thousand followers, and they pay annually, one million dollars to strengthen their position. Surely they manifest zeal and earnestness.

"For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

Awake, awake, followers of the Son of God, to this fearful evil.

INMAN W. COOPER.

FIVE OLD MUSKETS.—The line of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad runs through the Mansfield battle ground. A few days ago while a body of hands were at work clearing the right of way, about four miles from Mansfield, they found five muskets, with bayonets fixed stacked in the usual army style. These guns, says the DeSota Democrat (from which paper we obtain these facts) doubtless have been where they were found, and just as they were left, ever since the battle of Mansfield, April 8, 1861, and were in very good condition, except that they were rusty from long exposure. The Democrat states further—what is a most remarkable coincidence—that one of the party finding the muskets was a Federal soldier and in the Mansfield fight, and that he recognized one of the guns as being his by a private mark he had placed on it. He says he was not in the main fight, but was with a party of scouts on the left, and had halted temporarily, when a squad of Confederate cavalry suddenly dashed upon them, when they were compelled to beat a hasty retreat, some of them leaving their arms.

Seventeen years have elapsed since the famous battle of Mansfield, during all of which time these implements of death have stood harmless and silent sentries in the forest, locked in peaceful embrace above the slumbering slain, while the actors surviving the great struggle have gone their several ways, many following on that long journey upon which so many started on that eventful day these old muskets were stacked. History will hardly, out of all its varied stores, furnish a parallel, and fiction itself will owe its indebtedness to truth in this, as in thousands of other real occurrences not wholly dissimilar, but equally incredible when not sustained by proof.—Ouachita Telegraph.

The Louisiana Sugar Bowl, May 5th, says:

During the past two weeks, we have traveled almost constantly among sugar planters, and are glad to find that the late warm weather has made most of them more hopeful for their stubble crop. The sprouts are showing themselves more freely than was thought possible, while the plant crop will be large. The seed, with few exceptions, kept well, and the "stand" of spring plant is mostly perfect, while fall planting is also coming out better than reported.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES
CENTENARY COLLEGE, JACKSON, LA.

Sunday, May 29.—Annual Sermon, by Rev. W. W. Tudor, D. D., of St. Louis.

Monday, May 30.—Meeting of Board of Trustees at 9 A. M. Competitive Examination for the best scholarship in Greek, for Gold Medal offered by Prof. W. H. S. Magruder, of Baton Rouge, at 11 A. M. Exhibition of Preparatory School at 7½ P. M.

Tuesday, May 31.—Meeting in the hall of the Union Society, delivery of Prizes and Diplomas, speeches by the graduates. At 10½ A. M. meeting of the Alumni, address by Rev. E. H. Mounger, of Hinds county, Miss; reading of Poem by F. B. Miller, of Pennsylvania. At 11½ A. M., exhibition of the Literary Societies; contest for the Linus Parker Gold medal. Address to the Societies by ——

Wednesday, June 1. At 9 A. M., meeting in the hall of the Franklin Society, delivery of Prizes and Diplomas; speeches by the graduates. At 11 A. M., Commencement exercises: Orations by the graduating class; conferring degrees; baccalaureate address by the President.

Next session begins on Monday, September 5, 1881.

C. H. ANDREWS, President.

JACKSON, La., May 10, 1881.

CLOSING EXERCISES OF
WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE.

Commencement Sermon, June 26, 11 A. M., by Rev. Bishop Keener, D. D.

Address before Christian Association, June 26, 8 P. M., by Rev. R. O. Sweeney.

Address before Alumnæ Association, June 27, by Hon. E. John Ellis, of New Orleans.

Annual Address, June 28, by Rev. B. M. Palmer, D. D., of New Orleans.

Conferring degrees, June 28.

Musical entertainment by Alumnæ Association, June 28, P. M.

H. F. JOHNSON, President.

COMMENCEMENT.
EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE.

Sunday, May 29.—Commencement Sermon, Rev. H. Urquhart, Auburn, Ala.

Monday, May 30.—Anniversary of the Castalian Literary Society, Rev. W. R. Sims, Brandon, Miss.

Annual Meeting of the Board.

Tuesday, May 31.—Alumnæ Anniversary, Rev. John Mathews, D. D., New Orleans.

Wednesday, June 1.—Graduation Exercises.

J. W. ADKISSON.

MERIDIAN, Miss., May 14, 1881.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The camp meeting at William's Camp Ground, Pensacola District, will commence Thursday night, June 30. Friends who made subscriptions for the benefit of the camp ground last year will please pay their subscriptions as soon as possible, as it is greatly needed. Those good sisters who promised comforters for the preachers' tents will please bring them along when they come to the camp meeting. Preachers are cordially invited to be with us. Provision has been made for their entertainment.

The grounds have been improved, a new hotel built, and other provisions for the comfort of visitors made.

W. H. COX.

SEASHORE CAMP GROUND.—There will be a public meeting of the Executive Committee of the Camp Grounds on Saturday May 21, 1881, for business connected with the approaching camp meeting.

All persons desirous to secure lots for building, or tents for camp-meeting, or for the season, or having other business with the Committee, are invited to be present.

C. J. GRIFFIN,
Chairman of Committee.

SEA SHORE CAMP MEETING.—The Camp Meeting for 1881, on Sea Shore Camp Ground, will commence on Wednesday, July 13, 1881.

PHILIP BALLARD, Secretary. W. H. FOSTER, President.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

The District Conference for Williamsburg District, Mississippi Conference, will convene in Columbia, on Friday, July 1, 1881, at 9 o'clock, A. M.

R. A. LITTLE, P. E.

SEASHORE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Meets at Moss Point, Miss., Friday, May 27, at 9 A. M. Conveyance will be at Scranton Thursday, 11 A. M. to take preachers and delegates to Moss Point. Thursday, May 26, at 7 P. M. the preachers will hold a meeting at the Methodist Church, Moss Point, to consider the interests of the district, and the best mode of promoting the interests of the church within its bounds. Friends of the cause are invited to attend and take part in the meeting. We will enquire after unoccupied ground, and how to more fully possess the land "now but partially occupied."

T. J. WEST, P. E.

The Vicksburg District Conference will be held at Fayette, June 3-5, Bishop Keener presiding. The change of time is made to enable Bishop Keener to be with us.

JOHN A. ELLIS, P. E.

Quarterly Conferences.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MOBILE DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Franklin Street	Apr. 24
Eastern Shore, at Spanishtown	30, May 1
Toulminville, at Toulminville	May 7, 8
Citronelle, at Citronelle	14, 15
Grand Bay, at St. Elmo	21, 22
Saucyville, at Ft. Middleton	28, 29
Grove Hill, at Tolleeville	June 1, 5
St. Stephens, at St. Andrew Chapel	11, 12
Bladon Springs, at Mt. Zion	18, 19
Okalappa, at Jones' Chapel	25, 26

16 G. R. RUFF, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

JACKSON DIST.—THIRD ROUND.
In Part.

Sauls Chapel	June 4, 5
Canton	11, 12
Forest Grove	18, 19
Thomastown	25, 26
Edwards	July 2, 3
Flagg's Chapel	9, 10
Clinton	9, 10

The Jackson District Conference will meet in the Methodist Church in Canton, at 10 A. M. on Thursday, June 9. Let brethren remember to have Quarterly Conference Records present for examination, as the law requires.

12 W. L. C. BUSSCUTT, P. E.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

DELHI DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Delhi and Madison circuit, at Delhi	May 7, 8
Whitehall circuit, at Whitehall	14, 15
Oak Ridge circuit, at Good Hope	21, 22
Bayville circuit, at Girard	28, 29
Trenton and Monroe, at Trenton	June 4, 5
Colony circuit at Eagle's Chapel	11, 12
Lind Grove circuit, at Shermanhead	18, 19
Bastrop circuit, at Island	25, 26
Floyd circuit	July 2, 3
Providence and Pecan Grove circuit	9, 10
Trenton Chapel, at Texas Chapel	16, 17
Transylvania circuit, at Wesley	23, 24
Waterproof, at Vidalia	30, 31

16 R. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

APPORTIONMENT BY THE DISTRICT STEWARDS, DELHI DISTRICT, 1881.

	PREACHER'S SALARY	BISHOPS	CONFERENCE CLAIMANTS	FOREIGN MISSIONS	DOMESTIC MISSIONS	TOTAL
Waterproof	$150	$10	$6	$60	$15	$241
Lake Providence	100	10	6	60	15	191
Trenton and Monroe	100	10	6	60	15	191
Bastrop	100	10	6	60	15	191
Lind Grove	150	10	6	60	15	241
Oak Ridge	100	10	6	60	15	191
Texas circuit	40	5	30	20	5	105
Floyd	81	8	63	55	15	222
Winnsboro	85	7	67	14	12	210
Ravville	85	7	67	54	15	228
Colony	40	6	30	30	9	135
Delhi and Madison	60	7	45	30	6	148
Total	$1000	$100	$750	$600	$150	$2600

The Louisiana Conference, at its last session, fixed the sum to be raised for Ministerial Education at "twice the amount apportioned for Bishops."

L. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

GERMANIA SAVINGS BANK,
No. 51 CAMP STREET.
Capital, ... $100,000.

This Bank is now ready to receive deposits of ONE DOLLAR and upwards, at 3 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually.

DIRECTORS:
H. ZUBERBIER, J. HASSENGER,
S. BERNSHEIM, J. E. MERIHL,
FRANK T. HOWARD, EMIL MAIER,
H. ZUBERBIER, President.
J. HASSENGER, Vice President.
TH. HATRY, Cashier.

WANTED.—U. S. LAND WARRANTS. CASH paid for old United States Bounty Land Warrants and Land Scrip. G. M. HALLARD, Indianapolis, Indiana

MISCELLANEOUS.

LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT:

OFFICE: CORNER CARONDELET AND GRAVIER STREETS.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

Fire assets, excluding paid-up capital	$9,881,426 21
Paid-up capital	1,228,200 00
Total fire assets	$11,109,626 21
Fire liabilities	3,944,358 23
Making the surplus for policy-holders	$7,165,267 98

Losses by Chicago Fire in 1871, $3,239,091
Losses by Boston Fire in 1872, $1,120,739

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses promptly, thus placing the Company on an even footing with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

J. F. SCHRODER, Esq., Chairman, of Leopold Christ & Co.
NEWTON BECKNER, Esq., of Beckner & Co.
PERRY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Lallande.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson and Simpson.
HENRY V. OGDEN, Resident Secretary.
JULES D. ROUX, Asst. Resident Secretary.
NEW ORLEANS, October 20, 1880.

B. J. MONTGOMERY. C. KIRSCH.

R. M. & B. J.

MONTGOMERY FURNITURE AND MIRROR EMPORIUM,

Corner Camp and Poydras Sts.

After a sojourn of over six weeks among the Factories North, East and West, we open the Fall and Winter Trade with the largest and best selected stock of Furniture, French and German Plate Mirrors, Orientental and Fancy Goods, Upholstery Goods and Cabinet Makers' Hardware ever brought to this city. We select our goods in person from the best factories and are determined not to be undersold. Our assortment being too extensive and varied to be enumerated in detail, we request our customers and the general public to call and inspect for themselves.

On hand a full line of the celebrated Vienna Bent Wood Work and Tuxedo Wheel Chairs.

Goods packed and delivered F. O. B.

1000 MORE CUSTOMERS

My Prices

Will Astonish.

PIANOS! ORGANS!

AND

Musical Instruments.

Write to

P. WERLEIN,
No. 135 Canal Street,
NEW ORLEANS.

$25 TO $35.

STEWART'S NEW IMPROVED SINGER Sewing Machine.

Great Reduction in Prices!

Down with Monopolies!

Hard Times Demand Low Prices.

We warrant all our Machines to be NEW, LATEST IMPROVED and PERFECT for

FIVE YEARS.

Our NEW MACHINE is supplied with a LOOSE BALANCE WHEEL, which is a great improvement over the old SINGER, as it enables the operator to wind the bobbin without running the machine, or removing the work from the needle. This is the most important improvement ever put on the Sewing Machine.

Also dealer in all first-class Machines, such as the

WHEELER & WILSON, GROVER & BAKER,
DOMESTIC, WILSON,
WEED, Etc.

Cotton, Silk, Flax, Oil and Needles for all kinds of Machines. Address

M. A. PECK,
General Sewing Machine Agent
158 CANAL STREET,
Next to Holmes' Dry Goods Store,
New Orleans.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Styles, 10c. Agents wanted. L. JONES & CO., Nassau, N. Y.

MISCELLANEOUS.

W. F. MELLEN,
Attorney at Law,
12 CARONDELET ST.,
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

FRED. N. OGDEN. BENJ. O. L. RAYNE.

OGDEN & RAYNE,

DEALERS IN

BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,

AND AGENTS FOR THE

Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,

AND

Shultz Belting Company,

18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT,
RICHARD RHODES,
55 ST. CHARLES STREET 55
NEW ORLEANS.

Articles for Fishermen of all Kinds.

Rods, Nets, Hooks, Lines, and every desirable article for the Angler, wholesale and retail. Guns imported to order. J. R. Cooper's Breech and Muzzle Loading Guns always on hand. All kinds of improved artificial Baits. Repairing of Guns carefully done by experienced workmen, and Fishing Rods made to order. Address Postoffice Box 1599.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co.,
AMERICAN CHINA HOUSE,
49 Camp Street, New Orleans

We append a few prices:

The American China Dinner, Breakfast and Tea Set, comprising 160 Pieces, for $18.

A Real French China Dinner Set, 110 Pieces, for $17.

English Stone China Dinner Set, 130 Pieces, for $10.

English Stone China Chamber Set, comprising 10 Pieces, for $2 50.

Decorated Chamber Sets, with different Colored Bands, 10 Pieces, for $3 50.

Glass Goblets, from 60 cents to $1 per dozen.

Particular attention given to Novelties and Specialties pertaining to the House-Furnishing Department. Orders promptly attended to. We have just received a full and complete stock of holiday goods. Call and examine before purchasing.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO

Carpet and Oil Cloth Warehouse.

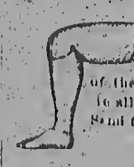
ELKIN & CO.,
100 - - - CANAL STREET - - - 10

New styles of

MOQUETTE, VELVET, BODY BRUSSELS and TAPESTRY BRUSSELS, with border to match.
3-PLY and INGRAINS in great variety.
OIL CLOTHS of all widths.
WINDOW SHADES and CURTAINS, new patterns.
CORNICES and CORNICE POLES.
MATTINGS of every description.
CURTAIN GOODS, TASSELS, CORDS, GIMPS, Etc.
Our prices for corresponding qualities of goods are as low as any house in the South or West.

FURNITURE.

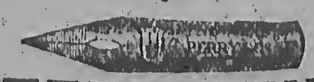
W. G. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,



desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.



W. G. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,
New Orleans.

D. MERCIER & SONS,
Better Known as Cheap John,
NO BRANCH STORE IN TOWN
MEN'S, BOYS' AND YOUTH'S
CLOTHING,
HATS, BOOTS, SHOES, FURNISHING GOODS ETC., ETC.
Cor. Dauphine and Bienville sts.,
New Orleans, La.
Orders from Country Merchants promptly executed on most reasonable terms.

DR. ELY'S CELEBRATED PATENT ARTIFICIAL LEGS AND ARMS have all the motions of the natural limbs. Perfect satisfaction in all cases or no pay. Prices reduced. Send for pamphlet.
A. McDERMOTT, Manufacturer.
158 Canal St., New Orleans

PERRY & CO'S TRADE MARK

STEEL PENS

of superior English make; famous for durability and elasticity; great variety of styles suited to every kind of writing. For sale by dealers generally.

TWENTY-FIVE assorted samples for trial, including the "U" and "FALCON" Pens, by mail, on receipt of Twenty-five Cents.

IVISON, BLAKEMAN, TAYLOR & CO.,
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. S.
NEW YORK.

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 27.—NO. 21. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1881. WHOLE NO. 1355.

PUBLISHED FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

TERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

FICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

bscription, ... $2 per annum.

rmers and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

ll Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.
REV. H. D. MOORE.
REV. O. R. BLUE, D. D.
REV. J. O. ANDREW.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. W. H. WATKINS, D. D.
REV. JAMES A. GODFREY.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. JOHN MATHEWS, D. D.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

SEEKING THE NORTH STAR.

BY O. W. HOLMES.

Ice tolling upward from the misty vale,
I leave the bright enamelled zone below.
Nor more for me the beauteous bloom shall glow,
Nor lingering sweetness load the morning gale;
Less are the slender flowerets, scentless pale,
That on their icy-crystal stems all trembling blow
Along the margin of unmelting snow;
Yet with unsaddened voice the verge I hail,
The realm of peace above the flowering line:
Welcome thy frozen plains, thy rocky cliffs
Where midnight sees the moon-girt planets shine,
And thy majestic altars gird the skies
That filled the air with smoke of vain desires—
And the unclouded blue of heaven is thine.

Woman's Missionary Society.

The third annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, began its session in St. John's Church, St. Louis, May 9. From the proceedings as reported in the Globe-Democrat, we gather the following items:

The treasurer's report, presented by Mrs. James Whitworth, contained the following flattering figures: Amount brought toward from last year's report, $8,580 60; amount received during the fiscal year of 1881, $18,862.10; amount received from Mrs. J. W. Manier, publishing agent of the Woman's Missionary Advocate, $500; total receipts, $27,942 70. Cash paid out since last annual report $10,156 63; cash now in bank, $17,786.07.

The corresponding secretary, Mrs. D. H. McGavock, of Nashville, Tenn., then presented a concise report of the progress of missionary work in the foreign fields, the facts being gathered from correspondence. The first country touched upon was China. The great difficulty experienced had been the sickness of prominent workers. In the case of Mrs. J. W. Lambuth, she had been compelled to leave her work and with her husband return to the United States. Various school statistics were given: A boarding school at Shanghai, organized in October, 1876, had been under the care of its founder, Mrs. J. W. Lambuth, up to May last. During the year 1876-7 there were in the school 17 scholars; in 1877-8, 18 scholars; in 1878-9, 20 scholars; in 1879-80, 25 scholars; in 1880-81, 20 scholars. The school for girls at Nayzing had twenty-three scholars enrolled during the year. At present there were twenty in attendance. The expenses from March 1, 1880, to March 1, 1881 were $515. The teachers whose efficiency the report praises are the Misses Lockie and Dora Rankin.

The school at Loochoo was reported in a flourishing condition. A hospital is to be erected there to be placed in charge of Miss Mildred Phelps, now pursuing a medical course at a woman's college in Philadelphia.

The statistics foot up as follows for China for the year 1879-80: Missionary ladies sent out by the society, 5; missionary ladies acting in conjunction with the society, 0; Bible women, 2; native preachers acting in conjunction with the society, 4.

The next mission field taken up was the Mexican border. The chief work was the establishment of schools. Mrs. A. H. Sutherland reports a flourishing one at San Antonio, Texas, costing $500 last year, but requiring $1,000 the coming year. The school at Laredo, Texas, in charge of Mrs. Norwood, is flourishing and contains two young ladies, who are fitting themselves for missionary work.

In Central Mexico, the school at Orizaba has 35 pupils; that at Toluen, 35; that at Amesa, 140. Total, 250. W. M. Patterson in general charge at the field, and Dr. Wilson, Secretary of the board, had lately visited Mexico and reported a general desire for Protestant gospel and a general abandonment of the Roman Church.

The report then touched upon Brazil. The school at Pericaba was discontinued early in the year, owing to the marriage and death of Miss Annie Newman, the teacher. The project of a new school is favored by wealthy Catholic residents in the vicinity, who are not willing to send their daughters to Catholic schools. The new school could be built for $3,000.

The report on missionary work in the United States was as follows: Conference Societies, 28; Auxiliary Societies, 726; Young People's and Juvenile Societies, 76; total, 830; number of members in societies, 19,001; in Juvenile Societies, 2,337; grand total, 21,338. Thirty-five thousand leaflets, or 90,000 pages of missionary matter had been circulated. The Woman's Advocate was proving a great success.

The report of the Committee on the Extension of Work in China.—It covered estimates for work already in progress, as well as that desired to be commenced. The facts in relation to the various appropriations recommended by the report were explained by Rev. Dr. Kelly, delegate from the Missionary Board of the church by the aid of a map. The estimates recommended were: Existing work, $5,240; new work, $11,832; total, $17,072. This large appropriation for new work includes among its principal items $1,000, for purchase of a lot in Suchow, on which are to be built a missionary residence, school and medical hospital; $3,000 for erecting these; $1,000 for purchase of a lot in Shanghai, on which to place additions to Clopten schools. Many of these appropriations were merely contingent—that is, the money to be used if anticipated aid were not given by private persons, if lots could be purchased and buildings erected within the estimates, and on other like possible conditions. The appropriations go into effect October 1, and continuing until September 30.

A long report from the Ad Interim Board was submitted of its proceedings in the interval since the last session of the Executive Association. It was referred to a special committee consisting of Mrs. Davidson, Washington, D. C.; Miss Van Vaikenburg, Arkansas; Miss Whitworth, Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. Kelly and Mrs. Nathan Scarrit, Kansas City.

A letter was read by the president, Mrs. Hayes, to herself, from Miss Phillips, now studying at a medical college with the view of becoming a woman medical missionary. The letter gave some description of studies peculiar to her sex, and an expression of earnest purposes of devotion to the cause.

An English translation of a Chinese deed transferring to the association property in Nezing, was formally read.

A manual of the qualifications for the mission work prepared, after considerable investigation and consultation with similar works of other societies, by Mrs. D. H. McGavock. The manual is intended for the use of candidates for missionary appointments and for the guidance of committees having the selection of missionaries in charge. Among these qualifications are earnest Christian character, willingness to go to any field, a certificate of health and a promise not to marry for five years.

At the close of the reading of the manual many eulogistic praises were indulged in. Mrs. Hayes, the president, however, thought that in heaven alone could be found a candidate that would completely fill the bill. The manual was returned to its author for a few trivial corrections before final disposition of it.

A letter, expressing the regret of Rev. Dr. Lambuth, a missionary to China, now in this country, at his inability to accept the invitation of Mrs. Hayes, the president, to attend the session of the association, was read. A resolution expressing reciprocal regret on the part of the association and of thanks to Dr. Lambuth for voluntary work done in China for the Women's Board, was unanimously passed.

A constitution for juvenile missionary societies under charge of the association, was read by Mrs. Spence, of Tennessee, and referred to a committee consisting of Mrs. Spence, of Tennessee; Mrs. Trinhart, of Kentucky and Mrs. Wiley, of Virginia. Some accounts of these societies were given. One in Lexington had for president a little girl of thirteen, who presides with all the dignity of a matron, the other small officers being equally efficient with grown-up people.

A letter was read from Mrs. Mary Stewart Smith, of Charlotteville, Va., expressing a desire to found or support a school at Kardine, China, in memory of her daughter, recently deceased, Mrs. Eliza Walker. It was decided by the association to formally accept the offer of Mrs. Smith. The reports of standing committees were next in order. The report of the committee on the extension of work was read and adopted. It was supplemental of the report on China given in the morning. It appropriated for the Central Mexican Mission, $1,000; Mexican Border Mission, $6,500; Brazilian Mission, $5,000; for establishing an orphanage in Rio de Janiero, $2,500. The most of these amounts are expended for educational purposes. In regard to the Rio de Janiero orphanage a letter from Rev. J. J. Ransom, a missionary in Brazil, was read, favoring the plan. The matter was finally referred back to await the action of the Committee on Missionary Candidates, to see if in their opinion a suitable person was offered to take charge of the orphanage when founded.

Special services were held at the grave of Bishop Marvin. That grand old missionary hymn, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," was sung, and prayer offered by Rev. Dr. Wilson, presiding elder of the St. Louis Conference, followed by the singing of another missionary hymn, "Beulah," a special favorite of the Bishop's.

Mrs. Hayes, president of the association, then in its name paid a beautiful tribute to the memory of the late Bishop. She alluded in particular to the great influence he had exerted by his letters from China in arousing an interest in woman's work there, and the impetus thus given to the movement towards founding a Woman's Association in the Methodist Church, South, which but for his counsel and countenance would probably have proved a failure. In closing, she expressed the universal regret of the friends of the cause that he should have been called to his eternal home at the very time his presence seemed especially needed by the church of which he was so faithful and distinguished a member.

The doxology and benediction closed these memorial services.

The report of the Financial Committee was presented by Mrs. Watson, its chairman, and was adopted.

It recommends an appropriation of $500 to defray the traveling expenses of the president; an appropriation of $100 to defray the expenses of the corresponding secretary, with $50 additional as a contingent fund; an appropriation of $25 to defray the expenses of the treasurer, with $10 additional as a contingent fund; appropriation of $500 for publication purposes, with $100 additional as a contingent fund, and a notice to Conference societies that they will be expected themselves to pay all freight on packages not received through the mails; that the Conference societies pay their own expenses, including those of their own representatives to the executive meeting, their own treasurer keeping an account of the same; that this last recommendation applies as well to auxiliary societies, their treasurers keeping their own accounts; that the expenses of Conference societies in their efforts to organize auxiliaries, shall be paid out of funds in the hands of the Conference treasurers; that the actual expenses of executive officers of the association in attending its annual meetings shall be paid out of the general treasury.

The Committee on Publication, through its chairman, Mrs. Dr. Tudor, of St. Louis, reported in favor of publishing 500 copies of the manual for missionary candidates; of publishing 5,000 copies of the annual report of the association; of empowering the chair to appoint a committee to publish a series of "leaflets," of which committee, Mrs. Dr. Scarrit of Kansas City, should be chairman. The report was adopted.

After singing the doxology and pronouncing the benediction, the association adjourned until this morning at 10 o'clock.

The applications of the following candidates were recommended for acceptance by the committee, and such recommendations were adopted by the association: Mrs. Florida M. Pitts, Winchester, Tenn., a widow of 28 years of age, for a course of study at a medical college, preparatory to becoming a medical missionary in China. Among other qualifications, she has taught four years and has received a good education. The Misses Rebecca D. Tobold and Anna Williams, both students at Chappel Hill School, Texas, for the mission field on the Mexican border. The qualifications of these young ladies were a good education and earnest religious character.

The report, as adopted, also recommended that the following candidates be encouraged in their efforts to prepare themselves for missionary work, although for reasons like insufficient age, insufficient health and technical defects in applications, their cases could not finally be disposed of: Miss Emma Morrison, Glasgow, Ky.; Miss Vincie Trott, Ashland, Ky.; Miss Maria E. Krippendorf, Centralia, Mo.; Miss Ettie Groves, Baton Rouge, La.

The constitution for juvenile societies was presented by Mrs. S. E. Spence, of Tennessee, to whom it had been referred. The only question about the proposed constitution was the imposition of monthly dues on children. It was finally decided to qualify this imposition by the phrase, "if they are able."

A supplemental report from the Publication and Finance Committee was presented, advising an appropriation of $100 to the publication of "leaflets" and of $500 as a salary to the editor of the Woman's Missionary Advocate. The report was adopted.

Mrs. C. N. Brandon of Alabama, as chairman of special committee on disposition of funds of juvenile societies, reported in favor of expending them, when not otherwise appropriated, in the building of a school at Soochoo, China. This report was adopted.

Mrs. Dr. Wiley, chairman of the Committee on Publication offered to its behalf resolutions expressing confidence and indorsing the editor, Mrs. Butler, and the publishing agent, Mrs. Manier; also accepting an offer of J. B. McFerrin, Nashville, Tenn., agent for the Methodist Publishing House, South, to publish the Advocate the coming year; and further giving charge of all publishing matters decided on by the association to the permanent publishing committee established at Nashville. These resolutions were adopted by the association.

The next business taken up was the choice of a place for holding the annual meeting a year from this time. Very pressing invitations to accept the hospitality of various cities were presented—in behalf of Richmond by Mrs. Hall; of Nashville by Mrs. McGavock, and of Atlanta by Mrs. Boring. On vote Nashville was chosen by a large majority, owing principally to the fact that the General Conference was then to meet there also.

A very flattering report of the status of the Woman's Missionary Advocate was presented by its publishing agent, Mrs. J. W. Manier, Nashville, Tenn. Total receipts, $3,025 39; total expenses, $1,779 88; net earnings, $1,245 51; number of subscribers, 6,000. This report created great enthusiasm, which was given audible expression in the singing of the doxology, and a vote of thanks was unanimously passed to the editor, Mrs. Frank A. Butler, Nashville, Tenn., and to the publishing agent, Mrs. J. W. Manier, Nashville, Tenn.

The association adjourned Friday night, May 13. The next annual meeting will be held in Nashville, Tenn.

The Church Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Ever since my earliest connection with the church, I have been led to give special attention to the practical working of our church economy, and there is nothing in our ecclesiastical polity, that I believe of more utility and more scriptural than a well organized and well conducted church Conference. It is of prime necessity to the consolidation and prosperity of every church under our pastoral supervision. An individual church works at a great disadvantage, and in many respects does not work at all, without a well ordered church Conference. The first time this important item of polity turns up in due form after the day of Pentecost is recorded in the sixth of Acts, including the first seven verses. A difficulty had suddenly arose in the church about the distribution of alms; and audible murmurings were heard. The apostles were appealed to for advice. They ordered the immediate call of a church Conference—the multitudes of the disciples—the whole church regardless of sex or age—was called together to deliberate and act in the adjustment of this new born trouble. The apostles directed the church meeting to select for themselves "seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom," and they would solemnly set them apart to adjust this church difficulty and keep things smooth ever after. The "whole multitude" was pleased with the suggestion, and immediately elected seven deacons and set them to work. The result was, the little unpleasantness which was always hindering the advance movements of the church was removed, and immediately there was another great ingathering of souls in the church. "The number of the disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly, and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith." Now, I honestly believe if all our pastors would hold regular church Conferences according to the requirement of the law in our discipline once a month in each station; and at least, every three months in every country church—giving themselves time to attend to each item, intelligently and faithfully, the very best results would follow. Let us notice some of the advantages to the pastor himself. If he be a man of discerning and improving mind, presiding over his church Conferences will make him familiar with all the points of order to be observed in presiding over deliberative bodies, so that he can preside gracefully and correctly over our higher Conferences, whenever it may be necessary for him to do it. Again: the well attended church Conference is a great saving of time and labor to the pastor. He can see and get acquainted with his members, and attend to numerous matters in the church Conference—such as calling the attention of the members to our church literature in the form of books and periodicals; to our missionary and other church enterprises; and to anything else that may strengthen and build up the church in the community, that would take him, not only hours, but days to attend to as they should be, to ensure success out of the church Conference. Lastly: It makes the pastor feel that under God, he is the head and leader of a lovely Christian family who are being trained to co-operate with him in every good work.

The well and religiously conducted church Conference is a means of great good to the membership: It gives them close Christian communion and fellowship; it makes them feel that they are one family in God; that they are mutually united to help each other on in the way of holiness and to unite their efforts for the salvation of others. I am sorry to know, that in some churches, church conferences are not held at all, and in others so seldom, so imperfectly and hurriedly, that they are little else than a mere shadow of what they ought to be. By their neglect, or for the want of attending to them, as our law directs, I fear we lose a large per centage of our young members, who ought to be brought into the church Conference as soon as they join the church and trained up at once to be co-workers with their fellow Christians in the vineyard of the Lord. But, I need say no more at present. I only wish to stir up both pastors and church members on what I consider a matter of vital importance to the unity and continued prosperity of the church.

J. O. JONES.

PORT GIBSON, MISS., May 15, 1881.

To the Members of the Alabama Conference.

EXPENSES OF OUR DELEGATES.

DEAR BRETHREN: You doubtless recollect the following resolution offered by Dr. Blue and Dr. Rivers, which was unanimously adopted by our Conference at the last session: "Resolved, that the joint Board of Finance be, and the same is hereby instructed to assess each charge to such an amount, that in the aggregate, enough may be collected to pay the expenses of our representatives to and from the Ecumenical Conference."

Owing to the disasterous fire at Pensacola, we hurriedly finished up our business and adjourned, so that the Board of Finance had no time to make the assessments ordered. Indeed, my recollection is, they had no meeting after the resolution was adopted.

But shall we fail because of this, to do what we solemnly promised to do? Of course not. For a long time it has been the boast of the Alabama Conference that her resolutions about collections were not mere paper affairs. We mean what we say.

I see from the published proceedings of the Pensacola District Conference, that the brethren there voluntarily assumed seventy-five dollars of the same to be raised, and divided it out among the several charges. This is next to the weakest district in the Conference. On page seventeen of the minutes of the Conference, you can see what is the relative estimated strength of the districts; and consequently what each ought to pay, taking the Pensacola district as the basis of the calculation. I trust this matter will be promptly attended to. The Bishops have bestowed special favor on our Conference in giving us two of the thirty-six delegates allowed to our church. It will be a great gathering and a trip attended by considerable expense. Let us not embarrass our brethren appointed to go, on account of a lack of the necessary funds. Of course we can't expect them to go in the service of the church and pay their own way. Dr. O. R. Blue says it will take at least twelve hundred dollars.

T. F. MANOR.

AUBURN, ALA., May 18, 1881.

Mrs. Mary J. Leigh.

Mrs. Mary J. Leigh, widow of Rev. Hezekiah C. Leigh, D. D. died in Columbus, Mississippi, April 14, 1881. From a biographical sketch in the Richmond Christian Advocate written by Rev. Dr. John E. Edwards, we make the following extract:

In the later years of her life, Mrs. Leigh was subject, at longer or shorter intervals, to alarming attacks of illness, which seriously threatened her life. From these attacks however, she time and again recovered. But the last fatal illness came not to find her unprepared to meet the issue. She was ready, and without delaying on the progress of the last attack through its different stages and alternations, we come to the bedside to witness the closing scene, which was as collected, calm, and triumphant as her life had been uniform and consistent. Her family was summoned to the death chamber. Words of godly admonition were delivered to the members of the family present and messages left for the absent ones.

The day before her death Mrs. Leigh sent for her son, Joseph E. Leigh, Esq., to come to her sick room. On entering the room she called or beckoned him to her bedside. She could only speak in a whisper. He bent his ear near her lips; she said: I am going to die; it is best for me to go; God has been very good to me in taking me away without pain." She then asked him to promise her that he would meet her in heaven, as his brother, Frank, had done before he came into the room. She further requested that there should be no funeral sermon, no empty show, that she should be buried in the simplest style, and that no monument should be put over her grave. She then bade her children present good-bye, and said she wanted them all to meet her in heaven. This was her last conversation. She then fell asleep. The following morning she awoke with her mind wandering. In the afternoon she died. Everything connected with what she said and did in dying was in character with what she was while living. There was nothing of rapture or ecstacy, but perfect composure, tranquility and peaceful resignation. She had no fear of death when the hour came, whatever of timidity and distrust may have disquieted her mind in her anticipations of the solemn close of life.

"So fades a summer cloud away;
So sinks the gale when storms are o'er,
So gently shuts the eye of day;
So dies a wave along the shore."

There was moral grandeur and sublimity in the death of this good and true woman. The following is a beautiful tribute to her memory from the pen of one of her sons, written to an absent brother, giving an account of her death: "Now that she is gone, how we shall miss her! and for many a bitter hour will we regret that we ever did anything to give her pain. Her whole life was a sacrifice for her children, and their happiness the subject of her daily prayer. Her pleasures were few and far between; and when I think of her now, I always remember that passage from the good Book: 'These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.'" He adds: "In this last attack she said from the beginning that she was going to die—that it was best, and she preferred to go."

The funeral services were conducted by the Rev. S. A. Steel, her pastor, in accordance with her wishes, and she was laid away in "the silent house," appointed for all the living. The severed chain is again reunited, and she lives with the husband of her young life in the bright and beautiful land, where graves are never opened, and the tear-drops of bereavement never fall.

From the Work.

HOLMESVILLE, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: Our people are pressing forward. The busy season is on the farmers; and they seem to be wide awake, and think not of sleep until the sowing and reaping season is over. I hope all will be wide awake to their soul's eternal interest. I am trying to sow good seed in honest hearts. Our Sunday schools are all interesting and I trust, doing good. It was my good fortune to visit the Sunday school at Bogue Chitto last Sunday; and was pleased to see so many in attendance; parents with their children, all cheerful and happy. The singing was splendid. Bogue Chitto is destined to be a place of importance; business is increasing all the time. Several new mills are now in operation near Bogue Chitto, cutting up the pine timber, of which there is great abundance; and yet, more mills are in prospect. I visited Bro. J. M. Wesson's mill a few days ago, four miles east of Bogue Chitto; he has a railroad running successfully from the mill, to the depot. Bros. Wesson, Marshall and Thompson were with us on this trip as we rushed over rough and smooth road. At times we felt that we might be safer on terra-firma, but the noble little engine took us safely through—our faithful little engineer, Ben Brazile understood his business.

I enjoyed a visit to the parsonage at China Grove a few days since, and found Bro. G. M. Gilmore, the pastor sick in bed, where he had been confined with sufferings for six or seven weeks. He has done but little work on his circuit this year; but has won the confidence and esteem of his brethren, and they are very kind to him and his precious family which consists of a noble wife and several children. Bro. Gilmore now has hopes of recovery; and his flock are anxiously awaiting his return to the pastoral duties of the circuit. God bless the good brother and his charge. We mingled our prayers together before parting, and the spirit of the Holy One was with us.

Brother and Sister Packwood have recently sustained a sad affliction in the death of their eldest son, who was brought home from Oxford, last Saturday, a corpse; he died there on Thursday night, the 5th instant of measles and pneumonia. A long letter from Bro. Fitzhugh, one of the professors stated that he was reconciled to die. He confessed that he had been a wicked boy; but that he had been praying, and that God had heard his prayers. May the bereaved parents have the sympathy and prayers of the church. H. P. LEWIS.

HOLMESVILLE, MISS., May 13, 1881.

DECATUR ALABAMA

Dear Bro: Just returned from District Conference. I had a very pleasant and profitable session. The district is improving, outlook more promising.

Proud audience was given to religious services, and we had a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The Missionary Anniversary was a success, yielding $230. Moulton entertained us well. Health of country good. Farming interests backward.

J. W. NEWMAN.

Decatur District, North Alabama Conference.

May 17, 1881.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1881.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

LOVEST THOU ME?

BY PATIENCE.

If thou lovest, love thy neighbor,
And not only say "Lord! Lord!"
Pure and undefiled religion
Seeks not favor or reward.

Chorus:

So said Jesus loving Jesus'
Ere he died on Calvary,
He that keepeth my commandments,
He it is that loveth me."

If ye love me, clothe the naked,
Feed the hungry, help the poor
Strangers entertain, lest angels
Should be driven from your door."

Chorus.

If ye love me, be not troubled,
But believe that I am true.
In my Father's house are mansions
I'll prepare a place for you

Chorus.

If ye love me, ask the Father,
Anything it in my name,
I will do it, that the Father
May be glorified the same

Chorus.

Yet a little while I leave you,
But the Comforter I'll send,
This will verify the promises,
"Lo! I'm with you to the end.

Chorus.

And my peace I give unto you,
Not the peace the world e'er made.
They, "let not your heart be troubled Neither let it be afraid."

Chorus.

Sunday-School Lesson.

DELIVERED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KLEINER.

Second Quarter. Lesson X.

GOLDEN TEXT: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."—John xii. 32.

SUNDAY, JUNE 5, 1881.—LUKE xxiii. 33-46.

33 And when they were come to the place which is called Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors, one on the right hand, and the other on the left.

34 Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. And they parted his raiment, and cast lots.

35 And the people stood beholding. And the rulers also with them derided him, saying, He saved others; let him save himself, if he be Christ, the chosen of God.

36 And the soldiers also mocked him, coming to him, and offering him vinegar,

37 And saying, If thou be the King of the Jews, save thyself.

38 And a superscription also was written over him in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

39 And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself and us.

40 But the other answering, rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation?

41 And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds; but this man hath done nothing amiss.

42 And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom.

43 And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise.

44 And it was about the sixth hour, and there was a darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour.

45 And the sun was darkened, and the veil of the temple was rent in the midst.

46 And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, he gave up the ghost.

Verse 33. And when they were come to the place which is called Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors; one on the right hand, and the other on the left.

And who are they? A notable company of soldiers and priests, with a crowd of roughs, leading along three men, two of whom have on their shoulders a cross: the third cross, which another bears, is not for himself, but for a most wonderful criminal. The patient, pale-looking man, with the saddest face ever seen, who follows, is the victim for whom the third cross is made. When they come to the place called Calvary the crosses are laid upon the ground, and each of the three criminals, the one called Jesus and the two malefactors, were taken by the strong arms of heartless soldiers and stretched upon the cross, and nailed there by three nails, one in each hand and one through both feet. Then, at the word of the captain, the three crosses, with their weight of anguish, were raised up on one end, one man standing at the foot of the cross guided it into the socket, and three men at the other end heaving and lifting, with one or two surges, set it up. The cross dropped into its place with jar, that awoke an agony in every fiber. What an ending to a life the noblest. Here is the Benefactor dying with the malefactors.

What an end to the journey of this Benefactor! He travels from his home in heaven down to earth to do good, and his "going about to do good," is brought to a sudden and awful close in this dreadful place outside of the holy city, where criminals suffered, the place where the ghosts of murdered men are said to haunt. Behold the three crosses! A dying Saviour, with an unbelieving dying on the one side and a believer and friend dying on the other. Has any other world witnessed a scene like this? Oh, mournful Calvary!

Verse 34. Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do.

The look of those three faces, when the crosses settled down to their places, and the weight of those bodies suspended upon three wounds, started agonies throughout the entire body which none could begin to conceive who had not hung on the cross in their faces there was an appeal of such utter anguish as to beggar all description, and to stop the beating of the heart of every witness. These features of pain were enough to have photographed a vision of horror on the memory indelible forever. Sure, never to my latest breath can I forget that look.

He who was without sin was first to break the awful silence of that first moment of the up-lifting. The executioners were the first who received the benefits of an interceding Lord. Father, forgive them, they know not the anguish they cause me. How could they know. It was unknowable and unrevealable. The crucified only knew what they did. "And they parted his raiment, and cast lots." The criminal, when fixed to the cross, was stripped of his clothes, and these were the perquisites of the executioners. It took four men to promptly and conveniently crucify a criminal, and even then sometimes they must call in help, where the criminal was a man of unusual strength and fierceness. They divided out, by common consent, his clothes, except his tunic, which was too valuable to put into one of the four lots. So they brought out their dice, and threw for the ownership of this, the seamless tunic of our Lord. Some of the followers of our crucified Lord have taken their cue from these inveterate gamblers, and see no impropriety in bringing dice into their aid to decide who shall give the least in the Lord's service. All lotteries in church fairs are on a line with and in imitation of this scene at the foot of the cross, with this difference, that these men fulfilled a prophecy; but the modern church dice has no prophecy to fulfill.

Verse 35. "And the people stood beholding;" that is, gazing upon such a spectacle as the eyes of men or angels had never witnessed before. Some of the spectators had joined in the cry: Crucify him! Some were strangers, some were children; none who saw it ever forgot the sight. It was a sight which one would fain look not on, but there was a strange fascination drawing all eyes. Men are looking upon it to-day.

"The rulers also with them derided him, saying, He saved others; let him save himself, if he be Christ, the chosen of God." The words were a prophecy, and an admission of what he had done. He had saved many others—Lazarus from the grave, sinners from their sins, men from the chains of satan—any of which works were more difficult than the drawing of three nails; but he was occupied now in a greater work than saving himself. He was saving a world from a more awful end than death on the cross; even from an eternal burning in a fire that can not be quenched.

Verse 36. And the soldiers also mocked him, coming to him, and offering him vinegar.

Verse 37. "And saying, If thou be the King of the Jews, save thyself." With the soldiers it was sport; with the Jews it was something much deeper. It was prophesied of him that he should drink vinegar. It was in answer to his cry, I thirst, that they offered it to him. He refused the portion they offered him, a mixture to stupify and deaden suffering. It was prophesied that it should be offered; so that even in his thirst and in his dying agonies he fulfilled all that was written of him.

If thou be the King of the Jews was a scoff at Christ and a sneer at the Jews, uttered, no doubt, by the soldiers, as learned of their rulers, who despised the Jews fully as much as they did the sufferer.

Verse 38. And a superscription also was written over him, in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

In Greek, for foreigners and strangers; Greek being the learned language of all nations; in Latin, for the Romans; in Hebrew, for the Jews. The superscription was prophetic of the relation of the cross to all nations of the world.

The inscription was not exactly alike in words. The Hebrew inscription was literally Jesus, the Nazarene, King of the Jews. So we often see these four letters on sacred pictures, I. N. R. I. I. for Jesus, N. for Nazarene, R. for Rex (Latin for King), I. for Jews, the I and J being written alike. The Greek was: "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews." The Latin was just the two words: "Rex Judæorum."

It was the attestation, even from the cross of Jesus' true character. He became King in his death. His cross gave him his crown. Do you want a kingdom? Then bear the cross, for there is no crown without the cross. This motto, worked in illuminated letters, we often see without remembering the only King who ever found on his cross a crown.

Verse 39. "And one of the malefactors, which were hanged, railed on him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself and us." He asked an impossible thing. How could Christ save him if he saved himself? The law must have one death. The law had no claim on Jesus, but it did upon this railing malefactor. His prayer was his ruin. If the law would release either it was the one who had no sin. His taunt was more than he thought; it recoiled upon himself in most awful destruction.

The challenge of this man argues singular fatuity. If he was Christ he was innocent, and was under no obligation to prove his claim by saving one who deserved to die; and, if in mercy he does save him from the consequences of his crime, he can only do it by dying for him.

Verse 40. But the other answering, rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation?

Verse 41. And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds; but this man hath done nothing amiss.

Verse 42. And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom.

Verse 43. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise.

I know not how the dying power of the Son of God could be better illustrated than in the salvation of this thief. If Christ, at the weakest point of his career, when dying between two dying criminals, can snatch a sinner from the grasp of the law after it had already begun to inflict its penalties upon him, who may be not save now that he is alive forevermore? He made his grave with the wicked. He is associated in his death with Barabbas. His body was nailed to the cross made for Barabbas. He was Barabbas' substitute. So that Barabbas' history set forth the power of his death to save the body.

The two malefactors set forth his death from two opposite standpoints—its power to destroy and to rescue. These three men, in their relation to Christ in his death, bring out the grand design of it. This drama God's infinite wisdom managed. He arranges all the acts with consummate skill. And now the curtain falls.

Verse 44. And it was about the sixth hour [12 M.], and there was a darkness over all the earth until the ninth hour [3 P. M.]

Verse 45. And the sun was darkened, and the vail of the temple was rent in the midst.

Ominous signal that the closing scene in the drama was at hand.

Verse 46. And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, he gave up the ghost.

The physical cause of his death is thought by many to have been the rupturing of his heart. He died broken-hearted. The real cause of his death, the whole Bible tells us, is that sinners may be pardoned justly. Else his death, the death of this one altogether lovely, the beloved of God, the eternal Son, was an act unjust and unaccounted for. He had no death to die for himself; he knew no sin; he was the sinless one.

His death had one great purpose, to redeem sinners by atoning for their sins; one great lesson, to believe in him whom God has set forth to be a propitiation.

Plagiarism.

Modern literature doubtless furnishes abundant reasons for pointing out the evils of plagiarism. But while this is true, the great range and copiousness of modern thought afford proportionate excuses for its practice. Minds which a century ago would have been capable of attaining the honors of original thinkers must now content themselves with ingenious manipulations of ideas already developed, because those fields of study, coming within the limits of their powers, are explored by others who have gone before; and the exploration has been especially perfect in that which falls under terms of poetry and belles lettres. The leading intellects of the times find much to be done in systematizing the accumulations of the past, and in drawing out and elucidating the principles involved; but this work requires too much depth and comprehension for mediocre thinkers.

With these facts before us, plagiarism should appear in a different light to that in which P. A. Stor seemingly views it in the ADVOCATE of March 31. Though he does not explain what he means by an intentional literary theft, from the tone of his article it is to be inferred that his notion is—the use of an argument not original—one the substance and conclusion of which were the product of another brain. For, said he, after relating the story of a D. D. who repeated verbatim one of Mr. Talmage's sermons before a General Conference, call plagiarism is not thus bold and entire. A less complete, though scarcely less guilty, form consists in borrowing ideas and cloaking them under a new draping of words and arrangement." And further on he says: "A still milder form prevails in ordinary conversation. Stale puns and trite comparisons, second-hand plans of work and old lines of thought, criticism on the past and prophesies for the future, are palmed off as original."

One whose mind is fraught with the ideas of others, in delivering himself upon the ordinary subjects of his study, must necessarily in this way use the arguments of his authors in support of the conclusions he proposes to enforce on the minds of readers or hearers, and for the reason that there are often none remaining to be brought forward, or none that would sufficiently sustain him. And in such a case the charge of theft could not justly be made, unless the writer or speaker laid claim to originality. For instance, let the subject be prayer, and the conclusion to be enforced, the necessity of prayer. The best that could be said in this case has perhaps already been said, and said in the best manner. The only way to avoid the charge of "borrowing ideas and cloaking them under a new drapery of words and arrangement" would be to avoid the subject. But think of such an absurdity! This being the necessary work of a minister, think of his not reading a sermon or essay upon it in order to preserve the consciousness of not using the arguments of another.

Men who think and publish their ideas to the world should do so for the sole purpose of supplying their fellowmen with correct notions of things; and when for any other purpose, it is an ignoble work in which no one should openly pride himself. Thoughts are put in circulation for use, as the commercial currency is circulated, and, when honestly applied to its legitimate end, it is a good work, of which no one should be ashamed. We encourage youth to read and accumulate knowledge. Why, if it is not to be used? Why observe other people's modes of working if we are not to follow them when our own judgments approve them? And, above all, we are not to communicate them, for the good of others, without stating explicitly that they are not our own. Shall we communicate to others only for the glory of it?

Great care should be taken in charging a writer or speaker with theft. His motive should be considered. Is it to instruct, he may use the arguments of others. Is it to defend, he may use the arguments of others. Is it to expose error, he may use the arguments of others. Is it to win the honor of being original, he should not use them. And when an author's words and arrangement of thoughts are copied he should have the credit, but it would be almost an absurdity to credit him for more.

G. D. PICKELS.

HOLMESVILLE, LA.

Southern University, Greensboro, Ala.

THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE BELLES-LETTRES SOCIETY.

Last night the Belles Lettres Hall was thronged with people. The object of the assembly was to celebrate the twenty-second anniversary of the above-mentioned society. This society has sent forth a good many distinguished men, and has been the means of conferring great benefits on those who have departed from her classic hall. Though a member of the "rival society," I must say that in her contests with the Clariosopic Society in intellectual strength she has nothing of which to be ashamed, but much of which to be proud. May she ever occupy the position which she now does, and may those who leave her hall in the future be as distinguished as those in the past.

The exercises were opened with prayer by the Rev. J. A. Moore. Music, which was suitably interspersed during the exercises, followed the prayer, and after which the orator was introduced. The orator of the occasion was the Rev. J. E. McCain, of Falkland, Ala. Mr. McCain is an A. M. graduate of this college, and an ex-member of the Belles Lettres Society. I have not time to dwell on his speech, but will say that his advice to the young men was such that, if followed, their fame would be spoken of with praise by future ages, and their lives would be referred to as worthy of imitation.

Next in order came the debate. The question was: "Who are the most Beneficial to mankind, lawyers or physicians?" The affirmative side was ably represented by Messrs. J. R. Connerly, of Vienna, Ala., and T. E. Foster, of Troy, Ala., while the negative side was well defended in the persons of Messrs. C. A. Rush, of Prattville, Ala., and L. C. Jones, of Satartia, Miss. I have not space to discuss the young men's speeches, but the Belles Lettres Society has reason to be proud of her sons, both on account of their sound arguments as well as their graceful and forcible delivery. The president, Prof. Stott, of this college, after a few appropriate remarks, gave his decision in favor of the negative.

After the benediction all returned home well pleased with the evening's entertainment. Success attend the Belles Lettres Society in all its efforts. May she be as useful and ornamental to society as she has been, and may she ever go forward doing the grand work for which she was designed.

GAMMA.

The Sabbath.

MR. EDITOR: May I claim a small space in your valuable paper, even if I venture upon a subject which has been presented to the public time and again? I allude to the Sabbath and its observance. I was impressed with the force of a remark made a few days since: "Is the Sabbath to be ignored by us all?"

If this remark called forth a train of sad reflections, was it not because I realized that a sad truth was being brought home to the hearts of many of us at least? Most of the children among us attend the Sabbath-school, and are instructed in the "ways of God." But where are the parents of many of those children on the Sabbath day; and what are their home influences and examples? How are their Sabbath evenings spent? In reading sound and wholesome literature to the children, and impressing upon their minds those truths which alone can make them christian men and women?

Does the mere outward observance of the Sabbath fulfill our duty and obligations as Christians?

How far we all fall short in this particular! Did we all realize the importance of early influences and examples, how few of our young men would be seen lounging around the street corners on Sunday, or, what is worse, spending the Sabbath at the card table!

We look to the "strong arm of the law" to enforce the Sunday laws in our midst, but the law is powerless unless we, as men and Christians, come up to "our standard of duty." Our judges (and I am thankful that we have some God-fearing men among them) may deliver their charge with the eloquence of a Prentice and the logic of a Webster, but what will it avail without our moral influence and support!

No; we need less law; but we need more of God's love among us, more of vital, earnest religion. That religion which will enable us, with one accord, to rise up and put down satan in our midst. May God enable us to realize our duty, and do it as Christians!

G. A. WALKER.

Colportage Sketches—No. 4.

BY A. M. JONES.

SHE DON'T WANT TO GO TO HEAVEN.

After the third or fourth halloo at the gate, in front of a small log house, a little girl, of about thirteen years, came to the door, when the following comical dialogue ensued: Who lives here? "Daddy." Where is your daddy? "In the new ground." Where is the new ground? "Right down there," pointing toward brush heaps and fresh-cut timber. He could neither be seen nor heard. Is your mother at home? "Yes." Will she come to the door? "No." Ask her to do so? "She says she won't." Is she sick? "No." Tell her to come to the door, I want to speak to her. "She says she won't." Does she want a Bible? "I don't know." Ask her. "She says she don't." Does she have a Bible? "I don't know" (a little impatient.) Will you ask her? "She says she don't want any." Can she read? "I don't know." Ask her if she can read. "She says no." Can your daddy read? "I don't know." Ask your mother if she can read. "She says she believes so." Can you read? "No." Did you ever go to school? "No." Do you want to go to school? "No." Don't you want to learn to read? "No." Do you ever go to church? "No." Does your daddy ever go to church? "I don't know." Don't you want to learn to read the Bible, be good, and get to Heaven after awhile? "No." Don't you want to go to heaven when you die? Little girl silent, but a fat boy of about eleven years, who in the meantime had seated himself on the door-steps, cried out: "No; we don't want to go there." By this time I was embarrassed, confused, and unconsciously looked around to see if any one was near witnessing my defeat. Not knowing what else to say or do I said: "Sis, if you will come here I will give you a Testament." After a moment's hesitation she came in a run, snatched the book out of my hand, darted back into the house and shut the door. I never learned anything of the history of the family. My sympathy was excited on account of the condition of those unhappy children. The boy a chubby, clever-looking little fellow, with sallow face, bare, fat feet and long disordered hair. The girl, tall and slender, with rather a pretty face, and large, soft blue eyes. Education and home training, no doubt, would have developed them into an intelligent, useful man and refined noble woman. While driving on to the next house the beautiful lines of Greg were suggested to my mind.

"Full many a gem, of purest ray serene,
The dark, unfathomed caves of ocean bear:
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its fragrance on the desert air."

Marriages.

DEAN—SMITH.—In the Methodist Church, in Shreveport, La., May 3, 1881, by Rev. John T. Sawyer, Mr. Franklin A. Dean and Miss Annie Smith, both of Bossier parish, La.

CALLIHAN—KIZER.—At Bellville, Texas, May 4, 1881, by Rev. A. S. Pondexter, Mr. Willie Boyle Callihan, of Tangipahoa, La., to Miss Sallie J. Kizer, of Bellville, Texas.

BRODRICK—TEGARDEN.—At the Episcopal Church Summit, Miss., on the evening of May 12, 1881, by Rev. W. W. Hopper, Mr. W. H. Brodrick and Miss M. Key Tegarden.

Obituaries.

MILLSAPS.—Died on the nineteenth of February last, Mrs. NANCY MILLSAPS, wife of Green Millsaps. She was born in Franklin county, Miss., July 8, 1818, near Wright's Church, at that time called Wright's Camp Ground, where the early Methodists met annually and spent a week in the worship of God. She was born and reared amid the scenes and teachings of early Methodism, and in the days of heroic self-denial and devotion to the church, she imbibed the freshness and purity of that religion which so characterized her after life, even to the last moment. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in early girlhood, and formed a connecting link between that generation of vigorous, hearty, self-consecrated Christianity, which bore the impress of a true and honest morality, and a high spirituality and the age of morals and formality. There were traces of spirituality in the morning of her life, and nurtured and nurtured in this school of disciples her whole nature was moulded in the most solid forms of a Christian life. She was of a meek, enduring faithful spirit, ever unmurmuring, whether under heavy burdens or passing through severe afflictions.

Soon after her marriage she lived near Sweet Water Church, in Copiah county, Miss., and after removing a short distance, and there living for several years, the family again returned to Sweet Water, where she lived until a short time previous to her death. Living near the church, her house was liberal and abundant in its support of friends and visitors. All were welcome day or night while in attendance upon the church. Ever cheerful, eager in her invitations, hundreds were fed and sheltered at her home, and at the church, and all felt the warmth of her hospitality. She was unrelaxing in all her efforts in the church, liberal and abundant in her co-operation with a free and open-hearted husband, she filled a sphere upon which the marked blessings of Jesus Christ were pronounced here on earth. Always at her place in the house of God, and from the house of God she led her guests to the bounties of her table and the comfort of her rooms. She was unwearied in her attentions to the sick, and none were more ready than she to carry comfort and consolation to the house of suffering. A neighbor she was obliging and reciprocal in all good. She lived for God, her family and for others, and prayed not herself to any labor or salvation to promote the honor and welfare of each.

She knew no theories, nor was she demonstrative in any quality of heart or mind, but her life was one of assiduous toil and action, inspired by a strong nature within. She lived until her head was white with the gloom of a hearty old age, passing through the vicissitudes that marked the period of our land in which she lived, ever unchanging herself, submissive and constant to good works. Her life was the brightest testimony to her reward hereafter. At no time unprepared, she was ready when the summons came in the form of a sudden paralysis, stilling all her powers. She ceased to act and to live. A short time before her death, from deadly afflictions and the feebleness of age, she left her home and went a short distance among her children, to close her life among them.

Her name is cherished and remembered by a large circle of friends and co-workers, and sadness, mingled with glorious hope, is felt in the heart of her stricken and bereaved husband, and her seven children, all of whom are members of the church of God.

Motherless and widowed quite she lived and labored, and has gone to the land of the blessed, to wear a crown, the reward of an humble, working, submissive life. "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth."

W. G. M.

CHILDERS.—MRS. CATHERINE CHILDERS, the subject of this memoir, was the only daughter of Col. David Files, and was born in Georgia, April 5, 1800. Her father was a soldier in the war of 1812, and was wounded in the battle of New Orleans, while serving on the staff of Gen. Jackson.

The family removed from Georgia to Alabama, first to St. Stephen's and afterwards to Mobile, in 1832, the lovely young daughter was married to Mr. Hyram Cheeseborough. Four years after this she was left a widow; and in 1842 she was married to Dr. Childers, an esteemed physician of Mobile. This union was also terminated by death; and for many years Mrs. Childers was left to battle her way alone in the world.

She was converted to God under the ministry of Dr. Jefferson Hamilton, and became a member of the Franklin Street Methodist Church in 1837; and afterward, with forty-eight others, she went out from the "Old Beehive" to form the Society now known as the St. Francis Street Church. In this church she continued a most faithful and devoted member until the day of her death, April 17, 1881.

Hundreds of grateful hearts will tenderly cherish the memory of this mother in Israel. She was indeed a friend to the friendless, a mother to the motherless. The orphaned ones for whom she cared with such patient thoughtfulness, and loving solicitude, have found in her death an unspeakably sore bereavement.

The writer of this sketch knew her intimately, and was her pastor during a term of four years. Seldom has it been his privilege to know any one whose virtues were so manifold and whose faults were so few. She was one who literally lived for others. Self-denial was the most prominent trait in her character. Her exemplification of this spirit was extraordinary, and can only be accounted for by the fact that she had, in unusual measure, the mind which was in Christ, and that, feeding the words of her Lord, she was even happy to lose her life here in order to find it hereafter.

Regardless of her own comfort and convenience, she was ready at all times, night and day, to respond to the calls of suffering and sorrow. Though delicate and feeble herself, she often left her own sick bed to minister to those whose asked her loving services during yellow fever epidemics, her presence with the sick and dying was like the watch care of an angel. When other hearts grew faint, and other feet grew weary, this noble, heroic woman secured most strong up "to deeds of wondrous strength, and patience more than human."

She dearly loved the church, and always, when able, was a regular attendant upon the means of grace. She was ever her pastor's friend, and a loving nurse to him and his family in sickness.

Her last illness was long and painful, but she was patient, resigned and trustful to the end. When the golden light of Easter Sunday broke upon the world, the prisoner was released, and the immortal spirit entered into glory everlasting.

In affection's urn we will treasure up the memory of this dear and sainted woman, and after a time we will meet her again.

FELIX R. HILL.

CAMPBELL.—MRS. CATHERINE D. CAMPBELL, maiden name Smith, was born in Charleston, S. C., May 11, 1818. She was a resident of the city of New Orleans twenty-one years. The past twelve years and more she has resided in Pensacola, Florida. For twenty-eight years she has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Sunday evening, April 17, she died very suddenly of heart disease. To a few moments of her death she was walking about the house in usual health, cheerfulness and vigor. In her unexpected removal we have all recently brought to mind the uncertainty and brittleness of life's thread. In a moment gone from earth, an inhabitant of the spirit land. Surely here we have no continuing city. Truly "in the midst of life we are in death." How blessed when, with the Psalmist, we can say: "My flesh and my heart faileth, but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever." Sister Campbell was possessed of many excellent traits of character. A kind mother, a devoted friend, a good neighbor, cheerful and pleasant in the social circle, and tender and considerate of the poor and suffering. She was firmly attached to the church of her choice. The pages can record her name as a willing and liberal contributor to the Disciplinary collections of the church, never turning a deaf ear to any appeal or call made upon her by him. She had no farewell words. But let us hope the stealthy coming and attack of the last enemy found her in the exercise of the Saviour's warning injunction, "Watch."

C. H. PERRY.

LANGFORD. Tribute of respect to the memory of MARIE HANNAH LANGFORD, adopted by the Sabbath School at Ingalls Chapel, Mississippi, on Sunday, May 1, 1881.

Whereas, It has pleased God in his divine wisdom to remove from our midst, to her heavenly home, Marie Hannah Langford, daughter of our beloved pastor, Rev. D. C. Langford; we deem it our duty to record our high appreciation of the excellent qualities of the deceased; therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of our little friend the Sabbath school has lost one of its most punctual, worthy and intelligent pupils, and that we officers, teachers and pupils of this school, respect and cherish her memory because of her lovable character.

Resolved, That while we mourn her loss, we bow submissively to the will of him "who doeth all things well," and rejoice in the belief that she safely rests in "the better land," where we all hope to meet her, the "sweet by and by."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be recorded upon the minutes of the Sabbath school, a copy be furnished the bereaved family and one to the New Orleans CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

BELL SOUTHWORTH, for Com.

SHIELL.—At a meeting of the Floyd Sabbath School, held at Floyd, May 1, 1881, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father to remove by death from our midst ROBERT HOWARD SHIELL, son of our beloved pastor and a member of this Sabbath school;

And whereas, It is right and proper, and in perfect accord with our feelings, to give some expression of the loss this Sabbath school has sustained in the death of our little Howard, and of our sorrow in sympathy with our dear pastor and his family, therefore be it

Resolved, That in the death of our dear little friend we recognize the hand of an ever-loving, all-wise Providence, and although our imperfect faith often fails to comprehend the mysteries of his dealings with us, yet we are assured that it is more a stroke of kindness than chastisement; and we humbly bow to his afflictive rod, knowing that he doeth all things for the best. Robert Howard Shiell was a child of affection. His great delight was to sing spiritual songs in which he greatly excelled. We shall never forget the last Wednesday night prayer meeting two days prior to his death. His singing was marked by an unusual degree of animation and fullness, closing the last stanza of the hymn, "There is a fountain filled with blood," and the last he ever sang, it seemed almost prophetic, as the sweet tones fell from his lips. Then in a nobler, sweeter song. How little did we think it would be so soon realized by our little friend, but God saw proper to call him home, and while the choristers of heaven lay sweet voice is attuned to the melody far surpassing that of earth.

Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved and afflicted family our sincere sympathy and condolence.

Resolved, That the expression of the sorrow and regret that we feel be spread upon our Sunday school minutes, that a copy of the same be sent to the family and also to the New Orleans CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

BELL SOUTHWORTH, for Com.

CALLIHAN.—MARTIN C. CALLIHAN, died very suddenly of paralysis of the heart, at Le Chart, Texas, March 27, 1881. Brother Martin was born in Mississippi in 1816, and was the eldest son of William and Mary Callihan. I know very little of his past life, only that he was a member of the Methodist Church, South; that he was a good provider for his family, and relatives who from time to time made his home their own.

He has left an aged mother, (who is the only living sister of the Rev. H. Pipkin, of the Mississippi Conference, deceased,) father, brothers and a sister to grieve for him. But the ones that will miss him more than all others will be his wife and children. A kind husband and father can never be forgotten.

SISTER IN LAW.

BEACOCK.—Little Edgar P., son of Dr. J. W. and Mrs. Lou E. Beacock, was born February 12, 1881. His sickness was that of pneumonia, which preyed upon his little body for about ten days, he then took the measles and died shortly afterwards.

Little Edgar was a sweet child, and loved by all who knew him. There were fair promises in his face; but, alas! no sooner than those to whom he was dear learned to love him, death laid his cold hand on him. He was then borne by angels to the band of little ones around the throne to bear to He now awaits the arrival of those who loved him.

A. E. W.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1881.

"LIFE'S A SERMON."

"Our every life is a sermon."

"Life's a sermon!" Let us preach it—
Preach it ere this hour is past;
Up and preach it—do not waste it;
Perhaps this day may be your last.

"Life's a sermon!" How then live ye?
Is it full of lies or love?
Is its logic clear and truthful?
Does it point the heart above?

"Life's a sermon!" What then saith it?
Does it upward, upward move?
Is it written clearly, plainly,
Every deed a work of love?

"Life's a sermon!" What's its substance?
Is it woven from thyself?
Does it only prate of pleasure,
Pride and ease, and love of pelf?

"Life's a sermon!" Ever preaching,
Vast its influence here, above,
All its notes a tinkling cymbal,
Should the heart be dead to love?

"Life's a sermon!" All must preach it,
Battling on with many a foe,
oh, that God may see Christ's beauty
Gleaming through its tears and woe!

"Life's a sermon!" Oh, great Master!
Make it pure, and true, and free,
And its weft, though tangled, broken,
Yet may guide some soul to Thee!

Notes of Life.

BY BISHOP ROBERT PAINE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Awhile before the proclamation of peace and the order to leave the Indian territory was announced, my uncle was stricken down with the terrible epidemic, and but for his regular habits, his strict temperance in all things, and his robust constitution, he would speedily have shared the fate of many others. But, under a kind Providence, he withstood the shock, and while too weak to ride on horseback, he started in an army wagon, after nearly all had died for home, determined as to the disbanding of the army, that my father, sent forward a friend with a carriage to meet him, and bring him home. This friend consented, if I would go and assist him. My mother was seriously ill, and father could not leave her. The trip was a long one, partly through the Indian nation, and not without peril? but, after a painful mental struggle, mother consented to risk her boy to save a brother. It was a rough and tedious trip. After entering the Cherokee Nation, we began to meet squads of soldiers, and afterwards hosts of them; there seemed no end to them. Wagons full of sick and wounded passed us. We often inquired for my uncle. One would say, "He is dead;" another, "No, not dead, but too sick to leave the fort;" the next, "He is very feeble, but is trying to come on." Many of them knew him personally, and spoke respectfully and kindly of him. Still keeping on our way, at last we met him, lying in an army wagon, too feeble to sit up. We took him in charge, and got him finally to Fort Deposit, on the Tennessee river. As he was too sick to proceed, my friend left me to wait and get my uncle home, as best I could. I did wait, and after a good detention, succeeded in getting him home in a way almost miraculous.

While I would not undertake to vindicate, as strictly proper, the terms just used as applicable to events alluded to, "almost a miracle"—yet I have always regarded the incident as signally providential. The long contest between the Indians and the whites had been settled for a time by Jackson's Tennesseans in favor of the latter race. The last remaining great hostile tribes in the Southwest had been promptly and effectually conquered, inasmuch that, whatever local and temporary disturbances and disasters have since been caused by their forays, their final defeat has been only a question of time. The victorious soldiers left the Indian territory. The long line of vehicles accompanying them had crossed the Tennessee river, leaving behind the wagons bearing the wounded and sick. The commissary was about exhausted. I saw hundreds of barrels of flour and other army stores lying on the banks of the Tennessee river, unfit for food, while the soldiers were suffering for subsistence. Indeed, the unsound condition of some of the food issued to the army had been a prime cause of disease and death. And when the wagons containing the better part of the stores passed, with the main body of the soldiers out of the Indian Nation, the sick and worn-down whose homes were in the southwestern part of Tennessee found themselves huddled together on the bank of the river, almost entirely destitute of food and tents, unable to endure the long and circuitous trip by land, and without the means of going down the river. Among others thus unfortunately detained, was the command to which my uncle belonged. To add to my trouble, he relapsed, and his death seemed inevitable. I succeeded, however, in getting him into an old Indian wigwam, and nursed him with tender and loving care. He repaid it by his gentleness and hopefulness. No preparation seemed to have been made for this contingency. How or when this crowd would be removed, or be cared for while staying there, no one could tell. They lined the river-bank and roamed the swamp for game. That was a restless and strange crowd: soldiers, Indians and negroes were huddled together. Home and its precious inmates, sweethearts and friends, good food and plenty of it, peace, rest and war stories to be told to eager-listening hearers around old family fireplaces, doubtless rose in imagination to many. As for me, when I could be spared from the bed-bank of my sick uncle, I was trying to get medicine or food for the sufferer. I tried to kill birds and squirrels, and hired Indian boys to assist me in it, and was surprised that with his bow and arrow they could beat my gun. Game soon disappeared from the camping-place, and we could not get enough for the sick. Time passed very slowly and sadly. At last an old, very large hulk of a flat-boat, which had brought down corn and meat for the army the year previously, was found not far from the camp, and it was determined to repair it and use it as an ark of safety. At once the wildest enthusiasm seized the whole crowd. By early dawn next morning a rushing throng was moving to the "ark." They swung my uncle in a blanket and bore him along; horse and gig and myself was put into it. At one end of the long craft they improvised a bed, and protected it from rain and sun, and allotted that as the place for their "Major" and his "nephew." Then with a thundering shout of "Farewell to war," responded to by the wild whoop of their Indian allies on the shore, they cut loose and slowly drifted away on the bosom of the beautiful Tennessee. It was, of course, a flat-bottom boat, huge and heavy, known in Western navigation technically as a "broad-horn." Nothing but steam could propel it up a current, and this was more than ten years before a "steamer" was seen in the Southwest. The writer has witnessed many outbursts of joy. He remembers when the victorious volunteers returned to their homes, and peace was announced between England and the United States in the war of 1812, and again in 1815, after Jackson's victory at New Orleans, and the enthusiastic reception of La Fayette in 1825; but he never saw such a happy crowd as filled that old boat on that bright spring morning. Nothing short of the pure and sacred raptures of the "love divine, all love excelling," was comparable to it. War was over, and we were going home. It was our wish to stop at a place called Dill's Landing, where the river passes within ten miles of Huntsville, Ala., and where the volunteers from North Alabama and Middle Tennessee would debark for their homes. The fear was that in the darkness of the night on the wide and rapid stream we might pass beyond, and then we knew not where we could land. It would be death if we should be borne to the "Muscle Shoals." But no fears of the "flood or field" could restrain my jubilant companions. They sang all manner of camp-songs, told camp-tales, laughed and shouted all the evening, and until the long night had almost closed, when exhausted by excitement and rude merriment, they all fell into a profound sleep. During all that night I was awake, I could not sleep. Just at the moment when the boat had swung herself around, I perceived in the dim twilight of the early morning that we were near some landing-place, and cried aloud, "Here it is." The sleepers awoke instantly, and soon we drifted so near the shore that some leaped on it in time to prevent the boat from passing by. That I call providential.

The "ark" had served its purpose. Its freight was discharged at the right place, and thence diverging to various points, and it was left to its fate.

It was deeply affecting to witness the separation. I, who had witnessed their meeting in Fayetteville the year before, where I went to bring back my uncle's horse, and was so delighted with the pomp and circumstance of war as to be so be allowed to be a "soldier-boy," had now witnessed the contrast in this ill-starred company of suffering, sick and worn-look remnants of various regiments who were leaving behind them hundreds and thousands who will sleep until the trump of God shall awake them. Nor did they in their haste forget my dear uncle. Tender and noble hearts often beat in rude bosoms. They lifted him out, and waited until he was snugly seated in the carriage, and as they respectfully took their leave Major Farewell, hoping they should soon meet in Fayetteville, where they were to be formally mustered out of service and receive their back-pay, many an eye was dimmed with tears. They were prophetic.

The route to Huntsville was through a fertile, level and highly-cultivated country, most strikingly in contrast with the wild unbroken forests, the bayous, and treacherous marshes of the Indian territories through which we had lately passed. "The Bell Tavern," standing near that magnificent river which bursts forth and rolls its transparent flood from beneath the lofty "Montesano" peak of the Cumberland Mountain, was the terminus of that day's travel.

A nice, well kept hotel with attentive servants, clean beds, and good food well prepared, and free from the intrusion of gamblers and drunkards, is a benediction to the weary traveler, especially if he be sick and suffering. Such seemed that place to us. But even here my uncle found himself too ill to proceed, and we were detained. However, we had skillful physicians and drug stores, and he again rallied for a last effort to reach home. During those last two days' travel of thirty miles several incidents occurred which my memory recalls.

Upon leaving the hotel I picked up several bits of paper which had been thrown aside. They were of uniform size, but bore dissimilar marks. I showed them to my uncle, and asked their use and name. I had never seen one before. At once he became grave, and inquired how and where I had got them. My frank reply seemed to assure him as to my innocence, and he told me they were cards used unduly by gamblers, and that I must not take them home, but throw them away instantly. Then in the kindest and gentlest tones, he said: "I have mixed with all sorts of men and seen all kinds of dissipation; but I never gambled, swore an oath or was intoxicated; nor did you ever know your father guilty of those things." He proceeded to urge upon me the folly and fearful consequences of a sinful life, avowed his reverence for God and his supreme desire to lead a Christian life. His character as a brave, virtuous, true gentleman and Christian stood out before my youthful mind so morally lovely and beautiful that it is distinctly and indelibly engraved upon the tablet of my memory.

At nightfall, after a second day's journey from Huntsville, we reached home, and my precious charge was delivered over to my father and mother. Words cannot express their gratification, but when with tenderest hands they bore his enfeebled body into the house and found it needful to put him to bed at once, my mother's heart was deeply troubled. She could scarcely recognize him as indeed her brother; but the best medical skill, combined with constant attention and a resolute purpose to be present, if possible, at Fayetteville, to make his final report as an officer and receive his discharge, so sustained him that he began to convalesce. Unfortunately at this critical period, a quack doctor persuaded him that he had a remedy which would promptly relieve him and enable him to go to the disbandment. Weak and exhausted in body and mind, he too readily believed what he ardently hoped for, and, without consulting his friends, became the victim of the confidence-quack. A quick relapse and breaking down of his vital forces followed, and amidst the bitter tears and heart-rending grief of the family he calmly and resignedly closed his life.

In looking through my escritoire a few weeks since I found, neatly tied away, a package of letters which, over sixty-four years had lain there, being his memoranda of army matters; notes, accounts, and official statements, his will and testament, and also proof of a strong and tender attachment to an accomplished young lady, whom he expected soon to make his bride. How many bright prospects and fond hopes were crushed in his young life's sudden close! We buried him near a Baptist church, which stood on an eminence that overlooks the pretty valley of Cross Water, near where the Nashville and Decatur railroad passes, and about five miles southeast of Pulaski. It was the burying-ground of the neighborhood, and was in a beautiful, natural forest. In after years I went in search of his grave, but was surprised and mortified to find no trace of church or cemetery. The dead were forgotten, and their memorials had perished. The very men who had turned pale at the rumor of an Indian raid, and fled with their wives and children to less dangerous neighborhoods, heartlessly drive the plow over the sacred spot where rests the dust of the brave volunteers who promptly stepped between the fugitives and the uplifted tomahawk, and paid the penalty of their patriotism with their precious lives. But their sleep is not the less profound nor their rest less sweet because no costly monument, inscribed with their names and deeds, marks their graves. Eyes that never sleep, and sentinels that never forget or grow weary, watch over and guard their dust; and true to their trust, will surely see to it that no one shall fail to respond to the roll call at the last day; for "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth."

—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—The Presbyterian churches of the United States have established schools for girls in Brazil, in the cities of San Paulo, Campinas and Rio Claro, of the Provinces of San Paulo. In these schools the teaching of the Holy Scriptures occupies a prominent place. Miss Thomas, a lady of independent means, established at San Paulo City a Kindergarten, which is in successful operation under the care of a lady whom Miss Thomas trained for the work. Two ladies, one a Presbyterian, from Charleston, S. C., the other a Protestant Episcopalian, from New York city, have established in San Paulo City a girl's school at their own expense. This school educates gratuitously a certain number of girls, giving them books, tuition, board and, by and by, clothing, and adopting its alumnæ a home free of charge whenever without situation as teachers and in need of such help.

—The highest industrial college in the world is said to be the Tuskegee Missionary Institute. During the session which has closed with 1879, there were in all 363 pupils of both sexes, many of them boarders, who paid in fees $3,630, besides $2,550 still due. Livingstonia and Blantyre send 6 pupils, 16 came Natal; 11 from the country of the Zambesi. The carpenter had 30 apprentices and journeymen under him; the wagon-maker, 8; blacksmith, 5; the printer, 3; the bookbinder, 2. On the farm were raised 1,661 bags of corn, bean, potatoes, and wheat. Twenty-one students, of whom eleven were Kafirs, were in the theological department.

—The mission in the Turkish Empire of the American Board, the American Presbyterian Board, the Church Missionary Society, the London Jewish Society, the Church of Scotland, the Free Church of Scotland, the Methodist Missionary Society, the Southern Presbyterian Board, the United Presbyterian Board, the Reformed and Irish Presbyterian Churches, are invited to participate in the Missionary Conference to be held in Constantinople June 3; also representatives of Robert, Armenia, Central Turkey, and Syria Protestant Colleges, the British and American Bible Societies; and the London and American Tract Societies.

—The history of the Protestant missions in Japan is in reality a second edition of the Acts of the Apostles. Eight years will measure the time of actual work, yet there are to-day 160 missionaries, 50 organized churches with 8,000 memberships, a Christian community of 8,000 schools, dispensaries, colleges, thousands of religious works, translations of Scripture, and the circulation of a Christian newspaper in all parts of the Empire. The Bible has been admitted into the higher schools, and a Christian calendar has been adopted.

—From Japan comes the announcement of the publication of no fewer than five Japanese New Testaments. These are: (1) The Standard, which was executed in April, 1880; (2) The Romanized New Testament, which has the Japanese of the Standard edition, in Roman letters; (3) The Common Reader's edition in the cursive Japanese characters; and the (4) Shinkaifana and (5) Kanten New Testaments, which are printed in a combination of the Japanese and Chinese characters.—Sunday School Times.

—The Swedish Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Brooklyn and New York holds church property valued at $25,000; and the interest on the indebtedness, $2,800, is now provided for by the Dorcas Society. Sixty-seven probationers have been received during the year; the total membership is 250, and there are 180 scholars in the Sabbath-school. The members have labored energetically, given liberally, and prayed earnestly, and the work of the Lord has prospered in their hands.

—A correspondent of the Monthly Record states that "the chief discussion at the recent Missionary Council of the Presbyterian Alliance, held at Allahabad, Dec. 15, related to the training of students. A resolution was passed that the different missions represented in the Council should move their respective churches at home to found a union college at Allahabad for the training of students of divinity, to have three professors, and the teaching to be chiefly in English, but partly in Hindoo."

—Dr. Blaikie's "Life of Livingstone," published by Harper & Brothers, is one of the most valuable contributions to missions of recent date. It is replete with prophecies, not the least of which was uttered before the great explorer set forth on his mission: "The time will come," he says, "when rich men and great men would think it an honor to support whole stations of missionaries, instead of spending their money in hounds and horses."

—The Rev. J. B. Whiting and Mr. E. Hutchinson, of the Church Missionary Society, have returned to England from Madeira after a conference with Bishop Crowther, "Archdeacon" Crowther, and three other native Africans connected with the Society's work on the west coast. Much interest was manifested by the people of Madeira in the presence of such an assembly, and it is hoped that the conference may result in important developments.

—The Wesleyans (Methodists) have entered the Nizam's territories in India. No Missionary Society has hitherto penetrated the interior of Hyderabad, with its 11,000,000 people. The Wesleyans have been invited to establish schools in the cities and villages of that province—the hot bed of Moslem fanaticism and political factionists, like no other spot on earth.

—In Southern India there are 200,000 converts included in the several Protestant churches. An interesting conversion has taken place in Calcutta. Gogal Chunder Biswas, an elderly Hindoo gentleman, and the head of a respectable family which has occupied an influential position for many generations, was lately baptized by the Rev. J. Hector.

—The first Protestant church in Beirut Syria, under the Presbyterian Board, have called as their pastor, Mr. Rizzook Barbari, a native of the country, and have subscribed the full amount of his salary, $560 dollars in gold. This is an encouraging fact.

—Sir Charles Trevelyan is of the opinion that India will at last be converted by wholesale, and the Lucknow Witness indorses the opinion.

—A dispatch from Cape Town says it is reported that four missionaries have also been murdered by the natives.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The Romish priests in Belgium have used their ecclesiastical power to such an extent in opposition to the State schools that a commission has been appointed by the Government to inquire into the facts. Over a hundred witnesses have been examined fully confirming the complaints made. It is said that the testimony so taken has been furnished to the Pope, and that he has ordered the priests to desist from their opposition.

—The spiritual efforts made in some parts of England by churchmen to interest the class of workingmen who have rarely seen the inside of a church, have been gratifyingly successful. Laymen, pious women and clergymen have united in this work, and the encouragement which they have found gives hope of great improvement in the condition and habits of a large part of the people.

—Contributions of the Church for Education.—Returns have been made by the government which show that during the last nine years the church of England contributed, for educational purposes £5,630,541, and that within the same period all the other religious bodies in the realm contributed an aggregate of £1,324,505, the proportion in favor of the church being more than four to one.

—The Ministerial Union of San Francisco and Oakland issued a call acknowledging the gracious results of Moody and Sankey's meetings in "the awakening of Christian life and the salvation of hundreds of souls," and recommended that Feb. 17 be observed as a day of fasting and prayer for the continued success of revival efforts.

—It appears that the story of the murder of a Jesuit priest in Guatemala, simply because he transgressed a law of the country banishing Jesuits, was utterly without foundation. The man is said to be alive, and laughing at the report of his supposed execution. We may add that we have seen nothing of this denial in the Catholic papers which printed the report.

—It is announced that the great incomplete pile shown to visitors to Montreal as St. Peter's is to be abandoned and pulled down. The church was built after the model of St. Peter's Cathedral at Rome. Lack of funds to complete it is the cause assigned for its demolition. It would have been the largest church edifice on the American continent.

—In Illinois there are 217 Congregational ministers, 211 churches, 23,306 church-members, 30,617 children in the Sunday-schools, and $61,953 25 spent in benevolence. There has been an increase in membership of 4,376 in 10 years. In the year 1870 there were received 2,370; in 1880 1,432.

—The Old Catholic organs of Germany and Switzerland report that a whole village, Banholt, in the province of Limburg, has legally joined itself to the Old Catholic Archbishop of Utrecht, which archbishopric has been separated from Rome since the Jansenist movement.

—At the session of the New York East Conference Dr. Abel Stevens located, Dr. G. W. Woodruff became supernumerary, Dr. W. H. Boole was appointed conference temperance agent, and Dr. D. Curry was appointed to the Eighty-second Street Church, New York city.

—M. Hyacinthe Loyson has addressed a letter to the President, of the Paris Municipal Council, asking for the use of the Church of the Assumption, in the Rue St. Honoré, for his congregation, as he is compelled to give up his chapel in the Rue Rochechouart.

—The Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago are considering the proposition to build a new structure on Monroe and Dearborn streets, to cost something like $100,000.

—Since 1870 Protestants have built 11 churches in Rome, opened many schools, asylums, and reading rooms, and distributed millions of Bibles and tracts. Several new church edifices are in contemplation.

—The new church of St. Michael and All Angels, Haworth, England, on the site of the old one so closely associated with the Brontë family, has just been consecrated. The only part of the old church remaining is the tower.

—The additions to the colored Baptist churches of Georgia the past year amounted to 8,000 or 9,000. The new members are said to be of a better and more useful class than those received in former years.

—The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Pastors' College, London, has located 472 ministers, since it was founded, and 132 churches have been formed and 36,123 persons baptized through its instrumentality.

—With the Pope's approbation, a "School of Gregoriana" has been lately founded in Rome. The purpose of this school is to introduce reform in the Church music of the Catholic world.

—In British Columbia the Roman Catholic Bishops have petitioned the legislature to exempt the Catholics from school taxation wherever they sustain denominational schools.

—Rev. J. Hyatt Smith, pastor of the Lee Avenue Baptist Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., and member elect of the next Congress, has avowed himself a Restaurationist.

—The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church will hold its quadrennial session in Cincinnati, beginning the first day of May.

—The Book of Common Prayer has been translated into more than 50 languages, and 1,000,000 copies of it are printed every year.

—Roman Catholicism does not prosper in the city of London. The latest statistics indicate a steady decline in interest and numbers.

—Rev. Mr. Brooks has been appointed by the American Baptist Society of Philadelphia to do Sunday School work in Louisiana.

—Calvary Baptist church, New York city, has contributed $65,000 to foreign, home and city missions since Christmas.

Our Young People.

THE LITTLE KNIGHT

BY GEORGE COOPER.

His shield—the sacred that he bears,
With shining face, each morn,
His armor—'tis an honest heart,
That still would God's home scorn.
No soul on royal cloth of gold
More radiant than he,
Our noble little school-boy knight,
Flower of our chivalry.

How proud his crest at tournament,
The loud and merry game,
When daring gauntlet flings he down,
Eyes bright and cheeks aflame
Or by a sister's side he walks
To shield her gallantly
Our noble little school-boy knight,
Flower of our chivalry.

His clarion challenge, hark! it rings
With clear of artless grace
And dauntless brow he meets the strife,
Defiance in his face
The guerdon of a mother's love
How proud to win is he,
Our noble little school-boy knight,
Flower of our chivalry.

What honored stations of the land
Await him down the years
Joy to the Knightly heart that taught
Love dark Misfortune fears
Bright be his crest forevermore
His watchword "Duty" be,
Our noble little school-boy knight,
Flower of our chivalry.

—New York Independent

Pearl Raindrop.

"I am afraid to fall," says little Pearl Raindrop, with a shiver, as her fat Nurse Cloud grows less and less.

"Tut, tut, child!" says her fat nurse, "you need have no fear. It is nice down there, I think."

"Were you ever there?" asks the little one, all in a tremble.

"I suppose so, but I do not remember," is the reply.

"I am sure I had much rather stay up here," said Pearl; "I don't see why all my big sisters and cousins are in such haste to leave the bright sky and their good nurses. Shall I find you when I get back?"

A heavy peal of thunder drowns Nurse Cloud's reply.

"Oh, that awful thunder! Every one nearly shook me off," cries the little trembler. "I am dreadful scared. I am afraid to go down! I wish my sisters wouldn't crowd me so, in their hurry to get away. Do you think it hurts to go?"

"I am sure it can not, as my nurse nearly shook me off," cries the little trembler. "I am dreadful scared. I am afraid to go down! I wish my sisters wouldn't crowd me so, in their hurry to get away. Do you think it hurts to go?"

"See how brisk and happy the others are! Here is little Silver-ball tugging to get away too! I shall keep her with me until she is larger."

"O, please, nurse, let me stay until it is time for Silver-ball to go!" pleads Pearl, in tears.

"No, my dear," says Nurse Cloud, kindly, but firmly. "It is your time now, pet. Don't be scared; good-by!"

Down, down she went, with scores of tiny drops no bigger than herself chasing after her. Faster and faster, until our timid little Pearl would gladly escape from the hubbub, and go down to the earth quite alone.

But now the sun comes out from the darkness and sends his rays of bright light far down to the regions beneath her. Looking eastward, she sees a broad circle of raindrops decked in red and green and orange and blue bending over a beautiful wood.

"How happy they all seem to be," she thought, "and I alone am sad and homesick. I wonder what shall become of me! Shall I fall into that broad blue lake, or be lost in the great forest?"

Now the towers of a princely mansion appear beneath her. Nearer and nearer comes these massive towers, and poor little Pearl Raindrop is gazing down at the hard paved court below. She may be dashed to atoms. Just then from an open window in one of the towers is thrust a golden head. A pair of eyes, blue as the sunny sky, gaze upward to see if the storm is over. How roses Pearly, plump into the open eye of the princess; and the little lady laughs, although her poor eye is blushing scarlet. Grateful for her escape, our pretty raindrop has no notion of staying in that blue heaven to cause it owner pain,

So she tumbles about,
And tumbles out.

She falls pat into the white cup of a sweet tuberose which rests in the knot of lace upon the bosom of the little princess.

What a soft, sweet bed is this for the tired little traveler!

The raindrops have ceased to fall. Many of them have already stolen away, while others have started on their homeward journey to the clouds. Pearl is pining to go back. So narrow is the place, and so deep, that, try as she may, she can not get out.

Out into the sunshine of the court trips the happy princess. O, how warm shines the summer sun!

The sweet tuberose wilts a little. Pearl feels her gossamer wings slowly unfolding. Her heart grows lighter and lighter. Then in sweet trust she mounts the trackless air, and finds herself once more in the region of her delight, in the clouds.

How did she go? And who saw her? Many a boy, in Our Little Ones.

Splicing the Ladder.

One night the large and splendid Sailors' Home in Liverpool was on fire, and a vast multitude of people gathered to witness the conflagration. The fury of the flames could not be checked. It was supposed that all the inmates had left the burning building. Presently, however, two poor fellows were seen stretching their arms from an upper window, and were shouting for help. What could be done to save them?

A stout marine from a man-of-war lying in the river said, "Give me a long ladder and I will try it."

He mounted the ladder. It was too short to reach the window. "Pass me up a small ladder," he shouted.

It was done. Even that did not reach to the arms stretched frantically out of the window. The brave marine was not to be balked. He lifted the short ladder up on his shoulders, and holding on by a casement, he brought the upper rounds within reach of the two men, who were already scorched by the flames.

Out of the window they clambered, and creeping down over the short ladder then over the sturdy marine, they reached the pavement amid the loud hurrahs of the multitude.

It was a noble deed, and teaches a noble lesson. It teaches us that when we want to do good service to others we must add our own length to the length of the ladder.

Harry Norton saw that his fellow-clerk, Warren Proctor, was becoming a very hard smoker and a hard drinker, although only sixteen years old. When he urged him to stop smoking and drinking Warren replied:—

"Why, you sometimes take a cigar and glass of wine yourself."

"If you will sign a pledge never to smoke a cigar or touch a drop of liquor, I will do the same," was the reply.

The bargain was made, and Harry saved his friend by adding the length of his own example to the length of the ladder.

A widow lady near me was suffering from sickness and poverty. Her daughter, a delicate, refined girl, said to herself, "My mother must be taken care of; I'll advertise for a place as a servant-girl."

She did so. A gentleman saw the advertisement, and determining that the brave girl should not undertake that, he procured her a situation as secretary in an institution where she gets six hundred a year. An unselfish daughter thus brought relief to a suffering mother. She spliced the ladder with her own self-denying exertions.

It is a noble thing to be unselfish, and to give up gratifications for the sake of other people.

When the great Christian sage of old said, "It is right not to drink wine by which my weak brothers stumble," he added the length of his own influence to the ladder for saving others from drunkenness.

I could tell of two Christian lads, well educated and refined, who go every Sunday to a mission school in a dirty degraded street that they may encourage some poor ragged boys to go there too. Those two boys have the spirit of Jesus Christ. They are not selfish, and they mean that the poor ignorant lads shall climb up in the world over them.

That is the way to imitate the Divine Master, who gave himself that men might climb out of the folly and degradation of sin into heaven itself. Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

READING A DUTY AS WELL AS A PLEASURE. Visiting a circulating library not long since, we were much astonished to find that among the young ladies who were choosing books not one of them asked for anything but the most miserable, unhealthy and sensational novels. The girls who read this we hope are different types of their class, not content with reading infernal books, but trying to acquire a taste for good, wholesome literature. Habits grow upon us easily, and if the habits of reading foolish books is formed, the power of reading better books will be lost, and our taste in reading be reduced to a very low standard.

To read is both a pleasure and a duty, and girls should take the trouble to make themselves familiar with good books, cultivating a taste for the true and beautiful, in preference to being carried away by some foolish novel. What girl who truly enjoys one of Beethoven's symphonies would ever listen contentedly to "Yankee Doodle," or how can she who lingers before a beautiful statue be satisfied with looking at a block of marble? So, as we are drawn toward the highest and noblest in art, in like manner are we lifted up by reading a good, healthful book, and lose the taste we may have had for anything shallow and unreal. If after reading a book we have an inclination to read better, purer lives, or to raise ourselves to a loftier height intellectually, that has our reading been a profit to us, and we are safe in selecting such books for our perusal; but if, on the other hand, we lay aside a book which has led us to sympathize with a foolish or vulgar sentiment, or bewildered us with exaggerated impossibilities, we may be sure that such reading is as poison to the mind, and such books should be avoided, or they will prevent the appreciation of what is noble and good. Remember, we are to a great extent what we make ourselves, and to be educated and instructed, we must be careful how and what we read.—Christian at Work.

MAGGIE'S FAITH.—A bright little girl of about five years old, went with her aunt to the village church of Prestwold. A collection was made for the widows and orphans of the poor men who had lost their lives in the late colliery accident. Maggie was told that the collection was for supplying bread to the starving little ones, and promptly expressed her desire to add her mite which, alas, amounted to but one penny. Her aunt, wisely judged it better that the child should only give of what was her own, and Maggie eagerly dropped her coin into the bag as it was presented. Before the service concluded, she pulled her aunt by the sleeve and whispered, "Auntie, will my penny buy them a loaf?" The aunt replied that it would not be sufficient, but, touched by the look of sorrow and disappointment which clouded the sweet, upturned face at the announcement, she hastened to add, "It would buy a roll for them, Maggie." The child seemed but half satisfied at this suggestion and presently whispered again, her countenance beaming with gratified assurance, "But auntie, Jesus Christ can make that roll go as far as he did the loaves and fishes you told me of." Dear little Maggie! her faith was practical and active, and during her short, sweet life, often put to shame the doubts and fears of her elders. She was suddenly called home about three years after the above incident, but in her little life gave sweet testimony that she had been born again, and had God's holy spirit dwelling within her.—Day Spring.

SPOUT OF THE WHALE. A naturalist writes as follows regarding the spout of the whale:

I several times went away in a small boat from the ship, to shoot birds for our collection.

On these occasions the whale sometimes blew quite close to the boat. The appearance of a whale's spout as seen from the level of the sea, is very different from that which it has seen from the deck of a ship; it appears so much higher and shoots up into the air like a fountain discharged from a very fine rose. The whale, of course, in reality does not discharge the water, but only its breath; this, however, in rushing up into the air hot from the animal's body, has its moisture condensed to form a sort of rain, and the colder the air, just as in the case of our own breath the more marked the result.

When the spout is made with the blowhole clear up above the surface of the water it appears like a sudden jet of steam from a boiler. When effected, as it sometimes is, before the blowhole reaches the surface, a low fountain as from a street fire plug is formed, and when the hole is close to the surface, at the moment a little water is sent up with the tall jet of steam. The cloud blown up does not disappear at once, but hangs a little while, and is often seen to drift a short distance with the wind.

The expiratory sound is very loud when heard close by, and is a sort of deep bass snort, extremely loud and somewhat prolonged; it might be compared to the sound produced by the rushing of steam at a high pressure from a large pipe.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D.D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
Rev. J. W. Reid. Rev. W. L. D. Bennett.
Rev. C. E. Galloway. Rev. C. W. Carter, D.D.

THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1881.

Spiritual Appetite.

The desire for food is implanted for an end—the preservation of life. The pleasure of eating and drinking is for a purpose, but subordinate to the final cause, the maintenance of health and strength. Ordinarily, however, in eating and drinking we are moved by the appetite, sometimes, perhaps rarely, thinking that our lives depend upon it. Then, again, the desire for life and health may be strong while there is no desire, but rather a loathing of food. It is somewhat so in spiritual things. There is an appetite for goodness, an intense longing for righteousness, and a craving for purity, without much conscious reference to the danger of hell or the blessedness of heaven. And there may be a fancied desire to escape the miseries of the one, and to gain the happiness of the other, with no taste for that holiness without which no man shall see the Lord. Fancied desire, we say, because no one really wishes for heaven, who has no desire for goodness, and because he who loves sin really prefers hell to heaven. The chief facts about these two states are that the one is holiness and the other is sin; and, as our desires are respecting these, will be our final destiny.

The hungering and thirsting after righteousness is, therefore, an appetite for spiritual things; they are desired because they are loved, and because in themselves desirable. Righteousness is an end in itself and the condition of all blessedness. Here it is heaven in the bud, there it is the full blown flower. In the soul's thirst for purity and love, and for communion with God, there may be little thought about happiness, or hell or heaven. Righteousness is sought for its own sake, and because there is a hungering for it. It is not exactly what is called the desire for happiness, certainly not the desire for pleasure, though these, in the deepest and truest sense, are connected with purity of heart. It is hungering and thirsting after righteousness this singly and supremely. This, wherever its attainment may lead, and whatever its pursuit may involve. It is not possible that righteousness should be anything else than blessedness, but in this world it is often associated with suffering, and brings persecution, and requires self-denial. To those who truly hunger and thirst, righteousness is its own exceeding great reward. To be right in thought, in heart, in life, is the supreme and sufficient bliss, and no burden of sorrow or affliction can lessen the greatness and completeness of the satisfaction.

Right relations with God, as realized through faith in the atoning sacrifice, are the goal of penitence, but in this, and afterward, is the cry of the soul for personal purity, for deliverance from all that mars the beauty of holiness, and for a character that is positively and nobly good. The spiritual appetite is not a mere mysticism nor is it the product of ascetic dreams and theories. It is a thirst to be honest, to be unselfish, to be truthful, to be liberal, to be without egotism, and to be wholly under the dominion of love. The spiritual appetite, where it is truly formed, will keep the fleshly in subjection and under control, and it will expel the love of the world and the pride of life. It will lead us away from the charmed circles of worldly dissipations and gayeties, and draw us irresistably to the word of God, to the house of prayer and to the closet. He that hungers will arise and go to the Father's house, where there is bread enough and to spare, and he will seek those fountains where living waters are flowing. Without this desire for spiritual things all religion is a barren formality, a drear and lifeless desert, a table spread and adorned, but without a morsel of bread.

The Master promises fulness to those who do hunger and thirst after righteousness. "They shall be filled." It is not so with other than spiritual desire. Who ever heard of the avaricious having enough? Was worldly ambition ever satisfied? Are pleasure-seekers ever contented? Righteousness is the only thing that can fill the soul. Even what we call the thirst for knowledge, blindly lauded as excellent, is, when apart from moral and religious principles, a very puerile and ignoble thing, and there is little satisfaction in it. However it may occupy the intellect, the nobler part, the spiritual, is starved and empty. There is in righteousness a joy unspeakable and full of glory.

But the bread of God is for those who hunger for it. Those who draw water from the wells of salvation are they who thirst. Those who have an appetite for righteousness are sure to get it; and more, this righteousness will be in abundant measure, and the soul will be filled. The most melancholy thing connected with any man is the lack of an appetite for spiritual things—a state which, if it rises somewhat above indifference, still lingers amidst the externals of religion, in an atmosphere of slavish fear and sensuous hope, but knows nothing of a healthful appetite for God and holiness.

Gambling Sanctioned.

We believe that gambling is prohibited by law in Louisiana. Instead of enforcing the law the Mayor of New Orleans has prescribed certain limits within which gambling houses may be opened, and that they shall pay license. They are limited to certain localities, for the avowed purpose of police supervision, and to guard against disorder, fraud and robbery. If permitted throughout the city, the police would not be able to keep an eye on them.

This compromise between the authorities and the gamblers is based upon the belief that gambling can not be suppressed, and that something will be gained by regulating what can not be prevented. This argument would apply also to prostitution, and to almost everything of an immoral and criminal character. Because men will commit crime, it is therefore better to regulate it than to prohibit, or attempt to suppress or punish it. It is contended that the propensity to gamble is so universal, and so deeply ingrained in human nature, that men will gamble anyhow. They will do it secretly and clandestinely if the law is enforced against open and public gambling houses. Therefore, tax gambling and control it. This is the argument which seems to meet the approval of our secular press, and of the Mayor of New Orleans. If gambling, however, is a vice, by law a crime, and confessedly a corrupter of public morals, why should it not be so treated? Why except this while we pretend to punish men for carrying concealed weapons, for vagrancy, and even for smoking opium?

The most irrefutable argument against licensing that which is criminal is that it sanctions crime. This conclusion can not be avoided. By licensing and regulating gambling it is sanctioned, made lawful, and made respectable so far as government sanction can do it. A prohibitory law, however feebly enforced, is at least a public protest and condemnation, and has a moral weight and influence. The moment vice is recognized and licensed, a great, if not altogether effectual, barrier is swept away, and the flood gates are opened to deluge society.

If they wish to suppress gambling, the authorities can do it about as effectually as they can suppress other crimes. An independent and determined administration, and an honest police force, can do it. There will be some evasions of the law, some secret gambling, but these can be ferreted out by vigilant officers, backed by proper authority. The gambling power is very strong; it is popular with the vicious classes, among whom are many voters; it has money and influence. Nevertheless, we believe the majority of the people, embracing the tax-payers, and the moral and intelligent element, would heartily support a firm and vigorous enforcement of a law to shut up the gambling dens.

We suppose, however, we shall never have such an administration, municipal or State, until the people can throw off the chains of partizan tyranny, and vote according to their convictions. The moral issues involved in open gambling houses and in the Sunday liquor traffic as well, are also connected with the material welfare. These are questions that affect the tax-payer, the social respectability and the commercial prosperity. We do not question the uprightness of our Mayor, nor the sincerity of many who approve his policy, but we believe their logic is vicious and sophistical, and that this method of dealing with vice and crime is the open path to general social corruption, and threatening to all real prosperity. The Christian citizen is bound to condemn it, and to oppose it by all legitimate means.

The revised New Testament is now in the market. Tons of them were on sale in New York last Friday, and we suppose everybody will have a chance to get one soon. It is stated that the New York Herald would publish the entire revised New Testament in its edition of Sunday, May 22. Besides the authorized edition printed in England, and now on sale in this country, some of our American publishers have issued cheap editions.

The world seems all agog to see this revised New Testament. It comes to us as a revelation of the deep interest people generally feel in the Bible. Most people who read commentaries and hear preaching are, or ought to be, already familiar with the changes that have been made. They are not many, and none of them affect any important fact or doctrine. The one thing that seems to impress our secular papers is that hades in some places has been substituted for hell. How happy sinners would be to get rid of the doctrine of future punishment. Although this substitution of hades does not touch that doctrine, yet the popular notion of the ignorant and of scoffers is that this new version rejects hell altogether.

One benefit of the revised edition may be to induce many, who have hitherto neglected the Bible, to read it. To many who thus read from curiosity, and hoping to find relief from the dreaded doctrine that, in spite of their avowed unbelief, still haunts their imagination and disturbs their peace, light may come, and Christ may be revealed. And many lukewarm Christians, whose Bibles have been but little used, will probably wake up, and search the long-neglected word, just to see what all this stir means. With a revival of Bible reading, there may come an awakening of sinners, and a reclaiming of backsliders, and thus the word shall grow mightily and prevail.

It may be that all this incessate and groundless clamor, alarm and curiosity will bring about good, and that, by means of them, the word of the Lord will have free course and be glorified. People who have not been to church for a long time will now, perhaps, bethink them of this new Bible, of which so much is being said, and go out to hear what the preachers have to say about it, and to learn from which version they take their texts. Some will doubtless be surprised to find that it is the same gospel, the same old story, that the rich man is still in torment, that the wages of sin is death, and that he that believeth not shall be damned.

While we see no reason in the revised edition, for all the fuss that is made about it, we hope that the sensation will be something more than a mere ripple upon the surface of popular attention. Rather, we hope that the interest excited will be so deep and permanent that there shall be a lasting gain for the truth, and for the spread of scriptural holiness.

For the rest we can assure our dear conservative friends that they need not tremble for the ark of God. The word of the Lord endureth forever. The old version will stay in the pulpits and the homes for some time, and whoever chooses may keep it till he dies.

Alabama Notes.

Winter lingered very late, and, after killing nearly all the fruit, finally yielded to spring, which made haste to give place to summer. By this arrangement of the seasons vegetation was made very backward. But at last the gardens are giving us something better than spring greens, such as strawberries, peas, etc. Oats are beginning to head out—in some fields to ripen. Corn and cotton came up unusually well, and farmers are hard at work "chopping out" and "sweeping up." If they can go into June with hands clean of the first grass, the management of the crop to maturity is comparatively an easy work generally. For grass killing the weather is and has been for some time very fine, days being long, hot and dry. And the prospect is generally flattering; plants look well.

This is the pushing as well as the poetic part of the farmer's year. No time now to stop and, resting on the plow-handles, to write verses, as Burns did when he turned up the mouse's nest and tore up the daisy by the roots. The plow boy, who is always the central figure in the poetical conception of the farm, should now be described by the words of Clare (who doubtless wrote from personal experience,) as "unoiled and sweating," especially about the time to take out for dinner. And about the time to take out for night, he should illustrate the well-known line of Gray: "The plowman homeward plods his weary way." For, unless the people, white and black, live close, work hard and long, and make good crops and get good prices, this vital interest will be utterly prostrate. The quantities of corn, hay and meat to be bought for the making of this crop are unprecedented, and prices are unusually high. A railroad superintendent told me last week that he had already hauled, of corn alone, as much as would consume one-third of the cotton he carried to market last fall and winter. Under such a system of planting and working and credits, no country on earth can prosper. If the children of this generation are wiser than the children of light, then woe to the land and the church.

The monotony of church movement has been broken by news of revivals in a few places of the Conference. Williamson, Crews and Peterson seem to have had the best times. Others have been at work with some success, and are still striving with hope of larger success. May this spirit extend through the entire Conference. Methodism can not and should not live without revivals. The work at Greensboro was, I hear, the best perhaps the college has ever enjoyed. There is really no use for church schools unless they have these seasons, in which our sons and daughters are converted, and afterward confirmed by the peculiar training of the class meeting and prayer meeting. Faculties should be organized with special reference to this particular point, and should not be satisfied until they see these results. Revivals among the pupils, and religious development afterward, should be the tests of fidelity, as much in them as in preachers in charge of congregations. For it is only when these results are seen that we can assuredly know that the school is doing the work divinely appointed for the church to do.

Next month the commencements will commence, and the boys will tell us of Thermopylæ, Actium, Runemele, Waterloo, Linden, Bunker Hill and New Orleans; of Thebes, Troy, Athens, Rome and Pompei, of Olympus, Ossa, Pelion, the Alps and the "Tall Cliff that lifts its awful form;" and refresh us in all ancient history, biography, poetry, philosophy, mythology and everything else. The girls will tell us of blushing morn and dusky eve, twinkling stars and sparkling dewdrops, gentle murmurs and fragrant zephyrs and the hill of science, and I don't know what all. Is it not marvelous that boys and girls, from sixteen to twenty years old, can write so learnedly, so wisely and so elegantly about so many different things? Can it be possible that religious teachers allow them to commit the low crime, sometimes committed in the pulpit, the crime of theft, mildly called appropriating the ideas of others? The presidents, with all the personal and official dignity which the real importance and proper pageantry of the occasion can command, in pathetic baccalaureates, will tell them that, having learned to use their powers in these juvenile gymnasiums, they are now to take their places among the actual contestants of life, and, by wonderful feats of skill and strength, are expected to win undying laurels; and, after a little love-making on the last night, these beautiful scenes will close. I say beautiful scenes, for there are others in which only the rasters take part, and these are marked mainly by care and anxiety and trouble. The board at Tuskegee will have no trouble this year. Thanks to the wise and able administration of Dr. Mussey. But the board at Greensboro have long had and will continue to have trouble until the college shall be sufficiently endowed by the church.

If the church in our bounds was unorganized, or compelled to build houses for worship and parsonages and schools, there would be some excuse for our present educational embarrassments. But with a well-organized Conference of 141 enrolled preachers, among whom are young men, full of vigor and hope, and old men, ripe with experience, broad in culture, and gifted in intellect, and with 31,000 members, among whom are men and women of all ages, the equals of any in the land, in every respect, and $700,000 worth of unincumbered property in actual possession, it is a downright burning shame that we do not furnish means sufficient to educate our own children. Should such a people cry poverty and wait for some great-hearted Vanderbilt or Seney, of his unsolicited generosity, to endow our colleges? or should they cringe and fawn at the feet of some millionaire, till, like the unjust judge, he bestows the gift to be rid of the "continual coming?" or should they say: "We can do it ourselves, and we will!" Let the manhood and self-respect of Alabama Methodism answer.

J. W. R.

Notes from Nashville.

I was present at a meeting this week at the Publishing House, convened to perfect financial plans for the establishment of Dr. Price's Ladies' College in Nashville. It is considered a fait accompli. The college is to be located on Broad street, not far from the Custom-house. Dr. Price is a capital preceptor; he has succeeded well this his first year in Nashville, and Nashville can not afford to do without him.

We have just stereotyped a sprightly work for Bro. Billingsley, of Louisiana: "The Temple of Pleasure; A Vision." It is a powerful dissuasion from such diversions as can not be used in the name of the Lord Jesus." Give it a wide circulation. Theaters, race-courses, ball-rooms and groggeries are sending our people to the dogs and to the devil. If you will allow me to call a spade a spade.

We shall soon have stereotyped the first volume of Bishop Doggett's sermons. Hic labor, hoc opus est. Mr. Editor, do not have any posthumous works. Send your manuscripts to us while you are alive, to prepare them for the press, or to be consulted in the case of lacunæ, heterophony, etc. However, the public shall soon have a capital volume of sermons of our glorified Bishop. The biographical sketch of the Bishop, by his life-long friend, Dr. Edwards, is a valuable addition to the work.

Allow me to express my thanks for kind editorial notices of my Commentary on Romans. Though I do not fish for puffs, and do not puff my own goods, yet I am not insensible to kind criticism, and not ungrateful for favorable appreciation. If any of our church editors have failed to receive the volume, they will please notify the book agent. This is my sixth volume of Commentaries on the New Testament. I know not what the future may bring forth. The translation and notes on Romans, written, revised, rewritten, with immense labor, ought to be not altogether unworthy of the subject. But let others judge.

We have just finished the General Minutes. They would have been out in January—not postponed to May—but for causes beyond our control. We will see whether or not they can be controlled next year. I call your special attention to the general recapitulation, which will reward analysis.

We are all on the qui vive for Vanderbilt commencement. The sermons are to be preached by Drs. Messick and Oliver, Sunday, May 22. Commencement day is Founder's day, May 27.

THOS. O. SUMNERS.

Nashville, May 19, 1881.

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate says:

"Dancing people are constantly calling for Scripture texts forbidding the indulgence of their beloved amusement. The text they know best is Solomon's—'There is a time to dance'—as if the wise man, with all his knowledge, had the remotest idea of a society dance. We have been challenged to preach on this text, but up to this writing have not found time or occasion.

"Some things about the dance we can understand, although without experience. For instance that people enjoy it; its gayety, its rhythmic movement and whatever else belongs to it. But one thing about it we do not understand so easily, namely, what certain church people can be thinking of when they undertake to satisfy their consciences in indulgences that the general sentiment of their church condemns. We do not know a single church of any claims to importance that has not, through its highest representative officers and assemblies, condemned dancing. Take the Methodist Church, for instance; we have had 'deliverances' the most rigorous and unmistakable from the beginning, setting forth the utter incompatibility of dancing and religious living. To put the argument on its lowest ground, the case is made out against dancing Methodists. They ask membership in a church that they know to be opposed to dancing and to all such things. What do they join for? For some supposed spiritual advantage this church affords? Then, in common decency, why don't they conform to its rules and established sentiments? We need not prove standing to be sinful to convict them of inconsistency. They joined with a clear knowledge that the church would not have received them with a statement on their part, of a 'reserved right' to dance and to do other such things. They come in professedly on the platform laid down by the church, once in, they claim the right to act in all such matters according to their own opinions or whims. It is not honest.

"This would be honest: if after joining on the platform of the church they conclude that their own notions are safer guides than the collected wisdom and experience of the whole church; that the pleasure of the dance outweighs the graces of the church, that they love the ball-room better than they do the church, then quit the church. This would be honest and perhaps safest, for one inconsistency, at least, would be avoided. They would then sail under the flag they fight under; they would profess to be what they are."

Catholic Persecution in Mexico.

Rev. John W. Butler, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, writing to Zion's Herald from Mexico, says:

But our persecutions in these days have not been limited alone to Queretaro. Apizaco, about eighty miles from the city, is one of our points on the Puebla district. Our annual meeting, in January, appointed to this place Epigmenio Monroy, a modest, quiet and devoted young man. Immediately upon reaching the appointment he made many friends. Indeed, so courteous was he to every one, and so upright in his daily life, that he made not a few friends among the Catholics. All gave him credit for being very sincere. The congregation began to increase under his pastoral care. He voluntarily started a school and got together at once over twenty children. His spare hours from school and study he employed in improving, with his own hands, the chapel, and beautifying the grounds around our mission premises. With all this he found time to take an interest in the surrounding villages. In one of these, Santanita by name, he gathered together quite a number of followers. Indeed, they became so many that they desired to organize themselves into a congregation. [illegible] to the missionary in charge and perfected his arrangements accordingly. In mentioning the matter to our superintendent he manifested great joy and enthusiasm.

On Friday evening, the eighteenth of April, he presented himself and began his work. After their service was over he started home, accompanied by two members of the new church. He had less than three miles to travel, but this he was not permitted to do in peace. About half way he was met by fourteen men, armed with swords and clubs. Terribly cut and bruised, he was thrown on one side of the road and covered over with straw. His companions were also badly used, but one of them managed to escape and reach Apizaco, where he gave the alarm. The authorities, assisted by volunteers from our congregation, went out and rearrested eight suspected accomplices. Poor Brother Monroy was brought to his home in Apizaco one leg broken above the knee; one arm broken in two places; a terrible cut on the top of his head, and his back all covered over with lighter wounds. He was perfectly conscious, and bade his afflicted wife not to weep for him, but for those who had so ignorantly sought to crush religion in Santanita by killing him. During the next day, though very weak and a great sufferer, he seemed considerably cheered by a telegram from Puebla, announcing that on the train which would arrive a little after midnight a physician and one of our native preachers would come to his aid. As the hour of midnight came slowly on, Bro. Monroy frequently inquired the time, thinking it might be near one o'clock, at which hour the train was due. About twelve he again asked his wife the hour. When informed, he replied, "Never mind, I can not live to two o'clock; but tell the Brethren that, as far as I am concerned, it is all right. I am happy." Half an hour afterward he quietly fell asleep in Jesus.

And thus falls the first martyr from the ranks of the Methodist ministry in Mexico. This adds a noble name, whose name should be written in letters of gold. We can not restrain the tears as we think of his terrible sufferings, and see his afflicted widow and little ones too young to understand their loss. But of him we think among the redeemed martyrs, with Stephen and an innumerable company before the throne.

Rev. W. W. Royall, writing to the Richmond Christian Advocate from Nezlang, China, March 22, says:

"They had a file for the conference," says the author of the Book of Judges. So they have here now. A file is a piece of stone on which the people rub their tools back and forth, as we use our stone for chisels and other edged tools—that is all. Take away their sword and one of the families has an American plow, make all the iron and wood found pieces hewed with the axe, then get a shovel-plow share and attach to the front of the hand-slide, and you have a Chinese plow of to-day. An immense and disgusting-looking water buffalo, whose retreating flat head and wicked-looking face do not add to his comeliness, is the universal team.

"The scene on the Chinese public roads there are none is truly unique in its grotesqueness. The flat, low land, cut up by ditches, dotted over with farm villages every half mile or so, here and there a bamboo grove with other trees in sight, the narrow pathways, running along by the canals and ditches, or winding around the enclosures at the villages, now crossing a canal on a massive stone archway, maybe a couple of slabs of granite, a long procession of wheelbarrows, some with one or more Chinese passengers, others with bales of the narrow white or blue cotton cloth, so extensively made here, or roaring with a load of hogs, some living and some dead, with the ungreased wooden axles squeaking dismally in concert, the rough balks by the wayside slowly dragging the primitive plow through the black loam, while the children pull up the dead cotton-stalks of last year to be sold for fuel, or else lead by a string a kid or goat to nip the green grass by the fence or roadside—all this must be seen here or not at all.

"At the present writing the wheat is some six or eight inches high, and of a beautiful green; vegetables are coming forward; and in parts, south of here, already the usual delicacies of peas, and such like are in market. Though we are south of Savannah, we are much behind that place as to fruit and vegetables.

"All our mission are enjoying pretty good health. Bro. Bell has progressed in Chinese, Bro. Parker is pleasantly in Shanghai, the Misses Rankin prove delightful neighbors, and we feel grateful to God for his mercies and blessings in this distant land. We cannot help praising him for our numberless mercies."

The Methodist Recorder vindicates the temperance pledge thus clearly and conclusively:

One of Dr. Crosby's positions in his "calm review of the temperance question" is, that it is a moral error of the total abstinence system, to place dependence upon a contract rather than on a moral sense; that is the most pernicious instrument for debauching the conscience; and that the pledge is never a help to true morality. In the first place, Dr. Crosby misstates the case. The dependence is not placed upon a contract rather than a moral sense, but on a contract made in harmony with the moral sense of the individual, and designed to call that moral sense more fully into action. An individual's moral sense tells him that it is wrong for him to drink intoxicating liquors, and thereby, to say the least, run the fearful risk of becoming a drunkard. He signs a pledge to refrain from a practice which his moral sense condemns. This creates another barrier in the way of indulgence, for his moral sense tells him that it is wrong to violate a pledge which has voluntarily been assumed. So that the singling of a pledge to abstain from the use of all intoxicating beverages, instead of being calculated to debauch the conscience, is designed, and well calculated, to fortify a man's moral sense, and is thereby an aid to morality. If Dr. Crosby's position is correct, then all society is based upon a moral error, for contracts and pledges are made in the intercourse of men with men in every department of society, from the solemn vows assumed at the marriage altar, to the treaties entered into between the mightiest nations. Oaths are administered, contracts are made and signed, deeds are executed and recorded; and in all these transactions, it never occurs to men that they are disregarding their moral sense, debauching their consciences, or doing anything to weaken a true morality. We presume Dr. Crosby himself has signed contracts and taken pledges to do certain things, entirely forgetful of his own logic. His argument shows to what extent men will go, and what absurdities they will advance, to bolster up a bad cause.

Rev. E. Wentworth, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, gives some striking and good reasons for inducting the Chinese into Hebrew and Greek. Writing to the Northern Christian Advocate, he says:

The establishment of a theological school in Foochow will, in due time, realize a favorite idea of mine, namely, inducting the Chinese into Hebrew and Greek in order to the more accurate translation of the Scriptures into the general language and provincial dialects of the empire. Foreigners work to fearful disadvantage in getting the Scriptures into the Chinese tongues. They stand without and push the Scriptures into those singular dialects. Educate the natives in the tongues in which the Bible was written, and they will stand within and draw the Scriptures into their vernacular. It seems to me that there is all the difference in the world in those two processes. Especially will the Chinese take kindly to the Hebrew, an Asiatic language like their own, with an alphabet but one remove from their hieroglyphic whose letters still wear the names of the objects which they pictured, and whose roots are monosyllabic. The Hebrew book opens at the back end and reads backward like a Chinese volume. The Hebrew characters can be readily and gracefully formed by the upright Chinese pencil, as they cannot be by a Western pen. The obligation of a Chinaman is linguistic for the whole of his mental course. The thousand illustrations from Asiatic customs, figures, figures and poetry of the Bible will all have a vividness to Hebrew mind that they have not to us Occidentals, because all the clay evaporates by explanation and translation. The Chinese are great poets. I see my teacher, on one occasion, to translate the 150th Psalm. He was delighted with it; so pleased that it made such old-school verses to those left by the Hebrew bard! Success to the enterprise of creating a theological school at Foochow.

Methodist Schools in Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: I do not know what was the amount of the endowment fund of the Southern University before the war, but it was large. I believe that most of the contributors to this fund did not actually pay their subscriptions in money, but exercised their obligations for the same. These papers were good at the time they were given, for the makers thereof were the owners of property, real and personal. Much of this property was utterly destroyed by the war, and that which was not destroyed was reduced in value. In consequence of this, subscribers to the fund could not pay their subscriptions. Monies that were paid to the fund were invested in securities that were good, but which perished because of the results of the war. Everybody who was here in 1865 ought to understand how this endowment was lost.

But it is true, as I said in a former article, and as George E. Ellis said in your paper of the twelfth instant, that before people will contribute to another fund they will want assurance that the fund will be preserved; and they are right.

I feel sure that a practical plan can be devised by which the fund can be safely preserved, and administered without cost or expense. I shall not now attempt to elaborate such a plan, but it seems to me that the chief desired can be attained if the proper authorities will appoint three practical business men, of good repute, and known to the church, to be trustees of the endowment fund, and to whom all contributions shall be paid for investment in bonds of the State of Alabama, the bonds to be held as a trust fund for the benefit of the Southern University, and not to be trenched upon for any purpose, and the interest only to be used in paying such items of the current expenses of the university as may be proper, and as may be agreed upon by the subscribers to the fund.

The Southern University ought to be endowed. The Methodists of Alabama ought to do it. Will they do it?

LAYMAN.

The United States Senate adjourned on Friday last. Conkling and Platt having resigned, Robertson, for collector of the New York Custom-house, was confirmed almost without opposition, and the most of the President's nominations were likewise approved. The most of the time of the extra session was spent in what is called the "dead lock," the Republicans endeavoring to turn out the old officers of the Senate and to elect men of their own party, or men acceptable to Mahone, and the Democrats resisting successfully the attempt.

Six weeks or more was thus spent in sectional wrangle and debate, in the course of which the old issues, the sectional animosities, the reconstruction frauds and oppressions, and the "bloody shirt" venom, were freely ventilated. The bloody chasm seemed for awhile to yawn deeper and wider than ever, but we doubt whether there was much popular response, North or South, to this highly-seasoned partizan declamation. Indeed, the popular pressure from the Republican side became so great against the Mahone alliance, and the senseless interruption of public business to stave off the fight between Conkling and the President, that the Republican Senators were forced to yield. This was, in some sort, a victory for the Democrats, but it was also a triumph of public opinion and of public interests over a mere partizan and personal issue.

REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.—Mr. G. T. Lathrop, 112 Camp street, with his usual enterprise, has on hand and for sale the revised New Testament. It is nonpareil, 32mo, of the University Press, Oxford, and is the edition authorized by the American committee of revision. It is bound in limp cloth, fine paper, and in clear and beautiful type. Price, twenty-five cents.

Mr. Lathrop has also Companion of the Revised Version of the New Testament, by Alex. Roberts, D. D., with supplement, by a member of the American committee of revision, authorized edition, Cassell, Petter & Galpin, publishers, New York." This volume is a 12mo, 213 pages. Its purpose is to explain the reasons for the changes made on the authorized version. It is a work of learning, and contains a vast amount of valuable information about the Bible. Price, in cloth, seventy-five cents; in paper, twenty-five cents.

Another Sad Bereavement.

Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard, writing from Pineville, La., May 5, says: "A heavy blow has fallen on our brother, Rev. S. H. Whatley. His son, Uriah Wesley, about eleven years of age, was kicked by a vicious horse while in the act of closing the stall door, April 15, 1881, and died April 16. Wesley had been a member of the church nearly two years, and seemed to comprehend, in part at least, the doctrines of the atonement, and justification by faith; and, just before his death, he looked up to a picture of the Redeemer which hung on the wall, and spoke feelingly and beautifully of the Blessed Saviour. May God sustain Bros. Whatley and Isbell in their afflictions."

Rev. W. W. Hopper, writing from Summit, Miss., May 14, says: "I am rolling in some subscribers, as Bro. Lathrop can testify, and I hope to roll in the money also before a great while. May the Lord bless you in your work, which I think he is. Our people esteem the ADVOCATE very much, as they do wherever it is known."

Rev. W. T. Shell, writing from Belzoni, Washington county, Miss., May 12, says: "We have had a great deal of sickness. I have attended six funerals in the last twenty-one days at one church graveyard in a sparsely settled country. Times very hard, crops backward, weather fine, church in rather a lukewarm condition. We hope and pray for better times."

We deeply sympathise with our Brother, Rev. N. S. Cornell, and family of the Rayville circuit, Louisiana Conference. His son, Willie, a bright and promising boy of thirteen years, died April 6. Willie, while in health, gave his heart to God, had experienced conversion, and died in peace and hope. He was an exemplary member of the Girard Sunday-school, and greatly beloved by all. A tribute from his Sunday-school will be published in the ADVOCATE of next week.

A sociable for the benefit of the Ladies' Aid Society will be given in the basement of the Felicity Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of this city, on Thursday and Friday evenings, June 2 and 3. There is to be a magic lantern exhibition on the first night, and a sacred concert on the second. The object is a good one, and we are assured that everything will be conducted with becoming propriety.

Col. Thomas A. Scott, the great railroad man, died at Philadelphia, May 21. He was a man of immense business capacity, and probably shortened his life by the overstrain of large and complicated affairs. He had given something of his wealth to educational and beneficent enterprises.

—Rev. Dr. W. P. Kramer, assistant rector of Christ's Church, Protestant Episcopal, of this city, died at Morristown, New Jersey, Sunday, May 22. He was a zealous, active and useful minister, and his death will be generally regretted.

—Rev. R. S. Woodward is announced in the ADVOCATE to deliver the address before the Christian Association of Whitworth College, June 26. Bro. Woodward being unable to attend, Bro. B. Carradine will deliver the address.

STATISTICS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH—RECAPITULATION FOR 1880.

Conferences.	Traveling Preachers.	Superannuated Preachers.	Local Preachers.	White Members.	Colored Members.	Indian Members.	Total Preachers and Members.	Increase.	Decrease.	Infants Baptized.	Adults Baptized.	Sunday Schools.	Teachers.	Scholars.	Collections for Conf. Claims.	Collections for Missions.
Alabama	128	11	269	31,220	5,529		37,110	127		1,102	1,128	395	3,300	16,557	$1,696 60	$ 216 55
Arkansas	80	4	193	11,398			11,682	1,210		361	884	126	1,145	5,032	559 25	1,136 00
Baltimore	174	15	211	40,187			40,572	421		1,156	1,100	455	4,281	34,965	4,000 00	2,761 56
Columbia	27	2	19	1,170			1,218		68	13	56	9	60	194	200 00	250 00
Denver	6		16	158			180	21		2	14	2	20	135	35 00	35 00
East Texas	56	1	147	14,558			14,762	353		568	325	134	932	5,630	1,110 15	2,548 55
Florida	70	7	110	10,306	11		10,903		301	560	508	168	801	6,705	1,562 55	1,400 74
German Mission	26		16	1,139			1,181		6	147	4	21	178	1,262	181 00	111 10
Holston	151	15	269	11,274	18	118	11,850	126		1,561	1,886	1,000	2,500	28,341	1,442 79	3,111 10
Illinois	87	1	59	5,318			5,456	150		87	128	58	450	2,800	111 61	261 52
Indiana	89	1	17	4,102			4,209		27	50	154	57	1,262	4,853	20 10	52 51
Indian Mission	24	1	11	1,111			1,136		10	50	142	8	53	411		200 00
Kentucky	143	8	101	25,073	816	1,858	27,899	196		1,000	1,000	107	1,052	9,045	1,764 81	3,018 41
Little Rock	73	9	174	10,148	81		10,481	176		432	389	46	354	2,411	1,800 00	2,150 80
Los Angeles	16	2	18	1,125			1,161		39	103	201	20	1,102	8,522	1,800 00	2,150 80
Louisiana	77	9	51	11,251			11,388		30	161	360	11	24	1,042	181 00	132 80
Louisville	129	16	211	24,754	18		25,128	135		1,000	1,000	144	811	6,000	1,200 00	2,000 00
Memphis	140	12	238	24,900			25,290	157		847	1,500	685	1,918	11,292	1,000 00	2,000 00
Mississippi	170	10	150	25,219			25,549		371	1,000	1,000	561	2,000	15,000	1,000 00	2,000 00
Missouri	120	12	151	27,000	3		27,286	85		1,000	800	261	1,400	8,220	1,000 00	1,000 00
Montana	5		5	207			217	217		10	1,000	250	200	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
North Alabama	123	4	365	31,000			31,492		27	1,000	1,000	250	2,000	15,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
North Carolina	181	13	241	37,000			37,435	229		246	19	193	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
North Georgia	191	28	413	65,000	229		65,869	1,064		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
North Mississippi	136	11	191	25,000			25,338	1,008		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
South Texas	107	11	262	20,000			20,381		45	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
Northwest Texas	118	10	320	24,000			24,448	313		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
Pacific	61	5	57	3,542	31		3,696		1	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
South Carolina	161	12	139	1,111	1,000		1,000		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
South Georgia	124	19	247	36,000	1,078		37,000	1,000		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
Southwest Missouri	73	9	145	12,000	383		12,610		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
St. Louis	64	4	83	17,000	1,000		18,151	1,000		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
Tennessee	198	33	314	16,000	1,000		17,545	1,000		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
Texas	93	10	66	5,000	1,000		6,169	1,000		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
Virginia	150	19	173	25,000	1,000		26,342	1,000		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
Western	131	7	23	25,000	1,000		26,161	1,000		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
Western Virginia	93	4	116	15,000	1,000		16,213	1,000		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
West Texas	108	3	68	9,000	1,000		10,179	1,000		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
White River	76	2	153	11,000	1,000		12,231	1,000		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
China Mission			9	122			131		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
Mexican Mission			1	500			501		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
Brazilian Mission			1	70			71		1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000 00	1,000 00
Bishops
Total in 1880
Total in 1879
Increase Decrease

The Brazilian preachers are reckoned with the Conferences to which they now belong. The preachers who were discontinued this year and those who were located or are not reported, are not counted. Those who are on trial are counted among the traveling preachers, though many of them are not recognized with the local preachers. The white members are those in full connection. The colored members are those within the bounds of the Annual Conferences, that reported to the Conferences. The conferences of the Woman's Missionary Society are not included. The colored members have been nearly all absorbed in the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, and other Connections.

—There will be a meeting of the former students of Augusta College, at Augusta, Ky., Wednesday, June 15, 1881, for the purpose of devising measures for the resuscitation of that institution.

The Western Methodist says: "Bishops Pierce and Wightman, Dr. T. H. Summers, and Judge Lamar Jackson, of Georgia, will not attend the Ecumenical Conference. Their vacancies have been filled by the appointment of Dr. W. P. Harrison, of Washington City; Dr. Andrews, of Alabama; Dr. Fitzgerald, of Mississippi, and Dr. H. V. Walker of Georgia."

An extensive revival has been in progress at Hobion, Mo., during the past five months, during which time 200 persons have united with the Methodist Church there. This has necessitated the enlarging and refitting of the church, and four thousand dollars have already been raised for that purpose.

Books and Periodicals.

THE EPISTLES OF PAUL THE APOSTLE, to our Romans, in the authorized version; with new translations and expository notes and dissertations. By D. D. Slaughter, D. D., LL. D. Nashville, Tenn.: Southern Methodist Publishing House.

This volume is a 12mo, of 400 pages, and in the same style and print and binding as the volumes of Dr. Summers's Commentaries, previously issued. The first thirty-six pages contain the author's new translation. It is, perhaps, more exact and literal than the authorized version; an improvement or it; but this must be determined by a riper scholarship and a more careful examination than we can give to the task. The text of our common version is given in connection with the notes and comments. These are as compact and brief as possible to be of much value. There is little sermonizing in them, very little exhortation. They are rather critical and exegetical giving the sense of the text, and to some extent the grounds upon which the exposition is based. The unlearned reader will find his understanding of the commentary somewhat embarrassed by the frequent occurrence of Greek, Latin and Hebrew words, and by the use of terms which are familiar only to critics and students. "It is teleological in form, and ontologic in force." This sentence is a specimen of the difficulties the average Sunday School teacher will encounter in referring to the commentary. With good lexicons, and with some knowledge of the dead languages, the commentary will make most delightful and instructive reading. If there be fault in the way the author has done his work, it is in these matters needlessly depriving many of learned and unlearned terms. But skipping these, the ordinary reader will comprehend enough to make the hard texts clear, and there will be abundant help where most is needed. As a book of commentary for students, preachers, and educated people it is, to our mind, a work of great merit, more expanded than Whedons and certainly greatly to be preferred to the calvinistic authors. Dr. Summers's antagonism is sound, and well sustained, as his exposition of those crucial chapters, the eighth and fifth of Romans, abundantly shows. In this respect the commentary is a formidable and most valuable contribution to the theological literature. On original sin, justification by faith, predestination and holiness, Dr. Summers will be accepted by Methodism as conservative, luminous, and generally satisfactory. His exposition of this most profoundly practically important, and most fruitful of controversy, of all the epistles, will be the most enduring monument of his labor and learning. All of Dr. Summers's commentaries ought to have a wide circulation among our people, and his commentary on the Romans especially. This last will correct any undue leaning to Calvinism or Pelagianism, and vindicate the grounds of our Arminian views. Our young preachers especially should study it well.

The Westminster Normal Outlines; or the Christian Teacher in the Sabbath School. Middle course. By Rev. James A. Worden. Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Publication. The system of normal instruction is divided into three courses. The present volume contains the middle or second year's course. This is a valuable and well-arranged system of study for Sunday-school teachers, the object of which is to supply them with a necessary knowledge of the Scriptures, and to make them acquainted with the best methods of teaching. We heartily wish our Sunday-school authorities would prepare a system of normal study for our Methodist schools. This volume contains a colored map, is handsomely bound, and makes 283 12mo pages. Price, $1. For sale by G. T. Lathrop, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

—Dr. Starr's oration on John Wycliffe and the First English Bible, delivered in the city of New York, December 2, 1880, has been published in pamphlet form, and in a very handsome style, by Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., New York. The oration was delivered by invitation of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society. It is a powerful and instructive address. The Publishers will send it postpaid, on receipt of 50 cents.

—The Homiletic quarterly, April, 1881, C. Kegan Paul & Co., London; Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., New York, publishers. This very superior publication is filled with the most valuable theological and sermonic literature. Its departments are: The Modern Pulpit; Practical Homiletics; The Christian Year, embracing a large number of sermons; Children's Sermons; A Clerical Symposium; The Preacher's Library; Reviews. Each number of the quarterly contains about 200 pages, double columns, octavo. Price, $2 per annum; single numbers, sixty cents.

—Good Company, March and April, 1881, two numbers in one, has: In the Land of the Midnight Sun, parts 2, 3; The Decadence of American Shipping; Gloucester; An Account of Long's Peak; Carlyle and His World's Work; The Western Pastoral Life; A Wavering Balance; a Story; A Fortnight in the Paharpet Woods; The Eskimo Race, its origin, migrations and characteristics; Personal Recollections of the Clergy; The Obelisk Across the Atlantic; Mr. Gladstone's Dissipation Abroad; Across the Great Bridge; The Caliphate of Cordova; In the Capital of Central Asia; and other articles.

—Scribner's Monthly, June, 1881, has: The Farragut Monument, New York, illustrated; Abigg the North Shore of Long Island, illustrated; The Sanitary Condition of New York, II, The Remedy, illustrated; Madame Adolphine, 2, by George W. Cable; An August Morning With Farragut; The Lobster at Home, illustrated; Practical Floriculture; Bastien Lepage, illustrated; The Westminster Play; A Rainy Day With Uncle Remus; Peter the Great as Ruler and Reformer, 8; Keenan's Charge, Charlottesville, May, 1864; Farragut; Lord Beaconsfield, illustrated; The Revised New Testament, illustrated, and other articles.

The Theological and Homiletic Monthly, May, 1881, R. N. Sledd, D. D., editor and publisher, Richmond, Va., has: Apostolical Succession; About the Divine Manifestation; Varying the Emphasis; Some Conditions of Pulpit Power; Foreknowledge and Free Agency; Confession of Jesus; Moral Responsibility; Sketches of Sermons; Editorial Miscellany. This is one of the best numbers of the Monthly, although there are several very glaring typographical errors.

The Contemporary Review, May, 1881, George Munro, publisher, New York, contains the following articles: 1. The Land of the Midnight Sun, parts 2, 3; The Decadence of American Shipping; Gloucester; An Account of Long's Peak; Carlyle and His World's Work; The Western Pastoral Life; A Wavering Balance; a Story; A Fortnight in the Paharpet Woods; The Eskimo Race, its origin, migrations and characteristics; Personal Recollections of the Clergy; The Obelisk Across the Atlantic; Mr. Gladstone's Dissipation Abroad; Across the Great Bridge; The Caliphate of Cordova; In the Capital of Central Asia; and other articles.

Agricultural.

CANNED FOOD. The Boston Commercial Traveller, says the rapid development of the canned food business, [illegible] popular need; a need, indeed, not very complimentary to the industry or cooking accomplishments of our fair citizens. To open a can, pour out a certain quantity of the contents, add the requisite proportion of water, and give the compound the necessary amount of boiling or simmering is so easy and demands so little exertion of culinary ability, that it is no marvel such a labor-saving device has been so widely patronized. It is estimated that the canned goods business of the United States now amounts to about $20,000,000 annually, and is constantly growing.

Originally, but a few articles were put up in this way, which were, for the most part, fruits or "preserves;" now the list of canned goods embraces fish, flesh and fowl, fruit, vegetables and berries; in fact, almost everything that constitutes human food. Among the fruits are peach, pineapple, strawberry, blueberry, thimbleberry, pear, apricot, common apple and quince. Of vegetables are beans, peas, okra, sweet corn, tomatoes, pumpkins, asparagus, and succotash. Of meats are beef, veal, mutton, chicken, turkey, goose and ham. Of fish: mackerel, halibut, sardines, salmon, codfish, haddock, trout, lobsters, shrimps, oysters and clams. Besides these are various kinds of soups, such as mock turtle, oxtail, chicken, vegetable, mulligatawny, tomato and pea; also mince-meats for pies, sausage meat, venison and tripe. This is a pretty liberal bill of fare, especially when we include the "devilled" entremets which have been more recently added, and which embrace ham, tongue, lobster, turkey and chicken.

To give some idea of the business done in this line, the writer states that one establishment alone in Boston sold last year 7,500 dozens cans of tomatoes, 3,000 of peaches, 2,500 of corn, 1,100 of peas, 600 of blueberries, 100 of succotash, 50 of quince, besides large quantities of beef-soup, oxtail, mock turtle, pea and chicken, salmon, sardines, etc. To these may be added condensed milk and coffee in no small quantities. It is evident, when we take into account all the other grocery stores, that the trade must be enormous, and big sums of money must change hands in the various processes and movements of the goods. Probably as many as two hundred million cans are annually put up in the United States, a large proportion of which are used for sea stores, and exported to all parts of the world.

To the foregoing we would add that the sale of canned food is not at all confined to the large cities; it is becoming general throughout many parts of the country. The great extent to which canned goods are used in Texas is truly astonishing. In nearly every village in that State, there are stores devoted almost exclusively to the sale of canned goods, especially in Southwestern Texas, where the drouths of summer make gardening a somewhat uncertain business. A large proportion of the people there who have no provisions for irrigation now depend almost entirely on canned goods for their supply of fruits and vegetables.—Mobile Register.

GARDENING IN LONDON SQUARES. London must be considered the center of the world in a horticultural sense, for there more of wealth and skill is engaged in this pursuit than anywhere else. All styles of gardening are tested, plants from all parts of the world are put upon trial, and their peculiar merits for special purposes are discovered.

After all that has been done there during the last ten or fifteen years with bedding plants, it is pleasant to note that attention is turning again to the culture of annuals, and that these old favorites are found quite as useful and effective as plants that are more costly. With us, where the great majority of those that are interested in flower-culture can not possibly do anything very elaborate or costly, dependence to a great extent must be made upon annuals, that can be quickly and inexpensively raised. We know that, while a few annuals are better suited with the English climate than ours, yet many of those that are most valuable do far better here than in England.

The following statement, therefore, in reference to gardening in London squares, from a communication in the Gardener's Chronicle, must have its full weight upon the minds of our readers:

"The fact that a fair and even beautiful show of flowering annuals and hardy perennials may be raised from seed in the open ground in central London is evidenced by the last three seasons' experience in the garden management of Enslegh Gardens. The inexpensiveness of this mode of cultivation, as compared with the purchase of bedding-plants, is of itself a great recommendation. The main elements of success are the thorough digging up of the flower-beds during the winter, so that the ground may break up into good, finely-pulverized seed-beds for the spring and the careful sowing of the seed. The best results seem to have been secured from sowing variegated corn-flowers, varieties of the clarkias, malope, nasturtium, convolvulus minor, delphinium, antirrhinum, viscaria, godetia, eschscholtzia, calliopsis, candytuft, silene pendula, etc., in small patches over the flower-borders, and repeating the sowing at intervals of two or three weeks during the spring and early summer months."

The plants above named are, no doubt, well adapted to London; but we miss from the list what are some of the most effective kinds, such as Phlox Drummondi, petunias, portulaca, asters, balsams, etc., for the reason that they can not be so well employed there as those named. We believe it is doing an essential service to flower-culture in this country to insist upon the extensive employment of annuals.—Vick's Illustrated Magazine.

"CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN ENGLAND.—The principle of co-operation is about to be applied to agriculture. A company has been formed, entitled, "The Associated Agriculturists of Great Britain Limited." Its capital is £1,000,000 in shares of £5. Its object is to lease and to farm land on the most approved principles. It has already been offered upwards of 90,000 acres which for the most part landlords have on their hands. It is startling to realize how much of the land of England has, during the last few years, gone out of cultivation. Farmers have gone to America and to the Colonies. Farm laborers are suffering great privation. On some estates there are farms, which a short time ago were let for 25s. an acre, which now are offered to suitable tenants for nothing for two years, and at the end of that period the rent is to be only 12s. 6d. per acre. This shows the difficulties which agriculture has had to contend with. The time is certainly favorable for the commencement of joint-stock farming. The idea is a good one. It has been practiced in America and in Europe with good results. The impression is that this company ought to pay from five to ten per cent. We shall be surprised if this [illegible] Capital is the very thing which agriculture has needed. There are vast sums of money awaiting safe investment. Farming companies would be able to buy the best manures. They would also utilize the best machinery. And thus their enterprise could reflect favorably on various branches of trade. They would also be able to deal with wilful landlords, and thus they would relieve individual farming enterprise. It seems to us that co-operative agriculture well managed would be a remedy for the depression which has prevailed so long.—London Methodist.

WHY FARMING DON'T PAY. As a general rule it does pay, though there are occasional cases where it does not, and many where it does not pay to the extent that it ought to pay. Discussing this subject in a late issue of the Southern Farmer's Monthly, Mr. M. H. Zollner, of Ashville, Ala., says one of the greatest obstacles to success in a large majority of cases, is the lack of information on the part of the farmers, very few of whom avail themselves of the teachings of good agricultural publications, and are unfortunately ignorant of the fact that they stand in need of any further information in relation to their occupation. It will require a long time to remove this obstacle, and the main reliance is the present readers of such publications, who, by the proper effort, might, in the course of time, bring their unfortunate friends to a knowledge of the worth of good agricultural publications, and induce them to become subscribers. If every reader of good agricultural journals would enlist in this work in good earnest, and religiously perform his whole duty towards his unfortunate brethren, much good would be accomplished without material cost to any one. It is often truly said that agriculture is the most honorable occupation, but at present the remark is not applicable to a large majority of those engaged in the occupation. Every member of the agricultural fraternity ought to exert himself to the utmost, to elevate those who are engaged in this honorable occupation to the honorable position which they ought to occupy, and there is no better way to accomplish this desirable object, than that of placing good agricultural publications into the hands of farmers generally.—Mobile Register.

WHAT A LITTLE MANURE WILL DO. Take a field of corn, for example, in fair order as to soil. Wire the soil under half the hills, mix a pint each of good manure, leaving half the hills without. We affirm that, on the average, the manured hills will give much larger ears, more of them, and much more good corn and stalks, usually fifteen to thirty bushels more per acre, with no more cost for plowing, planting and hoeing. The same holds good for nearly all crops. The lesson we desire to inculcate strongly, is, that every handful or pint of good manure, made and saved, will give a good hill of corn, large, full ears, in place of small ones, perchance only short ears or nubbins; or equivalent results with other crops. The wise farmer who means to be a successful manufacturer of crops this year, will give great attention to the making and saving, in the best condition, of every possible load, bushel, pint of good manure he can, from this day on. He will not let a gill of the brown, but golden liquid escape by running out, or washing out by rains. If without straw or litter to absorb it all, he will bring in leaves, muck, or even sods, or loam for the purpose. Some way he will hold it and get it among the plant roots next summer, sure.—American Agriculturist.

WET FOOD FOR HORSES.—A writer for the Live Stock Journal says of farm horses that they are obliged to work very hard, and therefore, it is not only right and just, but for the best pecuniary interest of their owners to see that they not only have good food and plenty of it, but also that it should be given to them wet. He believes a great many horses are permanently injured by being kept in summer, when they work, upon dry hay and meal. Just what injury will result from this course of feeding can not be foretold to a certainty. Whether it will take the form of derangement of the digestive organs or affections of the throat and lungs, will depend somewhat upon the natural tendencies of the animals, and the quality and condition of the food they receive. But injury of some kind will be very likely to result. It is but little trouble to wet the food, and it is better and safer than it is to feed it dry. For a horse that is at work most of the time, cut feed is the best which can be given. But if the hay is not cut, it pays to throw on a little water. Feeding dry meal has been highly recommended and the writer tried it, but is not satisfied with the results; he thinks it is better to put the meal in a pail and mix it with water.

A COW'S PUP. The situation, the structure, and the size of the rumen or paunch, point it out as the first and general receptable for the food, which receives in the mouth only sufficient mastication to enable the animal to swallow it. When swallowed, it is then received by the rumen, and morsel after morsel is taken until this, the first of the animal's four stomachs, is comparatively full. A sense of repletion precedes rumination, during which act the animal generally prefers a recumbent posture. It is not to be supposed that all the food taken is again ruminated; it is only the bulky or solid portions that undergo the process. When the rumen is moderately full, it will contract on its contents, and first squeeze out the thin portions, which will pass onward into the third or fourth stomachs, whilst the solid part will be impinged by the œsophagus, or Stomach pipe, and remitted to the mouth. By the term "closs of the cud," is meant a cessation of the chewing of the cud, which occurs as a symptom of the most internal diseases of cattle.—Western Rural.

BIG FARMING.—The Grandin Bros., of Dakota, are said to have raised last year 137,287 bushels of wheat, and that the odd 37,000 bushels paid all the cost of cultivation and marketing, leaving 100,000 bushels at seventy-five cents, for profit. William F. Dalrymple, of the famous grain farm in Dakota, says that the clean profit for 1880 was over $250,000. He raised more than half a million bushels of wheat on 24,000 acres, and disposed of it in Buffalo, at a profit of fifty cents a bushel.

California canned peas are now upon the market. Tomato canners are very busy. The canned corn trade has been unusually excited by attempts to corner the market.

Household.

SOAP-MAKING.—With the coming of spring this task begins to weigh upon the mind of the housekeeper, and if she is young and new to the business, it is apt to weigh somewhat heavily. She asks the old and experienced, who seem to accomplish with so much ease what is, for her, so difficult and uncertain, how they get their soap to come. The difficulty of difficulty there be lies generally in too weak lye. If you have good strong ashes, saved from sound hard wood, with plenty of sulthble grease you need have no trouble with your soap-making. A few days before you get ready to begin, have the leach set up. Scatter a little straw on the bottom and put the ashes in, a little at a time, pounding them down well as you go along so the water will not run through too quickly. Pour on water, a pailful at a time, every hour or two throughout the day, or till they are as wet as can be and the lye not run. Let it alone for three or four days, then add enough water to start the lye. The lye that leaches off first will of course be much the strongest. Save this by itself. Have a large iron kettle set up on stones, (if you have no stove in your woodshed) and start a fire under it. When once burning, put on a block of hard wood, which will emit a steady heat. If you have much clear grease, put it in the kettle and heat. Keep it stirring, and be sure that it does not scorch. When hot, add your odds and ends, rinds from hams and shoulders, lard cracklings, which are excellent, with a few beef bones, the marrow of which makes good grease, and the bone itself (a small proportion of it) helps to give "body." All should be clean and free from mould. Stir all together, and add a pailful or two of the first lye (which must be strong enough to bear up an egg,) and boil, stirring frequently till grease, scraps and bones are all, or nearly all, consumed. Put in all the grease that the lye will eat up, then fill up with the weaker lye, boil a little longer and the work is done.

If you want it extra superfine, tack a few thicknesses of mosquito-bar loosely to a frame so as to form a stricner in bag form; set this over your soap barrel, and dip the hot soap through it. This takes out all the remnants not eaten by the lye, and makes the soap very clean and nice. If you want to make hard soap, add to the kettle of soft soap while it is yet hot, but not boiling, enough salt to make the lye separate from the soap. Let it stand twenty-four hours, then put up into chunks and dry. If you use potash instead of lye for soap-making, weigh the grease, and for every pound of clear grease use one pound of potash, and eight pounds of each to one barrel.

Break the potash up, put it into an iron pot, fill up with water, and simmer till all is dissolved. Put the grease into another pot, and let it get boiling hot. Put a pailful of boiling water into a good stout barrel, and then dip in the grease and lye; first a dipperful of one and then of the other, till it is all in. Fill up the barrel with cold water, stir it all well together, and the soap is made. If it does not thicken at once, set the barrel in the wood-shed, and stir every day for a week. It can be used at once, though it is better to stand some months.—Susan Busybee, in Country Gentleman.

USEFUL RECIPES.—Glue may be deprived of its greatest fault—a tendency to crack—by mixing it with glycerine. A German chemist, named Puscher, a native of Nuremburg, reported to the Trades Union of that place in 1866 that he met with great success in using glycerine together with glue. While generally, after the drying of the glue, the thing to which it is applied, is liable to break, crack, tear, or spring off, if a quantity of glycerine equal to a quarter of the quantity of glue be mixed together, that defect will entirely disappear. Puscher also made use of this glue for lining leather, making globe frames, and for smoothing parchment and chalk paper. He also used it for polishing, mixing wax with the glycerine, and using it as an underground for laying on aniline red color. The red was found to exceed all others in which glycerine is not fused. The glycerine has also some properties in common with India rubber, for it will blot out pencil marks from paper, so as to leave no marks whatever. A paste made of starch, glycerine and gypsum will maintain its plasticity and adhesiveness, longer than any other cement, and therefore, recommends itself for cementing chemical instruments and apparatus used by pharmacists.

To obtain that beautiful deep black polish on iron or steel, or brass which is so much sought after, it is required to boil one part of sulphur, in ten parts of oil of turpentine, the product of which is a brown sulphurous oil of disagreeable smell. This should be put on the outside as slightly as possible, and heated over a spirit lamp till the required black polish is obtained. The Minor Arts.

FOR PRESERVING MEAT.—Secretary Gold gave the following receipts at the Willimantic meeting of the State Board of Agriculture: Beef should not be allowed to freeze. Salting should be deferred until the meat is ripe. The fat of pork only should be salted, the lean should be used for sausage meat. Pack pork in clean barrels on the edge, first scattering on the bottom a few handfuls of salt, then again upon every layer, packing very close, and when all is packed in, pour on a brine made by dissolving salt in hot water. Be sure to cover the pork and place a board upon it, and a weight upon the board, to keep all in place. When a piece is removed, be sure that the remainder is tightly pressed down. For curing hams he used six gallons of water, nine pounds of salt, two pounds of sugar, one quart of molasses, four ounces of saltpetre, two ounces of saleratus for one hundred pounds of meat. He first covered the hams with salt, and let them lie one couple of days, flesh side up, then he packed them close in barrels, and poured upon them the brine above described. For small hams three weeks would be long enough to stay in the brine, but if large ones, then he would let them remain six weeks. He then takes them out, dries them, but does not allow them to freeze. When properly drained he then smokes them.

LEMON CAKE.—One cup of butter, two cups of sugar, three cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder. Bake in jelly pans. Filling for cake: juice and grated rind of two lemons, three eggs, one tablespoonful of butter, half a pound of sugar, beat well together and boil five minutes, stirring constantly; when cold spread on the cake.

PLAIN LEMON PIE.—Two lemons, peel and cut in very thin slices, the rind to be chopped, one and a half cups of water, three-quarters of a cup of flour, one cup of brown sugar, one cup of molasses. Bake with two crusts in a moderately hot oven.

Educational.

—It appears that Sweden ranks next to Germany in the relation of its school attendance to its population. Germany shows 154 scholars to 1,000 inhabitants, Sweden 140, France and the United States of America 127, Belgium 121, England 100, Holland 91, Austria 89, Italy 70, Spain 30, and Russia 15. Taking into consideration the character of the country, and the extraordinary difficulties of climate, mountain land, and the distances of the school-houses from each other, Sweden seems practically to surpass Germany in its scale of school-attendance, which is compulsory. Since the year 1877, the State has added school workshops to the upper classes of the schools, in which instruction is given in the afternoon to the older boys.

—Minnesota has a law, to go into operation July 1st, to the effect that all school officers may introduce into the schools, daily instruction in social science, good morals, and patriotism, no less than thirty distinct topics being specified—such as industry, health, honesty, etc. It may be required of the teachers to give a short oral lesson each day on one of the subjects named, and to require from the pupils some illustration of the same upon the following morning. This is a comparatively new experiment in education and its results will be watched for with interest.

—Connecticut has a compulsory school law in active operation, which is said to work well. The school population of the State last year was 140,235. All with the exception of 13,565 attended school. Hartford and New Haven have efficient truant officers, who manage their work admirably. The Connecticut schools cost last year $1,408,374.74. The funds furnished amounted to $7,481,680.93. The average salarys of male teachers was $56.43; of female teachers, $35.42.

—The new English university, called the Victoria University, with its headquarters at Manchester, has decided to create graduates "without the smallest tincture of Latin or Greek." In these words a member of the University Court has emphasized his description of the innovation. The graduates thus distinguished are not, however, to be Bachelors or Masters of Arts. They are to be Bachelors, Masters, or Doctors of Science.

—Each county in Texas has received a gift from the State of four leagues of land, to be used for the support of county academies or high schools. This provision was made in the early legislation of Texas, and many of the counties now have a fund of from $25,000 to $60,000, but the interest has never been used except to aid in the support of public schools.

—The average sum appropriated for the education of each child in Massachusetts has increased from $1.71 a year in 1850 to $13.55 in 1880. During the same time the average pay of female teachers in the four western counties of the State has increased from $12.80 a month to $25, while in Boston it has increased from $31.50 to $60.17.

—The Senate of the University of Cambridge, in England, by a vote of three hundred and ninety-eight to thirty-two, has admitted women to the regular examinations of the university and to receive the same degrees and honors now monopolized by male students. This is a progressive movement for old Cambridge.

—The Louisiana schools are now receiving interest upon the school fund to the amount of $30,320, and are soon to have an apportionment of $68,750. Schools are increasing in number and efficiency and a stronger sentiment in favor of public education is evident throughout the State.

—The tuition fees at American colleges vary considerably. At Yale they amount to $150; Harvard, $150; Williams, $90; Amherst, $100; Dartmouth, $80; Syracuse, $60; Rutgers, $75; Cornell, $75; Bowdoin, $75; Rochester, $75; Brown, $85; Pennsylvania, $150 to $170; Michigan, $20.

—The trustees of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Chicago, have elected Rev. Dr. R. P. Warfield, Professor of Theology; Rev. Dr. W. G. Craig, Professor of Church History; Rev. Daniel G. Marquis, Professor of Biblical Criticism and Exegesis.

—The rector, Hon. A. H. H. Stuart, says the bonded debt of the University of Virginia, has been reduced to $80,000, and that provision has been made for its gradual diminution year by year by means of the sinking fund.

—The Southern States, taken together, are said to have a school attendance of 2,816,781, and public school funds, to the amount of $11,634,105. The school population, including white and colored children, is 5,487,966.

—Colonel Charles H. Northam, of Hartford, has given $10,000 to Trinity College in that city, for the erection of a new dormitory. The new building will occupy the vacant yard between the present halls.

—Mr. Moses Hopkins, brother of the late Mark Hopkins, has just given to a California academy, an endowment of $50,000—the largest sum yet bestowed in this way by any one person in that State.

—The amount necessary to secure to the University of Virginia, the McCormick Telescope and the Vanderbilt observatory has been raised, to the great joy of the authorities and the students.

—The brothers Vassar are about to establish in Poughkeepsie an institution which is to resemble the Cooper Institute, and which will be called the "Vassar Institute."

—Nineteen per cent. of the students of Lasell Female Seminary, at Auburndale, Mass., are taking a regular course in cooking, and ten per cent. a course in dressmaking.

—The Illinois State Normal University has a useful summer session for teachers lasting four weeks, and providing free instruction and discussion.

—Ex-Secretary-of-the-Interior Delano, has given $10,000 to Kenyon College, for the purpose of erecting an additional hall for the grammar school.

—The London School Board has decided that women are eligible for appointment as School Inspector—an office held exclusively hitherto by men.

—Four-fifths of the $100,000 which it is proposed to raise as a fund for the more complete endowment of Rochester Theological Seminary has been secured.

—The Boston School Committee has refused to sanction the proposed modifications of the code of corporal punishment in the public schools.

—Oberlin College, Ohio, has had a gift of eight hundred acres of valuable Missouri land from Dr. Lorenzo Flemin.

—At Yale College the freshman class are practicing conversation in Latin under the direction of a professor.

—The Andover (Mass.,) Seminary is to have a new dormitory, costing $10,000.

—The national educational association will meet at Atlanta, Ga., July 19.

EDUCATIONAL.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Owned, controlled and managed by the Louisiana Annual Conference.

Course of study equal to any college in the South. Its roll of pupils has nearly doubled in three months, and still they come. Noted for healthfulness of locality. All the living rules.

Total expense for Spring term, commencing February 14, 1881, only $25 in literary and classical course. Music $30. No extras. Let Louisianians build up their own schools.

A specimen copy of College News, free on application. Address REV. J. LANE HOLDEN, President.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. V. Kuehnger, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musicians.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is extra additional.

Spring session begins February 4, 1881. A discount of twenty per cent. to Methodist preachers, and Publishing House hands taken from them at par.

Send for catalogue to REV. E. E. HOSS, President.

HAMBURG (ARK.) HIGH SCHOOL,

Thirty Miles North of Bastrop, La.

This institution, for both sexes, now in its fourth year, has 84 months yet remaining. Its facilities for educating are peculiar, and its charges are moderate. All modern improvements introduced. Faculty full and experienced. The principal boards his teachers and pupils, regarding the latter as his own children.

One hundred and twenty-five dollars will cover all school expenses, except Music.

City inquirers are referred to Judge R. B. Todd, J. M. Bonner and J. M. Lewis, Esqs.; to Rev. Dr. C. W. Carter and Bishop Keener.

January 6, 1881. D. C. B. CONNERLY, Principal.

READVILLA SEMINARY,

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

A home school for girls. Thorough training in all departments. Full corps of efficient Teachers. Expenses moderate. Numbers limited.

For particulars address MRS. MARY W. REED, Principal.

Memphis Conference Female Institute,

JACKSON, TENNESSEE.

REV. A. W. JONES, A. M., D. D., President.

This well known College of the South and West begins its Fall session the First Monday in September. Opening Concert and Address Tuesday, September 7, 1880. For thirty-six years there has been an average of more than twelve graduates annually.

The Faculty is full and efficient. The determination is to stand among the foremost in the progress of Science, Language and Art.

For further information apply to the President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin September 29, 1880.

This is a family Boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. H. N. MAGRUDER, Baton Rouge, La.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Opens September 6, 1880. The last session was the most prosperous one since the war. The whole cost of board and tuition need not exceed $144 in the Preparatory Department, nor $164 in College classes for the scholastic year. Send for a Catalogue.

C. G. ANDREWS, President.

East Mississippi Female College,

MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.

REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., PRESIDENT.

A chartered and prosperous Southern school for girls and young ladies. Few schools have grown more steadily and rapidly in public confidence and patronage. Increased in numbers during the past seven years as the following figures: 5.6, 6 2.8.6, 9.4, 9.6, 9.7, 14.5. Commanded patronage the last year from Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee and Alabama. Its past history, increasing facilities, accessibility and methods of close and thorough instruction assure its friends of a long and prosperous future for the institution. Send for catalogue.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

EAST TENNESSEE.

Founded 1849, and located where

Pure waters flow,
Sleek cattle low,
Cool breezes blow,
Ripe apples grow.

Excellent and tried teachers. Terms very favorable. The Female Department is at SWEETWATER, on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad. The Male Department, at HIWASSEE COLLEGE POSTOFFICE, seven miles out in the country. A neat monthly paper, the "Hiwassee College Reporter," at fifty cents a year. Address J. H. BRUNNER, President.

JEFFERSON COLLEGE,

HIGH SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN.

Six miles from Natchez, Miss. Session begins September 16. Full corps of instructors. Course of study thorough and extensive. Nearly fifty boarders from abroad. Pupils from a distance board with the principal. Entire expense for ten months, $145. For catalogue address the principal,

J. S. RAYMOND, Washington, Adams county, Miss.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.,

Will begin its forty-first session October 4, 1880. Great attention paid to the regular course. Teachers in the Music and Art departments selected with reference to special fitness. Charges moderate. For further information address H. M. MOSS, A. M., President.

HOMER MALE COLLEGE

THE TWENTY FIRST SESSION

will begin the

FIRST OF SEPTEMBER 1880.

Address R. A. SMITH, President.

MISCELLANEOUS.

FOR SALE.

A desirable residence in Ocean Springs, Miss. For particulars apply to or address the subscriber at that point. A. C. RAMSEY.

Crescent Insurance Co.,

67 & 69 Camp Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

ORGANIZED 1849.—REORGANIZED 1880.

Cash Capital $400,000.

SOLICITS

FIRE, RIVER AND MARINE RISKS.

W. H. LYMAN.....President.
S. H. NEWMAN.....Vice President.
CHAS. E. HICK.....Secretary.

My New Illustrated Price List describing over 100 Gold and Silver Waltham Watches sent for a 3c stamp. It tells how I send watches to all parts of U. S. to be examined before paying any money. Undoubted reference. N. H. White, Jeweler, Newark, N. J.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHERS,

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment

SCHOOL BOOKS

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS,

All the books used in this section supplied at the lowest, and prices guaranteed as low as they can be had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application. Also a general line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER,

SLATED CLOTH,

LIQUID SLATING,

BLACKBOARDS,

BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,

CHALK CRAYONS,

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,

NUMERICAL FRAMES,

SCHOOL SATCHELS,

BOOK STRAPS,

WRITING PAPER,

DRAWING PAPER,

BLOTTING PAPER,

WRITING BOOKS,

COMPOSITION BOOKS,

SLATES AND PENCILS,

INK, INK STANDS, PENS,

PENHOLDERS, CALL BELLS,

Kindergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

Send for anything you want or address for prices.

G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors' members and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

South-western Agency for

Readers' and Writers' Economy Co.

G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

"FOR ORGANISTS!"

ORGAN GEMS. ($2.50.) By F. L. DAVENPORT.

ORGAN SELECTIONS. ($1.50.) By PETERS.

BATISTE'S ORGAN VOLUNTARIES. $2.50.

BATISTE'S LAST COMPOSITIONS. $2.50.

ORGANIST'S RELIANCE. (In Nos., each $1.25. Complete $3.) By EUGENE THAYER.

ZUNDEL'S ORIGINAL ORGAN COMPOSITIONS. $1.25.

In these six well-made books will be found a very large number of voluntaries, some classical, some new and light, but all good. Organists will be glad to use the longer ones intact, and to adopt the shorter compositions as themes from which to vary.

Billee Taylor, price reduced to 50 cents.
Olivette, price reduced to 50 cents.

Johnson's New Method for Harmony. ($1.50.) By A. N. JOHNSON. "The best book in the world" (for its object,) was the commendation bestowed by an enthusiastic pupil on a former book by the same author. However that may be, this is his newest treatise, and can hardly be excelled for plainness of explanation, ease and thoroughness. It does not attempt Counterpoint, or any of the higher problems of composition; but confines itself to those that every organist, every good player, and every composer of "the peoples music," ought to know.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

C. H. DITSON & CO., 843 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Christian Advocate.

A Poet-Cobbler.

Dr. Samuel Johnson said he loved "a good hater." He had reason to hate himself, for he hated many men and several nations. His dislike of the Scotch was proverbial, and found expression even in his dictionary, the last place for a man to vent his prejudices. "Oats"—wrote the great defiuer,—"In England food for horses; in Scotland for men."

"Yes," retorted a Scotchman, as he read it, "and where will you find such horses as in England, or such men as in Scotland?"

Oatmeal has been endorsed by the medical faculty as excellent brain food. Scotland, where it is eaten by all classes, might be cited to authenticate the statement. In fact, many of her poets, theologists, essayists and historians, could truthfully have used the motto which Sydney Smith proposed for the Edinburgh Review:—"We cultivate literature on a little oatmeal."

But whether it is due to an oatmeal diet, or to her churches and schools, or, to her magnificent scenery, so replete with poetic associations, the fact is that Scotland has produced an astonishing number of poets from her brawny peasants. Ploughmen, shepherds, weavers and cobblers have been enrolled in the guild, while the best writer of descriptive geology, Hugh Miller, whose prose is poetry, was a stone-mason.

One of the poet-cobblers was John Younger, who kept a little shop in St. Boswells, a small village not far from Edinburgh. John was also an ardent angler, and had been from the time he could handle "a rowan tree-sapling, a thread and bent pirnie." At his workshop one would be sure to meet the anglers of the district, anxious to get a hint as to the best trout pool or salmon-water.

But when John was seen to throw down the shoes he was cobbling and spread a sheet of paper upon the lapstone, his visitors kept quiet. They knew that they he was neither cobbler nor fisherman, but a rapt, inspired seer. When the inspiration had passed into written lines, John's visitors had a treat awaiting them if they would but listen to the poet.

Such was John's reputation as a fisherman and writer, that the editor of Blackwood's Magazine "sequired from him an article on "Salmon Fishing," and for a long time it was the text-book of which anglers referred.

When Prince Albert offered three prizes for the best essays on the temporal advantages of the Sabbath to the laboring classes, John's friends, after much persuasion, induced him to become a competitor.

He had only forty-eight hours to write the essay, for the announcement had arrived late to the village, and much time has been spent in overcoming the cobbler's diffidence.

But his essay won the second prize. As soon as the news of John's success reached St. Boswell, bonfires blazed and the church-bell rang.

John was a poor man, and hadn't a decent suit of clothes. But his neighbors were determined that he should go to London and receive the prize in person in Exeter Hall. So they figged him out in their "Sunday best," and the squish cobbler stood before Prince Albert.

The poet-cobbler, as was befitting "a brother of the angle," was calm, quiet, considerate gentleman. His wife, Nannie, of whom we wrote,

> Make the thoughts that trouble me
> The saddest thought of any
> Is what may close the other's eyes
> May it be ever Nannie?—

became blind from cataract on both eyes.

Often when seated on his workbench, and visitors were discussing fishing or politics, for John was as ardent a politician as angler, he would steal away to the adjoining room.

There in a chair by the ingle-nook fireside corner, sat the poor helpless blind wife, always listening for the sound of the step that told of the coming of the one man she loved.

Taking her hand, the old man would whisper a tender word, and bending down, kiss her. Wiping away a tear, John would return to his last stone, while she would count the minutes till he came again.

That was the poetry of the heart, which when it passed from the tender caress into rhyme, said:

> Though trifles are but trifles known
> She's yet so kind and gentle,
> Is why that outlasts young life's heyday
> Is the love I bear my Nannie?

John did not leave his Nannie lonely, he closed her "e'en," for she departed four years before he left the body.

Feathers.

Of a feather's lightness we may form some idea when we find that the largest quill of a golden eagle weighs only sixty five grains, and that seven such quills do not weigh more than a copper penny piece; that the feathers of a common fowl, which weigh thirty-seven ounces, weighs only three ounces; and that the entire plumage of an owl weighs only one ounce and a half. Meagre as they are, some for covering and some for strength, we shall find them, on examination, to be very differently put together. The light downy part, when examined through the microscope, will be found to bear little resemblance to the flat part, or blade of the quill. If it were not so, a bird would scarcely be able to fly at all; for when the flat of the wing was pressed down, the air would pass through it and yield no resistance. The fibres of the downy part, we see, have little connection with each other; they have short and loose side-shoots, just sufficient to mat them together when pressed close to the skin; whereas the side shoots of the quill feather hook and grapple with one another, so as to make one firm and united surface.

But there there are, much stronger and stiffer than the wing quill feathers; as those, for instance, forming the tails of the woodpecker tribe. And the reason would be evident to any person who watched a woodpecker on the stem of a tree feeding. Its food consists of grubs, usually concealed in the wood. In order to get them, he must therefore remain fixed on the bark, and make a hole with his beak, a tedious, if not laborious operation, were it not for the wiry stiffness of the tail feathers, which press against a tree and act like an additional limb. The tail, however, has another use, applicable more or less to all birds; it is to them what a rudder is to a boat, and in many cases acts like a third wing. If we look at a hawk hovering in the air, when he remains in one spot we shall see that the tail is spread out like a fan, and it is in a constant state of quivering motion, balancing the bird, while the wings are keeping it afloat.

It is clear that if water could soak into the soft, feathery covering of a bird, every shower of rain would be the death of thousands, inasmuch as it would increase their weight considerably, and, at the same time, by destroying the fine elastic nature of their feathers, entirely disable them from flying, and they must remain in a helpless state upon the ground, either to perish from hunger or become the prey to men or animals, who would catch them without trouble. But against such a possibility they are guarded by an abundant oily covering, which is constantly renewed; so that the rain, instead of sinking, runs off, without remaining an instant; and we all know that if we take up a duck, or any swimming bird, we shall find, though it might have been diving just before, that it is perfectly dry and free from all damp. But this principal of life, if it may be so called, in a feather, ceases with the life of a bird; for if we were to throw a dead duck into the water, we should find that its coat had lost all its power of resisting water and had become a spongy mass of moisture.

The growth of feathers in young birds in hot and favorable weather is very remarkable. It has been ascertained by attending to nestlings, that in eight days after their appearing from the egg in a helpless, naked state, they have acquired the first part of their feathers.

Simplicity in Dress.

We would like to call attention to the fact that the style of dress influences the manners, the carriage of the woman. The masculine style of dress has this objection. It is a little difficult to say what we could substitute for the Ulster that we have all adopted. It is surely a very convenient garment for our streets, and for rain and mud and snow; but there is a difference in the cut of Ulsters, and they should be as little like a very bad overcoat as possible. Where a young girl has side pockets, she is apt to put her hands in them, and where she adds a Derby hat, how often the swagger follows!

The Derby hat appears to me to have no excuse. It is unbecoming even to a man, and absolutely hideous upon a woman. It is surprising to see them adopted by well-bred ladies. They have had great countenance, to be sure, but we think that if we should hand over all the younger generation to an exclusive costume of the Derby hat, the Ulster, the Jersey, and the short skirt, it would not take more than one generation to make us lose all grace of manner.

The short skirt deserves to be commended for the street, but in the house it has neither beauty nor elegance. Even to shorten a long skirt in front for the better display of a pretty foot is a great mistake. It is neither becoming to the foot nor the figure. It gives an intentional look of display, which is unrefined; and surely the dress that leaves something to the imagination is more coquettish and more dignified.

The wearing of jewels is not often well understood. One does not see many handsome jewels worn in America, with the exception of diamonds. The diamond, from its excessive brilliancy and hardness of light, is not becoming to many women. To the blue-eyed, the sapphire, or even the inexpensive turquoise, is often far more harmonious and decorative. A little jade woman in flashing diamonds is absurd.

We knew once a charming little lady who, being in very moderate circumstances, dressed in such simple materials as she could easily procure in winter often in soft gray woolens, in summer in light colored muslins, with a white scarf, a straw bonnet, with the plainest pale ribbon neatly tying it down. Her complexion was like a wild rose, and with her soft fair hair and blue eyes, her figure delicate even to the point of fragility, no dress could have been more coquettish and exquisitely appropriate. Later her husband came into a fortune. She eagerly adopted heavy velvets, beneath whose weight she seemed to totter, diamonds of great size and brilliancy. They made her at once a plain woman; and as her freshness began to fade, we wondered how we could ever have thought her exquisitely pretty; and it seemed to us that with soft lace and the tender dullness of pearls, with crapes of gray or white as material for her gowns, even faded she would have been charming.

Miss M. E. Oakey, in Harper's Magazine for March.

A Wonderful Cup.

Baron Charles de Rothschild of Frankfort, has recently purchased for the enormous sum of 800,000 francs ($160,000), a silver gilt cup by the celebrated Jamnitzer, which is said to be a marvellous work of art. This sum, according to the Chronique des Arts, is, as far as is known, the largest price ever paid in modern times for a single object of art. The work is the centrepiece of a table service. The foot is composed of a rock entirely covered with grasses and field flowers, on which disport themselves beetles, little lizards, locusts, and snails. From this rises the figure of a woman, emblematizing the earth, and bending in eloquent poise, as she supports on her head and her hands, a tall chalice decorated with grotesques and topped by a rover, which terminates in a vase in the form of a lobster, from which springs a bunch of leaves and flowers. The silver gilt of which the cup is made has ornaments in opaque and translucent enamels. The goldsmithery of the sixteenth century is said to offer nothing more finished in execution, and which, though open to criticism possibly from the standpoints both of taste and style, has its weaknesses counterbalanced by the wonderful perfection of all its details.

The story of Baron Rothschild's acquisition of the work is quite curious. It formed part of the estate of the late Nuremberg banker, Merkel, who died in 1875, and whose heirs, by common accord, agreed to loan it, together with Albert Durer's portrait of Holchucher, to the German museum at Nuremberg, of which Jamnitzer's chief d'œuvre became one of the greatest treasures. Indeed the public, during the years it was on exhibition, thought it belonged to the museum. It was so arranged that the work could not be taken away without joint consent of the heirs and a ministerial authorization. Some months ago the celebrated work disappeared from the galleries, to the great astonishment and consternation of the Nurembergers and the cemetery in general. After a while it leaked out that several. After a while it leaked out that a Frankfort dealer in art objects, the agent of Baron Rothschild, had appeared with the necessary papers from the family and the minister, and the directors of the museum had been obliged to deliver to him the cup. The whole affair was conducted with great secrecy, and it is certain that had it been known that the object was for sale, the director of the Nuremburg museum as well as those of many others would have competed with the present purchaser for its possession.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—THE MILD POWER CURES.—

HUMPHREYS' HOMEOPATHIC SPECIFICS.

In use 27 years.—Each number the special prescription of an eminent physician.—The only Simple, Safe and Sure Medicines for the people.

LIST PRINCIPAL NOS.	CURES.	PRICE.
1.	Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations	.50
2.	Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic	.50
3.	Crying Colic, or Teething of Infants	.50
4.	Diarrhea of Children or Adults	.50
5.	Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic	.50
6.	Cholera Morbus, Vomiting	.50
7.	Coughs, Cold, Bronchitis	.50
8.	Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache	.50
9.	Headaches, Sick Headache, Vertigo	.50
10.	Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Indigestion	.50
11.	Suppressed or Painful Periods	.50
12.	Whites, too Profuse Periods	.50
13.	Croup, Cough, Difficult Breathing	.50
14.	Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Eruptions	.50
15.	Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains	.50
16.	Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Ague	.50
17.	Piles, Blind or Bleeding	.50
19.	Catarrh, Acute or chronic, Influenza	.50
20.	Whooping Cough, Violent Coughs	.50
24.	General Debility, Physical Weakness	.50
27.	Kidney Disease	.50
28.	Nervous Debility	1.00
30.	Urinary Weakness, Wetting the Bed	.50
32.	Disease of the Heart, Palpitation	1.00

Sold by druggists, or sent by the Case, or Single Vial, free of charge, on receipt of price. Send for Dr. Humphreys' Book on Diseases &c. (144 pages), also Illustrated Catalogue FREE. Address, Humphreys' Homeopathic Medicine Co., 109 Fulton Street, New York.

JOS. B. WOLFE & CO.,

Cotton Factors,

59 Carondelet Street, New Orleans,

And General Agents for

DANIEL PRATT IMPROVED

"Revolving Head Cotton Gin,"

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873,

—AND—

Eclipse Hulling Cotton Gin,

WITH REVOLVING HEAD.

PRICES REDUCED.

THE REVOLVING HEAD GIN has been in use for the past eight seasons and several improvements have been added. Its advantages all traceable at the ends of the cotton bats, previous to the bolt from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint from the same quantity of seed cotton than any other gin in use. The Revolving Head flattens the draft and causes the cotton to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while recognizing steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton of a class more full of greater market value. The improved saw, given a length of grapple, with extra, well-set gear, adapted to the best of ginning work, will gin from twenty-five to forty-five bales of cotton in every 10 days' run of 10 hours. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

SELF FEEDERS and CONDENSERS with latest improvements also made by the Patent Pratt Gin Company, to work with Above Gins. Send for descriptive circulars. JOS. B. WOLFE & CO., New Orleans, La.

H. DUDLEY COLEMAN & BRO.

No. 12 Union St. New Orleans La.

DEALERS IN

MACHINERY

MACHINERY

SEND FOR CIRCULARS. COMPARE OUR PRICES.

MILL STONES, IRONS & PORTABLE STEAM ENGINES.

MAKE FLOUR, CORN, SAW, AND COTTON PRESSES MILLS

1000 AGENTS WANTED!

One in each town and neighborhood in Mississippi and Louisiana, to sell

Dr. Dutton's Vegetable Discovery.

It is sold only by certificated agents.

It is the best BLOOD AND LIVER Medicine ever used. Write for terms. It will pay you.

J. L. PUTNELL, General Agent, Jackson, Miss.

BEWARE OF FRAUD.

To protect the public against imitation and fraud, we specially caution all purchasers of

BENSON'S

CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER

to see that the word CAPCINE on the label of each plaster is correctly spelled.

BEWARE of worthless plasters offered under similar sounding names.

Remember the only object the dealer can have is that he makes a somewhat larger profit on the superior article.

SEABURY & JOHNSON.

E. HEATH,

IMPORTER AND DEALER IN

Carpets, Floor Oil Cloths,

UPHOLSTERY GOODS, Wall Paper, Window Shades, Cornices, Lace and Nottingham Curtains, Mirrors, Mouldings, Chromos, Engravings, etc.

Frames made to order a specialty.

No. 99 Camp Street, New Orleans.

All Farmers, Mothers, Business Men, Teachers and mechanics who are tired out by constant toil and worry, and all who are miserable with Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sleeplessness, a weak Bowel, Kidney or Liver Complaints, you can be invigorated and built up by using PARKER'S GINGER TONIC

It you are wasting away with Consumption, Insane Weakness, age, dissipation or any sickness it will in case pimples, and your blood needs purifying, you will find PARKER'S GINGER TONIC the Best Health & Strength Restorer you can use; and for a specific to Hitters, and other Tonics, as it builds up the system, but never intoxicates. It has Saved Hundreds of Lives; and May Save Yours.

Buy a so ct. bottle and be sure the signature of Hiscox & Co., N. Y., is on outside wrapper.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM Restores Dandruff. Elegantly Perfumed. Restores Color. Prevents Baldness.

MISCELLANEOUS.

25,000 SOLD!

FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S

—MANUAL—

Edited by GEO. E. WARING, Jr.,

Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

600 Octavo Pages—Over 200 Illustrations.

Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assorted analysis and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promoting novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, in Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $3 50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address

G. T. LATHROP,

112 Camp street, New Orleans

NEW YORK SHOPPING

Of every description, for ladies and gentlemen. Household articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address

Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,

P. O. Box, 598, New York.

FURNITURE

JOHN BOIS,

DEALER IN

Parlor, Bed and Dining Room FURNITURE.

291 Camp St., cor. Calliope, New Orleans.

Repairing, Upholstering, Varnishing, etc., promptly done. Country orders promptly attended to. Spring, Hair and Moss Mattresses made to order. A full line of common Furniture on hand; suitable for the country.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at

JOHN GAUCHE'S

MAMMOTH

QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI-PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 160 pieces, for $12.

ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $10.

REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.

ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3 50.

ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.

ENGLISH CHINA GOLD BAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5 50.

THE BEST SELECTION OF

CROCKERY

Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods

OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.

REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS

JOHN GAUCHE,

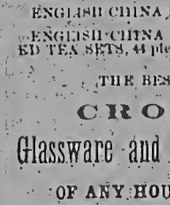
AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,

109, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street,

Branch House, Nos. 108 and 110 Chartres Street.

JOSEPHUS'

COMPLETE



WORKS.

Comprising the History and Antiquities of the Jews, with the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and discoursings concerning Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, James the Just, and the Sacrifice of Isaac, together with a discourse on Hades or Hell, with his autobiography, Translated by William Whiston, A. M., to which is added an analytical index to the entire work.

This large octavo work of 780 pages, bound in cloth, $2 00; in full leather binding, $2 50; mailed postpaid on receipt of price.

G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.

SIZES AND PRICES.

Diam'r of Bell.	Weight with Yoke & Frame	Cost of Bell & Hang'g.
No. 8, 25in.	230 lbs.	$ 25 00
No. 6, 27in.	340 lbs.	36 00
No. 7, 30in.	490 lbs.	50 50
No. 5, 34in.	730 lbs.	75 00
No. 9, 38in.	925 lbs.	130 00

RUMSEY & CO., Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A

WATCHES.

LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upward.

GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $45 and upward.

GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward.

BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward.

All guaranteed.

A. B. GRISWOLD & CO., Cor Canal and Royal Sts.

YOUNG MEN'S

Christian Association,

OF NEW ORLEANS.

ROOMS, 87 CAMP STREET,

Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M., except Sunday, and on Sundays from 2 to 8 P. M., where may be found the leading daily and weekly papers of the most important cities of the United States.

SERVICES.

Tuesday, 7.30 P. M.—Devotional.

Thursday, 7.30 P. M.—Singing Class.

NOON-DAY PRAYER-MEETING.

Daily, 12 to 12.30.

Rule.—Prayers and Remarks are limited to three minutes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

D. H. HOLMES,

155 Canal Street. - - - 15 Bourbon Street.

Our Stock of Spring Goods is now complete, consisting of the most novelties in Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales.

HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.

SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE.

D. H. HOLMES,

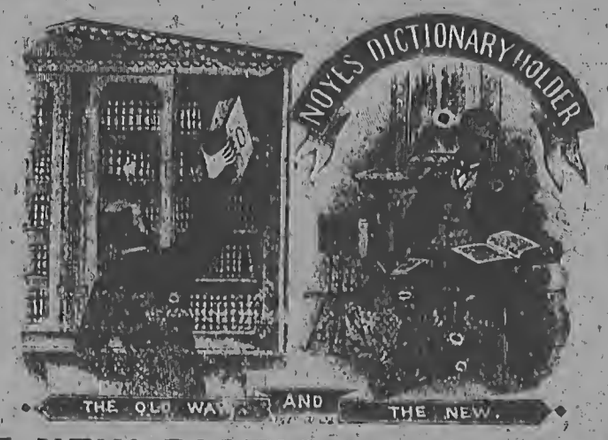
155 Canal Street, New Orleans

WHEELER & PIERSON,

(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Hewes.)

CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,

Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.



Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40. | Business Suits, $12 to $25

6 Shirts for $9 | Collars, $1.50 per Dozen.

Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.

Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.

Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department up stairs.

THE NEW DICTIONARY HOLDER.

These holders are so arranged that they press the book firmly together when it is closed; in short the Dictionary Holder is perfect in form, finish and operation, and will be found one of the most elegant and desirable articles for schools, libraries or professional reference, and library use. Every one who uses a dictionary should have one of these patent holders, and have the unwieldy, unabridged dictionary in its place. Place the dictionary in the holder and keep it there. There is no more occasion to take it out of the holder than out of its binding. Children and grown people refer to a dictionary if mounted in one of these holders and the book does not become racked, soiled and spoiled. You have both hands to look at what you are reading, and close it and it remains closed. If placed by your side when reading or writing, the task of looking up words is not deferred and then forgotten, but done instantly, and quick. The holder is light enough to lift you stand, low enough if you sit, and has received unlimited praise from clergymen, authors and teachers, and all others who have used it. The Unabridged Dictionary, either of Worcester or Webster, fits in the holder equally well.

Price finished in hard jet black Japan, $2 00

" white, or pickle wash, 2 50

Address G. T. LATHROP, Agent for the Southwest, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

CATARRH Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects—corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, offensive smell, disgusting odors, nasal deformities, and deadly consumption. From first to last it is exceedingly offensive. Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. If neglected while a cure is possible, it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, successful and pleasant treatment is

Dr. M. W. CASE'S CARBOLATE of TAR INHALANT

FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, Bronchitis & Deafness.

It does not only relieve, but cures, by the use of Carbolate of Tar, the most healing principle known to science. Eminent and Cardinals of the Church, Governors, Senators, Members of Congress, Judges, Lawyers, Physicians and Clergymen are so combined with the Tree of Life that the mere breathing converts them into a close smoke vapor. This is inhaled taken right to the diseased parts. No Drug. Do Not Water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. The treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by thousands who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FULL TREATMENT—Circulars, etc., Sent Free on Satisfaction Always Guaranteed. Address DR. M. W. CASE, 933 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

HOW TO PAINT.

A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain common sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes

Every Man His Own Painter.

Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, glue, pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—

Paint for Out-Buildings,

—Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut and staining or calcamanie, making rustic pictures, painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture waxing furniture cleaning paint—

Paint for Farming Tools,

and for machinery, and household fixtures.

To Paint a Farm Wagon,

to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.

The work is neatly printed, with illustrations wherever they can serve to make the subject plainer, and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.

Price by mail, post paid, $1.

G. T. LATHROP, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

Good News! Good News!

Mammoth Furniture House

OF

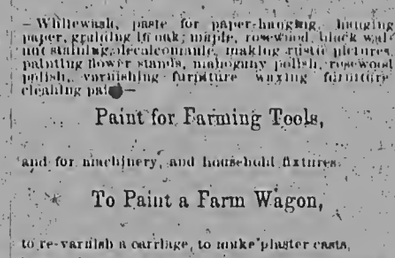
McCRACKEN & BREWSTER,

33 & 35 Royal Street,

Now have the largest stock of Fine and Medium Chamber Sets, Ebony Gilt and Walnut Parlor Sets, Dining-Room and Hall Furniture to be found in the South. Also a large and various stock of cheap and durable Furniture suitable for the country trade.

THONET BROS., VIENNA,

BENT WOOD FURNITURE



Our motto—small profits and quick returns.

McCRACKEN & BREWSTER.

J. H. KELLER,

MANUFACTURER OF

CARBOLIC,

Office, 110 Gravier St. FACTORY, 57 to 59

All Kinds of Laundry and Toilet Soaps.

Send for Circular.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2000 RECIPE BOOK. Sells at Sight. You double your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

MENEELYS' BELLS.

For Churches, etc., known to the public since 1826, are made only at "THE MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY," West Troy, N. Y. Catalogues free.

UNITED STATES

Four Per Cent. Bonds

BOUGHT AND SOLD BY

New Orleans National Bank,

38 CAMP STREET.

NEW REVISED EDITION

EVERYBODY'S LAWYER

AND

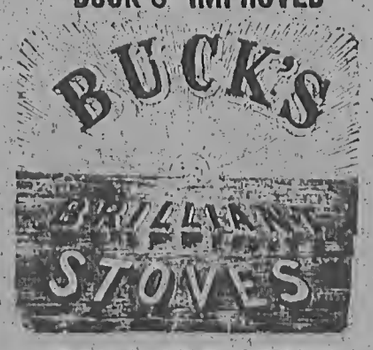
BOOK OF FORMS.

A complete guide in all business transactions and negotiations

FOR EVERY STATE IN THE UNION

Containing plain and simple instructions in conducting business of every description, and legal forms for drawing all necessary papers in accordance with the Laws of these several States regulating the

Civil and Commercial Relations of Every-day Life



together with the Constitution of the United States and Amendments, with notes of Decisions concerning the General Government and the various State Governments; the Copyright Laws, Post Office Regulations, Patent and Pension Laws, etc., etc., thoroughly revised to date, by

A LEGAL GENTLEMAN.

Strongly bound in cloth, with leather back, containing 672 pages. Mailed post paid on receipt of $2

G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

BUCK'S IMPROVED

BRILLIANT STOVE

Is acknowledged to be the Best Cook-Stove Made.

SOLD BY

H. HALLER,

NEW ORLEANS.

DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF

Cooking and Heating Stoves of the most improved makes, Stamped, Plain and Japanned Tin-ware, Tinned and Enameled Iron-ware, Iron and Clay Furnaces, Tinner's Stock, Granite Iron-ware, Lamp Burner and Wick to suit, Tinned Iron Spoons, Forks, Coffee Mills of all kinds, Polished-ware, Trons, Fire-Grates, Fluting Machines, etc.

H. HALLER,

No. 85 Camp St., New Orleans.

Price lists mailed on application.

GRATEFUL. COMFORTING.

EPPS'-COCOA.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette

Made simply with boiling water or milk.

Sold only in tins (½ lb and lb) labelled

JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, London, England.

Also makers of Epps' Chocolat Exquis for afternoons

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, May 23, 1881.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Sat.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	6	6
Ordinary	7	7
Good ordinary	8⅛	8⅛
Low middling	9⅛	9⅛
Middling	10¼	10¼
Good middling	11⅛	11⅛
Middling fair	11⅞	11⅞
Sales to-day	4,750 bales.
Receipts since our last	2,654 bales.
Receipts previously	1,496,794 bales.
Sugar, ₱ lb.
Fair	— @	⅜
Fully fair	—	7⅛
Prime	7⅛	7⅝
Choice	—	—
Yellow clarified	8½	8⅝
White clarified	9⅜	9¼
Powdered	—	—
Crushed	—	—
Molasses, in bbls. ₱ gallon:
Common	20	22
Fair	25	30
Prime	35	40
Choice	—	—
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common	3⅛	3⅛
Fair	4⅛	4⅛
Prime	5⅞	6
Choice	6	6⅛

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western	7	25
New York	12	19
Coffee, ₱ lb.
Rio, ordinary	8⅝	8⅝
Rio, fair	10⅜	10⅜
Rio, prime	11⅞	12
Cheese, ₱ lb.:
Western factory	—	—
English dairy	—	—
Candles, ₱ lb.:
Best brands	11½	12
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl.
Choice, D	3 75	4 00
Flour, ₱ bbl.
Superfine	3 00	— —
XX	3 75	4 00
XXX	4 50	4 75
Choice XX	—	—
Choice fancy	—	—
Fish:
Mackerel, No. 1, in bbls	—	8 00
Half barrels	—	4 50
Kits	—	95
Mackerel, No. 2, in bbls	—	6 75
Half bbls	—	3 50
Kits	—	85
Mackerel, No. 3, in bbls	6 50	6 75
Half bbls	3 90	3 70
Kits	75	—
Codfish, ₱ lb	5½	6
Herring, ₱ box	30	35
Oils, ₱ gallon
Coal, in cases	—	—
Coal, in bbls	—	—
Linseed, raw	55	60
Linseed, boiled	61	64
Cotton seed	29	39
Lard	75	85
Soap, ₱ box:
Magnolia	—	2 10
Olive	—	2 50
Palm	—	—
Castile	—	2 75
Soda, ₱ lb	—	—
Starch, ₱ lb	—	3
Salt, ₱ sack
Coarse	1 00	1 02½
Fine	1 37½	1 40

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow	—	60
White	—	58
Mixed	57	59
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western	47	47½
Red rust-proof	—	—
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs.
Choice	85	87½
Hay, ₱ ton:
Prime	24 00	25 00
Choice	26 00	27 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel:
Mixed	2 45	2 50
Clay	—	2 80

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb:
Breakfast	10¾	10¾
Shoulders	—	7¾
Sides, clear rib	9¾	9¾
Sides, clear	9¾	10
Hams, sugar-cured	10	11½
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl	—	18 50
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb.:
Clear rib sides	—	—
Clear sides	—	—
Shoulders	—	6
Lard, ₱ lb.:
Choice, in kegs	—	12
Choice, in tierces	11¼	11¾

EDULENTS.

Potatoes, ₱ bbl:
Irish	1 50	2 00
Sweet	—	2 00
Onions, ₱ bbl	4 00	5 00
Apples, ₱ bbl	—	—
Cabbages, ₱ box	—	—
Sour Krout, ₱ bbl	12 00	12 50

BALING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard:
Flax	—	—
Jute	—	—
Baling Twine, ₱ lb	—	17
Ties, ₱ bundle
30 lbs and buckles	—	1 65

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ dozen:
Grown chickens	4 75	5 00
Young do	2 00	3 00
Ducks	2 75	3 50
Geese	4 00	5 00
Turkeys	12 00	15 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen:
Western	10	12
Southern	11	12
Honey:
Strained, ₱ gallon	—	—
Comb, ₱ lb	—	—
Pecans, ₱ lb:
Louisiana	—	—
Texas	8	9
Oranges:
Louisiana, ₱ bbl	—	—
Foreign, ₱ box	5 00	5 25
Wool, ₱ lb.:
Louisiana	20	22
Texas	—	—
Feathers, ₱ lb:
Geese	—	—
Hides, ₱ lb.:
Country green	6	6
Dry salted	10	10½
Dry flint	12	13
Ox Horns, each	—	6
Tallow, ₱ lb	5½	6¼
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton
In sacks	—	—
Meal	25 00	—
Oil cake	24 00	—
Cooperage, ₱ each:
Sugar hogsheads	3 00	3 25
Molasses barrels	1 80	1 85
Half barrels	—	1 05
Kegs	—	70
Oak Staves, per 1200:
Kegs	—	—
Barrels	—	—
Extra claret	90 00	100 00
Extra hogshead	135 00	140 00
Extra pipes	155 00	180 00
Tobacco:
Low lugs	—	4½
Medium	—	—
Good to fine	—	—
Low leaf	5½	5½
Medium	6½	7
Good	7½	8
Fine	7½	8
Selections	10	12

"Father, is it grammatical for you to say, 'make as little noise as you can help,' or 'make as little noise as you can't help?' For is it the noise I can help or the noise that I cannot help that you desire me to make? And —" "See here, Augustus, make less noise there? Keep still, or I'll grammar you."

There is More Strength

restoring power in a 50 cent bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic than in a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body. See other column.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

GALVESTON, May 17.—A special dispatch to the News from Waco, Texas, says: A solid mountain of red, brown and white sandstone has been discovered near Regan, on the Texas and Pacific Railroad. Experts pronounce the stone as equal to any in America.

WASHINGTON, May 17.—Stanley Matthews to-day took the oath of office as associate justice of the Supreme Court. Chief Justice Waite has relieved Justice Bradley from duty in the Sixth Circuit, comprising the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Michigan and Ohio, and assigned Justice Matthews to that circuit.

ENTERPRISE, Miss., May 17.—Last night about ten o'clock, Robert W. Tolson, a young man about twenty-eight years of age, a son of George W. Tolson, Esq., of this place, was run over and killed by the south bound mail train, near the crossing of the Enterprise and Quitman Road. His body was dragged for more than a hundred yards down the track, and was so cut to pieces and horribly mutilated that it is supposed that it was run over by two or three trains during the night. It was not discovered until this morning about sun-rise, and then by a person seeing a dog eating a human arm which had been severed from the body.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—The Senate, shortly after going into executive session—at 12:50—confirmed Hon. W. A. Robertson, as Collector of the Port of New York.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—The census bulletin, No. 145, gives the centre of population at latitude 39 degrees 4 signs and 8 seconds, longitude 84 degrees 30 signs and 40 seconds. This is 8 miles west by south from the heart of the city of Cincinnati. This places it in Kentucky, one mile from the south bank of the Ohio River, and one and a half miles southeast of the village of Taylorsville. The westward movement is 58 miles since 1870, and 457 miles since 1790.

WASHINGTON, May 18.—Hon. Alex. Boarman, of Shreveport, was nominated to-day by the President for Judge, and Ross Wilkinson for Marshal of the Western District of Louisiana. Neither the President nor the Senators of Louisiana seemed to be aware that the last named nominee has been dead for several days. It was discovered at once, however, and Kellogg telephoned to the White House, and before the Senate had adjourned, he had caused the substitution of James C. Weeks for Marshal, in place of Wilkinson, and the additional nomination of H. B. Taliaferro for District Attorney.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., May 19. — The annual report of the health officer and register of this city shows that Montgomery is the healthiest city in the United States. The number of deaths per thousand of population is shown to be 7.07 among the white people, and 23.01 among the colored people, or on an average of 15.04 among both white and colored.

COLUMBUS, O., May 19.—The People's Temperance Reform Convention, in session here to-day, adopted resolutions favoring an amendment of the State constitution so as to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, and declaring that if the great political parties of the State fail to nominate candidates favoring temperance, a convention will be called to nominate a State temperance ticket.

STAUNTON, May 19.—The General Assembly of what is popularly known as the Southern Presbyterian Church, met here to-day. It will continue in session ten more days. The opening sermon to-day was preached by Rev. T. A. Hoyt, D. D., of Nashville.

After a brief address of welcome by the Rev. W. E. Baker, pastor of the church at Staunton, and prayer by the venerable Dr. Pryor, of Virginia, and an able sermon by the retiring Moderator, Dr. T. A. Hoyt, of Nashville, the General Assembly was called to order at 12:30 o'clock. Rev. Dr. R. P. Farris, of Missouri, was elected Moderator by acclamation. Various executive committees made their reports.

Foreign Mission reported an expenditure of $39,215.93. Africa is recommended as the next field of adventure. The report on education showed that eighty students were receiving instruction for the ministry. During the year there were thirty-eight ordinations and nineteen deaths. Total amount of expenditures was $10,300. The seminary for colored students at Tuscaloosa, Ala., reported a roll of twenty-six and a most encouraging outlook.

NEW YORK, May 20.—A long line of express wagons were backed up in front of the English Publishing House agency from an early hour this morning receiving packages of the English edition of the revised Testament. It was estimated that up to noon to-day 250,000 volumes had been given out, and that probably 50,000 more would be shipped during the afternoon.

Copies of the revised New Testament are for sale in the streets.

GALVESTON, May 20.—A special from Austin, Texas, of the News, says: The fifty-first General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, met here yesterday. The opening sermon was delivered by Rev. W. G. Templeton, of Fayette, Tenn.; Hon. J. M. Bowman, Secretary of State, made the welcoming address, which was well received, and was responded to by Rev. Mr. Templeton. One hundred and seventy delegates, representing nearly the entire sisterhood of States, are present.

For Moderator, Rev. J. W. Darby, of Evansville, Ind.; John Howard, of Brownsville, Pa., and Dr. Kirkpatrick were placed in nomination. Rev. Mr. Darby was elected, and, taking the stand, delivered an eloquent address. The assembly then adjourned until to-day. This is the largest General Assembly ever held by this denomination.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Mr. Bayard, of the committee appointed to wait upon the President, to ascertain whether he had any further communication to make to the Senate, reported that the committee had performed its duty and that the President had stated that he had no further communications to make. Thereupon Mr. Pendleton offered a resolution declaring that when the Senate adjourns to-day it shall stand adjourned sine die.

Mr. Ingalls objected to present consideration of the resolution, and it was laid aside for the time being, liable, however, to be called up at any moment. The Senate then, at 12:10, went into executive session.

When the doors were reopened the Senate, at 3:15 P. M., on motion of Mr. Pendleton, adjourned sine die.

Contrary to the usual custom, no President pro tem. of the Senate was elected.

The Vice President was absent from the Chamber when adjournment took place, the chair being occupied by Mr. Harris.

Owing to the fact that up to the moment of adjourned, the Senate had remained in executive session, there were no spectators in the galleries, and the usual scenes attending sine die adjournment were missing.

The Senators indulged in the usual hand-shaking and well-wishing, and in a few moments the Chamber, which had been the theatre of so much activity during the session just closed, was deserted.

CLIFTON, Pa., May 21.—Col. Thos. A. Scott died at 9 o'clock this evening.

PHILADELPHIA, May 21.—After sinking rapidly during the afternoon, he fell into a state of total unconsciousness at seven o'clock, and remained so until the moment of final dissolution. He was surrounded at the last moment by the members of his family and several of the officers of the Pennsylvania railroad.

SHREVEPORT, La., May 21.—Major Green, chief engineer, has directed Major W. R. Devoe, to proceed down the line to-morrow morning to lay out towns and depots on the New Orleans Pacific road. The engine and construction train will run twenty miles in fifteen days. Too much rain has done some damage to the crops during the past two weeks.

NEW YORK, May 22.—A number of Brooklyn clergymen to-day used the Revised Testament in reading passages of the scripture.

LITTLE ROCK, May 23.—Crop reports from the interior of the State are rather discouraging. Continuous rains have prevented working, and the crops are badly in grass. To add to the misfortunes of farmers a species of cut-worm has made its appearance, and has completely destroyed the stands of cotton on a great many large plantations. The great trouble now is that there is not enough seed to replant. Locusts are at work in a great many places in the State.

FOREIGN.

VIENNA, May 18.—A telegram from Waleszea, on the Russian frontier, reports that the Jews there have been attacked by the populace and all their houses destroyed. Three hundred and thirty families have fled into Galcia.

TUNIS, May 19.—There was fighting yesterday at Tonkelorfa, and it is stated that both natives and French lost heavily in killed and wounded. Several of the French wounded have been brought to the city.

The French are marching direct upon Matcur. Pressure will probably be used to induce the heir apparent to sign a document acknowledging the protectorate.

LONDON, May 19.—Advices from St. Vincent, state that the British sloop of war Doterel, was blown up at Sandy Point, in the Straits of Magellan on the 26th ult., and one hundred and forty-three lives lost. There were two explosions; the first is supposed to have been the bursting of the boiler used in condensing sea water; the second was in the forward magazine.

The vessel went down bow foremost in eight fathoms of water, in three minutes, and nothing was seen after the second explosion except in a few plants. The survivors saved their lives by jumping overboard after the first explosion. They were rescued by boats from vessels in the vicinity. Commander Evans jumped through a port hole and was taken from the water much lacerated by broken glass and wreckage.

LONDON, May 21.—Two million copies of the revised New Testament have been already sold here.

PARIS, May 21.—News received here from Oran, Algeria, states a column of French troops under Colonel Innocents have been attacked by a body of 5000 insurgents led by the chief of the Bouamamon rebels and detailed after a hotly contested battle, in which the French lost forty native auxiliaries killed and wounded.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 23. — Riots against the Jews are still reported from various places.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 23.—The House of Representatives last Thursday almost unanimously approved the Southern Railroad grant concession. The bill will pass the Senate also within the next ten days.

The Tehuantepec concession which the Railroad Commission granted to Capt. Eads is opposed by the House, and will pass the Senate with some non-essential modifications that are acceptable to Capt. Eads. The inauguration of the Mexico Cuanta Railroad will take place June 16.

A Sad Accident.

MR. EDITOR: A very sad accident occurred a few days ago, near Orange Hill, in Washington county, Florida. A friend of mine by the name of Taylor, who has been a respectable citizen of Washington county for many years, was hunting around his mill pond, but did not know that Mr. Morris was fishing at the pond, and Mr. Morris's little boy, five or six years of age playing by the pond. Mr. Taylor saw the child lying and rolling in the grass near the edge of the water, and thought it was an otter, and shot the little boy through the head and killed him. When Mr. Taylor saw what he had done, he loaded his gun again, and begged Mr. Morris to take the gun and kill him. But Mr. Morris told him it would not do any good. Mr. Taylor says he has lost a wife and five children, but the trouble of all did not amount to what this is.

REDDIN E. WILLIAMS.

HOLMES COUNTY, Fla., May 11, 1881.

Our Foreign Missionary Work.

Apportionments, 1881-82.

Alabama Conference	"	$ 8,500
Arkansas	"	3 000
Baltimore	"	10 300
Columbia	"	425
Denver	"	450
East Texas	"	2,150
Florida	"	2,100
German	"	850
Holston	"	6,800
Illinois	"	4,700
Indiana	"	100
Indian Mission	"	250
Kentucky	"	6,850
Little Rock	"	4,300
Los Angeles	"	250
Louisiana	"	6,850
Louisville	"	10,300
Memphis	"	10,300
Mississippi	"	7,300
Missouri	"	8,500
Nebraska	"	250
North Ala.	"	5,800
North Carolina	"	12,000
North Georgia	"	11,800
North Miss.	"	7,300
North Texas	"	4,900
N. W. Texas	"	4,250
Pacific	"	1,275
South Carolina	"	7,300
South Georgia	"	8,500
S. W. Missouri	"	5,300
St. Louis	"	5,200
Tennessee	"	12,850
Texas	"	7,500
Virginia	"	12,850
Western	"	850
Western Va.	"	2 000
West Texas	"	1,700
White River	"	2,500
Total apportionments		$200 000

NOTE.—All concerned will bear in mind that these apportionments are made on the basis of the apportionment of the Bishops' fund. This rule has been followed by the Board for several years, with rare exceptions.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES

CENTENARY COLLEGE, JACKSON, LA.

Sunday, May 29.—Annual Sermon, by Rev. W. V. Tudor, D. D., of St. Louis.

Monday, May 30.—Meeting of Board of Trustees at 9 A. M. Competitive Examination for the best scholarship in Greek for Gold Medal offered by Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, of Baton Rouge, at 11 A. M. Exhibition of Preparatory School at 7½ P. M.

Tuesday, May 31.—Meeting in the hall of the Union Society, delivery of Prizes and Diplomas, speeches by the graduates. At 10½ A. M. meeting of the Alumnæ; address by Rev. E. H. Mounger, of Hinds county, Miss; reading of Poem by E. G. Miller, of Pennsylvania. At 11½ A. M., exhibition of the Literary Societies; contest for the Linus Parker Gold medal. Address to the Societies by — —.

Wednesday, June 1.—At 9 A. M., meeting in the hall of the Franklin Society, delivery of Prizes and Diplomas; speeches by the graduates. At 11 A. M., Commencement exercises! Orations by the graduating class; conferring degrees; baccalaureate address by the President.

Next session begins on Monday, September 5, 1881.

C. G. ANDREWS, President.

JACKSON, LA., May 10, 1881.

CLOSING EXERCISES OF

WHITWORTH FEMALE COLLEGE.

Commencement Sermon, June 26, 11 A. M., by Rev. Bishop Kenner, D. D.

Address before Christian Association, June 26, 8 P. M., by Rev. B. Curradine.

Address before Alumnæ Association, June 27, by Hon. E. John Ellis, of New Orleans.

Annual Address, June 28, by Rev. B. M. Palmer, D. D., of New Orleans.

Conferring degrees, June 28.

Musical entertainment by Alumnæ Association, June 28, P. M.

B. F. JOHNSON, President.

COMMENCEMENT.

EAST MISSISSIPPI FEMALE COLLEGE.

Sunday, May 29. Commencement Sermon, Rev. H. Urquhart, Auburn, Ala.

Monday, May 30.—Anniversary of the Castalian Literary Society, Rev. W. R. Sims, Brandon, Miss. Annual Meeting of the Board.

Tuesday, May 31.—Alumnæ Anniversary, Rev. John Mathews, D. D., New Orleans.

Wednesday, June 1.—Graduation Exercises.

J. W. ADKISSON.

MERIDIAN, MISS., May 14, 1881.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The camp meeting at William's Camp Ground, Pensacola District, will commence Thursday night, June 30. Friends who made subscriptions for the benefit of the camp ground last year will please pay their subscriptions as soon as possible, as it is greatly needed. Those good sisters who promised comforters for the preachers' tents will please bring them along when they come to the camp meeting. Preachers are cordially invited to be with us; provision has been made for their entertainment.

The grounds have been improved, a new hotel built, and other provisions for the comfort of visitors made.

S. H. COX.

SEA SHORE CAMP MEETING.—The Camp Meeting for 1881, on Sea Shore Camp Ground, will commence on Wednesday, July 13, 1881.

PHILIP HALLAHAN, Secretary. W. H. FOSTER, President.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

The District Conference for Williamsburg District, Mississippi Conference, will convene at Columbia, on Friday, July 1, 1881, at 9 o'clock, A. M.

D. A. LITTLE, P. E.

SEASHORE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Meets at Moss Point, Miss., Friday, May 27, at 9 A. M. Conveyance will be at Scranton Thursday, 11 A. M., to take preachers and delegates to Moss Point. Thursday, May 26, at 3 P. M. the preachers will hold a meeting at the Methodist Church, Moss Point, to consider the interests of the district, and the best mode of promoting the interests of the church within its bounds. Friends of the cause are invited to attend and take part in the meeting. We will enquire after unoccupied ground, and how to more fully "possess the land" now but partially occupied.

T. S. WEST, P. E.

The Vicksburg District Conference will be held at Fayette, June 3-5, Bishop Keener presiding. The change of time is made to enable Bishop Keener to be with us.

JOHN A. BLAIR, P. E.

Quarterly Conferences.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MOBILE DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Franklin Street	Apr. 24
Eastern Shore, at Daphne	30, May 1
Toulminville, at Toulminville	May 7, 8
Citronelle, at Citronelle	14, 15
Grand Bay, at St. Elmo	21, 22
Saraville, at Ft. Madison	28, 29
Grove Hill, at Coffeeville	June 4, 5
St. Stephens, at Andrew Chapel	11, 12
Bladon Springs, at Mt. Zion	18, 19
Okatuppa, at Jones' Chapel	25, 26

16 O. R. BLUE, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

JACKSON DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

	In Part.
Bonie Chapel	June 4, 5
Canton	11, 12
Forest Grove	18, 19
Thomastown	25, 26
Edwards	July 2, 3
Flagg's Chapel	6, 7
Clinton	9, 10

The Jackson District Conference will meet in the Methodist Church in Canton, at 10 A. M. on Thursday, June 9. Let brethren remember to have Quarterly Conference Records present for examination, as the law requires.

12 W. L. C. BUNSICUTT, P. E.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

DELHI DIST.—SECOND ROUND.

Delhi and Madison circuit, at Delhi	May 7, 8
Winnsboro circuit, at Winnsboro	14, 15
Oak Ridge circuit, at Good Hope	21, 22
Rayville circuit, at Girard	28, 29
Trenton and Monroe, at Trenton	June 4, 5
Colony circuit at Faulk's Chapel	11, 12
Lind Grove circuit, at Schemanilhenat	18, 19
Bastrop circuit, at Island	25, 26
Floyd circuit	July 2, 3
Providence and Pecan Grove circuit	9, 10
Tensas Chapel, at Tensas Chapel	16, 17
Tensas circuit at Wesley	23, 24
Waterproof, at Vidalia	30, 31

16 B. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

APPORTIONMENT BY THE DISTRICT STEWARDS, DELHI DISTRICT, 1881.

	Presiding Elder.	Bishops.	Conference Claimants.	Foreign Missions.	Missions.	Total.
Waterproof	$100	$10	$76	$60	$15	$261
Lake Providence	100	10	76	60	15	261
Trenton and Monroe	100	10	76	60	15	261
Bastrop	100	10	76	60	15	261
Lind Grove	100	10	76	60	15	261
Oak Ridge	100	10	76	60	15	261
Tensas circuit	40	5	30	25	5	105
Floyd	81	8	63	55	15	225
Winnsboro	83	7	63	45	12	210
Rayville	83	7	63	55	13	221
Colony	50	6	40	30	9	135
Delhi and Madison	60	7	45	60	6	148
Total	$1000	$100	$760	$600	$150	$2610

The Louisiana Conference, at its last session, fixed the sum to be raised for Ministerial Education at "twice the amount apportioned for Bishops."

B. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT:

OFFICE: CORNER CARONDELET AND GRAVIER STREETS.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

Fire assets, excluding paid-up capital	$9,881,426 21
Paid-up capital	1,228,200 00
Total fire assets	$11,109,626 21
Fire liabilities	3,944,358 23
Making the surplus for policy-holders	$7,165,267 98

Losses by Chicago Fire in 1871..$2,239,091
Losses by Boston Fire in 1872..$1,429,729

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city, thus placing the Company on an even footing with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS:

J. F. SCHRODER, Esq., Chairman, of Leopold Christ & Co.
NEWTON BUCKNER, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERRY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Lallande.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson and Simpson.
HENRY V. OGDEN, Resident Secretary.
JULES P. ROUX, Ass't Resident Secretary.
NEW ORLEANS, October 20, 1880.

B. J. MONTGOMERY. C. KIRSCH

R. M. & B. J.

MONTGOMERY FURNITURE AND MIRROR EMPORIUM,

Corner Camp and Poydras Sts.

After a sojourn of over six weeks among the Factories North, East and West, we open the Fall and Winter Trade with the largest and best selected stock of Furniture, French and German Plate Mirrors, Ornamental and Fancy Goods, Upholstery Goods and Cabinet Makers' Hardware ever brought to this city. We select our goods in person from the best factories and are determined not to be undersold. Our assortment being too extensive and varied to be enumerated in detail, we request our customers and the general public to call and inspect for themselves.

On hand a full line of the celebrated Vienna Bent Wood Work and Juvalid Wheel Chairs.

Goods packed and delivered F. O. B.

1000 MORE CUSTOMERS

My Prices

Will Astonish.

PIANOS! ORGANS!

AND

Musical Instruments,

Write to

P. WERLEIN,
No. 135 Canal Street,
NEW ORLEANS.

$25 TO $35.

STEWART'S NEW IMPROVED

SINGER Sewing Machine.

Great Reduction in Prices!

Down with Monopolies!

Hard Times Demand Low Prices.

We warrant all our Machines to be NEW, LATEST-IMPROVED and PERFECT for

FIVE YEARS.

Our NEW MACHINE is supplied with a LOOSE BALANCE-WHEEL, which is a great improvement over the old SINGER, as it enables the operator to wind the bobbin without running the machine, or removing the work from the needle. This is the most important improvement ever put on the Sewing Machine.

Also dealer in all first-class Machines, such as the

WHEELER & WILSON, GROVER & BAKER, DOMESTIC, WILSON, WEED, Etc.

Cotton, Silk, Flax, Oil and Needles for all kinds of Machines. Address

M. A. PECK,
General Sewing Machine Agent
153 CANAL STREET,
Next to Holmes' Dry Goods Store,
New Orleans.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Styles, 10c. Agents wanted. L. JONES & Co. Nassau, N. Y.

MISCELLANEOUS.

W. F. MELLEN,
Attorney at Law,
13 CARONDELET ST.,
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

FRED. N. OGDEN. BENJ. O. L. RAYNE.

OGDEN & RAYNE,

DEALERS IN

BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,

AND AGENTS FOR THE

Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,

AND

Shultz Belting Company,

18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT,
RICHARD RHODES,
55.....ST. CHARLES STREET.....55
NEW ORLEANS.

Articles for Fishermen of all Kinds.

Rods, Nets, Hooks, Lines, and every desirable article for the Angler, wholesale and retail. Guns imported to order. J. R. Cooper's Breech and Muzzle Loading Guns always on hand. All kinds of improved artificial Baits. Repairing of Guns carefully done by experienced workmen, and Fishing Rods made to order. Address Postoffice Box 1599.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co.,
AMERICAN CHINA HOUSE,
49 Camp Street, New Orleans.

We append a few prices:

The American China Dinner, Breakfast and Tea Set, comprising 100 Pieces, for $12.

A Real French China Dinner Set, 118 Pieces, for $17.

English Stone China Dinner Set, 134 Pieces, for $10.

English Stone China Chamber Set, comprising 10 Pieces, for $2 50.

Decorated Chamber Sets, with different Colored Bands, 10 Pieces, for $2 50.

Glass Goblets, from 60 cents to $1 per dozen.

Particular attention given to Novelties and Specialties pertaining to the House-Furnishing Department. Orders promptly attended to. We have just received a full and complete stock of holiday goods. Call and examine before purchasing.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.

Carpet and Oil Cloth Warehouse.

ELKIN & CO.,
100 - - - CANAL STREET - - - 100

New styles of

MOQUETTE, VELVET, BODY BRUSSELS, and TAPESTRY BRUSSELS, with border to match.
3-PLY and INGRAINS in great variety.
OIL-CLOTHS of all widths.
WINDOW SHADES and CURTAINS, new patterns.
CORNICES and CORNICE POLES.
MATTINGS of every description.
CURTAIN GOODS, TASSELS, CORDS, GIMPS, Etc.

Our prices for corresponding qualities of goods are as low as any house in the South or West.

FURNITURE.

W. G. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,

desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. G. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,
New Orleans.

D. MERCIER & SONS,
Better Known as Cheap John,
NO BRANCH STORE IN TOWN
MEN'S, BOYS' AND YOUTH'S
CLOTHING,
HATS, BOOTS, SHOES, FURNISHING GOODS ETC., ETC.
Cor. Dauphine and Bienville sts.,
New Orleans, La.

Orders from Country Merchants promptly executed on most reasonable terms.

DR. BLY'S CELEBRATED PATENT ARTIFICIAL LEGS AND ARMS have all the motions of the natural limbs. Perfect satisfaction in all cases or no pay. Prices reduced. Send for pamphlet.

A. McDERMOTT, Manufacturer,
185 Camp St., New Orleans.

PERRY & CO'S TRADE MARK

STEEL PENS

of superior English make; famous for durability, elasticity; great variety of styles suited to every kind of writing. For sale by dealers generally. "TWENTY-FIVE" assorted samples for trial, including the "U. S." and "FALCON" celebrated pens, by mail, on receipt of Twenty-five cents.

SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. S.
VISON, BLAKEMAN, TAYLOR & CO.
NEW YORK.

Christian Advocate.

OL. 27.—NO. 22. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1881. WHOLE NO. 1356.

PUBLISHED FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

RED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW LEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

INUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.
G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

L—113 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

cription. . . . $2 per annum.

ors and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

achers of the M. E. Church, South, are author- d Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.
EV. H. D. MOORE.
EV. O. R. BLUE, D. D.
EV. J. O. ANDREW.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE
EV. W. H. WATKINS, D. D.
EV. JAMES A. GODFREY.
EV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
EV. JOHN MATHEWS, D. D.
EV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
EV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

ON THE PIER.

e of music, a blaze of light te the dancers whirl in glee.
ut beyond the silent night
e sighing sea.
ave sigh on—sigh on—sigh on e waves sigh on forever.

ic music of mirth and song, ory of laughter and love,
ding measure life whirls along,
th as around and above,
e the music we hear the rhyme
ow of song of the Ode of Time,
ave sigh on—sigh on—sigh on—e waves sigh on forever.

Atlantic Monthly Magazine.

Gossip by the Wayside.

he Methodist of April 16, the Dr. Smart handles without "the managers of the Northern ist Book Concern"—literally without tenderness. The charge they have misappropriated ds of the house, and violated stitution and rules as lam the discipline. Dr. Smart olemnly against any further ation of the money for pur- other than those laid down ly in the law, and he de- that a dividend be declared at avor of each Conference, pointed article with a sort that unless that demand is to, an application to the will compel obedience to the Evidently Dr. Smart knows is shooting at and, if we are taken his battery is taking the "Christian Advocate" show signs of a "hit." It ast week to "smooth over" and entrench the officials be- breastwork made up of the resolutions of the General ence. Dr. Smart shows up strange things in the manage- the funds—rather, profits of se which for years have aver- $73,800. He pertinently ently asks, "where that has all gone to—how applied Dr. Smart should not meddle affairs, nor confuse great asking so many impertinent . Somebody has said that ask more questions in an than a wise man can answer Wiley was recently adjudi the vows to a number of men in the New York East one preparatory to ordina- After telling them that they consistent with Methodist s long as they should remain ministration, he remarked exchange should occur in s to "open the door, and ading: "if you do not open yourself, we will open it for response to the challenge using tobacco, one young man would not promise to quit its the reason that he could not. perhaps answer that, and inde- The very bishops whose s to ask this question of all ates for ordination, use the themselves some of them. Ob- tery! consistency! Another dge didn't know whether he recommend "fasting and ab- ce," or not; but promised to ain the polity of the church how many of us who once stood our Bishops and assumed the or- in vows, have consentiously them? This preacher has not. He es it just here because he be very few of his brethren are in- enough to "cast a stone" at him. ert if we all lied—don't jump—the right word. We have not indifferent," "negligent," etc., ve solemnly broken a solemn and that means lying. By the the modern linguistic refine- and polite way of putting would be ludicrous if it were charmed and demoralizing. stance, a "gambler" is called a ulator in cotton futures." A ho cheats in his "yard stick" unties in his "balances" and in his figures (for figures do called in polite society a very d" man—a "sharp" man. ly God knows him, however, as a "swindler," a "cheater," a "liar," and no amount of linguistic sweetness can make him other than he is. How indignant old John Knox or even the wiry, spindling little John Calvin of Geneva would be if they were living and could hear some of our "limp and lavender" talks from the pulpit. From the "heathery hills" of Scotland, Knox's spirit yet whispers, "ye maun call things by tha names."

Bro. Reynolds in the last Wesleyan Christian Advocate enters the "lists" ready to combat Dr. A. A. Lipscomb's recommendation of "fairy tales, etc." —in fact seems ready for a fight on almost any subject. Dr. Lipscomb has recommended "fairy tales" for children and some "novels" for grown-up people, and he knew what he was doing too. Bro. Reynolds may be good man, but Dr. Lipscomb is a good man and a smart man in addition. The man who never reads a good novel—a standard novel, is neglecting his education—that is what Dr. Lipscomb used to hint to his class, and more than two-thirds of the educators of the land will support him in that view. Some preachers would be much more efficient and acceptable if instead of ruminating over the cropped fields of mediæval theology all the time, they would enter the fresh breezy meadows of some modern novels occasionally. Nature usually hides her treasures in rocks and among brambles, scattering them over vast stretches of country; and the man in search for truth, help and wisdom, like him who searches for treasures must not hunt forever in one place. Walter Scott's "Ivanhoe," "Old Mortality," the "Antiquary," will harm no preacher, man, woman or child, and either of them are much more pleasant reading than "Blair's Sermons" and some other "sermons" that might be named. Bro. Reynolds will get the worst of that argument with Dr. A. A. Lipscomb. He surely did not know how his words might be applied when he spoke of "such a Methodist preacher needs sitting up with and praying for." Dr. Lipscomb will beat all "Pharisees" and pharisaical "old fogies" to heaven, such as Bro. Reynolds.

The materials for a "History of Methodism in Arkansas," as collected by the Rev. John W. Steele, who recently died, have been put into the hands of Dr. Johnson of the Western Methodist. It is matter of deep regret that Bro. Steele was called to pass in before the history was completed. He knew more about "Methodism in Arkansas" than any man in the State, and could have written out his knowledge well. Dr. Johnson however, will write us up in style. Towns and villages have sprung up in a hundred places where Bro. Steele found rancbrakes; and where he preached in cotton-wood cabins so long ago Methodists now have comfortable and commodious churches.

Sectional histories of Methodism multiply whether popular, or not. All these "little" histories will be convenient some day to the compiler of a "big" history.

"Go West, young man" as Greeley said is almost as antiliar as the line: "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown," so often quoted of late as applicable to the Czar. "Come West" is a call that many young men would do well to heed. If you wish to do well, to build up, to get a fair start and an even chance are willing to work, to exercise muscle and brain—come on. There is room and plenty of water—plenty of magnificent land, cheap and for sale.

We want no poets, no book-agents, no lightning rod men or clock pedlars. They have all been here, and left soon after they came, perfectly disgusted at finding that the people were not all fools as they expected.

ALBEMARLE.

That Beautiful Missionary Field.

MR. EDITOR: Your correspondent, "Quercus" in the ADVOCATE of May 5, in an article headed "A Better Plan," asks several suggestive questions. And among other things, he wants to know where some of us are over here, that we do not cultivate, or rather, reap the harvest on the "beautiful missionary field," described by Bro. J. W. Solomon. The writer's name having appeared in this connection, he begs leave to say a word by way of explanation.

The "plan" suggested by "Quercus" is a very good one, and we only wish he was "in reach" that he might "show his faith by his works" in helping to till the ground.

We commend "Quercus'" zeal, but not his knowledge. Is it possible that he has overlooked so striking a name as "Cowikee" in the list of Missions? Did possibly he is rusty on Missionary geography. At any rate, let us state, that "Cowikee" is the name of that same "beautiful field"—at least, a part of it; and that the writer has been regularly authorized to fill it. Alas, but for the fact we are a little "off the road," we are sure "Quercus" would have heard of us.

Now the writer does not know whether his being a "young man" or a "fifth rate preacher," quantified him for this "mission;" possibly it was thought those qualifications united in him!

At all events, he was appointed to it, and serves it to the best of his ability. He has a regular appointment in this field, which he fills, in addition to his work as preacher in charge of Glennville station. The people seem to appreciate his efforts to do them good, and have made arrangements to repair an old church which had long fallen into disuse. Besides, he received one of that neighborhood into the church last Sunday.

And now, Mr. Editor, we would like to say a word or so about missions and missionaries, "briefly by way of application."

If we denominate all that territory, occupied by those who do not hear the gospel—who "have not been to church for years"—if we denominate that missionary ground, we would include a very large portion of our State; and we doubt not that the larger portion of that territory would be found upon investigation, to lie within the corporate limits of our cities.

When one man does not hear the gospel in the country, ten do not hear it in the city. The actual number of those who hear the Word in the country largely exceeds the number that hear it in our cities and towns.

When we lived in the city, we have seen the time when there were not fifty persons at regular service, in a church whose roll contained five hundred—and that too, to hear a first-rate man.

If then, those who do not hear the gospel, are those who need the missionaries' labors, the Bishops had better send our "young men" and "fifth-rate preachers" to the cities! To use the apt language of "Quercus"—"These stationed preachers must stir out!"

Finally, Mr. Editor, let us say a word to "Quercus." In his article, he several times uses the expressions, "first-rate" and "fifth-rate," as applied to our preachers. Now, to say the very least of it, this is unMethodistic. But it is not only so, it is invidious. The idea of saying that a preacher is a $300 or a $500 man! Valuing in money the efforts of a life consecrated to the service of God. "Quercus," it is true, has not been guilty of this in particular, but he rates and classifies those among whom, in our polity as a church, we know no distinction. God does not weigh men in terms of Federal money, as men do one another. And to show the folly of such distinction, he has told us, "they are last which shall be first, and first which shall be last." As Methodist preachers, we receive as our support what the people to whom we are sent by the Bishops, are "willing and able to pay" us. And we are sent by the Bishop, or ought to be if we are not, not where we can "get" so and so, but where he, in his godly judgment, thinks we can best serve the blessed Master.

"Quercus" says also—"any one can see that such small pittances for salaries can not and do not command the services of first rate preachers" (italics ours). We did not know before, that "the services" of the so-called "first-rate" preachers were "commanded" by the "salaries" held out to them. How distant is the day when our "Annual Conference" will be an Annual auction? Who knows?

We took up our Domestic Missionary collection here last Sunday a week ago; and we raised more for Domestic Missions alone, than had been raised for several years for foreign and domestic missions combined. We expect to have a Woman's Missionary Society very soon.

Very truly yours,

COWIKEE.

GLENNVILLE, Ala., May 9, 1881.

T. L. Mellen and Prohibition.

I do not suppose there is a man, woman or child in Mississippi who questions the honesty or integrity of Judge T. L. Mellen. He certainly believes he is right in opposing prohibition and in defending the Pint Law passed by the last Legislature of Mississippi. Indeed in some parts of the State the whisky dealers and those who side with them, have begun to quote the judge on their side of the question; they evidently believe him to be a champion of their cause and business.

This we confess, is an awkward predicament for a temperate and a temperance man to be in, but such is the case; and however much Judge Mellen may dislike it, he has put himself on that side of the question and will have to take the consequences.

Judge Mellen talks about logic and logical consequences, but with all his skill in such matters, he seems to have missed the question in dispute entirely. The friends of prohibition claim that a majority of the people of Mississippi are in favor of so amending the Constitution and laws of the State, as to prevent the making, importing, buying or selling spirituous liquors, except for medicinal, sacramental and mechanical purposes. They believe that whisky making and the whisky trade are an injury to the people of Mississippi. They believe that sound policy and good government demand this change. They are willing to put the whole question on the broad ground of policy and expediency.

It is a question of political economy. While all this is true, yet Judge Mellen has somehow gotten into his head that this movement is a movement of the church against the State and of the religious element against the political element. He "shies" at this stump every time. What prohibitionists want—yea all they ask—is that the Legislature submit the question of "prohibition" or "no prohibition" to a square, fair vote and an honest count. It is not "bigotry" for the people to vote on this question. It is not an effort of any churches to muzzle the drinkers in the State to keep them from drinking. The judge need not leave the church of his choice and seek another communion. Indeed he may stump the whole State and speak against prohibition just as he did in the Legislature in favor of the Pint Law. He may write in the columns of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

We do insist however, that the judge stick to the question, "prohibition" or "no prohibition," as a simple question of sound policy apart from the church and religion. Prohibition will make the citizens of Mississippi healthier, wealthier and wiser than they are. It will prevent crime and promote virtue. It will largely increase the revenues of the State and greatly decrease the expenses of the government. It will save one-half of the present expenses of the insane asylum and three-fourths of the expenses of the penitentiary. It will build up the agricultural, mechanical and manufacturing interests of the State. It will help to reform or drive out the scum of society and will bring in a good class of people. It will improve tenfold the efficiency and reliability of the laboring class of our population. It will go far towards restoring public confidence and will thus greatly help the unmerciful interests of the State. These are some of the things we claim for prohibition—things purely political. No church in all this and not a word about religion. The fact is if the State will adopt a sound policy—a policy in the interests of good government—the churches and religion will take care of themselves with the help of God. Now let Judge Mellen come out and show us that political benefits he claims for the privilege of making, buying, selling and drinking, temperately or intemperately, this greatest curse of the State and nation. Every time he writes he throws down this gauntlet and points to it with pride; and now we accept the challenge and take him on his own ground—"No prohibition as a question of sound political economy." Judge Mello, so I have heard, from those who know him, is a cultivated, high-toned, Christian gentleman, and I believe a member of the church. I make no flings at him personally. I strike at the cause he champions.

ARMOROY.

French Mission.

MR. EDITOR: The second Quarterly Conference of the Attakapas French Mission convened at the residence of Fere Camille, Isle aux Cannes, on Saturday, May 21. Brother Johnston, presiding elder was present, and frere Frederic Bouchard was elected secretary.

Owing to the unavoidable absence of both delegates and missionary from the District Conference, it was resolved that the written reports on state of Sabath schools and of the church be inserted in the columns of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

"The state of our Sunday schools on the mission is good. At Isle-aux-Cannes, our Creole children, hitherto ignorant of gospel news and Bible stories have made a wonderful progress in the knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. The change that has come over the community through the Sunday school, permits the usage of the epithets "remarkable" and "wonderful," as applied to its moral and spiritual advancement. Eight months ago the greater number spent their Sabbaths in the marshes, and ponds of the prairies, crayfishing, shooting and in many instances, hunting, the remainder of their habitements were in keeping with their Sabbath-desecrating propensities. The language in use, although French, was no that of Paris. One out of thirty alone could tell the difference between a "J" and a "G," and even he could not go much further. In social qualities they were shy, timid, and reticent. But now the scene has changed. No magic wand could operate so rapid a transformation as has here been effected. On Sabbath mornings groups of well dressed children in Sunday garb, with New Testament in hand, wend their way towards our humble little school house. On entering, they politely courtesy, and with the invariable Bon jour, frere, take their allotted seats to quiet. The singing commences, second to none of all French singing children I have ever heard. A teacher prays. Then the recitations—six to seven Bible verses by memory. No hesitation, no promptings. After that the Bible reading. Is it possible? Can it be those same crayfishers of eight months past, who now distinctly, without spelling, assert aloud the declarations of notre Seigneur Jesus Christ? No wonder the community is aroused. No wonder many blue scores of miles to witness this strange scene in a Roman Catholic prairie.

All honor, therefore to our brave and pious frere Bouchard for such a glorious work. It is bound to prosper. It cannot succumb. Should all the old folks die, the children love their Methodist training too well to let the cause perish. Besides this, we have two more such schools, one in Cypremort, the other in Prairie Carlin. Its work is done quietly and in silence, because remote from town or village. But the seed being sown, must result in a wonderful harvest, visible to all bye and bye.

"The general state of the church is about the same as it was last year. Through the exceptionable rigor of winter, the church affairs remained in a stagnant state. But, with the spring fresh life has been infused into our various meetings. Family worship, much Bible reading, prayer-meeting have all been well attended. While reporting no actual accessions, we are happy in no decrease, and in much promise of new members. The tide has turned in our favor at our old appointments, while at our new; we have to go over the same ground of opposition again. It is due the Quarterly Conference to state that the man who threatened to put his aged father out of doors on account of his attachment to our church, has actually sent his daughter to our school and helps to support our teacher. Our meetings are well attended, and there is an increased interest on the part of our members in all the means of grace. We intend to revisit the far distant parishes, although we can not tend to them to the detriment of our actual work. We are glad to say that in a special note of Dr. Wilson, he states he has been charged by the Board of Missions to confer with the president of Lausanne University, Switzerland, concerning more men for this field.

"A very interesting item was the licensing to preach of our venerable frere Mariner Prince. For over fifty years he has been all alone in those prairies testifying to the truth, and it was but meet that he should receive the office conferred by the church for his valuable services.

"Although our presiding elder, the Rev. J. M. Johnston, would on this mission, assessed for presiding elder's claims, our people wished to show they appreciated his visit by raising on the spot $15.60 for his support.

"Thanks to the munificence of the Board of Missions, we are now in a position to complete our church, support our teacher, and be enabled to attend to the church interests with increased attention. We are satisfied that the church means success to our important field.

"It was further resolved that with the kind help of Mr. Dudley Peebles, our people would set to work and build a home for their teacher on the mission property. Any help in that direction will be thankfully received and acknowledged."

I am yours truly,

WILLIAM JOHN PICOT.

JEANSERETTE, La., May 27, 1881.

From the Work.

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: Our second quarterly meeting for Logansport Mission came off the first Sunday in May and Saturday before, at Reynold's school house.

Bro. T. H. McClendon, our new presiding elder was present, abundant in labors and wearing his new office with ease and grace. We had a fair attendance of official members. The report from the pastor was: one accession; one baptism; one church edifice finished, dedicated and out of debt; one Sunday school organized, and money collected to supply it with literature, and two churches under repairs. Money collected for ministerial support: $11 for pastor, and $6 25 for presiding elder.

The temperance folks of De Soto had a hard contest for local option, which was decided by the vote of the people on April 22. Six wards out of eight went for whisky; but it is very encouraging to the advocates of temperance that the intelligent white population are almost a unit for local option or some sort of prohibition. Out of 128 votes poled in Mansfield for local option, 100 of them were given by white men; and, out of 134 poled for license, 100 of them were given by negroes.

We are persuaded that if men would just think a little, they would hardly be willing to carry on a traffic of a commodity, which so large a majority of their equals looked upon as a nuisance and fatal to the country.

The work on our railroad is rapidly progressing.

The continuous line of white tents along the railroad, reminds one of the war and soldiering.

The prospects are that we will be able to come to Conference next winter by the New Orleans Pacific railroad.

We do not know to what extent the farming interest has been injured by the road; but we notice a good deal of land lying out, the laborer having gone to the railroad for better wages. The seasons are good and the country healthy.

J. E.

May 16, 1881.

Rev. R. A. Davis, writing from North Bossier La., May 18, says: Our second Quarterly Conference for North Bossier circuit convened at Concord Church on the 14th and 15th of May. Our presiding elder was with us, Rev. Thomas H. McClendon, and preached to the edification of all present, on Saturday and Sabbath. The communion of the Lord's Supper was well attended by both Presbyterians and Methodists, and a blessing to us all, for we feel that the Lord was there. On Sabbath evening one candidate presented herself for membership. Two were received into membership. Six infants were baptized, and one adult. Congregation very large and quite attentive. The church we believe was much revived.

CHINA GROVE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: As you have had nothing from this work since Conference, and thinking some of our friends would like to hear from us through your columns, and at my husband's request, who is unable to write, I "pen you a few lines." Mr. Gilmore has been gradually declining in health ever since we arrived here in January; but kept up his appointments until the fourth Sunday in March, since which time he has been very low with affliction, a complication of diseases, and has been confined to his bed until within the last week or two; he is beginning to be up a little. It was the prevailing opinion, part of the time, that he would never recover, but through the mercy and loving kindness of an allwise God, I hope to see him soon be able to resume his work again. Through the kindness of local brethren, some of his appointments have been filled since his illness.

He has been blessed with a skillful, kind-hearted physician, also a noble-hearted people. May God bless the good people of China Grove circuit. Although we have been with them only a few months, they have already endeared themselves to us very much, by their many noble deeds of kindness and faithful attention to us in our affliction. Our near neighbor, Bro. J. N. Packwood has recently had a sad bereavement. He had a son, [illegible] two weeks ago, the son's remains were sent home for interment. It was heartrending to see the almost broken-hearted parents. The death of their idolized boy was so sudden, so unexpected and so far away from home, it was almost a death stroke to them. A few days after his remains were received, a very consoling letter was received from Bro. L. T. Fitzhugh stating that Sammie (their son) received every necessary attention—that he was visited by the pastor there, also by Bro. R. B. Downer—who was there on a short business visit—and that he expressed himself as being willing and prepared to die. He was eighteen years of age, was fondly loved by parents and friends. May God's grace be sufficient for them, and may they strive earnestly to go to him, as he can no more come home to them.

I am glad to see your paper very well circulated through this country, I would feel lost without it.

MARY E. GILMORE.

CHINA GROVE, Miss., May 23, 1881.

Princely Giving.

—Mr. William H. Vanderbilt has built a new Moravian parsonage, costing $7,000, at New Dorp, Staten Island.

—A gift of $5,000 has just been made by Mr. John W. Ames, of Boston to the Women's Educational and Industrial Union of that city.

—In addition to the previous gifts of Mr. George I. Seney to the Long Island Historical Society, he has given $7,500 to be expended in the purchase of valuable books.

—Matthew Vassar and his father, John Guy Vassar, of Poughkeepsie, on May 5 presented a new and handsome building, known as the "Vassar Home for Old Men," and other property with it, all of the value of $50,000, to the trustees of the institution, and added $30,000 as an endowment fund.

—Mrs. John Jacob Astor has just sent another party of one hundred children to homes in the West, through the agency of the Children's Aid Society. The whole number of homeless little ones thus provided for by Mrs. Astor is 813, at an expense of more than $11,500.

—Deacon Charles Shipp, of Bath, who died recently, left $6,000 each to the Maine Missionary Society and American Board; $1,000 to the Bible Society; $3,000 each to the American Home Missionary Society; Bangor Seminary, and Hollowell Classical School; $2,000 each to the American Missionary Association and American Tract Society, and $1,000 each to the Education Society, Iowa College, and Bowdoin College.

—The late Thomas D. Quincy, of Boston, left to the American Bible Society, American Home Missionary Society, American Missionary Association, American Tract Society, and American Board, the sum of $2,000 each; to the City Missionary Society, Young Men's Christian Association, and General Hospital, $1,000 each. A charity fund of $20,000 is left, the income of which will be paid to believe sick and destitute persons as the trustees may select.—Western Christian Advocate.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1881.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

A LIVING SACRIFICE.

BY INVALID.

I want to lay my treasures down—
Yes lay them all at Jesus' feet—
A living sacrifice complete,
A savor of pure odors sweet,
That I may gain the victor's crown.

I want no idol on thy throne—
However dear, however fair—
The offerings of my heart to share,
To thee, dear Lord, I offer prayer—
Thou art my God, and thou alone.

Accept the offerings I bring,
My heart and all its treasures fair:
Let no fond image linger there.
Thy kingdom in my heart prepare,
And on its throne reign thou, my King!

Let not the ashes and the dust,
Defile thy temple, Lord, within!
Oh let no evil enter in!
No fear—no charming voice of sin—
Be thou alone my help and trust!

Keep me my God, thro'out my days;
In thee my soul shall take delight;
Keep my heart altar burning bright,
Whereon at morning, noon and night,
I'll offer sacrifice of praise.

Give me the faith of Abraham,
That I my cherished best may bring—
The dearest moral offering—
That round my heart like tendrils cling
Or else provide another Lamb.

Should'st thou no other, Lord, provide
Hid not my arm, uplifted, stay
But take my earthly all away,
Even though thy servant thou should'st slay,
I'll trust the Lamb once crucified.

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

Second Quarter—Lesson XI.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures?" Luke xxiv, 32.

SUNDAY, JUNE 12, 1881.—LUKE XXIV, 13-32.

13. And behold two of them went that same day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jerusalem about threescore furlongs.
14. And they talked together of all these things which had happened.
15. And it came to pass, that, while they communed together, and reasoned, Jesus himself drew near, and went with them.
16. But their eyes were holden, that they should not know him.
17. And he said unto them, What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad?
18. And the one of them, whose name was Cleopas, answering, said unto him, Art thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days?
19. And he said unto them, What things? And they said unto him, Concerning Jesus of Nazareth, which was a prophet, mighty in deed and word before God, and all the people:
20. And how the chief priests and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him.
21. But we trusted that it should have been he which should have redeemed Israel: and besides all this, to-day is the third day since all these things were done.
22. Yea, and certain women also of our company made us astonished, which were early at the sepulchre;
23. And when they found not his body, they came, saying, that they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that he was alive.
24. And certain of them which were with us went to the sepulchre, and found it even so as the women had said: but him they saw not.
25. Then he said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken!
26. Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory?
27. And beginning at Moses, and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself.
28. And they drew nigh unto the village whither they went: and he made as though he would have gone further.
29. And they constrained him, saying, Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them.
30. And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them.
31. And their eyes were opened, and they knew him; and he vanished out of their sight.
32. And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures?

On the afternoon of the crucifixion, a little before sunset, the beginning of the Jewish Sabbath, the body of Jesus was taken down from the cross and hastily laid in the tomb. There it rested in the sealed and guarded sepulcher for thirty-six hours. A company of women came, early on Sunday morning, to embalm the body, and finish the burial of their beloved friend, when, lo! they find the stone removed and the body gone. All save one of the women, Mary Magdalene, depart; she remains weeping at the door of the open cave, and there, while standing and weeping, she first, of all the disciples, sees, in the person of the supposed gardener, her risen Lord. Afterward the other women, returning, see him; then Simon Peter beholds him, and on that same day, the first Easter day, the first Christian Sabbath, two disciples, on a journey from Jerusalem to a country village, behold and converse with their risen Lord. All these appearances of the Lord were upon this same first Sunday. After our Lord's resurrection from the grave there were eleven distinct appearances, in the following order: 1. To Mary Magdalene alone. 2. To the women returning from the sepulcher. 3. To Simon Peter alone. 4. To the two disciples going to Emmaus. 5. To the apostles at Jerusalem, Thomas being absent. 6. To the apostles at Jerusalem the second time, Thomas being present. 7. At the Sea of Tiberias, when seven disciples were fishing. 8. To eleven disciples on a mountain in Galilee. 9. To above five hundred brethren at once. 10. To James only, (1 Corinthians xv, 7.) 11. To all the apostles at his ascension on Mount Olivet.

Three times his disciples touched him after he arose; twice he ate with them.

Our lesson to-day is concerning the appearance fourth mentioned in this list. We might stop just here and ask the question why the Lord appeared to so few? Why not publicly announce himself to the whole nation, and give all an opportunity of beholding him, and thus set at rest at once and forever all doubts of his resurrection. Why not perpetuate through the whole history of the church his incarnation, and still visit his true disciples every Lord's day. We may answer this was not God's plan. This would not have given room for the exercise of faith; his visible appearance would not be consistent with the great principle of life eternal—faith. Besides all this, upon his going depended the coming of the Holy Ghost. Before he could dispense his gifts as King he must first be confirmed in his throne as King of Kings, and to do this he must needs go to heaven, and there be proclaimed King. He promises us something better than his visible presence, even the presence of the Spirit of Truth, the Comforter.

Verse 13. "And behold, two of them went that same day;" the same day when Jesus had made himself known to Mary and the other women, and to Simon, that very day when the resurrection of Christ was a well-attested fact with living witnesses to prove it, these two men were walking along in the darkness of disappointment and despair, talking over their hopes, and how these had been crushed by the events of yesterday. The Jesus whom they confidently believed was he who would redeem Israel was, as they thought, cold and dead in the tomb.

The Sun of Righteousness, which they thought had set forever, was then arisen, but they were walking in darkness still. "And they talked together of all these things which had happened." And, while they talked, the ariseu Jesus himself overtook them and joined their company. They did not recognize, in the person of this dignified, vigorous traveler, the languid, pale man they saw crucified only a few days ago. They had heard of the report of his resurrection, but were too sensible to give such a story credence, and they were hurrying away from this scene of terror and heart-sickening disappointment. No wonder their eyes were holden, that they should not know him. We never can see what we absolutely disbelieve.

He addresses them in a pleasant, sociable way: What is the subject of your discussion, which makes you so sad as you walk? With a little surprise and impatience one of the two answers: "Art thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days?" And he said, What things? The things concerning Jesus of Nazareth, which was a prophet mighty in deed and word before God and all the people, and how the chief priests and rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him. Where were you when the sun was darkened? Did you not feel the earth shake? Have you just come to town that you have not heard of all this? We trusted that it had been he which should redeem Israel, and, besides all this, to-day is the third day since these things have been done; yea, and certain women also of our company made us astonished, which were early at the sepulcher; and when they found not his body, they came, saying they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that he was alive, and certain of them which were with us went to the sepulcher, and found it even so as the women had said, but him they saw not. Those are the things we have been discussing; we don't know what to think. There seemed to be a difference of opinion between these two fellow-travelers; both were full of doubt and sorrow, but one more so than the other. How startled must they have been when this mysterious stranger assumes the character of teacher, and rebukes them with authority and astounds them with his wisdom. "Oh, fools! and slow of heart to believe all the prophets have spoken, ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory." Long ago they should have learned how the prophets spoke of Christ, for had he not himself commanded them to learn this. "Search the Scriptures, for they are they which testify of me." Now all that testimony was fulfilled, and to that testimony of the written word the living word now takes them. He at once sets their doubts at rest. He does not begin to prove that their mighty prophet is the Christ, but instantly calls him so, and shows them that the very things which shook their faith so terribly were the actual proofs of his Messiahship, because the very things prophesied of the Messiah.

And, beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them, in all the Scriptures, the things concerning himself. Our Lord's setting forth of himself must not be thought to refer only to what we understand by the direct prophesies, such as that of Moses concerning a prophet like unto himself (Deut. xviii, 15,) but would include all the teachings of types and history. Thus we can hardly doubt that he would fail to point out the significance of the Paschal lamb, and the whole history of the deliverance of the children of Israel. After such witness, the denial of the references to Christ's death, and glory in the Old Testament, is nothing less than a denial of Christ's own teachings.

What a wonderful exposition of the prophesies was this as given by him who, in his own life, had experienced the fulfillment of each. This talk lasted, maybe, two hours, for the walk to Emmaus was about seven and one-half miles.

"And they drew nigh unto the village, whither they went, and he made as though he would have gone further." He moved on as if proceeding on his way, in order to draw out their request that he would stay. Doubtless, had the request not been made, he would have passed on, and so the act of seeming to be going on was simply a sort of question: Shall we part here?

From how many has the Saviour passed on, because when he had spoken to them, and moved their hearts, they have not constrained him to abide with them. But these constrained him. "Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent." Christ became their willing guest. They prepared supper for him, and "as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them." "And their eyes were opened, and they knew him: and he vanished out of their sight." "And they said one to another, Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures." The revelation was too good to keep, so they arose that moment, and returned to Jerusalem to tell the disciples that the Lord has risen indeed.

From this beautiful episode I learn that Jesus is willing to be the companion of my life journey if I but let him. He that walketh with Jesus will walk surely, never miss the way, for he knows the whole way from earth to heaven.

The Coming Issue.

I do not profess to be a prophet, but I do not think it will take a prophet, or even one with any great degree of foresight, to discern the signs of the coming times. I have no doubt that in the near future the question whether whisky or the people shall reign in this country will present itself to every voter for decision. The time for deciding this question may come sooner or later, but to me its couring to an issue, throughout the nation, seems to be but a question of time.

Already, from Maine to Texas, and from the Carolinas to California, the question is being agitated, and the leaders of reform are taking a decided stand, and sending forth no uncertain sound.

Is there no significance in the result of the late national election, which appears to have given a decided defeat to one of the leading political parties of the nation? The general acquiescence of all parties in the result certainly shows that sectional animosities and local prejudices are rapidly giving way to a larger-hearted patriotism. Possibly many of us would have rejoiced to have seen this very desirable state of things brought about by a little different means, but as it is as we have it, it is doubtless wisdom to accept the situation, and make the most of it. And then, too, no doubt the providence of God is in all of it, and it's best as it is. Most thinking men will doubtless take this view of the situation, and be willing to bury dead issues, and, when they have done this, may we not reasonably expect them to turn their attention to questions which are national and vital in their natures?

This question of temperance is truly a national and a living question. It is not confined to any locality, class of society or race. The lovers of God, of humanity and of their country, in the North, South, East and West, of the Caucasian, African and Re-races, can feel that they stand on a common platform, and work for a common end in this issue. The tide of public sentiment is flowing in this direction, and, should it continue to flow in till 1884, is it not probable that it will then be the national issue in the Presidential canvass?

Who would not be willing to see the question brought to an issue? The men who are directly interested in the whisky business would not be, because they have everything to risk and nothing to gain by its coming to an issue. At present they are protected by law, and their business of trafficking in human life and human souls is legalized. Should the question be decided in their favor, they would only be then, where they are now, while if, as it is highly probable, they should be defeated in the struggle, they lose everything, and must give up their craft whereby they enjoy great gain.

Then there are probably a few politicians who are not willing for the question to be brought to an issue, as it would necessitate their defining their positions, and in consequence, perhaps, cost them the support of a few whisky men in the next election. Some of them are already raising the howl about the impracticability of "converting the heathen at the point of the bayonet, and legislating men into morality." A correspondent of the ADVOCATE, of March 17, pitches into "Gilderoy" for condemning "the pint law" of Mississippi, and defends himself for advocating its passage. He says he was a member of the late Legislature of that State, and I suspect, from certain things he says, that he is a Methodist as well. As such he may have been conscientious in supporting the measure, but really it appears to me that his arguments are more amusing than logical.

In the first place the increase of drunkenness in the State must be attributed to the failure of crops and the bad weather rather than to an increased number of bar-rooms and renewed facilities for obtaining whisky. Then he says men will have whisky anyhow, if they want it, in spite of prohibition measures. This plea for whisky selling has been used till every one knows it is threadbare, and its fallacy is so palpable that it does need a refutation. "But prohibition," he says, "encourages falsehood." I expect the laws of our land, which forbid stealing and murder, encourage the men who are guilty of these crimes to conceal them if it is possible, even if they must do it at the expense of truth.

But have the friends of temperance anything to fear from testing the question? Surely not. They have nothing to lose and everything to gain. Should they even suffer defeat, they would lose nothing, but, on the other hand, would in all probability gain strength by the defeat, and be stirred to greater activity. They have truth and right on their side, and these, sooner or later, are bound to win their way. Should they have success, they have gained everything. Then, even if, as it is claimed, those who have a thirst for whisky will have it some way, it will save the coming generation from acquiring the thirst.

Then, has the church anything to fear from this question coming to an issue? Certainly not. Even if when the line is drawn, and every man's position must be defined, some, who are members of the church, should not have the Christian manhood to stand up in favor of prohibition; it will doubtless be best for the church, that church and the world know just where these people are. It will be helping to get at the bottom of facts, and at the bottom of character, and this is always best for the cause of Christ. Should public sentiment become so strong that the church feels compelled to wipe off the reproach of retaining in her communion whisky dealers, all the better. She will be stronger when she does it at any financial cost. No matter how heavy the purses of these men, nor how much of their ill-gotten gains they throw into the Lord's treasury, the church would be stronger and richer without them.

For one, I believe the issue is coming, and coming at no distant day, and I rejoice in the belief. When it does come, let every Christian, of whatsoever creed, and every lover of his country, of whatsoever political party, have Christian courage enough, and true patriotism enough, to give his vote and the weight of his influence to the cause of temperance, and against the demon of alcohol, which broods as an angel of death over our country. . . . ration.

A Birthday Celebration.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me space in the columns of your paper to relate a pleasant episode in the life of one of the oldest citizens of Perry county, Ala.—the celebration of Dr. M. D. Canon's seventy-eighth birthday.

It was arranged among the children to give their aged parents a pleasant surprise by assembling at the "old homestead" on the morning of the anniversary, May 4, each bringing a basket of cooked provision.

The morning was bright and balmy, and at an early hour the children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, with a few neighbors, including their pastor, came one after another, until the spacious house was filled with persons of all ages, from the hoary-head of fourscore to the prattling babe. The little girls contributed to the enjoyment of the occasion by bringing garlands of roses and evergreens, and decorating the rooms with flowers as beautiful as their young lives, and emblematic of the purity and innocence of childhood. At eleven o'clock the assembly were seated in the halls, and, after singing a few songs, the Rev. B. D. Gayle read an appropriate psalm, and offered a fervent prayer of praise and thanksgiving. He then stated the object of the meeting, and read the family statistics as follows: M. D. Canon is to-day seventy-eight years old, and is living with his second wife; children, 15, of whom 10 are living; sons and daughters-in-law, 11, 9 living; grandchildren, 46, 35 living; grandsons-in-law, 7, all living; great-grandchildren, 14, all living, and a niece, raised as a daughter, who, with her husband and three children, are considered members of the family, making a total of 98 descendants, of whom 70 are living, and 36 of whom are present, the others being resident in Texas and Louisiana. In a few well-timed remarks, Bro. Gayle paid a beautiful tribute to our beloved father, alluding to his pleasant surroundings, his long life, numerous progeny, and useful and valued services to the church. All standing, then sang: "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," etc.

By request our venerable father then arose, and addressed the audience in a few words of melting tenderness. He thanked his children for this pleasant surprise and mark of filial affection; said he felt deeply grateful to Almighty God that he had lived to see this day; that his life had been spared to see all his children grown and members of the church, and but one thing marred the enjoyment of this occasion, the absence of those in distant States. He thought, in all probability, this would be the last anniversary he would ever enjoy, urged upon his children the necessity of holiness of heart, and admonished them to raise their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. In conclusion, he exhorted them, with touching pathos, to so live that when, one by one, they should cross the cold stream of death, they might, with their absent loved ones, form an unbroken family on the shores of eternal bliss. The scene was quite affecting, and impressions were formed that will bear fruit in eternity, as almost the entire audience renewed their pledge to live faithful unto the end.

Dinner being announced, all repaired to the dining-room, where the table was spread with tempting viands—substantials and delicacies—which loving hands had prepared, and to which each one did justice.

The afternoon was spent in social converse, and, as the sun was beginning to sink behind the western hills, all dispersed to their respective homes, praying that the life of him, our venerated father, might be spared yet many years, and afford many occasions for like reunions. . . . H. F. CANON.

BRUSH CREEK, ALA., May, 1881.

Colportage Sketches—No. 5.

BY A. M. JONES.

WE ALL HAVE BIBLES.

At an early hour, in a beautiful inland town, I halted at the Methodist parsonage, and asked the preacher to ride with me during the day. After some hesitation he consented, with the understanding that we should dine with a certain family, and return to his house at night. While yet in sight of the parsonage I proposed to begin my work of canvassing, and stop at the next house. No, said Bro. T., don't waste your time in town, we have a Bible Society, and all the families here are supplied. Notwithstanding his objection, my well-trained horses, as if knowing their duty, halted at the gate, and an intelligent, well dressed lady, a member of Bro. T.'s church, came to the door. Bro. T. introduced me as the Bible colporteur, kindly explained the nature of my work, and asked if any member of the family wanted a Bible. "Yes," she replied, "I want one before he leaves the community, and will get it this afternoon if you will call." Feigning as much indifference as possible, I said: Of course you have a Bible. "No," she replied, "not of our own; sometimes we have one borrowed." Giving Bro. T. a sharp nudge with my elbow, as a reminder, I drew up the reins and drove on, saying: We will call on our return. Having crossed the street, we stopped again, when a young married man came out, and reported the house entirely destitute of the Holy Scriptures. I wanted my good brother to remember that his people were not all so very well supplied with Bibles, and gave him another nudge in the side. Having secured a promise from the young gentleman that he would get a Bible in the afternoon, we went on our way. Both of those families seemed to be in easy circumstances, were Methodists, and members of Bro. T.'s church. During the day we disposed of a number of Bibles, and found many families destitute, five of whom were in Bro. T.'s pastoral care. On our return he confessed his astonishment at the wonderful destitution, and acknowledged that the observations of the day had taught him an important lesson. He had no idea that there were whole families in his pastoral care, to whom he preached, Sabbath after Sabbath, who did not have the sacred Scriptures in their houses. He said: "I have for several years, at Conference, heard the earnest appeals of S. P. Richardson, T. J. Rutledge and others, in behalf of the Bible cause, and seen in the papers reports of the fearful destitution in the State, but thought they had reference to the backwoods and negroes." At the close of the day he was fully convinced that there is a vast destitution of Bibles in the country, and the only efficient way of supplying this destitution is by sustaining the American Bible Society in her benevolent, extensive colportage work, now in operation throughout, not only the United States, but the Christian world, by which means thousands and tens of thousands of copies of Bibles and Testaments are annually placed in the homes of the destitute, the poor and the ignorant.

Reformed.

MR. EDITOR: The good old ADVOCATE is a good old friend in our family. We, of a large circuit, only gave $5 last year to the missionary cause, and we, of the same circuit, consumed about $1,000 upon the using of tobacco. I have quit the use of the poisonous weed, and I intend to put my money to a better use. As far as whisky is concerned, I quit it long ago. When I was a wicked sinner I thought whisky drinking was a sin, and so it is. But, thanks be to God, I quit both while I was young, though I was a slave to tobacco seven years, and it cost me from $10 to $15 each year, as well as I remember, and my giving to the Lord was from twenty-five cents to $2 50 each year. Dear brother, I am determined that I will no longer waste my Master's goods, for his children want food and clothes, and the heathen need good books and some one to teach them, therefore there is a demand for all our spare dimes. Brothers and sisters, thus let us not waste our Master's goods, and we will not have to ask the sinful, worldly people to support our church. Dear brother, I am trying to serve the Lord with my whole heart. I remain your brother and friend in Christ.

ISAIAH TUCKER.

MAY 18, 1881.

Marriages.

FARRISH—PRESTON.—May 11, 1881, by Rev. J. W. McCann, Mr. E. S. Farrish, Jr., to Miss T. L. Preston, all of Wilcox county, Ala.

DENNIG—COLEMAN.—At the residence of Mrs. Clark, May 2, 1881, by Rev. H. A. Davis, Mr. Dennig to Mrs. Mary Coleman.

COCKRAN—WYCHE.—At the residence of the bride's father, Dr. Wyche, of Red Land, May 5, 1881, by Rev. R. A. Davis, Mr. C. Z. Cochran to Miss Ida Wyche, all of Bossier parish, La.

Obituaries.

WOODWARD.—MRS. NANNIE W. WOODWARD, departed this life on the ninth day of April, 1881, at the family residence, at Louisville, Miss. She was the daughter of John and Susanna Carlisle; was born in Chester District, South Carolina, May 17, 1837 was married in Aberdeen, Miss., to Dr. G. Y. Woodward, May 13, 1856; she was a sister of Rev. J. M. Carlisle, of the South Carolina Conference, and a cousin of President J. H. Carlisle.

After several months illness, during which time she manifested much Christian patience and fortitude, her gentle spirit calmly and quietly returned to God who gave it. Although for several weeks there had been no hope entertained of her recovery, still, when the lips could no more utter a word of fondness, and the eyes were closed in death, the husband was crushing to the devoted husband, sisters, loved children and many friends who knew and loved her.

She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, when only about twelve years of age, which relation she honored by strictly observing in all the relations of life, the great maxims of our holy Christianity. As a Christian lady she was equaled by few. Possessing an amiable disposition and a warm heart, she was loved by all who knew her; if she had an enemy no one ever knew it. As a wife, she was constant and devoted; as a mother, kind and loving; as a sister, affectionate; as a friend, valued by all who knew her.

She had pulmonary disease, and suffered a great deal during her illness, still she never murmured. The writer visited her often, and conversed with her freely upon the subject of religion, always with assurance that she was not afraid to die. She desired to live for her children, but would always say: "The Lord knows best; his will be done." She lived the life of a holy woman, purely devoted to God, and when the messenger of death came he found her with her lamp trimmed and burning, and oil in the vessel. The evening before she died her conversation was wholly of religion and of heaven. She expressed repeatedly a desire to depart and be with Christ. She said: "The thought of being with Jesus fills my soul with joy unspeakable, and I shall be satisfied when I awake in his likeness." She said: "I could have done more good if I had been more faithful, but Jesus has paid it all, and there is not a cloud, not a shadow, between me and my God." She died calmly, calmly of her religion and of her hopes of heaven, her only regret seemed to be at leaving her husband and dear children. But with the hope that the children should be trained up in the way she had trod, and taught the religion which was becoming so real, glorious and heavenly, she "can give them up." She then committed God, in such a prayer as only those who are on the threshold of eternity can offer. She loved ones, in her exemplary life, patient and triumphant death, a legacy invaluable, shall ever remember it, though she has gone eternal home, where the hectic cough of consumption will never be heard, and where friends will part. We tender our sympathies and pray heaven's benedictions may rest upon the bereaved and that they may form an undivided family circle in that home made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

WOODWARD.—Mrs. NANNIE W. Woodward departed this life on the ninth day of April, 1881, at the family residence in Louisville, Miss. She was daughter of John and Susanna Carlisle, was born in Chester district, S. C., May 17, 1837; was married in Aberdeen, Miss., to Dr. G. Y. Woodward, May 13, 1856. She was a sister of Rev. J. M. Carlisle, South Carolina Conference, and a cousin of Pres. J. H. Carlisle, of Wofford College, South Carolina.

After several months of illness, during which she manifested much Christian patience and fortitude, her gentle spirit calmly and quietly returned to God who gave it.

She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, when only about twelve years of age, which relation she honored by strictly observing in all the relations of life, the great maxims of our holy Christianity. As a Christian lady she was equaled by few. Possessing an amiable disposition and a warm heart, she was loved by all who knew her; if she had an enemy no one ever knew it. As a wife, she was constant and devoted; as a mother, kind and loving; as a sister, affectionate; as a friend, valued by all who knew her.

She had pulmonary disease, and suffered a great deal during her illness, still she never murmured. The writer visited her often, and conversed with her freely upon the subject of religion, always with assurance that she was not afraid to die. She desired to live for her children, but would always say: "The Lord knows best; his will be done." She lived the life of a holy woman, purely devoted to God, and when the messenger of death came he found her with her lamp trimmed and burning, and oil in the vessel. The evening before she died her conversation was wholly of religion and of heaven. She expressed repeatedly a desire to depart and be with Christ. She said: "The thought of being with Jesus fills my soul with joy unspeakable, and I shall be satisfied when I awake in his likeness." She said: "I could have done more good if I had been more faithful, but Jesus has paid it all, and there is not a cloud, not a shadow, between me and my God." She died calmly of her religion and of her hopes of heaven, her only regret seemed to be at leaving her husband and dear children. But with the hope that the children should be trained up in the way she had trod, and taught the religion which was becoming so real, glorious and heavenly, she "can give them up." She then committed God in such a prayer as only those who are on the threshold of eternity can offer. She loved ones, in her exemplary life, patient and triumphant death, a legacy invaluable, shall ever remember it, though she has gone eternal home, where the hectic cough of consumption will never be heard, and where friends will part. We tender our sympathies and pray heaven's benedictions may rest upon the bereaved and that they may form an undivided family circle in that home made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

EURE.—JETHRO EURE, was born May 10, 1808, in Gates county, North Carolina; joined the M. E. Episcopal Church in 1833, moved to Leake county, Miss., in 1844, and connected himself with Mount Hope Church, of which he remained a consistent member until his death, which occurred April 5, 1881, near Walnut Grove, of bronchial-pneumonia.

For many years Brother Eure served the church as a steward, and not until he became infirm from old age and sickness did he relinquish the office. As a citizen, he was loyal; as a friend faithful; as a father, indulgent. He was highly respected by his neighbors and acquaintances, was quite a worthy citizen, and we presume that no one will ever regret having made his acquaintance.

I became acquainted with Brother Eure more than two years ago, and was with him since. I found him to be a lover of the church up to a late date did he make enquiry of the prosperity of the church, and was much interested in building of a new church at Good Hope. A few days before he died. He said: "I am waiting the summons of my God. I know I must stay here much longer. I'll soon be at rest from labors and my painful disease."

Doubtless his loved ones feel their loss sensibly and sorrowfully, but they are comforted to know that he is at rest and with Jesus, who has said it possible for loved ones to meet on the other shore, where sorrow and sickness, pain and death are known and feared no more.

BANKS.—Died near Rocky Mount, Bossier parish, La., in the twenty-third year of his age, on the seventh of May, 1881, MR. EDMOND SEARCY BANKS, son of Rev. A. R. Banks, of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Samuel was loved by all who knew him. He suffered a little more than a year with pulmonary consumption, but the Master called him home. A member of the church about five years. On Sabbath he spent on earth the writer conversed with him, sang and prayed with him and the members of the family present; he seemed to enjoy the meeting. In a day or two afterward he began to grow worse, until Saturday night, when he bade adieu to earth. Seeing his mother weeping he told her not to weep, "Jesus was sweet." His funeral was preached to a large and respectful audience in the Rocky Mount Presbyterian Church, on the ninth of May, by the writer.

CORNELL.—Again God in his mysterious providence, has visited us, by taking from our Sunday-school to the one above; that never has been filled, WILLIE CORNELL, who died April 5, 1881, aged fifteen years and two months.

While we feel sure of his acceptance with God from his conversation and evidence of a triumphant death, we can but bow with sadness to the will of God, in taking from our midst the bright boy who was one of the most exemplary members of our Sunday school, and greatly beloved by us all. He was the eldest son of our esteemed minister, Rev. N. B. Cornell; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, as a Sunday school, tender Brother Cornell and family our deepest sympathy in their bereavement, and a copy of this be sent to the family, and entered on our Sunday school minutes, and the Richland Beacon, New Orleans Christian Advocate and Sunday School Visiter be requested to give this publication.

Adopted in Sunday school at Girard, La., May 29, 1881. WIGGINS WELLS, Sec.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1881.

INCOMPLETENESS.

BY ADELAIDE PROCTOR.

Nothing resting in its own completeness
Can have worth or beauty; but alone,
Because it tends or tends to farther sweetness,
Fuller, higher, deeper than its own.

Things real glory dwells not in the meaning,
Gracious though it be, of fair blue hours;
It is hidden in the tender leaning
Of the summer's richer wealth of flowers.

Even is fair, because her petals fade slowly
Into day, which floods the world with light;
Twilight's mystery is so sweet and holy
Just because it ends in starry night.

Love is only bright when it proceedeth
Toward a truer, deeper light above;
Human love is sweetness, when it leadeth
To a more divine and perfect love.

Childhood's smiles unconscious graces borrow
From the strife that in a far-off future lies;
Angel glances veiled now by life's sorrow
Draw our hearts to some beloved eyes.

Into the mystery of progressing duty
We not all each glorious change decry;
Else we only hold our treasures truly,
When it seems as if they passed away.

Dare to blame God's gifts for incompleteness;
Say that want their beauty lies; they roll
Toward some infinite depth of love and sweetness,
Stirring inward ocean's reluctant soul.

Notes of Life.

BISHOP GEORGE PAINE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

The death of her brother Robert was a crushing blow to my dear mother. Her temperament was naturally warm and joyous; her health had been generally good; her family and social relations pleasant; and hitherto no great sorrow had befallen her. Like her friend, although brought up under the same influence—both being of Baptist parentage, and strictly moral, as well as constant in their attendance upon religious worship, yet neither of them had made a profession of religion; worldly prosperity and family affection are insufficient for developing the highest end of our immortal nature. Often we forget the Giver and idolize the gift. The light of day obscures the stars, and the glory of the stellar universe is unseen until night reveals it. So the daily cares and pleasures, or the glare of worldly prospects, the heartiasts, and no portents before our eyes, render us unmindful of the highest obligations and noblest aims, and then sorrow and suffering are in mercy sent "to show his work and to turn our eyes to a brighter world above." So it was in my father's case, and eminently so in my mother's. Until our removal from her native home and the circle of kindred and friends, I had scarcely known sickness or sorrow; but now, far away from these scenes, in a new, rude state of society, among strangers, with a family of nine children, of which I, then fifteen years old, was the eldest, having lost her husband and her precious brother, both by death, and her youngest boy, Robert, by consumption, was suddenly called to receive a dying charge to meet her in heaven! I thank God, to hear her tell of her Saviour's love and the "peace divine." The attending preacher, and others, afterward told me of her confidence and sweet reliance on the atonement of God. Her last words were: "Be at peace."

Who can estimate the value of a good mother to a large young family, or duly appreciate their loss under the most favorable circumstances? But in all the surroundings of this case there was something to relieve it from being an overwhelming misfortune to her six little girls. It was our father's privilege few men were ever better qualified to perform the duties of both father and mother. Reared, like thousands of others, by the rich and cheering hands in the Western frontiers, after inspecting the country in 1807, he left a pleasant residence in the midst of an intelligent community, where schools, churches, good order existed, not to mention the circle of relations and friends, and settled his family down in the cane brakes on the hills of Giles county, Tennessee. At the old purchase a large tract of land at a low price; the gain was at first already by an irreparable loss. To believe in immigration it is often proper; but in this, and many similar cases, it has proved unfortunate. Both he and I trained the children there, and let them go out into the world unprepared for the battle of life. There was a necessity for necessity for it; and if we had been, a smaller amount of wealth with better advantages of society, health and comfort, might have been obtained. How often have I felt the first for land, like the thirst for gold, prove a misfortune, not to say curse. I do not so call it in this instance, but from the stand point of any other grave it seemed so to us then; and would have been our condition, had father, too, had died? Two of the most unhappy cultured families in the west were from Virginia and Georgia. They had lately settled in the interior of Texas; but death had removed their male heads.

One of the most serious objections to removing a family from an older section of country to a frontier region is, usually, the absence of good schools, churches and schools are fully spoken for in the eloquence of Christian civilization. Having personally enjoyed the best facilities the country afforded in this respect, it was natural that father should be anxious for his children to be educated. And it is little to say, if there was a failure here it was not his fault. With his hyoid other money nor effort was spared for this purpose. I do not recollect who taught me the alphabet, or to spell and read—I presume it was mother, as it was a family prayer with us that no child to school without knowing its "letters" was disgraceful. My first recollection of my literary history goes back to grandfather's parlor, when a little boy, with black eyes, and hair nicely combed, and tidily dressed in his first pants, would toddle up to a certain spot in the room, and, at the bidding of the good old grandfather, recite that venerable and sublime prayer, "Our Father which art in heaven," and exhibitions of juvenile eloquence interested and pleased me as much as it did the old folks to hear awhile, but as they frequently were called for whenever the neighbors visited us, and usually closed by being kissed and embraced all of them, I began to get tired of it, and after performing my part would run to my beds, and scamper away to hide myself. I became disgusted with fuss and flattery, and have not got over it yet.

The first teacher to whom I was sent, and, indeed, the only one for several years, was Robert H. Childers. He was then teaching a large school, and I boarded in the family of Major Cochran, the member to Congress from that district, whose good wife took special care of me. She was a Methodist, and here I first came in contact with Methodism. Her house was ever open to preachers, and she held her membership at Lea's Chapel, not far from her residence. Here, too, I first saw a Methodist preacher, I had been born and lived in a section of a State almost exclusively under Baptist influence, and had heard wonderful stories about Methodist preachers and camp meetings, and had a dread of them. Late one summer evening two men rode up and entered the house. They were large, well-dressed, dignified men, wearing hats with broad brims, round breasted coats, and rode fine horses. What were my feelings when told they were the terrible camp meeting, wild-fire Methodist preachers, would stay all night, and after singing and praying would catechize us all. I was alarmed. But while at supper—for which I had no appetite that time—fortunately, as I regarded it, one of their horses was reported to be very sick, and they at once went to his relief. What happened afterward I know not—I slipped off to bed, and was glad to see them leave there early next morning. I learned afterward one of them was John Early and the other Thomas Logan Douglass. The latter had been born and brought up in that vicinity. In long years afterward, and in a distant State, this man inducted me into the ministry; and the first became my official colleague, and both of them my life-long, loved, and honored friends.

—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Drunkenness, Insanity and Idiocy.

Strong drink first exhilarates a man, and then renders him temporarily insane and ill. We all know that most temporary and acute diseases have a strong tendency to become chronic. A man who is insane for a day is liable to become insane for a week, or a year, or a lifetime. The man who takes strong drink, and thus makes himself insane or ill, runs the risk of that insanity or illness becoming a permanent condition, the disorder becoming chronic, and fitting him for the maniac's cell and straight jacket, or for the sick-bed and the grave.

Forbes Winslow, the celebrated English physician for the insane, once told a committee of Parliament that he could dip out of the brain of any habitual drunkard a fluid so full of alcohol that it, when placed in a spoon, and a lamp placed beneath it, the liquid would burn with a blue flame. Perhaps the two most important physical circumstances that can be pointed out in relation to alcohol are that it hardens all the colloid or glue like substances in the body, and that it has a special affinity for the brain. Alcohol hardens the white of an egg. The brain and much of the matter in the nervous system, is albuminous in chemical composition, as the white of an egg; and, as alcohol every where else hardens colloid substances, so it does in the brain. The drinking flame which Forbes Winslow kindled shows the affinity of alcohol for the brain, and should be kept burning as a beacon fire before tempted men. There is a famous saying of Hyrtl, spoken lately in the Scientific American, that he could tell in the dark whether he was dissecting a drunkard's brain or the brain of a temperate man, for the former would be hard under the scalpel. He used to explain to his pupils that the only way to obtain good brains for dissection was to harden them with alcohol, or to get brains that had been hardened before death.

Intemperance, more than any other cause fills our lunatic and idiotic asylums. According to the statistics of insanity in France, thirty-four per cent. of the cases of lunacy among males were due to intemperance. One half of the inmates of the Dublin insane asylum owe their disease to the use of liquor.

Pritchard and Esquirol, two great authorities upon the subject, attribute half the cases of insanity in England to the use of alcohol. Dr. Benjamin Rush believes that one-third of the cases of insanity in this country were caused by intemperance, and this was long before its hereditary potency was adequately appreciated.

Dr. S. G. Howe found that the parents of 445, out of 500 idiots were habitual drunkards. He attributed one half of the cases of idiocy in the State of Massachusetts to intemperance, and he is sustained in his opinion by the most reliable authorities. Dr. Howe states that there were seven idiots in one town where both parents were drunkards, one-half of the idiots in England were drunken parentage, and the same is true of Sweden, and probably of most European countries. It is said of St. Petersburg most of the idiots are of drunken parents. In Norway, in ten years of free liquor traffic, after the removal of the duty on spirits, insanity increased fifty per cent., and the percentage of idiots born nearly doubled. If a girl wants to be a mother of fools, let her marry a man who drinks wine or strong drink. "At the last it bites like a serpent, and stings like an adder." The Domestic Journal.

Influence of the Moon.

Prof. Legate, of Nevale, has been experimenting for the purpose of ascertaining what effect the moon has upon fish, and the result of his investigations go to substantiate what old fishermen have always said, namely, that it spoils them. The rays of light, or something carried in the rays, cause the fish to decay very rapidly. Even cat-fish, all alive and kicking when exposed, were in a bad state in a few hours. Prof. Legate is a firm believer in the influence of the moon on man and all things mundane. The atmosphere being attracted by the moon the same as the waters of the ocean, only to a much greater extent, he is of the opinion that effects are produced by the aerial tide which are generally attributed to other causes. A gentleman, hearing of the fish experiments, states that some years ago, while on the west coast of Africa, he one night slept on the deck of a vessel under the rays of a full moon, and the result was that he was totally blind for three days. The bad effect of the rays of the moon appears to have been known, or at least suspected, years ago. In the Bible, in the Psalms, we read: "The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night."

In speaking of the benefits of trial and suffering, we should never forget that these things by themselves have no power to make us holier or heavenlier. They make some men morose, selfish and envious. Such is the effect of pain and sorrow when unsanctified by God's saving grace. It is only when grace is in the heart, when power from above dwells in a man, that anything outward or inward turns to his salvation. Dr. Newman.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—We regret to learn that the church of England Missionary Society is experiencing further trouble about its property in Foochow, China. The Society say: "It is manifest that the persecution is directed against the Christians simply because they are Christians, and that the Chinese authorities have been tempted to proceedings unknown in a Treaty for thirty years, by the coldness with which the mission is regarded by the British Minister and Consul."—Northern Christian Advocate.

—A scheme is in contemplation for uniting the Church Missionary Society and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, thus forming a new Board of Missions, the Church Missionary Society represents the Evangelicals, the Society for the propagation of the Gospel is the oldest of all Protestant missionary societies, and represents chiefly the High Church party of the Church of England.

—It is reported that the women at the Livingstonia mission, Eastern Africa, attend the services respectably clothed, and have learned to make dresses for themselves. The native young men have acquired many industrial arts, and can make furniture, bricks, etc., and even work the engines of the steamer belonging to the mission. Over one hundred children are on the school-roll, and their attendance is very regular.

—The twenty-eighth annual session of the Home, Frontier, and Foreign Missionary Society of the United Brethren in Christ began at Lisbon, Iowa, May 11, Bishop Glossbrenner presiding. The advance in collection for missions was about $1,000. Bishop Castle preached the annual sermon. The missions have been generally prosperous, and increased appropriations were made.

—Both houses of the Parliament of Brazil have adopted Article VIII., of the reform of the Constitution, which gives to Protestants and their religion the same civil and political rights as the Catholics enjoy. In a word, the Government has thrown the whole country open to the sowing of gospel seed as never before.

—The California Advocate says: "Last Sunday was a great day at the Chinese mission. Dr. Otis Gibson baptized six Japanese young men, one Chinaman, four Chinese women, and four American girls. We had a love feast, with tea and cake, an excellent spiritual feast, and the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper."

—Nine students of Yale Theological Seminary have organized themselves into a home missionary band, known as "The Dakota Band," for service under the American Home Missionary Society in that Territory. These young men have all refused tempting offers in New England for what seems to them more urgent calls in the West.

—The amounts expended by several religious societies for the Indian service, we see, reported, is for the last year about $81,000. The sum of $500,000 was spent for Indian education by the Government, religious societies, and the Indians themselves, including the five civilized tribes of the Indian Territory, who manage their own schools.

—The mission to the lepers in India reported last year that the income of the mission was $1,000, and that 140 lepers have been supported, among whom frequent conversions have taken place. Although no means of entire cure is known, yet in many cases decided alleviation of terrible disease has been secured.

—In the Telugoo country the religious work is said to have steadily progressed. The converts of 1878, with very few exceptions, are firm in their faith in Jesus Christ as the world's Saviour and their Saviour. The number of church members is now 15,091, of whom 1,457 were baptized last year.

—The Central African missionary expedition of the American Board has arrived at Benguela, and is making preparations to proceed inland to Bihe, which is represented as situated on high ground in a very healthy district, free from fevers. Good accounts of the people are given.

—From Marseilles, France, it is reported that the Mission Evangelique has now seven stations in full working order there. The meetings are well attended, and the congregations are becoming more regular. Six hundred and fifty children are taught weekly.

—The Mysore province in India, a province about the size of Scotland, with nearly five million inhabitants, is, with the exception of a small part of it, entirely given up to the Wesleyans, and there are only twelve missionaries engaged in the work.

—The success of the Chinese Methodist Mission in San Francisco reports as good results from their religious endeavors as those attained by the like labors among the whites. There are united seven full members and ten on probation.

—The New Testament has been translated into Hebrew, and no less than 51,000 copies of the Word of God, or a whole or in part, have been circulated in Hebrew by the British and Foreign Bible Society, chiefly among the Jews.

—The Methodists in Sweden report a great interest in their services in the old university town of Upsala. The church is too small to accommodate those who desire to attend, and a new, and second church is talked of.

—The Reform Board of Foreign Missions at the beginning of the past financial year called for $90,583 to pay off the debt of $29,850, and carry on its work. It announces that it has received about $61,000.

—Ivory Baptist Church, New York, Rev. R. S. M'Arthur, pastor, recently contributed $10,000 to home and foreign missionary making, with their collection for city missions, $65,000, raised for missions since Christmas.

—Roman Catholic missionary work is being pushed with vigor in Africa. A college intended exclusively for the training of Catholic priests has just been established there.

—Mr. Mackay, missionary of the Church Missionary Society, at Mtesa's kingdom, has completed his translation of St. Matthew's Gospel into the language of Uganda.

—The little town of Kittanling, Pa., has a man who in his life and at death has given $1,650,000, to home and foreign missions. The name of the princely giver is James E. Brown.

—There are connected with the North India Conference 222 Sunday schools, and about 9,000 scholars. The average attendance is over 7,000.

—The American Baptist Missionary Union closed its financial year with a debt of less than $20,000.

—The Established Church of Canada does nothing for foreign missions.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The Christian at Work says: "The English Ritualists are marching on with rapid strides. Here is a minute taken from their special organ, the Church Times: 'Of your charity pray for the repose of Emily, the beloved wife of Amos Gray, of Codecote, who fell asleep on the nineteenth instant, Jesu mercy.' Well might the Tablet, the leading Roman Catholic journal in England say: 'We consider Ritualism to be indirectly the most powerful propagandist for the Church of Rome which England has yet seen.'" —At the monthly meeting of the managers of the American Bible Society, May 5, appropriations were made to the Society's agencies in Russia, Hungary and Persia, and to the Evangelical Society of Geneva for colportage in France, amounting in the aggregate to $18,430. Grants of Scriptures were also made for general distribution to auxiliaries, churches and individuals; the aggregate value of the books being $13,500. The receipts for April were $35,842.47. Copies of Scripture issued, 120,127.

—According to the Standard of the Cross, Bishop Tuttle has four schools in Utah, in which seven hundred youths are educated, mostly from Mormon families. The expenses of the schools largely paid by scholarship funds contributed by church people of the older dioceses. The Bishop has confirmed two hundred from these schools, and one of the most promising clergymen is a young man rescued from Mormonism by his influence.

—In a Sunday-school in an eastern city, at its anniversary, instead of bonbons or picture cards, there was distributed to the scholars packages of ten kinds of flower seeds, with clear, simple instructions as to the sowing and care of them. The superintendent of the school offered a prize, to be given at midsummer, at a horticultural exhibition by the scholars, for the best result of this gift in cut or potted flowers.

—The Presbyterian Church in this country has 177 Presbyteries, with 5,011 ministers, 5,159 churches, and 378,671 communicants. In 1875 there were 173 Presbyteries, 4,706 ministers, 4,999 churches, and 500,031 communicants. It thus appears that the denomination has grown wonderfully in the past six years.

—There are in the city of New York 580 churches, chapels, and missions of all denominations, furnishing accommodations for 375,000 persons. Of Protestant churches and missions there are 500, with sittings for 275,000 persons; sittings required for all denominations, 500,000; deficiency, 225,000.

—Australian Methodism has been continuing its progress. The Australian Missionary Society reports its aggregate receipts at $74,356, nearly one half of which came from New Zealand and the Fiji Islands. In South Australia there are 242 Wesleyan churches, the debts upon which average 22 per cent. of the estimated value.

—The First Reformed Episcopal church, Madison avenue, started six years ago without a dollar, under Bishop Cummins, is, and since his death has been under that of Rev. Wm. T. Sabine. Its house of worship cost $140,000, and expenses have averaged $15,000. Of course it has had to carry a large debt, which it has just cancelled.

—The cost of the American Protestant Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity in Paris, the corner-stone of which was laid recently, will be $500,000, but $223,000 of which has yet been raised. Rev. Mr. Moran is the rector, and Rev. F. Morrison the curate. The offerings on the day of dedication reached nearly $20,000.

—A Gospel in Greek of the fifteenth or the sixteenth century, which has been found in Calabria, is written with silver ink on purple parchment, and is illustrated with eighteen scenes from the New Testament in miniature, and forty portraits of the prophets.

—In every department of the missionary work in Eastern Turkey, there is a steady and gratifying advance. Nine new preaching places have been established, making a total of 116. The number of Protestants is now 11,719.

—The white Baptist ministers of South Carolina hold ministers' institutes in several portions of the State, it is said, for the benefit of the colored preachers, and there is a cordial feeling between the two races.

—The separation of Church and State in France is now regarded as a settled fact. It will require legislation, which will be fostered. Protestants in France have long been praying for this result.

—The land in England is cultivated by 500,000 farmers, who occupy an average of thirty-two acres each. There are 31,000 landlords, of whom 1,942 own two-thirds of the whole country.

—The General Convention of the Christian Church closed its session at Louisville recently. The corresponding secretary's report shows that the denomination numbers 600,000 communicants in the United States alone.

—Governor Wright, of the Indian Territory, is a converted Choctaw Indian. Sometimes after presiding over a political meeting of his people he calls them to order and preaches a sermon to them.

—A congress of Christian women, designed to bring into communication the working Christian women of England and to discuss subjects in which they are especially interested, was announced to be held at Birmingham, September 21st.

—The late Eliza A. Wallingford, of Pittsburgh, distributed $28,000 to the different Boards of the Presbyterian church, discriminating wisely to the relative importance of each Board.

—The Evangelical Association of North America is, by the direction of the General Conference, to be known hereafter as the Evangelical Church of North America.

—A band of lay missionaries, who expect to look out for their own support, is to sail from San Francisco for Japan early in October.

—There is a movement on foot in Baltimore to erect a church in that city as a memorial to the late Bishop Whittingham.

—There are at present 350 Christian churches in Burmah, and nine-tenths of the work of evangelization is in the hands of native teachers.

—Sunday is to be kept more strictly in Prussia. Hunting is prohibited on Sunday and church festivals, under penalty.

—The friends of the Detroit Y. M. C. A. have decided to raise $70,000 to purchase a site and erect for it a suitable building.

—The first meeting house in Natick, Mass., was built by the Indians, under the preaching of John Elliot.

—The colored Baptists of the United States number about 800,000.

Our Young People.

I know a little saying
That is altogether true,
My little boy, my little girl,
The saying is for you.
'Tis this, O blue and black eyes,
And gray—so deep and bright!
No child in all this careless world
Is ever out of sight.

No matter whether field or glen,
Or city's crowded way,
Or pleasure's laugh or labor's hum,
Entice your feet to stay;
Some one is always watching you,
And whether wrong or right,
No child in all this busy world
Is ever out of sight.

Some one is also watching you,
And marking what you do,
To see if all your childhood's acts
Are honest, brave, and true;
And watchful more than tongue can tell
God's angels pure and white,
In gladness or in sorrowing
Are keeping you in sight.

Oh, bear in mind, my little one,
And let your mark be high
You do whatever thing you do,
Beneath some seeing eye;
Oh, bear in mind, my little one,
And keep your good name bright,
No child upon this round, round earth
Is ever out of sight.

A Dangerous Fight with a Big Bear.

On the first day of January, 1873, when Wilburn Waters was over sixty years old, he had the most dangerous fight with a bear he ever had. He had been making his home some time with Mr. Clark Porterfield, in Grayson county, Virginia. Mr. Porterfield kept hunting dogs, and was himself fond of the chase. At the time spoken of Mr. Porterfield and Wilburn started into Pine Mountain on a hunt. The ground was covered with sleet and the sleet with snow, so that the two hunters found themselves walking like the wicked "on slippery places." As the ground was steep in many places, the hunters traveled not only with difficulty but with danger.

They had not gone far along one of the spurs of the mountain before one of the dogs struck a trail, and dashed off towards the top of the mountain. Wilburn forgot his age, renewed his youth, ran like a deer in the direction taken by the dog, and soon left his companion far behind. Knowing that no "varmint" but a bear would seek refuge in a spot so high and rugged, and in an almost atmosphere so cold, he hastened on, zigzagging along the ledges, sometimes losing his hold and sliding back many feet until stopped by a tree or rock. At one place he crossed a deep chasm on a tree that had fallen across it, which was covered with ice. His feet had slipped, he would, no doubt, have fallen a great distance and been dashed to pieces, but Providence guided his footsteps safely over the dangerous place. Wilburn was a Christian, and the Lord gives his angels charge concerning Christians, to bear them up in their hands, lest they dash their feet against a stone. After crossing the chasm Wilburn came out into an open space on the mountain side, and there within forty yards of him he saw the two dogs at the foot of a tree, and three bears in the top. Them a large one.

He was afterwards heard to say, he thought it was the grandest sight he had ever seen. If Porterfield had come up in time, they would probably have killed all three of the bears. He had a shotgun; one barrel was loaded with a musket ball and the other with buckshot. He first fired at the big bear with the ball but made a clear miss. He then fired the barrel charged with buckshot, and at the crack of the gun, the bear came down the tree in a hurry. He disabled one dog at one pass, and seizing the other by the hind glided with him down to the bottom of a deep gorge. Wilburn followed, to aid the dog in the unequal fight, for the bear was too hard for the dog. When he reached the seat of war, which was done in an instant, the bear left the dog in a whipped condition, and began hand to hand fight with Wilburn. The dog was too badly hurt to help his friend. The bear was furious and fought like a tiger. Wilburn used his tomahawk, and made every lick tell, dodging the passes of the beast. While the battle raged, the bear slowly regraded towards a terrible precipice a few yards off, from the brink of which he, no doubt, intended to leap into the tree tops below, and make his escape; and he finally made a rush for the precipice, when Wilburn seized him by the hair, mounted him, and had a terrific ride for a few jumps. While thus seated on the bear's back, he gave him a fatal lick with his tomahawk between the eyes, just as the beast was ready to make the awful leap, and when the monster fell dead, his head and fore feet were hanging over. If the bear had gone one foot further, or the Indian had struck one lick less, the two would, no doubt, have fallen a hundred feet upon the jagged rocks below, and Wilburn would have suddenly made his appearance in the happy hunting ground on the other side of Jordan.

Mr. Porterfield came up too late to join in the battle, and while it was going on, the other two bears in the tree sought safety in timely flight.

They carried the dead monster, weighing some four hundred pounds, to where they had a horse hitched, and at a late hour in the night, nearly frozen, they reached Mr. Porterfield's. For a month they had savory meat, which, it is said, hunters like better than any other kind.

Now, children, just a little moralizing and I am done. The Bible says, "Fight the good fight of faith." The bear may represent Satan, and Wilburn the Christian. The Christian has many a fight with Satan, as hard and as dangerous as that of Wilburn with the bear; indeed more dangerous, because in the latter case the everlasting welfare of the soul is at stake. But if the Christian uses bravely and perseveringly the weapons of warfare placed in his hands by the heavenly Father, he is sure to gain the victory. He will conquer his enemy though it be at the brink of ruin. Uncle Dick, in Holston Methodist.

The Murder of the Princes in the Tower.

One of the wickedest acts of the wicked King Richard III. of England was the murder of his two young nephews in the Tower. He had seized upon the crown that belonged of right to them, and had shut them up in a gloomy cell of that huge castle that still stands on the banks of the Thames, below London. They were separated from their mother, the widow of the late King Edward IV., and kept like prisoners and criminals in the part of the vast fortress now known as "the Bloody Tower." The elder, Edward, Prince of Wales (now Edward V., King of England,) was thirteen, his fair and gentle brother, the Duke of York, only eleven. Then arch uncle sent orders to the Governor of the Tower, Brackenbury, to put them to death secretly, but the honest man refused to do so wicked an act. Richard then placed Sir James Tyrrel, his evil instrument in command of the fortress for a single day; the keys of the gates and cells were given up to him by Brackenbury, and the plans for the murder were carefully prepared by the King. Tyrrel hired two hardened criminals, John Dighton, his own groom, and Miles Forrest, a murderer by trade, to commit the act, and remove from their uncle's path the two innocent princes who might yet dispute his title to the throne.

It was a dark and gloomy night when Tyrrel, followed by his two assassins, crept up the narrow stone staircase that led to the room where the young children were confined. He found them clasped in each others arms asleep, having just repeated their prayers, and lying on a bed. It is easy to imagine the terrors of the poor children in that stony and gloomy chamber, shut out from their mother and all their friends, and seeing only the cold, strange faces of the jailers. But now they had forgotten all their sorrows in a sleep that was to be their last. What dreams they may have had at that fearful moment no one can ever tell. By the light of flickering torch Tyrrel probably looked into the chamber to see that his victims were safe. But he did not go in, and stood watching and listening at the door while Dighton and Forest performed their dreadful deed. They took the pillows and bolsters from the bed, pressed them over the faces of the children, and thus smothered them to death. When they were dead they carried their bodies down the long staircase, and buried them under a heap of stones at its foot. It was reported that Richard III., touched by an unusual feeling of superstition, had removed them to consecrated ground, and that the place of their final burial was unknown. But long afterwards, in the reign of Charles II., when it was found necessary to take away the stones, and dig in the spot where it was supposed the assassins had laid them, the bones of two young persons were found that corresponded to the ages of the young princes. They were buried by the King beneath a marble monument.

But wherever they slept, the murder of his nephews must have forever haunted the brain of the wicked Richard III. His people hated and feared him. He grew every day more cruel and tyrannical; he murdered friend and foe. At last Henry, Earl of Richmond of the house of Lancaster, landed in England with a small force, which was soon increased by the general hatred of the king. The nobility and the people flocked to his camp. His army was soon very strong. Richard, at the head of a powerful force, marched to meet his rival, and on Bosworth Field, August 22, 1485, the decisive battle was fought. Richard was betrayed, as he deserved, by his own officers. He rode raging on furious back around the field, and when he saw Henry before him rushed upon him to cut him down. He killed some of his knights, but was stricken from his horse, and fell dead in the crowd. Then the soldiers cried, "Long live King Henry!" and that night Richard's body, flung across the back of a horse, was carried into Leicester to be buried. His wicked reign had lasted only two [illegible]

A Daring Ride.

The following story told by a cattle raiser of Oregon would seem unworthy of belief were it not that ranchmen are so often notoriously reckless of life, and fond of courting danger for the reputation to be gained:

A year or so since there was a "rodeo" out on Lost river, Lake county. Ranchmen had gathered for a circuit of seventy-five miles to claim and brand their young cattle, and when a portion of them had surrounded a large band, among which was a Spanish bull, a dispute arose about a "maverick," or calf that had escaped the spring branding; the discussion grew warm, none of the stock owners being able to set up a valid claim or establish an undoubted title. At last, in a spirit of bravado, a rancher proposed that whoever would ride the bull without saddle or halter should be the declared owner of the calf. There was a yell of approval, but not a general stampede of volunteers, for taurus was in an ill humor, and his foaming mouth and bloodshot eyes, gave token that whoever rode him would have a ride as wild as Mazeppa's, and one that might not end so well. At last a "vaquero" named Frick accepted the challenge, and the wild bull was immediately lassoed and held by a lariat around horn and foot. Dismounting his horse the vaquero fastened his long rowelled spurs securely, tied a handkerchief around his head, approached the infuriated animal, and, grasping the tail in his hands, sprang lightly on, setting the spurs deeply in his flanks as he settled securely in his seat. The lariats were slackened; the bull gave a roar of rage and terror and flung his head to the ground; but the rider had his back to the horns and a firm grip on the tail, and kept his seat. Another roar that shook the ground, a wild plunge, and the now maddened bull shot out across the sage plain with lightning speed, his plucky rider twisting the tail that to him was a shoot-anchor, until the bellowings were lost in the distance.

For over a mile and a half the race continued amid the excited cheers of the vaquero's comrades. Occasionally the bull gave a desperate plunge through a heavy clump of sage in the vain attempt to rid himself of his tormentor, but the long rowels only clung more firmly to his flanks. Sometimes the animal and rider were hidden by undulations in the ground, and bets were even made that Frick would be thrown and gored; but at last the bull, exhausted from sheer fright, fell, and the plucky vaquero, stepping lightly off, returned to claim his prize, which was unanimously awarded. Growing World.

THE LAPLANDER'S SLEDGE has no runners; but, like himself, it is covered with reindeer skin, and is in shape something like a canoe. Harnessed to this sledge, the reindeer starts off with almost the rapidity of the steam-engine, going fifteen or twenty miles an hour. The reindeer is not only the Laplander's horse, but his cow; and, during the time that it gives milk, he is freezing. Large quantities of it to be used when no more is to be obtained. Then he breaks off a piece, warms it out, and has again a good article of milk. The deer is also his food, large herds of them being kept in some parts of the country. From its skin the Laplander makes the roof and floor of his house, his bed, his shoes and stockings, his clothes, and cords and strings for his bow. Without this animal the Laplander would be in a deplorable condition.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE [illegible]

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
Rev. J. W. Rush. Rev. W. L. C. Hennicutt.
Rev. C. B. Galloway. Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D.

THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1881.

The Ought and the Will.

The increased missionary assessments and appropriations, recently made by the board at Nashville, are signs of improvement. The amount to be raised is $200,000. The amount appropriated is $180,525. Last year the assessment was $128,300. This amount, we believe, was nearly raised.

There are two questions which, we suppose, are considered in making these assessments: what ought the people to give? and what will they give? The result is usually a compromise between them. The ought of the board is largely above the will of the people. The ought, then, must yield something; the will must also give way to some extent. There is a bringing down and a bringing up. The process meets at the figure of two hundred thousand.

This is the mental process, and the result reached by the Board of Foreign Missions. Our church ought to give much more than this, twice as much; and, in fact, we fear they will give something less. The struggle for the coming year will be to reach the amount fixed. We hope what men ought to do and what they will do will not be like two parallel lines never to meet, but that they will at length come together and be merged in one. This is the consummation devoutly to be wished for, that the church should be willing to do what it ought to do. Then there would be no heart rending, and purse shrinking, at the missionary meetings and collections.

The need is an enlightened conscience in regard to our obligations in giving the gospel to the world. And to bring this about the people must not only be converted, but they must have special light and information. A spiritual man may be very ignorant and narrow. He is in a condition to be instructed, and his heart and conscience are open to the truth, but he must be taught. What he feels he ought to give depends upon the breadth of his views, the largeness of his horizon. Perhaps he has never thought much about the world or the heathen, or how it came to pass that he is not a heathen himself. His own soul and its trials, his own church, pastor and prayer meetings, and his own immediate family circle, have occupied his thoughts, and given tone to his devotions and his liberality.

How can men and women be converted and enjoy religion, and yet be indifferent about foreign missions? It would seem that they can. It is not the highest or best type of piety, but it is a basis on which to build something better. Let the preachers and the anniversary orators begin at this point. The authority of God's word, the love of Christ, the misery of the world without the gospel, will tell where there is grace. Buffoonery and humor and witticisms do not quicken consciences, touch the heart, nor enlighten the mind.

If there is anything solid or serious in religion it is this question of duty in the support of missions. And the object is not to raise a certain amount of money. When people reach the ought point, the end of all appeals is reached. Our concern should be that all do their duty. Whether the result in money be much or little is a matter of comparatively small moment. When people have done what they can, there is no end beyond this.

To be acceptable to God, the ought and the will, in giving, must coincide. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver. Up to the measure of his ability, he must give willingly, gladly, thankfully. Neither the giver nor the gift is accepted of God where the spirit is grudging, and the measure slack. There is need of lifting up in our appeal to motives, and a care lest our collections be kept meager, by the degrading expedients resorted to in raising them. There has been improvement in this matter. Let us go on to perfection. The ought is as yet high up in the clouds, and the will is scarcely above the tree-tops. Like the two electricities, when they come together, there will be flashes and bolts and shocks of power.

The Ecumenical is likely to act as a wholesome diversion to our Southern Methodism for the coming year. What else it will do, particularly, we do not know. Other great benefits that are to come of it may not be so clear, but with its coming on, and its passing off, and its deliverances while in session, there will be little disposition to lay out work for the General Conference.

Many of the leading church legislators will be too much filled with the great Conference at City-Road, [illegible] and the telling of these things, to give a thought to what the General Conference ought to do. And our Methodist newspapers will be so crowded with Ecumenical matters that there will be scant space for discussion of the presiding elder question, methods of finance and disciplinary changes.

Beyond some suggestions about the number of new Bishops, and a very mild reference to presiding elders—topics that seem to be always silent—we have seen or heard nothing about General Conference work. Even the fresh and startling statement, that "it is to be the most important General Conference that has ever assembled," and the like original declarations, have so far escaped our notice. These will come along later perhaps; but we believe that the Ecumenical will act as a safety valve to the irrepressible spirit of change and radical progress, and thus prove to be an unexpected blessing to our beloved and often sorely hectored and irritated Methodism.

Even fraternity can largely unload itself across the water, and thus spare us something of the gushing exuberance and time-wasting declamation which this question has of late years inspired. Nevertheless, our columns are wide open for any who have guns to fire General Conference-ward.

"Call Upon Me in the Day of Trouble."

How true it is that God's ways are not as our ways. Men seem most disposed to help those who least need help. They loan to those who can repay them. They sell to those regarded as sure pay. They invite those who can and will invite them in return. They cultivate the acquaintance of those from whom they hope to derive pleasure or social elevation. Such seems to be the theory and practice of the world. It is the mark of real sympathy, of true friendship, to say: "If you get in any trouble call on me; if you need help let me know it." This is the kindness and love of God toward us: "Call upon me in the day of trouble and I will deliver thee. Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Cast your care on me, and I will sustain thee." The Lord is nigh to them that are of a broken heart, and saveth them that are of a contrite spirit. So speaks our all-loving Father to us, his sorrowing and suffering children.

We should remember that trouble has not been brought about by the original and deliberate purpose of God. It is a result that has been superinduced by sin. It is caused by a violation of God's sinless and benevolent will. Angels who have never sinned have never suffered. God's good pleasure toward all his obedient accountable creatures is: "Life and health and peace." A world without sin would be a world without trouble, where there is no sin holy natures suffer no sorrow, no pain. It is true Christ was holy, harmless, undefiled, and yet he was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; but we must ever remember that these sufferings were vicarious, and, unless they were, there would be no way known to us by which his sufferings could be accounted for. Unless he died the just for the unjust, he ought not, under the administration of a holy God, to have suffered or died at all. He bore our griefs, and carried our sorrows; he was wounded for our transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities. We know, too, it is written: many are the afflictions of the righteous, but this is the general result of sin, and the condition of our probationary state, where the wicked cease not to trouble, and never will in this life.

But, if we would realize the benefit of the promise, we must call upon God in the day of trouble. Men, alas! in trouble often do no more than complain and murmur, and sometimes even worse, rush into folly and sinful indulgence to escape from trouble, and some, in their madness and despair, as suicides hurrying unbidden into the tremendous presence of their Judge. We should call upon God in the day of trouble. What needless pains we bear, because we do not carry all to God in prayer. He has a thousand ways to deliver us from trouble, or else support us under, and sanctify it to our good.

W.

Be Kind to Each Other!

A FRAGMENT.

"Be kind to each other,
For night's coming on;
Soon friend and soon brother
Perchance may be gone."

Our life is a song. God has blessed us with health and with wealth of enjoyment. We rejoice in a pecuniary competency. We revel in privileges and prerogatives, social and ecclesiastical, unknown to and coveted by many "foot-balls of adversity and poor cursedlings of the storm." Then be kind to the unfortunate. Prosperity should not make us arrogant and overbearing, but thankful, affectionate and kind. Wherever opportunity offers, we should scatter seeds of kindness by drying the tears of the weeping, and smoothing the furrows of the sorrowful and distressed. But we must make haste, for our Master well says: "The night cometh, when no man can work." At a funeral recently I heard a young woman frantically exclaim: "Mother, dear mother! Oh! if again restored to life I would not give you another pang; I would never again offend and grieve you; I would devote my life to ministering to your comfort and joy." But the corpse of the heart-broken mother moved not. Night, the darkness of the grave, had come to her; yes, and to her daughter too, for the golden opportunities of being kind to her mother had forever passed away.

When we hear of the demise of friends or foes, how it grieves us that we had ever entertained ill-feeling, said anything derogatory, or did anything hurtful to those who bade our world adieu. Being covered by the clods of the valley, their ears are deaf to our explanations and apologies; their eyes, sealed in death, see not in our eyes love and affection refilt by celestial light.

Whenever thy breast is burning with resentment against another, when thy cheek glows and thy eyes kindle with anger, think of the coming shadows of night, and let passion melt away in tears.

We may be called to mourn the loss of the companions of our youth; wife, husband, brother, sister may soon pass away to the calms of death. Would you not then remember, with anguish and remorse, every word of harshness, every glance of unkindness, every act of injustice? And, on the other hand, will not the recollection of every gentle tone, every approving and encouraging word, every deed of love fall soft and healing, as the dew of heaven, on your soul? Besides, deeds of kindness, records of love are registered in the eternal book of God' remembrance. The recording angel writes them down in characters more glorious than the stars.

"Be kind to each other." This motto should be written in our hearts with the diamond pen of Christian love. When passion incites, or anger provokes to words and deeds violent and wrong, let conscience whisper in our ears this golden precept, and let its still, small voice be heard and heeded. Kind and gentle affections should twine a perennial garland around our hearts. The softest dews of tenderness must fertilize, the brightest sunbeams must play upon its blossoms. That garland will never wither, its sweetness never pass away. It will diffuse a fragrance over life's last hour, and cast a glow and a beauty on the pallid cheek of death. Then

"Be kind to each other,
For night's coming on;
Soon friend and soon brother
Perchance may be gone."

A

The Princeton and Prohibition.

As important and pertinent to the discussion and great struggle now going on in the Southwest, the following, which appeared originally in "The Prohibitionist," is reproduced in these columns. The view presented has not been discussed by any of the excellent and able correspondents of the ADVOCATE.

The January number of the Princeton Review has a conclusive and exhaustive article on the "Legal Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic." Equally free from passion, prejudice and pedantry, it is a calm, learned, unanswerable presentation of this greatest of all social and moral questions. Such an argument sent out under the imprimatur of the staid and stately old Princeton can but accomplish good. We hail it as a courageous and distinguished co-laborer in this irrepressible conflict. The first question discussed and established is "the justice of the principle" of prohibition. Adopting the narrowest definition of the limits of State legislation—granting the largest liberty to the individual—it yet appears luminous as sunlight that prohibitory laws are just and right. It is fundamental to the very idea and existence of government. If whisky is an evil—which no man with the brains of an oyster was ever known to deny—then its prohibition is the subject and imperative duty of legislation. But just here is the issue we have to join with liquor-apologists and third-rate politicians. They claim it as one of man's natural rights to buy and sell and drink intoxicating liquors, and that to deny or abridge this right "is to unjustly interfere with his natural freedom from restraint." Such a claim has neither the warrant nor pretense of plausibility. Natural as opposed to civil rights never had an existence. The idea is a mere figment of a diseased brain—"a fable without the merit of being cunningly devised." Man is a social being born in society, with social and reciprocal obligations and duties, as natural and necessary as air to the lungs and food to the tissues. He is neither a Sitting Bull nor an Alexander Selkirk, governing his own narrow realm, with the sceptre of a despot, without regard to others. God never made man an independent sovereignty. If so, government would be an impossibility and warfare our only employment and pastime. But even granting the claim, when man passed from his natural into his social state he "merged his natural in his social rights." Mr. Justice Cooley, an eminent and undoubted authority, has defined civil rights to embrace "the right to do everything not harmful to the public or to other individuals." On this definition, the able writer in the Princeton makes the following judicious and almost axiomatic observations:

"Whenever a private right becomes injurious, noxious, or offensive to the public good, the private right becomes subordinate to the public right which a community has to demand a protection therefrom. Acts innocent in themselves acquire from circumstances the quality of injuring the public. To carry arms about one's person for purposes of self-protection is in itself an innocent act. But where citizens generally do the same thing the tendency is to create disorder and cause the unjustifiable taking of human life; the State, therefore, prohibits the carrying of the dangerous weapons concealed upon one's person. So it may be said of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, that notwithstanding it may be innocent in itself it may nevertheless, by force of circumstances, be injurious to the public welfare and dangerous to the public peace. And if this be so, the private right of sale has become subordinate to the public right of protection. We conclude, therefore, that no man has a natural or a civil right to indulge in a traffic which renders life and property insecure, which promotes immorality and creates public paupers to be supported at the State's expense. If it appears that the traffic in intoxicating liquors does all this, the justice of the principle that would prohibit and stamp out the whole miserable traffic can not be denied." Where is the jurist or logician that can discover a flaw in that argument? Where the weapon that can penetrate the joints of that harness?

Our author next considers what is known as the Police Power of the State which is one of the "inherent attributes of sovereignty." This is discussed under three heads:

1—Police for the prevention of offenses.

2—Police of public health.

3—Police of charity.

The first leads to an investigation of the liquor traffic in its relation to crime. An army of evidence from the most distinguished and trustworthy sources is then adduced sufficient to silence every cavil of the doubting, and fire every impulse of human sympathy and high-born patriotism. Judges, commonwealth-attorneys and other civil officers, with a voice of startling unanimity testify to the criminal results of the liquor traffic. And yet with these saddening facts before us in every town and hamlet, there are those who will apologize for the business, and cry "intolerance" if a hand is uplifted to stay its march of blood. Sir Matthew Hale declared that if all the criminal cases under his observation in the courts for twenty years could be divided into five parts, four of them were produced by intoxicating liquor. Chief Justice Noah Davis of the Supreme Court of New York says: "I believe it entirely safe to say that one half of all the crime of this country and of Great Britain, is caused by the intemperate use of intoxicating liquors; and of the crimes involving personal violence, certainly three-fourths are chargeable to the same cause." But to put the case in yet stronger light in comparison is made by criminal statistics under license and prohibitory laws. This, considering the heroism, hellish efforts made to evade prohibitory laws, established beyond the imagination of a thought that "the relation between intemperance and crime is that of cause and effect. The numbers of criminals convicted in Maine, with a prohibitory law, was 1 to every 1,699 of population, while New York (exclusive of New York city,) without prohibition was as 1 to every 620 of population. Under prohibition in Connecticut crime decreased 75 per cent. in 1854, and in 1873 when license was restored it increased 50 per cent. in a single year. These are figures that cannot lie. They tell a tale of blood. More than forty thousand criminals occupy cells in the prisons of our country and are supported at public expense. To stop this drain upon the treasury, relieve the burden of taxation, and in a large measure abolish the criminal docket of our courts, we must resort to prohibition. It is the only remedy. In the meantime we commend the Princeton Review article to those who are accustomed to charge prohibitionists with fanaticism and intolerance.

C. W. C.

Seashore Camp Ground.

Last week I received an invitation from Bro. W. H. Foster to accompany him to the Seashore Camp Ground. As I had never an opportunity before of visiting this now well-known place, I gladly accepted the invitation. Leaving the city by the 3:30 P. M. train, we had a delightful run through the glades that border the great lakes of Louisiana, over miles of bridges and trestle-work, and through the level lands lying behind Bay St. Louis, Pass Christian and Mississippi City. From Bay St. Louis to the camp ground the country reminds me very much of my native place, especially in the growth of its forests. And how many memories, hallowed by time and distance, come with anything that carries us back to "youth and home." We reached our destination "at the going down of the sun." I had taken this trip for the purpose of seeing the place in the absence of the crowd. I wanted to see if there was anything [illegible] in the place, taken on its naked merits. I had not time to make observations before darkness intervened and shut out the world. But while I could not see, I could feel, and the soft breeze from the Gulf soon put my physical nature into a condition to enjoy "balmy sleep." That was my first experience in regard to sea breezes. The soft, salt air, the musical splash of the water along the shore produced the most enjoyable repose, and started reveries and dreams which were only frightened away by the advancing morning. With the rising sun I was up and out for seeing. Everybody I had ever seen who had attended a camp-meeting here, had spoken to me in praise of the place. Now I was on the ground to refute or substantiate all that had been said. I walked up and down and across, from side to side, from end to end, from north to south, from west to east. I explored the whole place, from Wesley Lake to the Gulf of Mexico. I looked at the cottages, with their manifold illustrations of the architectural skill necessary to build up a camp meeting. It is said that "necessity is the mother of invention," and I assure you I thought that many of these cottages were not ashamed to avow their parentage. As I looked at these "tents of Israel" I thought what a profundity of resources there is in the little human brain. The president of the board informed me that there were more than seventy of these cottages. I looked at the tabernacle, where the great preaching that I had heard about, was done, and, as I stood in the pulpit, I thought: "If a man can't preach with this great sea, that God made, behind him, and a greater sea of human souls, that Christ redeemed, before him, where can he preach?" I looked at and wondered about the large variety of forest trees that nature had brought forth on this small plat of ground. It is certainly remarkable that thirty varieties of forest growth are found here. I looked at the beach, with its "broad strand" of white sand encircling the water like a satin ribbon, and could easily see how the imaginative minds of the first ages would people the sea with singing sirens and charming nymphs. I looked across the water, and was told that the fringe of trees, which lay visible on the horizon, indicated Ship Island, thirteen miles away. Then there came a memory that I had somewhere read of this island and a certain Gen. Butler. I found that the grounds were regularly laid out with ten feet avenues from east to west, and thirty feet avenues from north to south. I myself helped to run the lines that now mark "Broadway," from the sea shore to the railroad, an avenue one hundred feet wide. I met some of the Executive Committee on duty, preparing for the coming meeting in July. The new restaurant is projected, and the lumber for its construction is on the ground, and it will be ready for the reception of guests by July 13. I had many kind attentions from the keeper and his estimable lady, the remembrance of which will always be pleasant. The president of the board informed me that the trustees had several tents to rent, and also some parties owning tents, and not able to attend this year, offer to rent theirs. After I had walked over the whole ground, and taken a view of all that could be seen, I sat down and thought. This camp ground, where the people meet annually to sing and pray and preach, is by the sea shore. I remembered that I had read that in olden time the worshipers of God "esteemed the sea shore a place most pure, and therefore a proper place to offer up their prayers and thanksgiving." Josephus mentions it, to the commendation of the Romans, that they allowed the Jews to "make their proseuchæ at the sea side, according to the customs of their forefathers." Some of the old writers make mention of the "oration's littorales." May not this custom be the reason so much is said about the sea in the devotional books of the Jews? It seems to be natural for a man's thoughts to go up to God when he stands on the shore and looks at this "mirror of eternity, in which the Almighty's form glasses itself." I have seen many camp grounds, some beautiful, some convenient, but this one is the most "beautiful for situation" I have ever seen, and it is convenient to everybody. Bro. Parvin says that if anybody will agree to feed three preachers and their horses, he will hold a camp meeting anywhere. From what I have seen, the running of the Seashore camp meeting would not make a ripple upon the broad expanse of that brother's resources, for, between the fishes of the sea and the huckaters of Biloxi, and the tenters from Mobile and New Orleans and other places, he would have so little to do that he could shout his way through to a successful termination. So I had a most delightful visit [illegible] as I have now seen the place, that in July may have the privilege of attending the meeting. July 13 is the day appointed for the meeting to begin. The New Orleans District Conference, at its last session, passed a resolution that the prayer meeting services, in the various churches in the district, on Wednesday evening, July 6, be conducted with special reference to the approaching camp meeting. I take the liberty to invite our brethren in the country district to join us in this special service. At the Pentecost there were people from all parts of the world, and when they separated, after the feast, they scattered the sacred fire through many lands. May the Seashore camp meeting be the radiating point whence the fire of God shall flash in every direction.

C. W. CARTER.

Nashville Items.

MR. EDITOR: Of course Bro. Galloway has given you all the Nashville May meeting news, for he was there at the post of duty. Nevertheless, as I was there a day or two before and after him, I may have picked up a scrap or two not noticed by him.

The Bishop's meeting was a success. We have but two Bishops that can be counted on for efficient work. We need more.

The Publishing House is rapidly demonstrating what I have often believed and frequently expressed, both publicly and privately, that with its immense area of patronage, and its able management, its commercial success is far better secured than any private enterprise can be. It has lived through scenes of financial recklessness and inefficiency, to speak of more direct and positive disadvantages and losses it has suffered, such as, in a shorter time, would have put under ground any manufacturing or mercantile establishment in the land. It has survived a bleak and cheerless winter of stagnation and unappropriation of sacred hir severity, and has well entered the spring season, and the shedding process is well nigh complete. It looks, and breathes health fulness and prosperity.

Twenty-three years ago, and from to-day, after having served somewhat in some of its subordinate agencies, I entered its service. Ever since that time have been more one way or another, connected with it, and might, therefore, be reasonably supposed to be able to give some opinions about it. Its financial planning was always good; its [illegible] pinning is good now. It is doing more business now than it ever did. Its profits are its own, and its business salutary and healthful both commercially and ecclesiastically. Its war history, about which so little is generally known, has been largely written and held in abeyance, as it ought to be and may be published some time.

Vanderbilt University is an ornament to the United States. It is rising in importance, and has a career of usefulness before it which must be gratifying to all friends of educational progress. Wesley Hall is a grand and imposing edifice. Its [illegible] and dedication, two weeks ago, was well planned and well executed.

While there I was invited to attend a select meeting of gentlemen "in the interests of education." It seems that when the Rev. Dr. Price opened his college for young ladies in Nashville, about a year or so ago, he projected what was regarded a sufficiency of commodious building, but it was filled to overflowing, and larger quarters became necessary. The meeting was called for the purpose of looking after that matter. In about an hour joint stock to the amount of about $30,000 was secured, and it is understood it could be easily raised to $40,000 if necessary. The new college will be ready by October. That is the way they do things. The selection of Dr. Price for president of this college is highly approved in Nashville. He is expected to take up one of the very best institutions of the kind in the United States. Everything seems to favor it.

While there I met and formed the acquaintance of Miss Frances Willard, of Chicago, Ill., or, more correctly, of Evanston, Ill., in the vicinity of Chicago. Miss Willard is a well known, highly-honored and deservedly esteemed temperance lecturer, and president of the Woman's National Christian Temperance Union. She lectured in the Kendre Church to a crowded and highly-delighted audience. For elegance of oratory, diction and rhetoric, chaste simplicity of manner, ostentatious common sense, and plain, bold opening up of that great subject, now attracting so much attention all over the country, I have not heard it excelled. Miss Willard is doing much good, and makes the impression wherever she goes. Public sentiment is rapidly waking up to this momentous whisky question.

R. ABBEY.

Different Things.

The Southern Prohibitionist says:

Prohibition and total abstinence are two things and entirely different. We practice total abstinence ourselves and preach it to others as the true and safe form of temperance. But we do not advocate the enforcement of total abstinence by law. We do not understand that prohibition contemplates any such sweeping extermination of the habit of drinking. Prohibition deals exclusively with the commercial aspects of liquor. Planting itself on the undisputed right of the State to regulate all matters of trade, it claims that the evils arising from the manufacture and sale of liquor justify its abolition. It is as reasonable to say that the prohibitory law that forbids absolutely the spread of a contagious disease is intended to enforce health on the people, as to say that prohibition of the liquor traffic is to enforce total abstinence. Undoubtedly a great many persons will be made sober when the law removes this omnipresent temptation to drink; but it is equally true that many will continue to drink. They will import, or make for private use, or obtain surreptitiously, the liquor they crave, and no law will interfere with them.

But to say that prohibition enforces total abstinence by law is to talk without reason. It simply says you shall not make it to sell nor sell it as a common article of commerce. It is the aim of moral suasion, and to recommend total abstinence; it is the aim of prohibition to prevent the traffic.

Both reason and experience teaches us that these methods taken together most effectually correct the evils of intemperance. Nothing will completely prevent them. It is a form of sin that will defy all remedies. Men will drink until the judgment. But as rational men and women, and as philanthrophists sincerely loving our fellow mortals, it is certainly our duty to adopt the most effective measures to counteract such a dire calamity as intemperance. The Church of Christ is to persuade men; it lifts up its voice of pleading to beseech men to forsake their sins; it goes out after the lost with eager feet and weeping eyes, and the pathos of an infinite love in its message, and years to save them. Beyond this it can not go—it must not go. Moral suasion is its only resource, its final argument. But the Church of Christ, and all virtuous citizens, may say to the State interpose your recognized authority to prevent the destruction of society. We do not ask that you make men sober by law, but that you do not let a class of men make them drunk. We do not ask you to extinguish by word or act of legislature the fiery thirst for intoxicants; only God's grace can do that, and we will labor and pray for the drinking man if perchance we may save him. But we do ask that you do not hire men to counterwork us; we do ask that you do not shelter by law the wholesale ruin of society; we do ask that you do not make vice respectable by legalizing it. Is the demand unreasonable? Should not the law be on the side of virtue? Is it not the very essence of free government to protect its citizens by the bulwark of law? As it is now the church is struggling, all good men are struggling to put out the fire of intemperance by moral suasion, and the State is licensing men to feed the flames. How long will it take one hose throwing water on a frail frame building to extinguish the fire while another hose from the opposite side is throwing oil upon it? Yet this is the policy now pursued; and when we ask the State to exercise its police power, and stop the flood of inflamable material, the men working the oil pump work the harder and shriek "fanaticism"—"Plymouth Rockism"—"give us liberty or death;" and to the wonder of all good men, the State says don't interfere with those men, they have as much right to feed the flame as you to put it out? Prohibition aims to shut off the oil plug and then moral suasion may control the fire.

Dr. Fitzgerald, editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, writing of the "gospel-hardened," says:

The pulpit itself may meet a danger here. The solemn and momentous truths that fall upon heedless ears and unresponsive hearts may at length lose their significance to the speaker. As, nothing follows their proclamation, it is but too natural to drift unconsciously into the feeling that there is nothing in them. Insensibly the preacher thus tempted and tried begins to rotate on the axis of perfunctory preaching. He warns the sinner of his awful peril in scriptural language, but with no thrill of sympathetic alarm; he invites his hearers to the gospel-feast, but in a tone that shows he does not expect them to come; he speaks of the joys of heaven and the pains of hell in the same lifeless way, showing that he has reached the point when these things have ceased to move him as they have ceased to move his hearers. There has been a fatal reaction from the pulpit to the pew. And now it is mutual: a dying pulpit going on repeating unfelt truths to deaf ears.

This is a dreadful state of things. What is the remedy? First, an awakened pulpit. When the gospel no longer warms its own heart while preaching it, let the preacher rest not until his heart is baptized anew from on high and his lips touched again with hallowed fire. Then his word will be with power; formality will be quickened into life; indifference will be roused to action; there will be a revival.

An Accident All Around.

A most ridiculous scene occurred at a church in Newcastle a few Sundays ago. A policeman was passing the church as a gentleman came out. The man jokingly accosted the policeman and said he was wanted inside, meaning that the minister would be glad to have him turn from the error of his ways, and seek the truth and enjoy a peace that passeth all understanding. The stupid policeman thought there was some trouble in the church, so he went in. The sexton, seeing a policeman, was anxious to give him a favorable seat, so he said: "Come right in here," and he took him to a pew and waved his hand as much as to say, "Help yourself." There was another man in the pew, a deacon with a sinister expression, as the policeman thought, and he supposed that was the man they wanted arrested, so he tapped the deacon on the arm and told him to come along. The deacon turned pale and edged along as though to get away, when the policeman took him by the collar and jerked him out into the aisle.

The deacon struggled, thinking the policeman was crazy, and tried to get away, but he was dragged along. Many of the congregation thought the deacon had been doing something wrong, and some of them got behind the deacon and helped the officer fire him out. Arriving at the lock-up, the policeman saw the man who told him he was wanted in the church, and asked him what the charge was against the deacon; and he didn't know; so the sexton was appealed to, and he didn't know, and finally the prisoner was asked what it was all about, and he didn't know. The policeman was asked what he arrested the man for, and he didn't know, and after awhile the matter was explained, and the policeman, who had to arrest somebody, took the man into custody who told him he was wanted in the church, and he was fined five dollars and costs. He says he will never try to convert a policeman again, and the policeman says he will never go into a church again if they get to knocking each other down with hymn books.—Peck's Sun.

The Christian Index very justly censures a governor for the grounds upon which he exercised the pardoning power. Drunkenness is no excuse for murder. The Index says:

Gov. St. John, of Kansas has pardoned a man convicted of murder, because the man's wife argued that when he committed the crime he was under the influence of liquor obtained at a place when its sale was authorized by law; and for this act the temperance apostles are now sounding the praises of Gov. St. John of Kansas. The Index would like to know whether it is thought by these apostles that such a consideration as that urged by the woman justifies Gov. St. John in forgetting his oath of office?

Furthermore, suppose that all Governors in States where the sale of liquor is licensed should follow the example of Gov. St. John of Kansas. Then a man who wishes to murder another has a nice plan laid out for him by sufficient authority. All he has to do, is to get drunk at a licensed liquor shop, kill his man, and then get his wife to go to the Governor with the argument which had such weight with Gov. St. John of Kansas. The plan as very simple, and would work like a charm.

Really some people seem to be made as crazy by cold water as others are by hot whisky.

The following item from the London Watchman gives Lord Beaconsfield's age exactly:

The doubt as to the exact date of Lord Beaconsfield's birth is now removed by an extract given in one or two of the papers of the following entry in the register-books of births kept at the Spanish and Portuguese Jews' Synagogue, Bevis Marks: "Child's name, Benjamin; father, Isaac; mother, Maria; surname, D'Israeli; day in the week of child's birth, Friday; Jewish date 12th Tebat, 5565; Christian era, 21st December, 1804, circumcised by Dr. A. Lindo, 20th Tebat, 5565; attested by D. T. DeCastro." Lord Beaconsfield was, therefore, in his 77th year.

—The thirty-fifth anniversary of the New Orleans District Sunday-School Union, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was held last Sunday evening in Carondelet Street Church. The services consisted of singing, responsive readings, reports from Sunday-schools, and addresses by Rev. C. W. Carter and Dr. Mathews. The attendance was quite large, the singing was delightful, the responsive readings were impressive, the statistical reports showed some progress, and the addresses were listened to with marked attention. Everybody went away looking happy.

—A note from Rev. J. W. Medlock informs us that Rev. John C. Reid, a superannuated member of the Louisiana Conference, died at his residence in Vienna, La., May 25, 1881. Bro. Reid has been for a low state of health for some years, and the news of his death is not unexpected. We extend to his family our sympathies. We hope some brother will soon furnish us a biographical sketch of the life and labors of this faithful minister.

—Rev. Dr. Tudor dropped in on us Wednesday of last week. He is looking as cheery and youngish ever, and strong to labor. He left, in company with Bishop Keener and others, on Friday morning, for Jackson, La., whither he goes to preach the commencement sermon at Centenary College, Sunday, May 29. He expects to spend a few days in the city on his return, including Sunday, June 5.

—Port Gibson Collegiate Academy commencement programme will be found on our eighth page. Dr. C. G. Andrews preaches the commencement sermon, Sunday, June 19.

—Rev. W. E. Ballard, writing from Yazoo City, Miss., May 23, says: "Sister L. G. Dunn died, May 4, 1881, at the residence of her son, Mr. R. L. Dunn, in Yazoo city, Miss. She had long been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; converted in youth. She had attained to a mature and rich experience of the things of God. An obituary will be forwarded soon for publication."

—Rev. Dr. Cox, presiding elder of the Pensacola district, Alabama Conference, writing May 19, says: "The outlook on the district is good. A dry May and good crop prospects. Immense quantities of lumber made this year, and sold at good prices. If our people were as diligent in religious matters as they are in temporal we would be a very great power for good in the land.

Yet there are men, says the Christian Index, who reject the Christian religion and even ridicule it, because as they say there is so much difference of opinion among its advocates! Why do they not object to, and ridicule all the arts and sciences for the same reason? Their objection is not against the Christian religion, but against human nature. Their argument is reduced simply to this: "We will not accept the religion of Jesus because human nature is what it is." Should they accept this formula, they would tell the truth without knowing it. Their own depraved nature is the secret of their opposition. We shall believe that the real reason is the one which they allege, when they apply the same reason to all other things; but so long as they apply it to no other thing, they must excuse us for saying, that it has the appearance of a mere subterfuge; a subterfuge with which they can not deceive us, much less the Almighty, and with which they ought not to deceive themselves.

FRENCH CATHOLICISM.—Dr. E. de Pressonse says French Catholicism is passing through a phase of disintegration. In France the novel spectacle is displayed of one section of the church being in open hostility to the other. After the Vatican Council, the Ultramontanes obtained the ascendency, and many thought this was the end of liberal Catholicism; but its spirit is just now exhibiting a more vigorous life. The Radicals are very indignant that the religious communities, except the Jesuits, should have submitted to the government of the republic, and that the new bishops recently appointed should have all avowed in their first charges unbegrudging acceptance of existing institutions.—Watchman.

The law passed by the Wisconsin Legislature prohibiting the old-American practice of "treating," says the Central Christian Advocate, will not probably seriously affect the sale of intoxicating drinks. We suspect these "legislators" are only trying to cajole the prohibitionists, and are laughing in their sleeves at their success. The joint attack in the temperance reform is the dram-shop. We must overthrow first of all, these places where the army of drinkers is recruited, removing at the same time the temptation to drink which makes the reformation of the drunkard impossible. The friends of temperance need wisdom quite as much as zeal, for they have pitted against the rum a wary and unscrupulous enemy.

Personal and Other.

—Ex-Gov. Edwin D. Morgan, who last year gave $100,000 as a fund for erecting a library building, and supplementing the library of the Union Theological Seminary, has just given another $100,000 toward the purchase of a site for the new seminary buildings. The directors have concluded the purchase of a tract of land comprising ten city lots on the square bounded by Park and Madison avenues, and by Sixty-ninth and Seventieth streets, fronting on Park avenue, and will at once proceed to the erection of the necessary buildings.—Christian at Work.

—Dr. Nels, a French naval surgeon, has lately returned to Saigon from a journey of exploration on the north-eastern frontier of French Cochin China, the first ascended the west branch of the Dongnai to its source, and afterwards was able to fix the position, and to some extent the course, of the eastern and more important branch of this river, but the wild tribes living on its banks would not allow him to explore it to its source. He accordingly struck eastward across the south of Annam to the sea-coast, and returned to Saigon by sea.

—Mr. Boycott, whose treatment in Ireland added a new word to the dictionary, is to become an American citizen. He came here to visit an old friend who resides in Amelia county, Va., where a colony of Irish people have invested half a million dollars and are prosperous, and he was so pleased with the country that he decided to settle. An thousands of his countrymen will settle the Irish question in the same way this year.

—The Chinese are said to believe that the reason why those who read the Bible become Christians is due to the stupefying power of the ink, which takes away his reason and leaves him ready to believe false doctrines. Warnings against the purchase of foreign books are frequent in consequence of this superstition.

—Prof. Mommsen, the historian, has received one hundred and six thousand marks (about twenty-five thousand dollars) from his countrymen, ostensibly in recognition of his sixty-fourth birthday, but really in indemnification of the great loss he suffered in the burning of his library, last year.

Adolphe Thiers, the French statesman-diplomat, had a strange habit as to sleeping. He invariably went to bed at 7 P. M., awoke at eight to dine, dozed in his easy-chair about ten, went to bed toward midnight, and rose at 4:30. His health suffered from any disturbance of these arrangements.

The French Government is considering the proposition to substitute electric lamps for oil lamps, in forty-two light-houses on the Atlantic and Mediterranean coasts. The cost of the change will be 7,000,000 francs.

Joseph, the well known chief of the Oka Indians, died suddenly at Coughnawa Village, Canada, where he has lately been laboring in the service of the Home Mission department of the Methodist Church.

The Emperor William has but two children, the Crown Prince, who married the eldest daughter of Queen Victoria, and who will be the next Emperor of Germany, and the wife of the grand Duke of Baden.

The remains of Rev. Rowland Hill have been deposited at the foot of the tower erected to commemorate the abolition of slavery in connection with Dr. Newman Hall's church in London.

The late W. H. Hollis, of Brooklyn, made Drew Seminary and Wesleyan University his residuary legatees to a property estimated at $150,000.

Mrs. Mary N. Bliss, of Columbus, O., has given $10,000 to Kenyon College for a new building.

Books and Periodicals.

OUR BROTHER IN BLACK; HIS FREEDOM AND HIS FUTURE. By Atticus G. Haygood, D. D. Nashville, Tenn.: Southern Methodist Publishing House. New York: Phillips & Hunt. Cincinnati: Walden & Stowe.

We may summarize the contents of the volume somewhat as follows: There are six millions of negroes in the Southern States, mostly poor and uneducated, and they are here to stay. There was a benignant providence in their enslavement, and in their location in the South, and their emancipation was also providential. They are free, and voters, and will so remain. There is a third element in the problem; the North has gone too fast, the South too slow in dealing with it. It is a national problem. The methods of the problem are kindness, helpfulness, education, religion. The author thinks the negroes should have separate schools, that in the end they will and ought to be in separate church organizations. The social relations between whites and blacks need give no trouble. The feeling of caste is not peculiar to the South; it is in both races, and must be respected. The negro should be encouraged to buy and own land, as important to his welfare and that of the country. God overruled slavery for most gracious ends, for the civilization and salvation of the slave, and the ultimate and great purpose, yet to be realized, the christianizing of Africa.

These points, thus briefly outlined, indicate the scope of the work, and they are in accord with the opinions and convictions of the white people of the South. The negro's future is left where we all leave it, in the hands of that providence that has been so signally displayed in the enslavement of the race. There is no problem really for us to solve. The white people are to do what they can to help the negro, to educate and christianize him. There is no new light on this subject. We are to do our duty toward the negro, and the problem will take care of itself. The author states wherein he thinks both the North and South have failed in their duty. The South, we believe, might be vindicated in reference to some of the charges which he brings against her; and the shortcomings and sins of the North might in justice have received a stronger and more elaborate statement. While Dr. Haygood disclaims dealing with "dead issues," he does, nevertheless, touch them with sufficient distinctness to indicate that he is no longer in sympathy with what may be called the Southern view of slavery. He did believe in slavery, but he does not now. He says: "I have changed my opinions; rather, new and purer light has changed them." "Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun." Something of the spirit of this new and recent conversion pervades the book. This will gratify his Northern readers, while, as it relates to "dead issues," his Southern readers will not care much about it. The inspiration of this "new and purer light" is manifest, but there is none of the bitterness which usually waters the new-born reformer. The spirit and temper of the whole performance are admirable, and the treatment of the subject is, in the main, just and impartial. Some things that are not said ought to have been said; and some things said we would wish had not been said. The style is clear, simple, sprightly and entertaining.

The volume is entitled to a candid reading by our Southern people. They will find in it much to make them wiser and better. Apart from any "new and purer light" which the author has attained, his forcible presentation and statement of our duty to the negro should be fruitful in valuable suggestions, and helpful to all in meeting obligations which men of intelligence and piety can neither question nor evade.

MRS. HARRY HARPER'S AWAKENING, by Pansy. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co. 12mo, 225 pages, illustrated. Price, $1.

This is a story showing how a young married lady, with but little interest in religion, and wholly absorbed in herself, her husband and the fashions, became interested in the Woman's Missionary Society, and awakened to her obligations to work for Christ. It is a good book, specially adapted to the needs of a great many women in good circumstances, and but little more than nominally religious, who are ignorant of the methods of church work, and indifferent about the great evangelical enterprises of the day. The story illustrates very happily the importance of Woman's Missionary Societies and work.

CHRISTIANITY'S CHALLENGE; and some phases of Christianity submitted for candid consideration. By Rev. Herrick Johnson, D. D. Chicago: Cushing, Thomas & Co., 1881. 12mo. Price, $1.

The volume comprises lectures, delivered in Farwell Hall, Chicago, under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, together with several new and hitherto unpublished papers. Dr. Johnson is pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Chicago. These lectures and essays are specially designed to meet the doubts of skeptics, to vindicate Christianity from the assaults of infidelity, and to instruct and awaken the ignorant and the indifferent. They are earnest, practical and edifying.

BOSWELL AND JOHNSON; THEIR COMPANIONS AND CONTEMPORARIES. By J. E. Waller, LL. D. Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co. New York.

Dr. Waller in this volume gives very interesting sketches of Boswell and Johnson, and of their relations to each other. Only one of the six chapters is devoted to Johnson's contemporaries and companions. It is an entertaining book, and gives, on the whole, a just estimate of the character of Johnson, and of his most wonderful biographer, Boswell.

The Fortnightly Review, May, 1881, George Munro, publisher, New York, has: 1. Impressions of the Irish Land Bill. 2. Statins. 3. English and Eastern Horses, part I, Eastern Horses. 4. The Lark Ascending. 5. Has Our Vaccination Degenerated? 6. The Formulas of Literature Under the American Republic. 7. Commercial Union. 8. Gilder's First Pamphlets. 9. Political Heads Chiefs, Kings, etc., by Herbert Spencer. 10. Home and Foreign Affairs. Also, The Freres, by Mrs. Alexander, chapters 7-12.

—Appleton's Journal, June, 1881, has: Saints and Sinners; Rambles among Books; Recollections of Thomas Carlyle; The Comedy of the Finds; A Young Student's Impressions of Colonel Aaron Burr; The Glen of the Clash of Arms; Penal Servitude in Siberia; Taxation of Land Values; Romances of Leopold Kompert; Editor's Table; Notes for Readers. D. Appleton & Co., Publishers, New York. Yearly Subscription, $3 00.

—The Magazine of Art, for May, among its many beautiful illustrated articles, has: The Symbol; Treasure Houses of Art; English Birds and their Haunts; Our Living Artists; Apple Blossoms; Children in Painting and Sculpture; The Homes of our Artists; Pictures of the Year; Shepherds' Discovering the Head of Orpheus. Cassell, Petter and Galpen, publishers, New York. Price, $3 50

—The Domestic Journal is an excellent family monthly, published at Springfield, Mass. Price, fifty cents a year.

—The American Agriculturist for June is a good number of this superior agricultural monthly.

Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

Sighed Mr. Jones: "My dear Miss May,
I dreamed an auctioneer one day
Cried, 'Going, going, gone!'
I thought I was the slave he sold,
And you—you bought me with thy gold,
To kneel before thy throne."

"You're easy sold," smiled sweet Miss May,
"For when I heard the fellow say,
'You're going, going, gone!'
I thought, alas! he little knows
He's selling one who never goes,
And" Mr. Jones had flown.

A medical journal tells how one man was cured of a cold: "He boiled a little warm wood and horehound together, and drank freely of the tea before going to bed. The next day he took five pills, put one kind of plaster on his breast, another under his arm, and still another on his back. Prader advice from an experienced old lady he took all these off with an oyster knife in the afternoon, and chopped on a mustard plaster instead. Then he put some hot bricks to his feet and went to bed. Next morning another old lady came in with a bottle of goose oil, and gave him a dose of it on a quill, and an aunt arrived about the same time with a bundle of sweet fern, which she made into tea, and gave him every half hour until noon when he took a big dose of salts. After dinner his wife, who had seen a fine old lady of great experience in the eating, English street, gave him two pills of her own make, about the size of a walnut and of similar shape, and two teaspoonfuls of home-made lodanum to keep them down. Then he took a half-pint of hot rum, at the suggestion of an old sea captain visiting in the next house, and steamed his legs with an old shad-bath. At this crisis two of his neighbors arrived, who saw at once that his blood was out of order, and gave him a half-gallon of spearmint tea and a big dose of castor oil before going to bed he took eight of a new kind of pill, wrapped about his neck a flannel soaked in hot vinegar and salt, and had feathers burned on a shovel in his room. He is now raised and full of gratitude."

WANTED TO SEE HER. The other night, when Buckles went home, he found his wife particularly retrospective. She talked of the past with a tear and looked to the future with a sigh. "Oh! by the way," said Buckles, as he sat on the side of the bed, pulling off his boots, "I saw a peculiar man down town to-day who would give $1,000 to see you." "Who was he?" Does the lady of Little Rock." "I don't know his name." "I'll warrant that it was Oliver Gregg." "No." "Then he must be George Washington." "Guess again. I might know his name if I were to hear it." "Oh! I do wish I knew," said the lady, exhibiting excitement. "Was it Oscar Peoples?" "Guess again. I remember his name now." "Harvey Gleghaus?" "No; his name was Lucius Westwing." "I don't know a man by that name. Why would he give $1,000 to see me?" "Because he's blind."

The new 3 per cent. gs well as 4 per cent. fifty dollars and upwards) United States Bonds are for sale at the lowest market rates by the New Orleans National Bank. By investing your savings in these bonds you make them as safe as the government under which we live, and the interest accruing makes them profitable. If you should wish to sell this same bank is prepared to buy at market rates. They also cash the half-yearly coupons, when due.

An Irishman, who was given to praising the old isle, visited a farm in this State, the proprietor of which had suspended several large pumpkins in an apple tree. He was asked what he thought of the apples. "Very good," he said, "for American apples; but nothing at all as big as we give to the children in Ireland."—Portland Advertiser.

A married gentleman, every time he met the father of his wife, complained to him of the temper and disposition of his daughter. At last, upon one occasion, the old gentleman exclaimed: "You are right; she is an ungovernable jade, and if I hear any more complaints of her I will disinherit her." The husband made no more complaints.

The Factors' and Traders' Insurance Company, 37 Carondelet street, New Orleans, is one of our most flourishing companies, and we can refer to its record and standing to-day with pride. The names of the officers and directors, is published in their card in another column, is an index of the Company's solidity.

A Second Advent congregation at Greenwood, Kansas, have lost confidence in their pastor because, while publicly avowing a belief that the world would come to an end in 1881, he secretly took a note for five years on a loan of $1,000 and demanded twelve per cent. interest with ample security.

"Courtesy opens many doors," says the old adage. "This may be true as far as it goes," says a commentator; "but you might send before a bank building and courtesy till your spinal column was as limber as an old postage stamp, yet the doors wouldn't swing back on their hinges worth a cent."

The subject for conversation at an evening entertainment was the intelligence of animals, particularly dogs. Smith says, "There are dogs that have more sense than their masters." "Just so," responds Young Fitzjohn. "I've got that kind of a dog myself."

A shrewd little fellow was entrusted to the care of his uncle, who met the boy very poorly. One day he happened to see a greyhound, whereupon he asked the boy if he knew what made the dog so poor, and the reply was, "I suppose he lives with his uncle."

If you have a cold and are desirous of getting well immediately, get a bottle of Laplace's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm. This remedy is both good to the taste as well as a certain cure.

Doctor to nervous patient: "What! You are afraid of being buried before life is extinct? Nonsense! You take what I prescribe, and drive such foolish notions out of your head. Such a thing never happens with my patients."

Mr. P. Werlein, 135 Canal street, New Orleans, deals in the leading pianos and organs. He requests you to send for his catalogues and prices before purchasing. Low prices, reliable dealing, and full guarantee are to be had at this old house.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co.—American China dinner, breakfast and tea set, 160 pieces, for $15. Equal to looks and usefulness to French China.

We call attention of housekeepers to the ready cleaner advertised by Mr. Cahill in another column. We have glanced over his list of testimonials which is a large one and all are first class. We have some and expect to use in future, believing it to be what is needed.

Business Notices.

Faded or Gray Hair gradually recovers its youthful color and lustre by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam; an elegant dressing, admired for its purity and rich perfume.

CANVASSERS make from $25 to $50 per week selling goods for R. G. RIDEOUT & CO., 10 Barclay St., New York. Send for Catalogue and terms.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

WANTED, A SITUATION AS TEACHER, by a married gentleman, an A. M. graduate of a leading university of the South, and for five years a professor in that institution. He is competent to teach the usual English branches, the Latin, Greek, French and German languages, the higher Mathematics, Chemistry and Natural Philosophy, Book-keeping and Penmanship. Speaks English and German. Has had nine years experience in teaching. Is a member of the M. E. Church, South. Best references given, if desired. Address Post-office box 112, Marion, Alabama.

WANTED, AGENTS. TO SELL GOODS that can be sold at every house. Apply to MORRISON SIMPSON & CO., Bellaire, Ohio.

THE ATTENTION OF THE PUBLIC IS CALLED to the Greenwich Manufacturing Co.'s Ready Cleaner of New York, a very useful article for all house cleaning, scouring, and polishing purposes. For sale in 10 cent packages by Grocers. To the trade by T. N. CAHILL, Agent, 88 Tchoupitoulas Street, New Orleans.

U. S. BONDS.
Registered 3 1-2 Per Cent.
Coupon and Registered 4 Per Cent.
BOUGHT AND SOLD BY
New Orleans National Bank,
58 CAMP STREET.

Factors' & Traders' Insurance Company
37 CARONDELET STREET,
Paid Up Capital ..... $1,000,000.
ED. A. PALFREY, President.
JOHN CHAFFE, Vice President.
THOS. P. WALKER, Secretary.
Issues Policies Covering Fire, River and Marine Risks at the Lowest Tariff Rates.
DIRECTORS:

John L. Noble,	John Chaffe,
Richard Milliken,	Saml. Friedlander,
R. M. Walmsley,	A. H. May,
T. Ludlow Logan,	Samuel H. Boyd,
Wm. J. Behan,	E. F. Eshleman,
Chas. F. Hille,	L. C. Janvy,
Wm. Hartwell,	C. J. Lewis,
A. T. Jaudin,	A. M. Blackman,
Henry Abraham,	Louis Bush,
A. Briffin,	G. A. Sennett,
Wm. Cunningham,	John A. Adams,
R. J. Burkett,	Wm. A. Gwyn,
	Chas. E. Black.

SEND 25 CENTS
For a copy of the new
REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.
Mailed post paid on receipt of price by
G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

WANTED, BY A YOUNG LADY OF EXperience, a position as teacher of the English branches, in a family or school. Address PRACTICE, this office.

WANTED, A FEMALE TEACHER, COMpetent to teach Music, advanced course of Mathematics, French and Latin, for a family school. Apply to the undersigned. J. W. ATKISSON, MERIDIAN, Miss.

CARD COLLECTORS. SEND 10 CENTS for a set of fifty new Autumn Leaf Chromos. Something new! Only ten cents for a set of twenty Chromo Advertising Cards. Also lots for fifteen, twenty-five and fifty cents. Sure to please. W. VAN DINE, 23 Abingdon Square, New York.

DR. C. J. HICKHAM,
RESIDENCE AND OFFICE,
230 Jackson St., Bet. Chestnut and Coliseum
NEW ORLEANS.
Office Hours—Eight A. M., and three to four P. M.

ADVANCE AND RETREAT!
Personal experiences in the
UNITED STATES and
CONFEDERATE STATES ARMIES,
By J. B. HOOD,
Lieutenant General in the Confederate Army.
Published for the Hood Orphan Memorial Fund, by Gen. G. T. Beauregard.
Price, in cloth binding, $3; in leather, $3 50.
Mailed, post paid, on receipt of price by
G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

OUR BROTHER IN BLACK;
HIS FREEDOM AND HIS FUTURE.
By
ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD, D. D.,
President of Emory College, Oxford, Ga.
Nashville: Southern Methodist Publishing House
New York: Phillips & Hunt.
1881
Will be issued simultaneously by both Houses May
12 mo. Price 90.
Sent to any address, post paid, on receipt of price.
Address, the publishers, or the author.

GERMANIA SAVINGS BANK,
No. 51 CAMP STREET.
Capital, ... $100,000.
This Bank is now ready to receive deposits of ONE DOLLAR and upwards at 4 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually.
DIRECTORS:
H. ZUBERBIER, J. HASSENGER,
S. HERNSHEIM, J. E. MERRILL,
FRANK T. HOWARD, EMIL MAIER,
H. ZUBERBIER, President.
J. HASSENGER, Vice President.
TH. HATRY, Cashier.

WANTED, U. S. LAND WARRANTS. CASH paid for old United States Bounty Land Warrants and Land Scrip. G. M. BALLARD, Indianapolis, Indiana.

THE PORTABLE
COMMENTARY
On the Old and New Testaments.
By JAMIESON, FAUSSET and BROWN.
Complete in One Volume.
This is the only reliable Commentary of recent date published in one volume of suitable size for ready reference, or to carry when traveling in valise or saddle bags. It is a small octavo volume of 640 pages, printed on fine paper, bound in cloth, and is considered invaluable by all who have it. Price by mail, post-paid, only $3.50.
G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

Indian Turnip
COMPOUND
PECTORAL BALM.
For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle $1. Prepared and for sale by
B. LAPLACE, Druggist,
28 and 30 Elysian Fields street.
And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

Agricultural.

CULTURE OF THE PEANUT.—I was interested in your late article on the culture of the castor bean, as it gave me a clearer idea of that crop than I had ever formed before. It was certainly a readable paper, worth several times the cost of the Weekly Register. Now, could you not afford to add to that article another, as clear and comprehensive, on the subject of the culture of the peanut? I know it would be read with interest by large numbers of your subscribers.

T. N. WARD.

WAYNE CO., MISS.

We need not describe the peanut, as it has grown into such general use as to have become familiar to the people in all parts of the civilized world. Its botanical name is Arachis hypogæa, and it has no very near relatives among any of the plants cultivated within the United States.

The peanut crop is rapidly becoming one of considerable importance to the States of the South. Previous to 1860 the whole crop of the country aggregated scarcely 150,000 bushels, while in 1875 it amounted to over 2,000,000, and the crop of 1878 exceeds that of the previous year. We have no figures before us to show the increase since 1876, but it has, undoubtedly, been regular and large.

By far the largest quantity of the product is consumed as "roasted peanuts," but the consumption need not stop here, and does not. It can be, and is very advantageously employed for making oil; in fact, we find that it was extensively cultivated for this purpose in France and Spain nearly half a century ago, at which time, the cyclopædias inform us, pea or ground-nuts were "cultivated in the West Indies for their nuts, which are oblong and grow beneath the ground. These are used by negroes as food." From this it may be seen that the position which the peanut crop holds among our agricultural products is the result of a steady growth, based upon its intrinsic value in the markets of the world.

Authors disagree as to the native country of the peanut, some claiming it for South America and others for Africa; for it seems to have been known in both about the same time. It is an annual tropical plant, belonging to the pulse or pea family and consequently is not adapted to cold climates, but by starting the seed in hotbeds and transplanting when the weather becomes warm in spring, a small crop may be raised in almost any of our Northern States. But the nuts produced in cool climates are seldom of good quality; hence we would not recommend any one to undertake the cultivation of peanuts, except as a "curiosity, anywhere north of Tennessee, in which State it is now quite extensively cultivated for market, principally in West Tennessee, in the counties along the Tennessee river.

It delights in a warm, light and moderately rich sandy clay, or any kind of land, the surface of which becomes hard and cracks after hard rains, is not a suitable one for peanuts, as it must be borne in mind that the long, slender fruit-stems, as soon as the flowers drop, bend over and penetrate the earth, and in this position perfect their seeds. The plants also have long tap roots, which go very deep in congenial soils, or those broken up to a proper depth.

The time for planting in spring will vary somewhat according to latitude, but March and April are the months in which most of the planting is done. For field-culture it is best to drop two to four pods in each hill, the rows about three and a half feet apart, and the hills about two feet, cover the seed two inches deep, and when the plants come up, thin out, leaving only two in a hill. If there are any vacancies, transplant and fill them up. In some localities it is customary to plant on ridges, but if the ground is worked deep, and is of a light, mellow nature, level culture is best, as the plants will not be as liable to injury from droughts as when growing on ridges. It is also customary, in some localities, to shell the peas from the pod before planting. In this there is nothing gained but time, as the pea will soon swell and burst open the pod for itself. Shelled it comes up a few days sooner perhaps, but it is no small amount of labor to shell the seed when planting on a large scale.

The only culture the crop requires is to keep the ground mellow and prevent the plants becoming over-run with weeds. A one-horse harrow or light cultivator will do most of this work; a little hoeing around the hills occasionally until the plants come into bloom, is about all the attention necessary, unless the soil is so poor, that dressings of ashes or plaster are needed to ensure a vigorous growth. Land plaster is an excellent fertilizer for peanuts as well as for all other plants belonging to the pulse family. A tablespoonful dropped on each hill two or three times during the season, will often give very satisfactory results. When the plants begin to bloom freely and spread over the ground, it is time to "lay them by," a technical term for omitting further cultivation; but before doing this, there should be a slight hilling up of the plants. This may be done very rapidly with a double mold-board plow following with the hoe to smooth off the surface along the hill. The plants continue to grow the entire season, therefore the earlier they get started in spring the better the chances for a large yield, which varies from twenty-five to seventy-five bushels per acre.

The gathering of the crop may be delayed until there is likelihood of frosts, but not until one has actually come and killed the vines. The vines and nuts are either dug out with forks or plowed out with a plow arranged for the purpose. A better implement than either is the common tree digger used by nurserymen. This may be set to run deep or shallow, cutting off the top roots of the vines, allowing them and the nuts attached to be lifted with ease. The vines are then spread out to dry for a day or two, then put up in small stacks, the bottom of which should rest on something to keep the bottom layer out of the dirt; and it is well to put on caps of straw, for if the pods get blackened or muddy it will greatly lessen their value in market. The vines should remain ten days to two weeks in the stack, and then the nuts be picked off by hand or threshed by machines made expressly for the purpose.

In Tennessee the harvesting is usually conducted on a plan extremely rude. A common turn plow is run around with the bar to the rows throwing off the dirt and leaving the vines on a very narrow ridge. Following this, come the hands, who take hold of the vines and pull them up, shaking off the dirt by a sudden jerk. Of course this leaves a large per cent. of the nuts in the ground, which are looked after no further, unless it should be that the owner turns in his hogs to root up the extensive leavings.

There are two varieties of peanut in common cultivation—the white and the large red. The white usually meets with most favor on account of its color, though it is really not the best nut. The "red" is the richest in oil, and hence is most valuable for consumption otherwise than as "roasted peanuts."—Mobile Register.

PAINT FOR OUTSIDE WORK.—The inquiry is frequently made as to the best kind of cheap paint or wash for outbuildings, having any good degree of durability. The material usually recommended is a mixture with lime as its base, which the experience of all parties using it proves that it is short-lived and poorly rewarding the time and other expense of putting it on.

I have long used for whitening my walls in my dwelling, and also for barns and sheds, the following: Dry zinc, one pound; white glue, one ounce, or in the same proportion of ingredients for any quantity needed.

The zinc must be ground or pulverized, and dissolved in water moderately hot, stirring it thoroughly during this process. The glue is to be dissolved in a vessel by itself in the usual manner and added to the zinc mixture while yet hot, stirring the same during the process and for some little time afterward. The object desired is a thorough admixture of the ingredients. The preparation when ready for use should be of the consistency of ordinary whitewash. It is best applied with a wide brush. Walls treated with this mixture, which have not been limed, will preserve a pure white for several years, and will not rub off. Twelve years since I applied this mixture to my barn and sheds, and to-day it is nearly as white as when first put on, and cannot be rubbed off with the hand. If tinting for border is desired, I have no doubt that a slight admixture of lamp-black would give a leaden color. I have not used it on newly dressed surface, and do not know whether it would adhere. A good quality of dry zinc should be purchased for from six to seven cents per pound.—Country Gentleman.

HEALTHFUL LABOR.—The American Stockman says there is both satisfaction and remuneration in the business of poultry breeding. When the work is performed with system and intelligence the steady worker will be gratified, and, for the amount of labor required, will find himself or herself amply rewarded by the product returned. But little capital is required to start a hennery; if the intention is to raise fancy stock, for the purpose of furnishing eggs to breeders, small quarters and a few fowls of pure breeds will do to begin with. In a single year the amateur may raise sufficient numbers to stock his yards to advantage. On the other hand if the desire be to supply eggs and chickens for market, a cross of any of the larger varieties with common fowls will prove very satisfactory. This branch of the undertaking will require more room and a closer attention to the smaller details. There is no difficulty in making this business a profitable one, if it is undertaken in the spirit that is required to make any vocation a success. For fancy stock, only the pure breeds can be used, and these should be carefully bred in succession and strictly by themselves. Care must be used each year as the flocks increase, to select from them the best hens for layers, and the finest males.

LIMA BEANS.—Mr. Benjamin G. Smith says that, having been successful in the culture of the Lima bean, he had been frequently asked for his method. He sows the seed the second week in April, taking careful to place the eye down, in boxes known as gummer boxes, five in each. These boxes are without bottoms, six inches in height, seven inches square at the lower part, made of half-inch stuff. They are filled with loam, and placed in the cold grapery. When the plants are about two inches high, the ground is prepared and the pole set out, and a hole large enough to receive the box made at the foot of each. A box is then lifted on a shovel and placed in the hole and shovel withdrawn. The box is then lifted up; the object of making the top an inch smaller than the bottom being to permit this. In this way the beans can be had green from the garden from the middle of August to the middle of October, and dry during the remainder of the year. The latter when soaked can hardly be distinguished from fresh beans. The Lima bean is a tropical plant, and requires a long season. It is not advisable to set out the young plants before the first of June; but this is as early as the seed can be planted out doors. In saving seed, the earliest should be chosen.

THE WEIGHT OF SOILS.—It is impossible to determine the exact weight of any soil, as it varies according to its porosity, amount of water contained, the per cent. of sand, gravel, clay, etc., present. No one handful or bushel of soil from a field is identical with any or every other like quantity. The following figures are from Johnson's "How crops feed:"

Dry sand weighs about one hundred and ten pounds per cubic foot.

Heavy clay weighs about seventy-five pounds per cubic foot.

Half sand and clay about ninety-six pounds per cubic foot.

Rich garden mould about seventy pounds per cubic foot.

Peat about thirty to fifty pounds per cubic foot.

A sandy soil which is spoken of as "light" is so because worked with greater ease than the "heavy" clay that weighs some thirty-five pounds less per cubic foot. The resistance offered by soils in tillage is more the result of adhesiveness than of gravity.

GREEN'S PEAR.—For early use plant the early Minnesota on a dry, gravelly knoll or side hill about May 1st. It will sometimes get punished with a frost, but this risk must be borne by those who want to have the first corn. Sow a little every week to July 4th, and you will have a constant supply till October frosts. Where fodder for the cattle is an object, Stowell's evergreen will give a tremendous growth, as well as excellent late ears for the table. For a general crop, Crosby's is perhaps the best.

If you begin pruning fruit and ornamental trees and shrubbery while young, and follow it up each year, you can form just such a top as you want. If your tree needs spreading out, cut the young shoots off just above a bud on the outside of the shoot, and if you want to train upward, leave a bud on the upper side of the limb, where you cut it off.—Farmer's Advocate.

In planting corn, use only grains from the middle of the ear, rejecting the butts and tips. Our experience has been that ears from the butts are short and thick, while those from the tips have fewer rows and thin stalks. The grains from the middle of the ear have larger germs and more substance to nourish the sprouts.

One gallon of white paint should cover forty-four square yards of surface.

Household.

GENOISE PASTRY.—Take a quarter pound of the freshest butter, put it in a [illegible] with a spoon, add to it four ounces powdered loaf sugar, and beat the two together until a smooth white cream is obtained, then add one egg and keep on beating the mixture until it is smooth again, then add three more eggs in the same manner. The germ of the eggs should be removed. Lastly, incorporate quickly a quarter-pound of fine flour with the mixture, and as soon as it is smooth pour it out to the thickness of a half inch in a buttered flat tin, which must be put in the oven at once. When done (in about ten to fifteen minutes) turn out the slab of genoise and put it to cool, underside uppermost, on a sieve. N. B.—There is a great knack in beating this paste to prevent its curdling. Should this happen it can be remedied by beating as quickly as possible until the mixture is smooth again. Take a slab of genoise, spread on the top of it the thinnest possible coating of apricot jam, then a coating of chocolate icing. Put it into a very hot oven for rather less than a minute; take it out and place it in a cold place to get cool. Then cut it up with a sharp knife in any shapes you please.

LABOR-SAVING BORAX.—The washerwomen of Holland and Belgium, so proverbially clean, and who get up their linen so white, use refined borax as a washing powder instead of soda, in the proportion of a large handful of pulverized borax to about ten gallons of boiling water. They save in soap one-half. All other large washing establishments adopt the same mode. For laces, cambrics, etc., an extra quantity of the powder is used, and for crinolines (required to be made very stiff), a strong solution is necessary. Borax, being a neutral salt, does not in the slightest degree injure the texture of the linen; its effect is to soften the hardest water, and it should be kept on every toilet table. To the taste it is rather sweet, is used for cleaning the hair, is an excellent dentifrice, and in hot countries is used with tartaric acid and bicarbonate of soda as a cooling beverage. Good tea can not be made from hard water; all water can be made soft by adding a teaspoonful of pulverized borax to an ordinary sized kettle of water, in which it should boil. The saving in the quantity of tea used will be about one-fifth.

BAKED BEANS.—Pick one quart of beans free from stones and dust. Soak in cold water over night. In the morning pour off the water, cover them with boiling water and put two pounds of corned beef with them and boil till they begin to split open; the time depends on the age of the beans, but it will be from half an hour to an hour. Mix one teaspoonful of mustard and another of molasses with a little water. Put this into the baking dish, turn the beans and corned beef into it, and bake until they are quite soft and brown on top. If the water cooks away before they are tender, add a little from time to time. New England housewives keep the bean pot baking for ten hours, but a much quicker way is to cook them in a shallow tin pan, and be sure that they are kept covered with water and not allowed to dry up. When tender they may brown till done.

BUTTERMILK.—A Detroit physician says that for a hot weather drink nothing equals buttermilk. It is, he says, "both drink and food, and for the laborer is the best known. It supports the system, and, even in fever, will cool the stomach admirably. It is also a most valuable domestic remedy. It will cure dysentery as well and more quickly than any other remedy known. Dysentery is really a constipation, and is the opposite of diarrhea. It is inflamation of the bowels, with congestion of the "portal circulation" (the circulation of blood through the bowels and liver.) It is a disease always prevalent in the summer and autumn. From considerable observation I feel warranted in saying that buttermilk, drank moderately, will cure every case of it—certainly, when taken in the early stages.

TO CURE A FELON.—Dr. T. C. Brannon, in the Therapeutic Gazette, prescribes the following treatment for this painful malady: Take of soft lye soap and flax-seed meal a sufficient quantity, stirring the meal in slowly with spatula or case knife, manipulating thoroughly, so as to form a salve or poultice. Corn-meal is a good substitute for the flax-seed. Envelope the finger in this, applying snugly, and occasionally pressing it to bring it more completely in opposition. Renew the poultice every twelve to twenty-four hours. Don't try every prescription you may hear of. Depend on this. It will, if applied in time, abort the disease; if adopted later, it will bring it to a small "head," (if too far advanced to be "scattered,") when it may be picked almost painlessly.

CHOCOLATE PUDDING.—One quart milk, one small cup corn starch, two eggs, one cup white sugar, a pinch of salt, three teaspoonfuls vanilla, chocolate grated enough to make the mixture very brown. Dissolve the corn starch in a little cold water, stir it into the milk, and boil till the mixture thickens a good deal, stirring it well. Let it stand while you beat the eggs and sugar and salt together. When these are well mixed, add the milk, and the vanilla; last of all the chocolate. Bake in a buttered pudding dish. Sauce.—Whipped cream, to which is added the beaten white of an egg, and powdered sugar and vanilla to taste. The pudding is good at all times, but is better cold.

BEEF ROLLS.—The remains of cold roast or boiled beef, seasoning to taste of salt, pepper and minced herbs; puff paste. Mince the beef tolerably fine, with a small amount of its own fat; add a seasoning of pepper and salt, and chopped herbs; put the whole into a roll of puff paste and bake for half an hour, or rather longer, should the roll be very large. Beef patties may be made of cold meat by mincing and seasoning beef as directed above, and baking in a rich puff paste in patty tins.

STALE BREAD BREAKFAST CAKES.—Soak five or six slices of stale bread over night, in three cupfuls of buttermilk. In the morning mash the bread fine; add two well-beaten eggs, three teaspoonfuls of soda, a little salt, and flour enough to make of just the right consistence to fry on a griddle. These are better than the ordinary griddle cakes.—Susan Busybee, in Country Gentleman.

RICE CROQUETTES.—Take one teacup of washed rice, one pint of milk, a little salt, one tablespoon of butter and two of sugar. Put on to boil together. Cook slowly about one hour. Take off the fire and add two eggs; stir, and when cold enough make into small rolls and fry in hot lard. Flavor with either vanilla or lemon rind.

The True Test.

THE MERIT OF RELIGION, GOVERNMENT, PERSONS AND THINGS MUST REST UPON A BASIS OF WORTH.

SOME TRUTHS ILLUSTRATING THIS, AND TESTIMONY OF VALUE TO ALL READERS.

Christian at Work.

The true test of any religion is the effect it produces upon the lives of those who profess it. And, indeed, the test of real merit everywhere must be the power it possesses of accomplishing desirable results. In this age of the world men are not judged by what they claim to be able to do, but by what they can do; not by what they are reputed to be, but by what they are. Here is where the religion of our own country rises superior to the faith of Mohammedan or Hindoo lands; for while there is much hypocrisy in the church, and far too much worldliness, there is yet an absence of those sensual and brutal elements which characterize the religions of Arabia and the Ganges.

This principle is equally true in all other departments of life. The same rule which applies to persons is equally applicable to things. Unquestioned merit must characterize them all, or they can not be acceptable, much less popular. The clear and well arranged lecture delivered by Dr. Chas. Craig, before the Metropolitan Scientific Association appeared in the columns of this paper a short time since. In this lecture some new truths were brought to light bearing directly upon, and affecting the interests of the entire community. These facts, as stated by the doctor in his lecture, have been discussed in the columns of the religious press to a considerable extent in the past, and that, too, by very prominent personages. A few years ago the Rev. J. E. Rankin, D. D., of Washington, who is prominently known among the Congregational denominations of the country, published an article upon the same subject which drew forth most bitter replies from prominent physicians, and in response to these articles Dr. Rankin published long communications in the New York Independent, the Boston Congregationalist and the Chicago Advance reiterating his former statements and strongly emphasizing them. In these articles Dr. Rankin frankly stated he was as strongly convinced of the efficacy of the means used as he was that the Genesee river emptied into Lake Ontario. He further said: "I have known, too, of its use in similar cases by physicians of the highest character and standing, and I want, in the interest of humanity, to recommend Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure."

Now while very few people are afflicted as severely as was Dr. Craig or the cases Dr. Rankin refers to, still it is a lamentable fact that the great majority of people, in all parts of the land, are suffering to a greater or less extent from ill health and that this lack of health arises from either disordered kidneys or liver. Some additional facts, from the highest sources, of special interest upon a subject of such importance to the community have heretofore been collected by this paper, and are herewith given:

Rev. D. W. Bartine, M. D., D. D., is known in all parts of the land as a prominent and efficient leader in the Methodist denomination. In speaking upon this same subject as shown in his own experience he said: "Some few months since I found myself suffering from a kidney difficulty which I knew to be the first stages of Bright's disease. By the use of a reliable test I found that my system was giving off albumen, and in some instances in a coagulated state. I also suffered severely from dropsy, particularly about the ankles, together with slight pains about the kidneys, derangement of digestion and great dryness of the skin. I had at all times much thirst, and of course this was followed by a gradual failing of strength. That was about the state of things when I commenced using the preparation known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I took about six tablespoonfuls every day for a week, and found all my symptoms decidedly improving. I continued taking the remedy until I entirely recovered."

In a communication made by Rev. C. A. Harvey, the well-known financial and educational secretary of Howard University, Washington, D. C., the doctor says:

"I have for the past few years been acquainted with the remedy known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and with its remarkable curative efficacy in obstinate and so called incurable cases of Bright's disease which occurred in this city. In some of these cases, which seemed to be in the last stages and had been given up by practitioners of both schools, the speedy cures which were wrought by this remedy seemed to be little less than miraculous. I am convinced that for Bright's disease in all its stages, including those first symptoms of kidney troubles which are so easily overlooked, but are so fraught with danger, no remedy has been discovered can be held for one moment in comparison with this, and I hope that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure may become as widely known as is the existence of the maladies which it will cure."

Rev. A. C. Kendrick, D. D., LL. D., who is Professor of Hebrew and Greek languages in the University of Rochester, N. Y., and who is one of the American revisers of the New Testament, in speaking of the effect which Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure had upon himself, stated most emphatically that he had received marked benefit from it, and he cordially recommended it to the use of others.

Rev. J. Brindley, pastor of the Arsenal Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Watertown, N. Y., testified in a recent interview, that the first few bottles of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure had entirely removed the distressing features of a severe kidney difficulty, and that while he had not been able to lie upon his back without great pain for more than five years, he was now not only able to do so, but slept soundly, as, scarcely and easily himself as well man.

Rev. A. P. Hill, of Shoebird, N. C., having been troubled with a severe kidney and liver disease for a number of years, said: "I have been praying for relief for four years, and I believe I got it in answer to prayer. May God bless the drug which is Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure." Many of my friends have also used it with marked benefit, and I hope my testimony in its behalf may save the lives and relieve many who are now severely suffering from kidney or liver troubles in some of their many and dangerous forms."

Rev. P. F. Markbee, in writing from Montgomery, Ala., said: "I have paid at least nine thousand dollars for doctors and medicine and never received any relief until I commenced taking Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I am too thankful to express in words the benefit this great medicine has done my family and myself. I have been to the hot springs, sulphur springs and several other places noted for the curative properties of the waters, but this great remedy did for me what everything else failed to do. It cured me. I hope the Good Father may crown the efforts of those who are manufacturing it, for the noble work they are doing."

There are no more reliable endorsements to be found in this land, than those above given and coming from ministers of such prominence they prove beyond a doubt the value of the great remedy of which they speak. It should also be remembered that Mr. H. H. Warner, the proprietor and manufacturer of this remedy, was himself cured by Rosse after having been given up to die by several physicians. So grateful was he for his remarkable cure that he determined the world should know of this remedy, and he therefore, began its manufacture. Mr. Warner is also a prominent patron of other public enterprises and the sciences and by endowing the Warner Astronomical Observatory at Rochester, as well as by his many other public benefactions, has become known to, and respected by the entire land. His standing alone is an ample guarantee of the purity and worth of the remedy he makes, but the thousands of testimonials from all parts of America gratefully telling of the relief it has given, prove it beyond a question. As a result, it is accorded great and universal attention throughout the entire country. No one fact has been more apparent in the past few years, than that kidney and liver troubles are fearfully increasing. When, therefore, a remedy has been found which not only cures the worst as well as all minor troubles of this nature, but also regulates, controls and keeps in perfect order these most important organs at all times, it is certainly cause for gratitude. This is just what has been done in thousands of cases in addition to those above mentioned, and it is what will be done in tens of thousands of other cases in the very near future.

EDUCATIONAL.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Owned, controlled and managed by the Louisiana Annual Conference.

Course of study equal to any college in the South. Its roll of pupils has nearly doubled in three months, and still they come. Noted for healthfulness of locality. All at living rates.

Total expense for Spring term, commencing February 14, 1881, only $75 in literary and classical course. Music $30. No extras. Let Louisianians build up their own schools.

A specimen copy of College News free on application. Address REV. J. LANE BORDEN, President.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. C. Kneeringer, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $50 additional.

Spring session begins February 4, 1881. A discount of twenty per cent. to Methodist preachers, and Publishing House bonds taken from them at par.

Send for catalogue to REV. E. E. HOSS, President.

HAMBURG (ARK.) HIGH SCHOOL,

Thirty Miles North of Bastrop, La.

This Institution, for both sexes, now in its fourth year, has 64 months yet remaining. Its facilities for educating are peculiar, and its charges are moderate. All modern improvements introduced. Faculty full and experienced. The principal boards his teachers and pupils, regarding the latter as his own children.

One hundred and twenty-five dollars will cover all school expenses, except Music.

City inquirers are referred to Judge R. B. Todd, J. M. Bonner and J. M. Lewis, Esqs.; to Rev. Dr. C. W. Carter and Bishop Keener.

January 6, 1881. D. C. B. CONNERLY, Principal.

READVILLA SEMINARY,

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

A home school for girls. Thorough training in all departments. Full corps of efficient Teachers. Expenses moderate. Numbers limited.

For particulars address MRS. MARY W. REED, Principal.

Memphis Conference Female Institute.

JACKSON, TENNESSEE.

REV. A. W. JONES, A. M., D. D., President.

This well known College of the South and West begins its Fall session on the First Monday in September. Opening Sunday and Address Tuesday, September 7, 1880. For thirty-six years there has been an average of more than twelve graduates annually.

The Faculty is full and efficient. The determination is to stand among the foremost in the progress of Science, Language and Art.

For further information apply to the President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin September 29, 1880.

This is a family boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. In structure thorough, in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. H. N. MAGRUDER, Baton Rouge, La.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Opens September 6, 1880. The last session was the most prosperous one since the war. The whole cost of board and tuition need not exceed $143 in the Preparatory Department, nor $164 in College classes for the scholastic year. Send for a Catalogue.

C. G. ANDREWS, President.

East Mississippi Female College,

MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.

REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., PRESIDENT.

A chartered and prosperous Southern school for girls and young ladies. Few schools have grown more steadily and rapidly in public confidence and patronage. Increased in numbers during the past seven years as the following figures show: 83, 92, 86, 94, 96, 97, 143. Compare the last year from Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee and Alabama. The best history, increasing facilities, accessibility and methods of close and thorough instruction assure the friends of a long and prosperous future for the institution. Send for catalogue.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

EAST TENNESSEE.

Founded 1849, and located where

Pure waters flow,
Sleek cattle low,
Cool breezes blow,
Rhe apples grow.

Excellent and tried teachers. Terms very favorable. The Female Department is at SWEETWATER, on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad. The Male Department at HIWASSEE COLLEGE POSTOFFICE, seven miles out in the country. A neat monthly paper, the "Hiwassee College Reporter," at fifty cents a year. Address

J. H. RUDISILL, President.

JEFFERSON COLLEGE,

HIGH SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN.

Six miles from Natchez, Miss. Session begins September 16. Full corps of instructors. Course of study thorough and extensive. Nearly fifty boarders from abroad. Pupils from a distance board with the principal. Entire expense for ten months, $145. For catalogues address the principal,

J. S. RAYMOND, Washington, Adams county, Miss.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.,

Will begin its forty-first session October 4, 1880. Great addition paid to the regular course. Teachers in the Music and Art departments selected with reference to special illness. Charges moderate.

For further information address H. H. MOSS, A. M., President.

HOMER MALE COLLEGE

THE TWENTY-FIRST SESSION

will begin the

FIRST OF SEPTEMBER 1880.

Address R. A. SMITH, President.

MISCELLANEOUS.

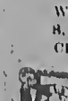
FOR SALE.

A desirable residence in Ocean Springs, Miss. For particulars apply or address the subscriber at that point. A. C. RAMSEY.

Crescent Insurance Co.,

67 & 69 Camp Street,

NEW ORLEANS.



ORGANIZED 1877.—REORGANIZED 1880.

Cash Capital $300,000.

SOLICITS

FIRE, RIVER AND MARINE RISKS.

W. H. EYMAN.....President.
S. B. NEWMAN.....Vice President.
CHAS. E. HICK.....Secretary.

My New Illustrated Price List describing 50 or 100 Gold and Silver Watches will be sent for a 3c stamp. It tells how I send watches to all parts of U. S. to be examined before paying any money. Unlimited references. N. H. White, Jeweler, Newark, N. J.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TEACHERS,

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

in the South-west is now in stock and ready to fill all orders, large or small at Publishers' prices at

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at the latest, and prices guaranteed as low as they can be had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application. Also a general line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER,

SLATED CLOTH,

LIQUID SLATING,

BLACKBOARDS,

BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,

CHALK CRAYONS,

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,

NUMERICAL FRAMES,

SCHOOL SATCHELS,

BOOK STRAPS,

WRITING PAPER,

DRAWING PAPER,

BLOTTING PAPER,

WRITING BOOKS,

COMPOSITION BOOKS,

SLATES AND PENCILS,

INK, INK STANDS, PENS,

PENHOLDERS, CALL BELLS,

Kindergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

Send for anything you want or address for prices.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors, members and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

South-western Agency for

Readers' and Writers' Economy Co.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

LIGHT AND LIFE!

Now look out for a rousing good new

SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOK

with the above title. The compiler, Mr. R. M. McIntosh, is well known to hundreds of thousands as one of the most successful providers of sweet melodies and bright hymns for the great Sunday-School public. Our best writers and composers have contributed. The book has a beautiful title, is well printed, and is every way desirable. Send for specimen pages (free), or specimen copy, which is mailed for the retail price, 35 cents.

Also just published, The Beacon Light, 35 cts. By TENNEY and HOFFMAN. And nearly ready, a new book by ABBEY and MUNGER, making a trio of Sunday-School books that cannot be excelled.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston

C. H. DITSON & CO.,
843 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Christian Advocate.

The Electric Light.

WHAT AN EXPERT HAS TO SAY ABOUT ITS FUTURE.

Standing a few evenings since, looking at the electric lights burning in front of the Continental and Girard, and discussing the future of this great illuminating power, a tall, broad-shouldered young man, apparently not over thirty years of age, joined the reporter. "This is Mr. C. L. Buckingham," said the gentleman with whom he was conversing, "the electric expert of the Western Union Telegraph Company. He used to be an examiner in the patent office, and reported for patents nearly all the different electric lights which have attracted attention and became useful for illuminating purposes."

"What is the future of the electric light? Can it ever be controlled so as to be available for illuminating private residences and for other purposes where light is to be regulated?" was asked.

"That is a question yet to be settled. My opinion is that it may. It will take time, however, and careful manipulation to bring it to that point. Money and patience, I think, will accomplish it. The necessary talent is already at work on the problem."

"How many kinds of electric light are there?"

"Only two, primarily. The broad principle of producing light by electricity is by no means new. It was patented thirty years ago in England. The present patents are not granted on the broad claim of producing light by electricity, but of utilizing the light produced. The Brush and the Edison lights represent the two different kinds. The first produces and regulates its light by passing the current of electricity through two carbon pencils, placed at equal distances from each other, and the sparks jumping from one to the other produce the light. These pencils are fed toward each other automatically by the current of electricity which passes through the carbon pencils. The flicker you sometimes see is caused by the uneven feeding of the pencils."

"How long will these pencils burn?"

"Each pair of pencils will last from eight to eleven hours, but they have a second pair so arranged as to automatically drop into places after the first ones burn out and thus keep the current up so that continuous light may be obtained for nearly, if not quite, twenty-two hours steadily."

"Are all electric lights based upon this principle?"

"No, the Edison light is produced by passing currents of electricity over some substance having a high electric resistance. This may be the carbonized paper, wood, or fibre of some description. The operation of these currents of electricity upon these substances resisting the electric currents produces the incandescence. There is, however, what might be called a mongrel light; it, as a light, is perhaps the finest of all, but it is too expensive to be practical. That is the Jablochkoff light. It is constructed by passing the two carbon pencils through two candles composed of vitriolized matter. The currents of electricity are passed through these into a horseshoe, and as the points of the carbon pencils burn away they bent this vitriolized matter to incandescence, and therefore a steady and powerful light results from the union of the two. It is the invention of a Russian."

"These three cover, I understand, the foundation principle of all the other kinds of electric light?"

"Yes, sir; the first two really do. The other patents are simply as to the mechanism by which the light produced by those principles shall be controlled and utilized. Many electricians are experimenting upon the mechanism in the hope of being the one to reach and perfect such points as will make the light a practical success."

"Who is most likely to succeed?"

"The man who is backed by the most money. It not only takes time and talent, but money to perfect such a great discovery as this. There are a thousand little points to be experimented upon and improved, all of which consume time and require means. The two men dealing with the electric light for general illuminating purposes are Edison and Maxim, who represent the United States Electric Light Company. He is backed by plenty of means as we all know Edison is and deserves to be. I speak of these two men because they are the most prominent figures engaged in the work. There are, of course, others. Mr. Edison and Mr. Maxim, while proceeding upon the same principle, diverge very seriously in some of their positions.

"Mr. Edison produces his light in a vacuum—that is, a glass globe, with the air forced out. Maxim insists that the air will work in and injure Mr. Edison's light; he therefore fills his glass globes with gasoline. Other experts attack other points of Mr. Edison's mechanism and methods, and from out of all the experiments something practical will undoubtedly be obtained. My impression is that Mr. Edison's experience, position and backing give him the fairest chances of success of any man now searching for the vital principle of producing light to take the place of gas."

"I thought Edison's light was already a success?"

"Experimentally it is. He can take you into a house or room and show you it lighted by his methods, but that does not settle the question of its practicability. Before it is a practical success it must be demonstrated that this light can be burned for an indefinite period without the danger of going out and many, many other things which are yet only experimentally successful, and even that in a limited degree. 'You have no idea,' he continued, 'how many important points are to be covered in making practical such a great invention as this.' Why, the quadruplex telegraph, one of Mr. Edison's great inventions, has been many years in being perfected, and cost the Western Union Telegraph Company a vast amount of money. When it was purchased from him there were, perhaps, a hundred experts set to work upon the quadruplex telegraph, whose positions in the company and whose promotion depended upon their success in manipulating it and remedying its defects. It has taken six years or more to perfect this instrument so that we can send four messages each way upon the same wire. Money, time and skill have perfected this invention. No doubt the same elements will make the electric light a success; but the public must not expect too much at once. Very much has been already accomplished."

"Has the economy of the electric light been fully established?"

"I hardly think so. I do not, however, know from any personal knowledge. Of course it is a much superior light to gas, but economy is a greater consideration even than effect.

"Is there any question as to its economy when perfected?"

"I should hardly think so, for the construction of dynamo-electric machines is becoming more perfect, and the best ever invented, the modern Siemans, an English machine, is now common property, its patent privileges having lapsed in this country so that it can be had for the cost of construction."

"Are these dynamo-electric machines used for all kinds of electric work?"

"They are being rapidly introduced for that purpose. The old system of batteries is fast giving way to these new machines. Without them the production of light by electricity would be out of the question. Batteries are too expensive and too uncertain to rely upon for such services. You may imagine the difference," continued Mr. Buckingham, "between these machine, and the old batteries when I tell you that in New York one entire floor of the great Western Union building was devoted to batteries, with capacity of only 10,000 cells. We have recently put in a few dynamo-electric machines, which occupy a space of less than twenty feet square and give the power of 150,000 cells. Besides, the currents produced by these machines are more steady and reliable than those given by the old batteries, which were always apt to be weak and unsatisfactory in wet weather. The currents produced by the dynamo machines are regular and unaffected by the weather. We are doing all our work with them in the New York office, and, besides being more satisfactory, they give us the same power at one-quarter the cost of the old batteries, which are difficult to manage."

"Are four messages each way the most that can be sent over a single wire now?"

"Yes, with anything like practical certainty. Gray claims to be able to send a greater number over his vibrating system, and this may eventually be successful. It consists in having a series of vibrators, which when operated upon at one end of the line, respond upon the vibrators at the other end. If this can be made successful the capacity of a single wire may be largely increased over that now possible with the quadruplex."

Fabulous Fungi.

A gentleman who recently had occasion to explore the chambers, drifts and caverns of the old, deserted, Ophir and Mexican mines, says fungi of every imaginable kind have taken possession of the old levels. In these old mines, undisturbed for years, is found a fungus world in which are to be seen counterfeits of almost everything seen in our daylight world, owing to the warmth of the old levels and to the presence in them of a certain amount of moisture, the timbers have been made to grow some curious crops. Some of the fungi in the old chambers are several feet in height, and being snow-white, resemble shocted ghosts. In places are what at a little distance appears to be white owls, and there are representations of goats with long beards, all as though carved in the purest marble. The rank fungus growth has almost closed some of the drifts. The fungi are of almost every imaginable variety of growth. Some kinds hang from the timbers like great bunches of snow-white fruits and others are great pulpy masses. These last generally rise from the rock, forming the floor of the drifts and seem to have grown from something dropped or spilled on the ground at the time work was in progress in these mines years ago. These growths have in several places raised from the ground rocks weighing from ten to fifty and even one hundred pounds. Some of the rocks have thus been lifted over three feet from the ground. In the higher levels, where the air is comparatively dry, the fungi are less massive in structure than below, and are firmer in texture. Some resemble ram's horns, as they grow unspiral or twisted shape, while others, four or five feet in length, and about the thickness of a broom handle, hang from the cap timbers like so many snakes suspended by their tails. One kind, after sending out a stem of the thickness of a pencil to the length of a foot or two, appears to blossom, at least, produces at the end a bulbous mass that has some resemblance to a flower. In all the infinite variety of these underground fungi it is somewhat strange that none was seen at all like those growing in the light of day. Nothing in the nature of toadstools or mushrooms was found. Virginia City (Nevada) Enterprise.

LEARNING TO COOK.—A judicious mother will so manage her daughters that even at the early age of thirteen they can, in an emergency, prepare "a meal of victuals." A thorough domestic training is very useful to a girl. At school, she always has a teacher or a fellow pupil at hand to help her over hard places, but if she is set to make a batch of bread herself and attends to it from the time the sponge is set until the loaves are taken, sweet, fragrant, golden brown, from the oven, she learns meantime chemistry, calorie, perseverance, delicate manipulation, self-reliance, neatness and acquires skill and the habit of carrying her work in her mind, as one act of neglect or forgetfulness at any point of the process may spoil the whole. Because some unwise mothers do not see in the stated and skillful performance by their daughters of household services a certain and valuable culture which cannot be acquired at school, they are willing to do themselves what in justice and kindness to their daughters they should require of them. Girls, left to their own devices, waste a great deal of time which might be utilized to their advantage. A girl who can climb trees, who can dance hours without fatigue, or jump rope (a very dangerous pastime, by the way), who can take long walks, who can skate, and row can also sweep, and scrub, and make bread, and wash, and iron, if she is encouraged to do so. These are the accomplishments she must possess in order to make a happy home, though she may have half a dozen servants at her call. Those who have sufficient curiosity to investigate this subject will find that many of the famous women in literature and art were as skillful in those accomplishments considered specially as they were with the pen or pencil or chisel. In training girls to be useful and ready to meet any emergency, mothers confer upon them an inestimable blessing.—Selected.

—A credit of 8,000,000 francs has been voted by the Chamber at Paris for the line of Medine a Bafoulabe. It has also approved the grant made to a company for a railroad from St. Louis to Dakar, and voted a credit of 1,700,000 francs for laying a cable between Dakar and St. Vincent. This last line will place Senegal in direct communication with Europe.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—THE MILD POWER CURES.—
HUMPHREYS' HOMŒOPATHIC SPECIFICS.

In use 30 years.—Each number the special prescription of an eminent physician.—The only Simple, Safe and Sure Medicines for the people.

LIST PRINCIPAL NOS.	CURES.	PRICE.
1.	Fevers, Congestion, Inflamations,	.50
2.	Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	.50
3.	Crying Colic, or Teething of infants	.50
4.	Diarrhea of Children or Adults,	.50
5.	Dysentary, Griping, Bilious Colic,	.50
6.	Cholera Morbus, Vomiting,	.50
7.	Coughs, Cold, Bronchitis,	.50
8.	Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache,	.50
9.	Headaches, Sick Headaches, Vertigo	.50
10.	Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach,	.50
11.	Suppressed or Painful Periods,	.50
12.	Whites, too Profuse Periods,	.50
13.	Croup, Cough, Difficult Breathing,	.50
14.	Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Eruptions,	.50
15.	Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains,	.50
16.	Fever and Ague, Chill, Fever, Agues	.50
17.	Piles, Blind or Bleeding,	.50
19.	Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	.50
20.	Whooping Cough violent coughs,	.50
24.	General Debility, Physical Weakness,	.50
27.	Kidney Disease,	.50
28.	Nervous Debility,	1.00
30.	Urinary Weakness, Wetting the bed	.50
32.	Disease of the Heart, Palpitation,	1.00

Sold by druggists, or sent by the Case, or single Vial, free of charge, on receipt of price. Send for Dr. Humphreys' Book on Disease &c. (144 pages), also Illustrated Catalogue FREE. Address, Humphreys' Homeopathic Medicine Co., 109 Fulton Street, New York.

JOS. B. WOLFE & CO.,
Cotton Factors,
59 Carondelet, Street, New Orleans,
And General Agents for
DANIEL PRATT IMPROVED
"Revolving Head Cotton Gin,"
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.
—AND—
Eclipse Hulling Cotton Gin,
WITH REVOLVING HEAD.
PRICES REDUCED.

THE REVOLVING HEAD GIN has been in use for the past eight seasons, and several improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint from the same quantity of seed cotton than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while economising steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton, on this account, of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 100 bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

SELF-FEEDERS and CONDENSERS with latest improvements also made by the Daniel Pratt Gin Company to work with these Gins. Send for descriptive circulars. JOS. B. WOLFE & CO., New Orleans, La.

SULLIVAN & BULGER,
97 CAMP STREET,
Plumbers and Gas Fitters,
DEALERS IN
Pumps and Gas Fixtures of all kinds, Iron, Lead and Terracotta Pipes, Bath Tubs, Sheet Lead and Cooking Ranges; also, different kinds of Gas Machines, for country use.
All Orders Promptly Attended to.

H. DUDLEY COLEMAN & BRO.
No. 12 Union St. New Orleans La.
DEALERS IN
MACHINERY
SEND FOR CIRCULARS. COMPARE OUR PRICES
MILL STONES, IRONS & PORTABLE STEAM ENGINES.
MAKE FLOUR, CORN, SAW, MILLS AND COTTON PRESSES

1000 AGENTS WANTED!
One in each town and neighborhood in Mississippi and Louisiana, to sell
Dr. Dutton's Vegetable Discovery.
It is sold only by certified agents.
It is the best BLOOD AND LIVER Medicine we ever used. Write for terms. It will pay you.
J. L. FUTRELL, General Agent, Jonesboro, Miss.

BEWARE OF FRAUD.
To protect the public against imitator and fraud, we specially caution all purchasers of BENSON'S
CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER
to see that the word CAPCINE on the label of each plaster is correctly spelled.
BEWARE of worthless plasters offered under similar sounding names.
Remember the only object the dealer can have is that he makes a smaller but larger profit on the spurious article.
SEABURY & JOHNSON

E. HEATH,
IMPORTER AND DEALER IN
Carpets, Floor Oil Cloths,
UPHOLSTERY GOODS, Wall Paper, Window-Shades, Cornices, Lace and Nottingham Curtains, Mirrors, Moldings, Chromos, Engravings, etc.
Frames made to order—a specialty.
No. 99 Camp street, New Orleans.

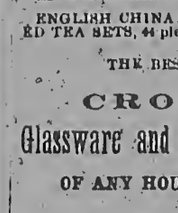
All Farmers, Mothers, Business Men, pleachers and nervous ladies, who are tired out by constant toil and worry, and all who are miserable with Dyspepsia, Rheumatism; Neuralgia, Sleeplessness, or with Bowel, Kidney or Liver Complaints, you can be invigorated and cured by using
PARKER'S GINGER TONIC
If you are wasting away with Consumption, Female Weakness, age, dissipation or any sickness; if you have pimples, and your blood needs purifying you will find PARKER'S GINGER TONIC the best Health & Strength Restorer you can use, and far superior to Bitters, and other Tonics, as it builds up the system, but never intoxicates. It Has Saved Hundreds of Lives; and May Save Yours.
Buy a 50 ct. bottle and be sure the signature of Hiscox & Co., N. Y., is on outside wrapper.
PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM Restores Dandruff. Elegantly Perfumed. Restores Color. Prevents Baldness.

MISCELLANEOUS.

25,000 SOLD!
FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S
—MANUAL—
Edited by GEO. E. WARING, JR.,
Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health;" and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.
600 Octavo Pages—Over 200 Illustrations.
Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer
$25 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assured analysis and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, in Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $3 50.
Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address
G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.



NEW YORK SHOPPING
Of every description for ladies and gentlemen. Household articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address
Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,
P. O. Box, 598, New York.

FURNITURE
JOHN BOIS,
DEALER IN
Parlor, Bed and Dining Room
FURNITURE.
291 Camp St., cor. Calliope, New Orleans.
Repairing, Upholstering, Varnishing, etc., promptly done. Country orders promptly attended to. Spring, Hair and Moss Mattresses made to order. A full line of common Furniture on hand; suitable for the country.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at
JOHN GAUCHE'S
MAMMOTH
QUEENSWARE HOUSE.
We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI-PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 100 pieces, for $12.
ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 134 pieces, $10.
REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 134 pieces, $17.
ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3.50.
ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.
ENGLISH CHINA GOLD BAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5 50.
THE BEST SELECTION OF
CROCKERY
Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods
OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.
The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.
REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS
JOHN GAUCHE,
AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,
109, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street.
Branch House, Nos. 108 and 110 Chartres Street.

JOSEPHUS'
COMPLETE
WORKS.
Comprising the History and Antiquities of the Jews, with the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and dissertations concerning Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, James the Just, and the Sacrifice of Isaac, together with a discourse on Hades, or Hell, with his autobiography, translated by William Whiston, A. M., to which is added an analytical index to the entire work.
This large octavo work of 788 pages, bound in cloth, $2 00, or in full leather binding, $2 50; mailed postpaid on receipt of price.
G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.
SIZES AND PRICES.

Diam. of Bell.	Wt. with yoke & frame	Cost of Bell & Hang's.
No. 6,	250 lbs.	$ 25 00
No. 6½,	270 lbs.	35 00
No. 7,	360 lbs.	50 00
No. 8,	540 lbs.	75 00
No. 9,	925 lbs.	130 00

RUMSEY & CO.,
Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A.

WATCHES.
LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upward.
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $45 and upward
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $15 and upward
BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward
All guaranteed.
A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.,
Cor. Canal and Royal Sts.

YOUNG MEN'S
Christian Association,
OF NEW ORLEANS.
ROOMS, 87 CAMP STREET,
Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M., except Sunday, and on Sundays from 2 to 6 P. M., where may be found the leading daily and weekly papers of the most important cities of the United States.
SERVICES.
Tuesday, 7.30 P. M.—Devotional.
Thursday, 7.30 P. M.—Singing Class.
NOON-DAY PRAYER-MEETING.
Daily, 11 to 12.30.
Rule.—Prayers and Remarks are limited to three minutes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street, - - - 15 Bourbon Street.
Our Stock of Spring Goods is now complete, consisting of the latest novelties in Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales.
HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.
SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE.
D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street, New Orleans.

WHEELER & PIERSON,
(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Hewes.)
CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,
Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.
Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40. | Business Suits, $12 to $25
6 Shirts for $9 | Collars, $1.50 per Dozen.
Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.
Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.
Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department up stairs.

THE NEW DICTIONARY HOLDER.
These holders are so arranged that they press the book firmly together when it is closed; in short the Dictionary Holder is perfected in form, finish and operation, and will be found one of the most elegant and desirable articles for schools, literary or professional reference and library use. Every one who uses a dictionary should have one of these patent holders, and have the unwieldy Unabridged ready for reference. Place the dictionary in the holder and keep it there. There is no more occasion to take it out of the holder, than out of its binding. Children and grown people refer to a dictionary if mounted in one of these holders and the book does not become racked, soiled and spoiled. You have but to open the book until it remains open; close it and it remains closed. If placed by your side when reading, or writing, the task of looking up words is not deferred and then forgotten, but done instantly and easily. The holder is high enough if you stand, low enough if you sit, and has received unlimited praise from clergymen and teachers, and all others who have used it. The Unabridged Dictionary, either of Worcester or Webster, fits in them exactly.
Price finished in hard jet black Japan, $2 00
" white, or nickle wash 3 00
Address G. T. LATHROP, Agent for the Southwest, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

CATARRH Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects—corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, nasal deformities, and finally consumption. From first to last it is ever aggressive. Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. If neglected while a cure is possible, it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, successful and pleasant treatment is

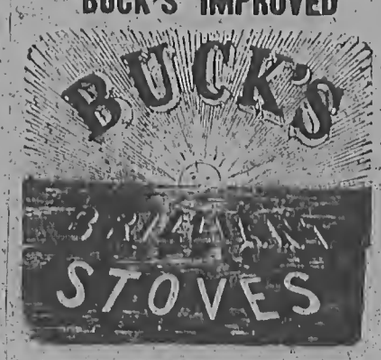
Dr. M. W. CASE'S CARBOLATE of TAR INHALANT
It does not require ten minutes to demonstrate the value of Carbolate of Tar, the most beneficial vapor medical agent known to science. Balsams and Cordials of the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with Pine Tree Tar that the mere breathing converts them into a dense smoke or vapor. This is inhaled—taken right to the diseased parts. No Quack Nostrum, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. This treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by thousands, who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, Bronchitis & Deafness.
FULL TREATMENT —Circulars, etc., Sent Free— Sent. Satisfaction Always Guaranteed. Address, DR. M. W. CASE, 933 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

H-O-W T-O P-A-I-N-T.
A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of Tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain common-sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results to plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes
Every Man His Own Painter.
Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, glue, pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—
Paint for Out-Buildings,
—Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut staining, decalcomanie, making rustic pictures, painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture waxing furniture, cleaning paint—
Paint for Farming Tools,
and for machinery, and household fixtures.
To Paint a Farm Wagon,
to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.
The work is neatly printed, with illustrations wherever they can serve to make the subject plainer, and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.
Price by mail, post paid, $1.
G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

Good News! Good News!
Mammoth Furniture House
OF
McCRACKEN & BREWSTER,
33 & 35 Royal Street,
Now have the largest stock of Fine and Medium Chamber Sets, Ebony Gilt and Walnut Parlor Sets, Dining-Room and Hall Furniture to be found in the South. Also a large and various stock of cheap and durable Furniture suitable for the country trade.
THONET BROS., VIENNA,
BENT WOOD FURNITURE
Our motto—small profits and quick returns.
McCRACKEN & BREWSTER.

J. H. KELLER,
MANUFACTURER OF
CARBOLIC,

Office, 110 GRAVIER ST. ESTABLISHED 1866
All Kinds of Laundry and Toilet Soaps.
Send for Circular.



AGENTS WANTED, to sell DR. CHASE'S 2000 RECIPE BOOK. Sells at Sight. You double your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

MENEELYS' BELLS.
For Churches, etc., known to the public since 1826, are made only at "THE MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY," West Troy, N. Y. Catalogues free.

UNITED STATES
Four Per Cent. Bonds
BOUGHT AND SOLD BY
New Orleans National Bank,
38 CAMP STREET.

NEW REVISED EDITION.
EVERYBODY'S LAWYER
AND
BOOK OF FORMS.
A complete guide in all law and business transactions and negotiations
FOR EVERY STATE IN THE UNION.
Containing plain and simple instructions for transacting business of every description, and legal forms for drawing all necessary papers in accordance with the laws of the several States regulating the Civil and Commercial Relations of Every-day Life,
together with the Constitution of the United States and Amendments, with much useful information concerning the General Government and the various State Governments, the Copyright Law, Post Office Regulations, Patent and Pension Laws, etc., etc., thoroughly revised to date, by
G. C. FEATHERSTONHAUGH, Counsellor at Law.
Strongly bound in cloth, with leather back, containing 702 pages. Mailed post paid on receipt of $2.
G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

BUCK'S IMPROVED

BRILLIANT STOVE
Is acknowledged to be the
Best Cook-Stove Made.
SOLD BY
H. HALLER,
NEW ORLEANS.
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF
Cooking and Heating Stoves of the most improved makes, Stamped, Plain and Japanned Tin-ware, Tinned and Enameled Hollow-ware, Iron and Clay Furnaces, Tinner's Stock, Granite Iron-ware, Lamp burner, and Wick to suit, Tinned Iron Spoons Forks, Coffee Mills of all kinds, Plantished-ware, Irons, Fire-Grates, Fluting Machines, etc.
H. HALLER,
No. 56 Camp St., New Orleans.
Price lists mailed on application.

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
EPPS'-COCOA.
BREAKFAST.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette
Made simply with boiling water or milk.
Sold only in tins (½ lb and lb) labelled
JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists,
London, England.
Also makers of Epps' Chocolate Essence for afternoons

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, May 30, 1881.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Last.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	6¾	6¾
Ordinary	7¾	7¾
Good ordinary	8¼	8¼
Low middling	9⅛	9⅛
Middling	10⅛	10⅛
Good middling	11⅛	11⅛
Middling fair	11⅞	11⅞
Sales to-day	2,056 bales.
Receipts since our last	2,328 bales.
Receipts previously	1,000,661 bales.
Sugar, ₱ lb.
Fair	—	7
Fully fair	7⅛	7⅜
Prime	7⅝	8
Choice	—	8⅜
Yellow clarified	—	9⅛
White clarified	9¾	9¾
Powdered	—	—
Crushed	—	—
Molasses, in bbls, ₱ gallon:
Common	21	25
Fair	27	30
Prime	36	40
Choice	—	—
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common	3¾	3¾
Fair	4⅛	4⅛
Prime	4¾	5¼
Choice	—	—

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western	7	26
New York	12	19
Coffee, ₱ lb.:
Rio, ordinary	9¾	9
Rio, fair	10¾	11
Rio, prime	12	12¼
Cheese, ₱ lb.:
Western factory	—	—
English dairy	—	—
Candles, ₱ lb:
Best brands	11	12
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl:
Choice K. D.	3 50	3 75
Flour:
Superf	3 00	—
XX	3 75	4 00
XXX	4 50	4 75
Choice	—	—
Choice family	—	—
Fish:
Mackerel, No. 1, in bbls	—	6 75
Half bbls	—	3 75
Kits	—	75
Mackerel, No. 2, in bbls	—	5 75
Half bbls	—	3 15
Kits	—	70
Mackerel, No. 3, in bbls	5 00	5 75
Half bbls	—	2 80
Kits	60	—
Codfish, ₱ lb	—	4½
Herring, ₱ box	25	25
Oils, ₱ gallon:
Cook, in cases	—	—
Cook, in bbls	—	—
Linseed, raw	57	59
Linseed, boiled	64	66
Cotton seed	30	60
Lard	80	85
Soap, ₱ box:
Magnolia	—	2 10
Olive	—	2 50
Palm	—	—
Castile	—	2 75
Soda, ₱ lb	—	—
Starch, ₱ lb	—	3
Salt, ₱ sack:
Coarse	1 00	1 02½
Fine	1 37½	1 40

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow	59	60
White	57	58
Mixed	57	59
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western	47	47½
Red rust-proof	—	—
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs	—	—
Choice	—	70
Hay, ₱ ton:
Prime	21 00	22 00
Choice	23 00	24 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel:
Mixed	2 45	2 50
Clay	—	2 00

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb:
Breakfast	10½	11½
Shoulders	—	7½
Sides, clear rib	—	9¾
Sides, clear	—	10
Hams, sugar-cured	12½	12½
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl	16 50	17 00
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb:
Clear rib sides	—	—
Clear sides	—	—
Shoulders	6¼	6¼
Lard, ₱ lb:
Choice, in keg	12	12½
Choice, in prints	—	13½
ESCULENTS.
Potatoes, ₱ bbl
Irish	2 50	4 00
Sweet	—	—
Onions, ₱ bbl	5 00	5 50
Apples, ₱ bbl	—	—
Cabbages, ₱ lb	—	—
Sour Kraut, ₱ bbl	14 00	16 00

BAGGING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard
India	—	—
Jute	—	—
Baling Twine, ₱ lb	—	17
Ties, ₱ lb:
Wire and Buckles	—	1 65

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ dozen:
Grown chickens	5 00	5 00
Young do	4 50	5 00
Ducks	3 50	4 00
Geese	4 00	5 00
Turkeys	12 00	14 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen:
Western	—	10
Southern	11	12
Honey:
Strained, ₱ gallon	—	—
Comb, ₱ lb	—	—
Pecans, ₱ lb
Louisiana	—	—
Texas	8	9
Oranges:
Louisiana, ₱ bbl	—	—
Foreign, ₱ box	4 00	5 25
Wool, ₱ lb:
Louisiana	30	32
Texas	—	—
Feathers, ₱ lb
Geese	—	—
Hides, ₱ lb
Country green	5	6
Dry salted	10	10½
Dry flint	8	9
Ox Horns, each	—	—
Tallow, ₱ lb	4	4½
Cotton Seed:
In sacks	—	—
Meal	—	—
Oil cake	—	—
Cooperage
Sugar hogsheads	1 00	1 05
Molasses do	1 40	1 45
Half barrels	1 20	1 25
Kegs	—	—
Oak Staves, per M:
Kegs	—	—
Barrels	—	—
Extra barrel	—	100 00
Extra hogshead	—	100 00
Extra pipes	—	100 00
Tobacco:
Low lugs	—	4½
Medium	—	5
Good to fine	—	—
Low leaf	5½	6
Medium	6	6½
Good	7	8
Fine	8	9
Selections	12	17

The work of the Rev. W. F. Davis, of Mackinaw City, on the peninsula of northern Michigan, continues as high as 40,000 has been very successful the past winter. Mr. Davis goes from camp to camp preaching and praying, as opportunity offers, and distributing reading matter. An effort is soon to be made to put this work on a substantial basis.—Zion's Herald.

There is More Strength

restoring power in a 50-cent bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic than in a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body. See other column.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MEMPHIS, May 25.—The Mississippi Valley Cotton Planters' Association met in regular annual session this afternoon at the grounds of the Shelby County Fair Association. There was a large attendance of delegates from all the cotton States.

STAUNTON, Va., May 26.—At the session of the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church, South, to-day, Dr. Mullaty, of Lexington, Va., presented a formal protest to the action of the assembly in sending a fraternal greeting to the Northern assembly. They should have taken the initiative inasmuch as that body had wronged the Southern church, and that wrong was as yet unatoned for.

Another of the reasons given was that the signers opposed any tendency to surrender the distinctive independence of the Southern church. The protest was signed by Drs. Mullaty, Patterson and Fletch, D. L. Young, and George White, and was admitted to record. The moderator appointed a committee to prepare a reply.

MEMPHIS, May 26.—The Mississippi Valley Cotton Planters' Association met at noon to-day in the Greenlaw Opera House, to hear the report of the committee appointed at yesterday's session. The committee on permanent organization reported the following officers for the ensuing year, which was adopted:

President, F. C. Morehead, of Mississippi; vice presidents, H. R. Lucas, of Louisiana, S. R. Cockerill, of Arkansas, Enoch Ensley, of Tennessee, W. K. Ingersoll, of Mississippi, Thomas B. Taylor, of Alabama, H. A. Corley, of Florida, W. C. Walsh, of Texas, M. McGehee, of North Carolina, A. P. Butler, of South Carolina; secretary, J. H. D. Bowman, of Mississippi; treasurer, G. M. Klein, of Mississippi. The name of the association is changed to the National Cotton Planters' Association of America, and under charter is authorized to issue stock to the extent of one hundred thousand dollars.

Atlanta, Georgia, was selected as the next place of meeting during the session of the cotton exposition next November.

STAUNTON, Va., May 28.—After dispatching a number of minor reports the Presbyterian General Assembly adjourned, to meet in Atlanta, Ga., next spring.

GALVESTON, May 29.—A special from San Antonio to the News, says: Some weeks ago Lieutenant Bullis, with some Seminole scouts, crossed into Mexico in pursuit of the bands of Lipans who murdered the McLairin family.

The Mexican consul at Eagle Pass has written a letter, asking by what authority United States troops had invaded the soil of Mexico, and protesting against such invasion in the future. The letter has been referred to the headquarters of the army at Washington. Gen. E. Stanley, commanding the district of Nueces, declares his intention of following all marauding parties into Mexico who seek refuge there. It is not known what the result of the consul's protest will be.

FOREIGN.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 24.—The greater part of Pinsk, in the government of Minsk, was burned yesterday. Great distress prevails among the inhabitants, who number 18,000. The losses are enormous.

HAVANA, May 24.—There are very few cases of yellow fever, considering the season. Physicians explain the fact by the prevalence of typhoid fever, which is epidemic now, and first attacks persons predisposed to yellow fever.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 24.—The chamber of deputies have passed an amendment to the constitution, making only native Mexicans eligible to either house of congress. The prospects are that the Grant's and Earl's bill will pass the senate to-day. Congress yesterday gave the president full powers to contract with States and private parties for the construction of railways for eight months.

LONDON, Ont., May 24.—This evening, at 6 o'clock, the steamer Victoria, with over six hundred excursionists on board, was returning from Springbank, and when near Cove Railway Bridge, one mile below the city, the boat suddenly collapsed like an egg-shell and became a total wreck, level with the water's edge.

All the passengers were instantly plunged into the stream, more than one-half of them being underneath the debris.

The first news of the disaster which reached the city was brought by survivors, who struggled through the streets wet and weary.

The news fell like a thunderbolt and a stampede took place for the spot; on arriving there a horrible sight met their view. Fifty or sixty ladies had already been recovered and were lying on the bank.

LONDON, Ont., May 25.—Up to the present time, 1:30 P. M., two hundred and thirty-eight bodies have been recovered. It is believed that there are seventy-six beneath the wreck.

CITY OF MEXICO, May 25.—Eads's contract was approved by both Houses of Congress to-day. A grand banquet will be given to Capt. Eads by his friends.

Several Mexicans were killed on the National Railway on Saturday by other Mexicans. Work was not interrupted.

Gen. Grant's contract will probably be finally approved to-day.

LONDON, May 30. A dispatch from Durban says: The feeling of loyalists throughout Transvaal is very disturbed. There are numerous reports of Boer outrages since peace was established. It is reported that the Boers attacked a body of natives and murdered ten of the number because they were loyal to the queen and working for the English. The Swazies, Zuzulus and Transvaal natives express determination to fight the Boers if they are left in complete possession of the country.

Southern Presbyterian General Assembly.

STAUNTON, Va., May 24.—At the missionary meeting held last night, Dr. Price, chairman of the committee on foreign missions, presented his report. The receipts for the year have been $50,000, an increase of $10,000 since last year. The general work of the missionary service have been satisfactory, and its condition is promising. The principal recommendations of the committee were an adherence to the present constitution of foreign missions and the establishment of a mission in Africa, a field now occupied by the Presbyterian Church.

Eloquent addresses on the subject of foreign missions were delivered by Drs. Wilson, Palmer and Hoyt. In the assembly to-day the report of the theological seminary at Columbia, South Carolina, was read. The finances of the institution are in comparatively prosperous condition, over $30,000 has been contributed for an endowment. Dr. Giradeau will retain his position as professor in the seminary and Dr. Palmer, of New Orleans, has been elected to the professorship of pastoral theology. The committee on theological seminaries recommended closer study of the English bible by students and more rigid examination of candidates for the ministry.

Rev. J. A. Quarles, of Missouri, continued the debate on reforms, making an able argument in favor of the proposed change.

Dr. Phillips Schaff, of Union Seminary, New York, member of the committee on revision of the Bible, delivered an intelligent address on the revised New Testament. He explained the changes made in the text by revision, and said that the committee now at work on the Old Testament will not complete its labors for three or four years.

Mississippi Calls for Prohibition.

Col. Dennett, writing in the New Orleans Picayune, says:

To Col. W. L. Nugent, of Jackson, Miss., a public spirited lawyer and a Christian gentleman, belongs the honor of inaugurating the prohibition movement in Mississippi. Col. Nugent is not a politician, and has no politician aspirations whatever. He insists that this movement shall be kept as clear of party politics as possible. The friends of the measure would be delighted to see every Democrat, and every Republican and Greenbacker in the State vote for this measure. All may do it, and each vote for his own party candidates with the strictest fidelity to party obligations.

The committee appointed by the meeting of the 20th of April, met at Jackson, on the 13th of May, and called a convention of the friends of prohibition to meet in Jackson on the 20th of July, to make a declaration of principles, and to organize so that the friends of order, law, prosperity, peace and religion may unite and commence the work in every county and town in the State, all working harmoniously for the suppression of the great curse that withers and crushes the best interests of Mississippi. The great enemy of agriculture, of the Christian religion, of the young men of the State, and too many old men is the grog-shop, the bar-room, the saloon, with its hydra heads and a hundred names. It is the great enemy of States and nations. Like its great prototype, the father of sin, it seeks to demoralize and ruin mankind. The bar-room must be abolished, and the whole trade in intoxicating liquors in the State also, if the whisky shops can not be separated from other branches of the traffic.

Men of all political parties, and of all colors, are invited to meet and take part in the convention of the 20th of July. That convention will probably recommend that blank petitions be circulated in all the counties of Mississippi, to be signed by persons of all parties and of both sexes, men and women and young people, calling upon the Legislature to pass an act allowing the people of the State to vote on a constitutional amendment for or against prohibition. This is not a temperance movement, it is prohibition, constitutional prohibition that is called for as the only remedy for this monstrous evil. We hope to see those petitions signed by thousands of drinking men, and drunkards who have suffered so much by the influence of these establishments which the true friends of the State desire to destroy. No class of people has so much cause to desire the success of this measure as the drunkard, except the wives and families of drunkards. In this warfare there are those in the State that have seen such iniquities, and abominations, and curses proceeding from gorg-shops, that they would almost be willing to raise the black flag and never cease fighting until the hideous monster, the bar-room, is driven from the State. The bar-room is the father of drunkards and the cause of most of the poverty and crime that afflict the State.

Church Statistics—1880.

Some people see poetry and music in figures; to others they are intolerably dry, yet are they highly important—being the basis of all successful business involving numbers. The statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church are very complete and exact. Its system teaches and requires method and thoroughness. Its tabular exhibits include a large number and variety of items—thus giving in detail and in large aggregates what Methodism is doing through the entire field of its operations. Hence they are of value if one desires to know with exactness the progress or retrogression of Methodism so far as this can be shown by figures. The statistics for 1880 are, on the whole, encouraging. They denote a slow but regular advance in nearly all lines.

MINISTERS AND MEMBERS.

Including supernumeraries 752, and superannuates 1,314, there are 12,096 traveling ministers, an increase of 469, or four per cent. over the aggregate of 1879. Of members and probationers there are 1,742,922, an increase of 2,620, or two and a half per cent. It will be seen that the ministerial increase is one and a half per cent. greater than that in the lay membership. Deducting non-effective ministers from the reckoning and also those effective ministers who are in other than pastoral work, we have the following results:

Non-effective—
Supernumeraries and superannuates		2,056
Effective, but not pastors—
Professors and principals of schools	144
Presidents of colleges	56
Agents in various fields	70
Chaplains	31
Editors	29
Book agents	12
Secretaries	12
		515
Presiding elders		436
Total		2,947

This leaves 10,249 pastors, or one pastor to every 170 members and to every 17 probationers; and it also gives a little less than two churches to each pastor. There are enough non-effective ministers to make 15 annual Conferences. Of effective ministers filling other than pastoral positions, there are sufficient for two whole Conferences. The presiding elders we classify, of course, as ex-pastors with the preachers in charge. About 90 ministers are now located each year, and 42 discontinued, enough in number for a fair annual Conference. The number who withdraw each year averages now about 44. Of most of these, it may be said they go out from us "because they are not of us." It is creditable to them to withdraw if they are not in accord with the church, and it is healthful for the church to be rid of non-assimilating material. Fifteen have been expelled, or one in 800. This speaks well for the purity of morals prevailing in the body. It is a higher average, numerically, of integrity than that which obtained in the apostolic college. There is quite a difference between one in 12 and one in 806. One hundred and forty-three ministers have, during the last year, been transferred from the itinerant ranks to their home above, to join those "who have obtained the prize." However faring or wherever stationed before, these "crowned victors" have now all received city appointments, and they all have royal fare. "How happy they live in the palace of God." In these several ways 335 vacated the ranks within a year. Probably one-half as many more retired as worn out or nearly so—making in all 560, somewhat less than five per cent. of the whole number of ministers upon the rolls.—Western Christian Advocate.

President Gonzales, of Mexico, has made a grant of 1,500 leagues of land in Sonora, to Samuel Brannan, formerly of California, on which to colonize 1,000 families, many of whom are understood to be ready to move from the Eastern and Western States and the Territories. Gen. Manuel Castro, who commanded the native Californian forces in the battles fought with Commodore Stockton and Gens. Kearney and Fremont in 1846, in California, has been recently re-appointed to the Mexican army, and will probable command the department comprising Sonora. He is known to be interested in the scheme of colonization.

COMMENCEMENT.

PORT GIBSON COLLEGIATE ACADEMY.

Sunday June 19.—11 A. M. Commencement Sermon by Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D.

Monday, June 20.—10 A. M. Competitive Reading; Anniversary Polymnian Society; Annual Meeting Board of Trustees. 8 P. M. Concert.

Tuesday June 21.—10 A. M. Anniversary Alumnæ Association, address by Gen. J. D. Vertner. 8 P. M. Address by ——— College Festival

J. A. B. JONES, President.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES

WESLEYAN FEMALE INSTITUTE,
STAUNTON, VA.

Sunday, June 12.—11 A. M., Commencement Sermon. 8 P. M., Sermon before Young Ladies' Christian Association.

Monday June 13. 8 P. M., Final Celebration Lee and Jackson Literary Society.

Tuesday June 14. 8 P. M., Commencement Soiree. Instrumental and Vocal Music

Wednesday, June 15.—8 P. M., Class Day. Announcing Distinctions; Conferring Degrees, Full Diplomas. REV. WM. A. HARRIS, D. D., President.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES

MILLERSBURG (KY.) FEMALE COLLEGE.

Sermon, Sunday June 5, 8 P. M., Rev. Dr. J. H. Cottrell.

Zetagathean Entertainment, Wednesday, June 8, 8 P. M.

Elocutionary Contest and Art Levee, Thursday, June 9, 10 A. M.

Cantata, Fairy Bridal, June 9, 8 P. M.

Address, Friday, June 10, 10 A. M., Rev. N. R. Hamer.

Alumnæ Reunion, Friday, June 10, 3½ P. M.

Commencement Exercises, Friday, June 10, 7½ P. M. Eighteen young ladies graduate.

GEO. T. GOULD.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The camp meeting at William's Camp Ground, Pensacola District, will commence Thursday night, June 30. Friends who made subscriptions for the benefit of the camp ground last year will please pay their subscriptions as soon as possible, as it is greatly needed. Those good sisters who promised comforters for the preachers' tents will please bring them along when they come to the camp meeting. Preachers are cordially invited to be with us; provision has been made for their entertainment.

The grounds have been improved, a new hotel built, and other provisions for the comfort of visitors made.

S. H. COX.

SEA SHORE CAMP MEETING.—The Camp Meeting for 1881, on Sea Shore Camp Ground, will commence on Wednesday, July 13, 1881.

PHILIP HALLORAN, Secretary. W. H. FOSTER, President.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

NOTICE.—The Woodville District Conference will be held in Amite City, July 28 to 31, inclusive. Sunday School Institute will hold its annual session on the third day of the Conference, Saturday, at 10 o'clock, A. M., as a part of Conference business. Pastors will please have their reports in writing, upon subjects indicated in the Discipline, pp. 53, 54.

We would suggest that the report on Item 3 (schools) be separate; they will be called for on Saturday of the session. Brethren will have their Quarterly Conference Journals at Conference for inspection. Public preaching each day of the session, at 11 A. M. and 7½ P. M. JAS. A. GODFREY, P. E.

The Brandon District Conference will meet at Forrest, June 30, at 9 A. M., and continue to July 3. Rev. G. Bancroft will preach the opening sermon. I hope pastors will have written reports.

22 JAS. M. GANN, P. E.

The District Conference for Williamsburg District, Mississippi Conference, will convene at Columbia, on Friday, July 1, 1881, at 9 o'clock, A. M. D. A. LITTLE, P. E.

Quarterly Conferences.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WINONA DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Koschisko and Durant	June 25, 26
Richland	July 2, 3
Zilpha	9, 10
Newport	16, 17
Winona circuit	Thursday 21
Winona and Vaiden	Friday 22
West Station	23, 24
French Camps	Aug. 6
Lexington	Friday 12
Black Hawk	13, 14
Walthall	20, 21
Attalla	27, 28
Greenwood	Sep. 3, 4
Carrollton	10, 11
Kosciusko circuit	17, 18

The District Conference will be held at Goodman, July 29, 31. Preaching on Thursday night, the twenty-eighth. E. A. JONES, P. E.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

PENSACOLA DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Pensacola	June 4, 5
Warrington	5, 6
Millview	11, 12
Pollard	18, 19
Milton	25, 26
Powelton	July 2, 3
Perdido	6
Stockton	9, 10
Yellow River	16, 17
Georgiana	23, 24
Evergreen	30, 31
Gravel Hill	30, 31
Monroeville	Aug. 6, 7
Monterey	13, 14
Sepulga	20, 21

23 S. H. COX, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

BRANDON DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Marvin circuit, at Harrisville	July 9, 10
Brandon station	16, 17
Fannin circuit, at Bethlehem	23, 24
Ludlow mission	27
Lake circuit, at Cabin Ground	30, 31
Cato circuit, at Mt. Hebron	Aug. 6, 7
Trenton circuit, at Camp Ground	13, 14
Raleigh circuit	20, 21
Newton circuit	27, 28
Beech Springs	Sep. 3, 4
Mt. Hebron mission, at Spring Chapel	5, 6
Philadelphia circuit, at Mars Hill	10, 11
Walnut Grove circuit	17, 18
Carthage circuit	24, 25
Forest circuit	Oct. 1, 2

23 J. M. GANN, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT:

OFFICE: CORNER CARONDELET AND GRAVIER STREETS.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

Fire assets, excluding paid-up capital	$9,881,426 21
Paid-up capital	1,228,200 00
Total fire assets	$11,109,626 21
Fire liabilities	3,944,358 23
Making the surplus for policy-holders	$7,165,267 98

Losses by Chicago Fire in 1871..$3,239,091
Losses by Boston Fire in 1872..$1,129,739

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city, thus placing the Company on an even footing with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS:

J. F. SCHRODER, Esq., Chairman, of Leopold Christ & Co.
NEWTON BUCKNER, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERRY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Lallande.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson and Simpson.
HENRY V. OGDEN, Resident Secretary.
JULES P. ROUX, Ass't Resident Secretary.
NEW ORLEANS, October 20, 1880.

B. J. MONTGOMERY. C. KIRSCH

R. M. & B. J. MONTGOMERY FURNITURE

AND

MIRROR EMPORIUM,

Corner Camp and Poydras Sts.

After a sojourn of over six weeks among the Factories North, East and West, we open the Fall and Winter Trade with the largest and best selected stock of Furniture, French and German Plate Mirrors, Ornamental and Fancy Goods, Upholstery Goods and Cabinet Makers' Hardware ever brought to this city. We select our goods in person from the best factories and are determined not to be undersold. Our assortment being too extensive and varied to be enumerated in detail, we request our customers and the general public to call and inspect for themselves.

On hand a full line of the celebrated Vienna Bent Wood Work and Invalid Wheel Chairs.

Goods packed and delivered F. O. B.

1000 MORE CUSTOMERS

My Prices

Will Astonish.

PIANOS! ORGANS!

AND

Musical Instruments.

Write to

P. WERLEIN,
No. 135 Canal Street,
NEW ORLEANS.

"CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S EXCHANGE"
FOR WOMAN'S WORK.

This Association has opened a salesroom at Nos. 41 and 43 Bourbon street, where all kinds of plain and fine sewing, ornamental and fancy work will be received and sold.

Orders will also be taken for preserves, jellies, pickles, cake, ice cream, etc., samples having first been tested.

All work must be entered through a member, the price fixed by the owner securely fastened to the article, and the commission charged will be ten per cent.

The Annual Subscription of Members is Five Dollars, which entitles each to enter the work of three persons for one year.

Women of all denominations in this city or State, as well as of other States, are urgently requested to become members of this Exchange.

Persons desirous of becoming members may do so by applying in person, or by letter, at our Rooms. Contributions of any kind will also be gladly received or information given, at the same place.

We sincerely trust the public generally will lend us its hearty co-operation and aid in this worthy charity, with the assurance that the Managers will spare no effort for its success.

The benefits of this association are open to all women without regard to religious belief.

MANAGERS.

Mrs. G. W. Pritchard,	Mrs. E. John Ellis,
Mrs. M. W. Bartlett,	Mrs. Gilbert Green,
Mrs. B. A. Given,	Mrs. M. R. Cooper,
Mrs. J. G. Richardson,	Miss K. Faith,
Mrs. R. M. Walmsley,	Mrs. T. V. Coupland,
Miss S. Delgado,	Mrs. Percy Smith,
Mrs. Albert Baldwin,	Mrs. S. R. Wallace,
Mrs. T. H. Haines,	Mrs. E. J. Winston,
Mrs. Percy Rogers,	Miss C. E. Kells,
Mrs. J. H. Allen,	Mrs. E. E. Simpson,
Mrs. C. N. Strong,	Miss S. H. Davis,
Mrs. J. R. Linzee,	Miss G. R. Westfeldt,
Mrs. L. F. Wayne,	Mrs. M. C. Jennings,
	Miss M. A. Wrenn.

OFFICERS.

President—MRS. M. W. BARTLETT.
Vice Presidents—MRS. R. M. WALMSLEY, MRS. T. G. RICHARDSON, MRS. J. C. JUDEN, MRS. E. E. SIMPSON, MRS. ALBERT BALDWIN.
Treasurer—MRS. CHAS. E. KELLS.
Recording Secretary—MRS. THEO. AUZE.
Corresponding Secretary—MRS. E. J. WHARTON.

40 ELEGANT Chromo, Cards, New Styles, 10c. Agents wanted. L. Jones & Co., Nassau, N. Y.

MISCELLANEOUS.

W. F. MELLEN,
Attorney at Law,
12 CARONDELET ST.,
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

FRED. N. OGDEN. BENJ. C. L. RAYNE.

OGDEN & RAYNE,

DEALERS IN

BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,

AND AGENTS FOR THE

Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,

AND

Shultz Belting Company,

18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT,
RICHARD RHODES,
55.....ST. CHARLES STREET.....55
NEW ORLEANS.

Articles for Fishermen of all Kinds.

Rods, Nets, Hooks, Lines, and every desirable article for the Angler, wholesale and retail. Guns imported to order. J. R. Cooper's Breech and Muzzle Loading Guns always on hand. All kinds of Improved artificial Baits. Repairing of Guns carefully done by experienced workmen, and Fishing Rods made to order. Address Postoffice Box 1599.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co.,
AMERICAN CHINA HOUSE,
49 Camp Street, New Orleans

We append a few prices:

The American China Dinner, Breakfast and Tea Set, comprising 100 Pieces, for $12.

A Real French China Dinner Set, 100 Pieces, for $17.

English Stone China Dinner Set, 124 Pieces, for $10.

English Stone China Chamber Set, comprising 10 Pieces, for $2 50.

Decorated Chamber Sets, with different Colored Bands, 10 Pieces, for $3 50.

Glass Goblets, from 60 cents to $1 per dozen.

Particular attention given to Novelties and Specialties pertaining to the House-Furnishing Department. Orders promptly attended to. We have just received a full and complete stock of holiday goods. Call and examine before purchasing.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO

JOSEPHUS' COMPLETE WORKS.

Comprising the History and Antiquities of the Jews, with the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and dissertations concerning Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, James the Just, and the Sacrifice of Isaac, together with a discourse on Hades, or Hell: with his autobiography, translated by William Whiston, A. M., to which is added an analytical index to the entire work.

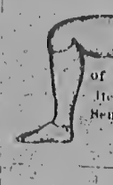
This large octavo work of 780 pages, bound in cloth $2 00, or in full leather binding, $2 50; mailed, post paid on receipt of price.

G. T. LATHROP,
113 Camp street, New Orleans.

FURNITURE.

W. G. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,

desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.



His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. G. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,
New Orleans.

D. MERCIER & SONS,
Better Known as Cheap John,
NO BRANCH STORE IN TOWN.
MEN'S, BOYS' AND YOUTH'S
CLOTHING,
HATS, BOOTS, SHOES, FURNISHING GOODS, ETC., ETC.
Cor. Dauphine and Bienville sts.,
New Orleans, La.

Orders from Country Merchants promptly executed on most reasonable terms.

DR. ELY'S CELEBRATED PATENT ARTIFICIAL LEGS AND ARMS have all the motions of the natural limbs. Perfect satisfaction in all cases or no pay. Prices reduced. Send for pamphlet.

V. McDERMOTT, Manufacturer.
158 Camp St., New Orleans

PERRY TRADE & MARK & CO'S

STEEL PENS

of superior English make; famous for durability and elasticity; great variety of styles suited to every kind of writing. For sale by dealers generally.

TWENTY-FIVE assorted samples for trial, including the "T" AND "FALCON" celebrated Pens, by mail, on receipt of Twenty-five Cents.

VISON, BLAKEMAN, TAYLOR & CO.
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. S.
NEW YORK.

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 27.—NO. 23. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1881. WHOLE NO. 1357.

PUBLISHED FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Subscription, . . . $2 per annum.

Ministers and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

All Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.
REV. H. D. MOORE.
REV. O. H. BLUE, D. D.
REV. J. O. ANDREW.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. W. H. WATKINS, D. D.
REV. JAMES A. GODFREY.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. JOHN MATHEWS, D. D.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

WATCH!

Watch! in the early morning,
In the gracious dawn of light,
When the fresh new day has closed away
The phantom dreams of night,
When a tender flush is lying,
On the land, and restless sea,
Proclaimed some morn, when the day is born,
Will thy Master come to thee.

Watch! when the noon ode glloweth,
And the pulse throbs strong, and free,
When the golden sun, his zenith won,
Moves with a kind royalty;
Strong in thy pride of manhood,
Though each hour be thy slave,
Keep watch, and ward, till the trumpet's Lord
Shall claim the trust he gave.

Watch! when night's shades are falling,
And the light of day is dimm,
Though the eye grow dim, and with failing limb
Life's weary race is run,
Watch for the solemn hour,
When the Lord of the House draws nigh,
That you hear his voice, and cry, "Rabboni
To Master, here am I."

He comes in the early morning,
He comes at the midnight dread,
So watch and toil, be it ill or well
The hour the King draws near
Within and find thee sleeping,
Unknowing sentinel,
Or his words, "Depart" than faithless heart
Will fling thy soul's dread knell.

OAKLAND, LA.

Letter from Great Britain.

The Lord Mayor of London gave a banquet at the Mansion House to the venerable Dr. Moffat, in honor of his long, faithful and successful services as a missionary in Africa. Representative ministers of all denominations were present. It is almost impossible to hold the balances of impartiality firmly. Even the best and strongest principled men are not adequate to maintain fairness under a severe strain towards wondrous lies. I am unwilling to censure Lord Mayor Mc Arthur; but he has challenged not only criticism but rebuke. The clergy of the Established Church claim precedence and priority everywhere, and unless this is conceded they will not attend public meetings to which they may be invited. To recognize this arrogance as of exclusive supereilliousness is imprudent and unright. The Archbishop of Canterbury was present at the banquet; so was Dr. Henry Allon, chairman of the Congregational Union; so was the Rev. E. E. Jenkins, president of the Wesleyan Conference. In the toasts, the Lord Mayor gave the toast of Primate Tait and the "clergy as ministers of all denominations." The Archbishop responded to his toast, Canon Farrar, Dr. Allon and the president of the Conference responded to the others. Why pay honors to the Primate specially? The president of the Conference pro tem. is the chief minister of a great church, and is the peer of Primate Tait in every sense; the same may be said of Dr. Allon. The Lord Mayor is the worthy son of a noble sire, true and loyal to Methodism and all its interests; therefore, I regret all the more that he should have permitted his courtesy to have led him to make invidious distinctions at a banquet in honor of a beloved missionary. And if Dr. Tait were a man of unflinching loyalty to Protestant truths, the wondrous priority given to him might not have been so objectionable; but he would sacrifice every distinctive fundamental truth of Christianity at the throne of a comprehensiveness that would keep the National Church of England a Noah's Ark. And if Dr. Allon and the president of the Conference had left the meeting when the Archbishop of Canterbury was promoted to such wondrous superiority, they would have been acting loyally to their positions as the head of two large churches.

Dr. Joseph Parker has been defeated, and the Rev. J. Macfadyen was elected chairman of the Congregational Union by a majority of 247 over Dr. Parker. This is certainly humiliating, and the humiliating is all the greater, when the result is viewed in connection with the tactics employed to secure it, and the inspiration which produced the tactics. The spiteful remnant of the "celebrated fifteen," who conspired to squelch the influence of the distinguished Dr. John Campbell, because of his inflexible defense of the truth as it is in Jesus, have succeeded in promoting an obscure man of medium ability to the chairmanship of the Congregational Union, over the head of a man who is the most popular, most influential, best known and ablest minister of English Non-conformists. J. A. Macfadyen in the chair of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, is simply an insult to the office, and to the learning and ability of the Congregational clergy, but anything before allowing Dr. Parker to occupy that seat of honor, although his claims are first and foremost, not only on the ground of ability but of service also.

The Doctor granted the City Temple to the Wesleyans for the annual meeting of the Metropolitan Chapel building fund, a generous and fraternal act. In thanking him for it the Rev. Frederick Greeves said: "They were thankful to Dr. Parker for the noble and generous way in which he had assisted them. One of the noblest sermons he ever heard, and one of the noblest congregations he ever saw in New Castle, was when Dr. Parker preached there a Wesleyan anniversary sermon. Since then, he had become Dr. Parker's neighbor, and knew something of his brotherly kindness in private life. They had heard how generously Dr. Parker spoke of other men. It was a treat to listen to such generous, kindly appreciations of those that had passed away. All felt they would like Dr. Parker to be treated as generously by everybody as he treated others, to have as bright and noble a charity exercised towards him as they found him disposed to exercise towards others." Ex President Mc Ailay, was equally eulogistic of Dr. Parker. The Rev. Frederick Greeves is not, like Dr. Cuyler, in the habit of eulogizing fulsomely and extravagantly, any one on whom he bestows his attentions. He is critically discriminating and exceedingly judicious, in all he says. Therefore his estimate of Dr. Parker's excellence and worth is all the more valuable. Mr. Greeves is the son of a Wesleyan minister, and has three brothers, ministers—two in the Wesleyan ministry, and one in the Established Church. More than one of the trio will likely occupy the chair of the Conference. And Dr. Parker, whom the able, prudent and scholarly Frederick Greeves so justly and decidedly praises, and who is so well known as an author in two hemispheres, is the minister whom J. Baldwin Brown, Henry Allon, Samuel Newth and others, from spite and envy, would attempt to crush.

Edward Miall is dead. Death has been busy with great men of late, reaping a rich harvest amongst the eminent ones in letters, statesmanship and the church. Mr. Miall is not the least of the distinguished men who have fallen before the unerring marksman. He has left behind him a record of loyal and faithful service, which any man might covet, and a name and character of which any one might be proud. He was educated for the Congregational ministry, and spent four or five years in the pastoral oversight of a church. He believed he could serve the cause of truth better in another and less limited capacity and resigned the ministry, started the Non-conformist newspaper and organized the Liberation Society. He conducted the one and controlled the other for more than forty years, with a fidelity that few could have had the moral courage to maintain against such odds and such opposition, and less to see such a measure of success attending his labors, as to warrant the ultimate success of the cause to which he gave such enthusiastic devotion through a long course of years. He occupied a seat in Parliament for one or two sessions, but was far oftener defeated than victorious in his Parliamentary contests, because he could never conciliate the Moderates' course, peculiarly offensive to the Tory party. He passed peacefully away at the age of seventy-one, leaving the cause he labored to promote, in the hands of a host of able men who are sure to push it on to victory.

Beaconsfield's successor, as leader of the Conservatives in the Upper House, is Lord Salisbury. He was born in the "purple," for his father, the late Marquis, was a member of two Cabinets of Lord Derby, in which he held the post of Lord President of the Council and of Lord Privy Seal. Lord Salisbury is a man of obstinate individuality and is a decided partisan. He will develop a rigid form of Toryism, excluding from it the democratic element which the late Lord Beaconsfield infused into it. He will not be successful, for the conservatism of times gone by, will not be acceptable now, and this is, what he will attempt to revive. Sir S. Northcote will lead the opposition in the House of Commons.

Bradlaugh is not likely to be permitted to take his seat in the House of Commons. The opposition to him is not legal, nor is it sincere. It is adopted and pursued for party purposes by the Conservatives. The people of Northampton have elected him twice, he is their lawfully chosen representative and when he consents to observe the conditions of admission, it is simply persecution to prevent him from taking his seat. The odium of an infidel's presence in the legislature of a professedly Christian nation, rests on those who elect him.

The May Meetings so far show that there is no relaxing in the purpose of the churches to carry on the evangelization of the World. The speakers at the various meetings have been intensely earnest and practical, and their addresses were characterized by a wise understanding of the situation and its requirements. The president of the Wesleyan Conference always makes the first speech at the Wesleyan Missionary Anniversary, after the reading of the report. A critic of another church says of the speech of Mr. Jenkins, this year—"this speech was characterized by a comprehensive grasp and a philosophical insight and ought to be studied by all who are interested in mission work. This testimony is true.

Gen. Booth, the organizer and leader of the Salvation Army has been to Belfast, to hold a three days council of war. The Witness, the organ of the Irish Presbyterian Church, devotes a leading article to this most recent and extravagant organized factor in the religious life of the lowest classes. The writer says:

"If anything is plainly forbidden in Scriptures, it is female preaching and yet this is one of the distinctive features of the Salvation Army. Just think of Gen. Paul marching to Corinth with his staff, heralded by his silver trumpeter, and attended by Capt. Phebe and Maj. Priscilla, all presenting colors to Lieut. Chloe." The article is very severe, but not too much so. It expresses astonishment that a man of Mr. Booth's antecedents should be capable of enlisting and leading such a movement. I am not surprised. Mr. Booth was a minister of the New Connection. This Methodist sect has done very little good, and its progress has been the least of all the minor bodies of Methodism, although first in the field of secession. The late James Everett closes a sketch of Alexander Kelham, the founder of the New Connection in the first volume of the Wesleyan Takings in these words: "Methodism itself, and many of the preachers, so far as character is concerned, could say individually with the apostle Alexander, the coppersmith, 'did me much evil.'" And as with Kelham, so with the preachers of this sect. Every division that occurred in Wesleyanism they hailed with pleasure, and heartily and zealously aided the agitators. Now they know that division is at an end, and they become quite gentle and fraternal. Those who desire to engage in special work, and forsake the church to engage in it, are, in nine cases out of ten, either half-fledged mates or men of incontinent ambition and vanity, eaten up with a desire for notoriety. And what renders their role all the more objectionable they all litate it upon the call of Providence. I have no faith in Booth or his methods. Those who join the Army are instructed not to attend any of the churches, and if they do so their names are dropped from the Armyites. This is under the profession of non-sectarianism. Plymouthr Brethren bigotry and exclusiveness duplicated.

A second edition of Joseph Agar Beet's Commentary on Romans, revised and enlarged, is just issued. Mr. Beet's position as a foremost exegete has now been established. Dr. James Morison, one of the first theological scholars in Scotland, writes of it: "I regard it as a masterpiece of Biblical exposition. The Great Father has evidently done great things for the author, and he will do, in a rapidly increasing ratio, great things by him. I have undertaken Romans for the pulpit commentary, and hence I shall have the high privilege of Dr. Beet's company and counsel all through the Epistle." Dr. Vaughan, dean of Llandaff and master of the Temple, one of the most scholarly dignitaries of the Established Church, says: "Your commentary is a remarkable contribution to the sound theology of England and the church." Dr. Von Oosterzee, professor of theology, Utrecht, writes "through and through a right excellent, exegetical and practical work." Canon Farrar refers to it in praising terms, "as one of his popular and valuable works." These testimonials to the value of Mr. Beet's book are understatements of its merits. The value to the young minister, and old ones too, could not be overstated, and this is written solely in the interests of your readers, and from a personal acquaintance with the work itself. The rich suggestions are equally helpful to a deep and true meaning of the epistles, and I would greatly desire to have the testimony of the Methodist, as to its worth. This, no doubt will be given in due time, as the book must and will be issued from Broadway forthwith. Mr. Beet's reputation as a theological scholar and biblical exegete is established.

OSSAWATOMIE, KAS.
May 16, 1881.

—Surely, that preaching which comes from the soul must works on the soul.—Thomas Fuller.

Centenary College Reports.

The following reports adopted by the Board of Trustees of Centenary College, May 30, 1881, were ordered to be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE:

The Committee on Memoirs respectfully report: Since the last meeting of the Board, two of its oldest and most esteemed members, Hon. Edward McGehee and Rev. W. H. Watkins, D. D., have died. In respect to them, the following is submitted for adoption:

Whereas, Hon. Edward McGehee has been from the first, a member of the Board of Trustees of Centenary College of Louisiana, and its constant friend and munificent benefactor, having contributed over seventy thousand dollars towards its original purchase and subsequent buildings and endowment;

And whereas, he was one of the most eminent laymen of Southern Methodism, distinguished for purity of character, exemplary piety, and enlightened liberality in the support of every benevolent and religious enterprise, and for his public spirit and great worth as a citizen; therefore,

Resolved, that we hold his memory in the highest veneration, and that we hereby express our grateful estimate of his exalted Christian character and many noble benefactions.

Resolved, that while deeply sensible of the great loss which the church, the country and Centenary College have sustained in his death, we thank God for the grace manifested in his long and useful life, and for the strong faith and comfort exhibited in the closing hours of a career made illustrious, by a supreme devotion to God and his glory.

Whereas, William Hamilton Watkins, D. D., has been for many years a member of this Board, also its president and secretary; at one time president of the college, and always a most active friend of the institution, and an untiring advocate of the cause of sanctified learning.

And whereas, as a minister of the gospel, he was eminent for ability and attainments as a preacher, and for purity, usefulness and consecration as a servant of God; therefore,

Resolved, that it is with great sorrow that we have learned of his death, and that we especially recognize that Centenary College has sustained a most serious loss.

Resolved, that we hereby place on record this expression of the love and reverence we have for his memory; and of the high consideration and appreciation we have for his character as a man of God, a gifted and devoted preacher of the gospel, and as a Christian, whose purity of life and devotion to Christ and his church are worthy of our esteem, and of our imitation.

Resolved, that we are grateful to God for the grace exhibited in the consecrated life and labors of our deceased brother, and for the beauty and power of holiness, as illustrated in his singularly peaceful and triumphant end.

ELIAS PARKER, Chairman.

To the president and Board of Trustees of Centenary College of Louisiana:

Your Committee on State of the College beg leave to report: From the faculty record of examinations, the president's report, and from personal examination, we have had fair opportunity of judging the work of the past year and the promise of the future. We are gratified to know that the faculty have taken high ground in regard to the standard of scholarship and are decided and firm in exacting of their students such attainments as will fairly meet the standard. With unqualified approbation we note the gratifying results already achieved, and are encouraged with the promise of still greater advance in true scholarship as the inevitable result of the present attitude of the faculty against the superficial on the one hand, and in favor of the real and solid on the other.

Your committee can not forbear to express their high appreciation of the scholarship, the evidence of which was developed in a protracted and thorough examination of members of the two lower college classes in that noble, but now greatly neglected language the Greek. Indeed, the accuracy and neatness of the scholarship evinced by the young gentlemen was creditable alike to the instructor and his pupils.

In all the departments of instruction, we find evidences of conscientious, careful and thorough work.

Respectfully submitted,
W. H. N. MAGRUDER, Chairman.

Reformed by Grace.

Dr. D. W. Foster, of Opelousas, Louisiana, writes to remind our Louisiana preachers and people of the importance of sending their contributions to Rev. John Pipes, of Mansfield, to pay expenses of our delegate to the National Temperance Convention at Saratoga; and in connection relates a remarkable case of reform from drunkenness. He says:

Let me here relate one real instance that occurred in this parish not long ago, to illustrate how the good Lord had to specially interfere and help a struggling victim of intemperance save himself from utter ruin; to which the existing law exposed him by licensing instead of prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

The son of a noble father, dead and gone to his reward, was caught in the numerous dead-falls, set by authority of law all over the country—he drank deeply of the fatal poison, which possesses, in such a wonderful degree, the property of strengthening the thirst for alcohol, while it diminishes and weakens the power of the unfortunate victim to resist its drowsy influences. But God, in his mercy, sent the Holy Spirit to warn him—he had become convicted of his folly and weakness and joined the church and struggled for awhile first up and then down. But as the licensed pit-falls were laid so thick on every side, no wonder he fell in again and again, until, on one occasion, while on his way to one of those licensed places of ruin with his jug, he was so deeply convicted that he dismounted from his horse, got on his knees by the road side and prayed God to help him overcome the burning thirst that was impelling him on the way to ruin. He arose; but finding himself unable to resist the craving desire for alcohol, he remounted his horse and proceeded further on towards the fatal place. But the conflict between his raging thirst and writhing conscience became so severe, that he dismounted again and on his knees before God plead for more strength to resist. But when he arose again, bestowing himself unable to withstand the consuming thirst, he remounted and started on again to get his jug filled with the liquid fire that he felt conscious was devouring him soul and body. But he was again arrested by the Holy Spirit before he entered the death-dealing place and he dismounted the third time and fell on his knees before God in the deepest agony and prayer—"Lord, I am on the downward road to utter destruction and find myself wholy powerless to resist—I can neither turn back nor stop. Do give me the power to overcome this thirst for alcohol, or take away all desire for it." And then he arose with every vestage of the ruinous desire removed—not the slightest taste for intoxicating liquors left remaining? Wonderful rescue! He joined the church again and lives a sober Christian.

Now how cruel and often fatal for the law to thus turn loose such a monstrous demon as alcohol is; to thus hunt down, harrass and destroy without restraint, its millions of helpless victims? Let us have it prohibited all over these United States, and stop forever its devastations.

East Baton Rouge Circuit, Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: When I first reached this circuit, I am bound to confess that matters did look pretty gloomy. It was in the dead of winter, the country was very low and wet, the waters were up, and all nature looked "blue;" but the worst of it was that the condition of the churches on the work appeared cold and gloomy as well. If this state of affairs had continued to-date, perhaps your humble servant, would have kept quiet the year through, but I thank God that we are now in a progressive state in many ways. Our congregations are reasonably large, very attentive and often prayerful. We have organized at five points on this work, besides an itinerating exhorter, who has prayer-meeting all over the circuit as he travels, attending to his regular occupation. He is an engraver on marble; and is doing a great amount of good among our people. Another brother has prayer meeting, like the young county folks used to have surprise parties, but unlike them, he is always made welcome; and the voice of song and prayer earnest prayer is being sent up in houses where prayer has never been heard before—perhaps. What a power for good is a faithful, praying exhorter? what a great help to a young preacher on his first work are such men as these? No one can imagine but the preacher himself.

Our people heartily engaged in the reorganization of Sunday schools until we have now, four schools in good Methodist running order, Methodist officers, literature and all. Our schools will bear comparison with many country Sabbath schools.

We have been praying for a revival. I hail nearly written we are expecting it; but believe I can safely write "it has already begun." Don't you think so? from the prayer meetings, Sunday schools and general interest manifested which I describe; is this not a more positive expression, and one more to be relied on, than a temporary exhilliation of spirits.

Rev. Joel T. Daves, pastor of Baton Rouge Station, gave me help which was very much needed, and encouragement which will never be forgotten, at Antioch last week. He did work enough for two young preachers—addressing the Sunday school, taking up a collection, preaching, administering sacrament in the morning and baptizing a number of our children in the evening.

The parsonage on our circuit is pleasantly situated, near Amite river, splendid fishing place; we are surrounded by relatives, friends and neighbors who are all kind to the preacher and his family.

Within easy reach of us, we have the healthy mineral springs of "Greenwell," which was the summer resort of our best citizens before the war; and which, I doubt not, will be again occupied and fitted up for the same purpose, now that the capitol is restored to Baton Rouge, which is but a short fifteen miles away. Another good reason why some man with enterprise and capital rebuild "Greenwell," is that Amite river is being opened up for navigation to this point, and even five miles above.

H. DAVENPORT, P. C.

Impressions of Whitworth.

MR. EDITOR: A recent visit to Whitworth College to see a daughter at school there, afforded the writer so much pleasure as to impel him to let others know somewhat of his impressions.

Everything about Brookhaven attests its healthfulness. The college buildings are comfortable and commodious, and although they have recently been greatly enlarged, must soon be still further enlarged in order to meet the demand for more room. The boarders number about two hundred, while the village sends a large contingent.

A happier lot of young people it has never been my good fortune to see, and this is not surprising when one knows their teachers.

Sabbath school order and decorum are observed, social (spiritual) yet consoling and affectionate intercourse between professors and their pupils, that it seemed more like a large family, than an assemblage of persons from all quarters.

Where one sees so much to commend, it is difficult to particularize.

Morally, intellectually and physically, the interests of the pupils seemed to be fully attended to.

The writer understands that the school is well managed, financially, and is self supporting.

While it is doing a noble work, for the country, in educating its daughters in a thorough and economical manner, the opportunity is before it for greatly enlarging its sphere of usefulness. It needs money to erect more buildings, to purchase more scientific apparatus, and employ more teachers.

Here is a school which ought to be sustained, and which obviates all necessity for sending our daughters northward to be educated.

There is no place where the generous philanthropist may bestow money to better advantage.

Let all who are able and who appreciate a high order of morality and education, here pour out their gifts unto God, with the assurance that his blessing will attend it.

W. M. B.

JACKSON, LA., May 24, 1881.

Kosciusko, Benton and Yazoo City.

Not long since I made my first visit to Kosciusko, Attala county, Miss., a wonderful little city, that has had the devotion and hospitality, on several occasions, to entertain Annual Conferences, Masonic bodies, etc. "Tinzman," of the St. Louis Advocate, and the author of the sprightly, original, pointed articles, signed T. A. S. A., that often appear in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is said to have his mail matter delivered here. Rev. R. S. Mitchell, of the North Mississippi Conference, is now spending his fourth year as pastor in charge. He is a pastor beloved. The seventeen year locusts were on hand; the humming noise, peculiar to them, made the woods resound, to many quite unpleasantly. I visited the home of Bro. Adams, a wonderfully gifted man, and I believe, by the way, a native of Mississippi. Preacher, teacher, farmer, poet, everything he attempts is well done, and peculiarly original. He has a first-class high school, well attended. Our Charles B. Galloway first breathed the air at Kosciusko. The ADVOCATE has many friends at this point.

Yazoo City, Mississippi Conference, is laid away near thirty miles from a railroad. Rev. W. E. Ballard, P. C., is now closing the fourth year. During his term Yazoo City charge has erected the best parsonage within the Mississippi Conference, a two story framed building, and well furnished; situated in the rear of the church.

Benton, ten miles east of Yazoo City, has Rev. R. Bradley as preacher in charge, and provides an excellent building, a parsonage for its pastor. Benton and Midway is the circuit. At both points I found the brethren had been actively at work for the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Benton, once a wicked place, because of whisky, now sits clothed in her right mind, and won't allow it sold within a radius of five miles. It is strong for prohibition. Want of space forbids my saying more of Benton and Yazoo City.

A. A. D.

Life is not so short but that there is always time enough for courtesy. Self-command is the main elegance. —Emerson.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1881.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

WAITING.

BY LAURA.

Waiting, calmly waiting, and saying not mine,
But the will of my Father be done;
And, though often I languish, I'll not repine
Though I languish and suffer alone.

Waiting and watching as the footsteps of thee
Bear me onward through sunshine and storm,
Catching faint gleams of a holier clime,
And the notes from the Seraphim's song.

Patiently waiting till the day shall come,
When my spirit shall find its long-sought rest;
When the Master's voice shall call "come home,"
To the beautiful land of the blest.

Waiting for the boatman to bear me o'er,
For though the river be dark and cold,
Safely I'll reach yon radiant shore,
And dwell in the city of gold.

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

Second Quarter Lesson XII.

SUNDAY, JUNE 19, 1881.—LUKE IX, 1-6.

1. Then he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases.
2. And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick.
3. And he said unto them, Take nothing for your journey, neither staves, nor scrip, neither bread neither money; neither have two coats apiece.
4. And whatsoever house ye enter into, there abide, and thence depart.
5. And whosoever will not receive you, when ye go out of that city, shake off the very dust from your feet for a testimony against them.
6. And they departed, and went through the towns, preaching the gospel, and healing everywhere.

This is not the first calling or choice of the twelve disciples, but is a call to work. Before this time they had been always with Christ, but now he sends them out, two together, to preach and heal the sick. When they all assembled he gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases. I suppose this confirming them in authority and power over devils and disease was done by his word without ceremony. May be he laid his hand upon each one, beginning with Peter, and with one of his divine sentences invested them with power and authority. He sends them out to preach the kingdom of God and to heal the sick. Their sermon consisted of little more than an announcement: "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." They could not have preached much more, for their own conceptions of that kingdom were very meager and undefined.

They could tell a good deal about the character of their leader, but as to the nature and extent of his kingdom, when and where it was to be set up, they knew next to nothing.

So far, then, as the mere preaching was concerned, they had the smallest capital imaginable, but they had the power to heal diseases and cast out devils, and this was enough to give them great popularity, and was the means by which they could hold attention to their message.

I suppose they started out eager to try their new powers, and no doubt felt a thrill of indescribable pleasure and triumph when they saw the effect of the word and touch. It was a great grant, but nothing in comparison to the power and authority that each young preacher starts with on his first circuit if he be truly called and sent of God. He goes out as an embassador of God, has a positive message of truth, irresistable to the consciences of men. He has but to utter it, and lo! men are converted and renewed. God has a way of honoring the early ministry of his servants, giving them seals to their ministry. Their first work is often their best for years. Then comes temptation, like it did to these apostles. They began to rejoice in their power over devils and diseases more than was right and safe. They almost forgot that this power was given, and in their joy were forgetting the Giver.

The consciousness of power is a just cause for joy, but a better and higher reason for joy is that our names are written in heaven. Many a newly-installed minister of God has claimed too much of the honor for his part and instrumentality in the work, and his exaltation of himself makes it necessary for his good that God give no more victories soon.

These first apostles had a great advantage in their power to heal. This may be a suggestion to our missions newly formed. Let the preacher be a physician; men's souls can be reached through their bodies. Heal the sick, and administer at once medicine for body and soul.

His directions to them were explicit; they were to take nothing for their journey; no walking sticks, nor script, neither bread, neither money, neither two coats apiece. These directions were to test these new apostles for their training in a preparatory ministry. It was a severe test of their apostleship. These commands were for only that particular time, as is shown by the Lord himself afterward changing these directions. It would show miserly ignorance upon the part of the church now to adopt them as a rule for her ministers, except in the general sense of a command to avoid all worldly cares and anxieties, and be content with what God provides. We have known a genuine call to the ministry to be killed in attempting to prepare for it.

Many a call to the field is nursed to death in the hall of the theologue. The young man feels that he must preach, but he is not ready; so he takes his commission and goes to college. Some of them had better start to the wilderness, and trust to God to send an Aaron to meet them. They were not to go from house to house, but, finding one that would receive them, there they were to abide. This first circuit did not board their preachers around, but their homes for the preacher were permanent. These physician preachers, who healed without medicine and without charge, had no need to move often. Where they were refused hospitality, when they left they were to shake the dust off their feet as a testimony against them, signifying we break off all fellowship with you, we will not have the least in common with you. We believe you to be in peril, and we want nothing to do with you. See how the Lord protected his first preachers. He is jealous of their honor.

Well for the ministers that can leave a work thus, with blood of no man's sin on his conscience; leave without a dust of sin upon his feet.

In these days of grace, however, when the Holy Spirit has come to stay, it is much more difficult to abandon a work; one must stay as long as the Spirit stays. He dare not leave before him. We have seen works where it would be a difficult matter to leave in this way. Circuits where there is no dust, only mud and miasma, and the man of God leaves it with some of his children in the graveyard, and the seeds of disease in himself. He can not shake off the place with its dust and memories until he shakes off his body and goes up to his reward. But the gospel must be preached everywhere. God has given the whole field to his Son, and he intends to plant it all with good seed. Shall we give up the fertile fields of Louisiana because to reclaim them will cost the death of many a good laborer? Nobody thinks of doing so. Neither can the church, without the charge of recreancy, forsake and turn out any of the fields already cleared, nor can she refuse to enter every new field opened to her. There is no room in the church of Christ for contractiles, men that are ever narrowing their works, and call it centralizing the work, getting it in shape, like leeches, that spread out and draw up, and, lo! they are full of the blood they have drawn from the body of the almost fainting church. Oh! how the church suffers at the hands of these contractiles. Think of a great church in a great city, with its thousands of members, making no headway, clearing no new ground, planting no new fields, not living once in twenty years. If the old gum were broken open, I doubt very much whether you find much good honey; all its contents nearly is beesbread and wax. The best thing to do with such an old hive is to smoke out the drones with sulphur fumes, and let the hive one to busier bees.

The subject of our lesson is home missions. Missions at home is the better way to state the case. The mission impulse in the home church. The success of all great missions is always the result of two movements, one from within and one from without. Moses with the Midianites, and Aaron with Egyptians, both receive an impulse. They start and meet in the wilderness on the mountain of God, and kiss each other, and confer with each other as to what God has told each, and the grandest mission is set up, with Moses and Aaron as its leader—the mission that brought us a Bible and Saviour.

If Aaron had refused to obey the direction of the Lord, when he commanded him to go into the wilderness to meet Moses, he would have for the time defeated the mission. The need of the hour is prompt obedience to the mission call: in the church at home. The field abroad is full of men to whom God has appeared, but the call to church at home is, to a large extent, unheeded.

My Conversion.

MR. EDITOR: For about sixty years I was an unconverted wanderer in sin's destructive path. During this period I knew nothing of religion. I was living without hope and without God in the world. I knew nothing but sin and wickedness; I cared for nothing but the world and its vain pomp and glory. Having thus lived so long, my heart had become hardened, my conscience seared, and my very existence was more like that of a lifeless tree than that of a being endowed with an immortal soul. And while thus standing on the verge of destruction, whose slippery banks were fast crumbling beneath me, God, in his mercy, sent to me a young lady, whose soul was filled with pure Christian love, to persuade me to leave the world, its fleeting shadows and transient beauties, and seek the salvation of my soul. This to me was no more than the noise of "sounding brass" or that of a "tinkling symbol." She asked me to "come and go with her to church," but my reply was: "I haven't time; I have something else to think about." And, as we parted, she said, looking me earnestly in the face: "May God bless you." With all she had previously said my heart had not been touched; but when she uttered these words, "May God bless you," it seemed to thrill my soul with terror, and from that very moment my happiness or what I called happiness fled away. It seemed as though there had been a great burden bound upon me. A few days after this I continued to go to church; so I did; there was no preaching, but a love-feast, which was equivalent. When the exercises were over I started homeward, but my burden, instead of having diminished, was greatly increased. Although I felt very sensibly the excruciating pain of that miserable disease or burden, I could plainly realize that my feelings were very different from anything I had ever experienced before; yet, had my life depended on it, I could not have told what it was, or what it was like. I had been in trouble before. I had been sick before. I know something about being miserable. Yet in all my past life, including everything I had ever known or experienced, this was absolutely unparalleled. The more I strove against it the more it increased, until my very existence actually became cumbrous. It seemed like the earth was overshadowed with a great cloud. Nature seemed to have lost all her charms. It seemed as though earth's last flower had faded. Everything was undone. There was nothing that could please or satisfy me. I sought rest where I had often sought and found it before, but found none. So, after passing a few weeks in this miserable condition, I determined, if possible, to find rest. So I fled to the bottle for refuge. This was the only thing that gave me any relief at all, and it only lasted while I was under the contaminating influence of the perfidious demolisher, for whenever its effects were gone my burden seemed only to be heavier. This I kept up for some months, and the cloud grew darker and darker. At last I resolved to drink no more, and to seek refuge some other way. Finally I concluded to join the church, and to associate myself with those who professed to be happy in the love of God. So, at the expiration of about six months, which was the most miserable part of my life, I joined the church. After having done this I soon saw what my condition was. I discovered that I had been bitten by the fiery serpent, sin, whose venomous fangs had reached my soul's most vital parts. Just then, in view of the impending danger, my soul cried out: "What shall I do to be saved?" And, in answer to this, there came a voice from above, saying: "Look upward, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." At first, having been rendered so very weak from that miserable disease, I could not rise to look. Then the voice came again: "Only believe," and then I received strength. I looked up and laid hold by faith upon that promise, which to my soul was sweeter than honey to the mouth; and as I did this the poison was all extracted from my soul, this great burden fell, the fetters and chains with which I had been bound in iniquity's prison were all broken asunder, the great iron door was unhinged, and my soul was set at liberty.

"Oh! the rapturous height
Of that holy delight."

It seemed as though the very windows of heaven were opened for the outpouring of the divine blessing upon me. My sorrow was all turned to happiness, and my mourning to joy unspeakable. Just then I knew I passed from death unto life, for "old things passed away, and all things became new."

"Oh! happy day; Oh! happy day,
When Jesus washed my sins away."

It has only been about a year since I was so happily converted to God, since "the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleansed me from all sin."

Though it is often doubted, yet I thank God that there is a reality in the holy religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, and I am a thousand times more thankful for a personal knowledge of this blessed fact. Ever since my affections were set upon heavenly things I have had no desire to go back to the beggarly elements of the world. Oh! what a blessed thought; religion, if faithfully guarded by prayer, is a precious jewel, which no thief or robber can steal from its possessor. Oh! what a glorious religion. It is felt in the heart, it is known to the soul, and it quickens the spirit with the bright hope of meeting my Saviour and friends in a brighter world that will never end. Oh! how my heart leaps forth toward God when I remember that this religion does not end in death, as do other religions, for it consists of nothing but love and holiness, and I know there is nothing else but that in heaven. In death I shall just begin to live. Ah! blessed religion, it gives me a

"Hope that looks beyond the bounds of time,
When what I now deplore
Shall rise in full immortal prime,
And bloom to fade no more."

I would not give religion for all the world besides, for what would it profit me to gain the whole world and lose my own soul? It would profit me nothing, for all my gain would only be my loss, and, as I know that upon my religion hangs the destiny of my soul, I will, by his grace, be faithful until death shall close my earthly mission, and, though the hosts of sin press me hard, I trust that I shall come out more than conqueror in the end, through him that loved me and gave himself for me. Oh! what love, what wondrous love. I do not know why he has loved me so; but this I do know, that "he does love." "And I am persuaded that neither life nor death, nor angels nor principalities nor powers, nor things present nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate me from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus, our Lord." All I want below is to continue in the love of God. I feel perfectly resigned to every dispensation of his providence. I am perfectly willing to bear his consecrated cross, ever feeling assured that whatever befall me "all things must work together for good to me." "God is love." God loves me, and I know I love him.

A long time I wandered in darkness and sin,
And wondered if ever the light would shine in;
I heard Christian friends tell of rapture divine,
And wished, how I wished that their Saviour were mine.

I heard the glad gospel of "good will to men,"
I read "whosoever," again and again,
I said to my soul, "can that promise be thine?"
And then began hoping that Jesus were mine.

Oh! mercy surprising, he saves even me;
"Thy portion forever, he says," will I be.
On his word I'm resting, assurance divine,
I'm hoping no longer, I know he is mine.
I know he is mine, yes I know he is mine,
I'm hoping no longer, I know he is mine.

JOHN P. KEMP.

OLIVE BRANCH, Louisiana.

That Missionary Resolution.

MR. EDITOR: Please give me a little space this one more time to say a word about that unanimous resolution of the late Alabama Conference, and I will not trouble you any more this whole summer. You have been indulgent; thanks. I am sorry my brethren have gone to law (controversy,) and that before unbelievers, about that resolution for each preacher to give a certain per cent. of his salary to foreign missions. Well, what does it matter whether it was unanimous or not, or passed as Conference business or in caucus? I don't know not being present. What matters that I say? Shall we not do it? What if many of the preachers are on poor circuits and missions, or on starvation salaries? all the easier to spare a little of a little, especially when that little will not meet his necessities. If all the preachers have equally large hearts, why, then, they that are rich have a harder task to give a per cent. of what they have than the poor brother. I am told that the attraction of bodies is according to their size. The more a man has the more he wants. I love to think of that poor widow who so cheaply graduated with the first honor in that high school of devotion to God, over which Jesus presided, and gave her a diploma for her two mites, or all her living. That was the best investment I ever heard of. Why, sir, it did not cost her much. She could have earned as much more before she would have starved—say in twenty hours. Oh! what a trial for my big fat brother on a rich station! Why, he could never do that! I am afraid, and I sincerely sympathize with him.

Come now, my poor brethren, let us move up a little in this line, and show the people of our State our love to God, and trust in him; and we do it every time we are called on for missions, that is the best every time. And, besides, I do not read that the Levites were exempt from tithes. Then, let us give that per cent., and show a stingy church our faith by our works. I here pledge myself to give ten per cent. this year of my salary to foreign missions, and let those who are to pay me say what that tenth shall be; and now, dear doctor, I cut yours, with many thanks for your patience with my scribbling.

J. W. JORDAN

GREENVILLE, ALA., May 8, 1881.

Colportage Sketches—No. 6.

BY A. M. JONES.

A NOBLE WOMAN.

I was canvassing an intelligent, thrifty community. The roads good, the country beautiful, sandy and level. A satisfactory day's work was already done, as forty families had been visited, and more than fifty books placed in the hands of the people. The day being far advanced, the keen wind from the north, caused me to urge my horses forward, hoping to reach the elegant home of Maj. —— before night. While debating the question whether or not I had time to stop again, an imposing two story residence appeared, on a beautiful elevation, a few hundred yards from the road. On coming to the lawn, leading to the house, my intelligent blacks, without any hesitation, turned in, and dashed up to the gate. In a few minutes a well dressed, refined, cultivated lady came out, apologized for the detention, expressed herself as being glad to see me, and began to examine the books. My horses soon became restless, and I shivered with cold, but it did no good, she took her time. Having minutely inspected the entire lot, she selected five and asked the price. While counting the money, in a very business like manner, she said: "I have seven children, and want a Bible for each, but this is all the money on hand; if you will call on your return I will get two more." As she was a widow, and thinking it doubtful as to my returning that way, I proposed to give her the other two Bibles. "No, no," she replied, with a little animation, "I am plenty able to pay for them, but, not having sold my cotton, am at this time short of money; will have plenty next week." After a moment's reflection, she continued: "As it will be more pleasant for the children to receive them all at the same time, I will take the other two, with the understanding that in the event you pass the road again you must call and get the money." "I am glad," she remarked, as she turned away with seven Bibles in her arms, "to get these nice books. We all read the Bible every night and Sunday, and will have no trouble now, as each one will have a copy."

I learned from others that this excellent lady was the daughter of wealthy parents, and had been brought up in ease, luxury and affluence. The thorough education and pious training, received in a refined Christian home, at the hands of a devoted father and affectionate mother, sustained her when the stern realities of life and reverses of fortune came. Early in the ante-war her husband, a noble gentleman, a planter of large means, entered the army, and fell in one of the first battles. When the struggle was over, and peace again smiled upon the country, she was the mother of seven children. That part of her husband's vast estate which was not swept away by the war was encumbered by large indebtedness, much more than the cash value of the entire property, had it been forced upon the market. Dishonor, poverty, and want looked her and her innocent children in the face, but what could be done. She had never known want, nor endured a hardship in her life. Friends advised her to secure her home and part of the land, and let the debts go unpaid. This she could not do, because, in her opinion, it was wrong and dishonorable not to pay a debt. After days and weeks of the most extreme anxiety and earnest prayer, all the latent energy of her nature was aroused, and she resolved, by the help of God, to pay her husband's debts, save the honor of his name, redeem the property, and support and educate her children. Making some compromise with the creditors as to time, she took charge of her own business, employed laborers, contracted with tenants, and in a few years the last dollar was paid, and she was in the possession of her elegant home, with the comforts and many of the luxuries of life. All this was accomplished, too, during a period of great financial pressure. Cotton declined from forty-five to less than ten cents per pound. Many banks, both North and South, suspended, the best business men of the country failed, while others, taking advantage of the degenerate times, made over their property, and took refuge behind the bankrupt law. While strong men gave up in despair, deplored the disasters of war, complained of the hardness of the times and the treachery of men, this noble woman applied herself to business, adopted the most rigid economy, did her own house-work and cooking, and now is in the enjoyment of a handsome estate, well prepared to support and educate her children. And, more than all this, she is bringing up her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord by giving them a religious as well as a literary education. In the day of eternity they will rise up and call her blessed. In an hour after bidding this good woman adieu, I was comfortably lodged in the sumptuous home of Maj.

"Thy Will be Done."

These words fell from the lips of our beloved friend and sister, Catherine Childers, as she felt the waters of death gathering about her feet; feet that had walked in our Saviour's footsteps for more than forty years; walked not haltingly or doubtfully, but willing, cheerful, steady walking, taking up life's trials, that often pressed hard upon her, with a sweet resignation and an unfaltering trust, and clinging, oh! so firmly to the hand that chastened her, exclaiming with Job: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him."

For many long years she gathered sheaves, full ripe sheaves, for her Master's use, and when the once swift, willing hands lost their strength, she folded them, not in idleness, but in patience and murmuring submission, remembering the dear words of comfort that so often come to God's children when the working time is over, like scintillations from the very jewels that form the arches of heaven's high dome: "They serve too best who patient stand and wait." And this she waited and served until, on the bright Easter morn of 1881, God called her, and as ever, when his dear voice spoke, she answered quickly: "Yes, dear Lord, thy will be done."

Her place as mother, aunt, sister and friend can never be filled; faithful, tender and true in all the relations of life, devoted to her church and pastors, ever kind and loving to all, with a rigid adherence to what she felt to be her duty in all things, she lived, and now, while we sit with tearful eyes and throbbing hearts, missing her dear presence, and her ever "God bless you," as her parting benediction, she gathers her robe about her, presses her crown of rejoicing upon the rested head, and, with harp in hand, sits at the feet of Jesus, looking up into his dear face, and drinking in the love that beams from his eyes ere she sends from her lips and harp the praises to his holy name, which are filling her heart, and causing the very chords of her harp to vibrate with the anticipated melody. Precious friend, you are enjoying that rest for which you so often sighed, and heaven is richer for your coming, while we, who so tenderly loved you, can only sit and wait our call, which may God, in his great kindness, prepare us to answer, as readily as did our sainted friend, "Thy will be done."

J. ALICE S.

Rev. D. M. Hudson.

MR. EDITOR: In the memorial sketch of Rev. D. M. Hudson, written by Bro. Bancroft, I think there are some slight errors, which should be corrected. He mentions his teaching school in McKinley. I had the town of McKinley under my pastoral care for three years. If Bro. Hudson ever taught school at that place I never heard it mentioned.

He certainly was not teaching there when he attached himself to our church. In the year 1852 Rev. Daniel Duncan and myself were on Morengo circuit. Young Hudson was then teaching in a neighborhood called Rembert Hills, boarding at the house of Dr. Edwin A. Pocllnitz. His associations here were with Methodists of the first-class in point of wealth, intelligence and piety. In the autumn of that year we held a camp meeting in the bounds of the circuit. Beside the preachers on the circuit, there were present Revs. A. J. Crawford, J. T. Heard, P. E., Drs. A. H. Mitchell, William H. Milburn, Thomas H. Foster, A. McBryde and T. S. Abernathy, Sr.

Young Hudson came to the altar as a penitent, found peace, and was immediately impressed with the belief that it was his duty to preach the gospel. About two weeks after this he accompanied me to an afternoon appointment, and, knowing his impressions, I took him into the pulpit to close the exercises, which he did by exhortation, singing and prayer. This was his first attempt to exercise in public. He would have been licensed to preach, and recommended to the Annual Conference immediately, but, being a probationer in the church, the matter was deferred till the following year.

JOHN C. HUCKABEE.

ALBHART, TEXAS, May 20, 1881.

Obituaries.

GREEVES.—MRS. C. T. REEVES died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Augusta S. Bosworth, in Canton, Miss., May 6, 1881, aged eighty-four years. Her maiden name was Walker. She was a native of Georgia, but removed to Mississippi in 1814 and was a resident of Madison county for thirty-seven years. She was twice married, her first husband, Mr. John G. Towns, was the eldest brother of Governor Towns of Georgia. Four children were the fruit of this marriage, two of whom are yet living in Texas. By her second marriage she had three children, only one of whom, survives her, viz: Mrs. A. S. Bosworth with whom she lived the last ten years of her life and who, notwithstanding the multiplicity of care and responsible duties upon her, seemed never to tire in her kindly offices and affectionate care of her aged and infeebled mother.

Mrs. Reeves was a communicant in the Methodist Church for fifty-three years. She loved the house of God and the church of her choice, and was constant in attendance upon the public and social means of grace as long as her health would permit. The numerous marginal notes found in her old hymn book, Hinde and Jay's Daily Exercises, give evidence of her fondness for devotional exercises in private as well as public. For example, on the margin of the hymn commencing "I love to steal awhile away," which, "My favorite hymn" (in her Jay's Daily Exercises, on the last day text, dated January 1, 1875 is written, "Kept watch night thirty-eight years since I began, and have never missed one time." All through her old family Bible were marked texts and marginal notes, telling time and occasion and minister by whom the word was preached. She has been a woman of a strong mind and vigorous constitution, always full of energy and delighting greatly in domestic duties, making her home comfortable as all can testify who enjoyed her hospitality in her better days. But during the last few years of her life, her mind sympathizing with her enfeebled body her memory became so impaired that she scarcely remembered anything save her fealty to her God. Her face always brightened and her memory seemed quickened whenever the subject of religion was introduced. Her last illness was severely afflictive caused by a fall, producing a severe facture of the ankle bone, necessitating amputation. But her clear views of the wisdom of God's Providence, her strong faith and hearty acquiescence in the divine will, enabled her to meet it with fortitude, which exhibited in a wonderful manner the power of God's grace to sustain his faithful ones in the day of trial, so that when she felt keenly the afflictive hand that was upon her, she recognized in it the chastenings of a Father's love. Hence her constant language was "Thy will of the Lord be done."

R. S. WOOLWAY.

KELLY.—ROBERT E. KELLY was born in Lauderdale county, Miss., January 7, 1851, and died of pleuro-pneumonia, in Washington county, Miss., April 15, 1881, after a short illness of twelve days. He contracted this disease setting up with a sick friend. In the death of Brother Kelly the church has lost one of its best members and brightest jewels and society one of its most worthy associates. True many hearts have saddened by this sad bereavement of Almighty God; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope.

Brother Kelly professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1879, under the administration of W. P. Andrews, of the Mississippi Conference, of which church he lived a faithful and consistent member, and died in full triumph of the Christian faith, religion being his greatest theme of conversation, taking great delight in all religious services. He had served as class-leader, steward, Sabbath school superintendent, in which capacity he was serving at the time of his death, giving perfect satisfaction. Brother Kelly was a faithful and zealous soldier of the cross. He was ever at his post, having been his pastor for eighteen months, I know how to appreciate his many Christian traits of character. His house was always open to ministers of the gospel. In him they found a true and benevolent friend, always cheering and consoling the pastors, and aiding them to the utmost of his ability. Brother Kelly leaves a widowed sister-in-law and her two little boys, whom he had cared for since the death of his brother with a father's care. They are now being cheered and counselled by his friends, and they have this precious promise of the Saviour to bear them up: "I will not forsake those who trust in me."

Brother Kelly leaves three sisters in East Mississippi, and many friends in this county, to mourn his loss.

W. T. SHELL, Ex-Pastor.

MCARTHER.—MRS. EULLIE F. MCARTHUR, wife of Wm. McArther, died April 27, 1881, in Santa Rosa county, Florida, near Coon Hill Church. She connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in girlhood, and from that time until her death she was a consistent member. Through her consistent life and prayers she was made the instrument in God's hands of leading her husband to the foot of the cross. Sister Lillie was a sweet and cheerful Christian. She was a good wife, ever willing to deny herself for the comfort of her companion. She was a sweet mother, ever gentle yet firm. She was a devoted sister, with great tenderness. She was a true friend, at all times ready and willing to do all in her power to render those around her happy. She was a great help to her pastor; at all times remembering him in her prayer, and ever met him with a sweet smile. Her death was a sad one, only sick a few hours; her sufferings were very great, she endured them without a murmur. She was fully submissive. A little while before the sweet and gentle spirit left the body, she called for her husband and her two darling little children, and bid them good-bye, asking God's blessings upon them. She then turned to her husband's sister, and begged her to take the little ones. She was fully conscious to death, and told her loved ones that angels had come for her, that she must go, and, bidding all good-bye, sweetly died in sight of heaven. Sister Lillie McArther was a sister of our friend and brother, Rev. W. F. H. Comberly, of the Alabama Conference. She has left to mourn her loss her husband and two little children, brothers and sisters, and many friends.

May God sustain the bereaved ones, and may we all so live as to meet her in the haven of rest.

PASTOR.

TOOKE.—REV. JAMES J. TOOKE, recently from Columbus, Ga., died at the residence of his son, J. Wilberly Tooke, of Mt. Lebanon, La., after five weeks' painful suffering, patiently endured, on the eleventh day of May, 1881. He was born in Laurens county, Ga., April 27, 1811, and was seventy years old when he died. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1831, at Centerville, Talbot county, Ga., and was faithful until he was called from labor to rest. He died in full triumph of a living faith in Jesus. His end was peace, and triumph over suffering and death. He had filled many offices in the church, and was a lucid preacher when he died. He was a devoted father and an affectionate husband. His wife died last December. He had the satisfaction of being with his children before he died. He bore his suffering without a murmur: so patient, so resigned.

H. PARVIN.

Columbus, Ga., papers please copy.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1881.

WHO IS MY NEIGHBOR?

A PARABLE.

A traveler, journeying long ago
Down from Jerusalem to Jerico,

Fell among thieves, who wounded him and fled,
Leaving him stripped of raiment and half dead.

By chance there came a certain priest that way,
Who looked on him, but left him where he lay.

Likewise a Levite, walking in his pride,
With eyes turned heavenward, passed on the other side.

But a Samaritan, while journeying, drew
Near to the place where lay the wounded Jew

Who had compassion, and with pious toil
Bound up his wounds and poured in wine and oil

Nor ever from his tender labor ceased
Till he had borne him up his own good beast

Unto the quiet shelter of an inn,
And on the morrow, faring forth again,

Careless alike of trouble or of cost,
Took out two pence and gave them to the host,

Saying, "Take care of him; another day,
Whate'er thou spendest more, I will repay."

Whom thinkest thou, was neighbor to the man
The priest, the Levite, or Samaritan?

He that showeth pity? Go, and do likewise!
He loveth mercy more than sacrifice.

—Joseph A. Torrey, in Sunday School Times.

Notes of Life.

BY BISHOP ROBERT PAINE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

LORENZO DOW.

Among the events that occurred while at school near Leasburg, N. C., was the appearance of the eccentric Lorenzo Dow. He was a New Englander, had been admitted on trial about 1798 into an Eastern Conference, had traveled two or three years; but as he would not be confined to any one circuit, he got clear of all restraint by becoming an "Independent." His travels as a preacher extended over the United States and Great Britain. In person and manner he was singular. Austere, taciturn, and peculiar in dress and address coming suddenly, and going away as soon as in his oracular style he had preached—making appointments for twelve months in advance, and true to the day and hour appearing as promised—his eccentricities soon gave him notoriety, and his shrewdness and practical sense enabled him to excite an impression in the minds of the ignorant and credulous that he was superhuman. It happened that he had passed through that country a year before, and had said that he would preach there in twelve months. It was also known that he had been recently in England, and nothing further was known of his whereabouts; but as he had never failed to meet his appointments, it was confidently expected he would be there. To add to the general excitement, one of those great tides of wide spread sensation, born of superstition and deception, which occasionally swept over the world, respecting the end of the world and the coming of Christ, was expected to culminate on the same day. A Yankee preacher named Hughes had turned prophet, and found out what "neither the angels nor the Son himself" knew, the exact day of Judgment. The expected concurrence of these great events drew an immense crowd together. "Hughes' prophecy" had already run many crazy. They made away with all their property, dug holes, sought caves, and had religious meetings continuously. Nothing else was thought of or talked about. No wonder, then, the crowd at that place was immense. It seemed a good occasion for the great event. A great common danger brings men together.

The predicted day of doom dawned beautiful and bright. It was a universal holiday, stores, shops, schools were shut; masters and servants, mills and factories, all stopped—for who could work? Lorenzo Dow and Judgment-day coming together was enough to arouse the dullest soul. My father's residence was some distance from Leasburg, and he discredited the prophecy of Hughes. The Baptist minister in the neighborhood—Brown—concluded to go. I went with him. Hughes was a Baptist preacher.

After the vast congregation had met in a large grove where seats and a platform had been prepared, and while the surging and anxious audience was waiting, just at midday I heard the rattle of wheels, and saw a little wagon dash rapidly forward and stop on the road. A thin, tall, dark-featured man, with an enormous beard and in strange apparel, leaped out, and without seeming to notice anything, walked hurriedly into the stand, straightened himself and calmly looked around over the wondering multitude. His long black hair hanging loosely over his shoulders he then turned back with a long tin comb, and fastened it on the back of his head. Then he leaped up on the book-board, which had been placed between two trees; but not being securely fastened, it turned a little, and he had to leap off to prevent falling. As it determined not to be foiled, he tried it again, and came very near falling on the gaping crowd below. This second delay created a laugh generally, and with much gravity and severity of manner he reproved their levity. He presently proceeded, in a shrill, cracked voice, to classify his audience into "the Christian, the gentleman and lady and the tag rag and bobtail." He attacked Calvinism, the Hughes' prophecy and the anti-penitentiary voters—the question being then before the people saying on this last topic, that if his hearers had seen seven Irishmen hang on one tree, as he had lately seen in Ireland, they would vote for a State Penitentiary.

The day was calm and cloudless. If a thunder-storm had occurred, what a scene might have been witnessed! Dow came, talked and passed away—but the great day came not; yet nearly all that vast host have now gone to their doom.

—Nashville Christian Advocate.

"That Which Is Perfect."

About the future there is much that is mystery. The fathers, where are they? Away from the world, in what place do they abide? To our solicitude there is no answer. Yet, concerning the dead in Christ, we have bright and certain knowledge. When the Christian leaves the world, he goes into the presence of Jesus, he receives his welcome, he enters into tenderest communion, he joins in his most intimate service, he resembles his unsullied splendor. The Christian dead see Jesus as he is; know as they are known, and are ever with and like their Lord. Concerning much we are ignorant, but this is revealed. And more. In the welcome on that eternal shore, "that which is perfect is come;" in the communion of that paradise, "that which is perfect is come;" in the service rendered before the throne, "that which is perfect is come;" in the resemblance to him that sitteth thereon, "that which is perfect is come."

To the Christian this is coming. All else is going. Time is going, its months and years are fast leaving him; acquaintances are going, associates of childhood have been long borne to the grave. Men he had known in business, where are they? His parents are going; the tongue that taught him that blessed Name cleaves to the roof of its mouth. His family is going, some to a manhood whither he can not accompany them, others he is following to the grave to-day, to leave them there, to-morrow to lie by their side. Life is going. But that which is perfect is coming, coming by the resistless energy of the Holy Ghost, coming within him and upon him, coming with all the blessedness of heaven, with all the beauty of God. Do you know something of the serenity of trusting in the mercy of Jesus? Have you heard his assuring voice in the soul? Then that which is perfect shall come. Have you had with him momentary communion, heart-burning, world eclipsing fellowship? Then, that which is perfect shall come. Has there been a time, when all things in heaven and earth would not suffice to express your keen desire to do his will? Then, that which is perfect shall come. And a more testing and conclusive question still—have you ever gone out of yourself, thrown the arms of your heart around an enemy, and while he was cursing you, yearned to bless him? Then, that which is perfect shall come. More certain than to-morrow's sunrise, the perfect life is yours. As dawn is swallowed up in day, as the single flowers of the early year are lost in the exhaustless life and beauty of the summer, these earnests shall be lost in the perfect character and the perfect world.

What then, can compare with the claims and the charms of the spiritual life? Suppose there were on earth a country where, in health, that which is perfect had come; where, in purity of character, that which is perfect had come; where, in all the tender relations of domestic life, that which was perfect had come; where, in society and in government, in cottage and in palace, that which is perfect had come; where, in man and field and air and sky, that which was perfect had come—how ships would groan with human cargoes destined for its shores! In comparison, fields of gold and seas of pearl would cease to draw. Yet the brightest conception of such a life falls immeasurably below what the dying Christian finds in heaven. Heaven is the perfection of what Infinite Love designed for a man; heaven is humanity perfect, glorified, crowned.

And to that perfect state Jesus is the way. To read and hear of him, to believe in him, to love and commune with him, this is the way. Myriads are treading it, a multitude which no man can number have found its blissful end. They call us. From the end they say to us, Come, receive our welcome to glory! Share our communion of joy! Enter our service of love! Possess our life of intense and endless bliss! From the way, too, friends and kindred say, Come! Come, know the life of faith, of allegiance, of communion, of service and love on earth. Know Jesus now, and grow in that knowledge, until by death you shall enter the land where the life "which is perfect is come." —Benjamin Waugh.

A WIFE'S FAITH.—In one of the towns of England there is a beautiful little chapel, and a very touching story is told in connection with it. It was built by an infidel. He had a praying wife, but he would not listen to her, would not allow her pastor even to take dinner with them, would not look at the Bible, would not allow religion even to be talked of. She made up her mind, seeing she could not influence him by her voice, that every day she would pray to God at twelve o'clock for his salvation. She said nothing to him, but every day at that hour she told the Lord about her husband. At the end of twelve months there was no change in him. But she did not give it up. Six months more went past. Her faith began to waver, and she said, "Will I have to give him up at last? Perhaps when I am dead, he will answer my prayers." When she had got to that point it seemed just as if God had got her where he wanted her. The man came home to dinner one day. His wife was in the dining-room waiting for him, but he did not come in. She waited for some time, and timidly looked for him all through the house. At last, she thought of looking into the little room where she had prayed so often. There he was praying at the same bed with agony, where she had prayed for so many months, asking forgiveness for his sins. And this is a lesson for you wives who have infidel husbands. The Lord say that woman's faith and answered her prayers.—Moody's Child Stories.

THE GIRLS OF THE PERIOD. The surprised disapproval with which the young women of the present meet any form of criticism shows the confidence with which they rest upon the idea that the world was created in their behoof, while the elderly half of creation are to stand aside or minister to their wants. Fathers are a convenient species of money-mill. Mothers were made to keep house and provide bewitching costumes for the ornamental part of the establishment. The life led by the young society girl has its natural effect. Before marriage she is everything; after marriage she is nothing. Domesticity entombs her. She loses herself in her children, or sinks into semi-invalidism. Society in this country is so much in the hands of the young we naturally look to the young for its reformation. The well educated girl has a part to play which she does wrong to shirk. If the morals of the American girls are almost instinctively good, and command universal respect, her manners are too often the scoff of satirical foreigners. The idle girl, crazy for excitement, who destroys her digestion with sweets, who allows the company of young men of very questionable character, because the young man is always an essential to her happiness; who will take up, indeed, with any creature in the male form rather than be left unattended, whose life is full of noise, who is half-educated, who has no home training, and finds family life the dullest resource of all—this gayest and most splendid butterfly, after marriage sinks into insignificance. More than forty years ago De Tocqueville saw this tendency of our American life with astonishment; and though clubs and coteries and new ideas have done something to change it, it still remains fast-rooted in our civilization.—Augusta Larned.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—A Calcutta missionary says that idolatry in that city is rapidly becoming an irksome thing. The number of images made for worship is constantly diminishing, and worshipers are growing indifferent. The census of missions is to be taken next year, and it is estimated that it will show an increase of 200,000 native Christians in India, Ceylon and Burmah for the last ten years.

—In Australia the Home Missions Committee appointed to supervise the distribution of the "Fund raised for distressed circuits" has surprised the beneficiary Churches by adopting a resolution, by the decisive vote of 19 to 5, to administer the fund hereafter as a loan, instead of as a gift. The innovation is likely to prove most satisfactory and useful to all interested.

—The Presbyterians are showing great activity in Spain. There is a presbytery there, that of Andalusia. It is small, consisting of eight churches, of which membership is small and oppressed with poverty. Nevertheless, it proposes to found a school for training pastors, evangelists, and teachers, and has purchased a building for a college and a center of missionary work.

—"Only ten years ago Livingstone was lost in Africa, and now a company is established at Zanzibar which quotes rates at which they would carry merchandise to lake Tanganyika and Victoria Nyanza." Four years ago Sir Samuel Baker said that no man in his senses would think of sending a mission to Mesa.

—In England, a "Woman's Prayer Union, to seek God's blessing on the two hundred millions of their own sisters in China, has recently been started. Its objects are, to pray for the women of China every day; to try and interest others in the work of evangelization; and to seek for spiritual guidance in personal efforts on their own behalf.

—The Foreign Missionary says that Otsuka Ine, of California, once a gambler, but converted over seven years ago, has gone back to Canton, China, to study for the ministry. One of the native Christians in Oakland, Cal., left a bequest of $100 toward the support of this man and one other convert.

—The Church Missionary Society, the greatest of all existing missionary societies, has 19 clergymen in its foreign fields, of whom 18 are Europeans. Its communicant number 28,510. Its receipts the past year were $1,105,825, the largest amount received by any missionary society.

—A Swedish lady, writing from Stockholm, says: The Bible women are doing a great amount of good among the lower grades of society in this Swedish capital. In connection with their work is a beautiful refuge for Magdalens. Many earnest workers are at work among us.

—Domestic slavery is common among the Chinese, and the majority of slaves are females. Boys are occasionally bought and sold, but not as slaves. They are usually brought up as adopted sons. When a Chinamen is hard off losing money, his first thought is to sell his daughter.

—Mr. Jessup, of Syria, in a recent very interesting address at Milwaukee, said: "I would have done Dr. Ray Palmer's heart good to have heard three hundred Mohammedan girls singing the hymn, 'My faith looks up to Thee,' translated into their own language."

—The Fiji Islands, which are now a district of the Australian Wesleyan Methodist Church, now have 841 chapels and 291 other preaching places, 10 missionaries, 48 native missionaries, and 23,271 members. There are besides 5,431 on trial for membership.

—A pastor in Halifax states that his church gave last year, for religious purposes, a sum which averaged one hundred dollars to each family. Let all the churches emulate this scale of giving, and the world's evangelization might be speedily accomplished.

—"The Gospel in all Lands" has come under the exclusive control of the Rev. Eugene R. Smith, of 64 Bible House, New York, and is now issued promptly. It contains a great variety of interesting missionary intelligence and is profusely illustrated.

—Recently a whole family consisting of nine persons, were baptized in the Free Church, Calcutta. The head of the family was brought to Christ through the influence of his wife, and she received her instruction through the Zenana missionary.

—The 50 Congregational Churches in the Sandwich Islands, with a total membership of 7,258, gave last year $3,392.92 for foreign missions, or nearly a half dollar per member. Will the knowledge of this fact increase our liberality?

—The American Baptist Home Mission Society reports receipts for the financial year just closed of $235,669, an increase of $11,681. The indebtedness, however, is greater than last year by $11,681. The total being nearly $30,000.

—The Indian Annual Conference is an established fact. It was organized by Bishop Merrill, amid universal approval and joy on the night of March 19, 1881. Those that turn the world upside down have come hither also.

—How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth.—Isa. 52:7.

—It is said that 30,000 out of 40,000 townships of France are open to evangelical preaching. A Catholic priest recently complained that he could not go anywhere in France without seeing Bibles and Protestant tracts.

—Dr. Legge, and expert in Chinese matters, calculates that at the present rate of mission increase there will be, in 1913, 26,000,000 church members and 100,000,000 professing Christians in the Chinese Empire.

—There are 35,132 lay members in connection with the foreign missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and 276 churches and chapels. There are also 256 day schools, with 8,376 pupils.

—Rev. L. Gulic, agent of the American Bible Society, lately started a hand-cart in Tokio, Japan, for the sale of the Scriptures; and in five days 2,400 copies, either whole or part were sold.

—The Chinese in California connected with the mission of the Congregational Church, last year contributed $1,597 40. They have formed a Congregational Association of Christian Chinese.

—Rev. Wm. Taylor has sent 22 missionaries to Brazil since last September. He expects to sail for South America, June 5. The mission is prospering through faithful labor.

—The Italian mission (Episcopal,) established seven years ago in New York, has now a membership of 600, of whom 400 have been confirmed, and Sunday-school with 400 scholars.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—Bishop Doane in a recent address to the Diocesan Convention at Albany, recently, referred pointedly to the trouble experienced by Churches in filling vacancies made by the removal of their rectors to other fields. He offered two suggestions on the subject—one, a clearer law to protect rectors from inconsiderate resolves, and parishes from unwise and harmful vacancies; and the other, allowing the Bishop, when he receives notice of a rector's resignation, to assent or dissent.

—What other land has done it? The natives of Aneityum in the South Sea Islands have paid the British Bible Society £700, being full value for the publication in their own language of the New Testament and the Psalms, and have collected money in advance to pay full price for the Old Testament as soon as printed.

—Report comes by the way of England that a number of Catholic priests are making application to join the Presbyterian Church of Canada. They profess to be heartily sick of the sentimentalism of Rome and desirous of learning more clearly the way of eternal life.

—Rev. E. P. Hammond's revival work in Toronto continues without abatement of interest. Daily morning meetings held in Shaftesbury Hall and the evening audiences are so immense that overflow meetings are a necessity. Many conversions are chronicled.

—The American Board has sixteen churches in Japan. Four new churches were organized and 121 new members were added last year. Twelve of the sixteen churches are self supporting. The contributions amount to an average of $20 a member.

—The Cumberland Presbyterians have held a very interesting meeting at Caney Creek, Chickasaw Nation, where a church was organized last October. Eight persons joined the church and it now has 25 members, all full-blooded Chickasaw Indians.

—The "Aurora," published at Rome, announces the formation of a new association for collecting money for the necessities of the Pope the amount of daily tribute demanded from all Catholics being one centime, or six sous, per month.

—A writer in the Nonconformist and Independent estimates that the various churches of the Methodist family provide for the wants of 5,138,000 persons, or for nearly one in eight of the whole population of England and Wales.

—At the March coming union of the First Presbyterian church of Oakland, Cal., 220 united with it, of whom 179 were by profession of faith. This is one of the fruits of the good revival under Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

—The members of the Minnesota Conference have resolved they will abstain from all secular papers, and express the judgment that church notices ought not to be published in a Sunday issue.

—At the annual meeting, recently, of the Scotch Society for the Evangelization of Italy it was stated that the efforts to raise £60,000 for the support of Waldensian pastors has produced so far about £15,000.

—The clergy of the sees of Rochester and London met in St. Paul's for a "quiet day." They were to silent prayer a long time, and then listened to an address by the Bishop of London.

—The late Amelia A. Cobb, of New York, bequeathed $300,000 to Presbyterian missions and charities, and $5,000 to found three scholarships in Presbyterian theological seminaries.

—Rev. Dr. J. B. Bennett, who died recently in New Zealand, at the age of 72, was at one time the editor of the London Watchman and afterward editor of the New Zealander.

—Congregational statistics show that 105 churches have been formed the past year, 205 ministers ordained or installed, 70 pastors dismissed, 47 ministers married, and 76 deceased.

—A society is attached to Mr. Spurgeon's London Tabernacle to furnish clothing to needy persons and their families. It distributed $1,200 worth of goods last year.

—The Congregationalist learns that within three months fifty Christians have been killed by Mohammedans within a few miles of Robert College at Constantinople.

—The membership of Mr. Spurgeon's church is 5,284; there has been a net increase of 34 the past year; 106 were excluded from membership for non-attendance.

—In Chester, England, the tower of St. John's church, 127 feet in height and containing a chime of bells, fell with a great crash. It was built in the Saxon era.

—The Presbyterian Church in England has 691 Presbyteries, 219 ministers, and 61,256 communicants. The receipts for all purposes the past year were $900,000.

—It was recently stated by the Synod of the Free Church of Scotland that the limited income of the ministers actually enforced celibacy among them.

—It has been predicted by a member of the French Cabinet, that before the present generation has passed away France will have become Protestant.

—The King of Sweden has asked the churches of Sweden to take up a collection for the benefit of Zion Swedish Lutheran Church, in Philadelphia.

—The foundation stone of the new Wesleyan chapel in London, intended to be a memorial of the late Sir Francis Lycett, were laid March 2.

—The National Bible Society of Scotland put in circulation last year 141,161 Bibles, 151,946 Testaments, and 136,817 portions of Scripture.

—The London Religious Tract Society has circulated over 77,000,000 books and tracts in one hundred and thirty languages and dialects.

—Our friends in Japan are very properly jubilant over the completion of the translation of the New Testament in Japanese.

—Since Dr. Sonderville's evangelical labors in Florence, Italy, the boys of that city sing Moody and Sankey hymns in the street.

—One church in Lagos, Western Africa has contributed during the past three years £3,112 for church purposes.

—The Cumberland Presbyterian Church has near 1,400 ministers, 2,517 congregations, 111,863 communicants.

—One hundred and thirty Indians were confirmed by Bishop Hare, of Niobrara, during the past year.

—New York has a Chinese Young Men's Christian Association with a present roll of forty members.

—There are now few Italian towns, even of the secondary importance, without a Protestant church.

—Theological Seminaries.—A considerable religious interest exists among the students at Princeton.

Our Young People.

A SPLENDID GAME.

A hungry spider made a web
Of thread, so very fine.
Your tiny fingers scarce could feel
The little, slender line.

Round about, and round about,
And round about it spun,
Straight across and back again,
Until the web was done.

Oh, what a pretty shining web
It was when it was done!
The little flies all came to see
It hanging in the sun.

Round about, and round about,
And round about they danced
Across the web and back again
They darted and they glanced.

The hungry spider sat and watched
The happy little flies;
It saw all around about its head,
It had so many eyes.

Round about, and round about,
And round about they go
Across the web and back again,
Now low again, now low.

Then hungry, very hungry,
Says the spider to the fly,
"If you would come into my house,
We'd eat supper, you and I."

But round about, and round about
And round about once more,
Across the web and back again
They flitted as before.

For all the flies were much too wise
To venture near the spider.
They flapped their little wings, and flew
In circles rather wider.

Round about, and round about,
And round about they,
Across the web and back again
And then they flew away.

—Kindergarten Messenger.

How the Kitchen Boy Became a Bishop.

About two hundred and eighty years ago a clerk was wanted in the parish church of Peterborough, a little village in Devonshire; and one of the candidates was a young lad about sixteen years of age, who came from a neighboring village. But he did not get the place because of his youth. He was very much cast down. He was the son of poor, but worthy parents, and one of a large family of brothers and sisters. He said to his mother, with a heavy heart, "I must not be a burden any longer upon father and you; I shall get out and find work of some kind or other, elsewhere, and support myself."

So he bade farewell to his father and his brothers and sisters, and, with a little bundle in his hand, he left his home. His mother went with him two or three miles of the way. When at length she was obliged to turn back, she knelt down with him at the roadside and asked God to bless and go with him and keep him from every evil way. Then she took out some money and gave it to him for the journey. Then two kissed each other, and, weeping, parted.

By and-by he arrived at the city of Exeter. He went to the cathedral; he wandered about the streets; he called at the shops; but of all, to whom he applied that day, no one had work for him. At last he found himself standing at the window of a book shop, looking at the rows of books on the shelves within. At that moment, happening to lift his eyes, he caught a glimpse of the cathedral; and the thought suddenly shot into his mind that there was a connection between those books and the cathedral. If he, poor though he was, could become learned in books, he might be worthy of a place some day in a cathedral.

It was a mere thought, and it soon passed away from his mind. He left Exeter and traveled on and on, till he found himself in Oxford. He knew nobody there. But, having passed through Exeter, and knowing that Exeter College was the one to which Devonshire students went, he knocked at the gates of that college and asked if they wanted a lad like him, for any work he could do. They did want such a lad as he. And in a short time he was employed to scour pans, to clean knives, to brush shoes, and in other ways, help in the kitchen.

John was a faithful servant, and soon became a favorite with everybody about the college. And, as he had a good many hours of leisure, he set himself to learn Latin and Greek. And by-and-by the dons going past, saw the kitchen boy poring over loose leaves of grammars, and would ask him jokingly, if he was reading Homer or the Latin poets.

But after awhile, one and then another gave up joking at the lad and went over to him, and saw that by himself alone, he had come very near to the reading both of Homer and the Latin poets. And then the dons took him away from the kitchen and made room for him in the classes of their college, and he became one of their foremost scholars, and one in whom they all felt pride.

And by-and-by John was made a fellow, and then a professor of divinity, and for twenty seven years he labored in that college, as a professor and writer of books, where he had served as kitchen-boy. And at the end of that time he was made a Bishop of Worcester, and therein proved the truth of the thought, which shot through his mind, at the window of the book-shop in Exeter, that there was a way through books, to a place in a cathedral.

Bishop Prideaux was never ashamed of his early trials. He kept the leathern clothes, in which he had set out from his father's house, to his old age. He loved to re-visit the village in which he was born. He greatly loved his parents. In his kindness he would plan surprise visits. He would bring his doctor's scarlet gown and put it on to please them. He never tired of showing them reverence. Often he would say, "If I had got the clerk's place in Peterborough, I should never have been Bishop in Worcester."

He loved to think that his mother's prayer had been answered in the happiest events of his life. And he did not think differently when the happy years came to an end, and years of disgrace came in their stead. Those who triumphed in that war drove him from Worcester, but he still felt and said, that all of this he had been planned out for him by God.—Sunday Magazine.

A Stranger in the School.

A large school of boys and girls were coming over their lessons. The teacher tried hard to keep order, to make all take to their studies, to help those who needed aid, and to make all happy. He opened the doors and windows to give them fresh air; but all would not do. Some felt discouraged with their lessons, some felt sleepy, some felt cross, and everything seemed to drag and linger. By and by the heavy tread of a foot on the doorstep was heard, and, without knocking, in walked a hard faced old man, somewhat old in years, but with a firm step. The children at first felt afraid of him, but they soon found that beneath his hard looks there was a bright eye, a pleasant smile and a kind heart. But, instead of sitting down by the side of one of the little girls who was trying to get her spelling lesson.

There were tears of discouragement in her eyes.

"Well, what's the matter with our little one?"

"O, sir, I can't get my lesson. It's so long, and the words are so hard. I can never learn them!"

"Let us see. How many words are there in one column?"

"Fifteen, sir."

"And how many columns in your lesson?"

"Three, sir."

"Very well. That makes forty-five words to be learned. How many of these are easy, so that you can spell them at once? Count them."

"Twenty-five, sir."

"Then you have twenty which you call hard. Now, take the first one, look at it sharp, see every letter in it, count the letters, see just how the word looks. Now shut your eyes, and see if you can still see just how the word looks. Spell it over softly to yourself. There, now, you spelled it right. Now do so with the next word, and the next, till you have them all."

"O, sir, that is very easy. I can get my lessons now."

Thus he went from seat to seat, and helped all. The scholars forgot the heat. They all had their lessons; the teacher smiled and praised them, and all were happy. Just as he was leaving, the teacher thanked the stranger, and hoped that he would soon call again.

"Oh," said he, "just send for me at any time, and I will come and give any one a lift."

"Pray, sir, by what name shall we ask for you?"

"Mr. Hardsturdy, sir, at your service."—John Todd, in the Household.

Taking off the Shoes.

In Syria people never take off their caps or turbans when entering a house or visiting a friend, but they always leave their shoes at the door. The reason is that their doors are covered with clean mats and rugs and in Moslem houses the men kneel on the rugs to pray, and press their foreheads to the floor; so that it would not be decent or respectful to walk in with dirty shoes, and soil the sajada on which they kneel to pray. They have no foot mats or scrapers, and it is much simpler and cheaper to leave the shoes, dirt and all, at the door.

It is very curious to go into a Syrian school houses and see the pile of shoes at the door. There are new, bright red shoes, and old tattered shoes, and kob-kobs and black shoes, and sometimes yellow shoes. The kob-kobs are wooden clogs, made to raise the feet out of the mud and water, having a little strap over the toe to keep it on the foot. You will often see little boys and girls running down steps and paved streets on these ungainly kob-kobs. Sometimes they slip, then down they go on their noses, kob-kobs fly off and go rattling over the stone, and little Ali, or Yusef, or whatever his name is, begins to shout, "Ya imme! Ya imme!" Oh, my mother! and cries, just like the other children in other countries. But the funniest part is to see the boys when they come out of school and try to find their shoes. There will be fifty boys, and, of course, a hundred shoes, all mixed together in one pile. When school is out, the boys make a rush for the door. Then comes the tug of war. A dozen boys are standing and shuffling on the pile of shoes, looking down, kicking away the other shoes, running their toes into their own, stumbling over the kob-kobs, and then making a dash to get out of the crowd. Sometimes shins will be kicked and hair pulled, and tarbooshes thrown off, and a great screaming follow, which will only cease when the teacher comes with "Asia," or a stick, and quells the riot. That pile of shoes will have to answer for a good many school-boy fights and bruised noses and hard feelings in Syria. You will wonder how they tell their own shoes. So do I. And the boys often wear off each other's shoes by mistake or on purpose, and then you will see Selim with one shoe on and one of Ibrahim's in his hand, shouting and cursing. Ibrahim's father and grandfather, until he gets back his lost property.—Women of the Arabs.

CUNNING OF A FOX.—Many stories told of the crafty fox are doubtless incidents of the imagination. But a writer in the Commercial Bulletin, tells an anecdote which, though taxing belief, he says is vouched for by an eye-witness of the affair;

"Some fishermen on the west coast of Ireland were in the habit of going to a small island, a few hundred yards from the main land, in quest of bait. The island was inhabited by large numbers of rabbits, and could be reached at a low tide by wading, the water there being only a few inches deep."

"One morning they went in their boat very early, it being high tide, and on landing, saw a dead fox lying on the beach. The fur of the animal was all bedraggled, and he seemed to have been drowned. One of the men remarking that his skin was worth something, pitched him into the boat.

"Procuring their bait, they returned to the main land, and the man who had possessed himself of the fox seized him by the tail and flung him on the shore. As soon as the animal struck the beach, he picked himself up with considerable agility for a dead fox, and shot off like a flash among the cliffs, while the men stood staring at each other in mute astonishment.

"The men concluded that he had crossed over to the island during the night, when the tide was low, in search of rabbits, and, finding in the morning that he was cut off from the main land, counterfeited death, with the expectation of thereby procuring a passage to the shore in the boat, an expectation which was fully realized."—Youth's Companion.

BOYS, DON'T BLOCK UP YOUR WAY.—I was sitting in the office of a merchant not long since, when a lad about 16 entered with a cigar in his mouth. He said to the gentleman:

"I would like to get a situation in your shop, to learn a trade, sir."

"I might give you a place, but you carry a bad recommendation in your mouth," said the gentleman.

"I don't think it any harm to smoke, sir; nearly every one smokes now."

"I am sorry to say, my young friend, I can't employ you. If you have money enough to smoke cigars you will be above working as an apprentice, and, if you have not money enough, your love for cigars might make you steal it. No boy who smokes cigars can get employment in my shop."

A word to the wise is sufficient.—The Banner.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:
REV. J. W. HEATH. REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.
REV. C. B. GALLOWAY. REV. C. W. CARTER, D. D.

THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1881.

Centenary College Commencement.

Friday, May 27, in company with Bishop Keener, Dr. Tudor and Dr. Walker, was spent in reaching Baton Rouge; to Donaldsonville on the New Orleans and Texas Pacific, and from thence to Baton Rouge on the swift little mail boat—a long summer day in excellent company. Bro. Daves was in the midst of a protracted meeting preparatory to the quarterly meeting of Saturday and Sunday. Sharing his meeting and his hospitality Friday night, the most of Saturday was spent on the road to Jackson. The Bishop had large experience in driving during the war, and his right hand has not forgotten its cunning. Dr. Walker and Bro. Daves, after their quarterly meeting services, came up on Monday. Our reception at Prof. Wiley's was as cordial as in other years, and we were glad to find the household in health, and looking much as when we parted two years ago.

The Sunday morning congregation in the college chapel was as large as we have generally seen there, and Dr. Tudor's sermon on "Nonconformity to the world, and the transfigured man," was a most timely and eloquent discourse, and altogether a strong and impressive presentation of gospel truth. The Sabbath was closed with a sermon by Bishop Keener at night, preached in the church—a most admirable sermon, and greatly enjoyed by a large audience.

The exhibition of the Preparatory Department, on Monday night, was generous in extent, and well sustained, the young men all doing fairly, and several of them remarkably well. It was somewhat polyglot in character, there being speeches on the programme in Greek, Latin, Spanish, French and German, besides the staple English. Tuesday morning the alumni address was delivered by Rev. E. H. Mounger. His subject was "Character the end of education." The discussion was clear, compact, and abounded in striking and beautiful passages. It has not often fallen to our lot to hear any thing equal to it. After the alumni address came the oratorical contest for "the T. Sumbolt Jones' gold medal." W. R. McDonald, R. Hunter McGimpsey, C. C. Miller and B. Frank Jones were the contestants. All the speeches were of a high order of merit. The medal was awarded to C. C. Miller, and the presentation was very handsomely conducted by Drs. Tudor and Walker. The services of the hour were closed by the presentation of the W. H. N. Magruder gold medal for Greek scholarship. We believe there were only two contestants, the medal being awarded to G. E. Greene, Rev. E. H. Mounger presenting it in a brief but very appropriate speech. At night the oratorical contest for "the Linus Parker gold medal" took place. Speeches were delivered by Charles F. Smith, J. H. Fore, S. J. Davies and M. Anding Bell, the medal being awarded to M. Anding Bell. The speeches, as to matter and manner, were excellent, and we imagine the judges had some difficulty in deciding. After this contest the societies were addressed by C. F. Buck, Esq., of New Orleans. His subject was "Goodness as a necessary element of all true greatness." Mr. Buck is a very pleasing speaker, and his topic was presented in an able and attractive manner. The hour was late, but the speaker held his audience without weariness to the end. There are two societies now, the Union Literary Society and the Franklin Institute. In their respective halls, at different hours, there were presentations of diplomas, pins, badges, and the usual addresses, and impromptu speeches from visitors. We heard of one of the latter, or possibly a trustee, baffling the ushers by halting at the door, and remarking that "they had a fool way in there of calling on people for speeches." Wonderfully happy are these off-hand talks, usually among the best things at commencement. Finer things are rarely heard than the words of advice and instruction from Bishop Keener, Drs. Walker and Tudor, Bro. Daves, Prof. Magruder, Mr. Buck and A. E. Reed. The presence and ardor of so many young and aspiring minds seem to sharpen up the wits of the older people.

On commencement day, Wednesday, the three graduates, Charles Spencer Duke, John Walter Lipscomb and Louis Levy, acquitted themselves well; the first named delivering the Latin salutatory. Mr. Lipscomb took the first honor, his valedictory winning universal applause. In appropriateness of terms, beauty of diction and graceful delivery [illegible] After conferring the degree of Bachelor of Arts upon these young men, President Andrews addressed the class, choosing as his theme "Thoroughness." Like all of the president's baccalaureates, it was terse, practical and instructive. Bishop Keener, president of the Board of Trustees, closed the exercises of the day with a brief and forceful speech, in which he paid a discriminating and affecting tribute to the character and memory of Judge Edward McGehee, and Rev. W. H. Watkins, D. D., members of the board, who had died during the past year. Preambles and resolutions respecting them, passed by the Board of Trustees, will be found in another column.

In summing up our impressions of this commencement, we can state that the report of the examinations indicated great thoroughness, and that the department has been uniformly good. The average excellence of the addresses of the students was high, higher than for years past. President Andrews and Profs. Wiley and Rush, and Bro. Norsworthy, principal of the Preparatory Department, have labored hard and faithfully, and their work is manifest in the scholarship and training of the young men under their care. The course of study is equal to that of the best colleges of the country, and we doubt if better work is done anywhere. The number of students entered during the session was, we believe, 140. Of these seventeen young men preparing for the ministry, ten ministers sons, and several others, are being educated free of tuition. In this respect the college is doing a vital service to the church, and may well claim the assistance of all who love the cause of Christ. The Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences ought by all means to carry out the plan of an annual collection to aid in the education of the young men studying for the ministry. The gift will be returned to them with interest in an able and educated ministry, and in the promotion of every religious interest. The prospects of the college are brighter than they have been for many years, and it is hoped that not less than two hundred students will be in attendance at the opening of the next session in September. The wing-buildings are still in urgent need of repairs, and the great center building would be the better for some renovating touches. These wait for some deviser of liberal things. Five or six thousand dollars would put all the buildings in neat order. How long shall we wait?

We say nothing now about endowment. Repairs and patronage are the most pressing, and these can be secured with ordinary effort. Our preachers, by interesting themselves and their people, can fill the halls of Centenary with students. When the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana become fully awake to the fact that they have in Centenary College a large and valuable property, scarcely equaled by any Methodist institution in the South, and a college in working order and ably manned, pouring out inestimable blessings upon the church and the country, there will be little difficulty in its liberal support. By systematic and continued effort, by canvassing for students, by presenting the claims of the college, the preachers can double the number of students. For moral and religious influence, for thorough scholarship, and for the training and development of character, Centenary College offers inducements of the most satisfactory kind. As the real merits of the institution become better known and appreciated, we are sure that our people will rally to its support.

For Every Man Shall Bear His Own Burden.

This statement is altogether in harmony with what God has been pleased to reveal of his character, and the holy and immutable principles of his government. God is absolutely impartial; "there is no respect of persons with God;" whatever he requires of one he does of another in like circumstances.

Then it is a legitimate sequence of the endowments of men, all have reason, relations, conscience and immortality. All have the capacity to obey. It is true capacities differ in degree, though the same in quality. Some men have quicker perceptions than others; they reach conclusions much more readily and rapidly than others. Some have much more vigorous understandings than others, can analyze obscure questions, solve problems, and grasp principles which seem to be beyond the powers of some men. Others are endowed with memories much above the average, capacious and retentive, their minds seem to be dictionaries, indexes and concordances replete with facts. But every accountable man has mental and moral power in sufficient measure to meet the obligations God imposes.

In general, under equal obligations from creation, preservation and redemption. If every man shall bear his own burden, it follows that each man must have a burden. Each man has an immortal soul, and it is the greatest interest of each man to save his soul. Many things can be done, and are done, by proxy. Many things are so done by our legislators, our executive officers, by our lawyers and our physicians. Others may do, by the skill which division of labor secures, better for us than we can do for ourselves. But the duties involved in the business of salvation can not be done by proxy. We must hear for ourselves, consider for ourselves, repent for ourselves, cry to God for ourselves, and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ for ourselves. We must forsake and confess sin for ourselves. We make restitution for wrongs we have done others for ourselves. We must love God for ourselves. We must seek holiness, resist temptation, bear crosses and grow in grace for ourselves. Our parents, or our families, or the church, can bear none of these burdens for us; they are our individual tasks, which we must perform.

So also those social and domestic burdens of duty which the Lord has imposed, we must bear, must perform; they can not be met and borne by others. Each has his task, equal to his time and capacity. So, if we leave a duty undone, there is to that extent a positive loss to the world: it will go undone forever. All the evil we might have prevented or exterminated will remain in the world to blight and curse. Each delinquent like a cog in a wheel, while in its place, does its part, and contributes to the harmony and efficiency of the whole; but broken out, jars all, and throws a damaging strain on all.

W.

Alabama Notes.

The anti whisky movement is different, in several respects, from every previous movement on this subject in the State.

First, its advocates have all the while been exempt from the offensive charge of fanaticism. Heretofore the friends of whisky, like the priests of Diana in Ephesus, have cried out, with the ring of people about to be ruined by the unlawful intermeddling of crazy men: "Sirs, ye see and hear that not alone in Alabama, but throughout all America, these fanatics have persuaded and turned away much people, so that not only our craft is in danger of being set at naught, but also that the numerous temples of the great god Bacchus should be despised, and his magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Alabama and the world worships." But this cry of fanaticism having become as powerless in this matter as the pathetic song of the bloody shirt has in politics, we hear no more of it.

Another difference is that the friends of the movement, unlike its friends in other days, have not employed ridicule as a weapon of attack, nor relied upon the moral argument so clearly in their favor, to accomplish prohibition. It has become a subject too serious for ridicule, and they seem to have abandoned all hope of accomplishing a reformation on the grounds of mere morality. So many failures on this line have taught them to hope nothing from it.

A third difference is that it has become almost purely a civil question. Not that its friends have ceased to consider its moral features, but that, having failed by moral methods, have carried it into the domain of civil matters. The question now is, and has been, not whether it is right or wrong to make and use the stuff, but whether it is expedient or inexpedient in the State to forbid its manufacture and sale as a beverage. And this is just where it should always have been. Fight the battle on that ground, and victory will be sure. Fight it on any other, and the result will be defeat, as it has always been.

The law has become operative in many parts of the State, and the consequences everywhere are reported most gratifying. Judge Cobb, now presiding in the Circuit Court in session in this place, has before him for trial this week three men, charged with murder, and one or two with assault with intent to kill, all from whisky.

The judge says wherever in his circuit, which is a large one, the law has gone into operation the diminution of crime is perfectly wonderful. And the solicitor for the State says his office, which has been hitherto very lucrative, will hardly support him after the prohibition goes fully into effect. Two or three other State attorneys, in other judicial districts, I understand, make the same statement. Without whisky there is hardly any crime, and without crime "Othelo's occupation is gone." Will the Mississippi pinters take and ponder these facts.

I see in the ADVOCATE, from Laymon, on the Southern University, a second article, as level-headed as the first. In his first he asked me to devise an endowment scheme, but "I know him who he is," and he is far more fertile and sagacious than myself. He has thought much, and is still thinking about this grave subject, and I doubt not that a scheme of his devising, if adopted by those in authority and carried out, would bring us out of all our troubles. Let him go up to commencement with one fully matured, and let the board take it and execute it. We have got to endow that college or ingloriously shut it up. Nobody outside of Alabama is going to help us either, for all the other Southern States have their own heavy financial embarrassments, and can not help us, while we of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana particularly have been so constantly and grossly slandered throughout the North that any good man up there would feel he was doing worse than casting pearls before swine to aid us in any way in these three States.

"Shot gunners," "ballot stuffers," "bulldozers," "ku-klux," these are the sweet and suggestive names by which we are best known up there. And they were given by men trusted and honored, like Bro. Lakin, at present. I believe last year I know he was, a presiding elder of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this State, who swore on the stand that he had seen, with his own eyes, in Alabama two born ku-klux bodies, one white and the other black, and that the white one had on his head two red horns. His testimony I have read myself, printed in a book just as he gave it. The good people North, and there are multitudes of them, would think better of us if they only knew the one hundredth part of the suffering we have endured from the tongue of slander, and the one hundredth part of our losses in money from the magistracy of fraud, ignorance and imbecility. But they never will know it—perhaps never care. And hence we will have to work out our own problems without their aid. This I maintain we can do, and that it will be best for us in the end if we will.

Fine rains have fallen on the crops, which were in good condition. Things look cheerful in the fields. Gardens were suffering, but are now doing well. The health of the country is good. What we want is more religion, and we want this most of all things. Oh! for revivals, like the one in Pulaski, all over the church.

CENTREVILLE, Alabama. J. W. H.

Prohibition.

LETTER FROM GOV. ST. JOHN OF KANSAS.

That your readers may know what is being done in other States in promoting the great cause of temperance reform, I send you the following letter for publication. It was written in answer to inquiries made by myself as to how Kansas had done so much in so short a time in uprooting the greatest of modern social evils, and, especially, how to keep the prohibitory movement uncomplicated with the partisan politics of the day. Thousands of our people need only to be convinced that legal prohibition of the liquor traffic can be effected. Kansas has demonstrated the fact that it can. Let us be faithless no longer. A State convention has just been called to meet in Jackson, Miss., on the twentieth of July, to inaugurate measures looking to prohibition. County conventions will send delegates to the same. Believing that the letter of his excellency, Gov. St. John will interest your readers, and promote the great cause to which it relates, I submit it for publication.

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

STATE OF KANSAS,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
TOPEKA, May 9, 1881.

Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, Canton, Miss.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of the fourth instant has just been received. The friends of temperance in this State had a measure pending before the Legislature of the winter of 1878 providing for a very stringent local option law, among other provisions giving to the women a voice on the question of granting or refusing license to dram-shops. This measure was likely to pass both Houses and become a law, and the friends of free whisky were very much alarmed and suddenly became, or at least pretended to be, enthusiastic prohibitionists and proposed that if the temperance advocates would introduce an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage they would give it their hearty support. Such an amendment was introduced in the Senate, and received promptly the vote of every member of that body. When it reached the House it was very late in the session, and the local option bill to which I have referred had been dropped. The rum power then rallied its forces and put forth every effort possible to defeat the passage of the constitutional amendment through the House, but after a hard struggle the measure received the requisite two-thirds vote and was thus submitted to a vote of the people, and resulted at the next election in its receiving a majority of eight thousand. The next step necessary after the amendment had become a part of the Constitution was the passage of [illegible] to carry it into effect. Our last Legislature, which convened the thirteenth of January, 1881, promptly took the matter into consideration and after a thorough investigation of the whole question by Committees, appointed for that purpose, in due time passed through both Houses what is known as our prohibitory law, a copy of which I enclose herewith. It will be seen that the vote in the Senate on this measure was 32 for and 7 against, and in the House 100 for and 23 against. This law took effect the first day of May, and we have not now, so far as I know, an open dram-shop in the State. The city of Topeka has 20,000 population, and there has been but one man arrested for drunkenness since the first day of May, and he got drunk on Hostetter's Bitters. The party who sold the Bitters to him was promptly arrested and fined $100.

The people of Kansas have long been of the opinion that if the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is right there is no justification for imposing a heavy license tax on the party who engages in the business, and if the business is wrong no amount of license money will ever make it right. We believe that it is absolutely wrong, and that no government or individual can successfully defend giving it the sanction of law.

While all questions, the solution of which may result in a change of laws are to some extent political, yet they are not necessarily partisan. The question of temperance in Kansas has had nothing whatever to do with partisan politics. Prohibition has its strong supporters in all parties, and its opposers in all parties. The temperance question is no more a partisan question than is the Sabbath School or Church work. It must be borne in mind that it hurts the Democrat as badly to have his boy destroyed through the instrumentality of intoxicating liquors as it does the Republican to have his boy go in the same way; therefore, in our campaign in this State we appealed not to the political prejudices, but to the better judgment of mankind, without regard to race, religion or politics, feeling that all were alike interested in the good work and its success.

I am glad to know that the people of Mississippi are becoming aroused on this question, and while Kansas and Mississippi have no doubt differed widely in politics, yet we will gladly welcome the day when the people of the two States can stand upon one platform, and looking to God for his blessings, unite in their efforts to blot out the rum power which is doing more to-day to retard the progress of civilization, Christianity and good government than all other evils combined.

I enclose also herewith the decision of the Supreme Court of our State, by which it will be seen that all questions in connection with the adoption of our constitutional amendment have been passed upon by that Court in favor of the validity of the measure. You need have no fear of the success of prohibition in Kansas. We have not entered into this work merely for fun, but are in it to stay. There is no evil in Kansas, the power of which is greater than the people. Yours, very truly,

JOHN P. ST. JOHN.

An Argument for Prohibition.

The Grand Jury, Ex-Gov. E. H. Moren, foreman, returned sixty indictments. His report says: We have found no very grave offences against law and good order, and we heartily congratulate the people upon the marked improvement in their morals, especially since the sale of intoxicating drinks has been prohibited by law, for it is the universal testimony of all observing and intelligent men that came before us as witnesses, that the contrast is marked and striking. No breaches of the peace now, no fighting, brawls or blood-shed, and we confidently believe that when the full effect of the prohibitory law can be felt, we will have but little use for grand juries. True, we have found largely more than the average number of bills, but they are of a minor character, and against but few individuals. There are some evasions and violations of the law amongst the transient population in the mineral regions of the country, but none scarcely among the industrial inhabitants of the agricultural people. The colored people especially, there being no longer any traps or deadfalls set for them, are staying at home, duly sober, laboring faithfully and living peaceably.

MR. EDITOR: I enclose the above slip sent from the "Bible Blade," a paper published at Centreville, Ala. It speaks volumes in favor of prohibition.

The Cahaba river divides Perry county, Ala., into two nearly equal parts. In that portion east of the river no whisky is sold, and our Grand Jury last spring found no true bill against any citizen of east Perry although more than one hundred bills were returned. Need more be said in the cause of temperance.

Very respectfully,

H. W. VACHAS.

FELIX, PERRY COUNTY, ALA., June 1, 1881.

Hiwassee College Commencement.

MR. EDITOR: I sit down this morning, under the inspiration of a most delightful season, to give you some account of our recent commencement at Hiwassee, Tenn. We have had what the farmers like in the cotton country—a dry May—but, although it is equally favorable for wheat and corn, it is not so good for oats, grasses and young clover. Hence our farmers have been very desirous of rain for some time, and this morning the gentle heavens are bowed down, and, no doubt, many hearts are raised in thankfulness to the great Creator. Read the last five verses of the sixty-fifth Psalm, and you will have the sentiment of our people.

But I started to tell about our commencement. We had what the players call "a good combination." Bro. Brandon delivered the baccalaureate sermon, and Dr. Cottrell the address before the literary societies. The one was marked by nature for the pulpit and the pastorate, the other for the platform and the surging crowd who are aroused by some great interest, not abstract, but living and [illegible] Bro. Brandon's character has been thus described by the poet:

"Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,
His sober wishes never learned to stray;
Along the cool sequestered vale of life,
He keeps the even tenor of his way."

But Cottrell's nature is better depicted in the other verse of the same poet:

"The applause of listening senates to command,
The threats of pain and ruin to despise,
To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land,
And read his history in a nation's eyes."

These brethren were my early associate in the ministry, and both having expressed a desire to visit old Hiwassee, I was kindly permitted, by the faculty and students, to invite them on this occasion. Brandon was once a student here; Cottrell had never been here before, and thought we were in a town, but both seemed delighted with the place. They saw it at its best, when the groves were green, the clover in blossom, the wheat heading out, and nature putting on all her glory. The very birds seemed to conspire with their songs to grace the occasion, and, as Cottrell said, "the doves on the fence rails along the road were supremely beautiful." So much does the heart of man add to what he sees. What strange love did these brethren manifest for us in our loneliness and seclusion! How they seemed to turn aside from the great highway of the world to admire this little flower hidden in its mountain seat, with no friend in the world, but only the great mountains to overshadow it. With what sweetness did Bro. Brandon pour forth the tender strains of the gospel with a voice almost breaking with emotion under the inspiring influence of the old associations rising around him. Never did divine grace seem so sweet nor human advocacy of it so tender as in the melodious tones of the preacher that lovely Sabbath morning. We had another communion together. Sacramental bread and wine were given to renew the bond of the old and everlasting covenant. Nor were the living there alone. Blessed spirits from the upper deep seemed to hover over the scene. Preachers, brethren, wives and children, that have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, were there—all there. For we were come, it almost seemed, to Mt. Zion, and to the general assembly and church of the first born. But it on Sunday Brandon was beautiful, on Monday Cottrell was sublime. After two speeches by the society orators, he took the rostrum at half-past ten o'clock and for an hour and a half transported and convulsed a large audience made up of our very best people. Old farmers, clergymen, school-boys, ladies and even children were entertained and delighted. He said many things hard to be understood, and much of that truth of which the divine Teacher had to inquire of his disciples, "Who can bear it?" but, by some accompanying influence of the Holy Spirit, the minds of the people were opened and they seemed to receive it. Views so original and so new do not generally meet with acceptance in a strange audience, and we take it as an evidence of the wide and thoughtful culture of our people that they liked to hear Bro. Cottrell expose their own fallacies, and show them the more excellent way.

We had, indeed, a grand commencement. But my space is out, and I must close. Yours truly,

E. M. GRACE.

HOWARD, TENN., June 2, 1881.

East Mississippi Female College.

MR. EDITOR: By appointment of the Mississippi Annual Conference, at its late session, Rev. F. M. Williams and myself were in attendance upon the closing exercises of the above named institution of learning, located in the city of Meridian, Lauderdale county, Miss., and ably presided over by Rev. J. W. Adkisson, assisted by an accomplished faculty, which closing exercises took place from May 27 to the night of June 2. Our report, proper, need only be brief. We would say: Discipline decidedly firm, but kind, instruction thorough, course of study good and well arranged. The school reminds us of a family. Every one seems interested in every one else. The exhibition was good. Music showing good taste in its selection and skill in its execution.

The essays of the graduating class, nine in number, viz.: Miss Ada Smith, Meridian, Miss., Miss Maggie Brown, Meridian, Miss Willie Brown, Meridian, Miss Emmie Moore, Meridian, Miss Sallie Whitaker, Meridian, Miss Mary Mathews, Hazlehurst, Miss., Miss Annie Chambers, Leake county, Miss., Miss Mittie Wiggins, Cuba, Ala., Miss Ella Deal, Philadelphia, Miss., were all good. On Sunday, May 29, at eleven A. M., in the new college chapel, Rev. H. Urquhart, of Auburn, Ala., and presiding elder of Greensboro district, Alabama Conference, preached a most practical and interesting gospel sermon, from 1 Peter 1, 5-7. Everybody was pleased, and I hope many were made better. We all wish Bro. Urquhart to visit us again.

But, Mr. Editor, I must not neglect, for I could not forget, to mention the visit and addresses of Dr. John Mathews of your city. His first speech was an address to the Alumni of the College, delivered on Tuesday at 10 A. M. His subject was, "Transitions of thought and contradictions in Science." His address was telling and will be remembered for what he told us.

Again on last night, the doctor addressed the graduating class; I did not just exactly tell your readers what his subject was, but one thing I do know, he does not believe in ghosts.

Dr. Mathews has done the college, the community and the cause of truth valuable and lasting service. The college opens in September next and with increased dormitory convenience will be able to accommodate comfortably quite an increased number of pupils the next session. Let parents seeking a good Methodist college for their daughters, consider the claims of East Mississippi Female College.

G. D. NORSWORTHY,
Chairman of Com.

Southern University.

MR. EDITOR: There has recently been a revival in Greensboro, Ala., several students in the Southern University were converted and joined the Methodist Church. Year by year this institution is contributing talent and pious young men to the membership and ministry of the church, and thus is usury paid to the church for all the money, and labor, and prayer expended upon this important enterprise.

Like church schools, A boy can acquire much Latin and Greek and mathematics at a church school as at any other; and, besides, the probabilities are that if he goes to a church school he will be converted; and that if he goes to any other than a church school he will not be. Does not these facts prove this? Ought not parents to take this fact into the account in selecting a school for their sons?

The Southern University deserves and needs a larger patronage and more endowment. The Methodists of Alabama can give it both. An endowment will draw students; and a hundred and fifty boys in the school would so encourage the Methodists as they would contribute liberally to an endowment.

LAYMAN.

[illegible] will be seen from the following letter from Rev. John Pipes, dated St. Louis, June 1, that he is on his way to the National Temperance Convention:

"We left Marshall, Texas, May 30, 1:30 A. M., and got here June 1, at 6:30 A. M. We had a very pleasant trip. All along the way there has been a great deal of rain. Crops generally, so far as we observed, were backward, injured by rain and grass, and seem to be promising. We expect to leave to-morrow for Eureka Springs, and there for a few weeks, and go from there to the National Temperance Convention, which will meet June 21, at Saratoga Springs. As I go upon the interest of temperance, I took some notes by the way. In every report the friends of the cause are organized a division of the temple of honor, and it is in a flourishing condition, and doing great good. All along the line of railroad, however, from Shreveport to St. Louis, in all the towns, big or little, the saloon and beer signs seemed to be the freshest and most conspicuous. They seem to know that prohibition is coming, and they must work while they can. Bro. Sawyer, who is wide awake on the temperance question, thinks that permanent temperance organization is what is mostly needed in Louisiana.

"Bro. Pipes, in a previous note, from Marshall, Texas, May 30, says: 'We spent yesterday in Shreveport. The annual the Quarterly Conference in session, Bro. McClendon in the chair. The Conference unanimously resolved to build a new church at a cost of $30,000, $14,500 of which has been subscribed, and the work was just begun. It is to be at the corner of Texas street. Bro. Sawyer is doing a good work for Shreveport. The church is in good condition financially.'

"Good Advent.—Bro. J. W. McCreary, pastor of our church in Jackson, Miss., is doing nobly in obtaining subscribers for the Advocate. He this week sent fifty-six with the money. While we naturally anticipate some falling off in our list in Louisiana, our friends in Mississippi and Louisiana can, by diligent effort, more than make this loss up. To retain the paper at its present standard it will be necessary for its friends—the pastors especially—to work for it. It will pay to do this in the improvement of all the interests of the church. We are not surprised that Bro. McLaurin is having a prosperous year at Jackson. Writing June 4, he says:

"Every feature of church work in this charge is prospering. The Sunday-school has grown very much within the last five months, and is now the best ever had in Jackson, so some of the oldest members of the church say. The worthy superintendent will furnish an account of it sometime during the year. The congregations are large, and some persons are added to the membership of the charge nearly every Sabbath. We have had about fifty during the year.

ALABAMA CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. The first number of this new journal has been received. It is to be published at Birmingham, Alabama, and to be under the joint control of the North Alabama and Alabama Conferences. It is a four page form, eight columns to the page, of excellent make-up, and the contents of this initial number give promise of a most able and entertaining paper. It has a strong editorial corps: Rev. A. S. Andrews, D. D., editor; Rev. J. W. Christian, associate editor. Corresponding editors: Rev. W. A. McCarty, D. D.; Rev. J. W. Rush; Rev. J. A. Thompson, Rev. W. C. McCoy.

Although as a rule we have been opposed to the unnecessary multiplication of church papers, and believing that the publication of this paper would entail considerable loss upon the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE of which the Alabama Conference is still part owner, we have taken no part in the discussion which preceded the inauguration of the enterprise. We have felt that it was a matter of which the Conference must be the judge. If they believe that the interests of Methodism in Alabama demand this new paper, it is their right and duty to publish it. We do not hesitate, therefore, to give it a most cordial welcome, and to express our high esteem and love for the brethren connected with it. The relations of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to the Alabama Conference, as its organ, and under its joint control with the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences, are the same as heretofore. How long the Conference may continue these relations it must hereafter determine. In the meantime we hope that our old Alabama subscribers and agents, while they may accord to the new paper a generous reception, will not forget the claims of the old. Our intercourse with the members of the Alabama Conference has always been of the most cordial and agreeable character. We shall hope still to keep up the delightful associations of past years.

DELEGATES TO THE ECUMENICAL.—We once more remind our readers and the preachers in our patronizing Conferences, that the collection for expenses of delegates should be taken at once. Bro. Mangum's reminder to the Alabama Conference, we hope has already been heeded. We do not know what has been done in Mississippi; but Drs. Andrews and Marshall should be liberally provided for. It is no fault of the Bishops that Louisiana is not represented directly among the delegates appointed by them. The Conference took no action in reference to a collection, but the preachers should feel themselves at liberty to take it. In Dr. C. G. Andrews, as president of Centenary College, Louisiana claims at least a half interest; and Dr. Ahrens, though a member of the German Mission Conference, has always been identified with Louisiana. Money sent to either of these brethren from Louisiana, or to Dr. Marshall, who belongs to the whole Connection, would be most fittingly appropriated. What is done, should be done at once.

Rev. Dr. Tudor, on his return from the commencement of Centenary College, spent two or three days in New Orleans, preaching both morning and night, at the Carondelet Street Church, Sunday, June 5. His hosts of old friends enjoyed his sermons very much, and were glad once more to see his face and to take him by the hand. He will always be followed by the love and benedictions of our people. The Doctor left for St. Louis on Monday.

—Rev. Hardy Mobley, a minister of the "Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America," and at the time of his death a presiding elder, died at Lake Charles, La., May 10, in his sixty-ninth year. A letter from his wife informs us that he was sick about three weeks, and that his death was peaceful and happy. He was a native of Burke county, Ga., and had been preaching for many years. He was a man of unblemished character, and a devoted, useful and acceptable preacher.

—We call attention to an important statement in regard to the rearrangement and reduction of the prices of our Sunday-school series, to be found on eighth page of the ADVOCATE. Dr. Cunnyngham sends us the statement, and we trust that it will [illegible] and kept for future reference. Our Sunday-school periodicals are among the best, absolutely the best for Methodists, and they are now wonderfully cheap.

—Rev. D. L. Mitchel, General Secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association of this city, delegate to the National Convention recently held in Cleveland, Ohio, returned a few days ago. He reports having had a delightful time, and that the work of the Association throughout the United States and British Provinces is exceedingly prosperous.

—We would call attention to card in another column in which a most competent teacher, a gentleman of excellent character, advertises for a situation as a teacher. We can, from personal acquaintance, commend him as a scholar and a Christian gentleman.

—Rev. S. H. Werlein, of Houston, Texas, after spending a few days in the city, left on Monday, accompanied by his wife, for Europe, via New York. Bro. Werlein expects to see a good deal of England and the Continent, and to drop in on the Ecumenical.

Rev. T. J. Heugh, writing from Opelousas, La., May 31, says:

Our revival moves on grandly; twelve accessions to date and many conversions. We have one hundred persons, and sometimes more, at every class meeting. I have no ministerial aid; am carrying on this meeting myself, preaching day and night. Our sheriff, Mr. Dason and two sons, have joined. I will give you full particulars at the close of our meeting.

The Ledger of New Orleans, says: W. L. Lyman, Esq., the President of the Crescent Insurance Company, has returned from Staunton where he was a delegate to the Presbyterian Convention. He states that the matter of the transfer of the Rev. Dr. Palmer to the Professorship of Pastoral Theology, in the Theological Seminary at Columbia, S. C., has been settled by a reference to the Doctor himself for his own decision of the question being solely for himself perhaps to decide.

The Opelousas Messenger, of June 1, says:

Glorious results are attending the revivals of the church in Texas. We have now the promise of a large ingathering of souls during the week. May it please God to pour His Spirit out in great measure upon all the churches.

In the midsummer term of the School of Philosophy, at Concord, President Porter, of Yale, and President McCosh, of Princeton, will deliver lectures this year. Ralph Waldo Emerson has promised to read a paper on Carlyle, if his health will permit.

Personal and Other.

—Seldom has there been a more practical "charge" delivered on the occasion of the installation of a pastor than that which the Rev. Robert Collyer gave to his former congregation in Chicago when his successor was recently installed. He said: "Seldom find fault with your minister, but when you do, don't tell him on Monday, how he feels blue; don't tell him on Tuesday, he is just pulling out; don't tell him on Wednesday, he is getting feely for his sermon; don't tell him on Thursday, he is wrong it; don't tell him on Friday, he is finishing his sermon; don't tell him on Saturday, because he is getting rested for Sunday; and if you don't tell him before Saturday night you never will tell him."

Alexander III of Russia has promoted to a captaincy the young lieutenant who wrapped his own mantle around the wounded Czar just after the explosion. It was in this mantle that the murdered man was taken to the Winter Palace. "I have bought you a new cloak," said the young Czar to the soldier. "I shall keep the other." He has also given the officer a present of 1,200 roubles.

—Miss Barbara Scott, who died in Montreal, a few days ago, of cerebral apoplexy, bequeathed $30,000 to found a chair of civil engineering in the McGill College, $2,000 for a classical scholarship, to be called "The Barbara Scott Scholarship," and $2,000 to the building fund of St. Gabriel Church, of Montreal.

—Lord Beaconsfield, it is alleged, never acknowledged any of his own blood or kindred in social life, and was never known to extend a hand of kindness or encouragement to any rising or struggling literary man. In social life it was his intense delight to surround himself, on the occasions of his rare gatherings, with a host of dukes and earls.

Desire Charnay, the French Mexican explorer, has started for Paris, where he will remain a few months to recuperate his health and obtain fresh facilities for extending his researches in the interests of ancient history. He represents the difficulties of penetrating southern Mexico to be very great and the climate most debilitating.

—Mr. Richard Grant White, in an article in the March "Atlantic," says that about the most amazing piece of paper that he ever looked upon was the business card of an English hangman, which read as follows: "William Marley, Executioner, No. 12 — street, Bristol. N. B. Executions attended to with promptness and dispatch."

Lieutenant Schwatka's search party for remains of Sir John Franklin's expedition endured a cold which at one time fell to 71 degrees below zero. The lowest degree of natural cold ever observed was, according to Humboldt, 70 degrees below zero, recorded by Wrangell as experienced by him at Yakutsk, Siberia.

—When Napoleon III went to the front in 1870 his mass of baggage looked like a traveling hospital. It included three kinds of bathtubs, a large medicine chest, an Invalid's easy chair and a peculiar sort of stretcher. The Emperor took several very gentle horses and had double wadded saddles, with extra paddings in the back.

—The telegraph poles in use already represent about $60,000 [illegible] more for annual repairs. Protection of bar forests as well as freedom from the dangers and inconveniences of the pole and wire nuisance demands that telegraph wires should be placed beneath the surface of the ground.

—Mr. Mahone, the new senator from Virginia, was a poor Irish boy, educated on a free scholarship at the military Institute in which Stonewall Jackson taught. He began his career by carrying a surveyor's chain on a railroad and was known as a skillful general in the Confederate army.

—Jules Verne says Le Figaro, is about fifty-two years of age, with a handsome head and features, which are not only regular, but exceedingly fine. He wears his beard full, has thick hair, bright blue eyes, and an expression which shows great firmness of character.

—Rev. A. H. Hashiell, D. D., of Brooklyn, died, two weeks ago, at the age of eighty years. He was a native of Maryland, and in his prime was prominently identified with the work of the Presbyterian Church, especially with educational enterprises in the South.

—The crown of the hat of the statue of William Penn, which is, to surmount the tower of the new public building of Philadelphia, will be just 555 feet above the pavement. This is ten feet and one inch higher than the highest towers of the Cologne Cathedral.

—The bronze statue at Rome supposed to represent St. Peter, and the foot of which has been worn away by the osculatory practice of the faithful, is said in the history of early Christian painting to have been really an antique statue of a consul. It has curling hair and a closely-cut beard.

—The Marquis Tseng, Chinese minister to France, is forbidden by custom and etiquette to sleep on beds used by other barbarians. Wherever he goes, therefore, in traveling about Europe, he carries his sleeping apparatus with him.

Philip Phillips and son recently conducted a song-service in Pittsburgh. Mr. Phillips sails shortly for the West Indies, and will go thence to London to fill a second exclusive engagement with the Sunday-school Committee of that city.

Signor Michela, an Indian, has invented a machine by which the debates in the Italian Parliament and French Legislature are taken down stenographically. It is so simple that in two weeks time a girl can learn to operate it.

It is reported that the Baron Charles de Rothschild, of Frankfort, has recently made an addition to his collection in the shape of a superb cup of silver gilt, a work of Jamnitzer, for which it is said the sum of 7,000 francs was paid.

An exchange says that Rev. L. C. Chamberlain must be one of the most contrary men living, for he has read two thousand Sunday-school books in order to select a library for the Sunday-school of his church in Norwich, Conn.

General Garibaldi is, grievously to-ken, though made no worse by the excitement he has passed through lately. He reclines or sits up all day long in his bed and can move neither hand nor foot.

Books and Periodicals.

Uncle Mark's Anagrams. By Annie C. Hale. Illustrated. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co. Price $1.50. This is a very simple and touching story of humble life, the principal character of which, Mark Weston, is an old man whose heart has seemingly been hardened by adversity against all tender influences. His wife is dead, and his only daughter, who left home while a mere child, carried away by a passion for the stage, he persistently holds from him, refusing for years to see or communicate with her. This daughter was saved from the life she was about to enter, and adopted by a rich family. She is anxious to return home; but will not go until her father sends for her. The story shows how, after a long holding out, the two are brought together, and how the lonely home of the old man is once more brightened by the voice and presence of the repentant daughter.

—The Theological and Homiletic Monthly, R. N. Sledd, D. D., editor and proprietor, Richmond, Va., has the following articles: 1. Thomas Carlyle—The Lesson of a Life, by W. P. Harrison, D. D. 2. Polytheism—whence? By Rev. F. M. Edwards. 3. The Divine Law Immutable, by Rev. J. J. Billingsley. 4. Curiosity Utilized by Piety, by W. H. Anderson, D. D. 5. Constitutional Depravity, by Rev. W. R. D. Stockton. 6. Present Demands on the Pulpit, by Rev. John B. Robins. 7. Philosophy of the Prayer-meeting, by Rev. G. W. Horn. 8. Sermon Sketch, by Rev. Alex. H. Brown. 9. Editorial Miscellany.

—The Sea Side Library, George Munro, Publisher, New York, in a double number, of two parts, publishes the revised New Testament entire. Part first, contains the gospels; part second, the Acts of the Apostles to Revelation. In parallel columns, side by side on the same page, is also printed the famous Tauchnitz Edition, Number 1000 of the Authorized Version, with notes by Tischendorf. This combination is a happy thought, which enables the reader to have the two versions before him at once. The price of each part is twenty cents; the entire New Testament costing only forty cents.

St. Nicholas, June 1881, is handsomely illustrated as usual. We give the titles of some of the articles: The A. Steeles; The Mastiff and his Master; Ostrich Farming; The Fountain in the Park; The Children's Artist; In Nature's Wonderland, Chap. 8; The Treasure-box of English Literature; Saltillo Boys, chapters 4, 5, 6; The Giant Picture Book.

—The Art Amateur, June, 1881, in its usual supplement of beautiful designs, and a large number of exquisite engravings. Its articles on art, embracing painting, engraving, decoration and furniture; needlework, ceramics and music, are of great value. It is a publication which people of taste will appreciate, and by which they will profit. Published monthly. Montague Marks, Editor and Publisher, New York. Price $4 a year.

—The Popular Science Monthly, June, 1881, has: Physical Education; On Fruits and Seeds; Sunstroke and some of its Sequelae; The Value of Our Forests; Production of Sound by Radiant Energy; The Development of Political Institutions, by Herbert Spencer; Degeneration; The Primeval American Continent; Natural Production of Alcohol; The Modern Development of Faraday's Conception of Electricity; Glucose and Grape Sugar; The Mental Effect of Earthquakes; Sketch of Julius Adolph Stockhardt, with portrait.

Plan of Episcopal Visitations for 1881.

FIRST DISTRICT—BISHOP PAINE.

Conference.	Date.	Place
Memphis	November 9	Bolivar.
North Mississippi	November 23	Grenada.
Mississippi	December 14	Brookhaven

SECOND DISTRICT—BISHOP PIERCE.

Western	September 7	Howard Chapel
Missouri	September 14	Moberly.
St. Louis	September 21	St. Johns
Southwest Missouri	September 28	Springfield.
Indian Mission	October 5	Caddo.
Arkansas	October 19	Fayetteville.
Alabama	November 2	Selma
South Carolina	December 14	Edgefield

THIRD DISTRICT—BISHOP KAVANAUGH.

Columbia	August 25	Walla Walla
Los Angeles	September 15	Carpenteria.
Pacific	September 25	Petaluma.
Denver	October 13	Denver.
Montana	October 20	Helena.
Northwest Texas	November 16	Waxahachie.
North Texas	November 30	Greenville.
East Texas	December 14	Jacksonville.

FOURTH DISTRICT—BISHOP WIGHTMAN.

Holston	October 26	Wytheville.
South Carolina	November 23	Durham.
South Georgia	December 7	Columbus

FIFTH DISTRICT—BISHOP MARVIN.

Tennessee	October 19	Lebanon.
North Alabama	November 2	Huntsville
South Georgia	November 16	Athens.
Virginia	November 30	Charlottesville
White River	December 7	Helena.
Little Rock	December 14	Pine Bluff
Louisiana	January 3	New Orleans
Florida	January 17	Monticello.
Baltimore	March 10	Fredericksburg

SIXTH DISTRICT—BISHOP KEENER.

Western Virginia	August 31	Ashland
Kentucky	September 7	Danville
Indiana	September 14	Bosport
Illinois	September 21	Shelbyville
Louisville	October 12	Hopkinsville
West Texas	November 16	Goliad.
Texas	November 23	Houston
German	November 30	Houston.

Bishop McTyeire has charge of the Missions in China and Japan.

Bishop Keener has charge of the Missions in Mexico.

Publisher's Department.

We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

The smallest piece of sarcasm that I know
Is standing now behind that curtain there.
Withdraw the curtain softly from its place,
And you may see the sweetest sarcasm
The smallest head that ever touched the glow
Of sunshine, on it. Three of flower like face
That ever made your throat a minutes space
Of agonies, when the apple business blew
Pulpy, purpled, and ripe, a sad confection.
She makes your pulses jig, and quiver, quiver;
And at last strikes you, and you feel her
And push her passion and paddle it you can;
She is my queen, and I her slave, and yet
This sarcasm's epaulette is only two years old.

The New Year's Wife.—"I trust we shall see you at church on Sunday, Mrs. Grubbles. I hear you have been attending lately." Mrs. Grubbles. "Now, as didn't I look least pearson, I did, miss, indeed I did." N. Y. W.—"Dear me, Mrs. Grubbles, where did you acquire your knowledge of Latin?"

It is said a man in Warren county, Ky., drives an ox team that once belonged to an Indian preacher. A man that got shaved to shopping for him at saloons that area, when passing a saloon the animals will not proceed till their new owner goes in to get a drink. He doesn't care for the liquor, he says, but is obliged to drink to get by honor along the line to reach home for the oxen.

A Yankee physician raves lecturing lately on the ignorance of people of their own complaints and said that a young lady once asked him what his next lecture would be upon, and being told the "Circulation of the Blood," replied that she should certainly attend, for she had been troubled with that complaint for a long time.

A famous surgeon advises one of his patients to undergo an operation. "Is it very severe?" asks the patient. "Not for the patient," says the doctor; we put him asleep, very hard on the operator." "How so?" "We suffer dreadful from anxiety. Just think, it succeeds only once in a hundred times."

If you have a cold and are desirous of getting well immediately, get a bottle of Lapham's Indian Tonsile Pectoral Balm. This remedy is both good to the taste as well as a certain cure.

"Yes, sar," said the old colored man, "de Urs'yu'all, when I give fifty dollars to de church, dey call me Micah Richard Johnson, Esquah; de second year I was good as I could'n' give no more than twenty-five dollars, an' dey call me Broddah Johnson; de next year I couldn't give nuffin, and dey call me de Niggah Johnson."

Mr. P. Werlein, 135 Canal street, New Orleans, deals in the leading pianos and organs. He requests you to send for his catalogues and prices before purchasing. Low prices, reliable dealing, and full guarantee are to be had at this old House.

To his fond father, who has asked him where he is to in his class now: "Oh, pa, I've got a much better place than I had last quarter." "Indeed! Well, where are you?" "I'm fourteenth." "Fourteenth, you little lazybones! Why, you were eight last term. Do you call that a better place?" "Yes, sir; it's nearer the stove."

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—American China dinner, breakfast and tea set, 160 pieces, for $16. Equal in looks and usefulness to French China.

"Hi! where did you get them trousers?" asked an Irishman of a man who happened to be passing with a remarkably short pair of trousers. "I got them where they grew," was the indignant reply. "Then, by my conscience," said Pat, "you've pulled them a year too soon!"

A Dutchman who married his second wife soon after the funeral of the first was visited with two hours serenade in token of disapproval. He expostulated pathetically thus: "I say, boys, you ought to be ashamed of yourself to see making all dish noise ven dere vas a funeral here so soon."

Lawyer C. entering the office of his friend, Dr. M——, and speaking in a hoarse whisper: "Fred, I've got such a cold this morning that I can't speak the truth." Dr. M——: "Well I'm glad that it's nothing that will interfere with your business."

Calumny and detraction are sparks, which, if you do not blow them, will go out of themselves.

Business Notices.

Faded or Gray Hair gradually recovers its youthful color and lustre by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, an elegant dressing, admired for its purity and rich perfume.

CANVASSERS make from $25 to $50 per week selling goods for E. G. RIDEOUT & CO., 10 Barclay St., New York. Send for Catalogue and terms

Haywood White Sulphur Springs,

OPEN ALL THE YEAR.

WAYNESVILLE, N. C. Altitude 2717.

SEASON OF 1881.

This charming SUMMER RESORT, in the very midst of the GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS, is now open for the reception of visitors.

It is in a beautiful valley, with smooth roads, delightful walks and within from three hundred yards to ten miles of the most beautiful mountains in America, ranging in altitude from 3000 to 6000 feet.

The Hotels and Springs are situated one mile from Waynesville, the county seat of Haywood county, thirty-two miles west of Asheville, thirty-eight miles from Warm Springs, with good roads to all three places. Daily stage line to Asheville, and mails direct here via Hendersonville and Asheville, N. C.

TERMS: $1 25 per day, $8 per week, and from $2 to $25, according to size and location of rooms, per month of twenty-eight days. Special rates for families or clubs.

For further information, circulars etc., call at this office, or address

THOS. A. MORRIS, Lessee, or
W. W. SPRINGFIELD, Lessee,
Waynesville, N. C.

WANTED, A SITUATION AS TEACHER, by a married gentleman, an A. M. graduate of a leading university of the South, and for five years a professor in that institution. He is competent to teach the usual English branches, the Latin, Greek, French and German languages, the higher Mathematics, Chemistry and Natural Philosophy, Book-keeping and Penmanship—Spark's English and German. Has had nine years experience in teaching. Is a member of the M. E. Church, South. Best references given, if desired. Address Postoffice Box 112, Marion, Alabama.

THE ATTENTION OF THE PUBLIC IS CALLED to the Greenwich Manufacturing Co.'s Ready Cleaner of New York; a very useful article for all house cleaning, scouring, and polishing purposes. For sale in 16 cent packages by Grocers. Wholesale by T. A. CAHILL, Agent,
88 Tchoupitoulas Street, New Orleans.

Factors' & Traders' Insurance Company

37 CARONDELET STREET

Paid Up Capital $1,000,000.

ED. A. PALFREY, President
JOHN CHAFFE, Vice President,
THOS. F. WALKER, Secretary.

Issues Policies Covering Fire, River and Marine Risks at the Lowest Tariff Rates.

DIRECTORS

John I. Noble,	John Chaffe,
Richard Milliken,	Samuel Hamilton,
R. M. Walmsley,	A. H. May,
T. Lyle Lyon,	Samuel H. Boyd,
Wm. J. Behan,	B. F. Eshleman,
Chas. Clarke,	L. C. Jung,
Wm. Hartwell,	C. J. Leeds,
A. T. Jarvis,	A. M. Blackman,
Henry Abraham,	Louis Bush,
A. Baldin,	G. W. Scowden,
Wm. Cunningham,	John L. Adams,
R. T. Barker,	Wm. A. Gwin,
	Chas. L. Black.

SEND 25 CENTS

For Copy of the new

REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

Mailed post-paid on receipt of price by

G. T. LAPHROP,
New Orleans

WANTED, BY A YOUNG LADY OF EXperience, a position as teacher of the English Branches, in a family or school. Address TEACHER, this office.

WANTED, A FEMALE TEACHER, TO TEACH Music, advanced course of Mathematics, French and Latin, in a family school. Apply to the undersigned. J. W. ATKINSON, Meridian, Miss.

DR. C. J. BICKHAM,

RESIDENCE AND OFFICE,
226 Jackson St., Bet. Chestnut and Coliseum
NEW ORLEANS.
Office Hours: Eight A. M., and three to four P. M.

ADVANCE AND RETREAT!

Personal experiences in the

UNITED STATES and
CONFEDERATE STATES ARMIES.

BY J. B. HOOD,
Lieut.-Gen. and Corps Com. in the Confederate Army.

Published for the Hood Orphan Memorial Fund by Gen. G. T. Beauregard.

Price in both bindings, $2, in leather, $2.50. Mailed, post-paid on receipt of price by

G. T. LAPHROP,
New Orleans.

DR. EDWARD HARRISON,

112 Canal Street, from 11 to 4 P. M.

NEW ORLEANS.

NEW YORK SHOPPING.

Of every description for ladies and gentlemen. Household articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address

Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,
P. O. Box 598, New York.

GERMANIA SAVINGS BANK,

No. 51 CAMP STREET.

Capital, ... $100,000.

This Bank is now ready to receive deposits of ONE DOLLAR and upwards, at 3 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually.

DIRECTORS:

H. ZUBERBIER, J. HASSENGER
S. HERNSHEIM, J. E. MERRIL,
FRANK T. HOWARD, EMIL MAIER,
H. ZUBERBIER, President
J. HASSENGER, Vice President.
TH. HATRY, Cashier.

THE PORTABLE COMMENTARY

On the Old and New Testaments.

By JAMIESON, FAUSSET and BROWN.

Complete in One Volume.

This is the only reliable Commentary of recent date published in one volume of suitable size for ready reference, or to carry when traveling in valise or saddle bags. It is a small octavo volume of 840 pages, printed on fine paper, bound in cloth, and is considered invaluable by all who have it. Price by mail, post-paid, only $3 50.

G. T. LAPHROP,
New Orleans.

Indian Turnip
COMPOUND.
PECTORAL BALM.

For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle $1. Prepared and for sale by H. LAPLACE, Druggist, 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street. And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

My New Illustrated Price List describing over 100 Gold and Silver Waltham Watches sent for a 3c stamp. It tells how I send watches to all parts of U. S. to be examined before paying any money. Undoubted references. N. H. White, Jeweler, Newark, N. J.

Agricultural.

WORK FOR THE MONTH.

The gardener of the South and the garden amateur have much to reflect upon in this glorious month of bearable sunshine. Renew all crops as advised; plant snapshort beans, look over melons, cucumbers and squashes; destroy bugs and every other enemy; weeds abhor with the vengeance of destruction. Stir up the soil to keep in moisture, and allow the air and dews to penetrate; all will assist to keep the growing life in crops. Transplant cauliflower, brocoli, drumhead and flat-dutch cabbage, which must be liberally supplied with water; perseverance will always insure success in your gardening operations.

WEEDS AND HIGHER CULTIVATION.

We often see articles in the newspapers full of advice to farmers in regard to weeds, higher cultivation of the soil and better crops; but they fail to show us how to do it with profit. It is very pleasant and popular to say that all weeds should be eradicated, fence corners trimmed up, manure overhauled, etc.; but we are not informed how to procure the cash to commence with; and we are not shown the balance sheet of those who practice this higher cultivation. It is easy for a man of wealth to direct the labor that makes his playground farm a garden; but he does not realize the fact that but few practical farmers have a large bank account; and if they had, they would be the last ones to throw it away on expenses that benefit only the eye of the fastidious and the sentimentalist.

It is well to have clean cultivation; but when we expend five dollars worth of labor to receive one crop to the value of one dollar, the practical farmer will say that it does not pay. A field of corn looks better without a single weed; but it must be remembered that an extra spear of corn is as injurious to the rest of the field as a weed would be. It is said that one year's seeding is seven years' weeding; but we will find that even seven years' weeding, be it ever so carefully done, will not prevent the weeds from springing up again in the same field under favorable circumstances. There is to be a constant warfare against weeds as in the past, and it is folly to suppose that even all men combined can destroy the seed from which spring out noxious weeds. They remain dormant in the soil for years; they are waiting over every field and sea, and they will vegetate whenever the occasion calls for their development.

But what are weeds? Some call witch-grass a weed to be fought with hoe and rake, while others maintain that it is one of our best grasses, more nutritious than timothy or red top, and a surer crop than either. Some would hold up their hands in holy horror to see our common weeds growing anywhere; while others cultivate the same weeds for their stock or to plow in for green manure.

We should eradicate and destroy weeds just so far as it is profitable to protect our crops and no farther. The most prosperous farmers do not waste their time and money in the vain attempt to destroy all weeds, but with judicious economy of time and labor to control and limit their growth for the time being, well knowing that with another year and another crop, weeds will do no harm, because the conditions of the future crop will prevent their growth.

It is the conclusion of most practical farmers that moderate fertilization, fair cultivation, and medium crops make the best return for the labor and capital employed; still, a few claim that, by a very liberal expenditure of fertilizers, high cultivation and immense crops, the farm can be improved and the bank account increased at the same time.

While facts and practice are better than theory on the farm, and the great majority of farmers tell us that it is not by the high cultivation, prodigal expenditure of fertilizers and big crops that they are able to have a surplus at the end of the year, it will be well for us to try experiments on a small scale, and to stick to the good old-fashioned way until we can find the better way.—D. T. C. in Massachusetts Plowman.

FERTILITY—HOW IT ORIGINATES.

If we took a quantity of rocks, such as we find in the various parts of the earth's surface—granite, slate, quartz, limestone, etc., and, after grinding them to different degrees of fineness, were to mix them together in different proportions; we could, from the known composition of these various rocks, produce soils which would contain the most important mineral ingredients of plant food in very different proportions. Assuming that we purposely made one soil as rich as we could in this food, one as poor as we could, with two others in intermediate stages, and then left them exposed to the ordinary influence of sun and rain. I am here assuming the experiment to be tried upon several acres, and the artificial soil to be several feet deep; we should find that the seeds of plants carried by the winds and other agencies would spread and grow upon these soils with very different degrees of rapidity; and, assuming that we were able to watch the process for thousands of years, we might see several remarkable changes in the character of vegetation. The surplus of the winter store of acorns laid up by a mouse might give rise to a forest of oaks, thick enough to destroy all the previous vegetation of grass, and again an accidental fire or a hurricane might sweep away the forest vegetation, to be replaced by growth of some other kind.

The character and amount of the vegetation would differ greatly on the different soils, and the largest amount would be found on the soil where the plant could get the largest amount of food.

There being no carbon or combined nitrogen in the soil, the first plants would be entirely dependent upon what they could obtain of these substances, directly or indirectly, from the atmosphere. Rainwater always contains ammonia, and the plant and soil may condense a certain further amount from the atmosphere; but growth, even in the soil richest in mineral food, would at first be small, as the decomposition of carbonic acid and fixation of carbon would be limited by the amount of combined nitrogen which the plant could obtain from the sources mentioned above; and it would be much greater where the most abundant food existed, as every particle of nitrogen would be there used up; while where there was less mineral food, some of the nitrogen might pass through the soil and be lost. Each year a certain portion of the vegetable growth dies off; leaves and branches fall, and portions of the roots decay; the greater part of the organic portion which falls upon the surface of the ground returns again to the atmosphere, but a certain part remains, and added to that which decays under ground, becomes available for future growth. The atmosphere of the soil, which at first differed little from that which exists above it, becomes highly charged with carbonic acid, which decomposes the mineral in the soil; and thus, year by year, more and more of the nitrogen, collected by each generation of plants, becomes available for the generation that succeeds it.

Upon the greater number of the ordinary soils the proportion of both carbon and nitrogen becomes less and less as we penetrate below the surface; consequently those substances must have had their origin in vegetation which had once grown upon the surface. Some soils which are called alluvial, possess a subsoil fertility, which appears to have been a deposit derived from the remains of vegetation washed from other soils. Fertility is therefore due to the organic residue of previous generations of plants, mixed with certain mineral substances, the most important of which are phosphoric acid and potash.—Dr. Lawes.

RHUBARB CULTURE.

The eminent gardener, W. D. Philbrick, writes the following article for the New England Farmer:

The culture of rhubarb, or pie plant, is of comparatively recent date. It is said that in 1810, Myatt, a market gardener near London, sent his two sons to market with five bunches of rhubarb, and they could only sell three! At present it has its place in every village garden, and the market gardeners cultivate it by the acre and carry it to market by the ton. Its culture, though simple and easy, is not so generally understood as it should be, for it is seldom seen in perfection, except in some rich gentleman's garden, or in the market gardens near the cities; it supplies us with delicious pies and sour sauce at a season when apples are stale, and before ripening strawberries have begun the long list of small fruits which refresh us through the summer.

The soil best suited for rhubarb is a deep, rich, moist loam, well drained, deeply worked, and very heavily manured. For a small garden bed it is usual to spade the land two feet deep, working in a heavy dressing of manure the whole depth. For larger plantations the manure should be deeply plowed in, and a subsoil plow made to follow in the furrow to loosen the subsoil.

The planting is done either in autumn after the October frosts have killed the leaves, or very early in spring, before the buds have leaved out. The old roots are cut into "sets," consisting of one strong bud with a piece of old root attached; these are set, one in a place, three feet apart each way, in the furrow of a small plow, and covered with a hoe about an inch deep. The first year after planting, the stalks should not be pulled at all, but afterwards they will bear pulling quite severely. The after culture consists in hoeing whenever needed, to keep down weeds, in cutting off the blossom stems as fast as they appear, since if allowed to grow they weaken the root, and in yearly application of manure, which is best done in autumn, after the leaves have fallen; no product of the garden so urgently demands and generously repays heavy manuring; twenty cords per acre every year is nine too much; the plow is run lightly between the rows to stir the soil and cover the manure.

BEET SUGAR.

Sugar can be made from juice of sugar beets by nearly the same process by which it is made from maple sap, by adding some lime to neutralize the acidity and by filtering it through powdered bone-black. But the great question in reference to making sugar from beets is one of profit. To make it profitable the most economical methods must be employed from first to last, in choice of soil, manures, preparation of soil, sowing, cultivating, harvesting, storing, grating or rasping the roots, and the use of great pressure to press out the juice. After all possible juice is extracted, it must be evaporated in the best way, probably in vacuum pans, and cleansed and refined by the most approved methods. We think the most approved method of extracting the juice is by the centrifugal process, throwing it from the pulp, from rapidly-revolving machines, and even throwing off the molasses by centrifugal force. All of this requires knowledge and capital, and can best be done by large financial corporations. It is a question whether sorghum will not prove so much more profitable than beets as to supplant them as material for sugar.—Exchange.

CABBAGE FOR FATTENING STOCK.

English cattle herders recommended feeding cabbage to stock, and say that they will take on more fat on cabbage mixed with fine cut wheat, straw and cotton cake, than upon any other feed. Cows seem to get fat on cabbage, and the flow of milk falls off fully one-third, when the early fall cabbage feed is changed for hay and meal, later in the seasons. Cabbage is one of the most nutritious crops we grow, and has great value for feeding, especially for milch cows. Eighty-nine per centum is water. But of the dry matter of the cabbage, forty-six per centum is starch, sugar, gum, no nitrogen here,) and Liebig maintains that these elements are converted into fat, which is also a non-nitrogenized body. In the quantity of food capable of yielding nourishment to animals, which can be obtained from an acre of land of average quality, the nutritive power is to be estimated chiefly by the amount of starch and gluten it contains, and in an annexed table he shows that wheat and corn yield nearly equal quantities of this kind of nourishment, oats one-half more, and cabbage six times as much as wheat or corn. So much for quantity and quality in the cabbage.—Domestic Journal.

PLANT STRAWBERRIES.

Let every one plant for home use if not for market. Let no one say it is too much work—takes too much time and labor, etc., but determine to have this delicious fruit, and in abundance, too. It is just as easy to raise strawberries as to raise grass if only the proper means are used. Can it be possible that any owner of a farm, or even of a garden, will go without this fruit when it can be raised in such abundance so cheaply and of so good quality. Set as few or as many Charles Downing or Sharpless plants as you may deem best, and you will have no occasion to regret it. If the farmer will not do it, let the sons, the wife or the daughters. There is no reason why the owner of the soil should not have this fruit in abundance. Eat more fruit and less meat and especially less pork.—Congregationalist.

OYSTER-SHELLS FOR FOWLS.

Supply your fowls with plenty of pounded oyster-shells in winter. In summer, if not confined, they can find their own shell-making material; but when everything is frozen they must be helped out if you want eggs.

TAN BARK.

Spent tan bark has been plowed into a compact clay soil with the best results, as it rendered the soil mellow and increased its warmth.

Household.

THINGS TO BE REMEMBERED.—That parsley eaten with vinegar will remove the unpleasant effects of eating onions.

That cakes, puddings, etc., are improved by making the currants, sugar and flour hot before using them.

That lamp shades of ground glass should be cleansed with soap or pearlash; these will not injure or discolor them.

That white satin shoes may be cleaned by rubbing them with blue and stone flannel, and afterwards cleaning them with bread.

That gold lace may be cleansed by rubbing it with a soft brush, dipped in rock alum, burnt and sifted to a very fine powder.

That earthy mold should never be washed from potatoes, carrots, or other roots, until immediately before they are to be cooked.

That cold boiled potatoes used as soap will clean the hands and keep the skin soft and healthy. Those not over-boiled are the best.

That charcoal powder is good for polishing knives without destroying the blades. It is also a good tooth powder when finely pulverized.

That potato water in which potatoes have been scraped, the water being allowed to settle and afterwards strained, is good for sponging silk out of silk.

That straw matting may be cleansed with a large coarse cloth dipped in salt and water, and then wiped dry. The salt prevents the straw from turning yellow.

That buttermilk is excellent for cleaning sponges. Steep the sponge in the milk for some hours, then squeeze it out, and wash it in cold water. Lemon juice is also good.

That tea leaves, used for keeping down dust when sweeping carpets, are apt to stain light colors; salt is best in the winter, and new mown hay in the summer.

That a piece of linen cloth dipped in turpentine and wrapped round the toe on which a soft corn is situated, will give relief, and after a few days the corn will disappear.

That rustic black Italian crape may be restored by dipping in skimmed milk and water, with a bit of fine glue dissolved in it and made scalding hot. It should be clapped and pulled dry, like muslin.

That the white of an egg, into which a piece of alum about the size of a walnut has been stewed until it forms a jelly, is a capital remedy for sprains. It should be laid over the sprain upon a piece of lint, and be changed as often as it becomes dry.

That a lump of fresh lime, the size of a walnut, dropped into a pint of water and allowed to stand over night, the water being poured off from the sediment and mixed with a quarter of a pint of the best vinegar, forms a good wash for scurf in the head. It is to be applied to the roots of the hair.

COOKING FRUIT.—The season of summer fruit is approaching—strawberries will soon be here, and these will be followed in quick succession by other subjects; and it may be well to repeat a hint we have often made, on the manner of using sugar in cooking fruit. Every housewife should know that sugar boiled with an acid, if it be but for three minutes, will be converted into glucose, which is the form of sugar found in sweet apples. One pound of sugar has as much sweetening power as two and a half pounds of glucose. In other words, one pound of sugar stirred into the fruit, after it is cooked and while yet warm, will make the fruit as sweet as two and a half pounds added while the fruit is boiling. Save your sugar by a little chemical knowledge.

THE FLESH BRUSH.—Though, "cleanliness is next to godliness," it may be injudicious to wash the body in cold water at all times, especially for the aged, very young, and the very weak. A cold bath is never judicious—always injudicious—when not followed by a sensation of comfort and pleasure. On the contrary, no weather is too cold for the judicious use of the flesh brush, one not harsh enough to produce irritation of the surface. In the morning its use will quicken the surface circulation, increase the warmth, sending the blood to the extremities, while at night, on retiring, a soothing effect is produced, quieting the nerves, and favoring a good night's sleep—a matter of vast importance, especially to the nervous and delicate.

FLAKY PIE CRUST.—A nice, flaky crust is made by using one pound of flour, half a pound of butter, two eggs, and a teaspoonful of baking powder, in the following manner: Mix the baking powder through the flour thoroughly, add the whipped white of the eggs, and mix into a stiff paste, using about a gill of cold water. Turn the paste upon a well-floured board, and roll it out in a thin sheet; spread over it with a knife, one-third of the butter. Sprinkle over the butter a little flour; make three folds of the paste, roll it out thin, spread over it the second third of butter, fold and roll as before, and spread the remaining third of the butter out; roll out to the proper thickness for use. This is the rule used at the Kensington school.

CELERY.—A dish which is sure to find favor with lovers of celery, is made by taking the stalks of celery which are hot thoroughly bleached, cutting them in pieces of about an inch long, and cooking as you would asparagus, the same length of time being required to boil it. Season with milk, butter, pepper and salt.

CREAM COCOANUT CANDY.—Boil the syrup until it begins to thicken, then add the meat of one cocoanut coarsely grated, and pour in flat pans about an inch thick, or less. While cooking cut in broad strips. This is very fine. Cream candy is not soft until kept a week.

FIG PUDDING.—Half a pound of bread crumbs, half a pound of figs, six ounces suet, six ounces moist sugar, two eggs, and a little grated nutmeg. The figs and suet to be chopped very fine, then all to be well mixed together and steamed in a mould for four hours. Serve with sauce.—Cultivator.

BISMARCK WAFFLES.—Half a pound of butter stirred to a cream, the yolks of five eggs mixed with half a pound of flour, half a pint of milk gradually stirred in, and lastly the whites of the eggs whipped to a stiff froth and beaten into the butter. Very rich and delicious.

Glass can be readily and neatly drilled with a small drill operated by a bow and kept moist with spirits of turpentine.

Scientific.

WHAT IS NICKEL?—Since the convenient five-cent coin, which, in common talk, is called "a nickel," has come into general circulation, the question above is asked either mentally or orally hundreds of times every day, and but few get an intelligent answer. In China and India, a white copper, called pack tong, has long been known, and has been extensively used both there and in Europe for counterfeiting silver coin. About the year 1709 a peculiar ore was discovered in the copper mines of Saxony, which had the appearance of being very rich, but in smelting it yielded no copper, and the miners called it kupfer-nickel, or false copper. In 1751, Constadt announced the discovery of a new metal in kupfer-nickel; to which he gave the name of nickel. It was in combination with arsenic, from which he could relieve it only in parts. The alloy of nickel and arsenic which he obtained was white, brittle and very hard, and had a melting point nearly as high as cast iron. It was not until 1823 that pure nickel was obtained by analysis of German silver, which had for a number of years been produced at Suhl, in Saxony. Its composition was ascertained to be copper ten parts, zinc five and nickel four. If more nickel be used the alloy is as white as silver and susceptible of a very high polish, but becomes too brittle and hard to be hammered or rolled, and can be worked only by casting. Pure nickel is a white metal which tarnishes readily in the air. Unlike silver, it is not acted on by the vapor of sulphur, and even the strong mineral acids attract it but slightly. Nickel has the hardness of iron, and like it, has strong magnetic properties, but can not be welded and is soldered with difficulty. Pure nickel has heretofore been used chiefly for plating, for which purpose its hardness and power to resist atmospheric influences admirably adapt it. Within the last year the French have succeeded in rolling the metal into plates, from which spoons and other table furniture may be pressed. Nickel bronze, which consists of equal parts of copper and nickel, with a little tin, may be cast into very delicate forms, and is susceptible of a high polish. Mines of nickel are worked at Chatham, Conn., and Lancaster, Pa., and is said to be found at Mine La Motte, Mo., and at several points in Colorado and New Mexico, where but little attention is paid to it. It is extensively mined in Saxony and in Sweden, but the late discovery of a new ore (a silicate of nickel in New Caledonia, will probably suspend the use of the arsenified ores, and yet bring nickel into common use. Switzerland, in the year 1852, made a coin of German silver, which is identical in composition with our nickel coin. The United States made nickel cents in 1856, and eight years later coined the five-cent pieces. Belgium adopted nickel coinage in 1860 and Germany in 1873. England has lately coined pennies for Jamaica, but at home she and France adhere to the clumsy copper small change.

—In consequence of the announcements, made some time ago by the French Academy of Sciences, in reference to the subject of malleable bronze, this substance is likely to come into practical use both in Europe and America. The existence of this substance has long been known from specimens of very ancient origin, as well as from its use by the Chinese in the construction of their tom-toms. It may be prepared from bell-metal bronze, to which twenty per cent. of tin has been added, and heating to a dark red. This exceeding-brittle alloy when thus heated becomes very malleable, and can be hammered or rolled out to the thickness of half a millimetre. In the operation the density of the metal is increased, and it can be welded easily, preserving its entire homogeneity. The whole secret of success rests in giving the bronze the proper degree of heat, since without this it is extremely brittle.

—According to the Academy, what bids fair to be a discovery of the first interest has just been made at Alexandria by a Greek antiquary of that city. Near the spot indicated by Strabo he has found a large subterraneous vaulted chamber, which is described as having the roof supported by Doric pilasters. This he conjectures, with great probability, to be the hitherto unknown burial vault of the Ptolemaic dynasty. Opening out from the large chamber are smaller ones, of which the walls and roofs are covered with beautifully executed frescoes. Of these at present three only have been partially excavated, but in one has already been found a granite sarcophagus, which bears the name of the tutor of Ptolemy Philopator. Here also was discovered a splendid bronze lamp, with a long Greek inscription.

—On the 13th instant Messrs. Siemans and Balske, well-known Berlin electricians, gave a public trial of their new electric railroad, which runs between Lichterfeldt and Cadetthaus, six miles from Berlin. The trial was made in a simple train-car, with an electric battery concealed between the wheels. It was conveyed through the rails on which it ran with a principal battery at the station. The rails are thirty-nine inches apart, and exactly resemble those of an ordinary railroad, the gauge narrower. The greatest speed obtained was eighteen English miles an hour. If necessary far greater speed could be obtained, but this was not allowed by the police authorities. The railroad was opened to the public on Monday of this week.

—The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company is burning clay for ballasting the road-bed. A small fire of bituminous coal is started on the surface of the ground, and when burning freely, the fire is covered with a layer of lumpy clay, then alternately coal and clay, the coal decreasing in quantity until at the top it is as one to fifteen. Three cones each eighteen feet high and containing in all about one thousand yards of material have been started near Red Oak, Iowa. They will burn for months.

—A new sort of portable fire escape has just been patented, which consists of an arrangement in the form of a large telescope, which can be extended upwards forming a tower reaching to the top stories, and from the upper section of which a door can be opened and a bridge stretched across to the burning house. Over this persons can go and descend within the great tube, which is protected by a covering of sheet iron.

—Mr. M. W. Spring, of Brussels, proposes a method of soldering by compression. Powdered lead becomes solid, like a block obtained from fusion, under a pressure of 2,000 atmospheres, and with a pressure of 5,000 atmospheres, runs like a liquid. In like manner tin becomes solid under a pressure of 3,000 atmospheres, zinc at 5,000, and bismuth at 6,000 atmospheres.

—Withered leaves having the yellow, brown, or red autumnal colors, can be made green again, by steeping them in water with a little zinc powder.

A Rich Experience.

WHAT A PROMINENT AND WEALTHY CHICAGOAN TOLD A REPORTER.

HIS REVELATIONS UPON A SUBJECT OF VITAL INTEREST TO ALL.

(Detroit Free Press.)

The experience of any one of education and learning extending over a long period of time must necessarily be valuable, and while no two experiences in this world are alike, there is such a similarity between them as to render one which is rich in valuable facts of benefit to all. America's greatest orator declared that he knew of no way of judging the future but by the past; and past personal experience is of the same nature as that history which repeats itself.

A representative of this paper while lounging in the lobby of a prominent New York hotel, met a gentleman whom he had known years before in the city of Detroit, but whom he had not seen before for a number of years. When the knight of the quill had last seen this gentleman, he was giving his entire time and attention to an extensive medical practice, and was on the crest of the wave of popularity. From Detroit he removed to New York where he could find a more extensive field for his talents and experience. Although several years had passed, the doctor's physical condition had evidently very much improved, for he was looking much better than when the man of news had last seen him. After some general talk, the doctor fell into an easy train of conversation and uttered some truths so scientific and valuable as to justify their reproduction in print.

"Yes," said the doctor, "I have improved in health since you last saw me, and I hope also in many other ways. One thing however, I have succeeded in doing, and it is one of the hardest things for any one, and especially a doctor, to do and that is I have overcome my prejudices. You know there are some people who prefer to remain in the wrong rather than acknowledge the manifest right. Such prejudice leads to bigotry of the worst order, and of precisely the same nature as characterized the sixteenth century when people were burned at the stake. Now I am a physician and in the 'old school' order, too; but I have, after years of experience and observation, come to the conclusion that truth is the highest of all things, and that if prejudice or bigotry stand in the way of truth, so much the worse for them, they are certain to be crushed sooner or later. Why, when I knew you in Detroit, I would have no sooner thought of violating the code of ethics laid down by the profession, or of prescribing anything out of the regular order, than I would of amputating my hand. Now, however, I prescribe and advise those things which I believe to be adapted to cure, and which my experience has proved to be such."

"This is rather an unusual way for a physician to talk, is it not, doctor?"

"Certainly it is. It is way outside of our code of ethics, but I have grown far beyond the code. I have all I can attend to, and am determined to be honest with my patients and mankind, whether my brother physicians are with me or not. Why, I prescribe medicines every day, some of them so-called patent medicines, which would render me liable to expulsion from the medical fraternity, but I am supremely indifferent to their laws."

"Are the medical fraternity of the country combined against proprietary medicines, doctor?"

"Invariably, and it is sufficient ground for expulsion from any medical society in the land to prescribe any patent medicine whatever, no matter if it is made from an exact formula, such as physicians are using every day. You see the code is established and sustained by old physicians like myself, who make the rules and insist upon their enforcement in order to keep the younger doctors from obtaining a foothold and encroaching upon the already established practice of the older ones. This is largely the reason why young physicians have such a hard time of it; they are fettered by the code, and have only their personal influence to depend upon in securing practice."

"How did you come to get such heretical ideas as these, doctor?"

"Oh, they are the result of my experience and observation. I obtained my first ideas upon the subject, however, from having been cured after all my care and the skill of my professional brethren had failed to relieve me. Why, I was so badly off with a complication of troubles, including dyspepsia, and consequently imperfect kidneys and liver, that I feared I should have to give up my practice. For more than a month I could not sit down or get up without the most intense agony, and I was suffering all the while. Some one advised me to go out of the regular channels and try a remedy that was becoming quite famous for the remark that it was effecting, but my prejudice was altogether too strong for that. However, I felt sagely neglecting the remedy, but I promise you I said nothing to my brother physicians, or even to my family about it. Well, sir, it was a revelation to me, for in all my medical experience I never saw anything operate so rapidly or so effectually as that did. I was up and about to-day, and for all I know, my life above to the remedy known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. That was the starting point with me, and my prejudices faded very rapidly after that. I can assure you. I went to reading extensively on analyzing those expensively, and I suppose I analyzed all the leading proprietary medicines that are made. Many of them I found perfectly harmless, being compounded simply of water with a little flavoring. A few of them, of them all, however, I found made up of prescriptions used by physicians in their every day practice, but all of the entire number I found only one that combined absolutely harmful ingredients and that in very small quantities. Indeed, we are prescribing things constantly that have more deleterious matter in than they had. After discovering this, I had to myself, why should the medical fraternity be prejudiced against these prescriptions, which they are writing every day, simply because they are put up in a bottle and are sold with a government stamp on the wrapper. I speedily came to the conclusion that I would be bound by it no longer. Since that time, I have prescribed proprietary remedies nearly every day in my practice, and I have no reason to regret having done so. Why, only a few days ago I advised a lady who was suffering from a serious female difficulty and displacement to use this same Safe Kidney and Liver Cure which cured me. I saw her this morning and she is nearly well. The pain and inflammation are all gone and she is around as usual. We have no right in the medical fraternity to sit back and declare there is no such thing as improvement or advancement, or that we have a monopoly of the remedies which nature has given to mankind. There are great changes going on in every department of life and there are great developments in medicine as well. Thousands of people die every year from supposed typhoid fever, rheumatism or other complaints, when in reality it is from trichina, and the result of eating poorly cooked and diseased pork. A vast majority of all diseases arise from imperfect kidneys or liver. The liver becomes clogged, and its work is thrown upon the kidneys; they become overworked and broke down, and so the poison gets into the blood instead of being thrown from the system. No one with perfect kidneys or liver is ever troubled with malaria; and it is the poisonous particles which these diseased organs allow to get into the blood that clog the capillaries of the lungs and cause tubercles and consumption. Thousands of children are dying every year from dropsy as the sequel to scarlatina, when in reality it is diseased kidneys which have become weakened by the fever they have just had. Here is another strange thing: many one in ten people who have diseased kidneys notice any pain in the vicinity of the kidneys, for these organs lose their nervous sensations when they become diseased, and the symptoms are shown in hundreds of other ways."

"Well, doctor, you have got some new truths here, certainly, but they sound very reasonable to me."

"Well, whether they are reasonable or not, I have demonstrated to my own satisfaction that they are true, and I propose to stand by them, no matter how much opposition I may raise by doing so. Any man, considerate of his pocket book or of his own personal ends as to stultify himself by suppressing the manifest truth, is unworthy the name of man, and unworthy the confidence of the public whom he serves."

EDUCATIONAL.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE
MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.
Owned, controlled and managed by the Louisiana Annual Conference.
Course of study equal to any college in the South. Its roll of pupils has nearly doubled in three months and still they come. Noted for healthfulness of location. All literary rates.
Total expense for Spring term, commencing February 14, 1881, only $75 in literary and classical course. Music $30. No extras. Let Louisiana mind up their own schools.
A specimen copy of College News free on application. Address REV. J. LANE HORNE, President.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE
ABINGDON, VA.
In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the most beautiful sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea. Bishops McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement. Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. C. Kneringer, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly educated musical artists.
A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.
The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.
Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.
$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music $50 additional.
Spring session begins February 4, 1881. Discount of twenty per cent. to Methodist preachers. Publishing House bonds taken from them at par.
Send for catalogue to
REV. R. E. ROSS, President.

HAMBURG (ARK.) HIGH SCHOOL
Thirty Miles North of Rastrop, La.
This institution, for both sexes, now in its fifth year, has 64 months yet remaining. Its facilities for educating are peculiar, and its charges are moderate. All modern improvements introduced. Faculty full and experienced. The principal has had twenty years experience as teacher and knows how to manage children.
One hundred and twenty-five dollars will pay for school expenses, except Music.
City examiners are referred to Judge R. F. Bullard, J. M. Bonner and J. M. Lewis, Esqrs., to the Rt. Rev. W. Carter and Bishop Keener.
D. C. H. CONNERLY, Principal.
January 6, 1881.

READVILLA SEMINARY
BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.
A home school for girls. Thorough training in all departments. Full corps of efficient teachers. Superior music and art. Numbers limited.
For particulars address
MRS. MARY W. EFFINGER, Principal.

Memphis Conference Female Institute
JACKSON, TENNESSEE.
REV. A. W. JONES, A. M., D. D., President.
This well known College of the South will begin its Fall session on the First Monday in September. Opening Concert and Address Tuesday evening. For thirty-six years this has been a favorite school of more than twelve hundred graduates annually.
The Faculty is full and efficient. The Trustees stand among the foremost in the Conference. Language and Art.
For further information apply to the President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE
AT BATON ROUGE, LA.
The next session of this school will begin September 22, 1880.
This is a family Boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. The construction thorough to all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or for business life. Discipline parental. The personal care of the principal is given to the morals and manners of the pupils.
For circulars, with necessary information, address
W. R. N. MARCHAND, Baton Rouge, La.

CENTENARY COLLEGE
JACKSON, LOUISIANA.
Opens September 6, 1880. The last session was the most prosperous one since the war. The rates of board and tuition need not exceed $144 in the preparatory Department, nor $184 in College classes for the scholastic year. Send for a Catalogue.
C. G. ANDREWS, President.

East Mississippi Female College
MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.
REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., President.
A chartered and prosperous Southern school for girls and young ladies. Few schools have grown more steadily and rapidly in public confidence and patronage. Increased in numbers during the last seven years as the following figures show: 61, 69, 96, 97, 143. Commanded by patronage for the last from Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee and Alabama. Its past history, increasing facilities, accessible and methods of close and thorough instruction make its friends of a long and prosperous future for the institution. Send for catalogue.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,
EAST TENNESSEE.
Founded 1849, and located where
Pure waters flow,
Sleek cattle low,
Cool breezes blow,
Ripe apples grow.
Excellent and tried teachers. Terms very reasonable. The Female Department is at Seviersville, on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia railroad. The Male Department, at Olivet, two miles off. Postoffice, seven miles out on the railway. A monthly paper, the "Hiwassee College Record," only 25 cents a year. Address
J. H. BRUNER, Postoffice.

JEFFERSON COLLEGE,
HIGH SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN.
Six miles from Natchez, Miss. Session begins October 16. Full corps of instructors. Course study thorough and extensive. Nearly fifty boys from abroad. Pupils from a distance board with principal. Entire expense for ten months, $200. For catalogue address the principal,
J. S. RAYMOND,
Washington, Adams county, Miss.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE
SUMMERFIELD, ALA.
Will begin its forty-first session October 6, 1880. Great attention paid to the regular course. Especial attention to the Music and Art departments. Address for reference to special fitness. Charges moderate. For further information address
H. M. MOSS, A. M., President.

HOMER MALE COLLEGE
THE TWENTY-FIRST SESSION
will begin the
FIRST OF SEPTEMBER 1880.
Address R. A. SMITH, President.

MISCELLANEOUS.

U. S. BONDS.
Registered 3 1-2 Per Cent.
Coupon and Registered 4 Per Cent.
BOUGHT AND SOLD BY
New Orleans National Bank,
58 CAMP STREET.

Crescent Insurance Co.
67 & 69 Camp Street,
NEW ORLEANS.
ORGANIZED 1840.—REORGANIZED 1869.
Cash Capital $400,000.
SOLICITS
FIRE, RIVER AND MARINE RISKS.
W. R. LYMAN.....President.
S. B. NEWMAN.....Vice President.
CHAS. E. RICE.....Secretary.

Christian Advocate.

A Singular Conversion.

In the course of ministerial labor, I have met with a singular case of conversion. A knowledge of its salient points may serve some troubled mind, that is wondering whether any other has ever had his experience. As in water face answereth to face, so may a reader may find himself reflected in a friend. When persons begin to ask Christ, and enter the Christian life, they usually look about to find the experiences of others, of whom they have heard or read, with which to compare their own impressions and convictions, doubts and difficulties. And this is natural, and not altogether unwise. For while our individualities are such that no two persons have an exact correspondence of experience, there are many analogies. A pastoral training of seven years has taught me that the means used by the Divine Spirit to induce repentance and begin a religious life may be included in a very few classes. There are great numbers in heaven and here in the church who date their first awakening to a fit of sickness; to the loss of a friend; to escape from awful peril and rescue from death. In these, God spoke so audibly and dealt so mercifully, that afterward they were constrained to become His by surrender and consecration.

Another large class credit the ordinances of religion as the means used in their conversion. They came gradually to feel the obligation of being Christians, after being led from youth to frequent the house of God. There is a memorable moment of deep sorrow for sin. There are no accounts to be given of great joy in the morning after nights of tears. The Spirit acted upon them as silently as leaven in the meal. Or, it may be, there was a professional sermon, which awakened conscience, as a peal of thunder does the sleeper. The reading of some part of Scripture, wherein the danger of sin and the second death are described, has terrified others with fear, and led them to the Ark. The sight of Christ's disciples celebrating the Holy Communion has opened at God, more than once, my knowledge, to determine a halting mind to come into faith and fellowship with the Church. But here is a case quite peculiar in this, that no monitory signs suggested its commencement.

The subject is a lady in middle life, the wife of a man of large means, whose greatest pleasure is and has been to gratify her wishes in all things. They have lived thus for more than twenty years. In them all, their highest aim has not reach above social pleasure and domestic happiness. Theatres, operas, concerts, entertainments, travel, took her time. To church they did not go at all. Sabbath afternoon was spent in calling for pleasure. God was not in their thoughts. "I would not allow religion to me," she said. "I counted myself quite as good as those calling themselves Christians."

"Had you any compunctions of conscience and disquiet of mind lest your course might not lead to a happy future?"

"I thought nothing about it. The matter of religion was as foreign to my thought as if there were no such one."

"How many years were you habitually absent from the church, and heard no sermons and participated in no religious services?"

"For more than twenty years, with very few exceptions; and, when I did there was no more impression made on my mind than if it had been a concert."

But now observe the strange and sudden turn which came to his dear one. No dire misfortune had befallen the family purse. The equipage and privileges which had been at her command were still. Life, on its temporal side, had not lost a factor of its fullness. She had indeed been overtaken by temporary feebleness of body and weakness of nervous energy. But nothing threatening such as has often frightened impenitence into prayer. Nothing had appeared to cause her self-security to consider the foundation of its peace. She was still a woman of the world, without God and without hope.

In this state of affairs, she retired one night as usual, and slept until the small hours, when she started, and awakening suddenly, she felt as if she had been translated to heaven and now returned to earth. It was not as a dream. She saw no display like those that visionaries depict. There was no effort to be made more than that which she gave to her husband by her side: "I have been in heaven!" Resting peacefully until morning, she rose and rested then she ever felt. Looking out of the window, "the whole world seemed changed." Old things had passed away; behold, all things were become new. The city, the passing people on the highway, had a different appearance and atmosphere. Without effort, prayer and joy occupied every thought. She knew almost nothing of the Bible, nor of the dialect of religion. There was no one to whom to communicate her thoughts. She longed to tell her feelings to some clergyman. But she knew no one in the city, although her entire life had been spent within its limits. Then fell to herself, she opened the Scriptures and began to read. And lo! that Book, which before had no meaning for her, "so insipidly dry," now began to yield refreshing, like a fountain. The further she read, the richer the reward and the sweeter her experience.

For a considerable time, the Bible was her sole companion in the secret of her change of heart. Then, feeling inclined to go to church, she selected one to which certain circumstances pointed, and which she innocently supposed was like every other church. There she attended for some time, only to grow in the conviction that her views of the Scriptures, and of the Saviour, and of His salvation, were widely different from those of the preacher—the same being a very unevangelical man—which characteristic he did not appreciate at the time. Leaving there, her feet were led to our fellowship, where for years she has been growing up into the likeness of the Lord Jesus Christ, beautifully.

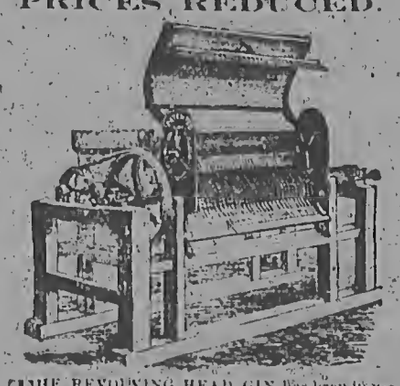
Considering the suddenness of her change, unattended by any human agency, which might have, under God, led her into it, the case is very noticeable. But the confidence that we have in the genuineness of such an experience must hang upon its subsequent history. Because, if sepulchral seems had no good motive in doing it, it has served religion a high and by calling in question many visions, dreams and miracles which usual to pass for religious experiences; and done so by proving them to be products of nothing but physical disorder. "By their fruits ye shall know them." This infallible test, given by infinite Wisdom, is the true one to apply; and we apply it in this instance.

How did this good woman go on? Did she lapse into the old life after the event had lost its novelty? For from [illegible], every step proved the past to have been ordered of the Lord. At her husband's request, she continued for a time attending places of amusement, playing cards, and riding for pleasure on the Sabbath. No one had counselled her against them. But gradually she began to grow so unhappy as to search for excuses from these things. Of course it required an uncommon courage for one of the gentlest of wives to disagree with the wills and ways of a companion beside whom she had kept step for twenty years in all forms of worldly enjoyment. For while his heart was too loving to upbraid or oppose, it showed its displeasure and expressed its pain at their separation of preferences. He could not understand her. She rapid with difficulty understand herself. But, according to her light, she felt compelled to advance in a direction that soon led her utterly away from the play-house, caused her to decline the card-table, and keep in the house after attending religious services on the Sabbath. Meanwhile the ways of devotion grew more delightful. The pleasures of religion became more deep, and pure and permanent. The mysteries either dissolved or were eclipsed in the light of His countenance. The Word spoke with Divine authority; and the Spirit's work went on subduing all things unto the obedience of Christ. Until now, when years have passed and character is fixed, it becomes safe to speak of this conversion as quite peculiar, in that none of the ordinary means preceded it, in that it was from utter irreligiousness to a complete consecration, and became the triumph over hindrances, and the continuance and consistency of testimony to its reality, show that we are right in judging it to be as genuine as it is extraordinary. Paul's was not so sudden and exceptional, because he had been intensely religious after the strictest sect, a Pharisee, only he had not found "the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world," until it shone round him on the road. But in the case of my friend, it was midnight, moral darkness, set down into mid-day light, without a dawn or growing day between.

INDIANS IN CIVILIZED CLOTHES.—The Indians that have been at Hampton between two and three years, are now beginning to learn the value and use of clothes. They see that it is a little more trouble to get a suit of clothes than a blanket, which they could make answer for hat, coat, vest and pants. The girls who were accustomed to keep both body and head buried beneath heavy shawls on all occasions and in all places, are begining to leave them off more frequently. A few mornings ago, a girl came in the class with her shawl all drawn up round her head. One or two of the girls began at once to motion and pull at her. She very soon dropped it from her head. One of the girls seeing that I had been noticing what was going on, said: "Indian girls at Mr. H.'s school wear shawls in their heads, but Hampton girls do not do it." Suspecting that they had been recently lectured on the subject, I replied, "I am glad they know better." Several times in the same class a girl would unconsciously gather her shawl about her head, but a mere nod or look from the others was enough to make it drop. I think a reform in this matter has begun. The not accustomed to deal with the Indians would be surprised at the large amount of clothes required for the first one or two years after taking off the blanket. To say that the boys are hard on clothes is to put it too mildly. The first two years they found many strange uses for their bed clothing. Blankets would be cut up and decorated for fancy pants, sheets would be turned into strings to serve their many purposes, and even now if a boy is in need of them he will not hesitate to use his coat linings. Whatever is new must be worn in preference to anything else. If a boy has a new Sunday suit, it is hard to make him understand why he should not wear it in February. They think they ought to be permitted to wear a new pair of cotton overalls to the exclusion of the woolen pants, for a few days, till the novelty of them is gone. The following is about the average of the principal garments needed for a boy for the first two years: eight outside coats, nine pair pants, two overcoats, ten pair shoes, eleven outside shirts, fourteen pair socks, nine neckties, six pair suspenders, eight hats or caps. Southern Workman.

CARLYLE'S INDIGESTION.—I had parted with his wife a day or two before her death, at the railway, after a little visit she had paid me, in an agony of apprehension lest something should happen to her on the brief journey, so utterly spent was she, like a dying woman, but always so inquisitive, suffering no one to accompany or take care of her. Her clear and expressive face, in ivory paleness, the hair still dark, untouched by age, upon her capacious forehead, the eloquent mouth, scarcely owning the least curve of a smile at the bright wit and humorous brilliant touches which kept all her hearers amused and delighted, seem still before me. She was full of his Edinburgh Reojorship, of the excitement and pleasure of it, and profound, heartfelt, yet half-disdainful satisfaction in that, as she thought, late recognition of what he was. To this public proof of the honor in which his country held him both he and she seemed to attach more importance than it deserved; as if his country had only then learned to prize and honor him. But the reader must not suppose that this gallant woman who had protected and fought for him through all his struggles, showed her intense sympathy and anxiety now in any sentimental way of tenderness. She had arranged everything for him to the minutest detail, charging her deputy with the spoonful of stimulant that was to be given him the moment before he made his speech—but all the time shot a hundred little jibes at him as she talked, and felt the humor of the great man's dependence upon these little cares, forestalling all less tender laughter by her own. I remember one of these jibes strange, when so many brighter and better utterances can not be recalled, during one of the long drives we took together, when she had held me in breathless interest by a variety of sketches of their contemporaries. In immediate chapter being one which might be called the "Lives of the Philosophers." I interrupted her with the foolish remark that Mr. Carlyle alone, of all his peers, seemed to have had no good motive in doing it, it served religion a high and by calling in question many visions, dreams and miracles which usual to pass for religious experiences; and done so by proving them to be products of nothing but physical disorder. "By their fruits ye shall know them." This infallible

MISCELLANEOUS.



—THE MILD POWER CURES.—
HUMPHREYS' HOMŒOPATHIC SPECIFICS.

In use 31 years.—Each number the special prescription of an eminent physician.—The only Simple Safe and Sure Medicines for the people.

LIST PRINCIPAL NOS.	CURES.	PRICE
1.	Fever, Congestion, Inflammations	.50
2.	Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic	.50
3.	Crying Colic, or Teething of Infants	.50
4.	Diarrhœa of Children or Adults	.50
5.	Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic	.50
6.	Cholera Morbus, Vomiting	.50
7.	Coughs, Cold, Bronchitis	.50
8.	Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache	.50
9.	Headaches, Sick Headache, Vertigo	.50
10.	Dyspepsia, Biliousness	.50
11.	Suppressed or Painful Periods	.50
12.	Whites, Too Profuse Periods	.50
13.	Croup, Cough, Difficult Breathing	.50
14.	Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Eruptions	.50
15.	Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains	.50
16.	Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Ague	.50
17.	Piles, Blind or Bleeding	.50
19.	Catarrh, Acute or Chronic, Influenza	.50
20.	Whooping Cough, Violent Coughs	.50
24.	General Debility, Physical Weakness	.50
27.	Kidney Disease	.50
28.	Nervous Debility	1.00
30.	Urinary Weakness, Wetting the Bed	.50
32.	Disease of the Heart, Palpitation	1.00

Sold by druggists, or sent by the Case, Vial or Box, free of charge, on receipt of price. Send for Dr. Humphreys' Book on Diseases &c. (141 pages, also Illustrated Catalogue FREE. Address, Humphreys' Homœopathic Medicine Co., 109 Fulton Street, New York.

JOS. B. WOLFE & CO.,
Cotton Factors,
59 Carondelet Street, New Orleans,
And General Agents for
DANIEL PRATT IMPROVED
Revolving Head Cotton Gin,
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.
—AND—
Eclipse Hulling Cotton Gin,
WITH REVOLVING HEAD.
PRICES REDUCED.

THE REVOLVING HEAD GIN has been in use for the past eight seasons, and several improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint from the same quantity of seed cotton than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while consuming steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton, on this account, of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 100 bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

SELF FEEDERS and CONDENSERS with latest improvements also made by the Daniel Pratt Gin Company to work with these Gins. Send for descriptive circulars. JOS. B. WOLFE & CO., New Orleans, La.

SULLIVAN & BULGER,
97 CAMP STREET.
Plumbers and Gas Fitters,
—DEALERS IN—
Pumps and Gas Fixtures of all kinds, Iron, Lead and Terra-cotta Pipes, Bath Tubs, Sheet Lead and Cooking Ranges, also, different kinds of Gas Machines, for country use.
All Orders Promptly Attended to.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.
SIZES AND PRICES.

Diam. of Bells.	Weight with yoke & frame	Cast & Bell & Hang's.
No. 6,	250 lbs.	$ 25 00
No. 6,	270 lbs.	340 lbs. 36 00
No. 7,	300 lbs.	400 lbs. 50 00
No. 8,	340 lbs.	730 lbs. 75 00
No. 9,	380 lbs.	925 lbs. 130 00

RUMSEY & CO.,
Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A.

YOUNG MEN'S
Christian Association,
OF NEW ORLEANS.
ROOMS, 87 CAMP STREET,
Open from 8 A. M. to 10 P. M., except Sunday, and on Sundays from 2 to 6 P. M., where may be found the leading daily and weekly papers of the most important cities of the United States.
SERVICES.
Tuesday, 7:30 P. M.—Devotional.
Thursday, 7:30 P. M.—Singing Class.
NOON-DAY PRAYER-MEETING.
Daily, 12:30-12:50.
Rules—Prayers and Remarks are limited to three minutes.

H. DUDLEY COLEMAN & BRO.
No. 12 Union St. New Orleans La.
DEALERS IN
MACHINERY
MILL STONES, IRONS & PORTABLE STEAM ENGINES.
MAKE FLOUR, CORN, SAW, AND COTTON PRESSES MILLS
SEND FOR CIRCULARS. COMPARE OUR PRICES.

000 AGENTS WANTED!
One in each town and neighborhood in Mississippi and Louisiana, to sell
Dr. Dutton's Vegetable Discovery,
It is sold only by rectified agents.
It is the best BLOOD AND LIVER Medicine we ever used. Write for terms. It will pay you.
J. L. FITHEL, General Agent,
Jonestown, Miss.

All Farmers, Mothers, Business Men, teachers and mechanics, who are broken by constant toil and worry; and all who are miserable with Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sleeplessness, or with Bowel, Kidney or Liver Complaints, you can be invigorated and cured by using
PARKER'S GINGER TONIC
If you are wasting away with Consumption, Debility, Weakness, age, dissipation or any sickness or disease, and your blood needs purifying, we have supplies, and your blood needs purifying, you will find PARKER'S GINGER TONIC the Best Health & Strength Restorer you can use, and far superior to Bitters, and other Tonics, as it builds up the system, but never intoxicates. It Has Saved Hundreds of Lives! and May Save Yours.
Buy a 50 ct. bottle and be sure the signature of Hiscox & Co., N. Y., is on outside wrapper.
PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM Restores Dandruff. Elegantly Perfumed. Restores Color. Prevents Baldness.

MISCELLANEOUS.
LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE INSURANCE COMPANY.
SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT:
OFFICE: CORNER CARONDELET AND GRAVIER STREETS.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

Fire assets, excluding paid-up capital	$9,881,426 21
Paid-up capital	1,228,200 00
Total fire assets	$11,109,626 21
Fire liabilities	3,944,358 23
Making the surplus for policy-holders	$7,165,267 98

Losses by Chicago Fire in 1871, $3,239,091
Losses by Boston Fire in 1872, $1, 130,729

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city, thus placing the Company on an even footing with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
J. F. SCHRODER, Esq., Chairman, of Leopold Christ & Co.
NEWTON BUCKNER, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERRY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Lallande.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson and Simpson.
HENRY V. HIGHEN, Resident Secretary.
JULES P. ROUX, Ass't Resident Secretary.
NEW ORLEANS, October 20, 1880.

25,000 SOLD!
FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S
—MANUAL—
Edited by GEO. E. WARING, Jr.,
Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.
500 Octavo Pages—Over 200 Illustrations.
Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer $25 per Year.

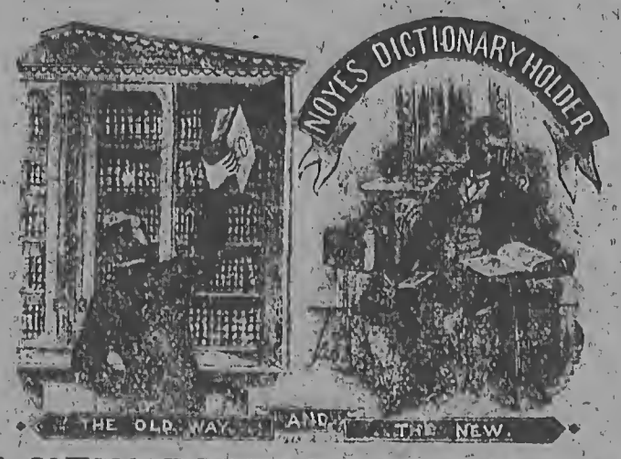
This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assured analysis and demonstrations; about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete; and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, in Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $2 50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address
C. J. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at
JOHN GAUCHE'S
MAMMOTH
QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 180 pieces, for $12.
ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $10.
REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.
ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS $3 50.
ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.
ENGLISH CHINA GOLD BAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5 50.
THE BEST SELECTION OF
CROCKERY
Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods
OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.
The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.
REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS
JOHN GAUCHE,
AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,
109, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street.
Branch House, Nos. 108 and 110 Chartres Street.



LIGHT AND LIFE!
Now look out for a rousing good new
SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOK
with the above title. The compiler, Mr. R. M. McIntosh, is well known to hundreds of thousands as one of the most successful providers of sweet melodies and bright hymns for the great Sunday-School public. Our best writers and composers have contributed. The book has a beautiful title, is well printed, and is every way desirable. Send for specimen pages (free,) or specimen copy, which is mailed for the retail price, 35 cents.
Also just published, The Beacon Light, (35 cts.) by TENNEY and DUFFMAN. And nearly ready, a new book by ABBEY and MUNGER, making a trio of Sunday School books that cannot be excelled.
OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston
C. H. DITSON & CO.,
843 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

AGENTS WANTED, to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2000 RECIPE BOOK. Sells at Sight. You double your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

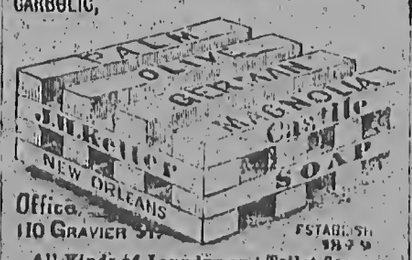
MENEELYS' BELLS.
For Churches, etc., known to the public since 1826, are made only at "THE MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY," WEST TROY, N. Y. Catalogues free.

MISCELLANEOUS.
D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street. 17 Bourbon Street.
Our Stock of Spring Goods is now complete, consisting of the latest novelties in
Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales.
HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.
SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE.
D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street, New Orleans

WHEELER & PIERSON,
(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Hewes.)
CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,
Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.
Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40. | Business Suits, $12 to $26
6 Shirts for $9 | Collars, $1.50 per Dozen.
Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.
Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.
Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department up-stairs.

THE NEW DICTIONARY HOLDER.
These holders are so arranged that they press the book firmly together when it is closed, in short the Dictionary Holder is perfected in form, finish and operation, and will be found one of the most elegant and desirable articles for schools, literary or professional reference and library use. Every one who used a dictionary should have one of these patent holders, and have the unwieldy Dictionary in their reference. Place the dictionary in the holder and keep it there. There is no more occasion to take it out of the holder, than out of the binding. Children and grown people prefer to put a dictionary in a holder than to lay it down on these holders and the book does not become racked, soiled and spoiled. You have but to open the book until it remains open; close it and it remains closed. If placed by your side when reading, or writing, the task of looking up words is not deferred until then forgotten, but done pleasantly and easily. The holder is high enough if you stand, low enough if you sit, and has received unlimited praise from clergymen, authors and others who have used it. The Unabridged Dictionary, either of Worcester or Webster, fits in them exactly.
Price, finished in hard jet black Japan, $2 00
white, or nickle wash, 3 00
Address C. J. LATHROP, Agent for the Southwest, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

CATARRH Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects—corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, nasal deformities, and finally consumption. From first to last it is ever aggressive. Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. If neglected while a cure is possible, it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, successful and pleasant treatment is



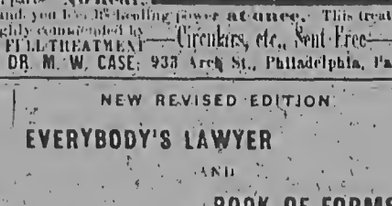
Dr. M. W. CASE'S CARBOLATE of TAR INHALANT
FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, Bronchitis & Deafness.
It does not [illegible] quite an innovation to introduce the value of Carbolate of Tar, the most healing, cleansing, and medical agent known to science. Balsams and Cordials of the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with the Pure Tar that the more breathing converts them into a balmy smoke or spray. This is inhaled, taken right to the diseased parts. No Heat, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. This treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by [illegible]. Circulars, etc., sent Free—Satisfaction Always Guaranteed. Address, DR. M. W. CASE, 933 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WATCHES.
LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upward
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $45 and upward
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward
BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $9 and upward
All guaranteed.
A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.,
Cor. Canal and Royal Sts.

HOW TO PAINT.
A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain common-sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes
Every Man His Own Painter.
Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, glue, pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—
Paint for Out-Buildings,
—Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut staining, decalcomanie, making rustic pictures, painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture waxing furniture, cleaning paint—
Paint for Farming Tools,
and for machinery, and household fixtures
To Paint a Farm Wagon,
to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.
The work is neatly printed, with illustrations wherever they can serve to make the subject plainer, and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.
Price by mail, post paid, $1.

Good News! Good News!
Mammoth Furniture House
OF
McCRACKEN & BREWSTER,
33 & 35 Royal Street,
Now have the largest stock of Fine and Medium Chamber Sets, Ebony Gilt and Walnut Parlor Sets, Dining-Room and Hall Furniture to be found in the South. Also a large and various stock of cheap and durable Furniture suitable for the country trade.
THONET BROS., VIENNA,
BENT WOOD FURNITURE
Our motto—small profits and quick returns.
McCRACKEN & BREWSTER.

J. H. KELLER,
MANUFACTURER OF
CARBOLIC,



Office, 110 GRAVIER ST. ESTABLISHED 1879
All Kinds of Laundry and Toilet Soaps.
Send for Circular.

NEW REVISED EDITION
EVERYBODY'S LAWYER
AND
BOOK OF FORMS.
A complete guide in all law and business transactions and negotiations
FOR EVERY STATE IN THE UNION.
Containing plain and simple instructions for transacting business of every description, and legal forms for drawing all necessary papers in accordance with the laws of the several States regulating the Civil and Commercial Relations of Every-day Life,
together with the Constitution of the United States and Amendments, with much useful information concerning the General Government and the various State Governments; the Copyright Law, Post Office Regulations, Patent and Pension Laws, etc., etc. thoroughly revised to date, by
A. G. HEATHER, ESQ., Counsellor at Law.
Strongly bound in cloth, with leather back, containing 562 pages. Mailed post paid on receipt of $2
C. J. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

NEW YORK SHOPPING
Of every description for ladies and gentlemen. Household articles bought with discretion, taste and judgment. For circular, address
Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,
P. O. Box 598, New York.

BUCK'S IMPROVED

BRILLIANT STOVE
Is acknowledged to be the
Best Cook-Stove Made.
SOLD BY
H. HALLER,
NEW ORLEANS.
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF
Cooking and Heating Stoves of the most Improved makes, Stamped, Plain and Japanned Tin-ware, Tinned and Enamelled Iron-ware, Iron and Clay Furnaces, Turner's Stock, Granite Iron-ware, Lamp-burner, and Wick to suit, Tinned Iron Spoons, Forks, Coffee Mills of all kinds, Planished-ware, Irons, Fire-Grates, Fluting Machines, etc.
H. HALLER,
No. 55 Camp St., New Orleans.
Price lists mailed on application.

GRATEFUL. COMFORTING.
EPPS'-COCOA.
BREAKFAST.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.
Made simply with boiling water or milk.
Sold only in tins by Grocers, labelled
JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, London, England.
Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence for afternoon

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, June 6, 1881.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Ago.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	6	8½
Ordinary	7¼	9
Good ordinary	8½	8½
Low middling	9½	9½
Middling	10¾	10¾
Good middling	11¼	11¼
Middling fair	12	12
Sales to-day	2,600 bales.
Receipts since our last	2,852 bales.
Receipts previously	1,514,714 bales.
Sugar, ₱ lb.:
Fair		5
Fully fair		5¼
Prime		5¾
Choice		6¼
Yellow clarified	9	9½
White clarified	9¾	10
Powdered
Crushed
Molasses, in bbls., ₱ gallon:
Common	20	22
Fair	26	27
Prime	35	40
Choice
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common	3½
Fair	4¾	5¾
Prime	5¾	6
Choice

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western	13	25
New York
Coffee, ₱ lb.:
Rio, ordinary	9	9¾
Rio, fair	11	11¾
Rio, prime	12¾	12¾
Cheese, ₱ lb.:
Western factory
English dairy
Candles, ₱ lb.:
Best brands		11
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl.
Choice K. D.	3 50	3 75
Flour, ₱ bbl.
Superfine	3 00
XX	4 25	4 50
XXX	5 00	5 25
Choice XXX
Choice fam.
Fish:
Mackerel, No. 1 in bbls.		6 75
Half barrels		3 75
Kits		75
Mackerel, No. 2 in bbls.		5 75
Half bbls.		3 15
Kits		70
Mackerel, Nos. in bbls.	5 00	5 75
Half bbls.		2 90
Kits	60
Codfish, ₱ lb.		4½
Herring, ₱ box	23	25
Oils, ₱ gallon
Coal, lubricating
Coal, oil bbls
Linseed, raw	57	60
Linseed, boiled	61	64
Cotton seed	36	39
Lard	75	85
Soap, ₱ box:
Magnolia		2 00
Olive		2 50
Palm		3 25
Castile		3 75
Soda, ₱ lb
Starch, ₱ lb		7½
Salt, ₱ sack
Coarse		2½
Fine		1 85

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow		60
White		67
Mixed		57
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western		40
Red rust proof
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs:
Choice		90
Hay, ₱ ton:
Prime	21 00	22 00
Choice		24 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel
Mixed		2 00
Clay	2 70	2 75

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb:
Breakfast	10½	11
Shoulders		7
Sides, clear rib		9½
Sides, clear		9¾
Hams, sugar-cured	10	11½
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl		17 37½
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb.:
Clear rib sides
Clear sides
Shoulders	6¼	6¾
Lard, ₱ lb.:
Choice, in kegs		11¾
Choice, in tierces		11¼
ESCULENTS.
Potatoes, ₱ bbl:
Irish	2 75	4 00
Sweet		2 00
Onions, ₱ bbl	5 75	6 00
Apples, ₱ bbl.
Cabbages, ₱ box
Sour Krout, ₱ bbl

BALING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard:
India
Jute
Baling Twine, ₱ lb		17
Ties, ₱ bundle
80 lbs and 100 lbs		1 65

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ dozen:
Grown chickens		5 00
Young do.	1 50	2 00
Ducks	3 00	3 50
Geese		4 00
Turkeys	10 00	15 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen:
Western	9	15
Southern	18	20
Honey:
Strained, ₱ gallon
Comb, ₱ lb
Pecans, ₱ lb.:
Louisiana
Texas	8	10
Oranges:
Louisiana, ₱ bbl
Foreign, ₱ box	3 50	4 00
Wool, ₱ lb.:
Louisiana	23	24
Texas
Feathers, ₱ lb.:
Geese
Hides, ₱ lb.:
Country green	6	8
Dry salted	10	11
Dry flint	12	13
Ox Horns, each		6
Tallow, ₱ lb	6½	6¾
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton
In sacks
Meal	29 00	30 00
Oil cake
Cooperage, ₱ each:
Sugar hogsheads	3 00	3 25
Molasses barrels	1 30	1 65
Half barrels		1 05
Kegs		70
Oak Staves, per 1000:
Kegs
Barrels
Extra claret	95 00	100 00
Extra hogshead	135 00	140 00
Extra pipes	155 00	160 00
Tobacco:
Low lugs		4¾
Medium
Good to fine
Low leaf	5½	6½
Medium	6½	7
Good	7½	8
Fine	7½	8
Selections	10	12

The list of Mr. Geo. I. Seney's gifts in the past two years, including his latest donations to Southern Methodist institutions, is as follows: Wesleyan University, $260,000; Long Island Historical Society, 62,000; Brooklyn Industrial Home, $20,000; For Hospital, $270,000; Church at Bernardsville, $15,000; Emory College, Oxford, Ga., $50,000; Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga., $60,000. Total, $727,000.

There is More Strength

restoring power in a 50 cent bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic than in a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body. See other column.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

HUDSON, N. Y., June 1.—The General Synod of the Reformed Church in America convened in annual session this afternoon. The number of delegates present is very large, and unusual interest is manifested.

ABERDEEN, Miss., June 1.—The sixteenth annual Press Association of Mississippi met here to-day at 2:30 P. M., when B. F. Jones, Esq., the president, delivered the annual address. A large audience was present, and the press of the State was well represented.

NEW YORK, June 1.—It is stated that the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific Railroad has been purchased for the Erlanger syndicate, which will give the Alabama and Great Southern a through line from Chattanooga to Texas, making connections with the Texas Pacific. The Nashville and Chattanooga Company propose to complete the Lebanon branch to Bristol, there connect with the Virginia line, thus giving Nashville a direct connection with Norfolk and the seaboard.

MEMPHIS, June 1.—The State Supreme Court at Jackson, Tenn., this morning rendered a decision holding the present taxing district government liable to suit on debts of the old city of Memphis.

NEW YORK, June 4.—Negotiations for the transfer of the Panama Railroad to the De Lesseps Panama Canal Company, which have been pending for some time, have been virtually concluded. The necessary papers will be signed immediately.

Negotiations have been concluded on the part of the canal company by the American committee. It is understood that the control of the railroad company is obtained by the purchase of its stock. The price agreed upon is $250 per share, but the assets of the company are retained for the benefit of stockholders.

WASHINGTON, June 5.—It is getting to be the opinion in political circles that there will be no election of Senators this summer at Albany. It is the obvious interest and avowed purpose of the Democrats to have the election go over so as to allow a popular expression in the autumn.

It is now believed that the stalwarts will maintain the deadlock, and eventually that an adjournment will be the outcome of the struggle.

MORGAN CITY, La., June 5.—Active work on the Morgan Louisiana and Texas Railroad bridge, to span the bay from the shore to Berwick, a distance of about 2000 feet, commenced to-day. A large concourse of people assembled on the Berwick shore to witness the driving of the first pile, under the supervision of the well known contractors, Messrs. Putnam & Tobias. It is expected the work will be completed early in the ensuing year.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, May 31.—There was a special meeting of the cabinet to-day. It is understood that the state of Ireland was discussed.

ATHENS, May 31.—A decree has been signed, granting M. De Lesseps concession to cut a canal through the Isthmus of Corinth. Work will probably be commenced in 1882 and be completed in two years.

CLONMEL, Ireland, May 31.—There was a riot to-day at a public sale of tenants' interests in twenty-one farms. The most of the farms were knocked down to the emergency committee. The mob stoned the police and soldiery; the police charged once and the hussars three times, using the flats of their sabres. One soldier, one policeman and some civilians were injured.

LONDON, May 31.—The Times, in a leading article this morning, says: It is believed that the Irish executive has strongly represented to the cabinet the necessity for adopting measures for the suppression of the Land League. The writer adds: If the league is permitted to continue its work it will bring the masses of the Irish people into physical conflict with the British crown.

LONDON, May 31.—At a consultation last night of the members of parliament and others belonging to the Land League it was decided to fill the place of Mr. Kettle as an organizer forthwith; and it was decided, in the event of the suppression of the League, to transfer its duties in Ireland to the Ladies' Land League, and if that was interfered with, to conduct the organization through the committee sitting at Holyhead.

LONDON, June 1.—The Manchester Guardian's London correspondent says: It is not in the least likely that the government have determined to deal with the Land League as an illegal organization, but it is understood that communications have passed, since the arrival in Dublin of Mr. Forster, chief secretary for Ireland, go to show that the government are determined not to delay using their powers under the coercion act, to crush intimidation.

LONDON, June 2.—According to the recent census, the population of London is 3,814,571.

KIEFF, June 2.—The ringleader of the anti-Jewish riots here has been sentenced to three and a half years penal servitude and loss of his civic rights. Three of his most active accomplices have been sentenced to eighteen months, and twelve others to short terms of imprisonment.

CITY OF MEXICO, June 2.—Congress has adjourned sine die, its labors giving entire satisfaction. The action taken on the tariff question, it is calculated, will increase the revenue four or five million dollars. No action was taken in regard to the English debt. The Iturbe banking bill, which failed in the senate, excluded this debt from the banking scheme. The executive will very soon make use of his authorization to contract for the New Orleans Railroad. The Tepic Guaymas Railroad scheme will probably fall.

LONDON, June 3.—The Daily Telegraph says: The government has received such serious news from Ireland during the last few days, that measures calculated to deal with the exceptional state of affairs there, is, we believe, engaging the attention of the ministers.

The Chronicle says: We understand that the government is considering the question of the suspension of the Irish jury laws and will probably introduce a bill for that purpose, in the course of the present session of parliament, without interfering with the land bill.

PARIS, June 4.—The remains of M. Emile Littre, will be buried to-day with religious rites. He was baptized while dying. This circumstance has caused much comment.

MONTREAL, June 4.—Joseph McKay, one of the most liberal business men of the firm of Joseph McKay & Brother, is dead. His wealth is estimated at $5,000,000, all of which he has devoted to public and religious objects. He was never married, and leaves only one brother, who is also a millionaire. His business extended all over Canada. He Re-arrangement and Reduction of the Prices of Our Sunday-School Series.

The price at which Sunday-school papers, or any other publications, can be furnished to the subscribers depends very largely on the number to be issued. The expense for furnishing each subscriber diminishes as the list increases. The work of preparing the copy and setting the type is tedious and expensive, and costs the same for a hundred scholars as for a thousand. The words have to be written down one at a time, and the little types set one at a time; but when the form is ready, and on the press, the mere work of printing is done rapidly, and with little expense. If the list of subscribers increases, the first cost of preparing the form is distributed over a great number of papers, and the price of each may be made lower, or the papers may be enlarged or improved. Our lists have enlarged—some of them more than others—and we have concluded to enlarge or improve some of our publications, and cheapen the price of others.

We have had many calls for a cheaper Quarterly, and in the re-arrangement of prices we have thought it well also to re-arrange our series to some extent, and establish another Quarterly. We now issue one for advanced classes, known as The Sunday-school Quarterly, larger than the Quarterly formerly issued; and one for intermediate classes, entitled The Intermediate Quarterly, of the same size and general appearance as the old one, but at half the price. In sending out these Quarterlies to subscribers whose orders are always on our books, we have concluded to send half of the number due in the advanced Quarterlies, and the remainder in the Intermediate Quarterlies. If any school, on receiving them, finds that it wishes the proportion changed, we will arrange this for the next quarter, as may be requested; but all new subscriptions will be taken at the new prices, as given in the schedule below.

The Illustrated Lesson Paper will be sent to the subscribers to Our Little People as formerly published; and we are sure this change will make a great improvement.

The Infant Class will be discontinued, but a paper will still be published, called Our Little People, smaller than the original publication of that name, and this will be sent to the subscribers to The Infant Class.

It will take a little time to get accustomed to the new arrangement, but, as soon as understood, we are sure the series will be more complete and better adapted to the different classes of scholars, and the reduced prices and better quality will certainly please everybody.

Before sending new orders, or changing present subscriptions, please examine our publications carefully, and become familiar with the new schedule of prices. We much prefer that subscriptions should be made for one year, and paid for in advance; but to accommodate schools, we will take subscriptions for a shorter time. This will enable schools to increase their orders during any particular quarter without changing the permanent subscriptions. Let all orders be written very plainly, giving the name of the paper wanted in full, also the name of the person to whom the papers are to be sent, the post-office, county, and State. We have a great deal of trouble in filling orders, because they are not always written explicitly.

As the lists increase, we hope still to improve our papers, or cheapen them further, if there should be a call for it. Let every Methodist Sunday-school send us its orders, remembering the weighty words of one of our Bishops: "All the moral and religious reasons that call for Methodist preachers in Methodist pulpits call also for Methodist literature in Methodist Sunday-schools."

PRICE-LIST OF THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL PERIODICALS PUBLISHED BY THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH, NASHVILLE, TENN.

The Sunday-School Magazine, with Expository Notes, Application of the Lesson, and Helps for Teachers in all Departments, per annum ..... 60c.

The Sunday-School Quarterly, for Bible Classes and Advanced Scholars, Lesson for every Sunday:
Five or more, to one address, per annum, each ..... 15c.
Five or more, to one address per quarter, each ..... 4c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum ..... 25c.

Illustrated Lesson Paper for Intermediate Classes, Lesson for every Sunday:
Five or more, to one address, per annum, each ..... 10c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper 20c.

The Intermediate Quarterly, with Lesson for every Sunday:
Five or more, to one address, per annum, each ..... 6c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper 10c.

Sunday-School Visitor:
Weekly Ten or more, to one address, per annum, each ..... 50c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper, 75c.
Semi-Monthly. Ten or more, to one address, per annum, each ..... 25c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper 40c.
Monthly. Ten or more, to one address, per annum, each ..... 12½c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper 20c.

Address, SOUTHERN METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE,
July 1, 1881. NASHVILLE, TENN.

The rapid return of the South to an assured prosperity, after the terrible ordeal through which she passed under the Radical regime, is a most astounding fact and a most suggestive Providence. Take these nine States, Alabama, Arkansas, the two Carolinas, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas. Their united State debt in 1868 was a fraction more than fifty million dollars. Three years later, under Republican spoliation, it became $216,066,391. Their local taxes in 1860, while they were prosperous, aggregate about 11½ million dollars; ten years later, while they were prostrated under carpet-bag misrule, they summed up in round numbers, $26,020,232. In connection with all this, consider the difference in the acreage and value of the land under cultivation: 1860, 58,548,993, valued at $1,217,587,857; 1870, 31,078,858 acres, valued at $54,979,015.

—The Theological Seminary at Princeton has one hundred and eleven students.

COMMENCEMENT.

PORT GIBSON COLLEGIATE ACADEMY.

Sunday, June 19.—11 A. M. Commencement Sermon by Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D.

Monday, June 20.—10 A. M. Competitive Reading; Anniversary Polymnian Society; Annual Meeting Board of Trustees. 8 P. M. Concert.

Tuesday, June 21.—10 A. M. Anniversary Alumnæ Association, address by Gen. J. D. Vertner. 8 P. M. Address by ——. College Festival.

J. A. McJONES, President.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The camp meeting at William's Camp Ground, Pensacola District, will commence Thursday night, June 30. Friends who made subscriptions for the benefit of the camp ground last year will please pay their subscriptions as soon as possible, as it is greatly needed. Those good sisters who promised comforters for the preachers' tents will please bring them along when they come to the camp meeting. Preachers are cordially invited to be with us; provision has been made for their entertainment.

The grounds have been improved, a new hotel built, and other provisions for the comfort of visitors made.

S. H. COX.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

NOTICE.—The Woodville District Conference will be held in Amite City, July 28 to 31, inclusive. Sunday School Institute will hold its annual session on the third day of the Conference, Saturday, at 10 o'clock, A. M., as a part of Conference business. Pastors will please have their reports in writing, upon subjects indicated in the Discipline, pp. 53, 54.

We would suggest that the report on item 3 (schools) be separate; they will be called for on Saturday of the session. Brethren will have their Quarterly Conference Journals at Conference for inspection. Public preaching each day of the session, at 11 A. M. and 7½ P. M.

Annual Sermon to the Conference on Thursday night by Rev. L. B. Robertson, of Ellisville, La.

22 JAS. A. GODDEY, P. E.

The Brandon District Conference will meet at Forest, June 30, at 9 A. M., and continue to July 3. Rev. G. Bancroft will preach the opening sermon. I hope pastors will have written reports.

22 JAS. M. GANN, P. E.

The District Conference for Williamsburg District, Mississippi Conference, will convene at Columbia, on Friday, July 1, 1881, at 9 o'clock, A. M.

D. A. LITTLE, P. E.

Quarterly Conferences.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WINONA DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Kosciusko and Durant		June 25, 26
Richland		July 2, 3
Zilpha		9, 10
Newport		16, 17
Winona circuit	Thursday	21
Winona and Vaiden	Friday	22
West Station		23, 24
French Camps		Aug. 6, 7
Lexington	Friday	12
Black Hawk		13, 14
Walthall		20, 21
Aldalia		27, 28
Greenwood		Sept. 3, 4
Carrollton		10, 11
Kosciusko circuit		17, 18

The Hazlehurst Conference will be held at Goodman, July 29, 31. Preaching on Thursday night, the twenty-eighth.

E. A. JONES, P. E.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MONTGOMERY DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Auburn station		June 18, 19
Tallassee station		25, 26
Hurtsville circuit, at Sixbeech		July 2, 3
Salem circuit, at Lebanon		9, 10
Elmore circuit, at Liberty Chapel		16, 17
Crawford circuit, at Mt. Zion		23, 24
Tuskegee circuit, at Union		30, 31
Lonchapoka circuit, at Gold Hill		Aug. 6, 7
Franklin mission, at Camp Ground		13, 14
Tallapoosa circuit, at Centerport		20, 21
Tuskegee station		27, 28
Montgomery station		Sept. 3, 4
Dis-lika station		17, 18

The District Conference will meet at Notasulga, July 21, at nine o'clock A. M. The introductory sermon by Rev. J. R. Peavy, at eleven o'clock A. M.

The Recording Stewards will please send the names of delegates and members to Rev. M. P. Dickinson, Louchapoka, Ala., as early as practicable.

22 L. F. MANGUM, P. E.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

SHREVEPORT DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Logansport, at Salem Chapel		July 23, 24
Mansfield, at Pine Hill		27
North Bossier, at Collinsburg		30, 31
South Bossier, at Cotton Valley		Aug. 3
Shreveport		6, 7
Caddo circuit, at Cypress Camp Ground		13, 14
Mansfield		20, 21
Coushatta		27, 28
Springville		Sept. 3, 4
Natchitoches		10, 11
Natchitoches circuit		14
Amacoro		17, 18
Moss		24
Pleasant Hill		24, 25

22 T. H. DOUGLASS, P. E.

PENSACOLA DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Pensacola		June 4, 5
Warrington		5, 6
Millview		11, 12
Pollard		18, 19
Milton		25, 26
Pollard		July 2, 3
Perdido		9, 10
Stockton		9, 10
Yellow River		16, 17
Georgiana		23, 24
Evergreen		30, 31
Brewton		30, 31
Mooreeville		Aug. 6, 7
Monterey		13, 14
Sepulga		20, 21
Andalusia		27, 28

23 S. H. COX, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

BROOKHAVEN DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

McComb and Summit, at McComb		June 11, 12
Hazlehurst station		18, 19
Brookhaven and Wesson, at Brookhaven		25, 26
Adams and Bogue Chitto, at Ebenezer		July 2, 3
Brandywine at Brandywine		9, 10
Bayou Pierre, at Tabernacle		21, 24
Scotland, at Osceyville		30, 31
Crystal Springs 4 P. M.		Aug. 6
Spring Ridge, at Forrest Hill		13, 14
Beauregard, at Providence		20, 21
Magnolia, at Tapnaw		27, 28
Georgetown, at Georgetown		Sept. 3, 4

The District Conference will meet at Osceyville, fifteen miles west of Brookhaven, Thursday, July 28. The opening sermon will be preached at eleven o'clock; Thursday, by Rev. W. H. Leith.

Those who can do so will please go in their private conveyances. Others will have conveyances furnished them from Brookhaven, without charge, if they will give G. Mr. David McCree, Osceyville, Miss., a week's notice of their intention to attend. All delegates who expect to attend will please notify Rev. H. R. Caldwell, Osceyville, Miss.

The Recording Stewards will bring their records with them, or send them.

Bishop Keeney has been invited to preside.

22 H. F. JOHNSON, P. E.

SEASHORE DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Ocean Springs, at Orange Grove		June 11, 12
Handsboro and mission, at Bay St. Louis		18, 19
Biloxi		20
Red Hill		June 30
Amboth	8 P. M.	July 1
West Pascagoula, at McLendon's		2, 3
Whittington, at Whittington		9, 10
Biloxi, at Biloxi		16, 17
Pedrington, at Gainesville		23, 24
Biloxi		30
West Pascagoula, at Clark's Chapel		Aug. 6, 7
Hampton		13, 14
Moss Point, at Moss Point		20, 21
Biloxi		28

12 T. S. WEST, P. E.

BRANDON DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Marvin circuit, at Harrisville		July 9, 10
Brandon station		16, 17
Fannin circuit, at Bethlehem		23, 24
Ludlow mission		27
Lake circuit, at Camp Ground		30, 31
Cato circuit, at Mt. Helron		Aug. 7
Trenton circuit, at Camp Ground		13, 14
Raleigh circuit		20, 21
Newton circuit		27, 28
Beech Springs		Sept. 4
Mt. Hebron mission, at Spring Chapel		8
Philadelphia circuit, at Mars Hill		10, 11
Walnut Grove circuit		17, 18
Carthage circuit		24, 25
Forest circuit		Oct. 1, 2

23 J. E. CARR, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

B. J. MONTGOMERY. C. KIRSCH

R. M. & B. J.

MONTGOMERY

FURNITURE

AND

MIRROR EMPORIUM,

Corner Camp and Poydras Sts.

After a sojourn of over six weeks among the Factories North, East and West, we open the Fall and Winter Trade with the largest and best selected stock of Furniture, French and German Plate Mirrors, Ornamental and Fancy Goods, Upholstery Goods and Cabinet Makers' Hardware ever brought to this city. We select our goods in person from the best factories and are determined not to be undersold. Our assortment being too extensive and varied to be enumerated in detail, we request our customers and the general public to call and inspect for themselves.

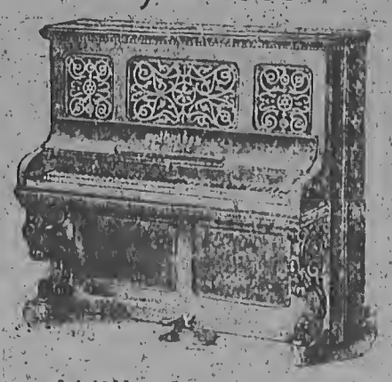
On hand a full line of the celebrated Vienna Bent-Wood Work and Invalid Wheel Chairs.

Goods packed and delivered F. O. B.

25-CENTS--SEND--25-CENTS

IN POSTAGE STAMPS FOR

A HANDY DICTIONARY!



Giving the spelling, pronunciation and meanings of the words, useful tables, the metric system of weights and measures, a list of foreign words and phrases, alphabetically arranged and many engravings.

A book of 320 pages, bound in cloth, and mailed post-paid, on receipt of 25 cents, by

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

1000 MORE CUSTOMERS

My Prices

Will Astonish.

PIANOS!

ORGANS!

AND

Musical Instruments.

Write to

P. WERLEIN,
No. 135 Canal Street,
NEW ORLEANS.

BEE CULTURE.

MANUAL OF THE APIARY.

By A. J. COOK,
Professor of Entomology in the Michigan State Agricultural College.

THIRD EDITION.

Revised, enlarged, mostly rewritten, and beautifully illustrated. Being now it is fully up with the times on every conceivable subject that interests the apiarist.

It is not only instructive but intensely interesting. This work is a masterly production, and one that no bee keeper, however limited his means, can afford to do without. It is printed in the best style on fine book paper. Price, bound in cloth, $1 25 post paid.

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

"CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S EXCHANGE"
FOR WOMAN'S WORK.

This Association has opened a salesroom at Nos. 41 and 43 Bourbon street, where all kinds of plain and fine sewing, ornamental and fancy needle-work will be received and sold.

Orders will also be taken for preserves, jellies, pickles, cake, ice cream, etc., supplies having been ordered.

All work must be entered through a member, the price fixed by the owner securely fastened to the article, and the commission charged will be ten per cent.

The Annual Subscription of Members is Five Dollars which entitles each to enter the work of three persons for one year.

Women of all denominations in this city or State, as well as of all other States, are urgently requested to become members of this Exchange.

Persons desirous of becoming members may do so by applying in person, or by letter, at the Rooms. Contributions of any kind will also be gladly received, of information given, or the same place.

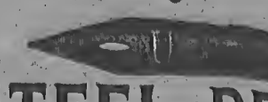
We sincerely trust the public generally will lend us its hearty co-operation and aid in this worthy charity, with the assurance that the Managers will spare no effort for its success.

The benefits of this association are open to all women without regard to religious belief.

MANAGERS.

Mrs. G. W. Pritchard,	Mrs. E. John Ellis,
Mrs. M. W. Bartlett,	Mrs. Gilbert Green,
Mrs. D. A. Given,	Mrs. M. R. Conley,
Mrs. J. D. Richardson,	Mrs. K. Fihelly,
Mrs. R. M. Walmsley,	Mrs. T. V. Campbell,
Mrs. S. Delgado,	Mrs. Patty Nugent,
Mrs. Albert Baldwin,	Mrs. J. D. Wallace,
Mrs. T. H. Holmes,	Mrs. E. J. Wharton,
Mrs. Percy Roberts,	Mrs. C. E. Kells,
Mrs. J. H. Allen,	Mrs. E. F. Simpson,
Mrs. P. N. Strong,	Mrs. S. H. Davis,
Mrs. J. H. Joden,	Mrs. G. R. Westfeldt,
Mrs. L. P. Wayne,	Mrs. M. C. Jennings,
	Miss M. A. Wyckoff,

OFFICERS.



President, MRS. M. W. BARTLETT.
Vice Presidents, MRS. R. M. WALMSLEY, MRS. T. C. RICHARDSON, MRS. J. R. JORDEN, MRS. E. E. SIMPSON, MRS. ALBERT BALDWIN.
Treasurer, MRS. PHAR. E. KELLS.
Recording Secretary, MRS. THEO. AUZE.
Corresponding Secretary, MRS. E. J. WHARTON.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Styles, 10c. Agents wanted. L. JONES & Co., Nassau, N. Y.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PERRY'S

S. CO

STEEL PEN

of superior English make; famous for durability, elasticity; great variety of styles suited to every style of writing. For sale by dealers generally.

TWENTY-FIVE assorted samples for trial, including the "U" AND "FALCON" pens, by mail, on receipt of Twenty-five cents.

VISON, BLAKEMAN, TAYLOR & CO.
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. S.
NEW YORK.

W. F. MELLEN,
Attorney at Law,
12 CARONDELET ST.,
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

FRED. H. OGDEN. BENJ. O. L. RAYNE.

OGDEN & RAYNE,

DEALERS IN

BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE

AND AGENTS FOR THE
Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company
AND
Shultz Belting Company,
18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT,
RICHARD RHODES,
55 ST. CHARLES STREET
NEW ORLEANS.

Articles for Fishermen of all Kinds

Rods, Nets, Hooks, Lines, and every description of article for the Angler, wholesale and retail. Guns imported to order. J. R. Cooper's Breech and Muzzle Loading Guns always on hand. All kinds of improved artificial Baits. Repairing of Guns carefully done by experienced workmen, and Fishing Rods made to order. Address Postoffice Box 1569.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co.,
AMERICAN CHINA HOUSE,
49 Camp Street, New Orleans.

We append a few prices:

The American China Dinner, Breakfast and Tea Set, comprising 100 Pieces, for $12.

A Real French China Dinner Set, 112 Pieces, for $17.

English Stone China Dinner Set, 100 Pieces, for $10.

English Stone China Chamber Set, comprising 10 Pieces, for $2 50.

Decorated Chamber Sets, with different Colored Bands, 10 Pieces, for $3 50.

Glass Goblets, from 60 cents to $1 per dozen.

Particular attention given to Novelties and Specialties pertaining to the House-Furnishing Department. Orders promptly attended to. We have just received a full and complete stock of holiday goods. Call and examine before purchasing.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.

JOSEPHUS'

COMPLETE

WORKS.

Comprising the History and Antiquities of the Jews, with the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and observations concerning Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, James the Just, and the Sanctity of Israel, together with a discourse on Hades, and with his autobiography, translated by William Whiston, A. M., to which is added an accurate index to the entire work.

This large octavo work of 789 pages, bound in cloth, $2 50, or in full leather binding, $3 50, mailed post-paid on receipt of price.

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

FURNITURE.

W. C. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,

desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. C. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,
New Orleans.

D. MERCIER & SONS,
Better Known as Cheap John.
NO BRANCH STORE IN TOWN.
MENS, BOYS' AND YOUTH'S
CLOTHING,
HATS, BOOTS, SHOES, FURNISHING GOODS, ETC., ETC.
Cor. Dauphine and Bienville sts.,
New Orleans, La.
Orders from Country Merchants promptly executed on most reasonable terms.

DR. BLY'S CELEBRATED PATENT ARTIFICIAL LEGS AND ARMS have all the motions of the natural limbs. Perfect satisfaction in all cases or no pay. Prices reduced. Send for pamphlet.
A. MODERMOTT, Manufacturer,
163 Camp St., New Orleans.

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 27.—NO. 24. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1881. WHOLE NO. 1358.

PUBLISHED FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Subscription, . . . $2 per annum.

Ministers and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

All Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.
REV. H. D. MOORE.
REV. O. R. BLUE, D. D.
REV. J. O. ANDREW.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. W. H. WATKINS, D. D.
REV. JAMES A. GODFREY.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. JOHN MATHEWS, D. D.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

For the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

"THE NEW SOUTH."

BY REV. JOSIAH BARKER.

Land of my adoption—beautiful land!
Of all dear Israel's sons, the Joseph, thou:
So late struck down by fratricidal hand—
Up, and fulfill thy glorious promise now!

Not long in durance shalt thou mourn,
For sun and moon thy greatness prophesy;
Some day, not distant, shall thy bonded corn
Blow the lean multitudes that else would die!

Thou hast what others struggle for in vain—
The trusting, patient faith, that works and waits
Till God shall send the fructifying rain,
And pour the ripened fruit through all thy gates.

'Twas envy sold thee, that thy limits restrains,
And hides thy youth behind its prison-bars—
No crimes were indicated by thy chains—
No foul dishonors written in thy scars!

No traitor Arnolds from thy lobs have sprung—
Ephraim and Manasses are thy true sons—
The high, heroic deeds thy harps have strung,
Were saintly Jackson's—Lee's, and Washington's.

Up then, and still thy radiant course pursue—
Let thy young branch go climbing o'er the wall;
Abundant be thy rain, and light, and dew,
And blessing Joseph—God shall bless us all!

Land of my heart, so long the wanderer's home—
My daily, fervent prayers, ascend for thee—
The strength of death alone can rend me from
All that thou art, all which thou hast been, to me!

SUMMERFIELD, ALA., June 8th, 1881.

Kentucky Correspondence.

One of the greatest productions of our State is tobacco. Whether its cultivation be right or wrong we have nothing to say at this time. There are millions in it." Almost every farmer, through what is known as the Green river country, is engaged in its production. It is a crop that requires careful attention—scientific handling. The prices for better grades of wrappers are from eight to fifteen dollars per hundred-weight. There are some fancy varieties that sell higher, and low leaf much cheaper. The heavier tobaccos are shipped to foreign markets, particularly Germany and Africa. The fancy wrappers are used in the United States. Air-cured tobacco is frequently bought here in large quantities and shipped to Virginia for manufacture, being wrapped with Virginia wrappers, and then returned to us, as genuine Virginia chewing tobacco. Kentucky is said to be the largest tobacco-growing State in the Union. About a week ago, there was a fine season for planting. The bulk of the crop is usually set from the first to the fifteenth of June.

The writer would judge, that the hemp production has fallen off; but this fact has no necessary connection with the practical abolishment of capital punishment a few years ago. Our present law allows the jury, in its discretion, to hang a murderer or put him in close confinement for life. Our penitentiary is full and foul. Crime has been on the increase. There has been a lax administration of the law and many think, even some of our most prominent secular editors, that the pardoning power has been abused by more than one of our governors. Good people had become alarmed. Mob law began to assert itself. Mutterings of indignation were heard like the distant roar of a coming earthquake. Last fall at our general election, candidates for circuit judges and. commonwealth's attorneys were made to commit themselves fully to the faithful administration of the laws for punishing crimes. The newly elected officers have taken hold in earnest. Five men were sent to the penitentiary for life at the spring term of the Todd County Court for the murder of one man. It was a most aggravated case. This is regarded here as an auspicious sign. We hope that the "carnival of crime" is ended.

The Louisville Conference mourns the loss of another of her veterans—Rev. Robert Fisk. Brush, Shelton and Fisk have all passed away since Conference. They were "lovely and pleasant in their lives." Brush was a man of rare good sense, brilliant wit, a little quaint in his humor, pungent in style, with a clear voice, distinct articulation and a happy face. He had been a very popular and successful preacher. Many will rise up "in that day and call him blessed." He was a member of the famous Louisville Convention of the Southern Church, May, 1845—where the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, through the delegates, by the authority granted them, entered into a separate ecclesiastical organization. He was, subsequently, frequently elected to the General Conference.

John W. Shelton came to us from the South. He was a sweet-spirited, deeply consecrated man, a ready speaker and a fine classical scholar.

Robert Fisk was a native Kentuckian. In person, he was tall, raw-boned and angular. His character was an upright column. His mind was clear, his judgment sound. His reading was extensive. He was an excellent sermonizer; and, in his prime, a most useful preacher on circuits and districts. He was a member of the General Conference at Nashville, 1858. Bro. Fisk's name was third on our Louisville Conference roll, while that of G. W. Brush stood first. Our fathers are passing away—full of years, full of honors; and what is better still, full of faith. One by one they go to swell the cloud of witnesses. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a living hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead."

In the Central Methodist of May 28, is a very noticeable article on the use of the Greek prepositions, en and eis, from the pen of Rev. G. Hayes, D. D. Dr. Hayes is the logician of the Louisville Conference. He has made the mode of baptism a special study. He is a good critic. He has not written in haste. This writer read his contribution in manuscript several months before its publication. What he has written he will not be likely to change. He says, "eis not only does express motion towards, with the idea of *in*ness; but is the preposition used whenever that idea is expressed in the New Testament. I do not say that it always expresses the idea of *in*ness as accomplished by motion towards; but when that idea is expressed, eis is always used. It is a fact, and I presume not an accidental one, that eis is never used to connect baptidzo with water. When a preposition is used at all it is always en and not eis: I baptise you en with water—not eis into water."

Again, "now what I mean to say is, that the word baptidzo is never, in the New Testament, so connected with water, by a preposition, as according to the usage of the Greek language, to make this transfer of the subject to, or into the bosom of the water, nor of anything else with which men are said to be baptized." Therefore, the learned Doctor squarely repudiates immersion for baptism. Let those interested in the discussion, by all means, get his article.

It was the privilege of your correspondent, on May 27, to attend a social picnic, as they are called here, on the top of Pilot rock, in the north of Christian county, in this State, and on the waters of the Pond river. Judge S. E. Shaw, of Missouri, was the honored guest, who, after an absence of 40 years, revisited the scenes of his childhood and met his numerous relatives and surviving friends on the lofty height which commands a view of almost the whole country lying between the county-seats of Christian and Todd counties—Hopkinsville and Elkton, a distance of twenty miles. It was a happy day. The rock rises from the top of a high ridge running back from the waters of Pond river. Its height from the bed of the river to its summit, is estimated at from five to six hundred feet. The rock itself covers about a half-acre of ground and rises abruptly with almost perpendicular walls ranging on its several sides from fifty to one hundred feet above the ridge. It is a great natural curiosity. If located in New York or Pennsylvania, it would have a world-wide fame. There are a few trees on its top of stunted growth. It is the home of foxes, but singularly free from serpents. Vines and ferns and wild flowers and grass cling to the crevices of its mossy sides. There is a house built under and in the rock and plenty of cold water near at hand. There are legends and stories of interest connected with its history which serve to beguile the hours of pleasure seekers.

VENOSA.

May 30, 1881.

Convention of Conference Sunday School Secretaries.

MR. EDITOR: An invitation was extended by Dr. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, our Sunday-school editor, to the Conference Sunday-school secretaries of the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to attend and take part in a Convention to be held in Nashville, Tenn., May 3 and 4, 1881. In accordance with this invitation, some nineteen or twenty secretaries met at the appointed time and place.

The convention was called to order by Dr. Cunnyngham, who was elected president. The object of the convention, as stated by Dr. Cunnyngham, was to confer with the Sunday School Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; and consider the general interests of our Sunday school work, and by mutual conference and consultation to encourage and strengthen each other in our special labors. Dr. Cunnyngham submitted the following questions for the consideration of the convention:

1. Is the legislation of our church in regard to Sunday schools, and Sunday school work, entirely satisfactory?

2. How is the Sunday school officially related to the church though the pastor and Quarterly Conference?

3. What is the office and work of a Conference Sunday school secretary? and how is he supported? is he expected to report officially to his Annual Conference? Has he any prerogatives in an Annual or District Conference? What is he expected to report to the Sunday-school editor?

4. Is the Sunday school literature furnished by our church satisfactory in quality and price? What improvements can you suggest?

5. Are our Sunday schools, generally, properly organized? What is the best form of organization for a Methodist Sunday school? What would you advise as to a Sunday school constitution? Have you any suggestions as to a ritual for Sunday schools, containing opening and closing exercises, order of business, etc.?

6. What can be done to promote greater efficiency in the department of instruction—more systematic and thorough teaching? What would you recommend concerning institutes, normal classes, teacher's meetings, lectures, etc.?

7. How can District Sunday school Conferences or conventions be rendered more useful? How can a District Conference be best utilized in the interests of the Sunday school cause?

8. How can greater prominence be given in our Annual Conferences to the Sunday school interests? What do you think of a Conference Sunday-school Board, having supervision of all the Sunday school operations within the bounds of the Conference?

Concerning the first question, it was resolved that the General Conference be memorialized to so legislate that a Sunday school Conference be held annually in each presiding elder's district, either during the session of the District Conference, or at some other time during the Conference-year; and that the Sunday school secretaries shall provide, in advance, a programme for said Conference or Convention,

Also, to amend the law of the church so as to add to Question 3, on page 60 of the Discipline, the words, "and the pastoral instruction of children," thereby securing conformity to Section 11, on page 122, entitled, "Of the children of the church."

That we memorialize the General Conference also to specifically empower the preacher in charge, in case a vacancy occurs in the superintendency of a Sunday school during the interim of the Quarterly Conference, to appoint a superintendent to serve until the next Quarterly Conference; and that the preacher in charge be empowered to appoint superintendents for any schools that may be organized during the period between the Quarterly Conferences; so to amend the law concerning Sunday schools as to direct the Annual Conferences to establish a Conference Sunday school Board, which shall have supervision of all the Sunday school operations within the bounds of its respective Conference.

The Sunday school secretary of the Conference shall be ex officio the secretary of this board, and shall make a report to said board at its annual session, which session shall be held at the time and place of the session of the Annual Conference.

It was also recommended that the Conference Sunday school secretary be styled Conference Sunday school superintendent.

It was resolved that these, and all other memorials to the ensuing General Conference, adopted by this convention, be placed in the hands of Dr. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, chairman of the Sunday school Committee, to be presented by him to the General Conference, which is to convene in Nashville, Tenn., May, 1882.

Opinions and Recommendations.

1. That it is the sense of this convention that all Sunday schools, whose superintendents are appointed by the Quarterly Conference are considered Methodist Sunday-schools, and none other.

2. That each Conference Sunday school secretary be requested to use all means in his power to ascertain what Sunday schools in his Conference do not use our Sunday school literature, and to advise the Book Agent of the name and address of the pastor and superintendent of such schools, and request said Agent to send sample copies of our literature to all such schools.

3. That it is the judgment of this body that the statistical report of the preacher in charge should include the whole number of officers, teachers and pupils who were enrolled members of the school for any part of the Conference-year being reported upon.

4. That the number of Methodist pupils in Union Sunday schools should be separately reported to our Annual Conferences.

The convention recommended that teacher's meetings, Institutes and Normal classes be organized to promote greater efficiency in the department of instruction. The Sunday school literature, edited by Dr. Cunnyngham, received the hearty approval of the Convention, which pledged itself to circulate more extensively than ever the Sunday school literature of our church.

The convention requested the Book Committee to consider the propriety of publishing a weekly paper, devoted to the interests of Sunday school officers, teachers and advanced scholars. An "Order of exercises," to be observed in opening, conducting and closing Sunday schools, was recommended, to secure greater uniformity among Methodists. The sessions were pleasant, and the deliberations quite satisfactory. It was good to be there, me judice.

CHAS. R. WILLIAMSON, Sec.,
MOBILE, ALA.

Vanderbilt Commencement.

We copy as follows from the Nashville Christian Advocate:

On Tuesday evening the contest for the R. A. Young prize medal drew together a large audience. Dr. Summers presided. The speakers were R. W. Jennings, Jr., of Nashville, Tennessee; J. F. Colville, of Georgia; R. C. Lee, of Mississippi; and H. G. Henderson, of Kentucky. All the speakers acquitted themselves well, their speeches showing they had learned how both to think strongly and to express themselves clearly. The successful contestant was Mr. Henderson, to whom the medal was presented by Bishop McTyeire. This oratorical tournament was a very satisfactory exhibit of the metal of the Vanderbilt boys and of the methods of mental training and classic literature pursued in the institution.

The Alumni of the University held their annual meeting Wednesday morning at the University, about sixty being present.

The address to the Alumni was delivered by Percy W. Gardner, of Missouri. He took as his subject, "The Agencies of our National Progress," which he handled in a masterly manner. At the close of the address a resolution was adopted tendering the thanks of the Alumni present to Mr. Gardner.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President—Dr J. T. McGill, of Arkansas. Vice-presidents—J. H. Bryant, of Tennessee; J. J. Tigert, of Kentucky; D. O. Herbert, of South Carolina; W. R. Sims, of Missouri; H. L. Crumley, of Georgia. Secretary, A. V. Lane, of Louisiana. Treasurer—E. T. Fleming, of Tennessee. D. P. Fletcher, of Georgia, was elected orator for the next meeting. The President-elect announced the following Executive Committee: Lytton Taylor, Dr. R. W. Steger, P. D. Maddin, Dr. Robert Eves, and Lewis Powell.

A large and brilliant audience greeted Gov. Colquitt, who delivered the Annual Address on Wednesday evening. The Governor was greeted with hearty applause on his entrance. Governor Hawkins, of Tennessee, presided. The two Methodist Governors represent not the same political ideas, but the Christian sentiment, which is more and more making itself felt in the public affairs of these United States. The time has come when it is no longer a disadvantage for a candidate or incumbent of a public office to be a Christian—and it has come to stay.

On Thursday, Commencement Day, the audience was very large, and the exercises culminated in interest. Prayer was offered by Dr. Summers.

Solon E. Rose, Jr., of Tennessee (we quote from the Daily American), class representative, then delivered a speech which bore evidence of careful and intelligent study, on "Free Trade," pointing out with great clearness the effects of such a policy.

A. Davisson, of Virginia, representing the Biblical Department, spoke concerning the "Weights of the Balances." He spoke of the mind, and its cultivation, as far better and preferable to mere physical development. The levers of the mind, he urged, were the weights of the balance that ruled the world. His address was a very creditable performance.

C. W. Beale, of Tennessee, representing the Academical Department, was the next speaker. His subject was "The Age of Calhoun, Clay, and Webster." He showed the great influence which great minds have exercised on the world, made a careful comparison between the three statesmen named, and contended that the opportunities for the development of statesmanship which existed then do not exist now.

Chancellor Garland then delivered the University Address, which was worthy of him and of the occasion.

Chancellor Garland then proceeded to award the honors to successful students, as follows:

Certificates of Distinguished Proficiency.

These Certificates are conferred upon students who complete with distinction the course prescribed in any school for the degree of Master of Arts.

Greek—H. E. Harlan, Mississippi; D. E. Hydrick, South Carolina.

French—A. C. Boozer, Georgia; J. A. Clinton, Louisiana; C. T. Cole, Tennessee; D. C. McMillin, Tennessee; H. M. Meriwether, Kentucky; S. E. Rose, Tennessee; E. L. Thompson, Tennessee; C. L. Thornburg, West Virginia.

German—A. C. Boozer, Georgia; S. Cooney, Tennessee; A. E. Howell, Tennessee; J. Mihadovitch, Georgia; J. Stephan, Texas; C. L. Thornburg, West Virginia.

English—A. C. Boozer, Georgia; A. H. Burns, Kentucky; J. A. Cook, Mississippi; W. T. Matthews, Louisiana; F. W. McConnel, Tennessee; D. C. McMillin, Tennessee; H. M. Meriwether, Kentucky; S. E. Rose, Tennessee.

History and English Literature—C. W. Beale, Tennessee; G. L. Beale, Tennessee; J. H. Bryant, Tennessee; R. C. McMillin, Tennessee; S. E. Rose, Jr., Tennessee.

Moral Philosophy—C. W. Beal, Tennessee; A. Davisson, Virginia; G. C. Greer, Texas; J. H. Harrison, Tennessee; D. E. Hydrick, South Carolina; W. H. Isaacs, Florida; D. C. McMillin, Tennessee; H. M. Meriwether, Kentucky; S. L. Rose, Tennessee; C. L. Thornburg, West Virginia.

Mathematics—(University Class)—R. L. Cartwright, Texas; G. C. Greer, Texas; P. D. Maddin, Tennessee; F. W. McConnell, Tennessee; W. B. Toon, Tennessee.

Physic and Astronomy—G. L. Beale, Tennessee; D. E. Hydrick, South Carolina; D. C. McMillin, Tennessee; P. D. Maddin, Tennessee; S. E. Rose, Tennessee.

Chemistry—E. H. Bowser, Kentucky; G. L. Beale, Tennessee; V. L. Cunnyngham, Tennessee; C. B. Hatfield, Kentucky; C. Jungerman, Tennessee; M. P. LeGrand, Alabama; E. R. Lyons, Alabama; P. D. Maddin, Tennessee; M. C. McMillin, Tennessee; J. C. McReynolds, Kentucky; E. N. Morgan, Tennessee; W. E. Myer, Tennessee; H. Redmond, Texas; J. E. Shipp, Tennessee; A. Z. Trammell, Arkansas.

Natural History and Geology—C. W. Beale, Tennessee; J. C. Boozer, Georgia; E. H. Bowser, Kentucky; V. L. Cunnyngham, Tennessee; C. B. Hatfield, Kentucky; C. Jungerman, Tennessee; M. P. LeGrand, Alabama; E. R. Lyons, Alabama; P. D. Maddin, Tennessee; M. C. McMillin, Tennessee; J. C. McReynolds, Kentucky; E. N. Morgan, Tennessee; W. E. Myer, Tennessee; H. Redmond, Texas; J. E. Shipp, Tennessee; A. Z. Trammell, Arkansas.

Natural History and Geology—C. W. Beale, Tennessee; J. C. Boozer, Georgia; E. H. Bowser, Kentucky; V. L. Cunnyngham, Tennessee; C. B. Hatfield, Kentucky; C. Jungerman, Tennessee; M. P. LeGrand, Alabama; E. R. Lyons, Alabama; P. D. Maddin, Tennessee; M. C. McMillin, Tennessee; J. C. McReynolds, Kentucky; E. N. Morgan, Tennessee; W. E. Myer, Tennessee; H. Redmond, Texas; J. E. Shipp, Tennessee; A. Z. Trammell, Arkansas.

Civil Engineering—A. V. Lane, Louisiana.

School Graduates.

Certificates of graduation are conferred upon students who complete with distinction the entire course of study in any school.

Latin—S. L. Jones, Louisiana.

Greek—S. L. Jones, Louisiana.

History and English Literature—S. L. Jones, Louisiana.

Mathematics—J. H. Bryant, Tennessee; A. V. Lane, Louisiana.

Chemistry—J. C. Boozer, Georgia; S. P. Gilbert, Georgia; James N. Gunnels, Alabama; John N. Gunnels, Alabama.

Graduates in the Biblical Department.

Entire Course, including Greek, Hebrew, etc.—H. L. Crumley, Georgia; A. Davisson, Virginia; W. G. Isaacs, Florida; H. G. Henderson, Kentucky; G. C. Stovall, Texas.

Two Years' Course—G. L. Beale, Tennessee; E. B. Graham, Tennessee; J. W. Stoval, Texas.

Degrees.

Bachelor of Philosophy—D. B. Cobbs, Alabama; W. G. Isaacs, Florida.

Bachelor of Arts—J. H. Harrison, Tennessee.

Bachelor of Science—P. D. Maddin, Tennessee; C. L. Thornburg, West Virginia.

Master of Arts—C. W. Beale, Tennessee; G. L. Beale, Tennessee; D. C. McMillin, Tennessee; S. E. Rose, Tennessee.

Civil Engineering—A. V. Lane, Louisiana.

Doctor of Philosophy—J. T. McGill, Arkansas.

Bachelor of Laws—E. E. Bryan, Mississippi; W. R. Chambers, Tennessee; R. P. Conner, Texas; E. T. Fleming, Tennessee; W. H. Goodpasture, Tennessee; J. E. Gracey, Tennessee; J. O. Harwick, Tennessee; G. R. Harsh, Tennessee; D. O. Herbert, Georgia; R. E. Jackson, Tennessee; W. W. Lacey, Kentucky; C. H. Mayfield, Texas; P. Moorscheidt, Texas; C. F. Rawls, South Carolina; J. M. Smedes, Mississippi; Eugene Smith, Kentucky; John Somers, Jr., Tennessee; J. L. Whitworth, Tennessee.

Undergraduate Prize Scholarships.

Value $100 Each—D. E. Hydrick, Greek, South Carolina; C. T. Cole, Latin, Tennessee; H. E. Harlan, Modern Languages, Mississippi; E. L. Brunlette, History and English Literature, Texas; H. M. Meriwether, Moral Philosophy, Kentucky; G. C. Greer, Mathematics, Texas; J. C. McReynolds, Physics and Astronomy, Kentucky; J. H. Kelly, Chemistry, Tennessee; W. E. Myer, Natural History and Geology, Tennessee; E. H. Bowser, Engineering.

Medals.

Owen Prize Medal—J. T. Curry, Biblical Department, Tennessee.

Founder's Department Medals—C. W. Beale, Academic Department, Tennessee; A. Davisson, Biblical Department, Virginia; G. R. Harsh, Law Department, Tennessee; J. E. Hill, Medical Department, Tennessee; J. N. Gunnels, Department of Pharmacy, Alabama.

Fellowships.

A. V. Lane, post-graduate fellow. J. T. McGill, post-graduate fellow. C. L. Thornton, graduate fellow. C. W. Beale, graduate fellow. Solon E. Rose, graduate fellow.

—The churches of Richmond, Va., added 1,395 to their membership the past year, above all losses. The Catholic population of the city is 5,021.

From the Work.

MOUNT LEBANON, LOUISIANA.

MR. EDITOR: Ringgold is a beautiful little village in the southwestern portion of Bienville parish, in the bounds of Webster circuit, Homer district, Louisiana Conference. It has a population of about one hundred and fifty inhabitants. A kind, hospitable and intelligent people. At this place, we have just closed a very interesting meeting which lasted twelve days, resulting in about twenty conversions and fifteen accessions to the church. Rev. John A. Miller was with us doing some able preaching. Our loyal brethren, Revs. Philip Burket, Prothro, Davis and Wimberly rendered us valuable assistance. The farming interest is very flattering at this time, although the copious showers have given the farmers plenty of grass; but the last few days we have had some beautiful weather which has combled them to destroy it in a measure.

Yours in Jesus,

C. L. MCNEILAND, P.

JONES'S BEND, LA., May 27, 1881.

YORKSHIRE DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Conference met in the town of Fayette on the morning of June 3. Rev. J. A. Ellis, P. E., presided the first day. In the afternoon Bishop Keener arrived fresh from Centenary commencement, having come through the country in a buggy. The Conference was harmonious, well-attended and withal profitable. Reports from the charges were encouraging in all respects, save a lack of revival spirit. This was felt and prayed for. Next Conference will meet at Utica. Delegates to Annual Conference: E. J. Bahin, H. Key, T. A. Holloman and Rev. W. C. Millsaps.

C. L. M.

EDEN'S SPRINGS, MISS., June 9, 1881.

The Grenada District Conference closed last Sunday. It was a very profitable session and the charges were all represented but one; the feast was truly a time of refreshing. The reports represent the church in pretty good condition throughout the district. We have revivals at some points. The country is healthy and the prospect for crops is flattering. Prohibition is growing more popular, every day and the people are waking up to the great evil of intemperance. Wish you and ADVOCATE well.

THOS. A. RAMSEY.

GOODMAN, MISS., May 27, 1881.

MY DEAR DOCTOR: The ladies of this place have recently organized a Woman's Missionary Society with twenty-one members. The officers are: Mrs. B. W. Cooper, president; Mrs. Tom Norwood, vice-president; Miss Iowa Caruth, recording secretary; Mrs. A. Norwood, corresponding secretary; Mrs. C. M. Sitman, treasurer. We take courage. May a glorious success attend the Woman's Missionary Society!

Yours,

INMAN CHERRY.

PLEASANT HILL CHURCH, ALA., May 2, 1881.

We are in the midst of a revival in the town of Benton, which commenced last Sabbath. Rev. J. S. Roucher is with us filled with zeal for the salvation of souls. Four have united with the church and others are at the altar.

Respectfully,

SAMUEL NEEDLES, P. C.

SUMNER, MISS., June 6, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: The Lord has most graciously blessed his people here. Our meeting closed last night with thirty or more clear conversions and twenty-two accessions. With a very few exceptions, we now have a converted, working membership, with the weekly young ladies' and men's prayer-meeting, the class-meeting and Sunday-school in full blast. We thank Bros. W. H. Leith, W. B. Lewis and Elijah Tarver for assistance. Our people read the ADVOCATE. All the praise be to God.

Your brother fraternally,

W. W. HOREN.

WALNUT GROVE, MISS., June 9, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: The second Quarterly Conference of Walnut circuit Grove has just been held with encouraging reports. The prospect for crops is very flattering, but there is rather too much rain. The measles is spreading, but nothing serious, as yet, has occurred. Carthage, on the adjoining circuit, has, and is now enjoying a gracious revival, such as never before was there. At this writing twenty-four have joined; we trust, in good faith, some evincing a happy satisfaction, for which God be praised.

J. W. ELLISON.

WINONA, MISS., June 2, 1881.

Last night we closed a series of meetings of two and a half weeks' continuance. A gracious revival, both in and out of the church. About twenty-five professions of faith. Seventeen have joined our church, and there are others to join. Several parents in influential families are finding the saved. Our splendid new parsonage will be ready for occupancy in three or four weeks. Religiously we are looking up.

Very truly yours,

J. W. LOWRANCE.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1881.

LINKED TO HEAVEN.

I have a boy, an angel boy, I can not tell his age;
They reckon not by days and years in heaven's recording page.

He only came and smiled on us, his mother dear and me,
Then sought that better, brighter world where God's good angels be.

I do not know what form he wears how bright his beaming brow,
Fondly know he waits for us in God's eternal Now.

I can not see what thoughts he has in realms beyond the sky;
But I feel that he will tell us all and know us by and by.

"Come unto me, ye little ones," was all on earth he heard;
'Twas Jesus spoke and knowing it, he took him at his word.

He fell asleep in Jesus, that sweet eternal rest,
And now is safely folded on our Saviour's loving breast.

One only hope to us is left, his mother fond and I,
We'll meet our angel lady in bliss beyond the sky,
When God shall wipe away our tears and soothe the cruel pain
We felt in yielding, though we knew we'd have our child again.

—Church and Home

Confirmation.

A divine of the church requested that I examine the doctrine of "laying on of hands." I have done so with pleasure.

1. The laying on of hands was a form of ordination, or setting apart for a specific work, as the ordination of the seven deacons and of Paul and Barnabas. To this I have no objection; and it is of right perpetuated in the church.

2. The laying on of the apostle's hands was a means of receiving the Holy Ghost in its miracle working power. Bear in mind the fact that it was conferred in this, and in this sense only, by the imposition of their hands. Twice was the Holy Ghost thus conferred: by Peter and John at Samaria, and by Paul at Ephesus. It was as many times received, in the same sense, without the imposition of hands, as upon the day of Pentecost, and when Peter preached to Cornelius.

The Catholics and Episcopalians rely upon Acts viii, 17-19, to prove confirmation. There is not the shadow of an evidence for it in either. Catholics exalt confirmation to the dignity of a sacrament. They believe that upon the imposition of the hands of the properly-authorized persons the Holy Ghost is conferred, provided it is not prevented by a mortal sin on the part of the recipient, and provided also the priest intends to convey this blessing. The refutation of this is in its absurdity. The idea entertained by the Episcopal Church is not quite so shocking, but it is all [illegible] confirming in the church, those who have been baptized, by the imposition of the hands of the Bishop. It is also contended that the Holy Ghost is conferred by this act, provided the person confirmed is worthy. It is not regarded as a sacrament, but as a "supplement to baptism." If it is a supplement to the sacrament of baptism, it becomes a part of this sacrament, and is as much a sacrament as baptism itself. It seems to me to be a contradiction to assert that it is a supplement to and, therefore, a part of a sacrament, and yet deny that it is a sacrament. If it be objected that it can not be a sacrament, because it is only a part, upon the same ground we may object to baptism being a sacrament, because it is only a part. Episcopalians do exalt it to the dignity of a sacrament, notwithstanding their disavowal. The truth is confirmation is not a supplement to baptism, and was never practiced by the apostles as it is now practiced by the Episcopal Church. The apostles never dreamed of laying their hands upon those who had been baptized as an act of confirming them in the church, and they never did it. Will any one assert that they confirmed in this manner the three thousand, the household of Cornelius and his friends, the household of Stephanus, of Lydia, and of the jailor and the eunuch? Certainly not. If confirmation is as important as the Episcopal Church regards it, it certainly deserved as much mention as their baptism. They were never confirmed, because there was no such thing as confirmation.

Again: The very circumstances, upon which the Episcopal Church depends, are very far from proving confirmation. I freely admit that Peter and John laid their hands upon some of the disciples of Samaria, and possibly upon all, yet I do not believe it; and also that Paul laid his hands upon twelve at Ephesus; but I stubbornly deny that they laid their hands upon them as an act of confirmation, or to bestow the Holy Ghost in its sanctifying graces. I will repeat that they laid their hands upon them for one purpose, and for one purpose only, that they might receive the Holy Ghost in its miracle-working power, a special gift to some in the apostolic age. I asserted that hands were not laid upon them as an act of confirmation, or to bestow the Holy Ghost in its sanctifying graces.

1. As to confirmation. I can not believe, from the reading and from the spirit manifested in the eighth chapter of Acts, that the apostles ever laid their hands upon Simon; it is very evident to my mind that they did not. Poor Simon was never confirmed in the church! But this will not do; they can not get along without Simon; he is the very kind they want, and they will turn creation over before they will consent to leave him out.

Let us see if they can get any consolation from the nineteenth chapter. "And all the men were about twelve," upon whom Paul laid his hands. Were there not more Christians there than twelve? It is unreasonable to convey there were not. Paul had labored there once before, Apollos had labored there, Aquila and Priscilla were laboring there. Neither did Paul lay his hands upon the women, only upon the men. Is this agreeable to the idea of confirmation? If the Episcopal Church is anxious to follow apostolic precedent, let the Bishop lay his hands only upon the men. Thus it is evident that the laying on of hands for this purpose was not general, but special.

2. As to receiving the Holy Ghost in its sanctifying graces. The men at Samaria had already been converted under the preaching of Philip. They had believed, and were baptized. "There was great joy in that city." Joy follows, but does not precede conversion. So with the disciples at Ephesus. They had already exercised faith, and, I have no doubt, that faith which purifies the heart. Certain I am that the Holy Ghost was not conferred in this manner by the imposition of the hands of Paul.

Such is untrue, because it is contrary to Scripture. The Bible nowhere says that we are regenerated or sanctified by the laying on of hands, but everywhere the sacred writers testify, with perfect unanimity, that we receive the Holy Ghost, in its sanctifying graces, by the means of faith. "Thy faith hath made thee whole," "Thy faith hath saved thee," "Them which are sanctified by faith," and many others of like import. Tell me where the Bible says, in one single instance, or even insinuates, that these blessings are conferred by the imposition of the hands of the apostles, and I will yield the palm. But, if it is by faith, it can not be by the imposition of hands.

It is illogical. If the Holy Ghost was formerly conferred in one way, by the imposition of hands, it is illogical to conclude that it is now conferred in entirely a different way by the imposition of hands. Beautiful logic this is! The Holy Ghost, in its miracle-working power, was conferred by the imposition of the hands of the apostles. Therefore, it is now conferred in its sanctifying graces by the imposition of the hands of the Bishop. It sounds more like the logic of a seven-year-old school-boy than of intelligent, educated men.

It is mathematically absurd. Things which are equal to the same thing are equal to each other. Every effect has an adequate cause, and the same effect is produced by the same causes. Faith, unquestionably, is the cause of our receiving the Holy Ghost in its sanctifying graces; if, the imposition of hands [illegible] receiving the Holy Ghost in the same manner, then faith and the imposition of hands is all one and the same thing. The conclusion is unavoidable, but who is willing to admit that they are the same? Episcopalians must either deny their own position or admit a conclusion which is so evidently absurd. Let them choose either horn of the dilemma.

Being unscriptural, illogical and mathematically absurd, it is none other than an arrogant, arbitrary assumption on the part of some to possess such a power. Such an unscriptural dogma can not be condemned in too strong language. Frequently great violence is done to truth in suffering such errors to go unnoticed. I could give other reasons why this doctrine can not be true, but it is hoped the above are sufficient and satisfactory.

My only hope in writing this is, that it may be the means of satisfying some doubting mind, or of convincing some who have already been beguiled by soft, enticing words to believe it necessary to have the hands of the bishop laid upon them, that such a thing is a myth, and has not even the shadow of a virtue.

JAS. E. M'CANN.

FORKLAND, ALA.

Vanderbilt Commencement and Else.

MR. EDITOR: Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of Commencement Week of Vanderbilt University, I spent in Nashville. Lodging in the hospitable home of Dr. Redford, I dined and took tea with various old friends, and no little converse and communion did I enjoy with them and others, from the old time regions of the South, where many itinerant days were spent. Let me first speak of those from afar. First, Rev. C. D. Oliver, with whom I was junior preacher, at Montgomery, Ala., my first year, in 1853. He had preached a sermon before the theologues on Sunday afternoon previous, of which the Nashville papers spoke in high terms. Dr. Oliver has not broken at all, nor seemingly changed at all. It would have been a great refreshment for me to have met his highly-endowed wife. From her I heard criticisms twenty-seven years ago that then I little realized to be true; but now they so fully accord with my later thinking, it is with pleasure I speak of it, and make acknowledgement. Rev. Thomas Y. Ramsey, one of the presiding elders of the North Mississippi Conference, who was for three years at Columbus my presiding elder, and two years before at Livingston, Ala., the same, was in attendance, and it was most grateful to embrace him, and with him talk over much of the past. Between us there had been never a ripple, for one as solidly true as he could not give occasion, much less cause, for distrust. Time has touched him gently, and he is as single-eyed toward duty as ever. I much regretted he could not come to Bowling Green with me, and spend a Sunday. Bro. Marton, of the North Mississippi Conference, whose bold, manly, outspoken words on the Conference floor, when some of the orthodoxes attacked to be neutral regarding what I had spoken, inspired me with admiration, was on hand. He first attracted my attention in the General Conference, in 1866, in New Orleans, and he looks now not a day older than then. Hon. James Cobbs, of Mobile, Ala., one of the truest friends I ever had, when I served as preacher in charge at Livingston, Ala., in 1857 and 1858, and whose elegant son is a student at the university, seemed as much joyed to meet me as I felt to again grasp his liberal, honest hand. With what a zest we came over old memories, for we loved and honored the same men and women. That the people have honored and trusted him and his brother, Thomas Cobbs, with highest honors and responsibilities, does them credit. At Dr. Garland's, Bishop McTyeire's, Dr. Summers', Prof. Lupton's and Prof. Granberry's I had most cordial greetings, and with their families very pleasant hours. The feasting was grateful to one who takes up the cross of appetite, and seeks to meet properly what is given with evident purpose that it be "richly enjoyed." I confess to a weakness for victuals, such as is provided around Vanderbilt. I heard Gov. Colquitt's address on Wednesday night. It has been reproduced in the papers. It reads better than it sounded. He was confined to his manuscript in delivery, and the points he made, while fine, nevertheless were suggestive of issues that I, for the time, would have preferred to have been oblivions of. Every shoemaker wonders why the world was not made out of leather; preachers, when they make speeches, are apt to preach; and so when a politician is engaged, we may expect the water to taste of the gourd somewhat. There was not the dash about the governor I expected to see, but there was compensation for the lack in a manifestly solid, direct, intelligent manhood, and as a son of the South, and a servant of the public, take him all in all, I doubt if Georgia has his superior. Gov. Hawkins, of Tennessee, introduced him to the audience. He received a note while on the platform, from some one then unknown, alluding to his Republicanism, and asking what he was doing there? Of course as soon as this was known by the professors and students there was indignation, and a lad came before the students and confessed, in tears, that he did it, offering to make any just apology. When I heard that the little fellow had thus come forward, I could but exclaim: "God bless and protect the boy!" And, as I now write and prophecy that this experience will be as a rich lump of fertilizer at the root of character in him. I have little doubt but that Gov. Hawkins has taken pains to assure the boy.

The young gentlemen of the college acquitted themselves most creditably throughout, but of their speeches, discussions, etc., I can not speak in detail. The gymnasium of the institution was the attraction one afternoon, and to see how skilled the young men have become on the ropes, rings and poles is astonishing. Not to be prolix, I simply say that Vanderbilt won upon me from the jump, and I came away rejoiced that a timely providence had secured so brilliant a center to our educational system. I called on my old Alabama friend, Rev. George W. H. T. Price, president of the Female College. If the Nashville people do not rally to him, and put the enterprise they have induced him to venture beyond contingency, theirs is the loss, and it will reflect seriously upon them. I learned, before leaving Nashville, that Rev. J. J. Tigert, of the Louisville Conference, had been elected to a fellowship in Vanderbilt, and the gratification was greater than surprise. It is the place for him. Take him all in all, I have never known a more gifted man come into the service of the church, and that he is incorporate with our chief educational movement at so early a period in his life is as it should be. What an opportunity for one with such aptitude for scholarship! with such a zest for the pursuit of the true and the good! Tigert has already attested signal ability as a writer, and from his pen, in the future, we may confidently expect something that will tell.

I neglected, among the personals, to mention Dr. Anson West, of the North Alabama Conference, who has so recently been bereaved of as lovely a wife as Alabama contained. Oh! the sweet quiet of the grave! The folded hands! The upturned faces! They are all abroad over the dear Southland.

Of Dr. Messick's commencement sermon I heard vexacious things. Everybody was delighted with it. I asked them please to moderate a little, as I wanted to be the biggest man in the Louisville Conference. Here it is now: Morton goes to the Ecumenical, Tigert goes as fellow to Vanderbilt, Messick is declared to be A No. 1, and suitable for anywhere and any what, Settle has gone and covered himself with glory in an enterprise, now consummated, at Owensboro; and where are we? There is Emerson, wearing gracefully the crown of martyrdom, and I am not allowed even a share of that. "Prophets and kings desired it long," etc.

I have just read this over to one who calls me Joseph, and she says "I don't like one word of it; it's commonplace, and too much of it." So I must get it in the envelope and to the post as soon as possible, or I may do as often before with such, namely, tear it up.

Dr. Summers gave me some heavy love licks, as usual. Somebody had been telling stories about my doxy, and he is jealous over his Alabama boys with a godly jealousy. I came over the [illegible] with him, and he replied. "That's right; that's right!" So I came home, patting myself on the back all the way. I told the doctor never to believe my one who endeavored to disparage another. It is impossible for such to tell the truth. The doctor remarked that his experience was that people most generally got things wrong. God bless the sunny-souled old saint. Amen.

JASPER B. COTTRELL.

BOWLING GREEN, KY.

Colportage Sketches—No. 7.

BY C. M. JONES.

"THEY GITS ALL THE MONEY."

"I tell you, sir, you are at the right place to sell a Bible. We has bin wantin' one for more nor two years. Just look at the hooks, a whole box full, more than you can sell in a year. The store-keepers about here never has sich a thing as a Bible or hymn-book, but you can always git plenty of mos'n cloth an' snuff an' backer, an' some of um has whisky to make men drunk. They is mighty pice, an' I 'spose cheap enough; but I likes this best of all. What did you say is the least you will take for it? You must put it down mighty low, if we trade, for I tell you I don't give none of yer big prices for things these days. We used to have plenty of money, an' could git anything we wanted, before the people turned sich big fools and got up that war. Since then money is mighty scarce. Don't know what folks want to have wars for. They might knowed somebody would git kilt. Well, the rich folks lost the niggers anyhow for their smartness, an' has to go to work like the rest of us. Did you say this is worth forty cents? Well, if that is the best you can do I will take it, but you must let me read it two hours first." These sentences were uttered in rapid succession by a lady who appeared to be forty-five years of age, medium height, slender form, with small, keen eye, sharp nose and thin lips. I was driving but one horse, and he was hot and tired, having traveled twenty miles during the day, and stopped at a score of houses. I looked at my watch. The sun was only an hour high, and eight long miles further to go before resting for the night. I was already impatiently hot, as kindly as possibly, said: Madam, it will be dark in two hours, and I must go eight miles before stopping; it is impossible for you to read the book so long. "That is always the way," she keenly returned. "Some folks never has time for anything. It is a wonder they takes time to eat. Well, if you don't let me read it two hours I won't buy it then, that's all." Wishing to end the conversation and drive on, I said: Madam, how long have you been a widow? "I am not a widow at all, I thank yer, sir. My husband is in the plantation. We live out here in this little cabin for our health, but have good land, an' everything else anybody wants, down on the crick." I intended no offense at all by the question, but thought you were a widow, and intended to give you a Bible and go on. "I am no beggar, I thank you, sir, and don't want you to give me a Bible. I am able to pay for one, if I want it. I like this one very well, and think I would buy it if you would let me read it two hours." When she gave me time to speak again, I asked her why she wanted to read it two hours? "I want to see if it is like my old one." Let me see your old one, and I will tell you in a moment. "It is not here; I give it to my oldest daughter when she moved to Texas, two years ago." Do you have no Bible at all? "No, we don't; if we had I wouldn't be out here a talkin' to you about yourn. What do you think a body would want with two Bibles?" As you have no Bible, I insist on you taking one, as it may be a long time before you have another opportunity. "I don't care; I won't buy anybody's Bible without readin' it two hours, because I said, a long time ago, that I wouldn't, and won't either." Why did you say that? "Well, I didn't want to tell you, because you may be one of them very men, but, as you asked me, I will tell you." You must talk fast, Madame, because it is getting late, and I must be going. "Well, a Methodist man come to our house one day, a long time ago, an' brought a Bible, an' he called it a Baptist Bible. He did it just to make me an' my old man mad, too. He said the Bible wouldn't prove the doctrine of the Baptist Church, an' the Baptist an' the Cumbelites made them one that would. When he read that book (I don't call it a Bible,) an' laughed at us about it, I was so mad at them Yankee Baptist an' Cumbelites that I could hardly see. They might knowed sensible people wouldn't have such a book as that, an' call it a Bible." In the midst of her talk, for there seemed to be no stopping-place, I ventured to ask if there were many changes in the Baptist Bible. "I tell you I don't call it a Bible. You never saw sich nonsense as that Methodist man read an' laughed at that day. He read about John, the immerser, an' him immersed in the Holy Ghost, an' all sich stuff as that. I asked him if there was any more sich books as that, an' he said lots of um. He said they had lots of money, an' was makin' a heap of sail in New York, an' was goin' to send um all over the country. I said, then, I would never buy a Bible without readin' it two hours, an' I am going to keep my word, an' you can't blame me neither. You say these Bibles were made in New York, an' they may be the same sort. How do I know if I don't read it." Her style was original, and conversation somewhat amusing, but a half hour of my precious time was already gone, and it was highly important that I should be going. I said: Madame, I assure you this Bible is not like the one you speak of; if I had time you might read it as long as you please, but can not stay longer now. It is a very cheap book, only costs forty cents; take it, and if I should ever pass here again, and you don't like it, I will return your money. "You are always talkin' about um bein' cheap. I would like to know what makes um cheaper than anybody else's Bibles." Not having time to explain at length, I simply stated that good men gave their money to make them, and they were sent to the people at the cost of publication. "Yes," she replied, in a whining tone, "that's the way of it; good men sends out to us, but them who brings um they gits all the money." Having exhausted my skill, and utterly failed to supply her with the Holy Scriptures, I had no more time to spare, and moved on my way. The roads being level and good, by a half hour after dark I had made the eight miles, and self and horse, both tired and hungry, were in comfortable quarters for the night.

What Does It Mean?

Almost every week our religious journals bring to us the cheering intelligence that some rich Christian man or woman has given five, ten, fifty, or even a hundred thousand dollars, to some Benevolent, or Christian enterprise; and, while these gifts have seemed slow to find their way into the South, I for one thank God, they have commenced to flow in this direction, and I trust they will continue to flow till the stream of Christian benevolence spreads all over this country, bearing its noble charities to all our institutions of learning, many of which are now struggling for existence.

Not to speak of smaller gifts, all of which have their reward, there was first the magnificent gift of the noble Vanderbilt, founder of the university bearing his name, at Nashville, Tenn., of one million dollars. This, more than any act of his life, will immortalize his name, and endear it forever to Southern hearts; and especially the hearts of all Southern Methodists.

Next comes the recent gift of Mr. George I. Seney, of New York, of one hundred thousand dollars, in aid of Emory College, Oxford, Ga., and the Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga.

As Mr. Seney yet lives, we forbear eulogy of this noble charity, but like Gov. Colquitt, of Georgia, and as a Southern Methodist preacher, I can not refrain my gratitude and prayer that the blessings of Heaven may rest upon him; and that his charities may continue to flow. Would that the benevolent heart of some rich man might be touched in favor of the Southern University, at Greensboro, Ala.

Now to my question: "What does all this mean?" It can not be that such gifts proceed from mercenary motives, such as the editor of the Atlanta Advocate charges upon Mr. Seney. I spurn the ignoble thought.

Bishop McTyeire's "acquaintance and familiarity with the noble Vanderbilt, and Dr. Haygood's thanksgiving sermon," and subsequent acquaintance and correspondence with Mr. Seney, may have been the occasions causing these gifts to take the particular direction they have taken; but the true interpretation, is this: First, God is answering prayer.

Being present on one occasion at a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Southern University, at Greensboro, Ala., I remember how earnestly Bishop Marvin prayed that God might touch the heart of the world's wealth, and bring it into the church of God. Thousands of Christian men and women all over the land have prayed and are now praying upon the same line. God is answering these prayers, and the stream of Christian benevolence has set in. Let the prayers increase and the stream flow on.

Again: In fulfillment of prophecy, God is opening the hearts of Christian men, to pour their wealth into the lap of religion. "And to him shall be given of the gold of Sheba; prayer also shall be made for him continually, and daily shall he be praised. His name shall endure forever. All nations shall call him blessed. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and amen."

G. HAWKINS.

TUSKUMBIA, ALABAMA.

The erection of the museum building at Chautauqua before the next Assembly is an assured fact. Mr. Jacob Miller, of Canton, O., has subscribed $2,000; J. J. Vandergrift, of Oil City, $1,000, and another gentleman $1,000.

Marriages.

DISMUKES—JACK.—At the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Natchitoches, May 17, 1881, by Rev. Robert Randle, Mr. Marcus L. Dismukes to Miss Katie C. Jack, both of Natchitoches.

NUNN—EDWARDS.—April 28, 1881, by Rev. J. W. Shores, Mr. Ira C. Nunn to Miss Nellie Edwards, all of Autauga county, Ala.

JEMISON—HOWARD.—May 25, 1881, by Rev. J. W. Shores, Mr. R. M. Jemison, of Talladega, Ala., to Miss Minnie Howard, daughter of Dr. C. M. Howard, of Autauga co., Ala.

LAFAYE—CLARK.—At the residence of the bride's mother, April 25, 1881, by Rev. J. M. Beard, Mr. J. Paul Lafaye and Miss Margaret E. Clark, both of this city.

HOOPER—KOFFSKEY.—At the residence of the bride's father, May 25, 1881, by Rev. J. M. Beard, Mr. James G. Hooper and Miss Elizabeth Koffskey, both of this city.

Obituaries.

COLLIER.—MRS. SARAH F., wife of Rev. B. S. Collier, of the Louisiana Conference, and daughter of Capt. B. F. and F. L. Thomas, was born near Ringgold, La., March 12, 1863, converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1877, married September 4, 1879, and died at her father's residence, near the place where she was born, April 18, 1881.

In this short and beautiful life, we have another glorious illustration of the power of the gospel to elevate human nature into the highest scale of moral excellence, and adorn it with all the gracious fruits of the spirit that make life attractive and profitable, and death but a door of entrance into joys above.

Sister Collier, with a heroism that commends itself to all, had just consecrated herself, with her husband wholly to the itinerant work; left her father's house with all its ample comforts, to wander among strangers, suffer all the ills of itinerant life that souls might be saved, and for this work she seemed to be specially adapted. With soul on fire, gushing with the tenderest emotions, she obtained her full consent, to live to make others happy, and was herself happy in the work of her Saviour. But, alas! how soon is such a bright light to be quenched! and on what short notice to herself or friends! well in the morning, dead at night. But all who knew her knew her to be ready for the field or the shroud, as the Master might choose, and though death came charged with tempestuous night, yet above the stormy billows she waves an adieu to earth and grasps the victor palm beyond the river.

Kind and obedient to parents, tender to brother, sister and friends, devoted to her husband and gentle to all, and loved by all. Her soul was too pure for earth.

She leaves father, mother, sister, brother and husband, and a great circle of admiring friends to weep, but not as "those who have no hope."

J. W. HEARD.

HARRINGTON.—LEVI H., second of Benjamin Harrington, and daughter of Laurence and Martha Barker, was born in Kemper county, Miss., January 5, 1853, and departed this life in Lauderdale county Miss., May 1, 1881, aged twenty-eight years, three months and twenty six days.

His life was short, but full of pain and suffering being confined to her bed eight weeks previous to her death. She was unconscious during the last three weeks of her suffering. It was the belief of all who saw and conversed with her, that she was willing to die and meet her God. She would often say, during the latter days of her life, "I want to go home." She was a devoted member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church during the last ten years of her life. She felt assured that she was going to a far better world than this.

The subject of this memoir was deprived of her parents while quite young. Her father was slain in one of the battles while fighting for the Confederacy, and not her mother was called from her earthly home to a brighter one above a few months afterwards. She, with another sister and two brothers, were taken by their grand parents and reared up to manhood and womanhood. She was brought up by good old Methodist soldiers, to love and fear God. After her marriage to her surviving husband she joined the church of his choice, and lived a devoted member to the day of her death. She leaves to mourn her death a kind husband, one sister and two brothers, with many other kind relatives and friends. We should believe that our loss is her eternal gain in a far better world, where she has gone to meet her parents, and little babe, who preceded her many years. While on her death-bed she requested her relatives and friends to meet her in heaven.

MORGAN.

SPILLMAN.—NANCY SPILLMAN, nee Ambrister, was born in Wythe county, Va., June 20, 1802. She made a profession of religion in 1811, and joined the Methodist Church, of which she remained a faithful and devoted member for seventy years. On the tenth of February, 1829, she married R. W. Spillman, and journeyed with him in affectionate companionship until May 10, 1881, when she calmly fell asleep in Jesus. In pioneer times Mrs. Spillman's remains were brought to Columbus, where she had spent twenty-three years of her life, and were interred in the beautiful Odd Fellows' Cemetery, to await the resurrection. Her venerable husband and three children survive her to mourn their loss; yet there is no place for tears. Full of years and ripe for heaven, why should they hold her back? Rather let them be ready to meet her above, when the message shall come. May the grace of God sustain our venerable Brother Spillman in his solitude and heavy affliction.

S. A. STEEL.

Nashville Christian Advocate please copy.

CLARK.—MRS. SARAH E., wife of B. A. Clark, and daughter of Nathan G. and Nancy Slay, was born in Terry, Hinds county, Miss., August 20, 1855; removed with her parents to Copiah county in 1863, thence to Simpson county, in 1867, where she was married to B. A. Clark, February 20, 1879. She departed this life April 9, 1881, aged twenty-five years, seven months and eighteen days. She died from childbirth.

Sister Clark joined the Missionary Baptist Church in her thirteenth year, at Bethlehem, Simpson county, Miss., in which she lived a consistent member until her death.

The writer of this sketch was informed by the father of the subject of these lines, that she was, from a child, religiously inclined; when a child she would never lie down at night without first going to prayer. And when she had barely crossed what we sometimes call the line of accountability, she felt that it was her duty to fall into line with the people of God, the Baptist being the church of her choice. In her decease the church has lost one of its brightest jewels. No one knew her but to love her, no one spoke of her but to praise, not for her beauty but for her social qualifications and religious course in life. She was in ill health for some two months before her death, but she bore her afflictions with more than usual fortitude.

A few minutes before she breathed her last she asked her father to pray for her, and, we all bowed while the dear father commended his child into the hands of her blessed Saviour, and in a very short time she fell asleep in Jesus, like an infant in its mother's arms. She leaves a young husband to mourn her loss. Her sweet babe survived her one month and twenty days. She now sleeps in her mother earth with two infant babes, in the burying ground at Salem Church, Cato circuit, Mississippi Conference.

T. C. CLARK, L. P.

EVANS.—ADELINE C. EVANS, was born in Claiborne county, Miss., May 12, 1812; was married to D. H. McIntyre January 1, 1829, in Franklin county, near Meadville, Miss., and died at her residence, in Claiborne county, Miss., May 20, 1881.

She was for many years a member of the Methodist Church, and during her many years as a member of the church here below, she was a most consistent member, and always at the post of duty, ready to work for her master. She will be much missed in the community, for by her kind and lovely disposition she had gained the love and esteem of all around her. During her long sickness she was never heard to murmur or complain, but bore her affliction with Christian fortitude, and often expressed herself as being ready to go whenever Jesus called her to that beautiful land, and rejoiced in the hope of meeting those of her friends who had gone before her. What a joyful meeting it will be when husband and wife, mother and children, shall meet, and meet to part no more! She leaves one son, two daughters and many friends.

W. W. SIMMONS, Pastor.

FAULKNER.—Little TOMMY FAULKNER, son of J. C. and E. B. Faulkner, of Bolivar county, Miss., was twelve years old the eighth of last January, and died May 25, 1881. He was a most excellent little boy, a model; obedient to his parents, truthful and in every way a good boy. That blessed Saviour that has said: "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not," has taken little Tommy to himself. About six months ago he took the little brother younger than himself. Though they were children, yet what a blessed reunion around the throne where parting will be known no more forever.

R. T. PEARSON.

When darkness gathers round my path,
And all my song-birds cease to sing,
I know it is not sent in wrath,—
'Tis but the shadow of thy wing.
When dancing sunbeams round me shine,
And Joy and Peacefulness embrace,
I know the radiance is not mine,—
'Tis just the brightness of thy face.

—W. M. L. Jay.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1881.

HANDEL.

BY MARGARET JOHNSON.

Bare and cold the garret chamber,
Gloomy with its shadows dim;
Hung with dusty, drooping cobwebs,
Drapery weird and grim.
Rattled loud the loosened casement,
Bleak the night-wind rose and fell,
In the pauses of its wailing
Tolled the midnight-bell.

Suddenly, from out the shadows
Of the old, deserted room,
Came a strain of faintest music
Through the ghostly gloom.
Fiercer howled the wind and stronger
Swelled the strain, exultingly,
Till there rolled among the rafters
Waves of melody.

While the night grew still to listen,
Soft and slow the music sighed,
And in melting arbor measures,
Into silence died.
Say, what skillful, rapt musician,
In the lonely room apart,
Thus made glad the sombre midnight
With his wondrous art?

From the moon, now bright, now hidden
In the clouds that crossed her way,
Through the misty garret window
Shot a slender ray—
Glanced upon an ancient spinnet,
O'er whose keys, with dust defiled,
Ran the eager dainty fingers
Of a little child!

Boy, in after years the master
Of all mighty harmonies
With more than child-like rapture
In thy life-eyes
Surely to the garret chamber,
Dim with shadowy mystery,
While the world slept in the midnight,
Angels talked with thee.

St Nicholas.

Notes of Life.

BY MAJOR ROBERT PAINE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Mr. Childress was a character, and is to-day my beau ideal of the best class of the old-field school-master sixty years ago. He had evidently enjoyed in early life good educational advantages, had mingled in society, and was a gentleman in his manners. He was a married man; his early history was unknown, and his family lived apart from their neighbors. In statue he was below average height, with clear-cut Grecian profile, and had become a gallant soldier in the war of the Revolution, in which he had lost an eye. He was grave and reticent. Seated behind his table, with his back at the wall, in one corner of his large school room, where his single eye could readily take a view of the whole house, he ruled as a monarch of all he surveyed. The emblems of his authority were kept within arm's reach, and consisted in a few well-trimmed, tough young hickory sprouts, more for use than ornament, and employed occasionally to excite the sensibility of his younger and less studious subjects. Now was this means of persuasion applied only to youthful dullards, but the fun-and mischief-makers, and all who were caught violating the rules of the school, who were not above the whipping age, were subjected to the same penalty. His fame as a teacher and governor was wide-spread. His curriculum was not extensive; but in reading, writing, arithmetic, and certain parts of mixed mathematics, as a teacher he was considered superior. What he professed to do, he did thoroughly. For instance, he would take an abstract of a deed for land lying near, and require the class studying surveying, to take his instruments, survey the tract, and present a perfect plat of it, and an estimate of its contents. This had to be done until the whole class was practically acquainted with the science and the use of the instruments. He loved to teach. His only fault was, that every Saturday he went to town, and after spending the day with his old comrades of the army, would come home full of wine or rum, and with an empty purse. Even then he would be silent, and Monday morning would find him at his post to work hard till next Friday night.

The popularity of Mr. Childress as a teacher and manager induced the best communities in the country to bid for his services, and after changing his location once or twice, the opening of 1813 found him with a large school at Flat River Church. Having followed him in all his removals, of course I was his pupil here, as it was near our residence. Leaving the State in the spring of 1814 for the West, I know not what became of him, but shall always retain feelings of respect and gratitude for his fidelity and devotion to the duties of his humble, but useful and honorable vocation.

We had scarcely settled quietly down in our Tennessee home, when we were notified that an examination was going on near us, to be closed by a day of public speaking of the students. This was both a surprise and a pleasure. We attended and found a large number of students—boys and young men, and a respectable and deeply-interested audience. Upon inquiry we learned the teacher was a Mr. William Brown, son of a wealthy planter, an emigrant from Virginia. Having recently graduated at the University of North Carolina, and not inclined to be idle, he had yielded to the request of the neighbors and opened a school. I was at once entered as a pupil, and profited by the instructions of a man so competent for the position. During a part of his engagement his younger brother, A. V. Brown, taught in his place. He, too, had recently graduated at Chapel Hill, and is well-known as a member of Congress and Governor of Tennessee in after-years. At that school were Sterling T. and H. H. Brown, cousins of the teachers and brothers of my future step-mother.

When the school closed by the retiring of the elder brother to engage in planting, and the younger to study law, I spent a year as clerk in the house of H. Hagen & Co. This was a new firm from Nashville, and did a good large business, considering the time and population, and as my employer was absent at least two months at a time in going to and returning from the East for goods—for this was before steamboats and railroads were used—I had a heavy responsibility, insomuch as I then had the entire charge, both of the store and the postoffice. Living in the kind family of Mr. Hagen, and adjoining the store-house, with Dr. Gilbert D. Taylor for room-mate, the year's work was pleasant, and I may add profitable in imparting some knowledge of book-keeping and business affairs generally.

Before the term of my engagement expired, I gave notice to Mr. Hagen that I would leave at the close of the year, and by consent of my father, and against the remonstrance of my friend and employer, I did so. I thirsted for an education, and resolved to make myself a scholar and a lawyer. Just at this time a classical academy had attracted attention in a populous neighborhood near Limyille, in the northern part of the country. The Rev. Dr. D. C. Weir, a Presbyterian minister and a college graduate, was the principal, and Mr. Alexander, his assistant. Dr. Weir was a fine preacher, a painstaking teacher and hard student. Mr. Alexander was a scholarly young clergyman, who became eminent, and died at Princeton, N. J., much lamented. They were both conscientious and successful instructors.

Having been well-grounded in the rudiments of the English language and literature, as well as mathematics, according to the standard of that day, I eagerly pursued the study of the "Classical Course," and when I left that academy had about finished the Latin and advanced somewhat in the Greek. My teachers encouraged me and gave me special private attention, as they saw I took great pleasure in trying to do my duty as a student. We had a large class of young men, several of whom afterward distinguished themselves in their various professions.

I am aware that it is not unusual now to hear the study of the dead languages decried on account of the time and money required, but to a professional man they are invaluable—especially the Latin—and to the preacher, the Greek is equally so. While filling my appointments as an itinerant, and particularly during my connection with La Grange College, I derived much gratification from reviewing and extending my studies in this department, adding some knowledge of Hebrew and French, but confess that, owing to the want of access to a first-class college and my early entrance upon the duties of a traveling preacher, I have never approached my ideal of a regular and thorough education. When I entered the Tennessee Conference, I was probably among the best-educated young men in it, and have never ceased since to be a student, yet I have always deplored the lack of a thorough training such as our best institutions now afford. Often have I asked myself if I did wrong to go into the ministry so soon: "Might it not have been better to finish my education first?" Conscience settled that question in 1817. I shall not open it in 1881. Every man's conscience must respond for himself.

As I am writing for the gratification of my friends, and to find employment which may divert my attention from chronic suffering, and do no injury to others, I will mention two things which took place at this school. David X. Smith was a classmate of mine—the only child of wealthy parents, amiable, bright and loved by everybody. On a summer afternoon many of us were bathing in a bayou near at hand, and in the midst of merriment some one proposed a general baptizing, and I was unanimously called for to act as "John, the Baptist." As our teachers were Presbyterians, and most of the young men were from families in that church, while I was of Baptist ancestry, and felt disinclined to that kind of fun, I objected; but they insisting, I threatened, if I must do it, I would do as I believed John did, immerse them; and that, too, head foremost. They still insisted. In carrying out this matter, using some ludicrous words instead of the scriptural and usual formulary I plunged young Smith head foremost into the water and turned back to the shore; but the poor fellow went under laughing, and strangled. When I heard the cry from the shore, "He is drowning," and looked back, I caught a glimpse of his head as it sank out of sight. To return and seize him by his hair just as he was going down the next time, take him to land and resuscitate him, was done with difficulty. Thank God, Smith lived. In later years I changed my views of the mode of John's baptism, and have never preferred immersion since. Smith, I believe, was more than satisfied. I have no taste for religious fun or mummery. God baptizes by pouring, and I prefer to follow him.

The other thing referred to was as follows: When I first entered this academy I boarded with Dr. Weir's brother William. McElroy and I were roommates. He was several years my senior, a close student and more advanced in his education. He dressed neatly, was taciturn, moral, and never joined us, his juniors, in our jokes or sports. He was our philosopher. Very unlike in temperament and manner, yet he suited me, and we liked each other. I was ambitious, and studied ardently. So with him; but permanent contentment on earth is only a poet's dream. When the gate of Paradise closed it fled, and has not since returned. There were three rules in this school, under the rigorous execution of which Mac began presently to chafe and complain. First. Every student was to attend preaching by Dr. Weir on Sunday. Second. Every boarder at our house must attend family prayer. Third. None boarding with our host must leave the lot on Sunday except to attend preaching. Mac demurred to the church-services, as too long: had timed them by his watch—psalm and prayer, thirty minutes; preaching, etc., two hours. Doctrinally, the web of the discourses was predestinarian Calvinism, which is consistent with itself; the woof, Hopkinsianism, which is consistent with nothing. Family worship, on Sunday mornings, he said, was entirely, and always the same—his knees tender and the puncheon-floor too rough and hard; and, finally, young men were not allowed to take a walk Sunday afternoon. In vain I sought by example and persuasion to quiet him. I submitted, because I could study without interruption, and did not feel annoyed so much. He would not. Closing our books at midnight, after having lately suffered some special grievance, he turned upon me for yielding. "It was silly and cowardly—a despotism to be resisted." He had been silent and moody all the evening, but now his pent-up feelings poured out. He more than once intimated that I, and all others like me, were slaves and fools for believing in the Bible—that it was all priestcraft and delusions, and a terrible imposition upon the conscience and liberty of the ignorant and superstitious. He pitied me for my religious notions, and said if I would read certain books which he had in his trunk and would loan me, I would discard the Bible, and get free from superstition. Among other books he offered to lend me was Paine's Age of Reason, Voltaire's and Bolingbroke's works, etc. I heard him in silence. Never before had I heard the like. It surprised and amazed me. What was the matter? This calm, moral, exemplary young man had assumed a new character. Why? I could not then tell. After he had exhausted himself of this diatribe against the Bible, the church and the ministry, there was a long and profound silence. I made no reply, but opening my purse I took out some money, and handing it to him, said calmly:

"Mac, here is the change I borrowed lately."

He drew back, and said,

"Why this? Never mind now."

My reply was: "I may forget it. After to-night we part; I go to another boarding-house."

He remonstrated, but I persisted, telling him he might do well enough without the Bible and religion, but I could not, being thoughtless and easily led into wildness. I needed the restraints they afford, and I not only believed the Bible to be true, but would do so until I would be able to examine the subject. I had been taught it as true—believed it to be so, and feared he might make me an infidel and ruin me. He was nonplussed, and upon his solemn promise not to speak so again, I agreed not to leave there.

—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—Much missionary work is being done among the Jews. Eight societies in Great Britain are laboring for the conversion of this people. The London Society for the Propagation of Christianity among the Jews is the oldest and largest. It alone occupies thirty-four stations in the leading Jewish centers in Europe and along the shores of the Mediterranean. It has also thirty-six missionary agents in Abyssinia. It has an income for its work of £10,000 (about $200,000) a year.

—The East London Training Institute for home and foreign missions, which is in charge of Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, of the Plymouth Brethren, has sent out in the last six years 150 missionaries, some of whom are in China, some in Central Africa, and some in other foreign fields, while many labor as home missionaries.

—Mr. Robert Arthington of Leeds, has offered to the Baptist missionary Society, $20,000 in aid of its Congo Special Mission, particularly for the purchase and permanent maintenance of a steamer on that river and its affluents. He stipulates for the establishment of mission stations at the mouths of the Ikutu and Ikelimba rivers.

—The Board of Mission of the Wesleyan Church in Australia has recently determined to sell the John Wesley, and to purchase another vessel, which will be engaged in doing work for the missions in and about the many islands of Fiji, and in paying the visits necessary to New Britain, Rotumah, and elsewhere.

—Among the statistics of the work accomplished by Foreign Missions during the past century, are these: Converts from heathenism, 1,500,000; languages into which the Bible has been translated, 226; copies of the Bible circulated, 15,000,000; Lacarous languages endowed with grammar and literature, 70.

—Bishop Coxe, in a recently published paper, speaks of persons who, with jeweled fingers, will give ten cents to foreign missions and then sing:

"Lay me gently at Jesus' feet,
There shall be my best, my first day all."

The Churchman fears that the bishop has put the sum contributed too high.

—"I wish the steamer to be maintained on the Congo and its affluents until Christ and his salvation shall be known all along the Congo, from Stanley Pool to the first cataract of the Equatorial cataracts of the Congo beyond the mouths of the Arzzwimi and Mobura rivers." So said Mr. Arthington to the Baptist Society on presenting them with a steamer.

—The Buddhists have over 3,000 gods, and claim two-thirds of the population. Let us pray earnestly that the time may soon come when all these false gods shall be cast aside, and the One True God be acknowledged by all the nations of the earth.

—Rev. Justin W. Parsons, a missionary of the American Board to Nicomedia, while on a missionary tour in the mountains east of Ismid, was shot during the night by two Zuruk shepherds and robbed of the money on his person.

—There are eighteen different evangelical societies at work in Syria. Those employ eighty foreign preachers and teachers and 300 native helpers. They seek to reach the total population of Syria, which numbers 2,000,000 souls.

—An exchange says: "Within sixteen years nearly five hundred sets of irons for fanning-mills have been ordered from a single New York firm through missionaries at Harpoot, Eastern Turkey." Missions help commerce.

—The M. E. Church, South, has a church of Mexicans at Laredo, on the Rio Grande, with about 78 members, and a Sunday school of 62 Mexican pupils, 18 of whom are men and women, "some aged and gray haired."

—A Missionary Conference, embracing a great number of Protestant Missions in the East, will convene at the Bible House, Constantinople, June 3rd 1881. An important programme of exercises has been devised.

—The Daily News, London reports that the Jesuit priests in Madagascar are making serious trouble for Protestant Christians, breaking up schools, interrupting worship, and threatening general persecution.

—The Presbyterian Board has received in money and real estate from the estate of the late Mrs. Lapsley, of New Albany, Ind., $215,000. Some $60,000 or $70,000 more will be received from the same source.

—The Livingstonia Mission of the Free Church of Scotland has already stopped the slave trade about Lake Nyassa, whence 10,000 slaves were annually carried off.

—The Sultan of Zanzibar has sent an order to the Mission Press at Beyrout for a complete font of Arabic type, and for a native compositor to manage his Imperial Press.

—Rev. Mr. Clough, a Baptist missionary among the Teloogoos of India, baptized 2,758 converts in 1880. He asked for five new missionaries to assist him.

—The friends of Great Britain expend $40,000 on the missions in Madagascar, Syria and India. They have two congregations in Palestine of about 500 hearers.

—The people of Calcutta are becoming weary of idolatry. The manufacture of idols is declining, and the attendance at the temples is irregular and falling off.

—In Catholic Italy there are to-day a hundred and thirty-eight Protestant churches and about two hundred and fifty pastors and evangelists.

—Last year the Chinese of California, connected with Congregational church missions, gave nearly $2,000 towards the support of the work.

—The number of persons baptized last year at Oneole, the chief mission station of the Baptists among the Telugus, was 1,875.

—An auxiliary to the Home Missionary Society, of the M. E. Church, has been formed in Atlanta, Ga., by Mrs. R. S. Rust.

—There is to be held a great assembly of the Shinto priests in Japan, to decide how the tide of missionary success can be staid.

—The Wesleyan Methodists of Great Britain give for the support of foreign Missions at the ratio of two dollars per member.

—The Methodist Theological Seminary at Bareilly, India, has sent forth a class of thirteen to labor in the mission field.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The order of St. John of Jerusalem held its annual commemoration service recently in London. The order was founded in 1092 for the maintenance of a hospital at Jerusalem, and subsequently the defense of Christian pilgrims on their journeys to and from the Holy Land. It afterward became a knightly institution, but ever preserved its hospitals.

—It is stated that the munificent bequest left by Mr. Muter for the Sustentation Funds of the English Church and the Free Church of Scotland, and which fell into Chancery, is in a fair way of being secured, and that each church will receive something like £10,000.

—The Rev. Solomon Cosby, a colored Baptist minister, educated in the institute at Richmond, Va., under Roy. C. H. Corey, is now laboring in West Africa, at Lagos and in Yoruba, in connection with Rev. W. J. Lloyd, who was formerly a student in the Crozer Theological Seminary.

—The late Mrs. Bayard began her labors among the London poor in St. Giles twenty-five years ago with five Bible women. Before her death over $1,500,000 had been voluntarily given by the benevolent in all parts of the world to aid her great work.

—Two thousand five hundred and thirty four preachers in the Methodist Episcopal Church are pursuing the regular courses of conference study. The number of preachers in classes for admission on trial to conference is 568.

—The Baptist began work thirteen years ago in Colorado, and have now twenty-five churches, and about 1,000 members. A house of worship was recently completed at Leadville and one will soon be commenced at Cheyenne.

—The English Congregational Union has determined to celebrate next year the jubilee of its foundation, to invite the Congregationalists of other countries to participate in its jubilee meetings, and to found a special jubilee fund.

—M. De Laveleye, the distinguished Belgian economist, who withdrew some time ago from the Roman Catholic, has connected himself with the Protestant Church. He is about to publish his reasons for his course.

—The Presbyterian Church in England has ten Presbyteries, two hundred and forty-nine ministers, and fifty-nine thousand two hundred and fifty-nine communicants. The receipts for all purposes last year were $500,000.

—The Russian emigrants in Asia Minor, belonging to the Old Believers sect have sent a deputation to St. Petersburg with a letter from Constantinople Patriarch to the Metropolitan, asking for union with the Orthodox Church.

—It is proposed to organize a Young Woman's Christian Association at Swansea, England, as a memorial to the late Frances Ridley Havergal, whose late address was given at that place.

—A correspondent of the Evangelist asserts that there were added to the Presbyterian churches of this country in 1876, 70,500 members; in 1877, 61,500; in 1878, 53,000; and the present years 19,000.

—Among the soldiers in the British army in Zululand, are sixty or seventy Natal Kaffirs, who are professing Wesleyans, and every morning and evening they hold prayer meetings in their camps.

—The Waldensian Church in Milan has purchased for £1,000 the Church of San Giovanni, in Como, a church which is know to have been in existence A. D. 878 and may not have been new even then.

—Dr. Samuel Harris, of Chicago, recently elected to the Episcopal diocese of Michigan, has signified his acceptance, but his election must be confirmed by the House of Bishops.

—The English Wesleyans had in 1836, same, 350 circuits and 857 ministers, now they have 704 circuits and 1,627 ministers, an increase of 32 circuits and 767 ministers in 43 years.

—A parish priest of a large commune near Verviers, Belgium, states that since the struggle against the new school law began the parish has lost half its communicants.

—The American Baptists have two churches in Stockholm, Sweden, and are about to form a third. There was an increase of 200 members the past year.

—The pope has made a monsignor of the oldest son of Lord Petrie; so there is to be a Romanist bishop and perhaps a cardinal in the British house of lords.

—Ex-Gov. Joseph E. Brown has presented to the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., $50,000 for the endowment of a professorship.

—The Presbytery of Neosho, Mo., at its last meeting ordained a full-blood Semhole Indian named John Ko-wa-ha-cho, to the work of the ministry.

—It is said Cardinal McCloskey has asked and received permission to erect three new bishopries in the United States, to be under his jurisdiction.

—Marshall MacMahon's mother-in-law, the Countesse de Castries, has organized a Protestant congregation at Montargis, near her chateau.

—The German Lutheran church of Newark, N. J., under the management of Pastor G. Schambach, numbers one thousand communicants.

—The Southern Presbyterian Church has a Presbytery among the Indians, with 24 organized churches and over 1,000 communicants.

—At St. Petersburg the Bible is being translated into the Mongolian language, at the expense of the British Bible Society.

—The average age of Congregational ministers who died in 1879 was 68 years, and their service nearly 40 years.

—The Roman Catholic authorities have sanctioned the publication of the New Testament in Spanish.

—The Calvary church, New York, raised $6,000 for the Baptist City Mission on a recent Sunday.

—The banner Baptist State is Georgia with its 235,381 members. There were 12,033 baptisms last year.

—Dr. Ryle was consecrated to the Bishopric of Liverpool on June 24 at York.

Our Young People.

COURTESY.

BY MRS. L. C. WHITON.

Summer said to the Spring, "What a wonderful thing
It is to bring to so much sweetness and grace—
I am sure that to you my blossoms are due,
And I feel I am taking your place."

"I never can blush, but I think of your dush,
And the eyes of the flowers at evening are wet
There was something so gay in your innocent air
That your going we can but regret."

"You beautiful Comer," said Spring to the Summer,
"I lived out my life but to brighten your way,
I heard the buds swelling, and could not help telling,
For I knew you would see them some day.

"It was only my duty to bring you the beauty,
And to help one another is lesson for all;
And perhaps you'll be willing your mission to fulfilling,
To leave something to brighten the Fall.

White Awake.

Boy-Divers in the Red Sea.

"Here we are at last, Mr. Ker," says the captain, as we cast anchor off the coast of Arabia, a little after sunset, about two-thirds down the Red Sea. "It's to dark too make out much to-night, but you'll see a rare sight when you come on deck to-morrow morning."

The worthy captain's mention of "coming on deck" is dumbness from force of habit, for neither he nor I have been anywhere but on deck for more than a week, except perhaps to look for something which we have left below. Most of my time is spent in the rigging, where what little wind there is may generally be met with, and our table-cloth is spread on the "after hatch," while our arrangements for going to bed consist merely of throwing a blanket on the deck, and stretching ourselves upon it, undisturbed save by an occasional scamper of two or three frolicsome rats over our faces.

When I awake the next morning, I find the captain's promise amply made good. The sun is just rising, and under its golden splendor the broad blue sea stretches westward as far as all eye can reach, every ripple tipped with living fire. On the other side extends a sea of another kind—the gray, undulating level of the great Arabian desert, melting dimly into the warm dreamy sky. In front, the low white wall of a Turkish fort stands out like an ivory carving against the hot brassy yellow of the sand hills that line the shore; while all around it are the little cabins of mud-plastered wickerwork that compose the Arab village, looking very much like hampers left behind by some monster-picnic. Here and there, through the light green of the shallower water along the shore, a flash of dazzling white, keen and narrow as the edge of a sword, marks the presence of the dangerous coral reefs among which we have been picking our way for the last three days, with the chance of running aground at any moment.

"You were right, captain," say I, as the burly skipper rises and stretches his brawny arms, like a bear awaking from its winter nap. "That is a sight worth seeing, indeed."

"Ah, this ain't what I meant," chuckles the captain; "the best of the show is to come yet. Look over the side. D'ye see anything in the water?"

"Well, I think I see something swimming—sharks I suppose."

"Sharks, eh? Well, land-sharks, you might call 'em, perhaps. Take my glass and try again."

The first look through the glass works a startling change. In a moment the swarm of round black spots which I have ignorantly taken for the backs of sharks, are turned into faces—the faces of Arab children, and as I perceive with no little amazement, of very young children, too, some of the smallest being apparently not more than five or six years old! Our vessel is certainly not less than a mile from the shore, and the water, shallow as it is, is deep enough at any point to drown the very tallest of these adventurous little "water-babies;" yet they are evidently making for the ship, and that, too at a speed that will soon bring them along side of her.

"Are they really coming all this way out without resting?" ask I.

"Bless you, that's nothing to an Arab!" laughs the captain; "these little darkies are as much at home in the water as on land. I've heard folks talk a good deal of the way the South Sea Islanders can swim; but I've seen as good swimming here as ever I saw there."

And now, as the Lilliputian swimmers draw nearer, we begin to hear their shrill cries and elfish laughter; and now they are close enough for their little brown faces, and glittering teeth, and beady black eyes, to be easily distinguished; and now one final stroke, of their lean sinewy arms carries them alongside, and the blue water swarms with tiny figures, looking up and waving their hands so eagerly that one might almost expect to hear them call out, "Shine, boss?" and see them produce a brush and a pot of blacking. But instead of that, there is a universal chorus of "Bakshees, Howadji"—a penny, my lord!

"Chuck 'em a copper, and you'll see something good," says the captain.

I rummage the few remaining pockets of my tattered white jacket, and at last, unearth a Turkish piastre (5 cts.) which I toss into the water. Instantly the smooth bright surface is dappled with a forest of tiny brown toes, all turning upward at once, and down plunge the boy-divers, their supple limbs glancing through the clear water like a shoal of fish.

By this time nearly all the crew are looking over the side and encouraging the swimmers with lusty shouts; for, used as Jack is to all sorts of queer spectacles, this is one of which he seems never to tire.

"There's one of 'em got it!"

"No, he ain't!"

"Yes, he has—I see him a-divin' up with it!"

"And there's the others a-tryin' to take it from him—hold tight, Sambo!"

Sure enough, the successful diver is surrounded by three or four piratical comrades, who are doing their best to snatch away the hard-won coin; but he sticks to it like a man, and as he reaches the surface, holds it up to us triumphantly, and then pops it into his mouth—the only pocket he has got.

But this is a sad mistake on his part. In a moment a crafty companion swims up behind him, and tickles him under the chin. As his mouth opens, out drops the coin into his assailant's hand, from whom it is instantly snatched by some one else; and a regular hue-and-cry ensues in the water, which splashes up all around them like a fountain-jet, while the shouts and laughter make the air ring.

"Aren't they afraid of sharks?" ask I of the captain, who has just increased the confusion tenfold by firing a gun in the very midst of the screaming throng.

"Not they. They make too much row for any shark to come near them. Sharks are mighty easy scared, for all they're so savage. You'll never catch 'em cumin' too near a steamer when she's goin'—the chappin' of the screw frightens 'em away. See, there's two of 'em comin' along now, and you'll just see how much the boys'll care for 'em."

And, indeed, the sudden uprising of these gaunt black fins, piercing the smooth water as with an unexpected stab, seems to produce no effect whatever upon these fearless urchins, who paddle about as unconcerned as ever. Moreover, it soon appears that the sharks themselves have other business to attend to. A shoal of flying-fish come driving past glistening like rainbows in the dazzling sunshine as they leap out of the water and fall back again. Instantly one of the "sea-lawyers" dashes at the rear of the column, while the other, wheeling around its front, heads back the fugitives into his comrade's open jaw; and in this way the two partners contrive to make a respectable "haul."

But at this moment the garrison-boat is seen putting off from the shore, with one of the Pasha's officers in the stern sheets. At sight of the well-known oriflamme flag, our water-babies scatter like wild-fowl, and the next moment all the little black heads are seen bobbing over the shining ripples on their way back to the shore.—David Ker, in Wide Awake.

GIVE US THIS DAY OUR DAILY BREAD. "I wish I could wear my best suit every day," said Harry, on Sunday evening in a rather discontented voice, as he was getting ready for bed. "My play-clothes are so shabby. Willie's mother don't darn his clothes hardly ever. Oh, dear! I wish we were rich, too."

"What would you do with your money, besides buying clothes, if you were rich?" replied his mother as she went to the closet to get the every-day suit out for to-morrow.

"Oh! I'd build a house as big as the White House, where those Garfield boys live, and I'd fill several rooms full of the nicest beautiful toys I could find, and you should have a room full of dresses just like a queen's, and one room I'd pile up with gold and silver, and I'd have millions of picture-books, and I'd send lots of money to the missionaries."

Here Harry stopped to take breath.

"I am afraid that you would need a place larger than the White House," said his mother, laughing.

"Oh! then I'd build another," Harry began again, "and till that toll and——"

"You remind me, my dear boy," his mother said, taking him on her knee, "of last Sunday's lesson about the covetous man who wanted to pull down his barns and build greater ones to store away his crops in. Didn't you pray to-night, 'Give us this day our daily bread?'"

"Yes, but, mamma," replied Harry, "you wouldn't be very happy if you had only bread every day, any more than I could, you?"

"Some people have been very happy for a long time with only bread and water," said his mother. "Jesus meant to teach us when he gave us that prayer that we don't need anything to make us really happy but the simplest, plainest wants us to be satisfied with a little if we can't have a great deal of money. We shall all be rich one of these days, darling, if we are loving children of our Father in heaven. The Bible says, 'He that overcometh shall inherit all things.' Wouldn't it be better to be poor here, if it is God's will, and rich in heaven?"

Harry did not know just what answer to make to this question, then, but after his mother left him, as he lay awake listening to her sweet voice singing his father's hymn, "Jerusalem the Golden," he prayed that, whether he was rich or poor, he might be sure at last to reach the Golden City.—The Intelligencer.

THE FIRST WRONG BUTTON. "Dear me!" said little Janet, "I buttoned just one button wrong, and that made all the rest go wrong;" and Janet tugged away and fretted, as if the poor buttons were quite at fault for her trouble.

"Patience! patience!" said mamma, smiling at the little fretful face, "and next time look out for the first wrong button; then you'll keep all the rest right." And, added mamma as the last button was put in its place and the scowling face was smooth once more, "look out for the first wrong deed of any kind; another and another is sure to follow."

Janet remembered how, one day not long ago, she struck baby Alice; that was the first wrong deed. Then she denied having done it; that was another. Then she was unhappy and cross all day because she had told a lie. What a long list of buttons fastened wrong just because one went wrong—because her naughty little hand struck baby! The first thing she could do to make it right again was to tell mamma how naughty she had been, and ask her to forgive her; but that was much harder than just to do the buttons again.

Janet thought it all over, and between the buttons and her very unhappy day I think she learned never again to forget to look out for the first wrong deed.

The pieces of armor which a knight of the olden time wore when fully equipped were 15 in number. He commenced his steel toilet by enclosing his feet in "sabatynes," a sort of clog and proceeded by putting on, in the following order, "greaves," or shin pieces; "cuissos," or thigh pieces; a breeching of quail; "tuilettes," or hip pieces; "cuirass," or breastplate; "vambraces," or arm plates; "rere braces" on the upper arms; dagger, short sword, mantle, tomlet, long sword and shield. The great weight of all these accoutrements tends to prove that our ancestors were much more powerful men than the descendants. The horses which carried these warriors were also clad in steel, and must have been far ahead of the steeds of the present day as weight carriers.

A BIRD-CATCHING CAT. On the plains of Nevada, a mile away from any house, a gentleman noticed a cat, a huge one. It lay on its back, its feet uppermost, and was apparently dead. Around it, feeding unsuspectingly, was a flock of small birds. Just as he was thinking how much easier it would be for the animal to feign death and catch a bird by deceiving it than by slipping up to it, he was astonished to see the cat suddenly roll over and grab one of the feathered tribe that was very near. The other birds flew away a hundred yards or so and alighted. The cat only made one or two mouthfuls of the game and then crept around to the windward of the birds, laid itself out again, and once more successfully played the dead dodge.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

Corresponding Editors:
Rev. J. W. Hinson. Rev. W. L. C. Hassnett
Rev. C. B. Galloway. Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D.

THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1881.

Experimental Knowledge.

This is as old as the records of religious history. Job knew that his Redeemer lived, and that in his flesh he should see God. Enoch, before his translation, "had this testimony, that he pleased God." David waited patiently for the Lord, and he inclined unto him and heard his cry. God was his refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Paul speaks of knowing that all things work together for good to them that love God; and, "we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." John declares: "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren;" "and we have known and believed the love that God hath to us." We might collate largely from these declarations that express, not so much the knowledge which flows from inspiration, as that which results from ordinary spiritual illumination, and belongs to the experience of believers in all times.

The things included in this knowledge are as clear and certain as are any facts in history, or any objects recognized by the senses. Such, for example, are the forgiveness of sin, peace with God, an indwelling Saviour, heaven and a blessed resurrection. These things are matters of knowledge to him who has the experience of a new and spiritual life. They are assured to him who has the experience, and to none other. The unconverted man may hold them true as matters of general assent, but he can not say "we know," as the men of faith can. It is a knowledge that does not avail for others. The testimony of the Christian is worth something, but his knowledge can not be imparted to another. If we would know what he knows, we must also have his experience. The path is open alike to all, but none can reach the goal of assurance, except through that which all God's children have trodden. We stand in the outer court, amidst the evidences of Christianity, where there are strong and beautiful pillars of truth, and where there are impressive symbols of God, but we can not be said to know until we enter the inner sanctuary, where the light streams from between the cherubim. The gospel may be all it claims to be, but we do not know it as the power of God unto salvation until that power is felt in our own hearts. Surrounded by miracles, prophecy, and the collateral testimony of history and philosophy, men may doubt. With Christ in them, the hope of glory, every shadow of skepticism is dispersed.

The knowledge of experience, in one aspect, is narrow. The forgiven sinner knows that his sins are forgiven, that Christ is the divine Son of God, and that he is himself a child of God. This would appear to be about the limit, and yet this experience attests the truth of many other things. The blind man whom Christ healed knew this one thing: "that whereas I was blind, now I see." But if he had cared to press the argument, as he did afterward, he might have shown how the character and claims of Christ were fully established by what he felt. A man saved from sin by the gospel knows the gospel to be true, and he knows the Bible to be true. He knows God, he feels sin bowed by the resurrection power, and he has in the Holy Spirit the earnest of the future and heavenly life.

This experience will not make him an unerring critic of the sacred text; it will not give him the right exposition of Genesis, nor the key to the interpretation of Revelation, but it does, to him, stamp the Bible as the Book of God, and sets at rest all doubts about life and immortality. With such knowledge as this experience affords, he can be calm while the conflict between science and revelation rages. Critics may differ about the authority of this reading or that, about versions and revisions, but the word of God remains for him unshaken. Infidelity may assault the gospel with every ingenious and plausible device, but it can not move him. He has received a kingdom that can not be moved.

It is well, however, in these times of unsettled opinions, and of doubt and unbelief, to look to this matter of experience. To insist upon it, and to lead men to it, was never more needful than now. More than anything else, it is the citadel of the faith, and the stronghold that will baffle and roll back the waves of unbelief. As long as Christians keep themselves in the love of God, maintain a deep religious experience, and calm and realize the blessing of assurance, they will be invulnerable. It is when they exchange experience, or when backsliders in heart, that they are drawn into the current of doubt, and are led to surrender to the spirit of atheism.

Can a Christian, who has known God by experience, ever become an infidel? We think he can. If by unfaithfulness he departs from Christ, the gracious Spirit will be withdrawn, and he may, under the delusions of sin, persuade himself that his experience was no better than a cunningly-devised fable. The only safety is in walking closely with God, and by prayer and watchfulness, maintaining a life invigorated by the consciousness of Christ's abiding presence in the heart.

An Occasion for Searchings of Heart.

The increase of membership in our connection last year was not large. In comparison with several years past it was very small. In 1851 the increase was 37,000. For 1879 it was, we believe, over 50,000. The increase of the past year is only about 15,000. Last year was, therefore, a lean year. It was a year of revived material prosperity. Our greatest increase, it will be seen, was during the hard times. Last year was the year of the Presidential election. The attention of all classes was much occupied with political conventions, and with an excited political canvass. This may have had something to do with the decline in increase of membership. There has been an advance in the collections for missions, and for other objects. Apparently our church activities were never so manifold, nor so busily industrious. The one point of comparative failure is in the number of people converted, in the number gathered into the church out of the world.

This falling off is real. It can not be attributed to defective or incomplete statistics. These were as full and accurate as usual. The best we can make of the situation is, that after a year of large increase, in which revivals prevailed extensively, some reaction followed, and that many who came in upon this flood-tide soon fell away. The pastors may have become more careful in receiving members, and in revising the church registers. So that the reports of the past year represent more accurately than usual the actual membership, and a more thorough and permanent work. It may be truly said that we have done as well as other churches, and better than the most, but we have come sadly short of ourselves, as indicated by the history of several years past. Explain the matter as we may, there is occasion for searchings of heart, and for an earnest effort to achieve better results this year.

As the increase of fifteen thousand is over the deaths, withdrawals and expulsions, it actually represents a much larger number of conversions and accessions, but still it is small for a church having nearly 850,000 communicants, 4,001 traveling preachers and 5,868 local preachers. With all these preachers, with our thousands of churches and Sunday-schools, and with our abundant church literature, we ought to have done more. Can it be that we are getting into a mechanical and perfunctory way of preaching, and of working our church organization, and that we are relaxing our efforts to bring men directly and immediately to Christ? Is there a growing disposition to give up our old Methodist altar-work, and an attempt to follow other methods?

The meaning of the statistics may be, not that the additions were less last year, but that the losses were greater. We have no means of determining this point, but, should it be so, then we have failed in training and building up the young converts, and in keeping them in the church. The class meeting has been neglected, religious reading has not been supplied, pastoral oversight has been defective. From the current reports of last year, as we observed then in the church papers, we expected a better grand total than the figures of Dr. Summers indicate. We have no probationers to drop, but somehow there is a falling away. With no special class of this sort to watch and to instruct, the pastor may lose sight of those who need his special care. Our growth in numbers has been something wonderful since the probationary feature was abolished, but the losses incidental to that system are sure to come in somewhere, unless there be carefulness in receiving members, and in their subsequent training. While we emphasize the need of greater efforts in the work of conversion, and of bringing people into the church, we must not overlook the importance of training and keeping the members we have.

The comparatively meager increase of last year may be due, in almost equal proportions, to the neglect of young converts, and to a loss in aggressive power. To these aspects of the subject we would direct prayerful attention. We have reached the middle of another year. Revivals of great power have occurred in some places. Shall we not work and pray for the awakening presence of the Holy Spirit?

Going to London.

The Ecumenical Conference may not do as much as some people expect, but it certainly will do some things very important, and other things, perhaps but little less important, will follow indirectly from its meetings and actions. Preparations, on the scale of most generous hospitality, are being made, and writers and speakers and preachers have been appointed. It will be a great gathering of great men, where a few will make world wide fame, because the fitting opportunity will be presented of momentarily over-topping their brethren—brethren, too, who may not be their inferiors in any element of piety, culture or manhood. The sermons, speeches and essays will, doubtless, all be excellent, but not a whit better than what we have read and heard over and over again at home. The occasion, however, will give them greater influence and more general circulation.

Our church, the second largest Methodist body in the world, will be ably represented. The men appointed are strong, and, though there may be some chagrin at having special friends left out of the list, still the church is satisfied with the delegation. There is hardly a Conference but could supply others as competent as those appointed. Had the Alabama Conference been permitted to elect, no doubt that Dr. Summers, who was first appointed by the Bishops, would have been the unanimous choice, and we all deeply regret his inability to go.

Dr. M. S. Andrews has been put in his place, so that now we have Col. Wm. Chambers and Dr. Andrews, both of whom are in some respects peculiarly fitted for this illustrious honor.

One of the chief goods (because it will speedily produce other good results,) will be the increased respect and esteem for Southern Methodism and Southern manhood our representatives will secure by their associations with distinguished foreigners. For nearly fifty years the world was taught to deny our claim to a place in the catalogue of Christian churches. The connection of the Southern people with African slavery, and their natural and lawful resistance to the degradation and agony of being ruled by the emancipated negro, and their fixed purpose, based in the instincts of their Anglo-Saxon and Teutonic blood, and in the simplest principles of pure morality, as applied to civil government, never to be ruled by him, but always, as long as he remains here, to rule him in righteousness and mercy, these facts maliciously perverted or ignorantly misunderstood, have constituted the ground of a half century's most damaging misrepresentation of our church and people. For years and years, in the isolation of a flat, formal rejection, we stood ostracised by the great Methodist family, as if there flowed in us only the base blood of bastardy and crime, while all that time we were willing, yes anxious, to be recognized at any cost, save that of conscious falsehood against ourselves and downright betrayal of the high trust committed to our keeping by the Master. But this disgrace has been, in a large measure, removed already by those whose malice or misguided notions of right put it upon us. This Ecumenical Conference will be the occasion on which, we hope, the very last vestige of this stain will be forever wiped out by the conduct of our representatives. And for one I am glad it has come. For we want, have always wanted, fraternity, genuine fraternity; not a miserable simulacrum, made up of platitude greeting and mercenary courtesies, and which, for paltry gain of any sort, prostrates at the feet of wealth and power, or pours contempt upon the labors and lives of the dead and the living, but an honest brotherhood, which candidly recognizes the birthright and dignity of all true Christians, and especially Methodists. We hope that every Southern delegate will be there.

The Alabama Conference resolved to pay the expenses of her two men. And it is time we were about the work of raising the money. By education, culture, piety and personal manhood, Bros. Andrews and Chambers both are well qualified for all the duties of the position. Nor are they novices in the ways and methods of such deliberative bodies. If any men in Alabama are familiar with the history of the Southern people and church, with our genius, methods, spirit, polity, past and present, these men are. They can and they will take care of themselves, of their section and of their church, both in the homes of their hosts and on the floor of the Conference.

The Pensacola district has assumed $75. Let this be the basis of collection, and let us, preachers and laymen, go to work at once, for the time to start is almost here. Bro. T. F. Mangum, of Auburn, would, no doubt, act as treasurer. And as he will see Col. Chambers and Dr. Andrews both frequently, it is suggested that he act as treasurer of this fund, which no doubt he will do most cheerfully. Want you, Bro. Mangum?

J. W. HINSON.

Silver Creek.

Yazoo, a silvery stream, about forty feet in width, gracefully winding for thirty miles through an open alluvial plain, with banks sloping gently upward for a hundred yards from the water's edge, carpeted with Bermuda and other grasses, with here and there a clump of trees or a solitary oak, or a majestic cypress or a bower of thick growing vines, enlivened by swimming fowls and leaping fish and singing birds and grazing herds, bestudded throughout its length with neat cottages, every few hundred yards on each side, with now and then a landlord's mansion ensconced beneath inviting shade, and you have an idea of Silver Creek in the month of May. It lies near the northwestern border of the county of Yazoo, in the State of Mississippi, flows southward, and, it is thought, once furnished an outlet for the surplus waters of Yazoo river, carrying them into the Sunflower, some twenty miles above its union with the Yazoo. Now, however, all connection between Silver Creek and Yazoo river is cut off by a levee, leaving the creek only the water collected from its banks and the adjoining plantations, and making it in the dry season, in places, stagnant pools filled with aquatic plants, and in others a very gently flowing stream of semi-transparent water.

Settlements were first made here about forty years ago, and one of the first places opened was named Potosi, after the celebrated silver mines of that name. The land is very fertile, and is cleared for about a mile on each side of the creek. The highest land is here, as in all alluvial countries, next to the banks of the stream, and slopes off with a scarcely perceptible declivity, till it seems to meet a miniature wall of tall timber a mile or more away.

The fields appear to be as level as a floor, and the growing corn and cotton spread like a sea of green before the eye. The plantations are generally large, containing from five hundred to five thousand acres each, so that the sixty square miles of open land on the creek are owned by a few persons, most of whom reside in distant parts of the country.

The land is cultivated almost exclusively by negroes, who constitute by far the largest portion of the population. I estimate six thousand negroes and not more than one hundred whites on the creek. The blacks seem contented, and work well. A small garden and a few fruit trees are seen by almost every house. They have churches and schools, and are not without regard for neatness. The clean white shirts of the laborers are conspicuous from afar in the fields.

The whites consist of scarcely over twenty families. A few merchants, a few managers, and a very few land owners, with their families, constitute the sum. The scarcity of whites may be illustrated by an incident. An excellent public road follows the bank of the creek throughout, whose smoothness is a constant temptation to those fond of driving. Good horses pass over it at the rate of eight or ten miles an hour with surprising ease. A short time since a prettily dressed white baby was taken out by its parents on an evening drive. The little negroes ran out from the houses along the way, expressing the greatest wonder and admiration at the sight of a white baby, never having seen one before. Some of them begged for the baby, saying they wanted to make a doll baby of it.

Several white families have recently removed from the creek, and the tendency seems to be to a decrease in the white population. Out of the hundred whites now on the creek, I estimate about thirty bachelors. I do not insist that young ladies shall make special note of this, yet, if they should, who would blame them?

Health is said to be good here during most of the year. One physician is able to do the practice for about ten thousand people on the creek and river. There is but one church for whites on the creek, located at Silver City. We have also a small parsonage. Ministers of the gospel are highly respected and duly appreciated by the people. A Methodist preacher has been sustained among them for the last twelve years. The people are cordial and hospitable, and the few who profess religion are quite as pious as Christians elsewhere.

The greatest obstruction to the progress of the gospel here is the fact that the boats, on both the Yazoo and Sunflower, pass more frequently on Sunday than any other day. This is not wholly the fault of the boat owners, but the people want it so. It is also said that the United States mail must be carried on that day. All this Sabbath breaking is unnecessary and wrong, and the God of the Sabbath will make all engaged in it suffer therefor.

W. L. C. D.

Eureka Springs, Arkansas.

MR. EDITOR: Everything here is a marvel. We had heard much said of it, but the half had not been told. The whole country around here looks like it might have been struck with lightning at some time, torn assunder and left in ruins. These mountains are almost literally formed of limestone rock, and rise up, at an angle of forty-five degrees, to the height of from one to three hundred feet, and the valley between not wide enough for a wagon road. The city is along the sides of these mountains from top to bottom. When we got here, looking from one standpoint only, we concluded that what had been said about there being a population of fifteen thousand was an exaggeration; but, after going round for a few days, we concluded that no man could ever find out how many people there are here. You go down one of these ravines (they call them gulches here) to a terminous, and look up another one, and you see another city, which you had not seen before; so you never find the end, and would not know it if you did. Before coming to the place we never could understand how the thousands of people who live and visit here could be supplied with water from one spring; but Eureka Spring means forty other springs, more or less. The Eureka Spring is at the base of a pile of rocks, almost perpendicular, and reaches to a height equal to the rest. It is a basin in a solid rock, looks somewhat like a druggist's mortar, and holds about two gallons of water. It will run full when dipped dry in about one minute. This is the great place of resort, while many contend that the water of the other springs is just as good, and is used by thousands; yet the most of the people prefer this, and we have no doubt it is the best by far. To give you some little idea of the immense crowd here, the first night we could get no fresh water, and it was doubtful whether what we did get was Eureka. We got up early next morning, went to the spring, and determined to have a drink from the fountain head; but when we got there from two to three hundred persons were in before us. We waited some time, and asked how long before the crowd will retire. The answer was they don't retire at all. We said to a by-stander: We came a thousand miles to get a drink of Eureka water, and have been here twelve hours and have not had a taste. A man with a bucket smiled, and gave me a drink. Next morning we got up before day, took our pitcher, and thought we would get ahead of the crowd, but there was at least a hundred buckets in before us. We pushed our way till it looked like rudeness, when a good-natured looking fellow gave back and said, pitch in old man; now is your time. Well, we got our pitcher filled anyhow. This scene would remind any one of the pool of Bethesda, where the multitude of sick people waited for an opportunity in the days of Christ. If this whole thing is a humbug, then it is certainly the grandest one ever practiced upon any people. To-day for the first time we went to the postoffice. Here we witnessed another scene, which would seem marvelous anywhere else. A line is formed, and they follow up each other, passing the place where letters are distributed, the head man waiting to get his mail, and then leaves. This line is composed of from fifty, perhaps, to three hundred persons. We fell into ranks; the crowd was immense, and marching very slowly, so we counted the number as well as we could, and by the watch timed the post-master in reference to the time it took to serve one, and, on making the calculation, found that it would be about six hours before our time would come. Think of it, under marching orders, six hours in a crowded house, of all sorts of people, to get a chance to ask for a letter! We thought it was a time when a little maneuvering was admissible, so, seeing a lad near the head of the line, we offered him a dime for his place. He said: I'll take a quarter. I gave him twenty-five cents, and, like a school-boy, marched up third in head, and got my mail in good time. The first Sabbath here we went to the Sunday-school at nine, to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Rev. S. N. Burns, of the White River Conference, is pastor, a young man of good promise. About one hundred persons were in attendance at this school. At eleven we heard the Rev. C. A. VanAnda, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Minnesota Conference. He preached one of those finely-finished and well-delivered sermons, which was listened to with interest. At three we heard Mrs. J. E. Wecden lecture, on temperance, at the Opera House. She had made no labored preparation, but evidently was well posted upon the temperance question. Her manner and gestures were anything but graceful. Work, total abstinence and prohibition were features of the subject that she dwelt upon. She had a good hearing. At night we heard Wm. McFerrin, of Tennessee, and brother of J. B. McFerrin. He is one of the old-style of Methodist preachers. He preached with great vehemence, and manifested great confidence in the gospel which he preached. He told us he was seventy-two years old, and still leaned upon Christ, with full assurance of a full salvation.

As to the virtue of this water, you can hear of marvelous cures which have been made every day. It looks like this pure mountain air, which blows almost incessantly, day and night, with the pure sparkling waters gushing from these rocks, cold enough without ice, is enough to insure health though they had no medicinal virtues. Everything here seems to be vastly temporary, and wonderfully mixed and mingled. You may read signs within a few feet of each other, such as dressmaking, sawdling, attorney at law, Smith's saloon, all styles of coffins sold here. Just over a grocery, open on Sunday, I heard one of the familiar Methodist hymns, softly and sweetly sung by male and female voices to the tune of "Auld lang syne." Upon the whole, if the author of the Arkansas Traveler is living, and has any inclination to write another book, here is the place for him to get the material. The maimed, the halt and blind are in great numbers from everywhere.

J. F.

Southern University.

MR. EDITOR: My information is that there are engaged in the active ministry about twenty graduates of the Southern University, nine in the Alabama Conference, some in North Alabama, some in Texas, some in Louisiana, some in Arkansas and perhaps some in other Conferences.

Many more young men have attended this school, from one to three years, and have entered the itinerant ranks without waiting to graduate.

Of course all of these young men could have become useful ministers without going to college. But are they not now better prepared for their responsible work than they would have been if they had not availed themselves of the advantages of this church school? Nobody doubts it. How many of them could have gone to a Methodist school outside of the State? Only a few. Then the church has been the gainer by this school.

I do not live in Greensboro, and do not own any property there, to be increased or decreased in value by the rise or fall of the school. But I do live in Alabama, and am interested in the prosperity of the Methodist Church in the State; and, therefore, I am interested in the success of this church school. For, in my judgment, no enterprise of the Conference is so important to the prosperity of the church as this church school. If it can be properly sustained it will, every year, send into the pulpit consecrated and educated preachers, and into the pew cultivated and devoted laymen, and these will work together for the church.

Are there not one hundred laymen in the Alabama Conference each of whom will either give or raise among his neighbors $500 for an endowment fund? It can be done, if the proper men will undertake it. Not a dollar need be spent upon agents or in traveling expenses. With such a fund success of the school would be assured, for each one of the one hundred contributors would become so enlisted in the matter that he would also try to get scholars for the school.

What say the laymen of the church?

LAYMAN.

Another distinguished Wesleyan preacher has recently died, William Overend Simpson. The London Watchman says:

The Wesleyan year 1880-81 will for a long time be looked back to as one of the most disastrous and terrible in the annals of our ministerial personnel. It is within a year of half-a-century since anything like the same degree of mortality occured among the most distinguished men of our Connection. In 1832-33 our people were shocked and alarmed by tidings of the death of some of our then leading men, one after another, in quick succession. The list is headed by the name of Adam Clarke,

L. D., who died on August 2d, 1832. In October 6, of the same year, he was followed by Thomas Stanley, a man greatly beloved and respected. On the 7th of the following month John Mann, one of the Missionary Secretaries, a [illegible] and [illegible] man, a powerful preacher and an able, faithful, eloquent and popular platform speaker, was seized in the midst of his work and his days, and was laid low. At the time of Mr. Junes's death his illustrious colleague at the Mission-house—Richard Watson—was confined to his bed through severe and long-continued illness; and on the eighth of January, 1833, he rejoined his much-loved friend and coadjutor in the heavenly home. The death-roll of that disastrous year numbered thirty names, each of which belonged to men who had done good service to Methodism in their day. But the names we have mentioned were universally recognized as belonging to the foremost ranks of the ministry; and the Connection felt terribly bereaved by their decease. We do not take note of the eminent men who during the same period were removed to their eternal rest, as there is no documentary evidence at hand. But the year in question has ever stood out, that is to say, until recently, as the most tragic in our history. It has stood out, that is to say, until now. But the current Methodist year bids fair to rival it, if indeed it does not in some respects surpass it. True, there is no name among those who have passed away so conspicuous for theological and biblical learning, and for the exposition and illustration of the truth as God us were those of Clarke and Watson. Such men as these are given once in a generation to a church; but the men whom we have recently lost moved on as high a plane, though in a different way, as their illustrious predecessors Samuel Coley, Frederick J. Jobson, William Morley Punshon exerted an influence, and gained an eminence in their day and generation surpassed in any previous period of our history as a church, and now we have to add a name hardly, if at all, inferior to theirs. William Morley Punshon, the last of the noble confraternity who have been called home, was worthy to rank with the best and most powerful of his fellows; and his sudden and awful removal from the midst of his brethren and the field of his discharge of his duties has produced a shock and inflicted a sorrow, the effects of which will long remain. The death of such men in such rapid succession will make our present Conference year, from a human point of view, the blackest we have ever known. On the other side, however, we may, we shall, if it be true, as Robert Hall has somewhere, that in such cases heaven enriches itself with the spoils of earth. They who dwell on this side, and our departed brethren with them, sing in every case "A child is born," while we, widowed and bereaved, sigh and mourn, "that a man is dead."

Rev. S. A. Steel, writing to the Memphis Christian Advocate of the Southern Baptist Convention recently held at Columbus, Miss., says:

"The Convention is really a bigger humbug than I understood it to be. It has no other legitimate work, despite a number of other matters committed by courtesy. This indicates to my mind, very clearly the policy our Baptist brethren feel of their organization having a general supervision over all their interests, and is to our advantage over them at present. On the other hand, there is a fear that the annual gathering in large places of so many of their people to discuss the subject of missions gives them a great advantage. It confirms me in my opinion, long since, that our Mayes ought to be held in different places every year. No one who has witnessed the salutary effect on the community of such enthusiastic missionary services as we have just had can doubt that such a policy would greatly help the cause. It would bring into prominence in the centres of culture and capital, and distribute the spirit of an annual assembly of the most distinguished men. Can't we persuade Nashville to divide with our Baptist brethren, have missionaries in China, in Italy, in Mexico, among the Indians and the Chinese in California. The reports showed all the fields to be prospering, and urgently in need of reinforcements to occupy the new openings of Providence. The Convention was much pleased with the consideration of New Orleans as a strategic point for distributing Christianity over the two Americas. Its arguments. Every word they said on this point deserves to be emphasized additionally by the Baptist, but by every Protestant body in the city. New Orleans has a future before no other city in America can claim. Midway between the oceans, on the verge of two zones, with sixteen thousand miles of inland navigable waters flowing by her door, and the natural lines of travel pointing from all directions to her wharves, with a rapidly-developing railroad system, and a boundless country of indescribable fertility around her in every direction, it is simply impossible for the mind to appreciate her future greatness. The growth of all this wonderful development in the future is what makes the work so urgent. The very air down there is beginning to be charged with the spirit of progress, and in the next few years are destined to witness a material development of the South, particularly of the Southwest, to which the past history will not afford a parallel. Now is the time to get a foothold there. We have a good start—better than the Baptists, but far, far from what we ought to be.

"Lozman," writing to the St. Louis Christian Advocate, May 25, from Whitworth and President Johnson as follows:

"Some remarks relative to the sale of Whitworth College have brought out Dr. Johnson in the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. The Doctor is slightly in error with regard to two things; viz., 1st, that it was a statement of mine relative to the sale of the half-interest in the college; and second, That I was directly or remotely to intimate that the school was not "bona fide" a Methodist institution but a private enterprise. If the Doctor will re-read the paragraph in question, he will learn that I alluded to a paragraph going the rounds of the papers to the effect, that the property had been sold; i. e., the half-interest. He will also discover that that paragraph strikes at no one of the editors whose ignorance of ecclesiastical matters is equaled only by their self-conceit. If the Doctor will read a letter written by me June 1st, 1877 as he has it) he will see that I gave him, Bro. Millsaps and Vanderbilt credit for their liberality. And here allow me to say, that the Methodist Church in Mississippi never had three better men than that trio just named, each of whom I prize as friends as well as acquaintances; hope never to forget them, and expect that I am not on their list." I am not a puff-writer, as Dr. A., perhaps knows, but I am half disposed to publish what I think of him. He is a modest man, and I believe that he will prudently restrain himself from anything tending to provoke me in that direction. Certainly I will write approvingly, have done so in the past, expect to continue it to the end of the chapter. I am glad he wrote what he did and told us what he is doing. I am glad I wrote what I did, for it has extorted some valuable information from him, all most creditable to himself. The candle is no longer under a bushel. Let it shine.

—The New York Legislature is daily balloting for the election of United States Senators. The return of Conkling and Platt is very doubtful. The Republicans are divided, and neither faction is strong enough to elect their men. It now looks as if the Garfield wing would triumph. To fail in an election, and leave the matter to be settled by another Legislature, bodes disruption and ruin to the Republican party. We imagine they will find some way to break the present dead lock, and thus save the party from disintegration and defeat. Conkling's ambitious aspirations can only be realized in his party. Unless he regards his case as absolutely desperate and hopeless, he will yield rather than bring about the overthrow of Republicanism. The Democrats seem to be watching and waiting, and perhaps expecting that something will turn up to their advantage. Gen. Grant has come out squarely for Conkling, and it now looks as if both he and Conkling would go down together, and be buried in the same political grave. Worse things than this might happen to the country. We still have hopes that good will come out of this political family quarrel.

—The total eclipse of the moon, Saturday night and Sunday morning last, was a novel and interesting sight. Precisely at the time predicted a brown shadow began to creep up on the lower or southeastern rim of the moon, and gradually deepened and spread until, like a semi-transparent veil, it covered the entire disk. The moon was visible through the shadow, but the light was so subdued that the stars, previously invisible, became wonderfully brilliant, and the milky way seemed to glow with almost preternatural light. The beauty and splendor of the Southern sky, where the veiled moon hung, were simply indescribable. For a time the earth was as dark as a moonless night. Gradually, softly and solemnly the shadows came and as gradually they fell away. The galaxy and the hosts of bright stars melted from sight, and the world was again flooded with the beams of a full moon shining in a cloudless sky.

—Respecting the medicated glasses advertised in this number of the Advocate, we would anticipate all inquiries by saying that we have used them for a short time, both for day and night reading, and that they have given perfect satisfaction. We find them equal to the pebble which we have used habitually for several years. Whether these medicated glasses are all that is claimed for them we can not tell without longer trial. We are acquainted with several persons who are using them, and who are delighted with them. They appear to be a very superior quality of glass, white and hard, and prepared with scientific accuracy to help and strengthen the failing sight. So far as our experience with them goes, we do not hesitate to recommend them.

—From Bro. Norsworthy's communication, in last week's Advocate, it is manifest that East Mississippi Female College, Meridian, Mississippi, has had a prosperous session, and that its prospects for the coming year are brighter than ever. The College is finely located to command a large patronage, and its management has been such as to secure the confidence of the people. It is an institution that deserves the liberal support and patronage of the Methodists of Mississippi. The Mississippi Conference is fortunate in having two such flourishing Female Colleges, as East Mississippi and Whitworth, in its bounds and under its control.

—On Wednesday evening, June 8, the Steamboat John H. Hanna, when but a few miles above the city, exploded a flue. A number of deck-hands were fearfully scalded, several of them have died.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS CAMP MEETING.—I. V. Enochs informs us that the meeting will begin August 4, and continue one week. Dr. H. F. Johnson, presiding elder of Brookhaven district, will have charge of the services. This is a camp ground almost unequaled in the South in its improvements and accommodations, and probably has the largest attendance. It is located one mile from Crystal Springs, Miss., and of easy access by the New Orleans and Jackson railroad.

SUMMER SCHOOL OF CHRISTIAN PHILOSOPHY.—We publish Syllabus of Lectures and other information concerning this enterprise, on our eighth page this week. Our friends in the South who may be going North about the time of the holding of this School will be abundantly rewarded by attending. The Summer school combines health, pleasures and instruction.

Rev. Robert B. Dowler, who has been for some months traveling on business for this paper, writes, Natchez, Miss., June 8:

"An accident that occurred at Port Gibson, while attempting to get into a buggy, has disabled me for awhile. I will have to return to my home until fully restored. Nevertheless will be for the present at Ocean Springs, Miss.

Rev. J. M. Boon, writing to the Memphis Christian Advocate, June 2, says:

"We are having a glorious revival in Holly Springs. Between twenty and twenty-five conversions to this writing. Forty-four penitents last night and twelve conversions. The entire community is deeply interested. House crowded every night. About one hundred at sunrise prayer-meeting. Morning service largely attended. The entire charge is revived.

Both houses of the Michigan Legislature have passed the amendment to the liquor-tax bill, whereby the tax on retail sellers of malt liquors is raised to $500, and distilled liquors to $500. Wholesale malt liquor dealers' tax is raised to $200; distilled liquors to $500.

Sea Shore District Conference.

The Conference for the Sea Shore District convened in Moss Point Church, Mississippi, at nine A. M. on the twenty-sixth. Rev. T. S. West, P.E., in the chair. Attendance good. On motion, J. W. Stewart was elected secretary. The usual committees were appointed, and reports received from the various charges. The spiritual condition of the district is good, and a growing interest is manifested in our Sunday schools; our own literature is almost exclusively used; the different assessments are, with a few exceptions, paid to date. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has a large circulation in the district, and is aiding very materially in advancing the cause of our church. The following were elected trustees for this district of Sea Shore camp ground: Dr. E. F. Grilla and Henry Ware. The following laymen were elected delegates to the annual Conference: G. Wood, H. Ware, E. Miles and J. W. Stewart. Alternates: G. W. Brown and J. W. Starr. It was decided to hold the next Conference in Pearlington. After a protracted debate on temperance, and the usual vote of thanks, the Conference adjourned.

JOS. W. STEWART,
Secretary.

MOSS POINT, MISS., May 28, 1881.

Personal and Other.

—A French Monsignore has discovered a great catacomb before the S. Pancrazio gate at Rome. It has ten chapels, and extends as far as the foundations of the Villa Doria Pamphily. All the graves have been previously opened, but the discoverer hopes that he may still come upon some which have been left undisturbed. He believes the catacomb to be connected with that of St. Julius, Pope.

—Miss Abigail Judson, sister to the Rev. Dr. Adoniram Judson, celebrated her ninetieth birthday on the 20 ult. She was the second child of her parents, her brother Adoniram being the first, and was nearly twenty-one years of age when, in 1812, her brother departed for India. Thus her life covers the whole period of modern missions, she having been born one year before the Baptist Missionary Society at Nottingham, October 2, 1792.

—Karl Blind, from whose pen German treatises on "Zulu History and Religion" have repeatedly issued, is about to treat the subject in an English essay, showing the traces of connection between the cosmogonic views of Semitic and other races and those of the Zulu, in whom he thinks there is a combination of Negro, Semitic, and Turanian blood.

Rev. Dr. Charles H. Hall, of the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, has been elected to the rectorship of the Calvary Church of New York city, to succeed the late Dr. Washburn. Dr. Hall and Dr. Washburn both left the Congregational ministry for orders at the hands of Bishop Potter, of New York, many years ago.

—M. Desire de Charnay, the archeologist, who is engaged in making excavations in the ruins of ancient Mexican cities, has returned to France. He will resume his investigations in October. The results of his work thus far have been highly satisfactory.

Rufus Choate believed in hard work and struggle. When some one said to him that a certain fine achievement was the result of accident, he exclaimed: "Nonsense! You might as well drop the Greek alphabet on the ground and expect to pick up the Iliad!"

—The name of James E. Brown, of Kittaning, Penn., is entitled to a place on the roll of princely givers, his bequests to foreign and home missions, education and other charities aggregating the extraordinary sum of $1,680,000.

—Mr. Hugh Meharry, who died at Dermot, Ill., in his eighty-fourth year, recently, had given $50,000 to Christian charities. He was one of the founders of the Nashville (Tenn.) Medical College for Freedmen.

—Mrs. Garfield is described as having a strong sense of personal dignity, and much reserve of manner. She is clever and judicious, having a "business head," and planned not only her Washington house but also the improvements of the Mentor cottage.

—The manufactories of New Orleans in 1870 employed [illegible] hands, and their aggregate product was worth $30,980,278. In 1880, 10,977 persons are employed, and the aggregate product is worth $20,361,017.

—The twelfth of December was observed in English Wesleyan Churches as "Temperance Sunday," with special services in behalf of the temperance reform.

—Algeria and Tunis are now united by a daily postal service, and letters are sent for fifteen cents each to all stations on the line.

—Victoria, Princess Imperial of Germany, and Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland, has just passed her fortieth birthday.

—Julian Hawthorne is editing the Belgravian Annual.

Books and Periodicals.

BIBLE TRANSMISSION; OR, RELATIVE TO [illegible]. All inquiry into the origin [illegible] a spiritual [illegible] Author [illegible] by Rev. B. J. H. Petingill, A. M. Philadelphia: The Bible Banner Association.

The author of this book advocates the doctrine of the immortality of a class [illegible] regenerate in Christ" the attainment of a revival from death and a change to immortality of those who are divinely fitted to "live forever." He spends principally, in this work to an investigation of the sense of the principal crucial words in the Scriptures, such as Soul, Spirit, Life, Death, Hell, Eternal, Punishment, The Second Death, Everlasting Destruction, The Life Everlasting, the Unspeakable Gift, Discarded Scriptural Terms, etc., which convey its revelations regarding the future life. We are of course not in sympathy with the views of the author. He displays much laborious research, but his labors land him in grave error. The ultimate annihilation of the wicked, the immortality of the good are the main points in the discussion. Price, cloth, 90 cents; strong manilla, 75 cents.

THE END OF THE WORLD; with now [illegible] Interpretations of History. By William R. Huntington, M. D. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Company.

We are indebted to the author for a copy of this work. We need hardly say that it is excellent in style and that it displays a wide range of reading and much careful study of history and of the Bible. It is however in the author's well-known mystical vein of thought, and presents the Swedenborgian views of the doctrines of redemption, the resurrection, the judgment and the future life. The gifted author sustains his positions with as much plausibility as is possible. He is very severe on the orthodox churches, his indictment of them is fearfully elaborate and numerous. The New Church, however, is to be the church of the future, and all will be well in the end. Much truth is mixed up with these most extravagant errors. With sincere personal regard for Dr. Holcombe, and a high appreciation of his merits as a writer, we must protest against his doctrines.

THROUGH THE PRISON TO THE THRONE. By Rev. Joseph S. Van Dyke. New York: I. K. Funk & Co.

The subject of the book is a 12mo of 215 pages, is "illustrations of life from the biography of Joseph." This inimitable Bible story has been the subject of books, sermons, lectures for centuries. It has engaged the pens and tongues of the most gifted and devout, and it has been exhibited in every possible light, but it is as fresh and charming and instructive as ever. Mr. Van Dyke in his study of the subject brings out nothing new, but his treatment of it is entertaining and its many valuable lessons are clearly and forcibly presented.

—Through the Winter is the title of an illustrated 12mo of 360 pages, published by the American Sunday School Union, Philadelphia. It is a moral and religious story designed especially for the entertainment and instruction of young people. Our examination of it has been too hasty to enable us to judge of its merits. Issued by the American Sunday School Union, it ought to be a good book, and we presume it is.

—Traveler's Official Guide of the Railway and Steam navigation lines in the United States and Canada, for June 1881, has been received. It is an immense work and complete. Published by National Railway Publication Company, Philadelphia. Price 50 cents.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE.—The numbers of The Living Age dated June 4, and June 11, contain articles on The Unity of Nature by the Duke of Argyll, From "The Iliad of India," and Law Reform in the Days of Justinian, Contemporary; Carlyle's Lectures on the Periods of European Culture, Nineteenth Century; Margaret, Duchess of Newcastle, Blackwood; Mr. Thrale, Frazer; Lost, Macmillan; One year in a German Cookery School, Cornhill; Science in China, Nature; The Hippopotamus, Seven Years in South Africa; Hobbies, and The Industrial Ideal of Life, Spectator; The Ethnology of Eyes, Standard; with instalments of "Visited on the Children," and "The Freres," "A Bishop's Confession," and the usual amount of poetry.

—The Southern Pulpit, June 1881, has a floetable of contents. One of the five sermons in this number is by Dr. B. M. Palmer, of New Orleans, on "Christianity the Spirit of Power." The sermons and outlines are all excellent. Suggestions on Texts, Homiletical Illustrations, and Book Review are as usual well filled with instructive and entertaining matter. Conducted by Rev. H. M. Jackson, and Rev. J. J. Rafferty. Richmond, Va. Subscription price, $1.50 per annum.

—Carpentry and Building is an illustrated monthly journal, published by David Williams, New York, at $1 per year. It is profusely illustrated with fine line engravings, and contains a vast amount of information about architecture carving, finishing, and everything pertaining to the carpenters' and builders' art. It is a practical and useful magazine for mechanics, and for nearly all classes of readers. We have received the number for June, 1881.

The Supreme Court of New York has granted the order to change the name of the corporation of "Scribner & Co." to "The Century Co."—the order to take effect on the 21st of June. The July issues of Scribner's Monthly and St. Nicholas will have the new corporate imprint.

—The July number of the North American Review will contain an exhaustive article on Indian affairs by Carl Schurz, and a very lively one on "The Power of Public Plunder" by James Parton.

—Musical Herald, Boston, for June, has been received—a good number of an excellent publication.

MISCELLANEOUS.

No. 74 USE St. Charles St.

THE MEDICATED GLASSES. TRADE MARK

A WONDERFUL And SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

THE MEDICATED GLASS.

YOU CAN GET A PAIR OF SPECTACLES THAT WILL KEEP YOUR EYES IN AS GOOD CONDITION AS THEY ARE NOW, [illegible] These Medicated Glasses have been thoroughly tested and their merits established. [illegible] gave used to wear glasses. After the use of these Glasses for a short time, the temporary [illegible] the eye is relieved, and experienced teachers, in many cases, instruct the eye to do its natural work. The Medicated Glasses are pebbled by the best of these glasses it is recommended for the following [illegible] unsightly appearance of [illegible] becoming [illegible] The Medicated Glasses are [illegible] and [illegible] We sell all eyes and warrant our work, or money refunded. Persons living at a distance desiring the favor of testing the strength of glasses wanted. The Medicated Glasses can only be had at 74 St. Charles Street, as we do not employ peddlers. AGENTS WANTED.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS. NONE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED "MEDICATED."

HERC. HOUSAH,

CRESCENT CITY SPECTACLE COMPANY,

74 St. Charles Street, New Orleans.

In writing advertise this paper.

Publisher's Department.

We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

A little girl was eating green corn by gnawing it from cob, when her tooth became entangled with a corn silk. "Oh dear," said she, [illegible] "I wish when they cut the corn made they would pull out the basting threads."

Pedagogue: "What is the meaning of the Latin verb amasco?" Tall student after all the others have failed to give the correct definition: "I don't know." Pedagogue: "Right. Go up to the head."

A country girl at a fashionable hotel in New York noticed that all the guests beat their forks only by eating their pie. From her remarks home she reported the fact of the old lady, who comforted her by observing, "You shouldn't mind 'em, deminia, it still because they're too lazy to use their knives."

Mr. Van Smith pointing toward a couple which he supposed to be in another room: "Just look at [illegible] Miss Rosebud, demurely: "Why, I can't mirror, not a door." The young man has not appeared in public since.

A Stock-broker returning to his office the other day after a substantial luncheon with a client, said cordially, to his head clerk, "Mr. Tilkin, the world looks different to a man when he has a bottle of champagne in him." "Yes, sir," replied the clerk, significantly, "and so looks different out to the knight."

Bridegroom to his little sister-in-law at the breakfast table: "Julia, you've got a new brother now." Julia (with breath): "Yes, and my sister the other day. To see she didn't think he was much account, only it looked like Lapham's last remaining [illegible] great clutter of knives, forks and spoons.

Mr. Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street, New Orleans, is one of the largest piano, organ and music dealers in the United States. His house, located on the great Canal street, is one of the most active in the whole city. Mr. Werlein has a large and well-established business, and is strictly reliable and trustworthy. He holds himself responsible for the good performance of all instruments he sells, and gives full guarantee, and is willing to send pianos, also organs, on trial, paying all expenses if not taken. The Chickering pianos, Mathushek pianos, and Hale's pianos are light, improved piano fortes, and are recommended for purity and strength of tone, and for great durability, they are sold low for cash or on small monthly payments. Old pianos are taken in exchange at a fair reduction. Organs from Estey's, Mason & Hamlin's factories, are sold by this house at prices that defy competition. Music is sold to teachers at half price. Musical instruments of select importation are sold at 50 per cent. discount from catalogue, to dealers. All letters of inquiry will be cheerfully responded to, and catalogue of pianos, organs, music and musical instruments will be sent to any address on application. Call on or write to Philip Werlein, 135 Canal street, for anything wanted in music.

Tommy Dorkins came running into the house with this conundrum for his long-suffering mother: "If you were on the top of the Trinity church spire how would you get down?" Mrs. Dorkins thought she'd jump down, slide down the lightning rod, fly down on the goose, fall down, and then gave it up. "Why, if you wanted to get down, you could pick it off the goose," he said exultantly.

It was on the Burlington railway train, and politics had given way to theology, and the young man with the turban had the floor, and was denouncing the old-fashioned idea of hell. "I tell you," he cried, "man was never intended for such a devilish punishment. God never made me for kindling wood." "Reckon not," said the old parson, back near the stove; "look green."

If you have a cold and are desirous of getting well immediately, get a bottle of Laplace's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm. This remedy is both good to the taste as well as a certain cure.

"If Colonel ——goes on drinking as he does now, he'll soon not have a coat to his back," said one friend to another. "Nor to his stomach, either," remarked a physician who was standing near.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—American China dinner, breakfast and tea set, 160 pieces, for $15. Equal in looks and usefulness to French China.

Business Notices.

Faded or Gray Hair gradually recovers its youthful color and lustre by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, an elegant dressing, admired for its purity and rich perfume.

CANVASSERS make from $25 to $50 per week selling goods for K. GRIDEOUT & CO., 10 Barclay St., New York. Send for Catalogue and terms

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FOR RENT. A DESIRABLE COTTAGE—ON Steamboat Camp Ground for the Season. Cottage fully furnished. Apply to Lock Box 134, New Orleans.

AUGUSTA FEMALE SEMINARY,

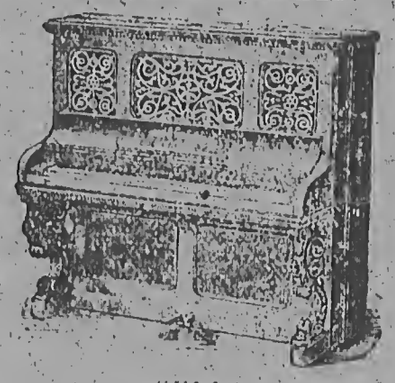
STAUNTON, VIRGINIA.

MISS MARY J. BALDWIN, Principal.

Opens September 1st, and closes June 1st, 1882.

This institution continues to increase in prosperity from year to year. It offers superior advantages in location, in its buildings and grounds; in its general appointments and sanitary arrangements. Its full corps of superior and experienced teachers; its unsurpassed advantages in Music, Modern Languages, Elocution, Fine Arts, Physical Culture and Instruction in the Theory and Practice of Cooking. The successful efforts made to secure health, comfort and happiness. Its opposition to extravagance, its standard of solid scholarship. For full particulars apply to the Principal for catalogue.

P. WERLEIN'S,



135 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS,

The Leading

Piano House

IN THE SOUTH!

SELLS

CHICKERING PIANOS,

MATHUSHEK PIANOS,

HALE'S PIANOS,

And numerous other makes at the very lowest prices and on the most liberal terms to be obtained anywhere in the UNITED STATES.

Full guarantee. Will be sent for trial one month if desired. Catalogues on application. Letters cheerfully and promptly answered.

Old Pianos taken in exchange. Second hand Pianos very cheap.

A Fine Stock of Organs.

ESTEY'S,

MASON & HAMLIN'S,

STERLING'S.

And others, at prices exceeding low. Please send for catalogues. Will send Organs on trial anywhere in the South. Organs as low as $30. Cannot be undersold.

MUSIC.

MUSIC INSTRUCTION BOOKS,

PIANO COVERS,

STOOLS in great variety.

1-3 Price on Music to Teachers.

Musical Instruments.

Imported direct from European factories. 50 per cent. discount to dealers.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

Catalogues sent on application.

For anything pertaining to Music, call on or write to

P. WERLEIN,

No. 135 Canal Street.

Indian Turnip

COMPOUND

PECTORAL BALM.

For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle 50. Prepared and for sale by B. LAPLACE, Druggist, 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street. And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

Agricultural.

BERMUDA GRASS.—Mr. Z. L. H. Moore gives, in the Southern Cultivator, a new way to "kill Bermuda grass." He says: "Turn hogs and cattle on it for three years, and take care of them as you do of your cotton, and you will never want to kill it." And we believe it. During a recent visit to Monroe county, we saw several fields of Bermuda that were considered as profitable to the owners as any cotton or corn field. Energetic farmers find no insuperable difficulty in managing the Bermuda fields so as to produce crops of oats every year, if desired, and even cotton is successfully grown. One of the chief merits of this grass depends upon its tenacity of life—also considered its most objectionable feature—by those who have been brought up to look upon grass as an unmitigated evil. We have no doubt there are men in Georgia to-day who would be willing to see every variety of it exterminated from the earth.

The possibilities of Middle Georgia with a proper appreciation of the value of Bermuda are grand. We believe the day will come when every hill and vale will be clothed in verdue and productiveness, such as few of the old settlers ever dreamed of. For twenty or thirty years past we have heard of the gullies or red clay-galls of Middle Georgia as if they were the signet of decay and desolation.

But the red clay of this section abounds in all the inorganic elements of fertility, and the soil needs only to be covered and filled with the remains of vegetable growth—humus—to teem with a prodigiveness that is rarely dreamed of by the old style farmer who believes that soil never grows better, but always poorer by cultivation.—Christian Index.

AN INEXPENSIVE ROLLER.—I will tell how I made my roller that cost me not to exceed one dollar. I do not have any frame, tongue or doubletree. I selected as round a log as possible, sawed off with a tree running saw, a solid white oak log five feet long by two feet eight inches in diameter, got a smith to furnish two spikes one foot long each, taken from a round bar of iron one inch and a half in diameter, one end pointed with barbs cut in, and a small hole punched in the other end for my linch-pin. I drove one of these in the center of each end of the roller, leaving three inches of the pin or spike stick out from the end of the roller to where the linch-pin was inserted. Next I put on that spike a wooden washer one inch thick; then I took two pieces of two by four scantling, twenty-two inches long, bored an inch and a half hole in one end of each, inserting them on the iron spikes, put on the linch-pin to hold them in their place, then I attached a single-tree to the other end by means of two small clevises, hitched on my team, lengthened my chicks so each horse would walk square in front of the draft and as close to the roller as possible. "How am I going to get my roller down a certain hill in order to get to the plow field?" This way: Make those pieces of scantling longer, so they will extend to the rear of the roller, attach each end of your log-chain to them, same as in front; fasten a chunk of proper size to center of chain in the rear. When you get to the field drop the brake and proceed. My team understand the roller so well, they never allow it to overtake them. I would rather work my team on this roller than to any ordinary two-horse plow or harrow.—Ohio Farmer.

TOADS.—French industry and sagacity take the lead of the world in little things, it nothing more. Toad culture is a regular business there with the economic people, and the demand for toads is great and increasing. The useful little animals are employed as insect-destroyers, not only in the gardens of that country, but thousands of them are packed down in baskets of damp moss and sent to other countries to be sold to gardeners. The more observing horticulturalists and floriculturists have long been aware of their value as insect-destroyers, and have utilized them to a greater or less extent. And it is not creditable to the credit of American gardeners and farmers that they have never recognized the service of this helpful and innocent reptile. Nature conducts her operations by reciprocal means; and if she gives us the hurtful creatures to eat up all our crops, she always gives us the birds, toads, etc., to eat up the insects. The farmer should keep an eye open on nature, and seek to make her manifold operations helpful, instead of casting hindrance in the way of destroying her agents. The successful farmer has great need to be a good economic naturalist. Many things, as loathsome-looking as the toad, are the best of friends.—Golden Rule.

CARE OF YOUNG CHICKENS.—A little extra care for the first few weeks given to young chickens is time and money well invested. The best food for young chicks is hard-boiled eggs chopped fine. Then feed with cake after they are three days old. I feed only cracked corn dry and bits of boiled meat; with plenty of milk for them to drink. Wet food will sour in their crops, and many chicks will die from this cause. They should be fed every hour, as they want to eat very often, and it is not best to keep much food before them. When they are two days old, rub a little kerosene and lard on the tops of their heads and under their wings. Repeat it every other day for a fortnight. There will then be no trouble with lice. If the hen must be confined in a coop for any length of time, put in some ashes, sulphur and lime mixed in dry earth, so that she can keep clear of vermin. I always give the hen full run with her chicks after they are three days old. I never set a large hen, as she kills more chicks than a light one. Old hens are better mothers as a general rule. I market all the cocks at ten and twelve weeks of age, as they bring more at that age than any other. With extra care I have them weigh two pounds and more at that age.—G. W. T. in Country Gentleman.

GREEN OATS FOR FODDER.—Mr. W. A. Armstrong, of the Elmira club says: I am very willing to offer my testimony to the excellence of the fodder made from oats cut when green; but I can not determine their precise value in the terms the chemist would employ in making up his table of constituents. I have fed many crops cut when the grain was nearly full, a period indicated to the eye by the gray appearance of the field. At this stage there is almost completed growth, but the ripening process has not begun; the sap is in the stalks and the heads almost formed. After wilting in the swath a few hours in good weather—longer time in poor weather for curing—the oats are bound in sheaves of moderate size and at once set up two-by-two in shocks, where they are left until dry enough to draw in, the degree of curing dependent somewhat on the condition of storage. If the sheaves are to be put on scaffolds and not packed to great depth, little care need be taken to secure thorough curing in the field. Now as to value, I must say oats so gathered are worth more for feeding milch cows than the best hay, if made a part of the daily supply. I have never fed exclusively on oats. Cows in milk, and doing well on good hay, will at once show increased yield when given a suitable allowance of oats, cut green and cured in the way I have described, and they will eat all the straw as cleanly as they consume the best hay. The fodder is also good for horses—better than ripe oats for horses not steadily employed, for they keep the coat good and digestion unimpaired.—N. Y. Herald.

SOUTHERN FARMERS.—The editor of the Danville, (Va.,) News, talks like a sage when he assures us that if Southern farmers wish to become more prosperous they should at once abandon the pernicious credit system. In the cotton States, particularly, it is a weighty drawback. As the system is practiced the farmer gives the merchant a lien on his crops to be grown, and the merchant, being fully secured, furnishes the necessary supplies and fixes his own prices. The farmer is thus wholly at the mercy of the merchant, and has no redress against exorbitant rates. A decision has just been rendered by the Supreme Court of Mississippi which will afford the farmers of the State some relief. A merchant who held a mortgage on the crops of a farmer foreclosed it. The lower court allowed his bill against the farmer, although it was shown that the prices charged were at least double what they should have been; but the higher court, in its decision, affirmed that the purchaser was not in a position to decline the purchase on account of the prices charged, and that he acquiesced in the price from an overruling necessity. His extorted assent to the prices fixed was without consideration, and was therefore void.

HINTS THAT MAY SOON BE TIMELY.—If flowers have been standing in the ground for many years, new soil does wonders. Rich manure makes plants grow, but they do not always flower well with vigorous growth. If new soil can not be had, a wheelbarrow of manure to about every fifty square feet will be enough. If the garden earth looks gray or yellow, rotten leaves—quite rotten leaves—will improve it. If heavy, add sand. If very sandy, add salt—about a half pint to fifty square feet. If very black or rich from previous year's manuring, use a little lime, about a pint, slackened, to fifty square feet. If the garden be full of hardy perennial flowers, do not dig it, but use a fork, and that not deeply. Dig garden ground only when the soil is warm and dry. Do not be in a hurry, or you may get behind. When a clod of earth will crush to powder as you tread on it, it is time to dig—not before. If perennial plants have stood three years in one place, separate the stools, replanting one-third, and give the balance to your neighbor who has none.

MOLES ARE NOT CARNIVOROUS.—Some years since, I noticed in the ADVOCATE or some agricultural paper, that moles were carnivorous. If in the ADVOCATE, it was in Father Gooldale's stories for children. I am prepared to state from my own observation and experience, that they do eat both vegetable and animal substances. I have killed them [illegible] and bothered with them at any time, take a small piece of potato, but I prefer the goober, as they seem to be very fond of them. The way to prepare it is to take the goober and cut off the end that contains the kernel, this leaves a small cavity, in which, put the strychnine. Find where they have lately been at work, then make a hole with the finger into which drop one bait, then lay a clod of dirt over the hole so as to exclude the light. They generally work from eleven to two, and about 1 P. M., and at night.

H. M. LIVERMAN.

KINGSTON, La., May 21, 1881.

ESSEX PIGS.—The Farmers' Review tells its readers that the "improved Essex is one of the best of the smaller breeds of swine," but that the breed has never been a general favorite, except for crossing and improving coarser breeds. "They are entirely black, fine haired, with shortish face, small, erect ears, body of good length, hams usually very good, the coating of hair usually very thin. They mature early, fatten very easily, and have a large proportion of fat meat; are quiet in disposition, not especially prolific." The Suffolk resembles the Essex in a number of respects, but is pure white in color. Early maturity, unusual readiness to fatten at almost any age, a quiet disposition, a well-formed carcass are points all conceded to the Suffolks, and it is also to be admitted that a cross between this breed and any of the larger and coarser breeds will often produce pigs which are scarcely to be improved."

COAL ASHES FOR FERTILIZING.—The use of coal ashes mixed into clayey soil has been found of great benefit, and its value is vouched for by many agriculturists. The Husbandman reports an experiment made with coal ashes, applied at the rate of two hundred bushels to twenty square rods, or ten bushels to the square rod. The soil was compact and heavy. The ashes were drawn on late in the autumn and spread on the ground, which had been recently plowed. In the spring the plowing was repeated, thoroughly mixing the ashes with the soil.

GRUBS.—The New England Homestead gives the following item for the benefit of next year's potato crop: "Every one will notice in grass lands, especially those that have been seeded down for two or more years, many spires that are dead and brown. This is not caused by dry weather, as most people suppose, but indicate the presence of large numbers of grubs. There is no crop that is more liable to be injured by these worms than the potato, and therefore, it should be noted where they are particularly prevalent this year in grass, and these pieces should under no circumstances be planted next year with potatoes."

WASH FOR ORCHARD TREES.—Professor Kedzie, of the Agricultural College, of Michigan, an expert chemist, recently said that a paint or wash made of skim milk, thoroughly skimmed, and water lime will render wood unrotsomable, and he proved it by experiment. He said this paint, or whitewash, is durable, very cheap, impervious to water, of agreeable color, and, as it will prevent wood from taking fire, he urged its use, particularly on roofs, outbuildings, barns, etc.

ALSIKE CLOVER.—Alsike clover gives smaller crops than red clover, but of better quality. It is especially recommended for soils liable to heaving by frost, and affords excellent pasture ground for bees.

Household.

CANNING.—A lady says in the Fruit Recorder: "We have ten acres of fruit of all kinds, and I take a great deal of pride in canning fruit. I got nearly all of the prizes at the fairs. I wish you Americans could just peep into my cellar to see my tomatoes and peaches—some canned last fall and some a year ago, not mentioning my other fruit. I will tell you how I can my tomatoes, both red and yellow. I pick the apple tomatoes—the smoothest and best shaped—and scald and skin them very carefully; take the stem out with a penknife, taking care not to cut the tomato so as to let the juice or seeds run out; then I place them in the cans, some of them with the stem end next to the can and some with the blossom ends; then I take the juice that has run out of some that I have had peeled to cook, having no seeds nor pulp, and add a little salt, and pour on my whole tomatoes until nearly full, then place them in a kettle of cold water and let them cook till I think they are hot clear through; then I seal them. I use nothing but glass jars—two-quart jars—and after the cover has been on about five minutes I take it off so they will settle, letting the gas out; then I fill up with juice and seal again, and my cans are always full to the cover. A great many have not learned this. You have no idea how nice they will look through the glass—they show every vein and rib, and look as if they were put up raw, and, when used, they are just as if they had been taken from the vines, and if you don't believe me try it this summer. I always keep my fruit in the dark and it don't fade through the glass. Now, I will tell you how I can peaches and pears. I get them as near of a size as I can, and sound, but ripe, and peel them, dropping them in cold water as fast as I peel, having my cans all ready; then I fill the jars with fruit, and to every two-quart can I melt one-half pound white sugar with water enough to cover the fruit, and pour it on, setting them in my boiler, which holds eight cans; as soon as they are heated through I take them out, having syrup ready to fill up, then I seal as with tomatoes."

SHOULDER OF VEAL BAKED.—Buy a shoulder of veal, which, according to the locality of your butcher, will cost you from eight to fourteen cents a pound. And let us say just here, that on account of the quantities of immature veal thrown on the market, you had better be sure of your butcher and pay fourteen cents, than to buy a suspicious article for eight. Untrimmed it will weigh seven or eight pounds. Have every bit of bone taken out and put them aside for stock. Make a pint bowl full of dressing, flavoring according to taste, but not strongly with any one condiment. Insert this in the pocket made by the butcher. Rub it all over with pieces of butter as large as a hickory nut. About two ounces will be sufficient, and season with pepper and salt. Bits of very nice dripping may be placed in the four corners of the pan. Dredge thoroughly with flour and place in a good oven. Baste occasionally with the gravy made by the butter, but add no water until the meat is well browned. This will be in from half to three-quarters of an hour, when you may add a large cupful of boiling water. Baste every fifteen minutes until done. It will require about two hours. Carve down straight through the middle and cut to both ends; serve with spinach. This is a most economical and delicious dish. What is left may be sliced and heated in the same, or minced for salad.—N. Y. Herald.

DRESS OF INFANTS.—Dr. Mary B. Jackson says: "The special evil of which I speak is the long skirts, dresses and cloaks which are now the fashion for babies. I feel the deepest commiseration for a delicate child that has hung upon its tender body a flannel skirt a yard long, and over that a cotton skirt equally long, and over that a dress to cover both, often weighted with heavy embroidery, and, if the child is carried out, a double cloak longer than all, so that the skirts reach nearly to the floor as the infant is borne on the nurse's arm. The longer the clothes the more aristocratic the baby, would seem to be the idea of the mother. Think of all this weight attached around the waist of the child, and hanging over the little feet, pressing down the toes and even forcing the feet out of their natural position. How much of deformity and suffering this fashion produces no one can tell; but that it is a great discomfort to the baby every thinking mother must perceive.

"High necks and low sleeves are now fashionable for babies; but how soon they may be laid aside for low necks and short sleeves can not be foreseen. That will depend on the enlightenment of women. To expose the delicate chest and arms of a young child in our cold, changeable climate is often to bring on pneumonia, and greatly to lessen the chances of life. And should life be spared, there will be sleepless nights and anxious days for the mother, as well as great suffering for the child."

MINUTE PUDDING.—Put a pint of milk properly salted, into a clean quart stew pan; have ready a dish of flour; as soon as the milk boils take some flour in the left hand and let it fall lightly into the milk, which must be kept boiling fast the whole time; stir without ceasing, adding flour until it is about the consistency of porridge, then let it boil a few minutes longer, still keeping it stirred. Turn it out on a hot dish, stick pieces of butter all over it, sprinkle sugar, and grate some nutmeg, when the butter and sugar will melt and mingle, and, running all over and around it, form a delicious sauce. Do not be too sparing of butter and sugar, and the cook need not be discouraged if she does not succeed to her first attempt, as experience alone can teach her how to sprinkle the flour properly. If it is not done very lightly, lumps of uncooked flour will be the result. It may be flavored with vanilla.

CORN SOUP.—Cover the trimmings and bones from the shoulder of veal with one quart of cold water; add an onion, sliced, a small carrot or part of one, and some parsley. Simmer for two hours and strain. There should be nearly a quart of broth. Meantime, in another saucepan boil very slowly a can of corn in a quart of water. Wash through a fine colander that will not allow the skins of the kernels to pass through. Return the saucepan to the fire, melt in it a large tablespoonful of butter and mix with two tablespoonfuls of flour; add, gradually stirring meanwhile, the corn pulp and then the veal stock. Draw to the back of the range for fifteen minutes, first adding a teaspoonful of finely minced parsley. Put a small teacupful of hot milk or cream in the batter and pour in the soup.

Never allow salt meats of any kind to boil hard.

Educational.

—Prof. Stephen N. Fellows, D.D., of the University of Iowa, makes the following statement, in a recently published pamphlet, concerning the work of his department: "Since 1873 there have been enrolled in the eight classes in didactics (including the present,) one hundred and thirty-seven students—an average of over half the number in the successive senior classes. Their scholastic and professional fitness for their work at graduation is indicated by the relatively high positions in the schools that they have secured and retained. Add to this the fact, as stated in the last report of the Superintendents of Public Instruction, that the number of principals and superintendents educated in the State University 'exceeds the number from all the other colleges and universities in Iowa,' and an estimate may be formed of the relative value of the university as a factor in the educational work of the State."

—The Educational Congress just held in Paris recommended that primary instruction in France should be rendered obligatory, and advised the creation of primary schools in hamlets three miles distant from the central town or village of the commune, the creation of sectional schools for several outlying hamlets contiguous to each other, and the establishment for each teacher of a class maximum. Forty pupils were as much as a schoolmaster or mistress could attend to. The examining system was condemned. M. Jules Ferry, the Minister of Public Instruction, assured the Congress that instruction would be rendered obligatory, and promised to fix the class maximum at forty. There are now 4,700,000 children taught in the French communal schools.

—President Potter, of Union College, Schenectady, has formally invited General Grant to take part in laying the corner-stone of the new Memorial Hall. The ceremony will take place on June 21st, the day previous to the close of the college year, and a large attendance is expected. The necessary funds have been procured by endowments from the friends of the college and ground has already been broken. The structure will be two hundred feet long and seventy-five feet wide, including the Washburne library hall, lecture-rooms and recitation-rooms. It is said that General Grant has accepted the invitation, and also given the sum of $1,000 toward the building fund.

—Lehigh University, at South Bethlehem, Pa., is one of the few collegiate institutions at which the tuition is entirely free. It was founded by the late Asa Packer in 1865, and provides seven courses of four years each, under the instruction of a faculty numbering sixteen members, of which Robert A. Lamberson, LL.D., is the President. There is a total of one hundred and twelve students pursuing their studies at Lehigh. Mr. Packer's gifts to the institution amounted in all to $2,500,000, exclusive of a tract of land containing one hundred and fifteen acres.

—Professor Bancroft, of Brown University, in a recent address commended the thorough study of the English language to schools. He said that pupils should be taught composition upon a careful plan; the foundation should be laid by giving to the pupil the works of the best authors, and also a clear idea of what he is expected to do, making him understand and follow out the plan in the simplest matters of composition. Many teachers, he said, think that the way to write is to write, and he added that indefinite aims never accomplish anything but indefinite results.

The Kitchen Garden Association is doing a work which merits the attention of all who are interested in practical education. It is designed to promote the training of children in housework on the kindergarten plan. It has successfully inaugurated the work in New York and many other places and is prepared to furnish instructions and material to those who wish to undertake this work in any part of the country. Miss Grace Dodge, 262 Madison Avenue, is the corresponding secretary.—N. Y. Independent.

The Pennsylvania schools have been making good progress during the past year. The graded schools now number 7,037; and the average attendance was 501,627 77 per cent. of the number enrolled. The school expenditures amounted to $7,682,577.77. The Normal Schools were attended by 15,151 students and 1,926 were graduated.

—After a sharp contest the Superior Council of Education in Spain has decided, by a small majority, to admit women and girls to lectures and degrees of universities and faculties, but no action has been taken on the question of allowing them to practice after they have obtained their degrees.

—Nebraska has a school population of 142,348 and an enrollment of 92,349, with 1,110 teachers. The school receipts last year were $1,294,137 and the expenditures were $1,219,703.

—The Michigan Legislature is considering a bill providing for uniform and cheaper text-books, the books to be chosen by a superintendent of instruction and four commissioners appointed by the governor.

—The Italian Government provides four female inspectors for the girls' schools under national control. These inspectors receive a salary of 2,000 francs a year and expenses, and are said to do their work well.

—Cazenovia Seminary has the largest attendance this winter for three years, and during the past twelve months it has discharged $11,000 of indebtedness through the sacrifices of her boardholders and the gifts of her friends.

The Scotch University of St. Andrews has agreed to grant separate courses of systematic university instruction to women as soon as sufficient sum of money is raised for the purpose.

Harvard College is to have a full length portrait of ex-President Hayes, to be hung in Memorial Hall, by the side of the pictures of John Adams and John Quincy Adams.

—It is complained in Milwaukee that there is too much whipping in the public schools. There were fifty cases within three weeks. There is something wrong in a system that permits this sort of government.

The Louisville School Board is considering the expediency of recompensing, by a more stable tenure of office, a longer term, and a gradual increase of salary, teachers of proved excellence, success and long service.

—The Case School of Applied Science, at Cleveland, has its endowment now so invested that an annual income of nearly $40,000 is assured.

—During the last fifteen months the sum of $19,000,000 has been given by individuals in the United States for the cause of education.

—At Harvard, last year, the Chinese course cost $1,082.15; the fees received amounted to $30.

EDUCATIONAL.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Owned, controlled and managed by the Louisiana Annual Conference.

Course of study equal to any college in the South. Its roll of pupils has nearly doubled in three months, and still they come. Noted for healthfulness of locality. Attractive rides.

Total expense for Spring term, commencing February 14, 1881, only $75 in literary and classical course. Music $30. No extras. Let Louisianians build up their own schools.

A specimen copy of College News free on application. Address REV. J. LANE BORDEN, President.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and facility, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. V. Kuerlinger, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly educated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $50 additional.

Spring session begins February 4, 1881. A discount of twenty per cent. to Methodist preachers, and Publishing House hands taken from them at par.

Send for catalogue to REV. E. E. HOSS, President.

HAMBURG (ARK.) HIGH SCHOOL,

Thirty Miles North of Hastrop, La.

This Institution, for both sexes, now in its fourth year, has 65 months yet remaining. Its facilities for educating are peculiar, and its charges are moderate. All modern improvements introduced. Faculty full and experienced. The principal boards his teachers and pupils, regarding the latter as his own children.

One hundred and twenty-five dollars will cover all school expenses, except Music.

City inquirers are referred to Judge R. B. Todd, J. M. Bonner and J. M. Lewis, Esqs., to Rev. Dr. C. W. Carter and Bishop Keener.

Address C. H. CONNERLY, Principal.

January 6, 1881.

READVILLA SEMINARY,

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

A home school for girls. Thorough training in all departments. Full corps of efficient teachers. Expenses moderate. Numbers limited.

For particulars address MRS. MARY W. REED, Principal.

Memphis Conference Female Institute.

JACKSON, TENNESSEE.

REV. A. W. JONES, A. M., D. D., President.

This well-known College of the South and West begins its Fall session on the First Monday in September. Opening Concert and Address Tuesday 8 P. M. of same week. For thirty-six years there has been an average of more than twelve graduates annually.

The Faculty is full and efficient. The determination is to stand among the foremost in the progress of Science, Language and Art.

For further information apply to the President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin September 29, 1880.

This is beautifully located. Schools for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any position in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. B. S. MAYBERRY, Baton Rouge, La.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Opens September 8, 1880. The last session was the most prosperous one since the war. The whole cost of board and tuition need not exceed $141 if the Preparatory department and $161 in College classes for the scholastic year. Send for a Catalogue.

C. G. ANDREWS, President.

East Mississippi Female College,

MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.

REV. J. W. ADKISSON, A. M., President.

A chartered and prosperous Southern school for girls and young ladies. Few schools have grown more steadily and rapidly in public confidence and patronage. Increased in numbers during the past seven years in the following figures: 53, 82, 86, 94, 95, 97, 148. Commanded, as it is, by the first year from Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee and Alabama. Its past history, increasing facilities, accessibility and methods of close and thorough instruction assure its friends of a long and prosperous future for the institution. Send for catalogue.

HIWASSEE COLLEGE,

EAST TENNESSEE,

Founded 1849, and located where

Pure waters flow,

Sleek cattle low,

Cool breezes blow,

Ripe apples grow.

Excellent and tried teachers. Terms very favorable. The Female Department is at SWEETWATER, on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad. The Male Department at HIWASSEE COLLEGE Postoffice, seven miles out in the country. A first monthly paper, the "Hiwassee College Reporter," at fifty cents a year. Address

J. H. BRUNER, President.

JEFFERSON COLLEGE,

HIGH SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN.

Six miles from Natchez, Miss. Session begins September 16. Full corps of instructors. Course of study thorough and extensive. Nearly fifty boarders from abroad. Pupils from a distance board with the principal. Entire expense for ten months, $145. For catalogues address the principal,

J. S. RAYMOND, Washington, Adams county, Miss.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.,

Will begin its forty-first session October 4, 1880. Great attention paid to the regular course. Teachers in the Music and Art departments selected with reference to special duties. Charges moderate. For further information address

H. M. MOSS, A. M., President.

HOMER MALE COLLEGE

THE TWENTY FIRST SESSION

will begin the

FIRST OF SEPTEMBER 1880.

Address R. A. SMITH, President.

MISCELLANEOUS.

U. S. BONDS.

Registered 3 1-2 Per Cent.

Coupon and Registered 4 Per Cent.

BOUGHT AND SOLD BY

New Orleans National Bank,

58 CAMP STREET.

Crescent Insurance Co.,

67 & 69 Camp Street,

NEW ORLEANS.

ORGANIZED 1849.—REORGANIZED 1880.

Cash Capital $100,000.

SOLICITS

FIRE, RIVER AND MARINE RISKS.

W. R. LYMAN.....President.

S. B. NEWMAN.....Vice President.

CHAS. E. RICE.....Secretary.

MISCELLANEOUS.

B. J. MONTGOMERY. R. M. & B. J.

MONTGOMERY

FURNITURE

AND

MIRROR EMPORIUM

Corner Camp and Poydras Sts.

After a sojourn of over six weeks among the Factories North, East and West, we open the Fall and Winter Trade with the largest and best selected stock of Furniture, French and German Plate Mirrors, Ornamental and Fancy Goods, Upholstery Goods, Cabinet Makers' Hardware ever brought to this city. We select our goods in person from the best factories and are determined not to be undersold. Our assortment being too extensive and varied to be specified in detail, we request our customers and the general public to call and inspect for themselves.

On hand a full line of the celebrated Vienna Wood Work and Invalid Wheel Chairs.

Goods packed and delivered F. O. B.

TEACHERS,

AND

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment

SCHOOL BOOKS

112 CAMP STREET

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at factory and prices guaranteed as low as can be had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application.

Also a general line of

School Supplies

SLATED PAPER,

SLATED CLOTH,

LIQUID SLATE,

BLACKBOARDS,

BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,

CHALK CRAYONS,

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,

NUMERICAL FRAMES,

SCHOOL SATCHELS,

BOOK STRAPS,

WRITING PAPER,

DRAWING PAPER,

BLOTTING PAPER,

WRITING BOOKS,

COMPOSITION BOOKS,

SLATES AND PENCILS,

INK, INK STANDS, PENS,

PENHOLDERS, CALL BELLS,

Kindergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

In addition to the above we keep a complete stock of all the standard religious publications for Sunday-schools and members. Prices quoted on application.

South-western Agency for

Readers' and Writers' Economy

G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

Send for anything you want or address for prices.

G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

Christian Advocate.

Ever Widening Fields.

The electric light will be prodfictive of industrial and social results little dreamed of now. These results may affect the political and moral in their influence. It is impossible to forecast the consequences of great inventions and discoveries. One of the most significant changes resultant from the electric light is already apparent. It is destined to double the working capacity of all kinds of manufacturing establishments. Every factory which is hard pushed to fill orders can turn night into day by the use of the electric light. That light is of a color truly, and is therefore superior for night work in all factories where a nice discrimination of tints is necessary. Its intensity enables the artist to perform delicate work which is impossibly by the light of gas. As the electric light throws out no appreciable heat—the whole electric energy being converted into light—one of the common objections to working by artificial light in close rooms is obviated. Another objection also removed is the vitiation of the air by gas or any other illuminating agent save electricity. The immediate result in economy is considerable. It is the universal testimony of factory owners who have used the electric light that it is a direct saving of money. The same power which drives the dynamo directly also impels the dynamo engine. The cost in addition and interest on money invested in the lightning apparatus is far less per year—some say less than the expense of supplying the same light with gas. This is already true in cities where companies charged two or three times the price by gas companies—as in New York—but even if the electric light is more than the highest priced gas it will still be profitable for other reasons to use the former in factories and workshops to catch up with orders. Manufacturers are now decided to utilize in full their capital invested in plant. This is now idle for more than a half of the twenty-four hours for the lack of lighting facilities. But with the electric light the machinery can be kept in motion continuously. It is only necessary to employ relays of workmen—three sets going on at eight hour intervals. The electric companies can not fill orders fast enough in cities where they have discovered the enormous advantage of running their works night and day in busy times. Specious croakers may croak over the possible overproduction. But we have seen in the self adjusting and self regulating power of manufacturing industry. There is no danger that the world will be injured by any political effects likely to follow from the introduction of the electric light in the world's works. Like every other valuable science it may be expected to benefit mankind in ways not yet dreamed of, and slowly develop themselves. But we are not too soon now to predict that one effect of the electric light will be in double production in factories where poor gas has hitherto been the chief reliance for night work.

It is confidently prophesied of the electric light is not strange that its use is to come to pass in a few years is another brilliant invention. When Bessemer hit on the process of converting iron into steel by the use of air in a cupola furnace, the value of his discovery was not at first scientific men. But nobody—not the inventor dared to hope for a few years the relations of steel would be completely reversed, that, because cheaper, it the world would supplant the latter in which had hitherto monopolized now takes the place of iron in all ways of the world thereby a great economy and the safety of life. It is now also beginning to supersede iron as the material for rails. Experience which has shown superior qualities for railways will only teach the same lesson on a larger scale. And the revolution now in progress will not stop when all the world is made of steel instead of iron. There is in store still other inventions for this substitution of steel for iron, let us hope. It is to be hoped that we would hail the electric light and every other secret of science that would free the grasp and made more free the human race. New Journal of Commerce.

The Moral World.

The intercourse of man with man, the influence of one upon another, the best and our utmost when we commit ourselves to his moral sense, appeal to the experience of mankind. What is the highest lesson for the teacher, and what his best method to teach certain branches of knowledge, to impart a certain amount of information as well; but this is not his highest office. What is known may be taught, skill often acquired may be taught, but the moral effect produced by education, the development of moral character attained by the pupil, is a far more lofty and enduring possession. To collect and lay hold on the heart of the pupil is the highest duty of the teacher. And when we succeed in touching and fanning the moral spark in the breast of a young man, the joy is greater than by any of the other joys of life, and one which, so long as he continues possessed of moral feeling and pupils possessed of susceptibility, will form its brightest charm. Moral influence is the first of all influences.

For when we have exhausted all other means, it is in a man's conscience that we must make the last appeal. In so doing we try to get a hold upon him in the highest dignity, and remind him of the most summary of his being. We feel that they are to be blamed, and always ready to leave anything to a man's conscience, for this may be misused, whether from ignorance or from rigorous legality, or from fanaticism. But this is only because it is not right to use a necessary thing that which is the best and the utmost. And in saying we acknowledge that no legislature can be passed on things of less than a moral one, and an obligation imposed other than that of conscience.

The worst we can say of a man is, that his conscience. We may, or at least excuse, many weaknesses and faults, and even grave errors, but lack of conscience will not with excuse. On the other hand we would express the highest confidence in the moral character of a man we say that he is conscientious. Ability is of more value in our estimation of the highest endowments, or the most winning amiability. And to do such definitions say, but that there is a moral world, and that its decisions concerning the worth or worthlessness of a man are final? Is this mere phraseology, or the expression of a truth?

We live in a world of sensible facts and experiences, and are furnished with organs of sense for the perception of the facts of this sensible world by which we are surrounded. And we all know from experience that in proportion as we use and exercise these organs, their powers are heightened and developed. What then? Is this world of sensible manifestations all, or is there not besides this the world of moral facts and truths? And does not the latter concern us quite as much as the former? If this is the case, we shall be furnished with an organ for its perception also. And in proportion as we use and exercise this organ, shall we develop its power, and enhance its vigor and susceptibility. The organ for the facts and truths of the moral world is conscience. We all bow before its claims, and acknowledge its decisions as supreme. We speak of a good conscience, and when we do so, we name the highest good and the surest pledge of happiness. We speak of an evil conscience, and regard it as the greatest torture in existence. The imagination of poets has painted the most touching pictures of its agony. The colors they used were poetry, but the portraits were faithful. When they speak of the Furies, they use figurative language, but what they represent by such figures is a fact. We may, perhaps, doubt whether the characters of Shakspeare are historical personages, but we can not doubt the moral events of which these characters are the vehicles. When we would sum up in one word the greatness and significance of Shakspeare, we call him the dramatist of the conscience.

Certain as are the truths of mathematics, indubitable as are the propositions of logic, so certain and indubitable are the facts of the moral consciousness. And if we are determined to doubt, we can more easily resolve to doubt the former than the latter. The skepticism of Kant stopped short at the fact of conscience, and the idealism of Fichte admitted this reality. The categorical imperative, "Thou shalt," was to Kant the most certain fact he knew of, and the moral system of the world was exalted by Fichte to the dignity of deity.—From "Moral Truths of Christianity," by Dr. Luthardt, Leipsic.

A Story of Wall Street.

The New York correspondent of the Boston Herald, writing of recent manipulations of the stock market, narrates the following to show the ups and downs, in this case a terrible precipitation of Wall street:

Leaning against a counter of a Broad street saloon, and nibbling the crackers and cheese on the free lunch platter, yesterday afternoon, stood a sad-faced man of sixty-five or seventy years. He wore a queer kind of a fur-trimmed cap ill-suited to the moist weather; his clothing was not especially neat, and his hair was very gray.

"There," said my companion, "is a notable example of the ups and downs in Wall street. That's John M. Tobin. He used to be the President of the New York Central railroad, and was once worth $9,000,000."

I refused to believe this, and said so. My friend dragged me over to the old man and said:

"Uncle John, here's a gentleman who refuses to believe you were worth $9,000,000."

"But I was, and possibly more than that," answered the old gentleman; "and here I am, getting a free lunch, with a five cent glass of beer."

"Uncle John," said my friend, "why was it, when you were worth so much, that you did not put $3,000,000 of it aside, where the street could not get at it, and operate with the other $1,000,000?"

"Young man," was Mr. Tobin's response, "you have fooled around here for some time; how much were you ever worth?"

My friend acknowledged to having been $20,000 ahead at one time.

"Why didn't you take away half of it?"

"Because," was my friend's response, "I thought I could use it to better advantage here."

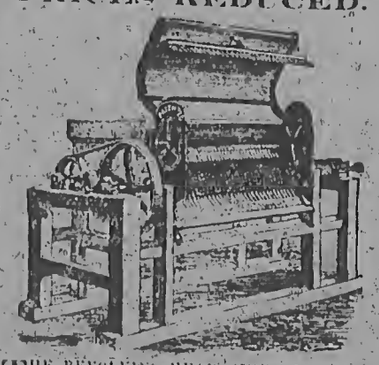
"That's the reason I didn't save any of my nine millions," mournfully confessed the ex-president of the New York Central railroad.

"They squeezed four millions out of me in one dicker, and then I had to use heroic means to protect myself. Then they squeezed me again, and I soon found myself down to a paltry million. I gave up fighting back a-hum, and went to operating, but when they get after a man they never let up on him till they have crushed him, and that's what they did to me; they found out what I was doing, drove the market against me, and took away every dollar."

HOW SYDNEY SMITH WORKED.—He spent much time in reading and composition; his facility was threatening; I hardly remember seeing him unoccupied, but when engaged in conversation. He never considered his education as finished; he had always some object in hand to investigate. He read with great rapidity. I think it was said of Johnson, "Look at Johnson tearing out the bowels of his book." It might be said of my father, that he was running off with their contents; for he gulped through the pages so rapidly that we often laughed at him when he shut up a thick quarto as his morning's work, and said he meant he had looked at it, not read it. "Cross examine me, then," and we generally found he knew all that was worth knowing in it; though I do not think he had a very retentive memory. The same peculiarity characterized his compositions; when he had any subject in hand, he was indefatigable in reading, searching, inquiring, seeking every source of information, and discussing it with any man of sense or cultivation who crossed his path. But having once mastered it, he would sit down, and you might see him committing his ideas to paper with the same rapidity that they flowed out in his conversation; no hesitation, no pauses, no stopping to consider and round his periods, no writing for effect, but a pouring out of the fulness of his mind and feelings; for he was heart and soul in whatever he undertook. One could see by his countenance how much he was interested or amused as fresh images came clustering around his pen; he hardly ever altered or corrected what he had written (as I find by many manuscripts I have of his); indeed, he was so impatient of this that he could hardly bear the trouble of even looking over what he had written, but would not, unfrequently throw the manuscript down on the table as soon as finished, and say: "There, it is done; now I can do look it over, and put in dots to the i's and strokes to the t's" and he would sally forth to his morning's walk.—From his Memoirs, by Lady Holland.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MILD POWER CURES.—



HUMPHREYS' HOMEOPATHIC SPECIFICS.

In use 31 years.—Each number the special prescription of an eminent physician.—The only Simple Safe and Sure Medicines for the people.

LIST PRINCIPAL NOS.	CURES.	PRICE.
1.	Fevers, congestion, inflamations,	.50
2.	Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	.50
3.	Crying Colic, or Teething of Infants	.50
4.	Diarrhea of Children or Adults	.50
5.	Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	.50
6.	Cholera Morbus, Vomiting,	.50
7.	Coughs, Cold, Bronchitis,	.50
8.	Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache,	.50
9.	Headaches, Sick Headaches, Vertigo	.50
10.	Dyspepsia, Biliousness,	.50
11.	Suppressed or Painful Periods,	.50
12.	Whites, too Profuse Periods,	.50
13.	Croup, Cough, Difficult Breathing,	.50
14.	Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Eruptions,	.50
15.	Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains,	.50
16.	Fever and Ague, Chill, Fever, Ague	.50
17.	Piles, Blind or Bleeding,	.50
19.	Catarrh, Acute or chronic, Influenza	.50
20.	Whooping Cough, violent coughs,	.50
24.	General Debility, Physical Weakness,	.50
27.	Kidney Disease,	.50
28.	Nervous Debility,	1.00
30.	Urinary Weakness, wetting the bed	.50
32.	Disease of the Heart, Palpitation,	1.00

Sold by druggists, or sent by the case, or single Vial, free of charge, on receipt of price. Send for Dr. Humphreys' Book on Diseases &c. (144 pages), also Illustrated Catalogue FREE. Address, Humphreys' Homeopathic Medicine Co., 109 Fulton Street, New York.

JOS. B. WOLFE & CO.,
Cotton Factors,
59 Carondelet, Street, New Orleans,
And General Agents for
DANIEL PRATT IMPROVED
"Revolving Head Cotton Gin,"
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873,
—AND—
Eclipse Hulling Cotton Gin,
WITH REVOLVING HEAD.
PRICES REDUCED.

THE REVOLVING HEAD GIN has been in use for the past eight seasons, and several improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking and gives a larger yield of lint from the same quantity of seed cotton than any other gin in use. The Revolving Head, lightens the draft and causes the gin to run faster with less ginning power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while conserving so much of animal power, than any other gin. The seed being ginned very short, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton, on this account, of a greater market value. This improved value given in length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every 100 bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

SELF FEEDERS and CONDENSERS with latest improvements also made by the Daniel Pratt Gin Company to work with their Gins. Send for descriptive circulars. JOS. B. WOLFE & CO., New Orleans, La.

SULLIVAN & BULGER,
97 CAMP STREET.
Plumbers and Gas Fitters,
DEALERS IN
Pumps and Gas Fixtures of all Kinds, Iron, Lead and Terra-cotta Pipe, Bath Tubs, Sheet Lead and Cooking Ranges, also Agents for Crandall's Gas Machines for country use.
All Orders Promptly Attended to.

CHURCH AND SCHOOL BELLS.
SIZES AND PRICES

Diam. of Bell.	Weight.	Cost with Rube & frame.	Cost of Bell & Hangs.
No. 1	250 lb.	$ 25 00
No. 2	275 lb.	340 lbs	36 00
No. 3	300 lb.	490 lbs	50 50
No. 4	400	730 lbs	75 00
No. 5	850 lb.	925 lbs	130 00

RUMSEY & CO.
Seneca Falls, N. Y., U. S. A.

YOUNG MEN'S
Christian Association,
OF NEW ORLEANS.
ROOMS, 87 CAMP STREET.
Open from 9 A. M. to 10 P. M., except Sunday, and on Sundays from 2 to 8 P. M., where may be found the leading daily and weekly papers of the most important cities of the United States.
SERVICES.
Tuesday, 7:30 P. M.—Devotional.
Thursday, 7:30 P. M.—Singing Class.
NOON-DAY PRAYER-MEETING
Daily, 12 to 12:30.
Kids.—Prayers and Remarks are the Cat & three minutes.

H. DUDLEY COLEMAN & BRO.
No. 12 Union St. New Orleans La.
DEALERS IN
MACHINERY
SEND FOR CIRCULAR
COMPARE OUR PRICES
MILL STONES,
IRONS & PORTABLE
STEAM ENGINES.
MAKE FLOUR CORN SAW AND COTTON PRESSES
MILLS

1000 AGENTS WANTED!
One in each town and neighborhood in Mississippi and Louisiana, to sell
Dr. Dutton's Vegetable Discovery.
It is sold only by certified agents.
It is the best BLOOD AND LIVER Medicine we ever used. Write for terms. It will pay you.
J. L. FITTRELL, General Agent,
Jonesboro, Miss.

All Farmers, Mothers, Business Men, teachers and mechanics, who are tired out by constant toil and worry, and all who are miserable with Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sleeplessness, or with Bowel, Kidney or Liver Complaints, you can be invigorated and cured by using
PARKER'S GINGER TONIC
If you are wasting away with Consumption, Disease Weakness, dissipation or any sickness that have pimples, and your blood needs purifying you will find PARKER'S GINGER TONIC the Best Health & Strength Restorer you can use, and far superior to Bitters, and other Tonics, as it builds up the system, but never intoxicates. It Has Saved Hundreds of Lives; and May Save Yours.
Buy a 50 ct. bottle and be sure the signature of Hiscox & Co., N. Y., is on outside wrapper.
PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM Restores Dandruff. Elegantly Perfumed. Restores Color. Prevents Baldness.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT:

OFFICE: CORNER CARONDELET AND GRAVIER STREETS.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

Fire assets, excluding paid-up capital,	$9,881,126 21
Paid-up capital	1,228,200 00
Total fire assets,	$11,109,326 21
Fire liabilities	3,941,358 23
Making the surplus for policy-holders,	$7,165,267 98

Losses by Chicago Fire in 1871, $3,239,001
Losses by Boston Fire in 1872 $1,628,722

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city, thus placing the Company on an even footing with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS
J. F. SCHRODER, Esq., Chairman, of Leopold Christ & Co.
NEWTON BUCKNER, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERRY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Lallande.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson and Simpson.
HENRY V. OGDEN, Resident Secretary.
JULES PROUX, Ass't Resident Secretary.
NEW ORLEANS October 20, 1880.

25,000 SOLD!
FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S
—MANUAL—
Edited by GEO. E. WARING, Jr.,
Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

500 Octavo Pages—Over 200 Illustrations.
Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer
$25 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures, assured analysis and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of solid fruit and enduring values, and of universal application and use. This work is offered as containing more that has been proven by long use to be of value, more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more of promising novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be compiled, and, in addition to this, it is sufficiently suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, in Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $2 50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address
G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at
JOHN GAUCHE'S
MAMMOTH
QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 100 pieces, for $12.

ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $16.

REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.

ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3 50.

ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.

ENGLISH CHINA GOLD BAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $5 50.

THE BEST SELECTION OF
CROCKERY
Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods
OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

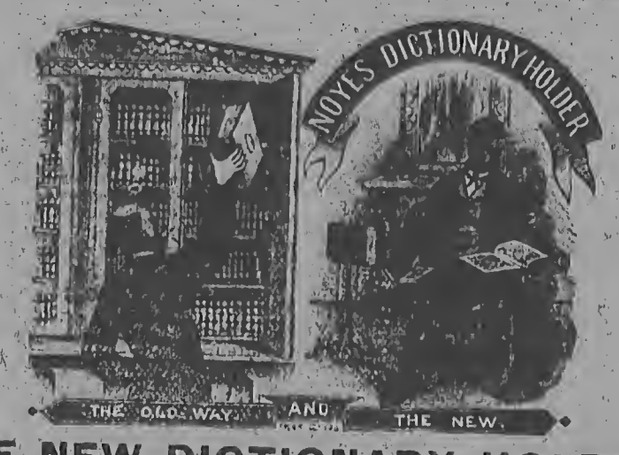
The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.

REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS
JOHN GAUCHE,
AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,
109, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street,
Branch House, Nos. 108 and 110 Chartres Street.

LIGHT AND LIFE!
Now look out for a rousing good new
SUNDAY SCHOOL SONG BOOK
with the above title. The compiler, Mr. R. M. McIntosh, is well known to hundreds of thousands as one of the most successful providers of sweet melodies and right hymns for the great Sunday-School public. Our best writers and composers have contributed. The book has a beautiful title, is well printed, and in every way desirable. Send for specimen pages (free,) or specimen copy, which is mailed for the retail price, 35 cents.

Also just published, The Beacon Light, (30 cts.) by TENNEY and HAFFMAN. And nearly ready a new book by ABBEY and MUNGER, making a trio of Sunday School books that cannot be excelled.

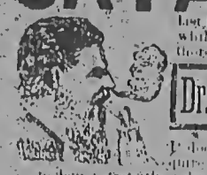
OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.
C. H. DITSON & CO.,
843 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.



AGENTS WANTED, to sell Dr. CHASE'S 2000 RECIPE BOOK. Sells at Sight. You double your money. Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

MENEELYS' BELLS.
For Churches, etc., known to the public since 1826, are made only at "THE MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY," WEST TROY, N. Y. Catalogues free.

MISCELLANEOUS.

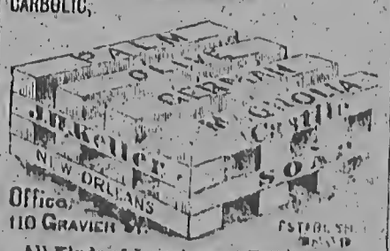


D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street, 15 Bourbon Street.
Our Stock of Spring Goods is now complete, consisting of the latest novelties in
Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales.
HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.
SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE.
D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street, New Orleans.

WHEELER & PIERSON,
(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Dekes.)
CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,
Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.
Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40 | Business Suits, $12 to $25
6 Shirts for $9 | Collars, $1.50 per Dozen.
Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.
Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.
Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department up stairs.

THE NEW DICTIONARY HOLDER.
These holders are so arranged that they press the book firmly together when it is closed; in short the Dictionary-Holder is perfected in form, finish and operation, and will be found one of the most elegant and desirable articles for schools, literary or professional reference and library use. Every one who uses a dictionary should have one of these patent holders, and have the unwieldy unabridged ready for reference. Place the dictionary in the holder and keep it there. There is no more occasion to take it out of the holder than out of its binding. Children and grown people refer to dictionaries if mounted in one of these holders and the book does not become racked, soiled and spoiled. You have but to open the book and it remains open close, if and it remains closed. If placed by your side when reading or writing, the task of looking up words how enough if can sit and has received unlimited praise from clergymen, and teachers, and all others who have used it. The Unabridged Dictionary, either of Worcester or Webster, fits in the holder exactly.
Price finished in laret or black Japan, $2 00
" white or nickle wash, 3 00
Address G. T. LATHROP, Agent for the Southwest, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

CATARRH Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects are corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, nasal deformities, and finally consumption. From first to last it is ever aggressive. Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. If neglected while a cure is possible, it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, successful and pleasant treatment is

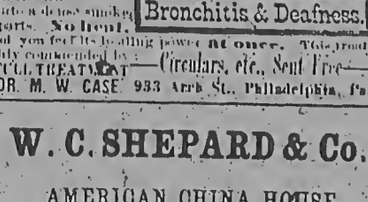


Dr. M. W. CASE'S CARBOLATE of TAR INHALANT
It does not only relieve, but cures, as thousands will testify. It does away with the use of drugs, as it is known to contain the virtues of Carbolate of Tar, the most healing agent known to science. Balsams and Cordials of the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with the Tree Tar that the mere breathing converts them into a dense smoke, which, when inhaled, takes right to the diseased parts. No Heat, no hot water, simply inhaling or breathing it, and you feel its healing power at once. This treatment is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended to those who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FULL TREATMENT, Circulars, etc., Sent Free, with satisfaction Always Guaranteed. Address, DR. M. W. CASE, 933 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.
FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, Bronchitis & Deafness.

WATCHES.
LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upward
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $45 and upward
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward
BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward
All guaranteed.
A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.,
Cor. Canal and Royal Sts.

HOW TO PAINT.
A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain common-sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes
Every Man His Own Painter.
Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, glue, pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—
Paint for Out-Buildings,
Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining brick, maple, rosewood, black walnut staining, decalcomanie, marking rustic pictures, painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture waxing furniture, cleaning paint—
Paint for Farming Tools,
and for machinery, and household fixtures.
To Paint a Farm Wagon,
to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.
The work is neatly printed, with illustrations wherever they can serve to make the subject plainer, and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.
Price by mail, post paid, 50c.
G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

Good News! Good News!
Mammoth Furniture House
OF
McCRACKEN & BREWSTER,
33 & 35 Royal Street,
Now have the largest stock of Fine and Medium Chamber Sets, Ebony Gilt and Walnut Parlor Sets, Dining-Room and Hall Furniture to be found in the South. Also a large and various stock of cheap and durable Furniture suitable for the country trade.
THONET BROS., VIENNA,
BENT WOOD FURNITURE
Our motto—small profits and quick returns.
McCRACKEN & BREWSTER.



J. H. KELLER,
MANUFACTURER OF
CARBOLIC,

Office, 110 GRAVIER ST. ESTABLISHED 1870
All Kinds of Laundry and Toilet Soaps.
Send for Circular.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co.,
AMERICAN CHINA HOUSE,
49 Camp Street, New Orleans
We append a few prices
The American China Dinner, Breakfast and Tea Set, comprising 100 Pieces, for $12.
A Real French China Dinner Set, 115 Pieces, for $17.
English Stone China Dinner Set, 121 Pieces, for $16.
English Stone China Chamber Set, comprising 10 Pieces, for $2 50.
Decorated Chamber Sets, with Different Colored Bands, 10 Pieces, for $3 50.
Glass Goblets, from 60 cents to $1 per dozen.
Particular attention given to Specialties and Special Lots pertaining to the House-Furnishing Department. Orders promptly attended to. We have just received a full and complete stock of holiday goods. Call and examine before purchasing.
W. C. SHEPARD & CO.

BUCK'S IMPROVED
BUCK'S
BRILLIANT STOVES

BRILLIANT STOVE
Is acknowledged to be the
Best Cook-Stove Made.
SOLD BY
H. HALLER,
NEW ORLEANS.
DEALER IN ALL KINDS OF
Cooking and Heating Stoves of the most Improved makes, Stamped, Plain and Japanned Tin-ware, Turned and Enameled Hollow-ware, Iron and Clay Furnaces, Tinner's Stock, Granite Iron-ware, Lamp Burner, and Wick to suit, Tinned Iron Spoons Forks, Coffee Mills of all kinds, Planished-ware, Irons, Fire-Grates, Fluting Machines, etc.
H. HALLER,
No. 55 Camp St., New Orleans
Price-lists mailed on application.

GRATEFUL COMFORTING.
EPPS'S COCOA.
BREAKFAST.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.
Made simply with boiling water or milk.
Sold only in tins (¼, ½ and 1) labelled
JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, London, England.
Also makers of Epps' Chocolate Essence for afternoon use.

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, June 13, 1881.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	Thursday.	Sat
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	6⅛	6⅛
Ordinary	7⅜	7⅜
Good ordinary	8	8
Low middling	9⅛	9⅛
Middling	10⅛	10⅛
Good middling	11¼	11¼
Middling fair	12	12
Sales to-day		500 bales.
Receipts since our last		2,884 bales.
Receipts previously		1,522,019 bales.
Sugar, ₱ lb.:
Fair	—	8
Fully fair	8⅛	8⅛
Prime	—	8⅜
Choice	8⅝	8⅝
Yellow clarified	9	9⅜
White clarified	9⅝	10⅛
Powdered	—	—
Crushed	—	—
Molasses, in bbls., ₱ gallon:
Common	20	23
Fair	26	27
Prime	35	40
Choice	—	—
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common	3½	4
Fair	4¾	4⅞
Prime	5¾	6
Choice	—	—

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western	23	25
New York	—	—
Coffee, ₱ lb.:
Rio, ordinary	9¼	9⅝
Rio, fair	10¼	11¼
Rio, prime	12⅝	12⅝
Cheese, ₱ lb.:
Western factory	—	—
English dairy	—	—
Candles, ₱ lb.:
Best brands	—	11½
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl
Choice K. D	3 30	3 50
Flour, ₱ bbl.:
Superfine	3 00	—
XX	4 25	4 50
XXX	5 00	5 25
Choice XXX	5 90	6 15
Choice family	—	—
Fish:
Mackerel, No 1, in bbls	—	6 75
Half barrels	—	3 75
Kits	—	75
Mackerel, No 2 in bbls	—	5 75
Half bbls	—	3 15
Kits	—	70
Mackerel, No. 3, in bbls	5 00	5 75
Half bbls	—	2 90
Kits	60	—
Codfish, ₱ lb	—	4½
Herring, ₱ box	25	28
Oils, ₱ gallon:
Coal, in cases	—	—
Coal, in bbls	—	—
Linseed, raw	55	58
Linseed, boiled	58	60
Cotton seed	31	38
Lard	75	85
Soap, ₱ box:
Magnolia	—	2 10
Olive	—	2 50
Palm	—	—
Castile	—	2 75
Soda, ₱ lb	—	—
Starch, ₱ lb	—	3
Salt, ₱ sack:
Coarse	—	92½
Fine	—	1 35

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow	—	60
White	62	63
Mixed	61	62
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western	—	—
Red rust-proof	—	45
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs.
Choice	—	75
Hay, ₱ ton:
Prime	18 00	19 00
Choice	20 00	21 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel:
Mixed	—	2 80
Clay	—	2 90

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb.:
Breakfast	—	10¾
Shoulders	—	7
Sides, clear rib	—	9½
Sides, clear	—	9¾
Hams, sugar-cured	16	17½
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl	—	17 50
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb.:
Clear rib sides	—	—
Clear sides	—	—
Shoulders	—	6½
Lard, ₱ lb.:
Choice, in kegs	—	11¾
Choice, in tierces	11¼	11¾

ESCULENTS.

Potatoes, ₱ bbl.:
Irish	1 75	2 85
Sweet	—	2 00
Onions, ₱ bbl	4 00	5 50
Apples, ₱ bbl.	—	—
Cabbages, ₱ box	—	—
Sour Krout, ₱ bbl	—	—

BALING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard:
India	—	—
Jute	—	—
Baling Twine, ₱ lb	—	17
Ties, ₱ bundle:
30 ties and buckles	—	1 65

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ dozen:
Grown chickens	—	5 00
Young do	1 50	3 00
Ducks	1 50	3 00
Geese	4 00	5 00
Turkeys	10 00	12 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen:
Western	15	17
Southern	16	17½
Honey:
Strained, ₱ gallon	—	—
Comb, ₱ lb	—	—
Pecans, ₱ lb.:
Louisiana	—	—
Texas	9	12
Oranges:
Louisiana, ₱ bbl	—	—
Foreign, ₱ box	4 00	5 00
Wool, ₱ lb.:
Louisiana	24	25
Texas	—	—
Feathers, ₱ lb.:
Geese	—	—
Hides, ₱ lb.:
Country green	—	8
Dry salted	10½	11
Dry flint	12	12½
Ox Horns, each	—	6
Tallow, ₱ lb	5½	6½
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton.
In sacks	—	—
Meal	27 00	29 00
Oil cake	—	—
Cooperage, ₱ each:
Sugar hogsheads	3 00	3 25
Molasses barrels	1 30	1 55
Half barrels	—	1 05
Kegs	—	70
Oak Staves, per 1200:
Kegs	—	—
Barrels	—	—
Extra claret	95 00	100 00
Extra hogshead	135 00	140 00
Extra pipes	355 00	180 00
Tobacco:
Low lugs	—	4½
Medium	—	—
Good to fine	—	—
Low leaf	5½	5½
Medium	6½	7
Good	7½	8
Fine	7½	8
Selections	10	12

—A Springfield minister remarked, just before the sermon: "I should like to remind the congregation that we have a prayer meeting at the chapel every Thursday evening regardless of the weather. Those of us who were there last week were led to feel that there must be scarcity of umbrellas among the people as a whole."

There is More Strength
restoring power in a 50 cent bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic than in a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body. See other column.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

BOSTON, June 7.—Advices from various points in New England tell of heavy frosts, cold weather and destruction to young crops, a thing unusual at this time of the year. At Portsmouth, Contoocook, Hanover, Plymouth and Ossipee, N. H., the weather was specially severe, and the thermometer at 34°. In Maine and Vermont the frosts were not so destructive.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., June 7.—There were heavy frosts last night along the western division of the Erie Railroad. Much damage is said to have been done to crops.

DALLAS, June 8.—The President and attorney of the Chicago, Texas and Mexican Central returned to-day from Galveston, where they consummated the union of interests with the Galveston syndicate owning the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe.

These roads will connect at Cleburne, Johnston county, and reciprocal running arrangements have been made whereby Dallas secures another route to the sea coast, and Galveston an outlet north via Dallas, Paris and Fort Smith.

At the latter place connection will be made with St. Louis and San Francisco, which road, and the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, are to complete the new trunk line from Mexico and Texas to Chicago.

The State Prohibition Convention met here to-day. Twenty-eight prominent counties were represented by seventy delegates, mostly farmers and preachers, who are preparing for a grand crusade at the polls—a movement which has an ominous outlook for the political welfare of the Texas Democracy. Whether Prohibition prevails in the next Democratic State Convention or not, the agricultural communities are dead-set against the towns on this perplexing question.

LITTLE ROCK, June 9.—A special to the Gazette from Morrilton, this State says: On the 25th of May, L. T. Harris, County Judge, of Perry county, and John L. Matthews, editor of the Fourche Valley Times received notice through the Perryville Post Office to leave the county within fifteen days or suffer the penalty of death at the hands of the regular organized Ku-Klux.

The fifteen days expired yesterday, and a message just received here from Perryville reports that a body of armed men arrived in town at 1 o'clock this morning, and inquired for Matthews and Harris, who had prudently left town the day before.

The affair rose out of prosecutions inaugurated by Judge Harris, the proceedings of which were published by Matthews. The same parties are supposed to have fired the Times office on May 30.

Judge Harris is here and says he has sufficient evidence to identify the author of the notice. He leaves for the capital this evening to ask aid of Gov. Churchill in prosecuting the offenders and preserving the peace.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., June 13.—Rev. John F. Adams, of Greenland, believed to be the oldest ordained minister in New England, sixty-nine years a preacher of the gospel, is dead.

GALVESTON, June 13.—A special to the News from Palestine says: Capt. R. S. Hayes was to-day elected First Vice President of both the Missouri, Kansas and Texas, and the Texas Pacific Roads, vice Mr. Bond, resigned.

BURLINGTON, Vt., June 13.—$50,000 have been donated to the University of Vermont by John P. Howard, of this city, the income to be applied to the Howard professorship of natural history.

FOREIGN.

PARIS, June 7.—Henri Vieuxtemps, the celebrated Belgian violinist, is dead.

QUEBEC, June 10.—Thousands of people have swarmed through the streets of the burned district yesterday and to-day, and piles of furniture and household effects lying on pavements have been plundered in the most shameful manner. Fortunately the sufferings of those homeless are not so great as to call for special outside assistance. Most of the sufferers are a better class of people, such as clerks, book-keepers, etc., and their losses although heavy, are not seriously so.

CHIO, June 11.—Renewed shocks of earthquake in this island to-day overthrew the minaret and several ruined houses. Two men were injured.

GENEVA, June 11.—A very perceptible earthquake shock in the valley of upper Rhone, on Thursday, extended as far as this city.

ROME, June 12.—The government has received news confirming the report of the massacre of the Italian exploring party in Africa. The victims are a lieutenant and twelve sailors who landed at Assab on a mission from the Italian government.

The New Orleans Picayune of June 11, says:

It was ascertained yesterday that the Magginnis cotton mill, to be erected in the First District, would have a larger capacity than was at first determined on. The company has concluded to increase the number of spindles from 10,000 to 16,000. It is thought that fully 400 operatives will be employed, of whom a large number will be women.

It is gratifying to observe that much encouragement has latterly been given here to the feminine sex in the way of paying occupations. Mr. Hernsheim states that he employs over 250 women in his tobacco factory, and intends to increase the number. He finds that they are expert cigar-makers, and, as they do not use the weed, no tobacco is abstracted, as often happens with male employes. The saving in this respect is very considerable.

The reporter paid a visit to the office of the Bradstreets, No. 33 Camp street, where he found about a score of female clerks busily at work. Mr. Wilcox, the manager, stated that he has employed women in his office since February, and is much pleased with the way in which they conduct themselves. When he advertised for women he received about 500 applications, many of them belonging to some of the best families in the city. The women employed are all persons of good education and excellent character.

The business of the office is to collect information relative to the credit and estimated worth of merchants, manufacturers and banks. A large portion of the Southern States is comprised in the district, and the correspondence and copying work of the office is very extensive. Mr. Wilcox has discovered in his clerks considerable aptitude for the duties assigned to them, and finds that they exercise excellent judgment in dealing with business matters. They are more punctual and regular than young male clerks.

Speaking with Mr. Kreeger, of Canal street, the latter said he had for years employed women in his establishment, and was entirely satisfied with the result of his experiment. He did not believe in keeping clerks standing up all the time, and provided his employes with seats behind the counters. It was also a rule of his to allow them to go home whenever they could be spared.

The Woman's Industrial Branch of the Art Union, and the Christian Women's Exchange, are doing much to assist those of their sex who desire to be self-supporting. The former has organized a school of instruction in artistic work, as etching, drawing, decoration of porcelain, embroidery, sewing and similar branches of handicraft.

The Government Chemist's Report on Baking Powders.

To the Editor of the Christian Advocate.

The recent publication of the report, giving the comparative merits of various Baking Powders, according to tests made by the Government Chemist, has induced some of the manufacturers of brands, whose inferiority was thus brought to light, to resort to various means and publications, in order to rid themselves of the results of that unfavorable exposition of their inferiority.

That the public may fully understand the matter, and to avoid any misconception arising out of statements of our competitors, seeking to break the force of the report, I herewith subjoin the main part of the report, in which the comparitive values are correctly given.

Dr. Love's tests were made to determine what brands are the most economical to use. And as their capacity lies in their leavening power, tests were directed solely to ascertain the available gas of each powder.

Name of the Baking Powders.	Available Gas, Cubic inches, per each oz. Powder.	Comparative Worth per pound.
"Royal" (cream tartar powder)	127.1	50 cts.
"Rumford's" (phosphate) fresh	122.5	48 cts.
"Rumford's" (phosphate) old	32.7	13 cts.
"Hanford's Nine each"	121.6	47¾ cts.
"Red Head's"	117.9	46 cts.
"Phirin" (alum powder)	116.9	—
"Amazon" (alum powder)	111.9	—
"Cleveland's" (short weight ¾ oz)	110.8	44 cts.
"Czar"	106.8	42 cts.
"Dr. Price's Cream"	102.6	40 cts.
"Lewis's" condensed	98.2	38½ cts.
"Congress" yeast	97.5	38 cts.
"Andrew's Pearl"	93.2	36¾ cts.
"Hecker's Perfect"	92.5	36 cts.
"Milk Powder"	80.5	30 cts.

The Government Chemist also adds: "I regard all alum powders as very unwholesome. Phosphate and tartaric acid powders liberate their gas too freely in process of baking, or under varying climatic changes suffer deterioration."

It is proper to state that all the powders examined were from the open market, and that the original labels were in every case broken by Dr. Love himself. He also informs me that he, himself, purchased the can of Royal Baking Powder at the store of Park & Tilford.

I have only to add, that for 20 years the Royal Baking Powder has been before the public, and it is to-day the standard for purity and excellence throughout the world. Because of its intrinsic merit, and by virtue of honorable enterprise, the Royal Baking Powder has taken this rank, and I am therefore not surprised to find adventurers in the business anxious to assume their preparations to be its equal.

J. C. HOAGLAND,
President Royal Baking Powder Company.
NEW YORK, June 4, 1881.

Summer School of Christian Philosophy.

REV. CHAS. M. DEEMS, D. D., LL. D., DEAN,
REV. AMORY H. BRADFORD, SECRETARY,
Warwick Woodlands, Greenwood Lake, Orange County, New York, July 12-22, 1881.

SYLLABUS OF LECTURES FOR THE YEAR 1881.

Tuesday, July 12.—Rev. Chas. F. Deems, D.D., LL. D. Subject, "The Cry of Conflict."

Wednesday, July 13.—President Noah Porter, of Yale College. Subject, "What we mean by Christian Philosophy."

Thursday, July 14.—Prof. B. P. Bowne, of the Boston University. Subject, "The Theistic Basis of Science and Philosophy."

Friday, July 15.—Rev. Thos. Guard, of Baltimore. Subject, "The Analogies existing between Nature and Revelation."

Saturday, July 16.—Prof. C. A. Young, Prof. of Astronomy, Princeton College. Subject, "Astronomical Facts for Philosophical Thinkers."

Sunday, July 17.—Sermon by Rev. Amory Bradford. Subject, "Conditions of Spiritual Sight." Matt. v. 5.

Monday, July 18.—Prof. Alexander Winchell, University of Michigan. Subject, "The Philosophical Consequences of Evolution."

Tuesday, July 19.—The Rev. Lyman Abbott, D. D. Subject, "Foundations of Christian Belief."

Wednesday, July 20.—Rev. J. H. McIlvaine, D. D. Subject, "Science and Revelation."

Thursday, July 21.—Prof. B. N. Martin, University of New York. Subject, "Recent Physical Theories, in their Bearing on Teleology."

Friday, July 22.—President John Bascom, University of Wisconsin. Subject, "The Gains and Losses of Faith from Science."

Greenwood Lake is partly in New Jersey and partly in New York; and is one of the most beautiful Summer Resorts in the Middle States. It is distant by rail, from New York City, forty-two miles. It may be reached by New York and Greenwood Lake Railroad; Erie Stations; and by Stage from Monroe on the Erie Railroad (nine miles). Special Excursion rates for the Summer School will be arranged and announced hereafter.

The following is a list of Hotels at the Lake: Brandon House, Windermere Hotel, Traphagen House, Hazen House, Brainer House, Lakeside House, Brown's Hotel, Zindell's Hotel, Watersions College, Sadharian, Greenwood Lake Association Club House.

The usual rates for board at these places vary from eight dollars a week to three dollars a day.

Those intending to be present through the School should apply for rooms at once.

Persons desirous of having tents for the term of the School, or longer, furnished or unfurnished, with board or without, can secure them on reasonable terms. Terms, Ticket for one day, $1; Ticket for the course, $5.

All Lectures will commence at 11 o'clock, A.M. They will be followed in the afternoon by a conversazione on the subject of the morning, conducted by the Lecturer.

Trains from New York each day in time for the Lecture; and for New York after the afternoon Exercise.

For full information on all points connected with the Summer School, address,

JAMES B. MYN,
7 Cortlandt Street, New York.

CAMP MEETINGS.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS CAMP MEETING.—The Camp Meeting at Bonnington Camp Ground, one mile from Crystal Springs, Mississippi, will begin August 1, and continue one week. Rev. H. F. Johnson, D. D. will have charge of the services.

J. Y. ENOCHS, Secretary.

The camp meeting at William's Camp Ground, Pensacola District, will commence Thursday night, June 30. Friends who make subscriptions for the benefit of the camp ground last year will please pay their subscriptions as soon as possible, as it is greatly needed. Those good sisters who promised comforters for the preachers' tents will please bring them along when they come to the camp meeting. Preachers are cordially invited to be with us; provision has been made for their entertainment.

The grounds have been improved, a new hotel built, and other provisions for the comfort of visitors made.

S. B. COX.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

NOTICE.—The Woodville District Conference will be held in Amite City, July 28 to 31, inclusive. Sunday School Institute will hold its annual session on the third day of the Conference, Saturday, at 10 o'clock, A. M., as a part of Conference business. Pastors will please have their reports in writing, upon subjects indicated in the Discipline, pp. 53, 54.

We would suggest that the report on Item 3 (schools) be separate; they will be called for on Saturday of the session. Brethren will have their Quarterly Conference Journals at Conference for inspection. Public preaching each day of the session, at 11 A. M. and 7½ P. M.

Annual Sermon to the Conference on Thursday night by Rev. I. B. Robertson, of Clinton, La.

22 JAS. A. GODBEY, P. E.

The Brandon District Conference will meet at Forrest, June 30, at 9 A. M., and continue to July 3. Rev. G. Bancroft will preach the opening sermon. I hope pastors will have written reports.

22 JAS. M. GANN, P. E.

The District Conference for Williamsburg District, Mississippi Conference, will convene at Columbia, on Friday, July 1, 1881, at 9 o'clock, A. M.

D. A. LITTLE, P. E.

Quarterly Conferences.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MONTGOMERY DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Auburn station	June 18, 19
Tallassee station	25, 26
Huntsville circuit, at Amlech	July 2, 3
Salem circuit, at Lebanon	9, 10
Elmore circuit, at Loretta Chapel	16, 17
Crawford circuit, at Mt. Zion	30, 31
Tuskegee circuit at Union	Aug. 6, 7
Dadeville circuit, at Gold Hill	13, 14
Franklin mission, at Camp Ground	20, 21
Tallapoosa circuit, at Centerport	27, 28
Tuskegee station	Sep. 3, 4
Montgomery station	10, 11
Ogelika station	17, 18

The District Conference will meet at Notasulga, July 21, at nine o'clock A. M. The introductory sermon, by Rev. J. R. Penry, at eleven o'clock A. M.

The Recording Stewards will please send the names of delegates and members to Rev. M. P. Dickinson, Loachapoka, Ala., as early as practicable.

22 T. F. MANGUM, P. E.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

SHREVEPORT DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Logansport, at Salem Chapel	July 23, 24
Mooringsport, at Pine Hills	27
North Bossier, at Collinsburg	30, 31
South Bossier, at Cotton Valley	Aug. 3
Shreveport	6, 7
Caddo circuit, at Cypress Camp Ground	13, 14
Mansfield	20, 21
Coushatta	27, 28
Springville	Sep. 3, 4
Natchitoches	10, 11
Natchitoches circuit	11
Aspasco	17, 18
Many	24
Pleasant Hill	24, 25

22 T. H. MCLENDON, P. E.

PENSACOLA DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Pensacola	June 4, 5
Warrington	5, 6
Millview	11, 12
Pollard	18, 19
Milton	25, 26
Powelton	July 2, 3
Perdido	9
Stockton	9, 10
Yellow River	16, 17
Georgiana	23, 24
Evergreen	30, 31
Gravella	30, 31
Monroeville	Aug. 6, 7
Monterey	13, 14
Sepulga	20, 21

23 S. B. COX, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WILLIAMSBURG DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Enon circuit, at Augusta	July 9, 10
Chickasahay mission, at Washington	16, 17
Williamsburg, at Williamsburg	23, 24
Westville circuit, at Westville	Aug. 6, 7
Mt. Carmel circuit, at Santee	13, 14
Bethel circuit, at Ocohay	20, 21
Spring Cottage, at ——	Sep. 3, 4
China Grove, at ——	10, 11
Red Creek, at Rose's School House	17, 18

24 D. A. LITTLE, P. E.

VICKSBURG DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Vicksburg	July 2, 3
Mt. Olivet and Sunflower mission, at Shifton	9, 10
Rolling Fork	16, 17
Glover Hill	23, 24
Warren circuit, at Redgone	30, 31
Port Gibson and Martin	Aug. 6, 7
Rocky Springs	13, 14
Canan, at Bear Creek	20, 21
Fayette, Cane Ridge	27, 28
Meadville	Sep. 3, 4
Kingston	10, 11
Natchez	17, 18

24 JOHN A. ELLIS, P. E.

BROOKHAVEN DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

McComb and Summit, at McComb	June 11, 12
Hazlehurst station	18, 19
Brookhaven and Wesson, at Brookhaven, 8 P. M.	30
Adams and Bogue Chitto, at Ebenezer	July 2, 3
Brandywine, at Brandywine	9, 10
Bayou Pierre, at Tabernacle	23, 24
Semland, at Caseyville	30, 31
Crystal Springs, 3 P. M.	Aug. 8
Spring Ridge, at Forrest Hill	13, 14
Beauregard, at Providence	20, 21
Magnolia, at Topisaw	27, 28
Georgetown, at Georgetown	Sep. 3, 4

The District Conference will meet at Caseyville, fifteen miles west of Brookhaven, Thursday, July 28. The opening sermon will be preached at eleven o'clock, Thursday, by Rev. W. H. Leib.

Those who can do so will please go in their private conveyances. Others will have conveyances furnished them from Brookhaven, without charge, if they will give to Mr. David McCree, Caseyville, Miss., a week's notice of their intention to attend. All delegates who expect to attend will please notify Rev. H. R. Caldwell, Caseyville, Miss.

The Recording Stewards will bring their records with them, or send them.

Bishop Kreiger has been invited to preside.

22 H. F. JOHNSON, P. E.

BRANDON DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Marvin circuit, at Harrisville	July 9, 10
Brandon station	16, 17
Pascola circuit, at Bethlehem	23, 24
Ludlow mission	27
Lake circuit, at Camp Ground	30, 31
Cato circuit, at Mt. Hebron	Aug. 6, 7
Trenton circuit, at Camp Ground	13, 14
Raleigh circuit	20, 21
Newton circuit	27, 28
Beech Springs	Sep. 3, 4
Mt. Hebron mission, at Spring Chapel	8
Philadelphia circuit, at Mars Hill	10, 11
Walnut Grove circuit	17, 18
Carthage circuit	24, 25
Forest circuit	Oct. 1, 2

22 J. M. GANN, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

WANTED. A SITUATION AS TEACHER, by a married gentleman, an A. M. graduate of a leading university of the South, and for five years a professor in that institution. He is competent to teach the usual English branches, the Latin, Greek, French and German Languages, the higher Mathematics, Chemistry and Natural Philosophy, Book-Keeping and Penmanship. Speaks English and German. Has had nine years experience in teaching. Is a member of the M. E. Church, South. Best references given, if desired. Address Postoffice Box 112, Mobile, Alabama.

CALL ATTENTION OF THE PUBLIC IS CALLED to the Greenwich Manufacturing Co.'s Ready Cleaner of New York, a very useful article for all house cleaning, scouring and polishing purposes. For sale in 10 cent packages by grocers. To the trade by T. APCAMILL, Agent, 88 Thompkinsville Street, New Orleans.

WANTED.—BY A YOUNG LADY OF EXperience, a position as teacher of the English Branches, in a family or school. Address TEACHER, this office.

WANTED.—A FEMALE TEACHER, COMpetent to teach Music, advanced course of Mathematics, French and Latin, in a family school. Apply to the undersigned. J. W. ADKISSON. MERIDIAN, Miss.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Made from Grape Cream Tartar. No other preparation makes such light, flaky hot breads, or delicious pastry. Can be eaten by Dyspeptics without fear of the ills resulting from heavy, indigestible food. Sold only in cans, by all Grocers.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER Co., New York.

Haywood White Sulphur Springs,
(OPEN ALL THE YEAR.)
WAYNESVILLE, N. C., Altitude 2717.
SEASON OF 1881.

This charming SUMMER RESORT, in the very midst of the GREAT BALSAM MOUNTAINS, is now open for the reception of visitors.

It is in a beautiful valley, with smooth roads, delightful walks and within from three hundred yards to ten miles of the most beautiful mountains in America, ranging in altitude from 3000 to 6625 feet.

The Hotels and Springs are situated one mile from Waynesville, the county-seat of Haywood county, thirty-two miles west of Asheville, thirty-eight miles from Warm Springs, with good roads in all directions. Daily stage line to Asheville, and ample livery accommodations will be provided. Visitors reach here via Hendersonville and Asheville, N. C.

TERMS: $1 25 per day, $8 per week, and from $25 to $35, according to size and location of rooms, per month of twenty-eight days. Special rates for families or clubs.

For further information, circulars, etc., call at this office, or address

THOS. Y. MORRIS, Lessee, or
W. W. STRINGFIELD, Lessee,
Waynesville, N. C.

Factors' & Traders' Insurance Company
37 CARONDELET STREET,
Paid Up Capital ..... $1,000,000.

ED. A. PALFREY, President.
JOHN CHAFFE, Vice President.
THOS. E. WALKER, Secretary.

Issues Policies Covering Fire, River and Marine Risks at the Lowest Tariff Rates.

DIRECTORS:

John L. Nolde,	John Chaffe,
Richard Milliken,	Sam'l Friedlander,
R. M. Walmsley,	C. H. May,
T. Lyell Lyon,	Samuel H. Boyd,
Wm. J. Behan,	B. T. Eshleman,
Chas. Chalin,	L. C. Jurey,
Wm. Hartwell,	C. J. Leeds,
A. T. Jutin,	A. M. Beckham,
Henry Abrahams,	Louis Bush,
A. Hahn,	G. W. Schnell,
Wm. Cunningham,	John L. Adams,
R. T. Hockaday,	Wm. A. Gwyn,

Chas. E. Black.

GERMANIA SAVINGS BANK,
No. 51 CAMP STREET.
Capital, ... $100,000.

This Bank is now ready to receive deposits of ONE DOLLAR and upwards, at 3 per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually.

DIRECTORS:

H. ZERBERER,	J. HASSENGER,
S. HERNSHEIM,	J. F. MERRILL,
FRANK T. HOWARD,	EMIL MAIER.

H. ZERBERER, President.
J. HASSENGER, Vice President.
TH. HATRY, Cashier.

KURSHEEDT & BIENVENU,
MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,
MONUMENTS.
Tombs, Headstones, Cemetery Railing,
MARBLE, SLATE,
And Iron Mantels and Grates.
114, 118, 120, 122 Camp St., New Orleans.

25-CENTS--SEND--25-CENTS
IN POSTAGE STAMPS FOR A HANDY DICTIONARY!

Giving the spelling, pronunciation and meanings of the words, useful tables, the metric system of weights and measures, a list of foreign words and phrases, alphabetically arranged and many engravings.

A book of 320 pages, bound in cloth, and mailed postpaid on receipt of 25 cents, by

G. T. LATURUP,
New Orleans.

"CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S EXCHANGE"
FOR WOMAN'S WORK.

This Association has opened a salesroom at Nos. 11 and 13 Bourbon street, where all kinds of plain and fine sewing, ornamental and fancy needle-work will be received and sold.

Orders will also be taken for preserves, jellies, pickles, cake, ice cream, etc. Samples having first been tested.

All work must be entered through a member, the price fixed by the owner securely fastened to the article, and the commission charged will be ten per cent.

The Annual Subscription of Members is Five Dollars, which entitles each to enter the work of three persons for one year.

Women of all denominations in this city or State, as well as of all other States, are urgently requested to become members of this Exchange.

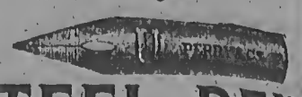
Persons desiring of becoming members may do so by applying in person, or by letter, at our Rooms, or by information given, at the same place.

We sincerely trust the public generally will lend us its hearty co-operation and aid in this worthy enterprise with the assurance that the Managers will spare no effort to its success.

The benefits of this association are open to all women without regard to religious belief.

MANAGERS.

Mrs. G. W. Pike, Jr.,	Mrs. E. John Ellis,
Mrs. M. W. Bartlett,	Mrs. Gilbert Green,
Mrs. D. A. Given,	Mrs. M. H. Conney,
Mrs. J. G. Richardson,	Mrs. R. Fuhry,
Mrs. R. M. Walmsley,	Mrs. F. V. Campbell,
Mrs. S. Delgado,	Mrs. Percy Sugent,
Mrs. Albert Baldwin,	Mrs. J. R. Wallace,
Mrs. T. H. Haines,	Mrs. E. J. Whipple,
Mrs. Percy Roberts,	Mrs. C. E. Kells,
Mrs. C. H. Allen,	Mrs. E. F. Simpson,
Mrs. P. N. Strong,	Mrs. S. H. Doyle,
Mrs. J. R. Linden,	Mrs. G. R. Westfeldt,
Mrs. L. P. Wayne,	Mrs. M. C. Jennings,
	Miss M. A. Wyckoff.



OFFICERS.

President—MRS. M. W. BARTLETT.
Vice Presidents—MRS. R. M. WALMSLEY, MRS. T. G. RICHARDSON, MRS. J. R. LINDEN, MRS. E. F. SIMPSON, MRS. ALBERT BALDWIN.
Treasurer—MRS. CHAS. E. KELLS.
Recording Secretary—MRS. THEO. AUZE.
Corresponding Secretary—MRS. E. J. WHARTON.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Styles, 10c. Agents wanted. L. JONES & Co. Nassau, N. Y.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PERRY & CO'S TRADE MARK

STEEL PENS

of superior English make; famous for durability, elasticity; great variety of styles suited to every style of writing. For sale by dealers generally. TWENTY-FIVE assorted samples for trial, including the "U" AND "FALCON" celebrated Pens, by mail, on receipt of Twenty-five Cents.

VISON, BLAKEMAN, TAYLOR & CO.
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. S.
NEW YORK.

W. F. MELLEN,
Attorney at Law,
12 CARONDELET ST.,
NEW ORLEANS, LA.

FRED. N. OGDEN. BENJ. O. L. RAYNE.
OGDEN & RAYNE,
DEALERS IN
BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,
AND AGENTS FOR THE
Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,
AND
Shultz Belting Company,
18 UNION STREET, NEW ORLEANS.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT,
RICHARD RHODES,
55 ..... ST. CHARLES STREET 55
NEW ORLEANS.
Articles for Fishermen of all Kinds.
Rods, Nets, Hooks, Lines, and every desirable article for the Angler, wholesale and retail. Guns imported to order. J. R. Cooper's Breech and Muzzle Loading Guns always on hand. All kinds of improved artificial Baits. Repairing of Guns carefully done by experienced workmen, and Fishing Rods made to order. Address Postoffice Box 1508.

DR. C. J. BICKHAM,
RESIDENCE AND OFFICE,
220 Jackson St., bet. Chestnut and Coliseum,
NEW ORLEANS.
Office Hours—Eight A. M., and three to four P. M.

DR. EDWARD HARRISON,
112 Canal Street, from 11 to 4 P. M.
NEW ORLEANS.

JOSEPHUS'
COMPLETE
WORKS.
Comprising the History and Antiquities of the Jews, with the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus; Histories and dissertations concerning Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, James the Just, and the Sacrifice of Isaac, together with a discourse on Hades, etc., with his autobiography, translated by William Whiston, A. M. To which is added an analytical index to the entire work.

This large octavo work of 788 pages, bound in cloth, $2 00, or in full leather binding, $2 50, mailed postpaid on receipt of price.

G. T. LATURUP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

FURNITURE.

W. G. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,
desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.

His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.

Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.

W. G. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,
New Orleans.

D. MERCIER & SONS,
Better Known as Cheap John.
NO BRANCH STORE IN TOWN.
MEN'S, BOYS' AND YOUTH'S
CLOTHING,
HATS, BOOTS, SHOES, FURNISHING GOODS, ETC., ETC.
Cor. Dauph

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 27.—NO. 25. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1881. WHOLE NO. 1359.

PUBLISHED FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Subscription, . . . $2 per annum.

Ministers and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

All Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.
REV. H. D. MOORE.
REV. O. R. BLUE, D. D.
REV. J. O. ANDREW.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. W. H. WATKINS, D. D.
REV. JAMES A. GODFREY.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. JOHN MATHEWS, D. D.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

A SLEEPING CITY.

—BY E. H. CLEMENT.

Who can past midnight how the city sleeps!
But how heaven marches! When I last lay down
That I knew was in the azure deeps:
Think was the vault as this vast silent town,
Look there! The obverse now upwhirl
[illegible]
And spiked with fires from the underworld,
With Orion's mailed arm and heel,
The Bull's horns tipped with suns, the hosts of [illegible]
Eternal stream, upon the mighty Way!
At what command? Whence is it all this sweeps!
Over what drifting void, what black abyss!
To nought! Sleep, then, not struggle, sting and [illegible]
Rest! lose! sleep well! all Life that Nature steeds
Wake but to demand to sleep; mould, growth, decay)

From Texas.

MR. EDITOR: I ought to have written long before this, if for no other reason than to acknowledge the kindness of some of my old friends, manifested at a time when friendship was susceptible of its most definite test. To Bro. W. R. Stuart and his good wife, Ocean Springs, Bishop Keener, Revs. W. W. Hopkins, Mississippi Conference, J. H. Davidson, Texas Conference; Bro. John Brown, Washington, Texas, Sister Anne James, Jackson, La., and other relatives, my family owe a debt of lasting gratitude. The entire amount of contributions was about $80. I mention these acts of kindness as evidence of the fact, that the stress laid on the neglect experienced by old ministers, has not been realized in my case. There was certainly enough to crush us, but the Lord has graciously delivered us all. I put this on record to the praise and honor of his holy name.

Not having enough means to take us to the sea-coast of Mississippi, as we desired, we concluded to go to another section of the vast State, leaving Brazos county in February. There we had been living so long in such constant conflict with sickness and death, we came to Ennis, Ellis county, 150 miles further north. The contrast is a great one, from a heavily timbered land to one of extensive prairies, where the eye looks almost into vacancy, and is relieved only by the luxuriant verdure of spring and summer, or obstructed by the manufactured buildings which have been erected in a short period.

We have not relinquished the idea of going to Mississippi. Why should we? True—this is a great country of vast resources, and almost absolute extremes. Nearly everybody in the world might be suited somewhere in it; but it requires more time and money than the average man can spare to find the precise spot. It will not do to credit newspaper puffs nor the representations of anybody. It seems that some people can breathe an atmosphere and drink a species of water, which are poisonous to others, with impunity. We have found out however, that the doctors furnish a good deal of the ancedote, even to many who are members of the different churches. Again, that it is so, and yet they resort to this remedy with a shameless disregard of church relations and tell us that it is impossible to live in some sections of the country without using spiritous bitters. If this be so, then a prohibitory law would be a curse to them, and the question to be settled, would be, whether to quit the country or whisky. It looks like a pity that so fertile and beautiful a country should be deserted, and yet certainly, it works a great unbelief in the soul and body to stay in it and fail to secure health by resorting to that will prove fatal in the end. Money can be made here—and yet it is not very satisfactory to some that know of, to turn over so much of it to doctors and druggists, for rent and high priced provisions. One might well be astonished, that in a country where cattle are so abundant, beef could be ten cents and butter from twenty to twenty-five cents per pound; that where wheat can be grown so successfully, flour should be $4 per hundred pounds—and so of other things—that in a country so well adapted to fruit growing, and when the trees afford the prospect of a bountiful crop—an untimely Northern blast should destroy the pleasant anticipation and leave well-grown and beautiful trees, but not fruit. Of course, I only speak of what I know personally. There may be some places, where but few of the evils I mention, exist. Some say that east Texas is very healthy, has fine water and prosperous churches and schools. Others say that it is sickly. Some praise the region of San Marcos and San Antonio, others have different views. My opinion is that if any one thinks he can do better in Texas than where he is, let him come over, look at the land, drink the water, breathe the air, square himself out for the "bracing northers," and after spying out the country for two or three years—if satisfied, remain; he will likely prosper. But if not satisfied, let him go back to the gushing springs and the living streams—the shady woodlands and pleasantly remembered associations of former days, or anywhere else, where the everlasting cry of money, money, is not so constantly ringing in his ear, and almost every one is wrapt up in self interest to the exclusion of many of the amenities and social relations of life. In my first communication from Texas, I wrote of the existence of the Holiness Band in some localities. It has found a lodgement in this part of the State. It is connected with a church organization called the Free Methodist Church. They have a society in this town and a regular pastor. Not long since they adopted street preaching, and on Saturday afternoons, when the town would be unusually filled with people from the country, some visiting preacher or the pastor would occupy a street corner and harrangue a very irregular and disorderly congregation. On one occasion while preaching was going on at one corner, near by an auctioneer with stentorian voice was bidding off his wares, and in close proximity to both, an organ grinder and his monkey were performing to a circle of admiring spectators. The scene was ludicrous in the extreme.

They have a good theme—holiness—but it is in bad hands. Their experience, as they express it, is, saved from all sin, and from all temptation to sin; saved from tea, coffee, tobacco and spirituous liquors." They delight in placing our church among the vile and corrupt things, and express themselves as confident of getting to heaven as if they were already there. They are not making much headway, for people have come to looked upon them as in some way favoring Freelovism. Some of the disaffected ones of our church have gone with them, and the pastor here says that the disaffection at one time, threatened to disorganize the entire charge. But it has recovered its balance and though some signs remain of former trouble, the church is doing as well as could be expected; some accessions and conversions occasionally and the Sunday school interest is in a flourishing condition. THOMAS ERICE.

ENNIS, TEXAS, June, 18

The Position of Woman in Chinese Society.

In the Woman's Missionary Advocate for June, is an interesting communication from Dr. Young J. Allen, addressed to Mrs. Cobb. We quote as follows:

Historically considered, the position and relation of woman in society would seem to have been determined and adjusted at a very remote period—in an age ancient even to Confucius, B. C. 550—while as to their origin, there is every reason to believe that they are the outcome of the earliest efforts of the primitive sage-kings to differentiate and establish the customs proper to mankind, in contradistinction to the habits natural to brute beasts. The conservation of society, of paramount concern for all time, and especially at that early period, required that this differentiation should be made; and while we may wonder at the crudity and unnaturalness of a system which would treat woman as the Mongolian to this day treats his mares, we can not but admit that the position and relation of woman in society, even as determined at that early day, attest both the high estimation in which the customs proper to mankind were held, and how earnestly the first efforts at civilization were put forth. This is written, not as an apology, but as a simple act of justice—for even the heathen are often slandered.

For the details of the customs differentiated by the ancients, and which have descended to our day with such enormous fame, we are indebted chiefly, if not altogether, to Confucius, the compiler and perpetuator of ancient manners. Indeed, the system which now has for its object the restriction of woman to the lai-kien, or harem—literally, "the inner apartments"—and otherwise subordinating her to the lords of creation, may almost be said to have originated with him. This distinction, however, he would disclaim, as he strongly asserts in behalf of his whole system of philosophy that he is only "a transmitter, and not an originator." But be this as it may—whether he were an originator or a transmitter—the system, as at present elaborated, received and enforced, is almost universally credited to him, and, as such, is accepted and acquiesced in, even to its minutest details. The following extracts, selected from the Siau Hioh, a book of Primary Lessons compiled by the great metaphysician and classical commentator, Choo Hi, will sample the rules by which the system is regulated, and, at the same time, it is hoped, unveil, at least in part, as an answer to your first query:

1. In the Illustrations of Rights, it is said: "The man and woman, no match-maker having as yet gone between them, must not know the names of each other. Presents not having been received, no intercourse or intimacy between them is admissible. When marrying, take not a wife of the same family name; and when purchasing a concubine, if ignorant of her family name, have recourse to divination."

2. According to the Book of Rights, "The generations of men have their origin in the marriage observances. The wife is taken from a different family in order to prevent scandal, and to mark the line of separation. The presents must be immaculate, and the language becoming, in this way to teach her rectitude and fidelity—with fidelity to serve her husband, for fidelity is a woman's virtue. Once identified with him, so long as she lives she must not change her condition; accordingly, after her husband's decease, she must not remarry. The man in person receives the bride. He takes precedence of the woman, on the principle that distinguishes the stronger from the weaker—just as heaven is above the earth, and the prince superior to the minister. Presents are taken in order that the line of separation between the man and woman be clearly marked. To lose this line of separation is to be devoid of correct principles—to act like brutes."

3. According to the Domestic Instructor, "Observances have their origin in becoming conduct between husbands and wives—the house being partitioned into inner and outer apartments, the men occupying the latter; the women, the former. The strong doors of the most retired rooms are guarded by porters, that men may not enter them, nor the women pass out of them. They must not have the same clothes stand: the wife must not presume to hang her clothes with those of her husband, nor to place them in the same wardrobe," etc.

4. "Men must not speak of what belongs to women, nor women of what belongs to men. Except in sacrifices and at funerals, they may not receive things from each other in person. When they exchange things, the woman receives them in a basket (they both being seated), the one lays down, and the other takes up, the things to be received. The man and woman must not have the same well, nor resort to the same bathing-room, nor sleep on the same mat, nor borrow things of each other. When walking by night, men must use a light; if without a light, they must stop. Women going abroad must veil their faces; they must have a light when walking in the night-time, and I without it, they must stop. When upon the road, the men must keep on the right, and females on the left."

The above extracts are from the Siau Hioh, of which an early commentator speaks as follows: "We confide in the Siau Hioh as we do in the gods, and revere it, as we do our parents."

5. The fifth and last I select from the "Family Sayings" of Confucius. "Man," says he, "is the representative of Heaven, and is supreme over all things. Woman yields obedience to the instructions of man, and helps to carry out his principles. On this account she can determine nothing of herself, and is subject to the rule of the three obediences: when young, she must obey her father and elder brother; when married, she must obey her husband; when her husband is dead, she must obey her son. She may not think of marrying a second time. No instruction or orders may issue from the harem. Woman's business is simply the preparation and supplying of wine and food. Beyond the threshold of her apartments she should not be known for evil or for good. She may not cross the boundaries of the State to accompany (even) a funeral. She may take no step on her own motion, and may come to no conclusion on her own deliberation," etc.

"All these regulations," he tells us, "were adopted by the sages, in harmony with the natures of man and woman, and to give importance to the ordinance of marriage."

In addition to the above, extracts might be given ad libitum; but that is not necessary, as the sum of the whole is already apparent to wit: (1) Conservation of society, (2) differentiation of customs, (3) separation of the sexes, etc., culminating in the (4) subordination and forced seclusion of woman.

Looked at from our stand point, this system, however well-intentioned in its origin, is perfectly horrible alike in its details and its bearings—monstrous, unnatural, and destructive of the very polity it was founded to conserve. But putting ourselves in the place of its originators and supporters, and looking at it from their point of view, it becomes not only logical in its construction, and perfectly unique among customs, but the prime differentiator of China's superior excellence, giving to her, as it does, the proud pre-eminence of being at once the most virtuous and most enlightened nation in the world. And that you may see how grandly China rises in her superiority, you have only now to associate with the above its twin custom, the worship of ancestors, identical in origin and object; for, paradoxical as it may seem, of religious import it has none. These are the pillars of Confucianism; they uphold the national fabric, conserve the national virtue and character—in a word, differentiate China's civilization from that of Christendom, which they esteem as the veriest barbarism in comparison. Behold, then, and say, Are there not indeed "lines of separation" between the darkness that covereth us, and the light that shines upon women in the lai-kien, and man chained to the tombs of his ancestors? To us, the disparity is all against China, but to the Chinese it is all in their favor; and, feeling as they do on the subject, they mean what they say when they call us foreign devils, barbarians, wild men, etc., and point to our want of the customs which distinguish them, as an evidence of the justness of their contempt.

The Great Question.

MR. EDITOR: I love the ADVOCATE and welcome its weekly visits with much pleasure; and I am rejoiced to see that you are giving so much space in your columns to the advocates of prohibition.

This is not merely becoming, but it is, in reality, the great question of the present day; and, I verily believe that upon its decision, depend the destinies of the people of this vast country. It is not my purpose here to argue the subject, for I would occupy too much of your valuable space. Moreover the subject has been so frequently and thoroughly presented, that it is unnecessary.

But its importance is so great and its proper determination so vital, that I should feel recreant to duty, did I not raise my voice in its advocacy.

The manufacture and traffic of alcoholic liquors is now the great curse of the land, creating either directly or remotely, more poverty, disease and death than all other causes combined. To say its suppression by legal enactment is an interference of religion with the just and inalienable rights of individuals is simple nonsense. Religion has nothing to do with the question.

But the movement has begun, and in earnest. From Maine to Florida, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, a mighty cry has gone up: "Down with this death-dealing monster!" To this cry, every good man and woman should heartily respond, Amen!

Many men of influence will oppose the movement. This is to be expected, of course, from those whose gains are derived from it. A large portion of the legal fraternity will oppose it; for they very well know that this grand principle once adopted (no manufacture and no sale of liquor), and one branch of their vocation is gone; as it will give us comparatively no criminal trials and empty jails. In the community in which I reside, a man's life is almost as lightly esteemed as that of a chicken; and what is the creating cause in nearly every case of homicide? Whisky.

The curse is so great and it is beginning to be so intensely felt, that its suppression has become a matter of absolute necessity; and a mighty movement has begun in this country, already thousands within its ranks, which declare that the Constitution of the United States shall be so amended as to positively prohibit, with wise reservations, the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors throughout the length and breath of this broad land.

Sir, this is one of the grandest reforms that was ever undertaken, and he, who having put his hand to the plow, looketh back is not worthy to be called a true man.

Many, no doubt, laugh at the idea of the final accomplishment of any such thing. To all such we would say, unswerving, determined and conditional effort can accomplish anything. This work can be done. We firmly believe it will be done; because it is a fight for the life of the nation—nothing less.

Then, let every lover of good order and good government, North, South, East and West, within the confines of this great Republic, enlist in this glorious undertaking, determined never to rest until the grand object is accomplished, which will bring wealth, peace, happiness and prosperity to our common country.

LAKE PROVIDENCE, June 6, 1881. VIGILANS.

Keatchie, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I have just returned from a visit to Mansfield Female College. Everything is wearing an aspect of thrift and energy. Great preparation is being made for the commencement, which takes place on the twenty ninth instant. Bro. Billingsley and myself rode out to see Dr. Thweat one morning, and found him in his invalid chair, as pleasant as ever, much better than we anticipated. He will as heretofore attend the commencement on the twenty-ninth.

He is helpless but cheerful, and full of faith and love. What a treat to meet these blessed old veterans. I include Bro. Doty, also, for I go to see him ever and anon. He has had two severe attacks this spring, and is of the opinion that he will soon pass away, as he can not stand many more such. His memory is remarkably good. How I love to hear him talk of the ministers, both dead and alive. Bro. Doty has been at all times a great sufferer, so has Dr. Thweat. No one but themselves can know how excruciating the pain. May God's grace sustain them till the end—and may their sun go down unclouded, throwing back upon the church a halo of glory. Bro. Pipes has gone to Eureka Springs and the Temperance Alliance, Saratoga. How faithful is he to do the work assigned him by the Annual Conference?

Rev. J. H. Tucker, a Baptist minister and president of Keatchi Male and Female College was buried the first instant. He was born November, 1829; baptized at twelve years; licensed in 1853; ordained elder in 1854. Served as pastor of church in Shreveport for three years, after which he spent the remainder of his life in Keatchie. His place will be hard to fill, yet I am told the board will get some one, and the school will go on as heretofore. But one death has occurred, I am told, in twenty years in this college, until this year. The school opened with flattering prospects last September; the second or third week, Prof. Manly committed suicide. Prof Rinnels, from Brandon Miss., took his place; was not in the college more than forty-eight hours before the cyclone blew down the college and killed him. Next, Prof. McDonald, from Richmond, Va., came and died in a short time, and now the president. The Baptist church has sustained a great loss. G. M. L.

June 3, 1881.

From the Work.

BETHEL CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This is a very pleasant country in summer time, (much water in winter.) We have nine organized churches, only two or three church houses. The spiritual condition of the church is not as good as I desire, but is improving. We have three Sunday schools, some prayer-meetings, and the ADVOCATE (another means of grace,) visits about twelve families. Finances are very low. The health of the country is good and crop prospects tolerably so. I feel hopeful of the future, for the Lord has promised good to me. This circuit is blessed with eight local preachers and two hundred and forty members. If all these come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, we are sure to come out victorious.

Your brother in Christ,

June 3, 1881 T. J. MILLER.

RAYMOND CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This work embraces a triangular section, near the centre of the good old county of Hinds. It has been a wealthy country, and still has great possibilities in that line. More attention to home production of food crops will make it as prosperous as any could wish. At present, the people are pressed because of the great failure in crops last year. But the credit system as practiced under lien laws, with its inevitable consequent, the making of cotton the chief object, does more towards impoverishing the people than many disastrous years.

But the surest of needs to this people, is more true, earnest religion. Here are some of the best and most faithful Christians I ever met—such as give liberally according to their means, toward supporting the gospel; having first of all consecrated themselves to God's service.

Seeing the faces of these at every service in the church, and constantly receiving their sympathy and support, cheers the pastor not a little. Many pursuing an opposite course chastens our joy, and gives us to feel the urgent need of great waves of awakening power to sweep in upon us. We are praying and looking for this. The two most interesting subjects, "The Revised New Testament," and "Prohibition" are receiving attention; not so much, however, as they each deserve. Health of the people is generally excellent. The season is favoring farmers, and their prospects brighten each day, lately. May the Lord of the harvest send the early and later rain—both natural and spiritual!

Four miles south of Raymond is "Cooper's Well," celebrated alike for its origin and history of healing. Dug by one of the pioneers of Methodism in these parts—the father of our beloved young brother, J. W. Cooper, seemingly by direction from above, its waters have (under God) cured hundreds of severe and dangerous maladies. Liver, kidney, stomach and blood diseases have yielded readily to its potent influence. Consumptives are injured by drinking this strongly medicinal water. The "well" is deep, but a large wheel, rope and bucket bring up fresh supplies to all who come. The long-tried and true Methodist, Bro. T. G. Hunter of Raymond, Miss., can give all needed information to those who can afford to pay $8 to $10 per week, for A No. 1 board and free rides to the well, or constant supply of the water. Stage communications from Bolton, on Vicksburg and Meridian railroad, twice a day, connecting accurately with trains each way.

Fraternally, J. P. DRAKE.

BOLTON, MISS., June 7, 1881.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I come to-day, a day or two, from the Coushatta and Springville Quarterly Conferences, where it pleased the Lord to bless his people, and give to them the encouragement to greater effort and sacrifice for his cause. The communion on the Coushatta circuit and the love-feast on the Springville circuit were seasons of refreshing. Shouts of the veteran and praise from the less demonstrative were heard, as these occasions passed over the people, and they thought of "nobler things above." At the first named we had one accession—a plum daughter of a pious mother, one infant baptized and an impulse given the cause. At the last—we had many penitents, thirteen accessions; many tongs and prayers; many made happy, a crowded house and a hot day. A glorious hopefulness was given to the cause, and prospects for a general good work are flattering. Bro. J. W. Hearn is a good worker; and is supported by many good hearts, prompted by strong faith. While at Coushatta, I went to see Bro. W. D. Stuyton, who was sick at the time of holding of the Louisiana Annual Conference, and been an invalid ever since. His disease is supposed to be consumption. He is apparently better than at my previous visit. He is cheerful and hopeful; and his religious enjoyments largely augmented; but he evidently feels that it is probable, his ministerial labors are at an end.

I also attended the examination in part at the Coushatta Academy, under the superintendency of Rev. Levy Upton and wife, son of Rev. T. J. Upton. It was an enjoyable occasion, and the exercises did credit to pupils and teachers. If the people of Coushatta are alive to their educational interests, they will be sure to secure the services of Bro. Upton and his noble wife for the next term. Mansfield is also alive in preparation for the commencement soon to come off here. The educational and religious interests of the district are on the ascending grade.

Yours in Christ,

T. H. MCLENDON,

MANSFIELD, June 11, 1881.

SPRINGVILLE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Yesterday we closed our second Quarterly Meeting. Bro. McClendon was on hand, and did his work with acceptability; did all the preaching. It was a time of power, thirteen accessions and the church greatly revived. Crop prospects tolerable. Money very scarce, yet we are greatly encouraged.

Yours in Christ,

J. W. HEARN,

COCHRAN, June 6, 1881.

KOSCIUSKO, MISS., June 17, 1881.

The District Conference for Columbus District, North Mississippi Conference was held at Louisville, May 27-29. Good attendance and favorable reports. T. C. Billups, J. E. Bridges, G. Y. Woodward and H. W. Foote were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. A gracious revival followed, and was still in progress when last heard from. My work, Chester circuit, is in a favorable condition; we expect improvement in several respects during the year. Camp meeting begins August 19. Heavy rainfalls for three weeks past, and crops on bottom lands are injured. Prohibition is on the move. We will succeed, I think.

G. W. ACHMAN.

I live in Ellisville, the county town of Jones county, Miss. We have a very good membership at this place—the most of our male members are good and influential men. Bro. Miller, our pastor, is a diligent worker, and we hope to grow rapidly in this country. Some steps have been taken in favor of the prohibition law, and our people here are waiting to get a chance to vote for it. It will find favor in this piney woods country. There are no whisky or dram shops kept in our little town—it was petitioned out by the citizens. We want good and influential men to move in and help us that we may grow faster in church and school interests.

Your brother in Christ,

J. B. C.

—The minister is to be a live man, a real man, a true man, a simple man, great in his love, great in his life, great in his work, great in his simplicity, great in his gentleness.—Dr. John Hall.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1881.

HARRINGTON

BY MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

Only a violet here and there,
Throws its scent to the rushing air,
Hiding its face
In a warm green place
But the hope of the summer is everywhere

Daily at times is the old earth gay,
When the clouds are swept from the skies away,
And the sun is strong,
And the birds have song;
For the hope of the summer is every day.

Now pipe the soft winds blow,
And the opals shine in the western glow,
But the gladdening lights
And the swift delights
Are the dearest of joys that we yet shall know.

A little sunshine to cheer the hours,
A bee at singing, a few sweet flowers—
Tell us of gladness
To chase the sadness
Coming for aye to this world of ours

A little love for the longing heart,
A little ease in life's ache and smart,
A little rest,
In a sheltering nest,
To give its courage to do our part.

These are the things that we have to-day,
They make us stronger and bless our way
They give relief,
But their reign is brief,
That visit our homes, but they may not stay

They come as heralds the heart to glad
There is a fitting in beauty clad,
That drawing nearer,
And growing dearer,
Shall when they ever, and make their sad

The best of earth is a sign of heaven,
Then shall he especially who long has striven
Patiently wait,
Ere the hour be late
Thy heart's desire shall to thee be given.

Let us be glad that the world grows fair,
That there is song warmth in the East wind air
There's enough of spring
To make us sing,
And the hope of the summer is everywhere.

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

Third Quarter. Lesson I.

SUNDAY, JULY 3, 1881. Exodus 1 1-14.

ISRAEL IN EGYPT.

1 Now these are the names of the children of Israel, which came into Egypt, every man and his household came with Jacob.
2 Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah,
3 Issachar, Zebulun, and Benjamin,
4 Dan, and Naphtali, Gad, and Asher.
5 And all the souls that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy souls: for Joseph was in Egypt already.
6 And Joseph died, and all his brethren, and all that generation.
7 And the children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty; and the land was filled with them.
8 Now there arose up a new king over Egypt, which knew not Joseph.
9 And he said unto his people, Behold, the people of the children of Israel are more and mightier than we:
10 Come on, let us deal wisely with them; lest they multiply, and it come to pass, that, when there falleth out any war, they join also unto our enemies, and fight against us, and so get them up out of the land.
11 Therefore they did set over them taskmasters, to afflict them with their burdens. And they built for Pharaoh treasure cities, Pithom and Raamses.
12 But the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied and grew. And they were grieved because of the children of Israel.
13 And the Egyptians made the children of Israel to serve with rigour:
14 And they made their lives bitter with hard bondage, in mortar, and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field: all their service, wherein they made them serve, was with rigour.

At the close of our studies last year, in Genesis, we left the children of Israel in the land of Goshen, in Egypt. Joseph's high position in the realm enabled him to secure for his father and brothers the very best portion of Egypt for their homes. They settled in Goshen, and in a little while they not only gathered great wealth, but exceedingly increased in numbers. For one or two generations all went well with them, but after Joseph died, and all his generation passed away, there arose a new line of kings, which had no interest in what Joseph had done, nor any interest in the children of Israel.

This new dynasty changed its policy toward the Israelites, and turned them into slaves. Some account of this bondage is given us in to-day's lesson.

We have here a list of Israel's family who emigrated into Egypt. Jacob, that is Israel, with his twelve sons, whose names are recorded here, with their wives and children, made up a colony of seventy souls, a small beginning for so mighty a nation. They have a famous name, children of Israel; that is, children of the prince that prevailed with God, and, for good reason, changed their father's name from Jacob to Israel. He took the old name, Jacob, and as he did by Jacob's father's and grandfather's names, incorporated it into his own name as an honorable title, and ever since proclaims himself to men as "the God of Abraham, of Isaac and Jacob." Their very name, therefore, children of Israel, holds a promise and prophecy.

This chapter is a fulfillment of a promise made to Jacob, recorded in Genesis xlvi 3, in which God promises to make Jacob "a great nation," and of that other earlier prediction made to Abraham, that they should be afflicted for four hundred years, after which a deliverer from their oppressors should appear. In course of time Jacob and all his sons died, but their descendants were very, very many. The increase in the families of Israel was simply marvellous. But he swarmed the hopes in Goshen like bees the hive. In all the Jewish settlements you could not find a babyless house. Their flocks kept pace with the increase in families. If there were more babies, there were more kids and lambs, until the whole country was full of their flocks. Goshen could no longer hold the Israelites, and they began to disperse and settle all over Egypt.

Just about the time when the Israelites reached this state of prosperity those new kings took the reigns of government, and each, including Joseph or his descendants, and admired at the marvelous increase of the Israelites in power and number, he said unto his people: "Behold, the people of the children of Israel are more and mightier than we."

It was true, they were everywhere interspersed throughout every province of Egypt, filling all sorts of positions; you could find an Israelite sooner than an Egyptian. The king saw that the time had come to check them, lest they take the country. Come, said he, let us deal wisely with them, lest they multiply, and it come to pass, that, when there falleth out any war, they join also unto our enemies, and fight against us, and so get them up out of the land.

This wisdom was the wisdom of the serpent. This king, whoever he was, thus summoned a council of his nobles and elders to consider this subject, was a shrewd statesman. He bases his argument upon a hypothesis that at once stirred the patriotism of the Egyptians. If there should be a war, said he, these people might go over to our enemies, and then our enemies would get them out of our country, and we would lose the immense revenue they pay us. Let us enslave them, and hold them under with tight reign, and at the same time keep their revenue to fill our treasury. From a human standpoint, or rather speaking as a statesman, this was wise. With men of reprobate minds, governed by the corrupt spirit of this world, anything that tends to advance their own interests and circumvent their opponents is called by the dignified name of wisdom. Judged by a purer standard, it is the policy by which hell holds its population and widens its borders. Sin is always folly in the end. "There is a way that seemeth right unto man, but the end thereof is the ways of death," is the verdict of the wisest statesman.

The chief folly in this measure, which was unavoidable to these godless counsellors, was that they were planning counter to a prediction of Almighty God; they were ignorantly trying to suppress a Theocracy, or, if they knew it, they did not regard it.

Few statesmen in the world's history have ever taken into consideration the purposes and plans of the Almighty King of kings, even though he may have plainly declared them. They were fighting against God, for he had promised to make Jacob a great nation, and in doing this he had a great end to conserve for the good of all nations. We do not stop to question the wickedness of this plan; morality has little to do with the counsels of the kings of this world; we only question the wisdom. Did they wisely? This identical question is raised in our day in the governments of our own continent, and particularly of those across the great ocean. Our towns are swarmed with "these people of children of Israel," to the crowding out of the Gentile nations, and, according to public verdict, to the injury of society and detriment of public welfare. Their exclusiveness, their getting for themselves, and staying to themselves, and their general unavailability for State or church, their increasing wealth and numbers are potent factors in the world's government, threatening and ominous to the nations. "They are more and mightier than we," is a true utterance in respect to many a locality. Some of our cities they own; they fill the land. Will the powers of this day undertake the policy of Egyptians, and fail as signally, or will they act more wisely and prudently. What is to become of the Jews? What is God's plan and purpose concerning the children of Israel? The end for which he so wonderfully preserved their nationality has been attained. They have given us a Bible and a Saviour, and this end being conserved, their nationality is destroyed, and they are scattered abroad over the earth. Him, who said that he was their Saviour, they rejected, crucified, and still pursue with bitter and implacable hatred, and the scripture of prophecy is fulfilled in this disloyal nation. Could the powers that be be certain that they were dealing wisely with these people, should they, as has been plainly hinted at more than once, lately by a deep and widespread sentiment in the minds of the nations, determine to curtail and suppress them by taking them out of all positions of power and influence, excluding them from office, from the press, from the positions of educators, and to ostracize them from society? On this, to doing with greater success now than when the Egyptians tried it? Will any such measures be working against some unfulfilled prediction concerning this nation? These are questions which are pressing the nations to-day for an answer. History is repeating itself. There are those all over the land who are grieved because of the presence of these children of Israel. Here is the dilemma. They are grieved to have them depart, and fear to see them stay. If they stay they will take the country; if they leave they will take the money with them.

What are we to do? We may be certain that the wisdom of this world can not answer this question. We would advise all persons thus grieved to delegate this whole question to the management of the Lord himself, and be sure you keep his friendship, and in the meanwhile, as you wait the solution, study this nation as a proof of the truth of the Bible. It will come out all right. We know that all policies that require wrong doing to our brother are short-sighted and foolish. We know that when God's time comes he will give his church a marvellous increase. The Egyptians tried every vigorous method, which would certainly have succeeded had God not interfered in favor of the children of Israel, which is the same as saying they would certainly have succeeded had they not failed. Their plan was to work them to death, and to stop the increase of men by destroying all the male children, and making slaves of the girls. In a wonderful way the Lord protected the boys; read how he did it; the Lord is always watching over the boys; they are so bad, and get in so many close places that they need an infinite Protector to save them from the devil. Have you not often heard that there is a special providence over boys? There is a special providence over girls, too, but its exercise is not as marked and open as in the case of boys.

Both of these plans failed utterly. The children of Israel thrived under their hard labors; the more they afflicted them the more they grew and multiplied.

God's plans will be successful no matter who oppose. Times of adversity and opposition are the times of growth for God's people. God trains and develops his people by the very discipline their sins require.

The Criterion of Poetry.

Appleton's Journal for March gives us a fluent and florid essay by Peter Bayne, the greater part of which is devoted to the discussions of Mr. Arnold's definition of poetry, as "a criticism of life under the conditions fixed for such a criticism by the laws of poetic truth and poetic beauty;" and, so far as the essay may be considered as eminently successful, the definition by Mr. Arnold is being completely demolished. Even the criterion of poetry, which Mr. Bayne attempts to establish on the ruins of Mr. Arnold, is, so far as it goes, perfectly tenable, and is wanting only to the extent that it does not consider poetry in regard to the effect which it is designed to produce, and according to which its value and permanence is determined. He classes it among the arts, and rightly regards it as chiefly concerned with the feelings, but it is the feelings which lead to its production, and not the feelings which it is fitted to excite. Only by paying due attention to both can a proper criterion be established, as it is only with due attention to each that a good poem can be produced, for the poet's object is not only to give full expression to his own pains and pleasures, but to do it in such a manner as to excite sympathy with them; and herein the art consists. The merit of the production will depend upon two things: the nature and character of the pleasure or pain and the amount of art displayed in its expression.

"Poetry," says Mr. Bayne, "is that branch of creative art which works in and with harmonious words," to which we could raise no objection as a very general definition if he had left out the qualifying word "creative." The term creative can not, in the strictest sense, be applied to any species of art whatever, for it is not in the mind of man to create anything. The process by which what are termed creations in art are produced is simply this: If an ideal individual of a class is formed, it is by observing in the natural state such characteristics as the ideal is to possess, and bringing them together, and conferring all upon one, typical in its general outlines of the class from which it is taken. The process is more reconstructive than creative, and all good poetry does not even do this. We have called it an expression of feeling for the purpose of exciting sympathy, and this end is frequently accomplished by representing in thought those objects, or the prominent features of those objects, under whose influence the feeling is raised. Note these lines from Tennyson:

> "All day within the dreamy house,
> The door upon the hinges creaked,
> The blue fly sung i' the pane; the mouse
> Behind the mouldering wainscot shrieked,
> Or from the crevice peered about."

The only way of forming a correct conception of anything is to view it in all its relations, and a true definition must necessarily recognize the relation of cause and effect as its basis, wherever that relation exists. Coleridge failed in his definition of poetry, because he based it on the antithesis of poetry to science; (a) Mr. Arnold, because he based it on the relation of poetry to life, and others, for reasons of a similar nature, (b) Mr. Bayne falls short, because he recognized poetry in his definition simply as an effect, only in relation to the poet. "Poetry," said he, "viewed in relation to the poet, is language uttered under the influence of that glow of the spirit which renders it pleasant to the eye and music to the ear." It is this, and it is something more. It is the idealization of the poet's emotions, by which means alone they are communicable to those whose sympathy he would invoke. His soul, in the highest degree sensitive to the emotional effects of those things, and relations among things which his subtle intellect apprehends, is pained or pleased to an extent that moves him to reproduce them in the rythmic language of verse; and, guided by a delicately discriminative faculty, he selects such language and styles of expression, and characterizes his imagery with such qualities, real or borrowed, as will affect his readers in the manner in which the original perception affected him. Because the dullest, the most unfeeling of his fellows yield to sympathy with each other, admire greatness, respect dignity, fear power, and love the beautiful and the good, in the person of a woman or a man, he confers their attributes upon the flowers, the trees, the winds and the waves, that they may admire them, respect them, fear them, and love them as he does. Hence the disposition of the true poet, remarked by Mr. Bayne, to "view all things as alive." Because he addresses the emotional side of our nature, and would attract it and subject it to the operation of his imagery he speaks in the musical rythm of blank verse, that remains when the "glow" of his spirit, inspired by the beauty of an April morn, a rippling stream, a forest in motion, a quality of the human soul, or the horrors of battle, has elapsed into a state of langour. His language must not counteract the effect of his ideas, or he has failed of his end.

(c) Poetry is the vehicle of emotion, an artistic presentation in idea of those features and properties of objects to which the desired emotions readily respond, and in language clear and succinct, the tone and cadence of which is in rythmic harmony with the soul's response. It may do more than merely express and excite feelings, but true poetry can only do so incidentally; and when its emotional effect is sacrificed to the truth and lightedness of the thought embodied it so far departs from the character of poetry, and assumes the function of prose.

But no criterion of poetry can ever enable a mind of one constitution, and course of study and experience, to decide on what would be poetry to another in these respects different. Yet would it help to a decision of what is poetry irrespective of such differences. The criterion would stand as a generalization of poetic tastes for all classes and all ages, though it could never be used to determine the popularity of new works, as emotional pleasure varies with the times.

G. B. PEEBLES.

a. Poetry is opposed to science, and prose to meter. . . . The proper and immediate object of science is the acquirement or communication of truth, the proper and immediate object of poetry is the communication of pleasure. Coleridge.

b. The end of poetry is to please. . . . Applicable to every studied composition from which we derive pleasure without any laborious exercise of the understanding.—Jeffrey.

The art of poetry is to touch the passions. Cowper.

c. Poetry, we shall find, gradually adopts those symbols of thought and those methods of using them which instinct and analysis agree in choosing as most effective, and becomes poetry by virtue of doing this. . . . While the matter embodied is idealized enough, the vehicle is the idealized language of emotion.—Spencer's Essay on style.

Colportage Sketches No. 8.

BY A. S. JONES.

DO MEAN TO HAVE A WIFE.

It was a hot day in mid-summer. A heavy, well-freighted wagon, drawn by two large, muscular oxen, was slowly moving along the public highway, in a lonely, sandy, piney woods region, in south Alabama. The driver, a clever looking young man, perhaps twenty-three years of age, with a pretty girl, and more than seventeen, by his side, occupied a seat in front. On overtaking them I drew up in the rear, to let my horse breathe, and entered into conversation with the strangers. They were communicative, seemed to be happy, and well pleased with each other's society. I soon learned that they had been married two weeks, had been to market, procured furniture and supplies, and were now on their way home, intending to commence housekeeping in a few days. Having learned these facts, it occurred to me that it was a good time to supply them with a Bible, and introduced the subject by saying, as you are going to begin to keep house so soon perhaps you would like to have a nice copy of the Holy Scriptures. In reply the young gentleman very indifferently said: "No, I reckon not." In answer to the question, do you have a Bible? he, as indifferently as before, remarked: "No, we have none; don't having so many other things to buy, can not spare the money to get one." A Bible will cost you almost nothing; you will scarcely miss the money, and I insist on you getting one, as your have such a good opportunity. You ought to have a Bible in your new home. "Yes, that is all so; but it will cost something, and we can not spare the money." Do you have no money at all? "Yes, we have some, but none to give for a Bible." I did not like his indifference on a subject which seemed to me of so much importance, and said that is exceedingly strange. You had money to get your marriage license, you could spare money to buy your wedding suit, you could spare money to get your household furniture and supplies, you have money to buy anything else you want, but none to get a Bible. Were it not for the Bible you would be a heathen, and would not have any wife, or perhaps you would have a dozen. Will you not get one, and make your young wife a nice present? "No, sir; can't spare the money." How are you going to get along in your new home without a Bible? With a loving smile he looked down into his wife's bright face, as much as to say, with you, my darling, I can get along without anything else, and replied: "Well enough, I reckon." By this time I had passed the wagon, and was driving in front. With whip in hand, ready, if necessary, to put Dolly to his best speed, I turned to the young gentleman and said: I am very sorry I did not know that young lady before she became your wife. "Why, sir?" was the short interrogation. I think it was a very unfortunate step on her part, and would have advised her not to marry you. "Why would you have done that, sir? I would have done so for one or two reasons. The first is a man who is too poor to pay forty cents for a Bible is too poor to have a wife, because he is not able to support her. The second is if a man is too mean to pay forty cents for a Bible he is too mean to have a wife, because he is not worthy of a good woman. Good day, sir. My horse was moving, good day, sir. My horse was moving at a brisk trot, when the young bridegroom cried out: "Mister, have you got your Bibles with you?" Seeing he was not mad, I drew up my reins and said; yes, do you want one? "I want to see them." When the oxen stopped behind my buggy, he sprang from the wagon, examined the books, selected a nice Bible, paid for it, placed it in the hand of his bride, and returned to his seat, in my opinion, a much happier and better man. As far as I could see over that long, straight road, the young wife seemed to be reading the precious volume. May it be a blessing to them through life, and guide them to heaven in the end.

Ursula Cotta.

A Chinese proverb says: "A woman's tongue is her sword, and she does not let it rust." It is true woman's life is a power for good or evil. What is more encouraging than to have a true woman's sympathy in the hour of despondency? What is more inspiring than a woman's voice in the hour of disappointment? Irving compares man to an oak and woman to the ivy, and, when the oak is riven by the storm, the ivy is still clinging. Man is the bravest in the battle, but woman is the strongest with the wounded and the dying. Women are the poetry of the world in the same sense that the stars are the poetry of the heavens. Clear, bright, harmonious, they are the terrestrial plants that rule the destinies of mankind. Can man love the living as woman? Can man love the dead as woman? Can man love the degraded as woman? Can man soothe the pillow of the dying as woman? If Edward's, Burke and Fennimore Cooper could speak they would tell us what assistance their wives gave them. Felicia Hemans' mother was accomplished. Cuvier's mother was pious, and a lover of nature. Cato, even read the beautiful story of Panther and not weep? "She hath done what she could" was written of woman's Sarah's eulogy. The principles of Methodism were in the heart of Mrs. Wesley. The son developed what the mother taught. Ursula Cotta took Luther, the beggar-student and educated him. Ursula Cotta had given Luther to the world. The beautiful gushing springs move the majestic river.

ROTA.

Our Society.

Mrs. I. W. Cooper, at a recent meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society, of Greensburg, La., delivered a very interesting address. We quote the concluding part:

Our Society will be a blessing to us.

1. In bringing us often together, we spend Christian fellowship. We will find in interesting ourselves in Christ's work we become interested in each other. Our society meeting will tend to cement our hearts in love. In speaking and thinking of the unselfish religion of Christ, we ourselves become more unselfish.

2. In giving a holy aim to our lives, we want to have an object in life, live for a glorious purpose, a high destiny. What could be more glorious! What could be higher than engaging in this particular branch of Christ's work, giving him our thoughts, our energies, our lives!

3. In giving system to our labors, our efforts for good. There are 23,582 Methodists within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference besides many who are friends to Methodism. These persons paid last year, to Foreign Missions, a fraction over eleven cents per member, for Domestic Mission a fraction over five cents per member. Now I think I can foresee that with united efforts in ten years there will be three thousand members of "The Woman's Missionary Society" within the Mississippi Conference. Zeal and earnestness in our part will give impetus to other missionary efforts. We leave our Rankin in China, Watts in Brazil and hope to have others in the field soon.

4. In giving us an opportunity to co-operate with Christ in saving souls, there is much land yet to possess, nearly five hundred millions in China without a Saviour. There is Mexico bleeding and dying, and why should we, or rather how can we stand idly down with closed hearts and folded hands, surrounded by all the blessings and happiness which Christianity bestows upon woman, while our sisters are living in heathen darkness and misery to loudly be cast into unutterable woe, forever and ever? No happiness in this life, none in the life to come. How will it be with us at that great reckoning? Do we feel that God intends only for others to perform this work? Does he not require us to improve the talents he has given us? Did Ananias think, that the soul of some poor heathen will rest upon us that we shall bear her cry as she sinks out from the presence of the Lord. My blood rest upon your head; you could have saved me from this fearful punishment, but you would not, though repeatedly warned of my danger. How pleasing and soul-reviving will be this cry our doom before we hear it from the lips of the great Judge. It is fearful thought that we have already wasted so many precious moments—we can not allow them to pass by unheeded—we must, we can not. I repeat it and feel that it is fearful to think carnestly on our neglect of duty right here, this Missionary subject. Let us be up and earnest and try if possible to retrieve the past by redoubled efforts. Christianity is the only religion that elevates woman, other systems degrade—make her a mere slave; but Christ condescends to let the Marys sit at his feet and listen to the words of eternal life, and should we not do all in our power to impart this blessed knowledge to the fortunate Marys, since women can only reach women in China, it is our duty, our privilege, to send and save her from her degraded and unhappy condition.

Greensboro Beacon.

Our Society.

Mrs. I. W. Cooper, at a recent meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society, of Greensburg, La., delivered a very interesting address. We quote the concluding part:

Our Society will be a blessing to us.

1. In bringing us often together, we spend Christian fellowship. We will find in interesting ourselves in Christ's work we become interested in each other. Our society meeting will tend to cement our hearts in love. In speaking and thinking of the unselfish religion of Christ, we ourselves become more unselfish.

2. In giving a holy aim to our lives, we want to have an object in life, live for a glorious purpose, a high destiny. What could be more glorious! What could be higher than engaging in this particular branch of Christ's work, giving him our thoughts, our energies, our lives!

3. In giving system to our labors, our efforts for good. There are 23,582 Methodists within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference besides many who are friends to Methodism. These persons paid last year, to Foreign Missions, a fraction over eleven cents per member, for Domestic Mission a fraction over five cents per member. Now I think I can foresee that with united efforts in ten years there will be three thousand members of "The Woman's Missionary Society" within the Mississippi Conference. Zeal and earnestness in our part will give impetus to other missionary efforts. We leave our Rankin in China, Watts in Brazil and hope to have others in the field soon.

4. In giving us an opportunity to co-operate with Christ in saving souls, there is much land yet to possess, nearly five hundred millions in China without a Saviour. There is Mexico bleeding and dying, and why should we, or rather how can we stand idly down with closed hearts and folded hands, surrounded by all the blessings and happiness which Christianity bestows upon woman, while our sisters are living in heathen darkness and misery to loudly be cast into unutterable woe, forever and ever? No happiness in this life, none in the life to come. How will it be with us at that great reckoning? Do we feel that God intends only for others to perform this work? Does he not require us to improve the talents he has given us? Did Ananias think, that the soul of some poor heathen will rest upon us that we shall bear her cry as she sinks out from the presence of the Lord. My blood rest upon your head; you could have saved me from this fearful punishment, but you would not, though repeatedly warned of my danger. How pleasing and soul-reviving will be this cry our doom before we hear it from the lips of the great Judge. It is fearful thought that we have already wasted so many precious moments—we can not allow them to pass by unheeded—we must, we can not. I repeat it and feel that it is fearful to think carnestly on our neglect of duty right here, this Missionary subject. Let us be up and earnest and try if possible to retrieve the past by redoubled efforts. Christianity is the only religion that elevates woman, other systems degrade—make her a mere slave; but Christ condescends to let the Marys sit at his feet and listen to the words of eternal life, and should we not do all in our power to impart this blessed knowledge to the fortunate Marys, since women can only reach women in China, it is our duty, our privilege, to send and save her from her degraded and unhappy condition.

Greensboro Beacon.

Marriages.

BENSON—WHITAKER.—At Whitaker, Ala., June 2, 1881, by Rev. A. J. Grace, M. D., Mr. Robert Benson and Miss Emily Whitaker, both of Whitaker, Ala.

BROWER—MORRIS.—At the residence of the bride's parents, on the evening of April 16, 1881, by Rev. B. Jones, Mr. Abram Brower, of Jefferson, Texas, to Miss Mary C. Morris, of Wilkinson county, Miss.

WELLBORN—PERKINS.—At the residence of Mr. Marshall Brown, the bride's brother-in-law, at Johnsonville, June 9, 1881, by Rev. J. M. Wyatt, Mr. Howard Wellborn and Miss Sallie G. Perkins, both of Sunflower county, Miss.

TURNAGE—HALL.—At the residence of the bride's father, Dr. Hall, Mt. Carmel, Miss., May 26, by Rev. G. W. Brown, Mr. M. P. Turnage and Miss Sallie Hall, both of Covington county, Miss.

Obituaries.

WHIGHAM.—JOSEPH WHIGHAM, the subject of this obituary, was born in Jefferson county, Ga., August, 1801, and died in Jones county, Miss., May 1, 1881, aged seventy-nine years and nine months. His father and mother, Alexander and Letty Whigham, were humble followers of Jesus, and taught him by precept and example, to love Jesus. He was converted when quite a youth and joined the Presbyterian Church. In 1820 he was married to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of William and Nancy Hancock. In 1841 he moved to Macon county, Ga. Being deprived of church membership, or, from some cause, he and his wife both back slid, but they came unto the Lord and he heard them and restored unto them the joys of his salvation, and they united with the Methodist Church. In 1848 he moved to Pike county, Ala., thence to Washington county, Ala., and from there he came with his widow daughter, Mrs. Holloman, to Jones county, Miss., reaching which he ended life's journey. Six children had preceded him to the better land, two of infancy, a wife and three grown daughters, in the triumph of a living faith, and he could see the beautiful gate waiting and watching for him. Soon after Bro. Whigham came into our midst he presented his church letter, and was received into the church by the writer. He only lived about seven months. While in a lingering condition he often talked of death, and expressed himself being ready, willing and waiting for the summons, and notwithstanding he was poorly for the most part, sometimes very sick, yet the old man manifested no fear. He was sensible that death was on him, he called his daughter to his bedside, but it was too late to speak, and passed away silently, leaving a large connection and many friends.

T. J. KING.

BYRNE.—ROBERT BYRNE BYRNE died in Ross county, Fla., May 23, 1881, aged ten months and fifteen days. Little Byrne was the only child of Brother E. K. and Sister Katie Curry. He suffered for several days, and suffered greatly. He was their only little one, how much he will be missed. He was a very bright, little fellow, so much so as to attract attention from all. While he could not talk he could make one fully understand by the motion of his hands and the expression of face.

A hard struggle for Brother Edie and sister to give up their sweet and beautiful boy, yet they bowed their hearts to the will of God, were fully submissive to God's will. During the time of his sickness I was with the family, and at the time setting by the darling little sufferer, I well do I remember the words of papa, mamma and great-grandma, and auntie, as they stood over the little withering bud, I will not forget. These loved ones were with him all the time, loved little Byrne so dearly until I at first thought it was worship, but no so; while their hearts were made to bleed, and tears to freely flow from their eyes, I heard them, as they stooped over the little fellow, telling him good bye, say "Heaven" so little he has to make us happy, and he has taken him away. Blessed be the name of the Lord. Here they found comfort. A sweet clod for a beautiful angel number. How hard it was for them to give him up. She taught him many of his little ways, how she loved him. The darling one of his prattling heard no more, his voice was no more, his wonderfully bright eyes to be seen no more. What comfort to the bereaved ones to know that they are faithful, after awhile they will meet him in heaven, where there will be no more parting. May the grace of God sustain the bereaved ones in the hour of great grief.

H. H.

WILSON.—JAMES W. WILSON, Esq., the subject of this sketch, was born April 14, 1820, and died at his residence in this life to Jackson, La., May 8, 1881, aged sixty years. Being a son of pious parents he early professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and for many years was a consistent Christian.

Before the war between the States, he was a lawyer by profession, and practiced at law. On the 4th of April, 1858, he was married to Miss Sarah E. Scott. For several years past he seemed to forget his vows to the church and to God. But he was converted at a meeting held at Colquitt, La., he became penitent, and professed to be restored to favor with our ever merciful, heavenly Father. His conversation with the writer, he confessed his backsliding was the result of neglect of duty in the ministry.

Early in this year it was discovered by his friends that there were some mental derangements. Consequently he was sent to Jackson, in the asylum, where he was entertained as a guest in the house of Dr. Jones, the superintendent, and first physician of the asylum. Strong hopes were entertained of his early recovery, but he was taken with a violent attack of stricture of the bladder, which could not relieve, and of which he died in a short time. His mother, sisters and brothers will be comforted by the remembrance of all his kindness, kindness and love, and that he accepted the sacrifice of a broken and contrite heart.

J. H. [illegible]

TURNER.—The subject of this obituary, SUSAN TURNER, maiden name Shackelford, was born in the State of Tennessee, in 1821. She with her parents moved with her parents to [illegible] Mississippi, where in her seventeenth year she was married to Mr. Stakely Turner, to which union she lived in the State of Mississippi until March 15, 1881, when Bro. Turner was called upon hand, leaving her and a large family of children, but with the consolation that her husband had preceded him to the better land.

She was the mother of eight children, two daughters and six sons. Sister Turner was a member of Wesley Chapel, the church of which her husband was a member. Sister Turner was a kind and loving mother, and ever realized the fact of all, as they knew her, and we have every reason to believe that she was a Christian. During her illness with dropsy of the heart she suffered long with patience and Christian fortitude, and she died in Issaquena county, Texas, where she had gone with her children after the death of her husband. A short time before she died she told her children that she was going to die. But it was all right, she was ready, and said not a cloud intervened between her and her God.

J. H. [illegible]

WALKER died, May 23, 1881, Mrs. [illegible] Walker, wife of Howard Walker, of [illegible] near Round Lake, in her twenty-ninth year.

PACKWOOD—SAMUEL FRANKLIN, son of [illegible] and Mary Packwood was born in Pike county, [illegible] July 31, 1858, and died at Oxford, Miss., May [illegible] from effects of measles, complicated with [illegible] He entered college at Oxford last fall, and had been home since I was sent to this work last fall, consequently I never had the pleasure of meeting him, but have been told that he was a kind-hearted boy. His name is on the church at this place, which I learned he confessed on his death-bed that he had been living not to his duty, but that he was praying earnestly during his illness for forgiveness, and felt that his prayers had been answered. Efforts were brought to Christ circle by [illegible] and he died in the fourth grade and was [illegible] this region relatives and many friends [illegible] death. This was echoed in all eyes when the large congregation attended his burial. In their sorrow sympathy be the family's [illegible] this sad affliction be sanctified to their good, that they [illegible] earnestly to [illegible] the [illegible] of life, where sickness and [illegible] and death never come.

[illegible] JOHN [illegible], infant son of [illegible] Mississippi, died [illegible]

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1881.

EVENING MEDITATION.

"He knoweth the way that I take."

The twilight falls, the night is near,
I fold my work away,
And kneel to One who bends to hear
The story of the day.

The old, old story; yet I kneel
To tell it at thy call,
And cares grow lighter as I feel
That Jesus knows them all.

Yes, all! The morning and the night,
The joy, the grief, the loss,
The roughened path, the sunbeam bright,
The lowly thorn and cross.

Thou knowest all—I lean my head,
My weary eyelids close;
Content and glad awhile to tread
This path, since Jesus knows!

And he has loved me? All my heart
With answering love is stirred,
And every anguished pain and smart
Finds healing in the word.

So here I lay me down to rest,
As nightly shadows fall,
And lean confiding, on his breast
Who knows and pities all.

—Bible Magazine.

Notes of Life.

BY BISHOP ROBERT PAINE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

At the close of the term McElroy left the institution, while I remained, changing my boarding place to the very pleasant house of George Malone, Esq. I lost sight of him for several years. In the meantime I had been converted, become a Methodist itinerant preacher, and had been appointed to mission work in South Alabama. In the ensuing year, 1820, we had a camp-meeting near Summerfield, one Sunday, my presiding elder, Thos. H. Porter, preached to a large audience. It was a very impressive discourse. When he was fairly under way, I saw a gentleman enter the audience and take a back seat. In a moment I recognized my friend McElroy, and he knew me. The sermon ended, the service was concluded by an earnest exhortation and an invitation for seekers to come forward for prayer. I approached my friend, who had crouched behind a large man, and found him with bowed head, trembling from head to foot, and weeping convulsively. Grasping him by the hand, he said:

"Mr. Paine, my friend, forgive me. I am not any infidel, and never was; pray for me," at the same time telling his views.

Of course I did so. When the hour's service closed I looked for him, but he had left the encampment, and I have not seen him since. I pon inquiry, I found he was a Christian and was greatly esteemed. The mere's Infidelity is often the reaction of personal pride, and opposition against restraint, but at bottom is assumed rationality.

When I had more gone through the course of English and classical studies pursued in the best academies of the country at that time, and had started at "Cumberland College," Nashville, a call of self of its Chancellorship, under the celebrated Dr. Priestly as president, I learned it had, for some cause, temporarily suspended, and so quietly returned home.

CONVERSION.

Within a short time after my return home, the community became unusually excited upon the subject of religion. Miss Harper, a Methodist traveling preacher, in charge of that circuit, produced a profound and extensive sensation. Several meetings in different neighborhoods had resulted in awakening and converting many of his hearers, and as he went around his large circuit crowds followed him and swelled the tide. Many prominent citizens became avowed Christians, some of them renowned for their former opposition to religion—as Dr. Gilbert D. Tyler, for instance; whose conversion was a great surprise to his intimate acquaintances. It was almost like Saul's. Opportunely, a camp-meeting was held at Mt. Pisgah, Giles county, assembled by thousands. Many of the most gifted ministers of the church were there. Among others, and the acknowledged leader, was the presiding elder, H. L. Douglass. He was below the medium stature, well-proportioned and fine looking. His voice was musical, distinct and accurate in enunciation, and perfectly regulated. He was a natural orator, improved by long practice. His temperament was genial. He was without guile, and of course without envy. He was born and grew up in my native county, and was a clerk with my father in the same house. My father had not met him since he had become a Methodist preacher, but had always spoken of him as an exceptionally good young man. Mr. Douglass was admitted on trial in the Virginia Conference in April, 1801, and after having occupied its most important stations and districts, had been transferred by the Bishop to the Tennessee Conference, and was now presiding elder of the district. When it was known he was to be at the meeting our father went and took us all with him.

That meeting was the crisis in the religious history of our family. None of us, however, made a public demonstration of our feelings, but our prejudices against the doctrines and usages of the Methodists were removed, and we were deeply impressed. Emotions are contagious. Never had I listened before to such preaching—so earnest, so clear, so powerfully persuasive. Crowds of my acquaintances, young and old, rushed to the altar for prayer and instruction. I could not yet overcome my deeply-rooted repugnance to what I called religious sensationalism; for while I had never seriously doubted the truth and necessity of experimental religion, yet this did not accord with my plan of obtaining it. After awhile, finding myself seated in the outskirts of the congregation, having been left alone by the advancing auditory, I arose and retired to the forest. Then and there I resolved to try and become a Christian, and rode home to read the Bible and pray. In a few days my father found peace with God, and on the ninth of October, 1817, I obtained forgiveness of my sins. But in vain had I sought this blessing while trying to do so sincerely; yet when, in despite of my pride, I came forward openly and bowed down, asking publicly for prayer, in a few minutes "the peace that passeth understanding" filled my soul. There was no outburst, no overwhelming ecstasy, but an humble, loving trust in my heavenly Father and a serene rest. Sorrow and fear had fled, and I was a child, "born again," and in the fostering arms of love. I was converted—"born from above." The grace of God, by faith in Christ, had freely forgiven all my sins, and "the Spirit answered to the blood, and told me I was born of God." I felt it then and feel it now, and for sixty-four years have not deliberately doubted it.

It is the privilege of every [illegible] to have the witness in himself that he is a child of God.

Within two weeks of the event last referred to, my father, three sisters and myself were united with the church, and professors of religion. And here I must be allowed to express my sense of gratitude to infinite goodness that, as the members of our large family grew to maturity and passed away, each and every one of them professed religion and died members of the church. I am now almost the only survivor of that period. Hartwell H. and Sterling C. Brown, brothers of my stepmother, were subjects of the same revival; both became eminent ministers of the gospel. The latter and myself had privately talked over the subject, and agreed to take the first opportunity to present ourselves as seekers. He did so, but I held back until I felt it was "now or never," and my conversion preceded his by only a few minutes. From that day until his death in 1822, I have never known a preacher wield such an influence as a revivalist. He was my senior by five or six years, over six feet high, grave, attractive and commanding in person and manners, susceptible of the strongest emotions, and in his impassioned moods was almost resistless. He moved through the country a great moral cyclone, and a divine power seemed to gyrate around his pathway. Hundreds upon hundreds were converted. We were twins in religion, joined the church, were licensed to preach, admitted on trial and ordained together. I nursed him in his last illness, received his dying charge, and heard his whisper, "I will soon pass the gates of light." We buried him at Old Ebenezer, not far from Bolivar, Tenn. "He was a bright and shining light," and fell a martyr to exhausting labor. Can it be that the light is forever gone out? Will it not blaze again when the Master calls, and with a crown bestudded with "the many stars of rejoicing?" Yes, so sure as God lives, his faithful ones who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. "Courage, my soul, thy God is true."

—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Name of the Good Samaritan.

Oberlin, the well known philanthropist of Steintal, while yet a candidate for the ministry, was traveling on one occasion from Strasbourg. It was in the winter time. The ground deeply covered with snow, and the roads were almost impassable. He had reached the middle of his journey and was among the mountains, and by this time was so exhausted that he could stand it no longer.

He was rapidly freezing to death. Sleep began to overcome him; all power to resist it left him. He commended himself to God, and yielded to what he felt to be the sleep of death.

He knew not how long he slept, but suddenly he came to consciousness of some one shaking him and waking him up. Before him stood a wagon with mats in the house, and the wagon took him away. He gave him a little wine and kept the spirit of life returned. He then helped him out to a wagon and brought him to the next village. There rested no wages profuse in his thanks, and offered money, which his benefactor refused.

"It is only a duty to help one another," said the wagoner. "And it is the next thing to an insult to offer a reward for such a service."

"Then," replied Oberlin, "at least tell me your name, that I may have you in thankful remembrance before God."

"I see," said the wagoner, "that you are a minister of the gospel. Please tell me the name of the Good Samaritan."

"That," said Oberlin, "I can not do; for it was not put on record."

"Then," replied the wagoner, "until you can tell me his name, permit me to withhold mine."—Christian Leader.

WHAT THEY LOST. Near London there lived an old couple. In early life they had been very poor; but the husband became a Christian, and God blessed their industry, and they were living in comfortable retirement, when one day a stranger called on them and asked their subscription to a charity. The old lady had less religion than her husband, and still hankered after the Sabbath earnings and easy shillings which Thomas had given from regard to the law of God. So when the visitor asked for their contribution she interposed and said, "Why, sir, we have lost a deal by religion since we first began; my husband knows that very well, Have we not, Thomas?" After a solemn pause, Thomas answered: "Yes, Mary, we have. Before I got religion, Mary, I had an old slouched hat, a tattered coat and mended shoes and stockings; but I have lost them long ago. And you know, that, poor as I was, I had the habit of getting drunk and quarreling with you; and that you know I have lost. And then I had a hardened conscience and wicked heart, and ten thousand guilty fears; but all are lost—completely lost, and like a millstone cast into the sea. And, Mary, you have been a loser too. Before we got religion, Mary, you had a washing tray. And you had a gown and a bonnet much the worse for wear; but you have lost them long ago; and you had many an aching heart concerning me at times; but those you have happily lost. And I could even wish that you had even lost as much as I lost; for what we lose for religion will be an everlasting gain."

VOCAL FAULTS.—Louis C Elson, writing in the Musical Herald of Boston, severely castigates the use of the "Wail and the Wobble" in singing. In seeking the origin of the fault, he remarks: "The heavy orchestration with which the modern singer has to contend has bred to him (or her) a habit of forcing the voice beyond its natural power—a most easily acquired fault, but one which is terribly difficult to overcome. Too much attention has been paid to the glottis, too little to the lungs. In the greatest cause of such deficiencies, at least in America, is the great haste of singers to reach the dignity of a public appearance. The half formed or hastily taught singers of America, especially since the era of light opera has dawned, are legion. We are not forgetful of the Italian proverb, "A good voice is nine-tenths of a vocal method;" but the remaining tenth must be added, or all will be incomplete. When a sensible person goes to an artist to study painting, he is content to study lines and curves, simple perspective, monochrome, etc; but the vocal pupil is rarely gifted with the patience to lay the firm foundation."

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

—Ram Chunder Bose, who was a delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Cincinnati last year, has written an article in the Indian Evangelical Review for April on "Mission Funds," in which he protests against the manner of raising mission funds in the Methodist Episcopal Church. He says in substance that during his visit to the United States, in all the numerous missionary meetings he attended, the foreign work was alone presented to the congregations; but the collections thus taken were thrown into the common fund, which is annually devided between home and foreign missions. He claims, in other words, that the people are induced to give by appeals to them to help Christianize and elevate the heathen; but that part of what is thus given is used for the benefit of nominal Christians. His chief objection seems to be the use of any part of the funds appropriated to heathen missions among nominal Christians in the same country. He thinks that a missionary in India, who labors either exclusively or occasionally among the nominal Christians, will soon lose his zeal for the conversion of the Hindus. In a postcript on the duties of missionaries as dispensers of patronage he says:

"In some missions the number of which, thank God, is very, very few indeed, there is a class of appointments of the most trampling kind reserved for East Indian ladies. These ladies are certainly worthy of all honor, and some of them have endeared themselves to native churches so decidedly that prayers are daily offered up in many native Christian homes for their advancement; but, surely, native Christians would not be human beings if they did not wish to see some of their own sisters fitted for and raised to the lucrative appointments. But when they press such a wish the phantom of race antagonism is seen in their attitude and homilies on universal brotherhood are read. It is perceived that the creation of a monopoly is the worst form of class distinction noticeable on the surface of the globe, and that those who solicit the establishment of good schools for native Christian girls, and their conscientious preparations for the best posts at the disposal of missions, are the parties who ought to be praised for proposing what energetically will lead them to the amalgamation of the races now in antagonism in this country."—New York Independent.

—Missionaries cannot, as a body, be accused of writing too rose-colored views of their work. In giving an account of encouraging features, they do not forget that there is another side. It is not necessary now, if, indeed, it ever was, to suppress what is unfavorable. Everybody believes that final success is ensuring, no matter how many or great the obstacles are. No one heeds the surprised and native Christians are not always such shocked Christians as are Exeter Hall and American sounding cants. The old leaven of Pharisaism and ignorance cannot be worked out altogether in one generation. The Rev. S. M. Creegle, of the London Society, writing of his mission in Lifu, one of the loyalty islands, says of the Christians:

"The aggregate number of church members in the many churches is 2,205. Nativeism is not so prevalent as it is in the religious sincerity of Christians of enlightened countries. There is a vast amount of superstition, error, and ignorance still pervading the minds of great numbers of our church members. Their religion is more a thing to be seen than to be felt and enjoyed in the soul. We have not that amount of social elevation we could desire. The people for the most part cling to their old habits; herd promiscuously together; sleep in dirt and squalor, in houses with but one room and no window; wear but scant clothing, except on service days and holidays; and use language offensive to civilized ears. Hence, refinement does not exist amongst them and their moral feelings are not at all elevated."

The people, however, contribute to the support of their pastors, and some have gone out as missionaries to the inhospitable and unhealthy shore of New Guinea and given their lives in Christ's service. The training institution has sent out fifty-seven native teachers, four of whom are now in New Guinea.

—In North China too the outlook is most hopeful. The doctor of the idol temple in the province of Straing, a year or two ago, attracted much attention. Local troubles have made a new deal necessary, which, on the whole, have only served to advertise the mission. It took six weeks to arrange it, being signed at last by thirty-eight persons, and followed by two feasts, at which the "peace-talkers" were invited, many of whom have become inquirers. The young priest who, about a year ago, gave up his temple and visible means of support, broke his incense dish and brought his gods to the missionaries, has held out against all inducements to return; viz., "a larger and better temple to keep, with more and better land, and about 40 000 cash as a bonus." His answer is suggestive of one who has found the true riches: "No, not for 100 000 cash—500,000! Yellow gold is not precious. Peace and happiness have no price." "He has never received a 'cash' from the missionaries in any way." Another man who had died in Peking during the famine was converted and baptized with his household. He returned home to work diligently among his friends, where, as the fruit of occasional visits of the missionary, after about a year, a church of more than twenty was organized. A condition of membership in that church is "ability to read at least the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments." The conversion of an old man, notorious for bad temper, "a nuisance in the family and a pest in the neighborhood," is reported as a notable triumph of grace.—Christian Union.

—Bhamo is an advanced missionary post of the Baptist Mission in Burmah. The city is occupied by Chinese, Shans, Ka Khyons, and Hormans. The Baptists have a mission among the Ka Khyons, in whom the Karens are most interested. They recognize each other as brothers of the same family, and the Karens, therefore, have become very zealous in behalf of the success of the mission. The Rev. C. H. Carpenter, for this and other reasons, would continue this mission, while some of his brother missionaries would abandon it. He regards Bhamo as an important post, because it holds the Keys to China on the southwest, and is at head of the steam navigation on the Irrawady.

—The New York City Mission held 335 Gospel meetings during May, attended by 45,000 persons, distributed 60,000 tracts, papers and books, obtained 127 temperance pledges, and aided 280 families. Receipts for the month, $4,516 60; payments, $4,215 81.

—There seems to be a perpetual pentecost in the American Baptist Telugu Mission. The Rev. J. E. Clough writes from Ongole, March 18th, that in a six weeks' tour he visited fifty-two villages and baptized one thousand and three persons.

—Lutheran missionaries in South Africa have established a colony of Kaffir Christians at Middelburg, in the Transvaal. The converts have built a handsome church of brick that will accommodate 1,500 worshippers, and also a series of work-shops.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—A few years ago the attacks made upon religion by some men of science led to the foundation of a society to investigate all philosophical and scientific questions, more especially those said to militate against the truths of Revelation, and to publish the results to its members in a quarterly journal; this Society, which was called the Victoria Institute, or Philosophical Society of Britain, has now a house at 7 Adelphi terrace, London, and boasts of 900 members, each paying a small annual subscription, among whom are many leading men of science; the Archbishop of Canterbury, and several English, colonial, and American prelates having also joined it. Having been founded under Lord Shaftesbury's auspices, his lordship takes much interest in its progress, which he recently described as follows: "I was present at the very birth of this Society, when an address was delivered in a small dark room. I had no conception at that time of the work which the Society would do, and of the position which it would hold, not only at home, but also, as it is now beginning to do, in America and our colonies."—Christian at Work.

—The London Religious Tract Society, among the most effective organizations for Christian work, has recently held its eighty second annual meeting with the Earl of Aberdeen presiding. An abstract of the annual report shows that there had been issued during the year 627 new publications, of which 137 were tracts. The total circulation from the home depot, including books, tracts, periodicals, counted in numbers, cards, and miscellaneous issues, has reached 67,089,130, of which 21,515,110 were tracts, being an increase upon the previous year of 3 172,770. The issues from foreign depots might be safely stated at 12,000,000, making a total circulation of 81,089,130 and bring 2,012,017,000 since the formation of the Society. The total amount received from sales, missionary boxes, and all other sources, including last year's balance, was £199,012 1s. 4d., leaving a balance in favor of the society of £1,557 19s. 9d. The work of the Society extended to all parts of the world, and the tracts and other publications were printed in about 150 different languages.

—In the General Conference of the United Brethren in Christ, lately sitting, took place over a report on the Africa representation, and fay delegation in the General Conference. The report recommended that the question of the delegation be deferred for the present; good to this there seemed to be no objection; but many objected any change in the present session of representation, which allows to each conference large and small, so many representatives. The plan proposed uses representation on the basis of members. The report of the committee was lost, yet in debate what the final action was. It was proposed on the secret society question that the committee having charge of the subject be instructed not to report any law which would admit members of such societies into the Church. This was voted down; but in the report of the Committee on "Moral Reform" a resolution was included declaring that "our opposition to all secret combinations remains unabated, and our efforts for their final overthrow shall be exerted until that end is accomplished."—New York Independent.

—At the stated meeting of the board of managers of the American Bible Society, held at the Bible House on Thursday, June 2, President S. Wells Williams, LL. D., in the chair, The field which has been known as "China and Japan" was devided. Dr. Gulick, who has had charge of this field, was assigned to China, and the Rev. Henry Loomis was appointed to superintend the work in Japan. Grants of books were made to the value of about $80,000, including $10,000 for colportage. Three new auxiliaries were recognized in Feb. Receipts for the month, $10,541.53; issues, 99,712 volumes.

—The Cumberland Presbyterian General Assembly held its session this year in Austin, Texas. The Rev. W. J. Darby, of Evansville, Ind., was elected moderator. It was reported that the total receipts for missions were $18,555. The project of changing the name of the church by dropping the word "Cumberland" met with little favor. A resolution condemning the use of tobacco by ministers was fully discussed and laid on the table. The next assembly will be held in Huntsville, Ala.

—The colporteurs of the American Bible Society in Georgia and Florida have visited during the last few months 49,550 families, and found 18,290 the majority of whom are colored without the Scriptures, of these, 11,469 were supplied, besides 5,720 individuals in addition; 43,999 volumes were distributed.

—The American Lutheran Mission in Liberia has four central stations, 3 ordained foreign missionaries, 2 native ministers, 4 catechists and 34 village preachers, 111 congregations with 5,032 baptized members, 45 school teachers and 946 pupils in its mission schools. The total additions for the last three years have been 2,118.

—Things do not look, says the Christian at Work, very promising in the matter of that neglected Second Service when we read that of the 520 Congregational churches in Massachusetts but have but one preaching service.

—Statistics for the Presbyterian Church in United States show that while there are 749 vacant churches, there are only 451 ministers without charge, which proves that there is not an oversupply of ministers in the church.

—The Baptists have in Asia 162 missionaries, 418 native preachers, 475 churches and 10,087 members. There were 2,191 baptisms last year.

—There are 321 Baptist churches, with about 20,000 members, in Florida, connected with which are 500 Sabbath-schools.

—In 36 years the Church of England has erected 2,581 churches, and has expended on church buildings $200,000,000.

—In Canada and Newfoundland there are 110 Congregational churches, with nearly 8,000 members.

—Thirty-eight bishops were appointed by the Pope at a consitory held in Rome recently.

—The Jesuits have established nine colleges throughout the various provinces of Spain.

Our Young People.

CLIMBING.

Not at a bound,
But round on round
Up the ladder we're climbing;
Striving to climb at something higher,
Striving to win the heart's desire,
With noble zeal, the soul to inspire,
Up the ladder we're climbing.

Each step we count
The while we mount
Up the ladder we're climbing;
Ladder of learning, ladder of fame,
Ladder of wealth, they all the same,
To gain a fortune or win a name
Up the ladder we're climbing.

Some thought we may,
Yet every day
Up the ladder we're climbing;
Not content with a low degree,
Aspiring still at the top to be,
Hand over hand courageously
Up the ladder we're climbing.

Johnny and Fred,
And little Ned
Up the ladder are climbing;
The ladder is big and they are small,
And better for them it is not at all
Them to break their necks with an ugly fall
Down the ladder they're climbing.

—Ladies' Floral Cabinet.

How Jet Saved the Baby.

Our faithful friend Jet, a powerful dog, lived with us on the Navesink Highlands. This Summer we shall find no Jet at the Highlands, and the place will hardly seem the same without him. Last season there came a dear little baby of the third generation, to the old house, and Jet took the infant in his care from the first. He would watch while it slept, with untiring patience, jog the cradle if it stirred, and call the nurse if it cried or needed attention. Nothing pleased him more than to be left alone with the little one, and to the course of the Summer his infinite care was rewarded by responsive affection. The baby learned to love him and would crow and coo to him every morning with unmistakable delight. To lie on a blanket under a tree or on the piazza, and have her chubby hands in his silky coat, to clamber over his shoulders, to hold him long by the ear while riding in her little carriage, to brandish over him in a hundred pretty ways those were the daily occupations of which she never tired. She learned to stand on her feet and to take her first step by clinging to his back, and her name was the first word she ever spoke. It seemed as though he could hear her lisping voice as if by magic. If she was on the piazza, at any time, he was within hearing or not, she had only to call, "Jet, Jet," and presently he would come bounding in.

One evening late in August, we were all assembled, as usual after supper, on the piazza and the lawn in front of the house, enjoying the long twilight. The servants were down stairs getting their supper, and Jet was left alone with the baby in the sitting room, which opens on the piazza by long windows. Baby had gone to sleep in the dark, and she was lying beside her cradle. It was a very calm night, before we should have any suffering, but the fresh salt of the sea was in the air, and the heat of the day was done. The young folks, were singing softly together some gentle refrain, when a terrible shriek broke upon us, and the nurse girl rushed out through the hall, her clothing in a blaze, and the flames streaming above her head. To roll her on the grass and smother the blaze with our coats was the work of an instant. Then arose another cry, never to be forgotten by those who heard it; the agonized prayer and lamentation of a mother for her child. The sitting room was full of fire. The girl had brought up a lighted lamp after supper, and dropped it on the floor as she entered the room. The cradle was in the corner of the room farthest from the door. Mr. Warren dashed in at the window, and made one leap to the cradle. He found Jet crouched upon it, covering the baby with his body.

How they got out we could not comprehend. It was all over in the twinkling of an eye, and Mr. Warren and the dog were lying on the grass beside the mother, who was almost fainting, with the baby safe and sound in her lap. The little thing was nearly suffocated, but recovered after a few minutes in the open air, and took no harm from the fire.

The sitting room was burned out, but we succeeded in stopping the flames there and saving the house. Mr. Warren's face and hands were badly burned, and the nurse girl, was seriously, but not dangerously injured. Jet was severely scorched, but after caring for him as best we could that night, we thought he would come around again in a few days. Next morning, however, he was missing, and even to baby's call, "Jet, Jet!" he made no answer. After a long search we found him under the piazza, stone dead.

Jet is buried on the hillside, where the arbutus blooms early in the Spring. We have placed a water-worn boulder from the shore over his grave, and on the stone are carved in deep letters, only the words: "A Faithful Friend."—St. Nicholas.

"Give us this Day Our Daily Bread."

In a miserable cottage at the bottom of a hill, two children hovered over a smoldering fire. A tempest raged without—a fearful tempest against which man and beast were alike powerless.

A poor old miser, much poorer than those shivering children, though he had heaps of money at home, drew his ragged cloak about him as he crouched down at the threshold of the miserable door. He dared not enter for fear they would ask pay for shelter, and he could not move for the storm.

"I am hungry, Nettie."

"So am I; I've hunted for a potato paring, and can't find any."

"What an awful storm!"

"Yes, the old tree has blown down. I guess God took care that it didn't fall on our house. See, it would certainly have killed us."

"If he could do that, couldn't he send us bread?"

"I guess so; let's pray 'Our Father,' and when we come to that part, stop till we get some bread."

So they began, and the miser, crouching and shivering, listened. When they paused, expecting in their childish faith to see some miraculous manifestation, a human feeling stole into his heart; God sent some angel to soften it. He had thought a loaf at the village, thinking it would last him a great many days, but the silence of the two little children spoke louder to him than the voice of many waters. He opened the door softly, threw in the loaf, and then listened to the wild, eager cry of delight that came from the half-famished little ones.

"It dropped right from heaven, didn't it?" questioned the younger.

"Yes; I mean to love God forever, for giving us bread because we asked him."

"We'll ask him every day, won't we? Why I never thought God was so good, did you?"

"Yes, I always thought so, but I never quite knew it before."

"Let's ask him to give father work to do all the time, so we need never be hungry again. He'll do it, I'm sure."

The storm passed, the miser went home. A little flower had sprung up in his heart; it was no longer barren.

In a few weeks he died, but not before he had given the cottage, which was his, to the poor laboring man.

And the little children ever after felt a sweet and solemn emotion when in their mutual devotions they came to those tenderful words, "Give us this day our daily bread." Reformed Episcopalian.

Gertie as a Teacher.

"You taught a class in Sunday school?"

"I did truly, girl," said Gertie, smoothing out her dress with a complacent look, "Every single Sunday that I was there."

"How many scholars did you have?"

"Why, I had one; they only give one scholar to a teacher; when there are teachers enough to go around. You see the men want to talk, ask questions, and have things explained, and one is as much as you can attend to."

"I should like to know what questions you could answer," said Ethel Lewis, tossing back her curls.

"Why, Gertie Allen, you were only ten years old when you went to California!"

"I know that, but I was asked over so many questions that I could answer, my scholar was real nice."

"What did you teach him?"

"Oh, he was learning his letters. I had a bright colored picture book, and I pointed to the letter and said it, and then he would try to say it after me. Sometimes he would pronounce so funny I would have to laugh. He next to nine clear, too."

"Mosaic?" What is that? Is it a Chinese word?"

"No," said Gertie, laughing, "that is a Mexican word, but I was over 8 long in understanding what he meant.

"Why, 'mark a slate;' he was learning to write. I used to make a letter on his slate, then he would try it, sometimes he would fill his slate full of that one letter. Made real nice, too."

"I should think that was quite a teaching for Sunday-school. This was what the girl with the tossing curls, who had never been to California and never been a Sabbath school teacher said.

"Why, it is the only way you can teach. They don't know things and they want to learn how to read, so as to get into the Bible class. They learn every so fast, of course you can talk to them a little. My scholar asked questions about Chicago, she knew I lived in Chicago, and he had some of the funniest ideas. He asked me if the folks all went to church on Sunday and if they talked along Jesus all the time. And he said he should think they would love Jesus so they would be home sick to go see him. Uncle Allen said that was what he might, though he used some queer words to explain his meaning."

The girls were delightfully over this. It struck them as a strange thing to be home sick to see Jesus.

"He said a good many things that were hard to answer, Gertie continued, "once he asked me how many times a day I must be talked to my Jesus?"

Then the girls all laughed, but some of them grew sober in a very few minutes.

"I should like to answer that question," said Nell Woods.

"What the older girls thought they didn't say, but Gertie, with grave face and thoughtful eyes, went back in memory to some of the searching questions the Chinese scholar asked her, and wished of her heart that she could have told him more about Jesus as his personal friend.—Light of Many Lands.

History of a Lion.

It is not often that action attains the good old age of thirty-two, there is an authentic instance in the case of a captive lion named Samson. This lion, although small, was one of the most powerful brutes of his species that was ever tamed by man, and from his great strength he derived his name. Samson was caught in Africa by a party of bushwhackers when a cub, and sold to some traders who carried him to England; where he was put on exhibition. After he had attained to some considerable size, it was thought best to train him for some cage performances, and it was accordingly attempted by Theodius Moore, but the brute proved so unkind as to terribly tear the poor fellow's arm in such a manner as to require him to have it amputated. Samson was afterward sent to Edinburg, where he was brought to terms by the great Scotch tamer Andrew Wilson, but in a fit of rage he afterwards killed Wilson; and escaping from the cage, he pitched upon two giraffes, the finest specimens of the kind in the country, and throttled them both. He next made an attack upon the old elephant Wellington, but was caught up by that brute in his trunk, and so badly hurt that he crawled away and was soon captured by his keepers.

Van Amburg afterwards bought the animal and brought him to this country, and, after many years of exhibition, he began to show his ill temper again, and in Philadelphia, while with a menagerie, he badly lacerated a boy who was teazing him. In the attempt to quiet the beast he made his second escape, and the first animal that met his royal eye was the Bengal tiger, Young America, caged opposite him. He at once made a dash for the striped brute, and thrusting his paw through the grating of his cage, it was seized and so badly bitten that Samson was tame ever after. His last exploit of any moment was the killing of the trick pony, Dan Tucker. Samson was so old that it was thought he could do no harm, and so he was not closely watched. The poor little pony had slipped his halter and wandered to the hydrant, which stood at the end of the lion's cage, and when the terrible paw of Samson was thrust through the bars, and the merciless claws fastening in his neck, soon drew the poor little fellow to his death. The night watchman heard the commotion, and instantly rushed to the scene, but too late to be of any service, for "Dan's" young life had fled. Samson finally died at Central Park of lung disease.

—During the past term at the Centenary Collegiate Institute at Hackettstown, N. J., forty students were converted. The spring term has just opened with the largest number of ladies ever enrolled on its registry. The College preparatory for young men still maintains its high rank.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

REV. J. W. HESS. REV. W. L. C. HESSECTT,
REV. C. B. GALLOWAY, REV. C. W. COFFIN, D.D.

THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1881.

The Things Which Remain.

The church at Sardis was in a bad way. With a name to live, it was dead. And yet something was left enough to encourage effort and to incite to watchfulness and repentance. In desperate case, all was not lost.

It is often so with individual Christians. They retain the name, there is the remembrance of how they have received and heard, and, amidst habitual shadows, there are occasional glimpses of light. To retain the memory of an experience, and still to feel that it was something sweet and divine, are of value. No one is clean gone forever in whom the impression of the Spirit's work has not been altogether effaced. With worldliness and sin, there is a conscience that is still faithful to reprove, and the more pungent because of the superior light and tenderness of other days. Religious habits have not been altogether put aside. Fitful and irregular, there are some remains of the former custom of secret and social prayer, of Bible reading and public worship. On the whole, the edifice is dilapidated, and going fast to ruin, but it is a house, and one that may be repaired. The state of religion is that of a field, neglected by the tiller, parched with drought, or overrun with weeds. But the plants, although sickly and withered, are there. Ready to die, they may be revived and made fruitful and vigorous by diligent culture, and by careful and generous irrigation. It is not as if there were no house at all. In that case, not repairs, but a new building would be demanded. It is not as if the field were entirely fallow, without a plant in it. In that case there must be sowing, rather than the nursing of what is already rooted in the soil.

The things that remain, that are ready to die, are what is left of a once goodly inheritance, of an experience that abounded with vigorous thrift, of a heart redolent with the bloom and rich in the fruitage of holiness. The situation is one of peril; inasmuch as the plant of grace is ready to die. To go much further in this slothful and negligent way is certain destruction. The Master will come upon his idle and wicked servant as a thief. Unexpectedly and fearfully he will come, unless he repent. The danger is imminent, the hour of judgment and cutting off is near. And yet, there is this element of hope. There remains from the ruins of a past experience something upon which to build up a new religious character. The decaying and dying root is susceptible of being revived. The Spirit, breathing upon this blighted field, may start everything into new life, and a growth filled with the promise of a teeming harvest. What is left of the past is not to be counted worthless, and to be thrown away. It is rather to be cherished, to be utilized, and to be made the incentive to a renewal of the covenant and a fresh start in the race.

The course indicated lies between presumption on the one hand and despair on the other. To the unspiritual Christian, to the backslider, there is almost equal danger in either direction. It is a fatal delusion to imagine that all is well, when our works are not perfect before God, and when the life of faith is fast ebbing away. Scarcely less fatal is the persuasion that restoration is utterly hopeless. Lost spirituality is apt to fall upon one or the other of these rocks. Already half destroyed, the soul's complete ruin is usually brought about by a blind carnal security, or by a sense of despair. To the discouraged soul it comes as a joyous revelation that there is something precious in the very ruins of a once pure heart and consecrated life, and that the root out of a dry ground, graciously nourished and watered, may come forth in beauty and power.

The backslider's restoration is something different from his conversion, because in him there are the remains of a gracious past to be strengthened. It is the same divine power; it is the same mighty Spirit, and the same meritorious sacrifice of a Redeemer's blood. And yet, as to himself, it is a work which he takes up at the point where his unfaithfulness has brought him. In his feeble flickerings of love, his obscured but not extinguished spiritual light, his conscience still not without some traces of its former tenderness, he is to feed and fan the expiring flame. Retaining something of the forms of godliness, he must, by earnest prayer, invest these with their pristine powers. His knowledge of the truth, unimproved and held in unrighteousness, must be vitalized by faith, and so assimilated as to nourish and stimulate his whole being.

It is a certain aspect of religious declension which the church at Sardis represents, and a very prevalent aspect of it. Through absorption in business, or the allurements of pleasure, or through spiritual indolence, how many fall into it? Dissatisfied, restless, unhappy, how are they to find peace? Are they to give up all the past, and to count it as nothing? Are they to ignore what is left to them of a state once bright with the glory of the Lord? Rather they are to strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die. They are to remember how they have received and heard, and hold fast and repent. Where the line of duty has been broken off, they are to take it up; where the experience was arrested, they are to begin anew to press along the mark.

The leader's meeting still retains a place in our excellent Discipline, but of late years it has become, in many sections, almost a misnomer. Technically the leader's meeting is composed of the pastor, class leaders and stewards. The name would seem to indicate that in it the class leaders were to be the preponderating element, both as to numbers and as to the importance of their position.

Among the functions of the leader's meeting is that of recommending persons to the Quarterly Conference for license as preachers and exhorters. It was the custom of the leaders in early times to meet with the pastor and stewards in order to report the condition of their classes, and to pay over money collected by them. We retain the name, but in the most of our leader's meetings there are usually no leaders. The play of Hamlet, with Hamlet left out.

And this is only the indication of a serious change that is happening to Methodism. There are very few class leaders left among us, and the class meeting, in many of our pastoral charges, is almost an extinct institution. If our information be correct, some of the strongest churches in some of the largest cities have no class meetings, and there are whole districts, in almost every Conference, without a leader or a class. We have heard something about the revival of class meetings, but we doubt whether there has been any general improvement. The slight gain at some points has been offset by losses at others. Our stations in Louisiana, for the most part, keep up class meetings vigorously. The same may be the case in Alabama and Mississippi. But in the circuits, and in all the pastoral charges of many of the Conferences, we have been informed that class meetings are almost unknown.

At this rate it will not be long before the institution will be among the relics and memories of the past. Unless our people are trained in them, the knowledge, love and use of them are soon lost. It is probably true of our members of to-day that the most of them are ignorant of the nature of class meetings, and have never attended them.

We fear the most alarming and discouraging aspect of the matter is that our pastors are becoming indifferent, and, in some instances, seem to doubt the expediency and utility of class meetings. If they were thoroughly convinced of the vital importance of these meetings, they could effect a revolution for the better in a single year.

For the maintenance of the spiritual life of the church the class meeting is simply invaluable. It is an institution of Methodism, and without it we are in danger of losing our peculiar power, and of falling into the cold, formal, and merely intellectual ways of some other churches. If we do not revive class meetings it will not be long before there will be a providential call for a second Wesley to organize a reform and to arouse a dead Methodism. Let us have leader's meetings, with leaders in them, and let us have class meetings wherever Methodism exists.

Beyond some brief reflections, when the revised New Testament first appeared, we have not recurred to the subject. Our readers, for twenty-five cents, can furnish themselves with the book, make their own comparisons, and draw their own conclusions.

We should have preferred that the arrangement of chapters and verses in the old version had been retained. It is true that they are indicated by figures in the margin, but by them we can not always tell where one verse ends, and another begins. It may be said that the sense was often interrupted by the old arrangement, but this gave no trouble to readers who attended to the punctuation and the paragraph mark. For purposes of reference the arrangement of chapters and verses is absolutely necessary, and for ordinary perusal the retention of the old form would have been helpful and agreeable to most readers.

There are some changes in the text that seem to us unnecessary, and others that are far inferior to the common version. But in most instances, where changes have been made, they appear to us to be decided improvements, and to clear up difficulties, which, without the help of a critical commentary, were embarrassing to the unlearned.

This revised New Testament is the work of a company of the most eminent Christian scholars in the world, and they enjoyed advantages, in many ways, which the revisers and translators in other times did not possess. We therefore believe that, as a whole, it is the most accurate and the best version extant.

We do not apprehend that the faith of Christians will be unsettled by this revision, nor that the respect of the world will be lessened for the Holy Scriptures. It seems to us that it is well for all to know that our English Bible is a translation, and that the discovery of ancient manuscripts, and the increase of critical learning, has enabled us to attain a more perfect version of the word of God. It will be seen that no important doctrine is affected, and that for substance, and mainly as to the words, we have the same precious old book.

For the present the new version will be used by ministers and Bible students for reference. In some instances it may be introduced into the pulpit, and, where it is not, the preachers will tell us what it has to say about their texts. In the course of a generation, and after the new version of the Old Testament has been published and bound up with this, the revised Bible may supplant the one now in use.

Mr. Wesley was in advance of this movement, as he has given us a new translation of the New Testament with notes. This volume, with the British Conference, is one of the authoritative standards of doctrine, and possibly also of American Methodists. Many of the most striking changes in the revised New Testament are also found in that of Mr. Wesley's. If Wesley were now living he would probably be one of the strongest friends of the revision.

A ministerial brother writes:

Please give the readers of the Advocate the facts connected with the revised Bible. They wish to know if that revision is sanctioned, and is now endorsed by all the evangelical denominations of the world.

In answer to the above, we would say that the facts have been published in this paper during the past year. For the information, however, of those who have overlooked the matter it is sufficient to state: That this Anglo-American revision originated in the Convocation of Canterbury, Established Church of England, in 1870. It was first intrusted to a commission of sixteen biblical scholars—eight Bishops and eight presbyters—of the Church of England, appointed by Convocation, May 6, 1870, under certain rules which were to govern the commission in their work.

They were authorized to invite the co-operation "of any eminent for scholarship, to whatever nation or religious body they may belong." Accordingly, about forty distinguished biblical scholars, of the various churches of Great Britain, were added to the committee. An invitation was also extended to American scholars to co-operate in the work, and in 1871 a separate committee, representing the biblical scholarship of the leading churches and literary institutions of the United States, was organized, to meet monthly in the Bible House at New York. The English committee was divided into two companies, one for the revision of the Old Testament, the other for the revision of the New. The American committee was likewise divided into two companies. The English and American committees exchanged the results of their labors in confidential communications. The revision is thus the joint work of English and American scholars. They are still engaged in the revision of the Old Testament, and three or four years more will be required in which to complete this labor.

So far as we have any information on the subject, the revision is sanctioned and endorsed by no evangelical church. No church, that we are aware of, has made any deliverance in regard to it. The work of the revisers stands upon its own merits, and has no other authorization than that which a large company of the most eminent biblical scholars in the world give it. And for that matter, what we call the authorized version has never been authorized by the action of any ecclesiastical body. It was a revision of the Bishops' Bible, made by order of King James, and it appears gradually to have been generally accepted, and to have come into use, because it was better than the Bishops' Bible, or any other English version.

The present revision may or may not supercede the common version. We doubt whether the evangelical churches will take action on the question. In the meanwhile it may not be expedient to introduce the revision into the pulpit or the Sunday-school. This may come in time, but haste may lead to dissatisfaction, and give needless offense. While we believe it to be, on the whole, the best English version extant, we still think that for the present its use should be confined to the study, private reading, and for reference. There are some changes in it that we do not like at all; but in any case it is better to hold on to the old until the new has been thoroughly tested, and the people have become accustomed to it.

The last General Conference fixed the salary of the Bishops at a moderate figure, and left them to pay their own traveling expenses. This arrangement, however, ought not to apply to the expenses of the Bishops in attending District Conferences. These should be met by the District Conferences, as otherwise the tax upon the Bishops is onerous and unjust. They are expected out of their salary to pay their own traveling expenses in attending the Annual Conferences. This, it would seem, in all good conscience, is burden enough. If the services of a Bishop are desired at a District Conference, the brethren should be considerate and generous enough to see that the expenses be met by themselves. We do not know whether the salaries of the Bishops are paid up in full or not. If they are, they are not paid extravagantly, when we reflect that out of their salaries must come house rent, Annual Conference traveling expenses, and some other heavy incidentals which their work and position demand.

The Christian Warfare.

The experience of every one endeavoring to lead a holy life corroborates the many passages of Scripture which represent holy living as a perpetual struggle. Two principles, that are directly opposite, are in ceaseless conflict in the human soul, and in human life. Good and evil are everywhere, and nowhere can they be brought to agreement; This is the "irrepressible conflict." The object of Christian living is to obtain the highest good in a world of evil. Christian living is the co-operation of the will with all good principles to overcome evil and its influences. Evil is a wonderful power in the world, and hence the very first step in the way of good meets with resolute opposition. The contest can not be avoided. A man can not "live peacefully" in the Christian life. His very profession arrays all evil in aggressive antagonism against him. Whether he will or will not, the conflict is forced upon him, and he can neither evade it nor ignore it. If he does either, he goes down before the overwhelming forces of evil. The Christian character exhibits to the world the fact of triumph over evil. It is the outcome of a struggle in which evil has been discomfited, and hence every form of evil is in opposition, determined and ceaseless opposition to the manifestation of such a character. It often happens, too, that the nearer the approach is made to the attainment of the Christian character the more fierce the opposition becomes. The emissaries of evil are neither timid nor shy, but exhibit an effrontery that is astonishing.

We should never forget, then, that as those who are trying to live Christian lives, we have enlisted in a war from which there is "no discharge." We have entered upon an arena of conflict, where we must win or lose; where we must conquer or be conquered. There is no such thing as drawing off the forces and claiming a drawn battle. The hot pursuit of evil will soon show that the drawn battle is a most disastrous and disgraceful defeat. We are soldiers, and a soldier's business is to fight; not to lie idle and careless in his tent. In ourselves there is nothing to cause us to think that we can ever succeed, but, as Christian soldiers, "our sufficiency is of God." Our King hath an armory where we may obtain all the necessary implements for a "good warfare." There are breastplates and shields and helmets and swords, and these are rendered "mighty through God" to assist us to victory. Words of encouragement from the great Captain are not wanting. The examples of our predecessors, who obtained the victory, show us the possibility of triumph. The reward promised is attractive to our hope and our ambition. The honor that will come after the conflict is ended, and the battle won, will be as enduring as the eternal principalities. Those who win in this struggle will be the heroes of eternity. In this world

> "They may not wear the hero's crown,
> Nor fill the hero's grave,
> But truth will place their names among
> The bravest of the brave."

C.

Holston Correspondence.

Last week I attended the commencement of the University of Tennessee, at Knoxville, at which I had spent six years of my life, three in boyhood and three in later years. The university is richly endowed, having $400,000 in State bonds, besides beautiful grounds near the city, and a fine farm of two hundred acres on the Tennessee river. It is the agricultural and mechanical college of the State, but also maintains the classical and literary departments. There are more than two hundred cadets, the discipline being military. Dr. Harrison, chaplain to Congress, preached the commencement sermon in the Opera House. He also preached at the Methodist Church, of which Dr. Rankin is pastor, in the morning. The sermons were learned and able, and were delivered secundum artem. Like Dr. Cattrell, he has grown vastly since he left Alabama, twenty years ago.

Knoxville is a beautiful city, growing very fast, but Southern Methodism has grown much more rapidly than the population. In 1868, when we reorganized our scattered church there, not more than one hundred members answered to the roll-call. Now more than eight hundred are connected with our three churches. I was most kindly entertained by Dr. Rankin and family. The doctor is a Hiwassee College man, who reflects honor on his alma mater.

Through the kindness of the East Tennessee and Virginia railroad, I was granted a pass to attend the commencement at Emory and Henry College. This noble institution belongs to the Holston Conference, and is located on the railroad, twenty-five miles east of Bristol, on the Tennessee line. It has a fine blue grass farm of six hundred acres, four large and handsome residences for professors, a fine hotel, and dormitories for two hundred students. The grounds, buildings and other property are worth $100,000.

The college has for a long time been under the guidance of Dr. E. E. Wiley as president, but he was superseded last year by Dr. David Sullins, well known as a pulpit orator, and as the founder of Sullins' Female College at Bristol. At the recent meeting of the trustees, Rev. R. N. Price, editor of the Holston Methodist, was elected professor of mathematics, Rev. E. E. Hoss, president of the Martha Washington Female College, professor of natural sciences, and T. W. Jordan, late of Science Hill, Ky., professor of ancient and modern languages. These gentlemen, together with Dr. Sullins, are all alumni of the college, and it is believed that their accession will add largely to its growth and prosperity. They are all able and intellectual men, and three of them are preachers of the Holston Conference. For many years Emory and Henry was extensively patronized by the Southern States, but, since the endowment of the Vanderbilt, it has found it necessary to make a more direct appeal to the people of our own territory. We are amply able to support our own colleges, but at the same time our institutions, from their location in the beautiful and salubrious mountain regions of the Alleghanies, invite the youth from the more sultry and unhealthy South to enjoy their advantages. Emory and Henry has a noble property, and a history of successful management running back more than forty years. The Holston Conference invites them, and places the rarest inducements before them.

The commencement sermon and the literary address were both delivered by the Rev. S. A. Steele, of Columbus, Miss., and a former student of the college. His oratorical and literary powers were admirably exhibited. In this commencement. The exercises were held in a large pavilion, like a circus tent, holding with ease and comfort more than a thousand people. The new mown grass formed a soft carpet for the feet, and the movements of the vast throng were almost noiseless. A stage for the orators, and another for the band, was all the wood-work about the pavilion. Fresh breezes were wafted under the canvass, scented with the odor of clover blossoms and sweet flowers.

The contest in oratory for the Robertson prize medal is always the most interesting event of the commencement. Some thirty years ago the sum of $300 was given by a gentleman to be used as an endowment for the purchase of the medal. The contest is limited to the senior and junior classes, and the effect has been to raise a very high standard of eloquence in this college. The two literary societies are well organized, and every attention is paid to public speaking. This year there were seven speakers who contested for the honor, and it was unanimously awarded to William Yancey Lewis, of Gonzales, Texas.

The graduating class numbered nine, and their efforts were greeted with the usual tokens of approval from admiring friends. The young ladies of Martha Washington Female College were present in force, and the members of the two neighboring institutions seemed to feel the greatest interest in each other's welfare. Next week the commencement comes off at Abingdon, when I may write you again. Yours,

F. M. GRACE.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE, VA., June 16, 1881.

Eureka Springs, Arkansas.

MR. EDITOR: On last Sabbath we attended the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. At nine there was a house full of people in attendance at Sunday-school. The superintendent asked us to hear a Bible class; took us down the aisle, and pointed to a number of gentlemen, perhaps a dozen, as the class. When we came to find out they were simply visitors, had never heard of the lesson, and did not know they were to be mustered into line so soon, so we read the lesson, and gave them a lecture.

At eleven we heard Dr. Blevins, of Missouri, preach, and, though he preached a good sermon, evidently he did not get off well. At three we went to class meeting, and heard some good religious experiences. At night, by way of variety, we went to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and heard Dr. Shinn, of Illinois, preach. Sanctification was the theme of the discourse. When it harmonized with his theory, Mr. Wesley was largely quoted. His theory was evidently stereotyped, and contained three degrees, as we understand it. First, a man was not sanctified when he was justified, unless he died; in that case the Lord cut short the work in righteousness, and he was sanctified in death. Secondly, after justification, by seeking for it through faith in the atonement, a man instantaneously receives the blessing of sanctification; by this blessing or work of grace the soul was cleansed from all sin. But in the third place, a more intelligent faith in the atonement of Christ, the whole soul, body and spirit, were wholly sanctified. In this the mouth as well as the soul was cleansed from all the filthiness of pipes, cigars, tobacco and whisky, so that the vile practice was not only forsaken, but the desire for it destroyed. This was the perfection of life to which he most earnestly exhorted all. We could not but think he was too far advanced for his pupils.

Numbers of invalids are still coming to this already crowded place every day. It is truly sad and distressing to witness the multitude of people here tormented with every imaginable sort of disease, some of whom are as loathsome as the best of old. Every day you hear of marvelous cures which have been effected by the Eureka waters. The place is rapidly improving. It is estimated that there are not less than five hundred new buildings now going up. The population is variously estimated at from ten to twenty-eight thousand. Robbers keep pace with the place; it is no uncommon thing to hear of some one who has been robbed of his valuables. Bro. Barcroft, of the North Mississippi Conference, who is here for his health, was robbed, the other night, of his money and a gold watch.

Some years ago we learned that our pocket-book should be kept under the hollow of the hand in all such places, but not till we had lost $120 by carelessness. To-day we visited the famous Eureka baby on exhibition here. It was found on the top of one of these mountains, not far from under the surface of the earth, by a man who was digging a well. It is twenty-six inches high, and with proper proportions from head to foot. It has the appearance of a solid rock. When found it was covered over with a hard substance an inch thick, which, when analyzed, was found to be composed of blue clay, carbonate of lime and calcareous marl. It is supposed that this substance was soft, that the baby was wrapped up in it when it was laid away hundreds of years ago. This covering has all been removed from its head and neck; also lengthwise of its body it has half been taken off. It weighs eighty-four pounds. Its ears, eyes, nose, finger and toe nails are perfect.

A great many different opinions are entertained with regard to it. Some believe it to be a petrified human being, some that it is an idol of some ancient race of people who once inhabited this country, and others believe it to be a fraud gotten up for the purpose of making money. The facts in the case are that it was found here; the man who dug it up still lives on the place. We are posting up for the convention which meets on the twenty-first; hope some grand conception may be originated there, which will give to the cause of temperance a new impetus.

J. F.

EUREKA SPRINGS, ARK., June 14, 1881.

Mission Scenes.

Rev. W. W. Royall, Missionary in China, in a recent letter to the Richmond Christian Advocate, says:

At Wang-Doo I had my first experience of a Chinese tea-shop. There are scores of them, and the number of people who have merely a sleeping-room and get all their meals from these tea-shops is very large. We went into the second compartment, for there were three, and the price of tea varied according to the style of each. In ours we took a seat at one of the many tables, set on the earthen floor, and at once two cups were placed before us, in each of which was a quantity of tea leaf. Boiling water was poured over it, and, putting an inverted cup over the one below, the tea was left to steep till we were ready for it. A pipe was placed before Brother Marshall, and tobacco and a lot of fuses provided. The pipe is of brass, and in the bowl is a quantity of water. The stem goes nearly down to the water, and the tube that holds the tobacco goes quite into it. The tobacco is twisted (for it is like fine cut) with the fingers and inserted in this tube; then the tube is put into the socket, and the fuse, which has been smouldling on the table, meanwhile, is by a puff blown into a blaze and applied to the tobacco. The smoker takes one or two whiffs, puffs out the tube, and blows away the charred stem; puts in more, and starts again.

While Brother Marshall smoked, a dozen or more had gathered to see the foreigner eat. My overcoat pocket was larger, and my tea furnished the drink. We took it without milk or sugar. As often as our cups would get low they were replenished from the two in which the tea was steeping, and then a boy went the rounds, filling up each cup in the whole shop with boiling water. Whether it was the canal water or the tea that did it, I know not; but I was made almost dizzy by the unusual quantity of celestial beverage I drank. You pay seven cash, or 7 li, or a cent, for your cup, and many of the Chinese sit for hours trying to drink the worth of such a pile of money. If you eat anything, that, of course, is extra.

After dinner, or tiffin, rather, we strolled out to the stone bridge over the Suchow creek or canal, and had a fine view of the country for miles around. To the south and southwest the land lay a black and fertile plain, dotted with villages, while to the west rose the pagoda of Tsing-Poo, and in the southwest a low line of blue mountains made a beautiful back ground for the picture. Whitewash and trees, towers and fences would have made the view near at hand almost lovely; but the low, dingy houses and the scarcity of trees, except the groves of bamboo, injured the effect to a great degree. There was a camp of some two hundred soldiers at Wang-Doo, and as they flew out in their uniforms of bright blue, with a broad scarlet band around the neck like a yoke, and coming down in front and around the sleeves of the cloak to the back, it was a brilliant and not unpleasing sight. There were several crimson banners in the line, which served to heighten the effect.

Bro. Marshall preached at two o'clock to John 21. He made a good talk, but it was listened to with listerable attention. By kindly insisting on it, the heathen soon learn to behave tolerable well during preaching. I saw a specimen the other Sunday in our Nezing city, got up, walk to the door, open it, and spit! Wish I could serve him, round in Virginia some! This man, however, though an ignorant countryman, was a professing Christian. But, I presume, we'll get other preaching, for Bro. Soochow arrived, weary and toursore, Easter, when on the way we saw the cormorants, spoken of by writers as being used here for catching fish. They have a month of most enormous size, and beneath the throat a large pouch, where they deposit all the fish as soon as caught, until it is full. Then the master takes them in his hands and disgorges the fish, sending them out again when it is done. Beneath this pouch there is a string tied to keep them from swallowing the fish they catch. The birds are about the size of a large mossy duck, or a small turkey, and are of a rusty black. There are thousands of them just here, and when not at work they are tied by the leg to a tree or bush, near the master's house. In feeding time the man holds their mouths open with one hand and pours small fish by the pint into the mouth with the other. In word "cormorant" has a new meaning to me now!

Woman's Missionary Advocate for June is well filled with articles and correspondence of interest. Mrs. Alice Parker, writing from Shanghai, China, March 22, 1881, says:

Since last I wrote, we missionaries have made a regular Methodist move—at least, we have all moved, and are settled, for a short time at least, here in the old mission home (Shanghai), but only for a short time, for we are expecting Dr. and Mrs. Lambuth out in the Autumn, or as soon as Dr. Lambuth's health will permit. We will then give up their home to them, and also their work, or as much of it as they care to take back. I find plenty here to do—enough to keep me busy all the while, and more than enough. What, with the boarding-school, day-schools, and women, there is more than enough for one lady to care for.

It has been raining during most of our stay here, and we have not been able to have all the schools come together on the Sabbath, but I have been very much interested in the Sunday-school. You, too, would be interested and amused, could you see them during one of their sessions. They come in at noon, not orderly and quiet, and in their Sunday or holiday dress; nor yet with the noise, and rudeness, and rattle, to be seen among the same class of children (street-Arabs) in our own cities. They are of all ages, from fourteen down to the little tot who can not speak plain.

The girls of the boarding-school, with the little woman, take charge of them for an hour, each taking one or two, and going aloud over and over the lesson with the child until she can repeat it herself. You can imagine it not to be a very quiet place, with twenty teachers, and thirty or more scholars, each thus studying aloud. It is amusing to see the smaller girls teaching some larger than themselves, and, as is often the case, the teacher making greater efforts to impress the lesson than the scholar to retain it.

After the hour for study is over the preacher comes in, and hears each recite his or her lesson, and gives to each the promised cash, five—not quite half a cent. They then repeat over in concert what has been studied before. They are asked a number of questions on their lesson, sing a hymn, have prayer, and are dismissed.

—Mr. G. T. Lathrop has on hand a plentiful supply of the Revised New Testament, at 25 cents a copy. More expensive and desirable editions can be had also. Let our friends get the book. The print is clear, and the paper excellent. We have said about all we care to say for the present about this revision. Let all get it, and study it, and see for themselves. Those who wish to be fully informed will find everything in a small volume, Companion to the Revised Version of the New Testament, by Alex. Roberts, D. D., with supplement by a member of the American Committee of revision. Published by Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co., New York. This work gives a history of the manuscripts, and versions upon which the Greek text is based, and the reasons for the changes made in the authorized version. Mr. Lathrop has it for sale, in paper at 25 cents; in cloth at 75 cents. It is an instructive work, and apart from any interest in this new revision, should be read by all who wish to know about the Bible.

—Captain William Barrett, a steward and old member of the Carondelet-Street Church, of this city, died on Sunday evening last. He was at his post at church on Sunday morning acting as one of the ushers—a service he had rendered for many years. Returning home in his accustomed good health he ate his dinner with a good appetite, and got till about four o'clock did he complain of indisposition. About five o'clock he died quietly and peacefully. His physician pronounced the cause of his death to be apoplexy. Bro. Barrett was a good man, exemplary in his walk, and noted for his benevolence and great kindness of heart.

George W. Race, Esq., of the old and well known law firm of Merrick, Race and Foster of New Orleans, died Friday, June 17. We believe he began the practice of his profession in this city in 1817. He was a prominent and successful lawyer and a citizen of unblemished reputation. We have known him well through all these years and can bear personal testimony to his worth and excellence as a Christian gentleman, and as an upright and valuable citizen. He was an active and prominent member of the Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church, of New Orleans.

Last week we had several days of unusual heat for New Orleans. Sunstroke was of frequent occurrence, and quite a number of deaths was caused by it. People die from the great heat, in many cases, where there is no exposure to the direct rays of the sun, and where there has been no violent exercise. The temperature is a little lower now, but there is need of caution. Temperance in eating and drinking is perhaps the best preventive.

Prof. Nicholson, of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Baton Rouge, gave us a call this week. He informs us that the annual examinations are now going on. Sunday, July 3, Bishop Galleher, of the Episcopal Church, preaches the annual sermon. Monday, July 4, there will be announcement of distinctions and delivery of certificates, and an oration by W. F. Mellen, Esq., of New Orleans.

By notice in another column it will be seen that the fourth session of Mississippi State Sunday-school Convention will be held at Jackson, Mississippi, July 20 and 21, 1881. The exercises promise to be very interesting. We notice that among other distinguished visitors, J. H. Vincent, D. D., the great Sunday-school man of New York is expected to be present.

Dr. O. R. Blue, presiding elder of the Mobile district, Alabama Conference, informs us that his District Conference meets at Jackson, on the Tombigbee river, August 11. All concerned will take due notice.

—For information of all concerned we would say that the postoffice of Seashore Camp Ground is Biloxi, Miss. The address of W. H. Foster and P. Hallaran is New Orleans; that of Dr. E. F. Griffin is Moss Point, Miss.

—We refer our readers to the card in another column of Augusta Female Seminary, Staunton, Virginia. This institution is most delightfully located in the cool and salubrious mountains of Virginia, and stands among the best of the schools known to us for thorough teaching, and excellent management. Where change of air and more bracing climate are required, our Southern girls can find no better place. The Augusta Female Seminary is widely and most favorably known.

—The advertisement of the Huntsville Female College, Huntsville, Ala., will be found in this number of the ADVOCATE. This Institution enters, August 31, upon the thirty-seventh year of its history. It is admirably located, has a full and capable faculty, and is in a prosperous condition. Rev. A. B. Jones, A. M., the worthy President is an experienced educator and a wise administrator.

—The commencement exercises of Alabama Conference Female College Tuskegee, Ala., were to have closed Wednesday June 22. Dr. A. S. Andrews was to preach the Baccalaureate Sermon, Sunday last, June 19. We regret that the notice was received too late for last week's ADVOCATE.

—Commencement Sunday at Mansfield Female College, La., is next Sunday, June 26. Rev. Dr. Mathews, of this city, is to preach the sermon. He goes well provided with fixed ammunition, and the brethren at Mansfield and Shreveport will doubtless make full use of their opportunity.

—Readyville Seminary Commencement, Baton Rouge, La., is Thursday June 28, at 7:30 P. M. We send our best salutations to Sister Reed, and our regrets that we can not be present. May the young ladies, and all in attendance, have a pleasant time.

—Account of commencement of Kosciusko Male and Female Institute was received too late for this number of the ADVOCATE. It will appear next week. We are glad to learn that Bro. Adams has had a prosperous year.

Rev. J. Bancroft, writing from Tuskegee, Ala., June 16, says: "Twelve persons were received into the church at prayer meeting last night." We should call that a good and profitable meeting. Now keep the new members in the prayer meeting, and in the class meeting also, and they will do well.

Personal and Other.

A stringent anti-shooting bill has been introduced in the South Carolina Legislature. By its provisions a person killing another in a duel or so wounding him that he dies within six months, is to suffer death; and a person carrying a challenge, or being present at a duel, is to be imprisoned in the penitentiary for two years and upon.

The late Mrs. Laura Sherman, of Bridgeport, Conn., bequeathed $84,000 to religious organizations, including $1,000 to the American Bible Society, $1,000 to the Home and Foreign Mission Society, and $5,000 to the American Missionary Association for the benefit of the freedmen.

Solomon Truth, who thinks she is 103 years old, is as plucky as ever. She recently received a silk gown from England, which she says she is going to live and wear. She says she has survived her grandchildren, and wants that now to live forever.

Secretary Allen, of the Nebraska Board of Trade, estimates the grain crop of Nebraska for the present year at 50,000,000 bushels, an increase over 1880 of fully 30 per cent. The wheat crop is estimated at 15,000 bushels, a gain of about 50 per cent.

The original of "Mary had a little Lamb" was written by Mr. John Roulstone, of Boston, proprietor of a popular young school, sixty years ago. "Mary," the owner of the lamb, is now Mrs. Tyler, of Sandersville, Mass.

A class for women has been organized at Yale college; the lectures and instruction to be delivered by Prof. Sumner, Williams, Brewer, and others. It will resemble what is popularly known as the "Harvard Annex."

George Bancroft is at Newport, where he is embowered in roses, which he is particularly fond of. The old historian may be seen riding on horseback early in the morning, sometimes several miles from town.

There are about twelve hundred children in Chicago where twelve hundred children of the poorer class are taught to sew. These schools are under the personal supervision of the best known ladies, who are accomplishing wonders in their good work.

A memorial to William Tyndale, the martyr, and translator of the New Testament, is to be erected on the Thames Embankment in London. It is to take the form of a statue, which is to cost $20,000.

Ex-Secretary Delano, of the United States Interior Department, has given $10,000 to Kenyon College of Gambier, Ohio, to be used for building a new hall for the preparatory school of the institution.

Sir Francis Truscott, the late Lord Mayor of London, entertained twelve thousand visitors during his year of office at breakfasts, dinners, and luncheons, and five thousand at other entertainments.

Robert Pashe's appointment to the presidency of the Admiralty, Board gives him supreme control over the Turkish fleet. No Christian has hitherto held such high rank in the Turkish service.

Mr. Gladstone, when staying at Hawarden, may be seen every morning at 8 o'clock wending his way to the village church, to take part in the early service as a prelude to the work of the day.

The Church Times, the organ of the English ritualists, heads its editorial columns with a request for "the prayers of the church for Thomas Pelham Dale, priest, a prisoner for conscience sake."

The South Carolina House of Delegates has passed a bill prohibiting the sale of all alcoholic liquors excepting malt liquors, wines and cider, outside of incorporated cities, towns and villages.

—H. W. Sage, of Ithaca, New York, to whom Cornell University is already indebted for many benefactions, has recently given $10,000 to the botanical department of the University.

—Gen. Francis A. Walker, Superintendent of the United States Census, has been chosen president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and will enter on his duties in October.

—Thomas Hughes, M. P., will return to America this spring and build for himself a house at Rugby, Tenn., but it is not seriously believed that he will reside permanently in America.

—Queen Victoria wrote the pathetic notice of Lord Beaconsfield's death which appeared in the Court Journal. She thought more of him than any Minister she has had.

—Rev. W. H. Kincaid, of the Pittsburg Advocate, secretary of the National Association of Local Preachers, has been appointed a delegate to the Ecumenical Conference.

—The late Francis Amory, of Boston, bequeathed $20,000 to the New England Hospital for Women and Children, and $2,000 to the Boston Young Men's Christian Union.

—The Concord Summer School of Philosophy will open for a third term on July 11, and will continue five weeks. There will be eleven lectures in each week.

—The parliamentary elections in Sydney, Australia, have resulted in the defeat of two very popular politicians who were candidates on the temperance issue.

—Rev. Richard Burgess, the eminent English archæologist, and the author of several translations from the Syriac, died in London, April 19.

—The Brazilian Senate has honored itself and done a good act in passing a law rendering Protestants eligible to seats in the Chambers.

—Prof. Proctor is soon, it is reported, to marry an American lady, and, after a visit to England, will make this country his permanent home.

—The Sultan of Zanzibar has put in irons three slave owners prominent in the late disturbances at Mombasa.

—Dr. Somerville, of Glasgow, is holding evangelistic services in St. Petersburg, Russia.

—The Japanese cremate about nine thousand bodies annually.

Princely Giving.

Mrs. Redpath, of Montreal, has given twenty thousand dollars to endow a chair in the Presbyterian College.

—The heirs of the late Hon. Henry Wadron, of Hillsdale, Mich., have given $15,000 to endow a Latin chair in the college at that place.

—The Hon. John B. Ally has subscribed $10,000 to a hospital fund that is being raised in Lynn, Mass., and the fund now amounts to $35,000.

—The will of the late E. J. M. Hale, of Haverhill, Mass., makes bequests of $100,000 to the Public Library, $20,000 for a city hospital, and $20,000 to the American Bible Society. There are other liberal bequests.

—Mrs. J. B. Gibson has purchased, at a cost of about $20,000, the building on Mt. Auburn, Cincinnati, formerly used as the Widows' Home for German Women, Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

Books and Periodicals.

China and her Neighbors. A Tract for the Times, as a Volume in Chinese, by Rev. Young J. Allen, published at Shanghai, China, by the American Presbyterian Press. Except title page, and table of contents, the work is altogether in the Chinese. It is designed to promote peace, and encourage progress. Colored maps, and an appendix. The Chinese type are very beautiful. The Flowery Kingdom is being gradually blessed by a thoughtful and instructive literature.

We have received also copies of Wan Kwoh Kung Pao, a weekly magazine of which Dr. Young J. Allen is Editor and Proprietor. It is published at Shanghai, China. Price $1 a year.

An unusually interesting group of pictures will appear in the July Scribner, to an article by Mr. W. C. Brownell, on "The Salon," or "The Younger Painters of America." The first picture is by Mr. Sargent, a pupil of Carolus Duran, who has just taken a prize in the French Salon. Then follow Maynard's picture of Frank D. Millet, and pictures by Tiffany, Douglas Volk, Maria R. Oakey, Mrs. Whitman, Miss Bartol, Miss Knowlton, and Miss Cassatt. Among the notable pictures in this number is a portrait of Dr. Ballinger, by the famous Lenbach, of Munich.

The Sunday Magazine, July, 1881, contains its accustomed variety of matter, useful, entertaining and devotional. Among the longer articles are: The Crusades; Peter the Hermit and the Capture of Jerusalem; Pæstum and its Ruins; Out of the World; chapters, 10-12; something about Bells; The Ruins at Sis and their Relics; The Monte Pulciano Bel Bridges, and how to Treat Them, by C. H. Spurgeon; Erastus C. Benedict; The Story of a Good Man's Life; Temperance Talks; The Juvenile's Portion; and Thoughts for the Afflicted; Mine Fry, the Soldier's Friend; The Owl and the Weasel; Glimpses at the Religious World.

Good Company, May, 1881, is fresh and crisp. Among the articles are: The Alhambra and its Master Magician; In the Land of Midnight Sun; The Wayside Well—a poem; Recollections of my Childhood in Old Japan; Mirth of Service; The War Eagle—a poem; The Grasshopper Lawsuit—a story; One Method of Benevolence; David Conn and his Wife—a story; Among the Pueblos; Aunt Hannah; Hero and Heroine in New York. Published by Good Company, Springfield, Mass., $1 a year.

Appleton's Journal, July, 1881, has: Saints and Sinners; Arab Humor; Books and Science; The Two Prisoners; The Fortunes of Literature, under the American Republic; Mrs. Lamb's History of New York City; A Dialogue on Poetic Morality; One Year in a German Cookery School; At Home in Fiji; French Family Life, and Manners; Old Dreams; Editor's Table; Notes for Readers.

The Magazine of Art, June, 1881, is splendidly illustrated and rich in art literature. Among the illustrated articles and engravings are: Artemis—frontispiece; Pictures of the Year; The Place of Pictures in the Decoration of a Room; The First Trial of a Young Artist; Hints for a Sketching Club; Our Living Artists; Treasure-houses of Art; The Dudley Gallery; Lady Art Students in Munich. Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co., publishers, London, Paris, and New York. Yearly Subscription, $3 50.

—Catalogue of Centenary College, Jackson, La., for the Academical year, 1880-81, has been received. Copies of the catalogue can be obtained by addressing the President, Dr. C. G. Andrews, Jackson, La.

—The Southern Musical Journal, June, 1881, is a good number of this excellent journal.

Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the ADVOCATE, and shall endeavor to admit only those from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns. We will mention having seen the advertisement in the ADVOCATE. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endorsing our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

"Oh, what becomes," said Chloe fair,
Of all the pins that from my hair
I drop unheeded on the floor,
And never miss or see them more?

"My dear," said Darwin, "they all go
Into our Mother Earth below;
There their development begins;
And, aiding, they vile forms become."

These "Medicated Glasses," a full description of which may be seen in our advertising columns, must have considerable merit, judging from the many testimonials we have seen from reliable parties. Several of our attaches are using them with much satisfaction and benefit. Though called "Medicated" the glass is really, chemically prepared, and one of the great virtues of it is, that its constant use does not weary the eye. Some parties using this glass claim that the eye rather becomes younger and stronger, than older. If this is really true, generally all spoken the "Medicated Glasses" almost invaluable. We subjoin the following remarks of Dr. Ashe, editor of the Texas Christian Advocate:

"We are in receipt of inquiries respecting the 'Medicated Glasses' and spectacles advertised in the ADVOCATE. We have been using a pair of the spectacles for some weeks, and are very much pleased with them thus far. We find them very easy to the eye. The glass retains its brilliancy, and prevents the fever-ishness of the eye, which often accompanies long-protracted reading."

By sending to H. L. Hansal, 71 St. Charles street, New Orleans, your address and a postage stamp, he will send you a test by which you can tell the strength of glasses required.

Please mention our paper when writing for the glasses.

A cigar contains acetic, formic, butyric, valerianic and propionic acids, creosote, carbolic acid, ammonia, sulphuretted hydrogen, pyridine, picoline, collidine, rubidine, and a boy just after having smoked his first one will think there's something worse than these things in it besides.

A lady had a favorite lap-dog which she called Pitchmore. "I shudder at the," said somebody, "for a pet, madam. Where did you find it?" "Oh," drawled she, "it was found suffering from dog. You remember what he says. Perchance my dog will howl."

"What, twenty-five cents a pound for sausage. Why, I can get chickens at Schindler's for twenty cents." "Well, then, why don't you?" "Because Schindel was out of em." "Well, why I was out of fish I sell sausage for twenty cents a pound."

Mr. Philip Werlein, 185 Canal street, New Orleans, is one of the largest piano, organ and music dealers in the United States. His house, situated on the corner Canal street, is one of the most attractive in the whole city. Mr. Werlein has a large and well-established business and is strictly reliable and trustworthy. He holds himself responsible for the good performance of all instruments he sells, and gives full guarantee, and is willing to send pianos also on trial, paying all expenses if mistaken. The Checkering pianos, Mathushek pianos, and Hale's pianos are high, improved piano-fortes, and are recommended for purity, good strength of tone, and for good durability, they are sold low for cash, or on small monthly payments. Old pianos taken in exchange at their value. Circulars from Estey's, Mason & Hamlin's factories, are sold by this house at prices that defy competition. Music is sold at reduced rates at their store. Musical instruments of every description, strings, etc., at very low prices. Special attention will be given to all orders by mail. Call on or write to Philip Werlein, 185 Canal street, for anything wanted in music.

The little son of a very prominent minister said to his father: "Pa, Sunday-school Ned Brown don't know that my name's Why-ley. He don't know the 16th verse of the 3d chapter of Revelations either." "Indeed!" "Some old Yankee, I reckon."

An old miser, having listened to a long sermon on charity, said to his pastor: "I think you have sufficiently proved the necessity of exhausting this." "Excellent!" replied the latter, "I'll without delay begin to practice it myself."

If you have a cold and are desirous of getting well immediately, get a bottle of Dr. Tutt's Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm. This remedy is both good to the taste, as well as a speedy cure.

There is a knack in the front door, and the colored preacher's to the key of the house. "I wonder," said a white woman who called to see a colored woman on a sick bed, "what makes colored people so much fonder of watermelons than white people are?" "Because," replied the lady to whom the question was addressed, "they have more sense."

Recorder to witness with bandaged head: "Did he look as if a piece of stone had struck you, Witness?" He might have had something of the kind on his mind.

W. C. SHEPARD & CO.—American China dinner, breakfast and tea set, 100 pieces, for $15. Equal to $25 goods. Also, a full line of French China.

A little three year old girl, while her mother was trying to get her to sleep, became interested in some outside noise. She was told that it was caused by a cricket, which she eagerly observed. Mamma, think he ought to be whipped?

A young lady who had ordered home a pair of unusually high-heeled boots was flushed by the announcement by Bridget, from room answering the door-bell: "If ye please, miss, there's a man in the hall below and a pair of spurs for you."

An old farmer said of his pastor who was exceedingly mild in his preaching, "He's a good man, but he always takes with the teeth up."

Drill sergeant about to call the roll: "Those who are present will answer 'Here,' and those that are not present will answer 'Absent.'"

Mrs. Fennell says her ministers sermons are a little obscure, but, she says, "I do love to sit and watch the linkages of his face."

Business Notices.

Wilbor's Cod Liver Oil and Lime.—Persons who have been taking Cod Liver Oil will be pleased to learn that Dr. Wilbor has succeeded, from directions of several professional gentlemen, in combining the pure Oil and Lime in such a manner that it is pleasant to the taste, and its effects in Lung consumptive are truly wonderful. Very many persons whose cases were pronounced hopeless, and who had taken the clear Oil for a long time without marked effect, have been entirely cured by using this preparation. Be sure and get the genuine. Manufactured only by A. B. Wilbor, Chemist, Boston. Sold by all druggists.

Many Lose their Beauty from the hair falling or fading. Parker's Hair Balsam supplies necessary nourishment, prevents falling and grayness, and is an elegant dressing.

CANVASSERS make from $25 to $50 per week selling goods for E. G. RIDEOUT & CO., 10 Barclay St., New York. Send for Catalogue and terms.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE.

This old and well known Institution of learning is located at Emory, Washington County, Virginia, on the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad, twenty-five miles east of Bristol, Tenn., and is the property of the Holston Annual Conference, M. E. Church, South.

FACULTY

H. Sullins, D. D., President.
Rev. R. E. Hoss, A. M., Professor Natural Science and Moral and Mental Philosophy.
J. W. Gordon, A. M., Professor Ancient and Modern Languages.
Rev. R. N. Price, A. M., Prof. Mathematics and English Literature.
Rev. C. K. Stewart, Tutor.

Rates have been so reduced that the unusually small sum of $175, paid in advance, will meet all the charges for 10 months.

The College is now in the forty-third year of its existence, has an attendance of about 200 young men, has superior facilities for instruction and supervised study, and is located in a healthful spot in an region twenty-two hundred above the level of the sea.

Fall term begins September 8, 1881. Spring term, January 26, 1882. For catalogue and information address H. SULLINS, President.
Emory, Virginia.

Millersburg Female College

Is in one of the most beautiful and healthful parts of the blue glass region of Kentucky, and has quite first class teachers. Larger numbers of pupils, and more moderate charges, than are other female school under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Miss Hattie Randle, whose father was a member, and whose two brothers are members of the Louisiana Conference, is a teacher in this college. I will be in Shreveport [illegible] August, and will accompany any young ladies from Louisiana who may wish to go home to Kentucky. Let the preachers remember they pledged themselves by public resolution to send to Millersburg all young ladies under their influence who would leave the South for Northern schools.

T. M. GOODLOE, M. D.
Millersburg, Bourbon Co., Ky.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,

HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.

The Fifty-second year begins August 31st. A more healthful location can not be found. The College was located in a time of uncommon excitement. A full Faculty of experienced teachers, splendid buildings and a complete outfit of all the requisites literary, musical, languages and art, offers the highest advantages. A delightful home for pupils. Price reduced to suit the times. Special inducements offered. For terms and new catalogue address

REV. A. B. JONES, A. M. President.

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

New Edition of WEBSTER, has 118,000 Words, 3000 Engravings, 4600 NEW WORDS and Meanings, Biographical Dictionary of over 9700 Names.

Published by G. & C. MERRIAM, Springfield, Mass.

TO BE GIVEN AWAY!

Having decided to distribute the remainder of

My Stock of Pictures

among my customers, rather than go to the trouble of packing and moving the goods, will for the next 60 days offer the entire stock, consisting of [illegible] Pictures, including prices ranging from the size of [illegible] inches, at one-fourth their present value. No cards, but prices will be put upon the goods, as this is strictly a cash business. Call and see the goods and be convinced.

My stock is composed in part of Chromos, Oil Cloths, Upholstery Goods, Mattings, Wall Paper, Window Shades, Cornices, Picture Cords, Wire Screens, Frames, Mouldings and Mirrors.

E. HEATH,
97 and 99 Camp Street,
NEW ORLEANS.

SEND 25 CENTS

For a copy of the new

REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

Mailed post paid on receipt of price by

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

FOR RENT. A DESIRABLE COTTAGE ON Seashore Camp Ground for the Season. Cottage fully furnished. Apply to Lock Box 61, New Orleans.

WANTED, BY A YOUNG LADY OF EXperience, a position as teacher of the English branches, in a family or school. Address D. A. C. R. B., this office.

WANTED, A FEMALE TEACHER, COMpetent to teach Music. Address, stating terms of Mathematics, Languages and Latin, in a family school. Apply to the undersigned. J. W. ADKISSON, Murphysboro, Miss.

Haywood White Sulphur Springs,

OPEN ALL THE YEAR.

WAYNESVILLE, N. C., Altitude 2717.

SLASON & [illegible], Proprietors.

The celebrated SUMMER RESORT in the very midst of the GREAT BALSAM MOUNTAINS, is now prepared for the reception of visitors.

It has a magnificent valley, with smooth roads, delightful walks, and within romantic limited circuit of the mountains are found all manner of curiosities, such as the Natural Bridge, Cullasaja Falls, Whitewater Falls, Falls of Tuckasegee, Falls of Tennessee, Falls of Tessentee, Falls of Tanasee, Falls of Tanawha, Falls of Tanatuna, Falls of Tanalaska, Falls of Tanaroo, Falls of Tanatoo, Falls of Tanatee, Falls of Tanatoo, Falls of Tanatee, Falls of Tanatoo, Falls of Tanatee

Agricultural.

ASPARAGUS CULTURE.—Sow the seed in drills, early in spring, two inches deep, and eighteen inches from row to row. The soil should be of a rich, sandy loam, well manured and prepared. After the plants are either one or two years old, the former preferred, transplant them into permanent beds prepared in the following manner: The ground should be thoroughly trenched, burying in plenty of manure, as no more can be supplied after the beds are planted, except by surface dressings. The soil can scarcely be too rich, for the sweetness and tenderness of the shoots depend on the rapidity of their growth. A plot of ground twenty feet wide and fifty feet long will be large enough to supply a moderate sized family. Over it sow about one hundred pounds of salt, incorporating with it the soil to the depth of four inches. After being properly leveled divide it off into beds four feet wide, with alleys of two feet between them. Drive in a strong stake at each corner, take up the plants carefully from the seed rows with a spading fork, expose them to the air as little as possible, keep them covered during the time of planting, and do not allow the roots to become dry. Stretch a line the length of the bed, nine inches from the edge, and with a spade cut a small furrow six inches deep; set a row of plants along the trench, nine inches apart, with the crown of the roots two inches below the surface having finished a row, cover them directly, rake evenly, and proceed to another furrow a foot from the first, plant in the same manner, and so on until you have four rows to a bed. Cut down the stems the last of autumn, and, after clearing off the weeds, cover with a dressing of manure or rich compost, which is to be forked early in spring. The plants must be properly established before cutting for use, which will require at least two seasons. As the alleys between the beds will be so much ground idle the first two years, they can be planted with cabbage, lettuce, radish or other similar crops; but nothing should be planted on the beds, as it would rob the ground of a great portion of its nutriment. The New York market gardeners at Oyster Bay, who make asparagus growing a specialty, practice the following method: They find the crop will grow in any kind of soil that is free from stone, from stiff clay to light sand; but a good sandy loam is the best adapted for an early cutting for market. The ground should be thoroughly plowed as deep as possible and furrowed off each way from four to five feet. At each intersection dig the dirt out so as to make the hole at least twelve inches deep; then put in about a half bushel of good strong stable manure and press down; cover with soil, and set the plant so that the crown will be about eight or ten inches from the top of the ground when leveled off, spread the roots out flat in setting and cover with soil; keep the ground loose by cultivating; hoe out all grass and weeds. Asparagus can be set out either in the fall or spring; the fall is the best, as the roots get ready to start sooner in the spring. They will want no additional manure until the second spring after setting, when they should have a liberal dressing of manure plowed in, and the ground kept loose and clean. The third spring give the plants a sprinkling of guano; as soon as frost is out of the ground, cultivate and loosen the soil. This season you will cut, but not too heavy, as it is better to cut light to strengthen the roots. After cutting, give a heavy dressing of manure, and keep loose and clean. In the fall, before the seed drops, cut the tops and burn, to prevent filling the ground with small plants. All that is necessary after this, is to use guano in early spring, and plow and work in, and, after cutting, to apply a good coating of manure between the rows, keeping the ground loose and clean.

One year old plants are best for setting. Any kind of manure is good, with occasionally a dressing of salt. The very best manure, where it can be obtained, is night soil, plowed in; but any kind will do if you use enough of it. There need be no fear of giving it too much, as the crop will pay fourfold to the quantity of manure used. For marketing the sprouts should be all large, as green as possible, and cut, when bunched, eight inches long. The bunches should be five inches across the butt end, and tied near each end. If to be kept over night wet the butts and stand on the ground in a cool cellar; keep the tops dry after bunching.—N. Y. Herald.

BUNN'S CARTON CULTURE.—The editor of the Southern Live Stock Journal says the most successful cultivator of cotton he ever saw was the late John Bunn. For years he was in the editor's employ, and his manner of working cotton was so much superior to the current system that the editor thinks it merits a notice.

The large farm he was entrusted with, had year after year, under other managers, proven almost a failure. Every year the crop was run down with grass, and not worked until it was too late to make a fair yield. The place seemed too large for the force. Bunn was hired, and soon the force was only kept busy by adding several hundred acres to the crop heretofore planted. Other men had tried as hard—had been as industrious and as attentive, but the method was lacking. The owner never hired an overseer with less book learning than Bunn, and yet all ever hired put together, had not his capacity to cultivate cotton and corn.

The secret of his success undoubtedly was, in simple, systematic, fast and thorough work. His ground once thoroughly bedded, a turn-plow was never again used. He "swept" his corn and cotton, and that so fast and well that it was always clean, and the ground could not get hard. While others were chopping their cotton for the first time, he was employing his hoes in his corn. He used a large solid sweep and slid of both cotton and corn with it. Two furrows to the row not only slided the young crop, leaving but a narrow streak for the hoe, but covered up the middle. Several "sweepings" were often given the cotton before a hoe was put in it. About the time others gave their second chopping he commenced his first, and the work was thoroughly done as he went over. The sweep had left nothing for the hoes except the cotton, and had so thinned this, that it was growing and larger than that "barred off" and "blocked out" by the hoe hands, under the old plan.

Bunn's system enabled him to cultivate a large acreage, and cultivate it well. He did most of it with his plows, and killed the grass and weeds before they were visible to the eye. Had he the chance, he would start his sweeps over his cotton field that had been swept two days before, provided it had been rained on after the sweeping. His flying artillery—his plows—were his main dependence. He needed a good and ample plow team, and he not only did good work, but such rapid work with his plows, that but little was left for the hoes.

During a dry season, when slip-shod farmers would have to stop their plows on account of the ground being too hard to plow, Bunn's field was like a plant bed. The constant sweeping kept it as soft as an ash bank.

ARTICHOKES FOR HOGS.—Thinking that the readers of your paper will be interested in the experience of a practical Western farmer with artichokes, I give you the result of my experience with one acre of Red Brazilian artichokes, which took about four and a half bushels of tubers, cut in pieces containing two or three eyes. I broke ground deep and harrowed well, then marked off with a three-rumered potato marker, my rows three feet apart, and planted one piece every fifteen inches and covered with a cultivator, and I cultivated as I do potatoes or corn, keeping clear of weeds. In the fall I had a large growth of tops covering the ground and about ten feet high, but feared, owing to the drought that ruined our potato crop here, that the crop would be light. Part of my patch was a hog lot, and about the middle of October I let the hogs into it and gave them more as they needed it, about fifty hogs for fattening, and twenty-five breeders and pigs, and at the same time began to feed new corn.

The result was that my hogs fattened unusually well, kept healthy, and I got them into market early, and my sows and young pigs never did so well. I have lost so many hogs of late years with what is called hog cholera that I have been afraid to keep many hogs, which at present prices are very profitable. Twenty-five or thirty years ago we used to let our hogs run loose, and they would root in the woods and prairie and find some vegetable they needed to keep them healthy. I never knew hog cholera then. Providence gave the hog a nose, indicating thereby that something beneath the surface of the ground was necessary for its life and health, and we, instead of providing that article of food for which he may dig, put a ring in his nose, and wonder why our hogs are not healthy. Brother farmers, let us like men of intelligence study the nature of the animals beneath our care, and provide for them such food as their nature plainly indicates that they need. In the artichoke we have just what the hog needs to keep it healthy. In the season of the year when our pastures fail, it supplies a fresh vegetable food of which the hog is very fond, and yields in such abundance that a small patch of ground will supply the hogs of an ordinary farmer. Last week I was digging some of my artichokes, and to my surprise I found that they yielded four bushels to the square rod, which would be six hundred and forty bushels per acre.

I also planted about one-half a bushel of white French artichokes, a very large and productive variety. It is sweeter than the red and equally productive, but I have not yet tested it for hogs, but will next fall.—Western Rural.

GLUCOSE.—Prof. H. W. Wiley, in the Popular Science Monthly for June, records the amazing progress of this new industry. "There are twenty immense glucose factories either built or in process of construction. Already a capital of over $2,000,000 is invested in the business. The daily consumption of corn for the manufacture of glucose is 35,000 bushels, and the annual amount about 11,000,000. All these factories have sprung up in the last twelve years. They are run day and night, Sunday's included, to meet the demand, and still fail to supply it. Notwithstanding these notorious facts, it is almost impossible to find anybody willing to admit that he buys glucose or uses it for any purpose. Its existence is never made known by newspaper advertisements or placards. It is never bottled, boxed or barrelled under its own name. It is as carefully screened from public view as nitroglycerine. But by patient investigators like Prof. Wiley, the world would never know what becomes of the enormous annual product of all these glucose factories. The paper to which we refer confirms current reports. There is no doubt that glucose is largely used in the preparation of table syrups and candies, for brewing and for artificial honey. Nine-tenths of the cheap candies are made of glucose. It is hard to find a table syrup wholly free from this adulteration. Glucose is present in most of the beer now brewed. Most impudent of all its intrusions is that of direct competition with the bees. The bee himself is not as busy as the glucose manipulator. The latter puts up a "honey" of which the waxen cells are made of paraffine and the contents consist of snow-white glucose. The fraudulent comb and honey are handsomer than the finest white clover "Vermont," and can be sold at half the price at a great profit. This story would be deemed incredible but for the positive assurance of men like Prof. Wiley. To the question, "Is glucose wholesome?" the professor replies that it all depends on the presence or absence of sulphuric acid, lime and copper, which are apt to find their way into the article through imperfect chemical treatment. But whether healthful or not, glucose is a false pretense, when sold for the thing it is not, and should be brought under proper control by legislation.—New York Journal of Commerce.

TREATMENT OF QUACK GRASS.—A Michigan farmer has communicated to his editor the following item of experience: "We had a field of nine acres well overrun by the pest. It was summer fallowed and well cultivated with a Robins' cultivator, but the quack nearly ruined the wheat, and entirely killed out the clover seeding. After my father's death three years ago, I took the farm, and this field I sowed to wheat, and had as fine a crop of quack as ever grew. I then manured the field heavily (about twenty-five large loads to the acre); plowed it myself, beginning the 15th of May. I turned it flat over, five inches deep. This was followed by a thorough dragging, and corn was planted May 25th. I cultivated four times and left it. The result was a good crop of corn and no quack."

BONE DUST FOR MELONS.—An Indiana farmer tried four different fertilizers for melons—poultry droppings, well rotted cow manure, and old bones gathered upon the farm and reduced by placing them in alternate layers with ashes the previous year, mixing all liberally in the different hills, which were eight feet apart each way; and he says: "Such a crop of melons as came from the hills that had the bone dust I never saw before."

WHEN TO CUT GRASS.—According to the average of thirteen analyses made by Professor Emile Wolf, of Germany, green grass contains eighty-eight per cent. of nutritum. If cut when in bloom it will contain but sixty-two per cent. whereas if not cut until the seeds are fully formed or ripe, it will contain only thirty-one per cent. of nutrition.

Household.

STEWED MACARONI.—Break the macaroni into lengths, and stew twenty minutes, or until tender; prepare the sauce beforehand; cut half a pound of beef into strips, and stew half an hour; the water should be cold when you put the meat into it; at the end of that time put in a minced onion and a pint of tomatoes, peeled and sliced; boil for an hour, and strain through a colander when you have taken out the meat; the sauce should be well boiled down by this time; you do not want more than a pint for a large dish of macaroni; return the liquid to the saucepan, add a good piece of butter, with pepper and salt, and stew until you are ready to dish the macaroni; drain this well, sprinkle lightly with salt, and heap upon a chafing-dish; pour the tomato sauce over it; cover, and let it stand in a warm place ten minutes before sending to table; send around grated cheese with it. The Italians serve the meat also in a separate dish as a ragout, adding some of the sauce, highly seasoned with pepper and other spices.

HOW STILTON CHEESE IS MADE.—An English writer thus tells how the celebrated Stilton cheese is made: The night's cream is added to the milk of the following morning, or, if the cheese is desired to be very rich, a still greater proportion of cream. The rennet is then added, but no coloring matter is used. When the curd has come, unlike the method pursued in making most other cheeses, it is taken out without being broken and put whole into a drainer, where it is squeezed down hard until the whey is entirely pressed out. When dry it is put, with a clean cloth, into a cheese-vat, and placed beneath the press, the outside being first well salted. When sufficiently firm to be removed, it is put upon a dry board and tightly bound round with a cloth, which must be changed daily, in order to avoid cracks in the skin, until it is found to have a coat formed, when there is no occasion for its further use, and nothing more need be done to the cheese than to brush occasionally, and frequently turn it upside down upon the shelf where it may be placed.

There is nothing better for wives and daughters, physically, than to have the care of a garden—a flower pot, if nothing more. What is pleasanter than to spend a portion of every day in working among plants, watching their growth, and observing the opening of their flowers from week to week, as the season advances? Then how much it adds to the enjoyment to know that your own hands have planted them and have pruned and trained them! This is a pleasure that requires neither great riches nor profound knowledge. The advantages which women personally derive from the soil and snuffing the morning air are freshness and beauty of cheek and brightness of eye, cheerfulness of temper, vigor of mind, and purity of heart.

FLOWERS FOR THE DINNER TABLE.—A pretty way to arrange such flowers as the sunflower, large oxeye daisy, hollyhock, or any of the old-fashioned large common blossoms, is in a basin of some beauty in itself, not as a bouquet, but floating on the water, as it were, surrounded by appropriate leaves. I saw such an arrangement yesterday in a dressler of china bowl, standing on a plate like itself, filled with clear water, and merely leaves and a few large Marguerites floating in it. I suppose these flowers were forced, but I thought what a pretty device it was for the "fair lilies," the yellow ranunculus, wood anemone, the water crowfoot, waterlily and a number of other delightful plants we shall have by and by.—Cardiff Times.

PICKLED PEACHES.—Take a gallon of good vinegar, and add to it four pounds of sugar; boil for a few minutes and remove any scum that may arise; then take cling-stone peaches that are fully ripe, rub them to get off the down, and stick three or four cloves in each peach; put them into a stone jar, and pour the liquor, boiling hot, over them. Cover the jar closely, and set it in a cool place for a week or two; then pour off the liquor and boil it as before; after which return it to the peaches, boiling hot, which should be carefully covered and stored away for future use.

GUARAPO OR PINEAPPLE SPRUCE.—This is a South American recipe: To four quarts of water add two good cups of sugar and a large pineapple chopped fine, with all the juice that runs from it. Place the mixture in a narrow neck water-jar or junk-bottle. Let it stand where the heat is steady till it begins to ferment. In very warm weather it will need to stand about two days. When ready, place it on the ice till very cold and serve. It is delicious half frozen, but a little more sugar and pineapple should be added at first.

LIVER HASH.—This hash is delicate and appetizing, and nice as a change from the liver and bacon known to all cooks. Boil the liver until thoroughly tender—there must not be even a suspicion of hardness about it. Then mince it finely with a chopping knife. Heat the mince very hot in a sauce or roux of butter and browned flour. The seasoning is pepper, salt, a little dash of lemon, or a little piquant sauce, such as mushroom catsup.

SALAD OF LIMA BEANS.—Put some Lima beans, potatoes and beets (all boiled tender) on ice, and a short time before serving cut the potatoes and beets into rather thin slices, add the beans, and dress with oil, pepper, salt and vinegar. Garnish with a few water cresses.

RAISED BISCUIT.—One quart flour, one cup milk warmed, one-half cup yeast, piece of melted butter size of an egg, one tablespoonful of sugar, salt; stir up and let it rise, then knead and let it rise again, then put in the pans and let it rise an hour; cut them out with a large coffee-cup, butter the edges of the biscuit, and lap them over like Parker House rolls.

FRIED FRUIT.—Finely flavored apples, grated fine and sweetened very sweet, are delicious when frozen. Pears are fine, either grated fine or stewed and run through a sieve, then made very sweet and frozen. The flavor is better when the fruit is grated than when it is stewed.

TOMATO OMELET.—Peel a couple of tomatoes, which split in four pieces, remove the seeds and cut them into small dice; then fry them with a little butter until nearly done, adding salt and pepper. Beat the eggs, and mix the tomatoes with them, and make omelet as usual.

MUFFINS IN PANS.—Break in two and one-half cups of flour, two eggs, and two spoonfuls of powder, one pint of milk last, little salt. Bake in a hot oven.

Scientific.

THE EARTH'S ROTATION DEMONSTRATED.—The celebrated pendulum experiment of Foucault, showing the revolution of the earth, was most successfully performed before a large audience, at Dr. Warren's lecture yesterday on "The Earth as an Astronomical Body." The principle of the experiment is, that a heavy body vibrating as a pendulum will not be turned out of the plane of its oscillation by the revolution of the beam that supports it, for the twist of the thread or wire of support will not perceptibly change the direction of the heavy ball. Hence if a ball be set swinging over either pole of the earth, it will swing toward every point of the equator in twenty-four hours by simply swinging in one direction all the time, while the earth revolves beneath it. It is an experiment of the greatest delicacy. The point of support must be as nearly frictionless as possible. The ball must be round or the greater resistance of the air on one side will alter the plane. Any moving breath of wind operating constantly on either side would change its direction.

A lead ball weighing about twenty pounds was carefully prepared, turned and floated in mercury to ascertain the lightest side for the joint of suspension. It was then suspended on knife edges by wire of Bessemer steel, thirty feet long. It was then drawn to one side of arc, fastened with a cord and left a half hour to find its true position of rest. Then after a careful examination of the whole philosophy of the case and illustration by a model, the string was burned asunder by Mr. Allen of Rochester. The ball moved on its way, majestic and silent as the earth in space. The lecture then went on. After awhile, Dr. Warren called on Mr. Allen for a report. He reported that the Amphitheater had already turned two inches under its short arc. In a few minutes it became necessary to stop the movement of the ball because the world had turned an upright piano that stood against the front of the platform to where it soon would be injured by contact with the ball that persisted in its path. The experiment was repeated with precisely the same result. Another ball was set swinging in a plane at right angles with that of the first, in order that a large number of the audience might have ocular demonstration that the earth went spinning on its way a thousand miles an hour, besides its forward motion of one thousand miles a minute.

This experiments of the greatest delicacy and significance are brought before the audiences of Chautauqua, with the most evident results.—Chautauqua Herald.

THE SAND BLAST.—Among the wonderful and useful inventions of the times, is the common sand blast. Suppose you desire a piece of marble for a grave stone; you cover the stone with a sheet of wax no thicker than a wafer; then you cut in the wax the name, date, etc., leaving the marble exposed. Now pass it under the blast and the sand will eat it away. Remove the wax and you have the raised letter. Take a piece of French plate glass, say two by six feet, cover it with fine lace and pass it under the blast, and not a thread of the lace will be injured, but the sand will cut deep into the glass wherever it is not covered by the lace. Now remove the lace and you have every delicate and beautiful figure raised upon the glass. In this way beautiful figure raised upon the glass. In this way beautiful figures of all kinds are cut in glass and at a small expense. The workmen often hold their hands under the blast without harm; even when it is rapidly cutting away the hardest glass, iron or stone, but they must look out for finger nails, for they will be whittled off right hastily. If they put on steel thimbles to protect the nails it will do little good, for the sand will soon whittle them away; but if they wrap a piece of soft cotton around them they are safe. You will at once see the philosophy of it. The sand, whittles away and destroys any hard substance, even glass, but does not effect substances that are soft and yielding, like wax, cotton, or fine lace, or even the human hand.

—A young German by the name of Flouss, is said to have invented an apparatus realizing almost the wildest conceptions of Jules Verne in his "Cruise of the Nautilus." He sets the diver has either had to work within the narrow compass of a diving-bell, or else to move about as best he could, hampered by a length of hose through which fresh air is pumped down to him from the surface. M. Flouss has devised a means by which he takes down with him supplies of condensed air, and so can dispense with any connection between himself and the surface than such as is absolutely necessary to insure his being hauled up again to the light of day. The air which he expires is passed through a filter of caustic alkali, which robs it of its carbonic acid, and is then fitted again for the ordinary purposes of breathing by the admixture of oxygen, which is carried down in a condensed form. The diver, in short, moves through the water much as a fireman with an extincteur strapped to his shoulders moves through a conflagration, and with an equal sense of safety. The mechanism, if not already perfect, can easily be made so, and its results upon the future of mining engineering will be almost incalculable. The difficulty experienced by the divers employed upon the Tay bridge would have been almost entirely removed had they been able to use the apparatus of M. Flouss.

—A noted physician who has had much to do with insane persons, and wide experience in the treatment of deranged minds, states that centrifugal movements are characteristic of intelligence and higher development, and that centripetal are a mark of incomplete evolution. As an illustration, if you wish to test the intellect of a new cook, or other suspected person, give her a plate to polish, and notice in which direction she moves her hand. If she goes round it from left to right, as in winding up a watch, all is well; but if she goes from right to left, it is a sign of mental inferiority. He states that there is no better proof of an inferior mind than to see one drawing circles from right to left.

—A society for the advancement of chemical industry, has been formed in England, with the purpose of bringing together all persons who, possessing chemical, physical and engineering knowledge, use that knowledge in the application of chemical action on a manufacturing scale, or have charge of or an interest in chemical industries. Prof. Roscoe, speaking at the opening meeting of the society, suggested that it might eventually be desirable to form a distinct branch of the engineering profession, that of chemical engineering.

—In London the electric light has to compete with gas that costs only $1 per thousand feet, and yet the projectors of the new process are confident of success. In American cities gas averages nearly $3 per thousand feet.

EDUCATIONAL.

AUGUSTA FEMALE SEMINARY,

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA.

MISS MARY J. BALDWIN, Principal.

Opens September 1st, and closes June 1st, 1882.

This Institution continues to increase in prosperity from year to year. It offers superior advantages in location; in its buildings and grounds; in its general appointments and sanitary arrangements. Its full corps of superior and experienced teachers; its unsurpassed advantages in Music, Modern Languages, Elocution, Fine Arts, Physical Culture and Instruction in the Theory and Practice of Cooking. The successful efforts made to secure health, comfort and happiness. Its opposition to extravagance. Its standard of solid scholarship. For full particulars apply to the Principal for catalogues.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Owned, controlled and managed by the Louisiana Annual Conference.

Course of study equal to any college in the South. Its roll of pupils has nearly doubled in three months, and still they come. Noted for healthfulness of locality. All at living rates.

Total expense for Spring term, commencing February 14, 1881, only $75, in literary and classical course. Music $30. No extras. Let Louisianians build up their own schools.

A specimen copy of College News free on application. Address REV. J. LANE BORDEN, President.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

In point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishops McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. C. Kreckinger, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music is $50 additional.

Spring session begins February 1, 1881. A discount of twenty per cent. to Methodist preachers, and Publishing House hands taken from them as par.

Send for catalogue to REV. E. E. HOSS, President.

HAMBURG ARK. HIGH SCHOOL,

Thirty Miles North of Bastrop, La.

This Institution, for both sexes, now in its fourth year, has 64 months yet remaining. Its facilities for educating are peculiar, and its charges are mild rates. All modern improvements introduced. Faculty full and experienced. The principal boards his teachers and pupils, regarding the latter as his own children.

One hundred and twenty-five dollars will cover all school expenses, except Music.

City brothers are referred to Judge R. H. Todd, J. M. Bonner and J. M. Lewis, Esqs.; to Rev. Dr. C. W. Carter and Bishop Keener.

W. C. R. CONNERLY, Principal.

January 6, 1881.

READVILLA SEMINARY,

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

A home school for girls. Thorough training in all departments. Full corps of able teachers. Expenses moderate. Number limited.

For particulars address MRS. MARY W. REED, Principal.

Memphis Conference Female Institute.

JACKSON, TENNESSEE.

REV. A. W. JONES, A. M., D. D., President.

This well known College of the South and West begins its Fall session the First Monday (3d) in September. Opening Concert and Address Tuesday, September 7, 1880. For thirty-six years there has been an average of more than twelve graduates annually.

The location is full and efficient. The determination is to stand among the foremost in the progress of Science, Literature and Art.

For further information apply to the President.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin September 20, 1880.

This is a family Boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. H. S. MAGRUDER, Baton Rouge, La.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Opens September 6, 1880. The last session was the most prosperous one since the war. The whole cost of board and tuition need not exceed $140 in the Preparatory Department, and $160 in College classes for the scholastic year. Send for a Catalogue.

C. B. ANDREWS, President.

East Mississippi Female College,

MERIDIAN, MISSISSIPPI.

REV. J. W. ATKINSON, A. M., PRESIDENT.

A chartered and prosperous Southern school for girls and young ladies. Few schools have grown more steadily and rapidly in public confidence and patronage. Increased in numbers during the past seven years as the following figures show: 53-76-98-96-97-143. Commanded in the last year from Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee and Alabama. Its past history, increasing facilities, accessibility and methods of close and thorough instruction assure its friends of a long and prosperous future for the institution. Send for catalogue.

HIWASSEE COLEGE,

EAST TENNESSEE.

Founded 1849, and located where

Pure waters flow,

Sleek cattle low,

Cool breezes blow,

Ripe apples grow.

Excellent and tried teachers. Terms very favorable. The Female Department is at SWEETWATER, on the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad. The Male Department, at HIWASSEE COLLEGE Postoffice, seven miles out in the country. A neat monthly paper, the "Hiwassee College Reporter," at fifty cents a year. Address

J. H. BRUNNER, President.

JEFFERSON COLLEGE.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN.

Six miles from Natchez, Miss. Session begins September 16. Full corps of instructors. Course of study thorough and extensive. Nearly fifty boarders from abroad. Pupils from a distance lound with the principal. Entire expense for ten months, $145. For catalogues address the principal,

J. S. RAYMOND, Washington, Adams county, Miss.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.,

Will begin its forty-first session October 4, 1880. Great attention paid to the regular course. Teachers to the Music and Art departments selected with reference to special fitness. Charges moderate.

For further information address H. M. MOSS, A. M., President.

HOMER MALE COLLEGE

THE TWENTY FIRST SESSION

will begin the

FIRST OF SEPTEMBER 1880.

Address R. A. SMITH, President.

W. F. MELLEN,

Attorney at Law,

12 CARONDELET ST.,

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

MISCELLANEOUS.

B. J. MONTGOMERY. C. KIRCH

R. M. & B. J.

MONTGOMERY

FURNITURE

AND

MIRROR EMPORIUM,

Corner Camp and Poydras Sts.

After a sojourn of over six weeks among the Factories North, East and West, we open the Fall and Winter Trade with the largest and best selected stock of Furniture, French and German Plate Mirrors, Ornamental and Fancy Goods, Upholstery Goods and Cabinet Makers' Hardware ever brought to this city. We select our goods in person from the best factories and are determined not to be undersold. Our assortment being too extensive and varied to be enumerated in detail, we request our customers and the general public to call and inspect for themselves.

On hand a full line of the celebrated Vienna Bent Wood Work and Invalid Wheel Chairs.

Goods packed and delivered F. O. B.

TEACHERS,

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

In the South-west is now in stock and reserved, all orders, large or small of Publishers' prices.

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at one notice, and prices guaranteed as low as they can be had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application.

Also a General line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER,

SLATED CLOTH,

LIQUID SLATING,

BLACKBOARDS,

BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,

CHALK CRAYONS,

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,

NUMERICAL FRAMES,

SCHOOL SATCHELS,

BOOK STRAPS,

WRITING PAPER,

DRAWING PAPER,

BLOTTING PAPER,

WRITING BOOKS,

COMPOSITION BOOKS,

SLATES AND PENCILS,

INK, INK STANDS, PENS,

PENHOLDERS, CALL BELLS,

Kindergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

Send for anything you want or address for prices.

G. T. LATHROP,

New Orleans.

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors, members and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

South-western Agency for

Readers' and Writers' Economy Co.

G. T. LATHROP, New Orleans.

Christian Advocate.

Literary Notes.

—Mr. Emerson has just passed another birthday, his seventy eighth.

—Miss Foster's life of Peak has been translated into Hungarian.

—A society has been formed at Calcutta for the encouragement of Bengali literature.

—Julian Hawthorne is about to publish a new novel under the title of "Fortune's Fool."

—R. Worthington is about to bring out new editions of the Commentaries of Albert Barnes.

—Capt. Mayne Reid has written a new story, and "The Free Lances" is its name. It is a romance of Mexico.

—The Boston "Herald" is printing some San Antonio, Texas, letters from the Rev. W. H. H. Murray, late of Boston.

—A memorial to Lord Beaconsfield at Hughenden is proposed, in the shape of completing and decorating the parish church.

—Mr. George P. Lathrop is going to Europe. The "Literary World" says to write up Spain for "Harper's Monthly." We doubt not he will do it well.

—The "Wilderness Cure," published by Wm. Wood & Co., of this city, tells the story of the cure of a consumptive by out-of-door life in the Adirondacks.

—J. W. Bouton has issued the "Illustrated Catalogue of the Paris Salon of 1881." It is a very interesting work, full of reproductions of charming compositions.

—Mr. Burdette, the funny man of the "Burlington Hawkeye," is winding up a very profitable lecture season, and going to Massachusetts to spend his money.

—London is opening its eyes over a copy of the Sunday edition of the "New York Herald," with its twenty-eight pages, comprising not less than 168 columns.

—The widow of the late Emile de Girardin, the noted Paris journalist, will contest his will and claim half his property. She separated from him many years ago.

—Jefferson Davis has gone to Canada, so as, by being on English ground, to secure English copyright for his new work, "The History of the Southern Confederacy."

—Irving's pen and papers remain on his desk at Sunnyside just as he left them for the last time. So did Theodore Parker's until the death of his widow a few weeks ago.

—The revised New Testament has been published by Harpers in the Franklin Square Library, and by Munroe in the Seaside Library. There is no reason why any one should be without a copy of the Revision.

—The English Free Traders are sending copies of Montgredien's "History of the Free Trade Movement in England" for free distribution in this country. A capital little hand-book it is on a most important subject.

—Grant Allen, reviewing the last book of extracts from Thoreau's Journal, "Early Spring in Massachusetts," calls it "exasperating," for the disfigurement of its every page by its author's intense self-consciousness.

—Prof. White, of Harvard, and Prof. Packard, of Yale, are co-operating in a new edition of the Greek authors, which will be brought out by Ginn & Heath, of Boston. There will be two forms: one with, the other without notes.

—Mr. W. H. Shepherd, who has done so much work of the kind, has just completed a "Bibliography of Carlyle," which goes greatly into detail, and enumerates trifling letters and scattering contributions to journals as well as more important works.

—The whole of the new edition of Poole's "Index to Periodical Literature," is expected to be in the hands of the printer before the end of the year, but it will occupy about seventeen month in passing through the press, which is to make an octavo of 1,200 pages.

—Mr. Edward King, in his latest letter to the "Evening Post," says that the second part of Mr. Taine's "Origins of Contemporary France" is out, and is likely to receive a mingled verdict of praise for its fidelity, and of censure for the blackness of its picture.

—Sir George W. Cox has written a sort of half-way book between his "Manual of Mythology" and his "Mythology of the Aryan Nations." He calls it an "Introduction to the Science of Comparative Mythology and Folk-lore." It is a pleasant book to read, and a useful one to own.

—Mr. Alcott, who has been taking an extensive trip at the West, and who has everywhere been affectionately greeted not only for his own sake but because he is the father of the author of "Little Women," says that he has been riding through the West on the "Little Women's chariot."

—A good hand-book for students of Isaiah is Rev. T. K. Cheyne's new translation of that Prophet, with commentary and appendices, published by C. Kegan Paul & Co., of London. The author is an accomplished Hebrew scholar, and the book is the result of the labor of many years.

—Dr. Alexander Roberts's "Companion to the Revised New Testament," giving the reasons and authority for many of the changes introduced by the Revision Committee, has been published by I. K. Funk & Co., of this city,

PRICES CURRENT.

CORRECTED WEEKLY.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Monday, June 20, 1881.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Sat.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	6	6¾
Ordinary	7¼	7¼
Good ordinary	8¾	8¾
Low middling	9¼	9¼
Middling	10¾	10¾
Good middling	11¾	11¾
Middling fair	11¾	11¾
Sales to-day	1,500 bales.
Receipts since our last	2,828 bales.
Receipts previously	1,522,338 bales.
Sugar, ₱ lb.:
Fair	7⅛ @	8
Fully fair	— —	8⅛
Prime	— —	8¼
Choice	— —	8⅜
Yellow clarified	9	9⅛
White clarified	9⅝	10
Powdered	— —	— —
Crushed	— —	— —
Molasses, in hhds., ₱ gallon:
Common	20	32
Fair	26	27
Prime	35	40
Choice	—	—
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common	3	3⅛
Fair	4⅛	5⅛
Prime	5¾	6⅜
Choice	—	—

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western	18	26
New York	—	—
Coffee, ₱ lb.:
Rio ordinary	9¾	9¾
Rio, fair	11¾	11¾
Rio, prime	12¾	13
Cheese, ₱ lb.:
Western factory	—	—
English dairy	—	—
Candles, ₱ lb.:
Best tallows		11¾
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl.:
Choice K. D.	3 25	3 30
Flour, ₱ bbl:
Superfine	3 00	— —
XX	4 25	4 50
XXX	4 75	5 25
Choice XXX	6 75	6 00
Choice family	— —	— —
Fish:
Mackerel, No. 1 in bbls	— —	6 75
Half bbls	— —	3 75
Kits	— —	75
Mackerel, No. 2 in bbls	— —	5 75
Half bbls	— —	3 15
Kits	— —	70
Mackerel, No. 3 in bbls	5 00	5 75
Half bbls	— —	2 90
Kits	60	— —
Codfish, ₱ lb	— —	4½
Herring, ₱ box	25	28
Oils, ₱ gallon
Coal, in cases	— —	— —
Coal, in bbls	— —	— —
Linseed, raw	55	58
Linseed, boiled	58	60
Cotton seed	31	38
Lard	75	85
Soap, ₱ box:
Magnolia	— —	2 40
Olive	— —	2 50
Palm	— —	— —
Castile	— —	2 75
Soda, ₱ lb	— —	— —
Starch, ₱ lb	— —	3
Salt, ₱ sack
Coarse		95
Fine		1 25

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow		62
White		64
Mixed		63
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western		46
Red rust-proof		—
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs
Choice		75
Hay, ₱ ton:
Prime		16 50
Choice		16 50
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel:
Mixed		—
Clay		2 80
		2 90

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb:
Breakfast	10¾	11
Shoulders	—	7¾
Sides, clear rib	—	9¾
Sides, clear	10¼	10¾
Hams, sugar-cured	10	11
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl	—	17 25
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb.:
Clear rib sides	—	9¾
Clear sides	—	10
Shoulders	—	6¾
Lard, ₱ lb.:
Choice, in kegs	—	11¾
Choice, in tierces	—	11¾

ESCULENTS.

Potatoes, ₱ bbl.:
Irish	1 25	1 75
Sweet	— —	2 00
Onions, ₱ bbl	5 00	5 25
Apples, ₱ bbl	— —	— —
Cabbages, ₱ box	— —	— —
Sour Krout, ₱ bbl	— —	— —

BALING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard
India	— —	— —
Jute	— —	— —
Baling Twine, ₱ lb	— —	17
Ties, ₱ bundle
30 lbs and buckles	— —	1 65

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ dozen
Grown chickens	4 50	5 00
Young do	4 50	5 00
Ducks	4 50	5 00
Geese	4 00	5 00
Turkeys	9 00	12 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen
Western	10	15
Southern	13	17
Honey:
Strained, ₱ gallon	— —	— —
Comb, ₱ lb	— —	— —
Pecans, ₱ lb
Louisiana	— —	— —
Texas	9	12
Oranges:
Louisiana, ₱ bbl	— —	— —
Foreign, ₱ box	4 50	5 00
Wool, ₱ lb:
Louisiana	26	27
Texas	— —	— —
Feathers, ₱ lb:
Geese	— —	— —
Hides, ₱ lb:
Country green	— —	8
Dry salted	10¾	11
Dry flint	12	12½
Ox Horns, each	— —	6
Tallow, ₱ lb	6¼	6¾
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton
In sacks	— —	— —
Meal	20 00	22 00
Oil cake	— —	— —
Cooperage, ₱ each:
Sugar hogsheads	3 00	3 25
Molasses barrels	1 30	1 55
Half barrels	— —	1 95
Kegs	— —	70
Oak Staves, per 1200
Kegs	— —	— —
Barrels	— —	— —
Tobacco:
Extra claret	95 00	100 00
Extra longshend	135 00	140 00
Extra pipes	155 00	160 00
Low lugs	— —	4¾
Medium	— —	— —
Good to fine	— —	— —
Low leaf	6¾	6¾
Medium	6¾	7
Good	7¾	8
Fine	7¾	8
Selections	10	12

—A Springfield minister remarked, just before the sermon: "I should like to remind the congregation that we have a prayer meeting at the chapel every Thursday evening regardless of the weather. Those of us who were there last week were led to feel that there must be a sogrety of umbrellas among the people as a whole."

AN OLD LADY writes: "I am sixty-five years old and was feeble and nervous all the time, when I bought a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic. I have used a little more than one bottle and feel as well as at thirty, and am sure that hundreds need just such a medicine." See advertisement.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DES MOINES, Iowa, June 14.—One of the most destructive storms that ever visited central Iowa, swept through here Sunday afternoon and evening. A heavy hail-storm at Peoria did much damage; the storm also blew down houses and crops, killed cattle and did great damage at several other places. Several persons were killed.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 14.—The City of Pekin brings advices from Hong Kong under date of May 16. The latest intelligence from Pekin is to the effect that the youthful emperor has been suffering from small-pox for twenty days. He is in a critical condition, and the court physicians have little hope of his recovery. The Empress of the West is expected to recover. Over one hundred nurses have been employed to feed her with their milk.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., June 14.—Sunday was a terrible day for cyclones in Northwest Missouri, the atmospheric pressure was very great between 4 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and during that one short hour no less than three "twisters" dealt death and destruction in as many paths. The first that came to my knowledge of the Herald was from King City and vicinity.

The cyclone started near Savannah, in Andrew county. Its course was northeast through Flag Springs and King City. Many houses were destroyed, and not less than twelve lives lost in Andrew county. At Flag Springs and King City the destruction was much greater, the loss of life in that vicinity being probably fifty men, women and children. The public school building in King City, a large brick structure, was razed to the ground. Hundreds of horses, cattle, hogs and sheep were killed, one man losing eighty cattle, another sixty sheep, and another seven horses.

WASHINGTON, June 15.—The following report, showing the condition of cotton, was issued by the Department of Agriculture to-day.

COTTON.—Returns to this department show the total increase of the area planted in cotton to be less than 1 per cent. more than last year. Reports as follows: 41 counties in North Carolina report an average increase of 1 per cent.; 16 counties in South Carolina the report acreage is the same as last year; 70 counties in Georgia give an increase of 2 per cent.; 15 in Florida give a decrease of 3 per cent.; 31 in Alabama give a decrease of 2 per cent.; 41 in Mississippi give the same average acreage; 11 in Louisiana give an increase of 3 per cent.; 68 in Texas give an increase of 2 per cent.; 32 in Arkansas give an increase of 1 per cent.; 17 counties in Tennessee report an average of 3 per cent. decrease.

The condition is much lower, being 93 this year, against 99 last year, at the same time, and 96 in 1879. The weather is generally reported too wet and cold; the crop consequently is very backward.

BOSTON, June 15.—A special to the Boston Herald, to-day, from New York, says: Cadet Whittaker, whose singular case occupied so much public attention for many months past, will in all probability be acquitted. This announcement will not be officially made until voluminous testimony of several thousand pages has been examined; but no acquittal is evitable. It will, however, not vindicate the accused cadet or give him a certificate of innocence.

There were three charges against him—conduct unbecoming a gentleman, perjury, and self-mutilation.

The case was tried before a tribunal of nine officers of the army, with rank of captain to Brigadier-General. During the latter part of the examination one of those officers was so ill as to be unable to attend, but the case went on and was finished before the remaining eight. Singularly as it may seem, the law permitted the case to proceed, notwithstanding the same law requires that there shall be a majority to secure conviction. The tribunal was evenly divided, four standing for conviction and four for acquittal; thus Whittaker is discharged by a tie vote. The fact remains that his innocence of several charges is not established.

It is said that the absent officer was favorably disposed towards the arraigned cadet, and would probably have voted for his acquittal.

It is estimated that this remarkable case, from first to last, has mulcted the Government out of not less than $75,000, and practically and legally it is almost where it was at the beginning.

ST. PAUL, Minn., June 15.—A special to the Pioneer Press, from Winnepeg, says: War has broken out between Sioux and Cress, and a battle has been fought near Woody Mountain, in which twenty-eight of the former were killed.

NORFOLK, Va., June 16.—The United States steamship Alliance, G. H. Wadleigh, commander, sailed at 11 o'clock to-day, for a four months' cruise, between Norway and Spitzbergen, in search of the missing steamer Jeannette and her party.

GALVESTON, June 17.—A dispatch from Dallas, says a party of Mormons who emigrated from England to West Texas, last fall, passed through that city on their way to Salt Lake.

GALVESTON, June 17.—A dispatch from Trinity says: Shaft numbering 125,000, sent out by the Fish Commissioner at Washington, were deposited in the Sabine River yesterday.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 18.—A special to the Advertiser says: A fire at Greenville, to-day, destroyed the stores of H. Raun, Ezekiel M. Levy and J. W. Jordan, and the cotton warehouse and staples of W. W. Wilkerson. The losses $30,000; insurance $21,000.

FOREIGN.

BERLIN, June 14.—In the Reichstag yesterday some Conservative members expressed apprehensions relative to immigration of Roumanian Jews into Germany, and begged the Government to try to divert the enormous stream of German emigration to the Danubian regions, instead of to America.

Herr Richter, the Progressist leader, said that during the month of May last, the exodus of Germans was the greatest that had taken place during the last ten years, and it was because laborers and artisans are shamefully ill off in all respects.

QUEBEC, June 15.—The bill wing is the official statement of the number of houses destroyed and localities rendered homeless and destitute by the fire on the night of the 8th inst.: 612 houses, 1211 families, consisting of 1028 individuals. Two-thirds of the above have lost all and have no insurance on their properties.

MADRID, June 18. Sixty thousand Jews are expected to immigrate to Spain, in consequence of the decision of the Government allowing Jews expelled from Russia to come to Spain.

NANTES, June 9.—As a protest against the recognized union of religious processions, an immense crowd to-day marched through the streets, following the usual route of processions, singing hymns and stopping before the various churches. Before the Church of St. Nicholas a crowd of anti-clericals sang the "Marseillaise" as the procession passed. A riot ensued and the police arrested several persons.

LONDON, June 20.—The Dublin correspondent of the Times says: The fact is evident that the Land League has received a series of heavy blows, which are telling upon it, and a more tractable and tolerant spirit is showing itself as the power of the local despots is broken. The strike against the payment of all rent is checked, the leaders repudiating any intention to adopt such a policy.

BOMBAY, June 20.—Official advices have received from Candahar announcing that the Ameer's forces defeated the troops of Ayoob Khan, with heavy loss, on 11th inst., at Kariz Safed. The Ameer's loss is trifling. Reinforcements are being sent from Cabul to Candahar and a strong division is starting from Candahar for Girlskh.

LONDON, June 20.—A dispatch from Calcutta to the Times says: A report has reached here from Central Asia that large bodies of Russian troops are assembling on the borders of Kashgar and that a conflict with Chinese troops can not long be averted.

CAMP MEETINGS.

The camp meeting at China Grove, Pike county, Miss. will commence on Friday night before the third sabbath in September. All ministers are cordially invited to attend.

24 B. M. GILMORE.

The camp meeting at St. Matthews' camp ground, four miles southwest of Hickory station, Vicksburg and Meridian railroad, will commence Friday before fourth Sabbath in August.

28 GEO. BANCROFT, P. C.

The Providence camp meeting will begin on the 17th of August, and continue six days. Ministers, both local and itinerant, are invited to attend; provision will be made for their entertainment. Visitors will be entertained at the public tents. All who may want to attend will get off the railroad at Hazlehurst, where they will find hacks to convey them out to the camp ground. The camp ground is fifteen miles east of Hazlehurst.

D. C. LANGFORD, P. C.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS CAMP MEETING.—The Camp Meeting at Bennington Camp Ground, one mile from Crystal Springs, Mississippi, will begin August 4, and continue one week. Rev. H. F. Johnson, D. D., will have charge of the services.

J. V. ENOCHS, Secretary.

The camp meeting at William's Camp Ground, Pensacola District, will commence Thursday night, June 30. Friends who made subscriptions for the benefit of the camp ground last year will please pay their subscriptions as soon as possible, as it is greatly needed. Those good sisters who promised comforters for the preachers' tents will please bring them along when they come to the camp meeting. Preachers are cordially invited to be with us; provision has been made for their entertainment.

The grounds have been improved, a new hotel built, and other provisions for the comfort of visitors made.

S. H. COX.

SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.

The regular annual camp meeting on Seashore Camp Ground, for 1881, will commence on Wednesday, July 13, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is situated two miles west of Biloxi, Miss.; midway from New Orleans to Mobile, fronting directly upon the Gulf of Mexico, less than one hundred yards from the sea, and less than five hundred from the New Orleans and Mobile railroad. Occupying an elevated position, it is dry, clean and healthful; free from fevers, agues and epidemics. Shaded by a grove of rich and various foliage, and looking out upon the wide, wide waves; it enjoys the cool refreshing breezes of the sea, while the flowing waters of several mineral springs furnish free supplies of pleasant, health giving drink.

The damages of the winter storms have been repaired, new piers and bath houses erected, a nicely architectural and convenient restaurant has been built, and other improvements have been made, and the grounds are more beautiful and inviting than ever.

Comfortable, plain, wooden tents or cottages of various dimensions, for individuals or families are for rent on most reasonable terms, which can be partially supplied with furniture on the grounds, at moderate rates.

Comfortable lodgings are furnished at fifty cents per night, and good board had at the restaurant at fifty cents each, for breakfast and supper, and seventy five cents for dinner; or $1 50 per day.

The restaurant is expected to be open during the season, and comfortable lodgings can be had by persons desiring to remain after the close of the camp-meeting.

Reduced rates of fare and freight have been secured on the railroads.

On the Louisville and Nashville railroad, from New Orleans to the camp ground for the round trip, $3; and at the same rate per mile, from Mobile to camp ground, for the round trip; from way-stations at five cents per mile for the round trip.

Tickets will be on sale at the offices and depots from Monday, the eleventh to the twenty-third of July inclusive and be good to the twenty fifth.

Freights will be transported at one half the current card rates, and delivered at the freight depot on Gitod street and levee, by 5 o'clock P. M., will go the same day.

On the Colbert, St. Louis and New Orleans (Jackson) road from Canton and all points south to New Orleans, at four cents per mile, for round trip, tickets on sale from the eleventh to the twenty second of July, inclusive and good to the twenty-sixth.

On the Morgan, Louisiana and Texas road, from Opelousas or any point east of that, regular tickets to New Orleans will be furnished at usual fare, and return on the same ticket issued on the eleventh to the twenty second of July, inclusive and good to the twenty-sixth.

On the Mobile and Ohio road, for three cents per mile each way. Tickets issued from the eleventh to twenty first of July, inclusive and good to the twenty-sixth.

All tickets must be stamped at the office on the camp ground, to be good to return on.

Persons desiring information on any point in regard to the camp ground will address J. P. Hamilton on the grounds, or any one of the trustees.

W. H. FOSTER, President.
PHILIP BALLERAN, Secretary.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., June 20, 1881.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

The District Conference for the Mobile District, Alabama Conference, will be held at Jackson, Clarke county, Ala., beginning on Thursday, August 11, at nine o'clock A. M.

25 O. H. BLUE, P. E.

Homer District Conference will convene at the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Arcadia, Bienville parish, La., on Wednesday, July 27, at eight o'clock, P. M. Opening sermon by Rev. J. E. Bradley. Thursday, 11 A. M., lecture on "Sunday Schools," by Rev. J. M. Brown. Friday, 11 A. M., lecture on "Missions," by Rev. J. W. Mellock. Saturday, 11 A. M., sermon on "Ministerial Support" by Hon. J. M. Coppell, of Homer, La. Sunday, 11 A. M., sermon on "The Integrity of the Methodist Church."

The usual business of the session will be attended to, and reports from those named, Who, that has been elected, will be too indifferent to the interests of Methodism to attend this Conference?

Let the preachers be ready to make all their reports the first day.

J. A. PARKER, P. E.

Greensboro District Conference will meet at Havana, July 28 (Thursday). There will be preaching Wednesday night. Delegates coming on the Alabama and Great Southern Railroad, will get off at Steward's station, six miles from Havana, where they will be met with conveyances, if they come on Thursday morning. Recording Stewards will forward names of delegates to Rev. A. Hood, and carry their Quarterly Conference Record Books with them, or send them. Delegates must be on hand at the right time if they wish to be met.

25 H. TURQUART, P. E.

WILLIAMSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE. Preachers in charge will please furnish me with a list of names of delegates, local preachers and visitants who will attend the District Conference of Williamsburg District, to be held at Columbia, Miss. Persons on arriving at Columbia will report at the hotel of Rev. W. J. Hall for assignment to their homes.

G. W. BROWN, P. C.

NOTICE.—The Woodville District Conference will be held in Amite City, July 28 to 31, inclusive. Sunday School Institute will hold its annual session on the third day of the Conference, Saturday, at 10 o'clock, A. M., as a part of Conference business. Pastors will please have their reports in writing, upon subjects indicated in the Discipline, pp. 53, 54.

We would suggest that the report on item 3 (schools) be separate; they will be called for on Saturday of the session. Brethren will have their Quarterly Conference Journals at Conference for inspection. Public preaching each day of the session, at 11 A. M. and 7½ P. M.

Annual Sermon to the Conference on Thursday night by Rev. I. B. Robertson, of Clinton, La.

22 JAS. A. GODFREY, P. E.

Quarterly Conferences.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

GREENSBORO DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Greensboro station	July 2, 3
Greensboro circuit, at Bethel	2, 3
Livingstone and Eutaw, at Livingstone	9, 10
Green circuit, at Sardis	16, 17
Newberne circuit, at Craig's Chapel	23, 24
Havana circuit, at Havana	30, 31
Forkland circuit, at Watson's Chapel	Aug. 6, 7
Gainsville circuit, at Soul Counsel	13, 14
Belmont circuit, at Brewerville	20, 21
Cuba circuit, at Reid Chapel	27, 28
Gaston circuit, at Sharon	Sep. 3, 4
Butler and Mt. Sterling, at Butler	10, 11
Choctaw circuit, at Pleasant Valley	17, 18
Demopolis station	24, 25

25 J. H. URQUHART, P. E.

MARIANA DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Mariana station	June 11, 12
Calhoun mission, at Shiloh	18, 19
Cerro Gordo mission, at Bethlehem	25, 26
Geneva circuit, at Elim	July 2, 3
Big Creek circuit, at Pleasant Grove	9, 10
Chipola mission, at St. Andrew's Bay	26, 27
Greenwood circuit, at Manli Chapel	Aug. 6, 7
Heathland mission, at New Hope	13, 14
Holme's Valley circuit, at Salem	27, 28
Freeport and Walton m., at Black Creek	19, 20

25 A. J. COLEMAN, C. E.

MONTGOMERY DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Auburn station	June 18, 19
Tallassee station	25, 26
Hurtville circuit, at Antioch	July 2, 3
Salem circuit, at Lebanon	9, 10
Elmore circuit, at Loretta Chapel	16, 17
Crawford circuit, at Mt. Zion	3, 31
Tuskegee circuit, at Union	Aug. 6, 7
Loachapoka circuit, at Gold Hill	13, 14
Franklin mission, at Camp Ground	20, 21
Tallapoosa circuit, at Centerport	27, 28
Tuskegee station	Sep. 3, 4
Montgomery station	10, 11
Opelika station	17, 18

The District Conference will meet at Notasulga, July 21, at nine o'clock A. M. The introductory sermon by Rev. J. R. Peavy, at eleven o'clock A. M.

The Recording Stewards will please send the names of delegates and members to Rev. M. P. Dickinson, Loachapoka, Ala., as early as practicable.

22 T. F. MADDOX, P. E.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

SHREVEPORT DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Logansport, at Salem Chapel	July 23, 24
Moorlingsport, at Pine Hill	27
North Bossier, at Collinsburg	30, 31
South Bossier, at Cotton Valley	Aug. 3
Shreveport	6, 7
Caddo circuit, at Cypress Camp Ground	13, 14
Mansfield	20, 21
Coushatta	27, 28
Springville	Sep. 3, 4
Natchitoches	10, 11
Natchitoches circuit	11
Agnesco	17, 18
Many	24, 25
Pleasant Hill	24, 25

22 T. H. M'CLENDON, C. E.

PENSACOLA DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Pensacola	June 4, 5
Warrington	6, 6
Millview	11, 12
Pollard	18, 19
Milton	25, 26
Powelton	July 2, 3
Perdido	9
Stockton	9, 10
Yellow River	16, 17
Georgiana	23, 24
Evergreen	30, 31
Gravella	30, 31
Monroeville	Aug. 6, 7
Monterey	13, 14
Sepulga	20, 21

23 S. H. COX, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WOODVILLE DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Clinton	July 2, 3
Bayou Sara, at Tunica	9, 10
Wilkinson, at Mileway	16, 17
St. Helena at Darlington	23, 24
Amite City, at Amite City	30, 31
Franklington, at Parkers	Aug. 13, 14
Livingstone, at James Chapel	23, 24
North Wilkinson, Mars Hill	27, 28
Amite, at Sharon	Sep. 3, 4
Jackson, at Salem
Pipkins and Port Hudson, at Pipkins
East Feliciana, I. W. Cooper
Wijnas, A. G. Miller
Baton Rouge, J. S. Parker
Woodville, I. B. Robertson

Note.—For charges without date pastors will hold their quarterly meetings, assisted by brethren named, in July or August. Appoint the time best suited to your work, and give brethren indicated due notice.

Brethren will please help me. The third round is thus made in nine weeks, leaving fourteen Sabbaths for the fourth round.

The District Conference will be in Amite City, July 28 to 31.

25 JAS. A. GODFREY, P. E.

WILLIAMSBURG DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Raun circuit, at Angora	July 9, 10
Chickasahay mission, at Washington	16, 17
Williamsburg, at Williamsburg	23, 24
Westville circuit, at Westville	Aug. 6, 7
Mt. Carmel circuit, at Santee	13, 14
Bethel circuit, at Ocohay	20, 21
Spring Cottage, at ——	Sep. 3, 4
China Grove, at ——	10, 11
Red Creek, at Rogs' School House	17, 18

24 D. A. LITTLE, P. E.

VICKSBURG DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Vicksburg	July 2, 3
Mt. Hillyet and Sunflower mission, at Shiloh	9, 10
Rolling Fork	16, 17
Clover Hill	23, 24
Warren circuit, at Redbone	30, 31
Port Gibson and Martin	Aug. 6, 7
Rocky Springs	13, 14
Canga, at Bear Creek	20, 21
Fayette Cane Ridge	27, 28
Meadville	Sep. 3, 4
Natchez	10, 11
Kingston, at Linwood	17, 18

24 JOHN A. ELLIS, P. E.

BROOKHAVEN DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

McComb and Summit, at McComb	June 11, 12
Harlehurst station	18, 19
Brookhaven and Wesson, at Brookhaven	8 P. M.
Adams and Bogue Chitto, at Ebenezer	July 2, 3
Brandywine, at Brandywine	9, 10
Bayou Pierre, at Tidermacle	23, 24
Beelbond, at Caseyville	30, 31
Crystal Springs 4 P. M.	Aug. 8
Spring Ridge, at Forrest Hill	13, 14
Beauregard, at Providence	20, 1
Magnolia, at Topasaw	27, 28
Georgetown, at Georgetown	Sep. 3, 4

The District Conference will meet at Caseyville, fifteen miles west of Brookhaven, Thursday, July 24. The opening sermon will be preached at eleven o'clock, Thursday, by Rev. W. H. Leith.

Those who can do so will please go in their private conveyances. Others will have conveyances furnished them from Brookhaven, without charge, if they will give to Mr. David McCree, Caseyville, Miss., a week's notice of their intention to attend. All delegates who expect to attend will please notify Rev. H. R. Caldwell, Caseyville, Miss.

The Recording Stewards will bring their records with them, or send them.

Bishop Keener has been invited to preside.

23 S. T. JONES, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Made from Grape Cream Tartar. No other preparation makes such light, flaky hot breads, delicious pastry. Can be eaten by Dyspeptics without fear of the ills resulting from heavy, indigestible food. Sold only in cans, by all Grocers.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER Co., New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PERRY & CO'S TRADE MARK

STEEL PENS

of superior English make; famous for durability and elasticity; great variety of styles suited to every kind of writing. For sale by dealers generally.

TWENTY-FIVE assorted samples for trial, including the "U" and "FALCON" celebrated Pens, by mail, on receipt of Twenty-five Cents.

VISON, BLAKEMAN, TAYLOR & CO.
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. S.
NEW YORK.

25 CENTS--SEND--25 CENTS

IN POSTAGE STAMPS FOR

A HANDY DICTIONARY!

Giving the spelling, pronunciation and meanings of the words, useful tables, the metric system of weights and measures, a list of foreign words and phrases, alphabetically arranged and many engravings.

A book of 320 pages, bound in cloth, and mailed post paid on receipt of 25 cents, by

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

No. 74 USE St. Charles St.

A WONDERFUL And SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

THE MEDICATED GLASS.

YOU CAN GET A PAIR OF SPECTACLES THAT WILL KEEP YOUR EYES IN AS GOOD CONDITION forever after as when first you use them. These Medicated Glasses have been thoroughly examined and analyzed by Prof. Berger, the great French oculist, and Dr. Carl Hollander, the famous German oculist, and pronounced as far superior to any glass yet made, and recommended as the only glass to be used to save the eye. American oculists claim that the Medicated Glasses have no equal, and can, in some cases, restore the eye to its original sight, when used in time, and in no case can the eye become impaired by the use of these glasses, if properly adapted for the following reasons.

1. The chemicals soften the light to the eye, completely doing away with that tiresome sensation that is usually experienced in using glasses after one or two hours' use.

2. The medicinal properties contained in the glass make it as hard as a diamond. It will retain its polish and never become dull or dim, hence you will always see through it as bright and clear as at first.

3. The chemicals keep the glasses cold as ice; result is, your optic nerves always cool, doing away with any feverish sensation to the eye.

4. These glasses have no equal for night reading or sewing. With them you can sit up all night and the light has no effect on the eye, with no tiresome sensation whatever, which necessarily continues to improve the eye.

We will call, save and warrant our work, or money refunded. Persons living at a distance desiring the Medicated Glasses can by letter, sending address with postage stamp, when they will receive in return a mode of testing the strength of glasses wanted. The Medicated Glasses can only be had at 74 St. Charles street, we do not employ peddlers. AGENTS WANTED.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS. NONE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED "MEDICATED."

HERC. HOUSAH,
CRESCENT CITY SPECTACLE COMPANY,
74 St. Charles Street, New Orleans.

In writing mention this paper.

WANTED.—A SITUATION AS TEACHER, by a married gentleman, an A. M. graduate of a leading university of the South, and for five years a professor in that institution. He is competent to teach the usual English branches, the Latin, Greek, French and German Languages, the higher Mathematics, Chemistry and Natural Philosophy, Bookkeeping and Penmanship. Speaks English and German. Has had nine years experience in teaching. Is a member of the M. E. Church, South. Best references given, if desired. Address Postoffice Box 112, Marion, Alabama.

THE ATTENTION OF THE PUBLIC IS CALLED to the Greenwich Manufacturing Co.'s Ready Cleaner of New York, a very useful article for all house cleaning, scouring, and polishing purposes. For sale in 10 cent packages by Grocers. To the trade by

T. A. CATHEL, Agent,
88 Tchoupitoulas Street, New Orleans.

Factors' & Traders' Insurance Company
37 CARONDELET STREET,

Paid Up Capital ..... $1,000,000.

ED. A. PALFREY, President,
JOHN CHAFFE, Vice President,
THOS. F. WALKER, Secretary.

Issues Policies Covering Fire, River and Marine Risks at the Lowest Tariff Rates.

DIRECTORS:

John L. Noble,	John Chaffe,
Richard Milliken,	Sam'l Friedlander,
R. M. Walmsley,	A. H. May,
T. Layte Lyon,	Samuel H. Boyd,
Wm. J. Behan,	H. F. Eshleman,
Chas. Claude,	L. C. Janvier,
Wm. Hartwell,	C. J. Fesik,
A. T. Jouin,	A. M. Burkhart,
Henry Abraham,	Louis Bush,
A. Brittin,	C. W. Sentell,
Wm. Cunningham,	John L. Adams,
R. T. Buckner,	Wm. A. Gwyn,
	Chas. E. Black.

D. MERCIER & SONS,

Better Known as Cheap John,

NO BRANCH STORE IN TOWN

MEN'S, BOYS' AND YOUTH'S

CLOTHING,

HATS, BOOTS, SHOES, FURNISHING GOODS ETC., ETC.

Cor. Dauphine and Bienville sts.,
New Orleans, La.

Orders from Country Merchants promptly executed on most reasonable terms.

KURSHEEDT & BIENVENU,

MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,

MONUMENTS,

Tombs, Headstones, Cemetery Railing,

MARBLE, SLATE,

And Iron Mantels and Grates.

114, 118, 120, 122 Camp St., New Orleans

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT,

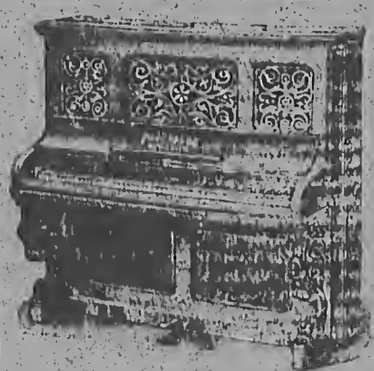
RICHARD RHODES,

65 ST. CHARLES STREET 65

NEW ORLEANS.

Articles for Fishermen of all Kinds.

Rods, Nets, Hooks, Lines, and every desirable article for the Angler, wholesale and retail. Guns imported to order. J. H. Cooper's Breech and Muzzle Loading Guns always on hand. All kinds of improved artificial Baits. Repairing of Guns carefully done by experienced workmen, and Fishing Rods made to order. Address Postoffice Box 1001.



40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Style on tile. Agents wanted. L. JOHNS & CO., Nassau, N. Y.

P. WERLEIN'S,

135 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS,

The Leading Piano House IN THE SOUTH!

SELLS

CHICKERING PIANOS,
MATHUSHEK PIANOS,
HALE'S PIANOS,

And numerous other makes at the very lowest prices and on the most liberal terms to be obtained anywhere in the UNITED STATES.

Full guarantee. Will be sent for trial one month if desired. Catalogues on application. Letters cheerfully and promptly answered.

Old Pianos taken in exchange. Second hand Pianos very cheap.

A Fine Stock of Organs,

ESTEY'S,
MASON & HAMLIN'S,
STERLING'S.

And others, at prices exceeding low. Please send for catalogues. Will send Organs on trial anywhere in the South. Organs as low as $30. Cannot be undersold.

MUSIC.

MUSIC INSTRUCTION BOOKS,
PIANO COVERS,
STOOLS in great variety.
1-4 Price on Music to Teachers.

Musical Instruments.

Imported direct from European factories. 10 per cent. discount to dealers.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

Catalogues sent on application.

For anything pertaining to Music call on or write to

P. WERLEIN,
No. 135 Canal Street.

Christian Advocate.

VOL. 27.—NO. 26. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, JUNE 30, 1881. WHOLE NO. 1360.

PUBLISHED FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

ENTERED AT THE POST OFFICE AT NEW ORLEANS AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

Christian Advocate.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

G. T. LATHROP, Publisher.

OFFICE—112 CAMP ST., NEW ORLEANS.

Subscription, ... $2 per annum.

Widows and wives of deceased Preachers half price.

Preachers of the M. E. Church, South, are authorized Agents to whom payments may be made.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEES.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.
REV. A. D. MOORE.
REV. O. R. BLUE, D. D.
REV. J. O. ANDREW.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.
REV. W. H. WATKINS, D. D.
REV. JAMES A. GODFREY.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.
REV. JOHN MATHEWS, D. D.
REV. LINUS PARKER, D. D.
REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

ONE FLOWER.

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Dear lady in city walls,
Surrounded by the city's ever-throbbing
Ignoble din of thudding waterfalls,
And ribbon bursts of song;
Come, drink the depths of fragrant gloom,
And bathe in silences, sleeping in the sun,
And pastures where wild roses bloom
And brooks that babbling run.

Before my hand there lies
A spray of wet from out a forest nook,
And it is green and cool as cool can be,
With ferns of graciousness, gracefullest praise
Which thoughts shall bring.

Here, in the heart
Of this sweet spray, a wealth of faith
Is hidden as the hopes of people said
To be in Hindu hills, that wear
Their sacred kiss
Upon the brows
Of gods divinest air.

Under wood,
Where sky and bath dark depression sway
Fairies have their leaves on prayer unheard,
And it is such changeful day.

Sweet little flower,
Sweet and pure, you wear a wreath of faith
Which I, a girl in human hearts and deeds,
Can ill afford to miss.
Wild rose and palm
Are only fit
For those
Who, in the shadow of kindness, gendeful praise
Or thoughts shall bring.

From California.

We have brief summer upon us. It is strange to me to feel but little heat in June be that of January. We have had rain enough for a good crop; but, somehow, in the case only about half the crop last season. It is likely that the Lord takes the wheat grow these years of old.

I have never been in any country where the people did not talk of hard times. If there is such an one, I should like to see it. Heaven is doubtless the only place. There can be no poverty more plentiful than this; and we should listen to the popular cry here, we should think that hard times were on us.

Much of the poverty of this world is by contrast and not real. This is the case with California this year, as it is not as last year was. It is thought by many of our preachers in the Conference, that the church is not going up. I am not a very good prophet, but would say, there is room for improvement.

We labor under many difficulties, hard to be described by pen. They can only be fully known, when seen.

California has good laws. Just as good as any State I know of; but the people do not obey these laws as in other States.

It is a fact the world over, that all want to prohibit is a nullity where it is not approved by the masses. No State ever did prohibit unless the people believed the law right, and to violate it would be a crime.

Murder, theft, arson and many sins against God, and offense against the laws of our land, are written in the human heart, and the people in general obey such laws. But where the masses do not believe in their hearts that it is morally wrong to do a certain thing, no law will prohibit the sin.

In California, we have a law-abiding people in part; they keep just such laws as they believe to be right, such as that against murder, theft, and all that are regarded by them to be a crime; but some of our laws are worthless in this population—a population such as we have from all parts of the world, will not soon assimilate and be agreed about what is morally wrong.

In California, we have only six days in the week, and the days run thus: Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and the other day that the people of the States have, is our picnic and excursion day. Now on these picnic and excursion days, we have to do our preaching, and what a time we have in drawing a congregation! The man that can beat a picnic, would do well to come out here.

This is not the case in every part of this State, but in our cities and towns in this portion, it is the rule. Neither do all of the people go to these picnics on Sabbath. Some stay around the drinking saloons, and we have a faithful few, who go to the house of God to worship. I must say that we have some of the best Christians out here, good and true amid all the temptations to evil.

In a letter some months ago in the ADVOCATE, Bro. Hunnicutt said, that Mississippi did not need immigration, only of a certain kind. He is correct; a people unlike the people of the South, will be an evil instead of good.

The United States is cursed now with a worthless class of beings pouring in, year after year. If anyone should doubt this, let them send to California, and let them see for themselves. We have many good people from the Old World, who come here to make an honest living, but most of them are worthless.

The North is cursed to-day as California, and I would say, let Mississippians, or people like them, live in Mississippi.

I do not think so strange of the ideas expressed so often by Bishop Haven, in regard to the negro—in the South being made the equal of the white race. The difference is in our standard, of what it takes to make a lady or a gentleman. The Bishop's standard is a low one, and by his measurement, he may be right, but they will never come up to ours. In our town, Mountain View, we have sixty or seventy inhabitants, and we have seven drinking saloons. If there is any part of the South that can beat that, I would like to know where it is. A letter in the ADVOCATE from Greenwood, Miss., from Bro. Newsom, gives a gloomy account of the drinking in that part of the State; but let me say to Bro. Newsom: "Cheer up, whisky is scarce in your country."

Brother A. B. Stewart hits the nail on the head when he calls on the people to pray over the drunken condition of the country. The heart power is the power to expel the demon from our land, and when the cause of temperance reaches the great heart of the people, then prohibition will stand, but not without it.

Since I have been in California I have found out, to a certainty, that the sea can roar and the mountains shake, for both of these things have taken place very recently. Earthquakes are not what I thought they were. I thought some volcanic power did the shaking, but my mind is changed. The world will find, yet, that the earth shakes by the power of electricity. It has its course just like a thunder-storm, only the electricity is in the earth and not in the air. Sometimes a current of electricity passes over the earth. The people here say that it is one of the sentorms of wind that dries up the wheat, and if closely examined in two or three days, and it looks just like it had been cut and dried in the sun. A field of this kind of wheat looks just as green to a new comer as that was growing, but fire would burn it very readily. I have seen the largest ocean in the world, and have heard it roar. On my way from San Francisco I passed through Golden Gate Park, one of the most beautiful drives on the world, with its winding sweeps of magnificent distances, down to the Cliff House. Here I found myself in full view of the Acropolis of seals, a mound of white rocks projecting out of the ocean. The seals were playing over, around and near to this place of resort. Some were sleek and dark, some large, some small. My first impression was a kind of disgust for the creatures. They seemed to me to have St. Vitus dance or tiedoulourex, but, after I had seen them jump from cliff to cliff awhile, my disgust changed to admiration for them, and I left the place a firm believer in seals.

The ADVOCATE is a welcome visitor to me every week, and I read it with more care than I ever did. It seems to me to be better than in other days, but it may all be in me.

P. W. PRATHER.

MOUNTAIN VIEW, June 16, 1881.

An Evangelist, So-called.

MR. EDITOR: Having seen an advertisement in some of the daily papers of a certain Jonathan Haskell, who is to hold a camp meeting in Mississippi City and Handsboro; and knowing that he has some endorsers here among the people called Christians, who lend their presence and money; and having attended one of his services, I thought an eye witness' account might interest some of your readers.

He has been holding service in the upper part of the city in his five pole gospel tent.

He calls himself an evangelist. He is, said to carry Presbyterian endorsements, but does not confine himself to their congregations or tenets; indeed, I have heard from lips as reliable as his own, that his Presbyterian brethren did not extend a very cordial welcome to him. In a statement of his own experience, which forms the filling of his preaching, I learned that he is a reclaimed Knight of the sawdust and converted actor and clown, once given over to strong drink, transformed by grace into Bro. Haskell the evangelist, and as the wicked boys put it in rhyme, "Bro. Haskell, the celebrated rascal."

His methods are as unique as his audiences, which are mixed. White with black predominating. He has evinced considerable art in arranging his audience; his pulpit or platform, being in the centre of the tent in an oval shape; the angle filled with the organ and choir, consisting of girls who are strangers, to us. His foot lights, so to speak, were negro boys with their legs dangling down.

Bro. Haskell with an eye on everybody, moves around the area of the oval, in a brisk way, conducting the meeting; showing new comers a seat, rallying his strikers, who are girls of all shades and men of different complexion, mingling all through the audience, selling Bro. Haskell's song books and papers. What with leading the choruses and prayers, and watching the roughs, for fear that some one will project an egg upon the preacher, or throw a string of rats into the choir circle, checking irreverent responses from profane persons; and watching the swaying chandeliers for fear of an explosion and another panic like the one he had when the lamp turned over on his head, and he secured a baptism of fire; what with all these things and others as remarkable, the evangelist has a trying time. The singing is good—the songs being Haskell's own selections set to "devil's music" to the unbelievers. He has near him on the platform, several ministerial brethren in black, dressed in clerical, half tare coats—I mean, colored preachers.

They do their work for him in the way of amening and scoring by shouts and grunts, every good thing the preacher says. This excites the mirth of the rabble, and brother Haskell threatens them with his bruisers, and lets them know that he will have them arrested, unless they stop. In these bursts of indignation, his language is simply unrepeatable, outside of his canvas.

His sermon was founded upon a portion of Scriptures, but the discourse was woven upon an incident, purporting to be one of his own experiences, when he was a sinner man, filling a clown position in a circus. The delivery of the sermon was much like the clown delivering his stale jokes, as fast and flippantly as the weary scissors of his mind could cut them out of the whole cloth. His old, failing world, betray itself ever and anon by the out slip of an old time-worn joke, and the roar of laughter following it would revive bygone memories of other days.

There are various opinions of Bro. Haskell and his methods. Some think he is getting up funds to start a real circus. Some think he is doing great good. One charitable brother exercised the brother on the plea of insanity. Taking a dispassionate view of the case, I should say that he is not worthy of the confidence of Christian people. His aim seems to be, to array himself with the world against the church. The clergy of the city, especially enjoys his displeasure.

His means of support seems to be selling his literature and refreshments, and enlisting the sympathies of such with more capital than judgment. He has himself commissioned as a policeman, and makes arrests and lets them off for a small amount, promising not to prosecute. A petty system of blackmailing. His record in St. Louis and other places has not been all that it should be for an evangelist. His services, in a word, are a travesty upon religion; and it is a matter of astonishment and grief that so many Christian people will give him countenance.

We append the following editorial notice of Mr. Haskell which appeared in the Central Christian Advocate of St. Louis, January 21, 1880:

"There is a certain J. S. Haskell operating in Illinois recently in Lamotion, as a temperance lecturer. We have every reason to believe that this man is entirely unworthy of confidence, and we can not understand how he succeeds in getting the confidence of the people. He is the same Haskell that our Iowa preachers published as a fraud in the Northwestern some time ago. We hope our Methodist pastors and people will have nothing to do with him. During the last week we have received a letter from Rev. S. Brooks, pastor of Highland circuit, South Illinois Conference, warning the ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and friends of temperance against this man. The Northwestern of August 18, 1878, contained a card from several pastors in Iowa warning the public against Mr. Haskell. The California Advocate also of January 1, 1878, contains an account of his doings on the Pacific Coast."

We have letters from Rev. John W. Lock, presiding elder, Lebanon district, South Illinois Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, and W. E. Barnes, assistant editor of the Central Christian Advocate, St. Louis, confirming the above.

CHRISTIAN KEENER.

Commencement at Kosciusko, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: The commencement exercises at Kosciusko Male and Female Institute closed on Tuesday the fourteenth inst. As a member of the visiting committee, I report. It was not my privilege to attend the examination of classes, but heard the most favorable reports. This school, under the presidency of Rev. T. A. S. Adams of the North Mississippi Conference, assisted by his accomplished wife and Miss McNulty in the literary, and Mrs. Allen in the Music department, is doing a most faithful work in the way of education. Not only is the work faithful but thorough. The curriculum is of a high order. It duplicates, and more than duplicates, that of many similar institutions in the land. The course embraces Latin, Greek, French and German in the languages, and the higher mathematics, such as analytical geometry and trigonometry, and differential calculus. These studies do not simply appear in the course, they are taught. The completion of the course required of a young lady before she can receive a diploma prepares a young man to enter the Junior class at the University of Mississippi or Vanderbilt. In this age of glitter and shams, it is refreshing to see such thorough work as is done here, and that too without a "flourish of trumpets."

The degree of M. E. L., was conferred on two young ladies; Miss Metta Young and Miss Mollie Williams. The essays of these young ladies were excellent.

The committee were impressed with the fine moral tone pervading the orations, essays, dialogues, etc., of the occasion. They were also impressed with the fact that, while pupils are taught to think they are also trained to remember.

The discipline is of a strict, wholesome character. The committee agreed to recommend this school to the North Mississippi Conference, for its adoption as a Conference school. The property belongs to the church, but some additional buildings are needed. This is the only difficulty in the way. But can not the Methodists on this western side of the Conference raise $5,000 or $6,000 and thus lay the foundation for a noble institution of learning. The elements of success are here.

We have, it is true, an excellent Female College at Aberdeen, under the safe and wise guidance of Brother McVoy, but it is not accessible to this western section of our Conference. Kosciusko is and it is a time locality for such an enterprise. One very important item is its unlimited healthfulness. It is equal as any community in Mississippi perhaps and is a fine geographical center. The proposition to make this a Conference school met with a favorable response from the Board of Trustees in their annual meeting Monday evening. There is much else the committee would like to say, but this report is already sufficiently long. Will the brethren of the North Mississippi Conference consider the matter and talk it up among our people?

In conclusion, Mr. Editor, we are satisfied that parents and guardians can do no better than to send their children and wards to Kosciusko Male and Female Institute to be educated.

THOS. CAMERON,
For Committee.

WINONA, Miss., June 16, 1881.

From the Work.

LAYTON, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: The active part taken in church work by women, presages prosperity.

The enthusiasm that has been kindled in favor of foreign missions, so far from lessening their interest in home work, has intensified it. As the spirit of liberality in the church is increased by giving, so the spirit and capacity for church work is strengthened by exercise.

Faithful and effectual work in one department, quickens the zeal and pleasure in work in all other departments. I think, sir, that the earnest, faithful and successful work of the women of our church in Canton deserves honorable mention in this connection.

Whilst they have not been idle in the great mission work as the reports of the society, and the handsome reception given Bro. and Sister Lafferty, on their visit, with the offerings then made will show, they have come, and are still doing, a noble work at home.

Hard, as are the times, they have in a few months, by their own energies raised the necessary funds with which they have repaired, repainted, repapered, and to a considerable extent refurnished and recarpeted our parsonage, and I wish to say, by way of parenthesis, that the furniture is much superior to that usually put in parsonages.

Now, as my letter has an exordium, you will please allow the peroration, and it is a pleasant one, at least, to the inmates of this parsonage. Not to detail you with details of the well-filled larder we found on our arrival last Christmas morning, nor of the numerous kindnesses shown us since, on the 8th inst. the day before our District Conference met at this place, a large procession of ladies and children, headed by the mayor and marshall of the city, both of whom are stewards of said circuit, entered the parsonage, and after a pleasant greeting, withdrew, leaving us to store away a tasteful amount of groceries, vegetables, fruits, cakes, nick-nacs, dry goods, etc., at our leisure.

As for the gentlemen, of course, they do not expect their good deeds to be spoken of. Suffice it to say, the pastor wears a new suit of clothes, that the merchant said was paid for, before the wearer saw them; and the man who hauled the pile of wood to the parsonage, said it was not to be paid for; and somehow, a fine milch cow found her way to this same parsonage, etc., etc.

Very truly, R. S. WOODWARD.

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The Alexandria District Conference held its session at Pineville, May 27. Rev. E. H. Hewitt, presiding elder, in the chair. It was a pleasant meeting. Good will and harmony seemed to rule the hours, and the reports reflected the light of better days. In fact, everything was indicative of spiritual and financial prosperity. Our presiding elder lifted the curtain, and allowed us to take a peep at his intentions—"He means to give the district wheel such a push this year, as will enable it to hold up its head for years to come." And I, for one, believe it can be done. If the preachers in charge will only push with him. God grant us a working as well as a preaching spirit! All the pastors were present, except three. The lay men turned out well. We also had the pleasure of seeing the face of our late presiding elder, Rev. Christian Keener. We were glad to take him by the hand; because it brought to our mind the good days of old. But I must stop this strain and get back to business. We appointed missionary lecturers, to visit the various works on the district. This is a move in the right direction. I think I can cover the business by saying, that everything that ought to have been done, was done. Big Cane was selected as the place for holding the next Conference. Now, before I close this letter, I must speak a few words in regard to the blessing which followed the District Conference. Bro. Harper, the pastor, thought it was a good time to begin a protracted meeting. Some thought it was not because everything in the sky was indicative of more rain. Nevertheless, we went to work; and, bless God, our work was not in vain! He stamped it with the seal of power. Sixteen souls received light from on high, and lips were garnished with a new song of praise. Twenty-one sought a refuge within the protecting arms of our holy Zion, and many others saw their sins in their true light. It was a happy time, indeed! For the glory of God was standing in our midst; and my very heart leaped within me as I took the hand of every man, woman and youth in the house, and heard them promise that by their help of God, they would make an honest effort to meet me in heaven.

Yours truly, P. CALVIN.

LAKE PROVIDENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I enclose you $3.50 for China Missions. It is a contribution of the Methodist Sunday school of our town. We were hopeful of getting more, but our Sunday school is small; but we feel much encouraged, as it is growing in numbers slowly, which is due to the zeal of the ladies of our church. God bless their efforts to build up our Sunday school interest. The male members do not take much interest in us. I hope before the close of the Conference year, to increase our numbers from sixty to one hundred. The Rev. H. O. White is serving us as pastor the third year. We hope he will be sent back the fourth year. He is doing a good work and is much loved by the whole church. I do not think the Conference could send us a more acceptable pastor. We are going to build a new brick church this fall, if our crops are good, as they bid fair to be now.

Fare respectfully,

R. SPANN, Sup't.

June 20, 1881.

NOTE BY EDITOR.—The money order for $3.50 was duly received, and will be forwarded to Missionary Secretary at Nashville.

LEND HOVE, GRANT.

MR. EDITOR: Our efficient pastor, Bro. A. A. Parnet, preached to us last Saturday and Sunday, with good effect. Bro. Cornet is a faithful minister of the gospel; we are always glad when the second Sunday comes, and with it comes our pastor, to stir us up to a sense of our duty to God and the church. We have a Sunday school in motion now, also class-meeting. I do love the class-meetings. They are seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord to every Christian. Would to God that the class meetings and prayer-meetings were more faithfully kept up. We are moving on slowly here, gaining ground slowly. Two years ago, we had not a good house for our pastor to preach in; now we have a neat church, two stories high, with a manstule lodge up stairs. So, you see, we are doing something. We wish next Saturday and Sunday to have it destleatest, as then is the time for our second Quarterly Meeting for this circuit. We hope to have Bro. Alexander, our presiding elder, with us. Crops are as good as could be expected at this time of the year and the start we farmers had. Health of the country good, as far as we know.

Yours respectfully,

G. D. HILL.

June 6, 1881.

GOODMAN, MISSISSIPPI.

MR. EDITOR: The Holmes county Sunday school convention, held at this place June 22 and 23, has just closed. The convention was a success, quite a large attendance, and we think the interest for the cause protected.

The friends of prohibition met at this place, the day before the convention. I am rejoiced to say that the interest is fine. This meeting provided for a mass meeting at every voting precinct in the county on July 1, to elect delegates to the county convention, to be organized at Lexington on July 12.

I was glad to see so many of the best of our people so determined on this subject. Success must come. Victory is ours. The fight will be hard, but we are equipped for the war. We enlist for the war, long or short. Victory we must have. Our District Conference meets here July 28, come if you can.

J. P. EVANS.

June 21, 1881.

SILVER CREEK, WILKINSON, MISSISSIPPI.

June 17, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: We held our second Quarterly meeting on June 11. We had a good attendance of the officers and members, and a large congregation on Saturday and Sunday. About four hundred people present. Our elder, Bro. Hewitt, was at his post, full of the Holy Ghost, and preached with power. We have received in the church since the first quarterly meeting, sixteen persons, Baptized, nineteen children. We have built a parsonage, paid for lumber to build a church at Spring Creek, raised for different purposes, $123.95. We have good religious meetings. Preaching, prayer and class-meetings all well attended, and the people do not forget their preacher.

GEORGE JACKSON.

WEST'S STATION, MISSISSIPPI.

June 21, 1881.

MR. EDITOR: The West's station circuit is in a healthy condition, spiritually and financially. The Ladies' Aid Society, only three months old, has raised about $35, which is being used in building and furnishing a parsonage. It is a good thing to be the pastor of this people. Great interest is manifested in the prohibition movement. Crops good, and promise a large harvest.

ELIJAH DAWSON.

Bro. M. M. Clark, writing from Wayne county, Mississippi June 13, says: "Our pastor, Bro. Brogan, is a man of sound judgment, one whom we highly esteem. This is his second year on this circuit. Horse cavalry is a pleasant place to live in. Farmings very extensively carried on; most all kinds of fruits and vegetables do well here. It is something of the mountainous order, in parts of the country, and we have the purest and coolest springs of water that can be found anywhere. People here are very prosperous, the crops are growing and the future looks very hopeful. The health of this section is very good."

Ocean Springs, Mississippi.

There are many Methodists in Mississippi and Louisiana that can not and do not want to go North and do not want to go anywhere very far.

Ocean Springs is eighty-four miles east of New Orleans and about fifty west of Mobile. The Louisville, Nashville and New Orleans railroad gives us three trains and four mails daily. Biloxi is four and the Sea Shore Camp ground is about five and a half miles west. We have ample hotel facilities, and board can be obtained in private families. Our society is good. Protestant is much stronger marked here than any point west of us, immediately on the coast. The Baptist church edifice is quite neat, now supplied by Rev. Mr. Hailey. The Methodist building is ample, in good repair, centrally located, and supplied by J. P. Dancer. Service every Sunday by the summer season. Jackson county Grand Jury indicts transgressors of the Sunday law. We may say stores and drinking saloons are closed on the Sabbath and any violator is liable to be punished. Salt water is found on our north by Fort Bayou, west by Biloxi Bay, south by Mississippi Sound or Gulf of Mexico. Deer Island lies off south about one and a half miles, as a protection against storms. The steamboat Herndon plies between New Orleans and Ocean Springs bi-weekly; fare first $1.50, meals fifty cents. Ten-trip tickets, good for sixty days from New Orleans to Ocean Springs for $14.50, regular fare; five cents a mile. Fish, oysters and crabs in abundance. Salt water bathing splendid. Property is for sale at reasonable prices. Col. W. R. Stuart, a whole souled Methodist will take pleasure in giving any additional information wanted. I will also, when at home. Of course, send stamp for a reply.

ROBERT S. HOWARD,
Mississippi Conference.

VICKSBURG, Miss., May 25, 1881.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JUNE 30, 1881.

HOLY SCRIPTURES.

BY VAUGHAN.

Welcome, dear book, the soul's joy and food; the feast
Of spirits, heav'n extracted, lyes in thee;
Thou art life's charter, the dove's spotless nest,
Where souls are hatched into eternities.
In thee the hidden stone, the manna lies;
Thou art the great elixir, rare and choice,
The key that opens to all mysteries,
The word in character, God in the voice.

Thou art the sky-land the wine-house,
There are the present healing leaves,
Blown from the tree of life to us
By his breath whom my dead heart heaves.
Each page of thine hath true life in't,
And God's bright minde exprest in print.

Thou art the fulfilled, gemlly rock,
The hive of beauty, living lights;
Ever the same, whose diffused stock
Entire still wears out blackest nights.
Thy lines are rays the true Spa sheds;
Thy leaves are healing wings he spreads.

Sunday-School Lesson.

PREPARED BY REV. CHRISTIAN KEENER.

Third Quarter Lesson II.

SUNDAY, JULY 10, 1881. EXODUS II, 5-15.

THE COMING DELIVERER.

5. And the daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river; and her maidens walked along by the river's side; and when she saw the ark among the flags, she sent her maid to fetch it.

6. And when she had opened it, she saw the child: and behold, the babe wept. And she had compassion on him, and said, This is one of the Hebrews' children.

7. Then said his sister to Pharaoh's daughter, Shall I go and call to thee a nurse of the Hebrew women, that she may nurse the child for thee?

8. And Pharaoh's daughter said to her, Go. And the maid went and called the child's mother.

9. And Pharaoh's daughter said unto her, Take this child away, and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages. And the woman took the child, and nursed it.

10. And the child grew, and she brought him unto Pharaoh's daughter, and he became her son. And she called his name Moses: and she said, Because I drew him out of the water.

11. And it came to pass in those days, when Moses was grown, that he went out unto his brethren, and looked on their burdens: and he spied an Egyptian smiting an Hebrew, one of his brethren.

12. And he looked this way and that way, and when he saw that there was no man, he slew the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand.

13. And when he went out the second day, behold, two men of the Hebrews strove together: and he said to him that did the wrong, Wherefore smitest thou thy fellow?

14. And he said, Who made thee a prince and a judge over us? intendest thou to kill me, as thou killedst the Egyptian? And Moses feared, and said, Surely this thing is known.

15. Now when Pharaoh heard this thing, he sought to slay Moses. But Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh, and dwelt in the land of Midian: and he sat down by a well.

Here begins the history of one of the greatest souls of earth. Moses was born in troublesome times. His mother and father were Jews of the house of Levi, and were under the rule of a powerful king, who had issued a command that all the male children should be killed, and he gave his officers strict orders to carry out this cruel measure. These orders were given in order to lessen the number of Jews, for they were increasing so fast that the country was about being filled up with them.

Moses' mother and father kept the glad news of a beautiful boy coming to their home as long as they could, and, in spite of the command of the king, determined to save their son. They were in great trouble. This was their first boy, and boys were thought more of in those days than girls. If the angel who brought babies to the homes of earth had asked, which would you rather have, a boy or a girl? every mother and father would have said a boy. The reason the boys were at a premium was a great and well-known promise made by God to some one of the families of children of Israel, that there should come a son, who should be prince and leader of the house of Israel. They did not know then that this Prince was to be the son of a virgin, or they would have set a higher value upon the girls. Every mother and father who received a beautiful boy thought that, may be, this is he whom God will select for this high honor. Moses was, according to all accounts, as beautiful a babe as ever opened his eyes on this world. The parents noticed it, and wished all the more to save him. He was an elegant infant, fair in the eyes of God. His pious parents called God's attention to the fact, and, as they prayed unto him to protect and take care of the child, can you believe it, the Lord in heaven looked down on little Moses, and agreed with the parents that the child was beautiful, and assured them that he would be his friend, and take care of him because he saw that he was a proper child. He was from that moment one of God's favorites. All mothers like to have their children favored, but here was a mother that had her boy complimented by the Lord. She had from the Lord's own self the assurance that he would befriend Moses. In a moment all her uneasiness about the king's murderous edict was gone. She believed God, and no longer feared the king's commandment. What a fortunate baby to have such a faithful parent. To his very cradle he had the benefit of this mother's and father's faith. Three months passed, all of which time Moses was hid; but the king's officers were abroad searching every Jewish home for boys, that they might kill them.

Moses' would soon be discovered. What must be done? Although the mother and father had the assurance from God that Moses was a chosen child, and though she believed God, yet the mother's sagacity and love left nothing for Providence that she could herself do. She made an ark of rushes, and covered it with pitch, so that it was water-tight, and put Moses in it. I expect he was asleep when she put him in the little boat-cradle. He is taken to the river, the ark is launched. No doubt God saw that the little craft was properly ballasted, so the little Moses would not spill out into the water among fishes and crocodiles.

His sister is left to watch the boat, with its precious fright, and the mother watched too. Now, human sagacity and forethought has done its best. The mother's part is done. God's part begins. He has all the materials at hand; no need to work a miracle. He controls the weather, the currents of the stream, the promenade of Pharaoh's daughter, her feelings, the steps of her attendants, are all so overruled by him as to lead to the discovery, the rescue, and the final disposal of the child. What a wonderful drama! God is the manager. How wonderfully it illustrates the connection between the diligent use of means and pious trust in Providence. Faith is the greatest worker in the world; it works by love. The most diligent use of means goes along with the highest faith in God. It is the best and only power sufficient for saving boys from cruel and girls from slavery. A mightier king than any of the Pharaohs has publicly declared his intention to murder every child in the world for whom God has any regard, and for whom Christ has died. He does this because he hates God, and he knows that he can not more successfully spite him than by ruining the children, for whom God has shown so much love; they are all chosen children all the boys and girls—since Christ has died for each. Oh! that the parents would keep their children hid from satan's officers, who seek their lives, and, when they can no longer hide them, that they may give them by faith to God, and engage his friendship for them. Give the children the benefit of faith, your faith, when they are in the cradle, for the promises are to you and your children!

Moses was the most fortunate child ever born under an evil star. Just read the story, and see how this little weeping captain won his way from a humble place, where he led a very precarious existence, to the safe and honorable berth in the king's household, with the princess as his mother by adoption, and his own mother as hired nurse. Did not she laugh with joy to herself when she received her first month's wages. She was the only mother I ever heard of who received pay for nursing her own darling child. Now there comes a gap in the history; we must make a long skip over Moses' boyhood and youth, and see him again as a man forty years old. His fortunate childhood was no inheritance from his parents' faith; he was living, so to speak, on his mother's and father's capital, but the time came when his mother's and father's faith could avail him no more. He must have faith of his own. The training in faith he received at the hands of his nurse prepared his heart to receive the word of promise for himself. He believed the promise, and soon his faith in the promises was tested. He was offered a high position in the realm, may be co-regent and successor to the throne, but to accept this would have been to give up his hope as an Israelite, and be an apostate from the Jewish faith. His decision was noble to renounce the palace, and take his place with the suffering people of God. He was so convinced of the faithfulness of God, to keep his promise to the race of Israel, that he deliberately chose to be an heir of the promises to be yet fulfilled in the future rather than to enjoy the emoluments and honors of Egypt, which were then at hand, and proffered for his acceptance. How strong his faith in God must have been to have enabled him to resist this tempting offer. His decision was hardly taken before a crisis arose to confirm it. Read the history, and learn how, in a moment of indignation, when he saw one of his own race smitten and beaten cruelly by one of the Egyptian overseers, he interfered, and slew the Egyptian. The case was soon reported to the ears of the king, and Moses must fly for his life. Reading this account, as given by Moses himself, we find no explanation or palliation of the deed. As it is recorded, it looks much like a case of manslaughter, or murder, under intense indignation, and fiery love for his brother. Saul, of Tarsus, manifested something of the same spirit against those he considered the great enemies to Judaism. He saw his guilt afterward. Was Moses' case like Saul's? The intense Jew, but not the meek Moses. He had yet a wonderful experience to go through before he could be chosen as the leader of God's people. The act expelled his separation and complete severance from the Egyptians, but did it not delay for many years the deliverance of the children of Israel?

We can not in this lesson, for lack of space allotted, give all the great lessons taught here in this short chapter of history. We take Paul's summary of this chapter as the best we know. He makes it a dynamic lesson of faith. Faith, as connected with the preservation of a child's life, and faith as the principle of life of the man. Faith being the principle of life, it must be concerned with all of life. It is concerned with the cradle as much as with the decisive crisis-points of intelligent age. "By faith Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents." Hebrews xi, 23. Faith of his parents, not his own faith, but his parents', is the great concurring cause of this starts his life toward a successful issue. "By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter." Hebrews xi, 24. Here is faith again as the principle of his decisions and his life; the same kind of faith that preserved him in infancy, when exercised by his parents, but not the same kind of faith as theirs, inherited by him. Faith, his own, grown in his own heart, planted there by God, who dropped the seed—his word—in Moses' heart. The germinating seed rests the soil of his heart. God furnished the seed, and it flourished. Behold in Moses' life the power of faith as a principle of life, successful and eternal. For grandness of commission, for permanence of influence as actor and thinker, in law, in literature and in religion, no name shines brighter than the name of Moses. Founder of a theocracy, grandest of souls, he touches all men and all ages. Like all the other men who have proved themselves to be the Elect, his life was his faith in God's word.

Mr. Wesley and the Truth.

Mr. Wesley, more than any man I ever read after, avoids contradictions. His leading ideas were right, eminently right, but he was a man, working under the direction of a good, sound human judgment or reason, unaided by inspiration. Hence that he should have written thousands and thousands of pages on the most intricate subjects involved in the whole field of polemic theology, following out their various ramifications in detail, meeting every form of error, and overcoming every form of opposition, without now and then making a difference when there was no distinction, would have been positively superhuman. Like Luther, he was a zealous, ardent defender of the truth. His convictions were strong, and so was his speech. Sometimes he said more than he meant, and so confessed in the late hours of his life. The wonder is that there is not more of this over-reaching in his works than is there.

Moreover, like other men, Mr. Wesley had the instincts of early training, of the doctrines of his fathers, and no man, without a full abandonment of all the early precepts of his life, is likely so to modify it as to keep all the good, and leave out all the evil in his ancestral precepts. Besides this he traversed a wilderness, made, in a large measure, his own roads the old paths had well-nigh grown up, and when he came to blaze out a way for future generations, he was very careful not to blaze those winding trails along which he had been in search of truth. The two main windings of his life—baptismal regeneration and sanctification—were left out of the twenty-four articles. They are both in his works. Like the bruised grass in the wilderness, they show that his feet have been there. He saw them, he examined them, but he left them out of the articles. The first has not been called for; the second has. When the first is held, it is viewed as Mr. Wesley viewed it; the second has been perverted accepted in the light of his most highly-painted colors.

But why has this controversy turned on John Wesley, and not on St. Paul? I understand that I am to accept the twenty-five articles as far as they may be proven by the Scriptures, and, if they fail of Scriptural support, I am not to be bound by them. "The Holy Scriptures contain all things necessary to salvation, so that whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of faith."—Art. 5.

It has been asserted that Mr. Wesley taught that sanctification was a second blessing, procurable by faith at any moment, and without this second blessing no man can get to heaven.

Mr. Wesley, in his sermon on "Perfection," paragraph 7, proposition 1, says: "Now the moral image of God consists (as the apostle observes,) in 'righteousness and true holiness.' By sin this is totally destroyed. And we never can recover it till we are 'created anew in Christ Jesus.' And this is perfection." Now, look at his exposition of this idea of holiness in his sermon on the "New Birth"—on the "Nature of the New Birth."

Paragraph 5, proposition 2: "It is the change wrought in the whole soul by the Almighty Spirit of God when it is 'created anew in Christ Jesus,' when it is 'renewed after the image of God in righteousness and true holiness.'" This, he says, is the work or result of regeneration, and elsewhere he declares "this is perfection."

See also "Scripture Way of Salvation," paragraph 4, proposition 1: "At the same time that we are justified, viz., in that very moment, sanctification begins. In that instant we are born again, born from above, born of the Spirit; there is a real as well as a relative change. We are inwardly renewed by the power of God. We feel the love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us, producing love to all mankind, and, more especially, to the children of God.

Paragraph 8: "From the time of our being born again, the gradual work of sanctification takes place. We go on from grace to grace while we are careful to "abstain from all appearance of evil," and are "zealous of good works."

Ibid, paragraph 9: "It is thus that we wait for entire sanctification, for a full salvation from all our sins."

The doctrine which Mr. Wesley taught in the heart of his sermons, and which he incorporated in the articles, is this: "By regeneration man is cleansed from the guilt and power of sin. It causes him to 'love God as he never did love any other creature,' makes his 'whole life one labor of love,' one continued obedience to the commands, 'Be merciful, as God is merciful,' 'Be ye holy, as I, the Lord, am holy,' 'Be you perfect, as your Father in Heaven is perfect.'" (Marks of the new birth, paragraph 1, proposition 1.) Here his sanctification begins, and grows with his growth, expands with his spiritual capacities till he is glorified. "A CHILD that is made perfect has not 'already attained all they shall attain.'"—Wesley's works, volume 6, page 491. "He who does not commit sin is perfect."—Ibid, page 414.

That Mr. Wesley does insist, at times, on more than a new birth is very clear. So does Paul: "Leaving the principle of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection."

So St. Peter, addressing "them that have obtained like precious faith with us, through the righteousness of God, and of our Saviour, Jesus Christ."—II Peter i, 1; who had "all things that pertain to life and godliness" (verse 3,) and had "escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust" (verse 4,) exhorts them to an advancement in the divine life, adding to that "precious faith"—building upon it—adding "grace to grace" (Mr. Wesley,) letting these things "be in you and abound" (verse 8.) Otherwise he will forget "that he was purged from his old sins" (verse 9.) So also Paul does not profess to have attained to "perfection" (Phil. iii, 12,) but is pressing "toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (verse 14.) He is "going on to perfection" (Heb. vi, 1,) "if God permit" (verse 3.)

But we are told not to live in the seventh chapter of Romans, but advance to the eighth chapter. It is said that St. Paul was made perfect between the writing of the seventh and eighth chapters of his letter to the Romans. A paragraph in the Nashville Advocate recently gave countenance to this theological monstrosity. The epistle to the Romans was written before Paul ever visited Rome; that to the Philippians while in prison there. In the latter he declares his purpose of going onward and upward in the divine life, and tells us plainly that he looks forward to a fuller apprehension of Christ Jesus. That his Christian life was perfect in kind, there can be no doubt—perfect like the body of a young child—for "if any offend not in word, the same is a perfect man."—James iii, 2.

In I Corinthians i, 1-2, Paul writes "to them that are sanctified in Christ Jesus," to those who come "behind in no gift" (verse 7.) There were "contentions" among them (verse 11.) So that no more is said of the sanctified ones in Corinthians than of the unsanctified (?) ones in the seventh of Romans, who were "dead to the law by the body of Jesus Christ" (verse 4.) The Corinthians seem not to be less carnal than the Romans.

There is a degree of moral incompetency in man, inasmuch that he is always to be touched by temptation at his "carnal" points. Hence arises the peccability of man.

"I know many who love God with all their heart, mind, soul and strength. He is their one desire, their one delight, and they are continually happy in him. * * * For want of better bodily organs, they sometimes inwardly think, speak or act wrong."—Volume 6, page 737 (see page 747.) Answering Mr. Erskine, who charged him with preaching a sinless perfection, Mr. Wesley says (volume 6, page 711:) "I do not maintain this. I do not believe it. The proposition I will hold is this: A person may be cleansed from all sinful tempers, and yet need the atoning blood. For what? For negligences and ignorances, for both words and actions (as well as omissions,) which are, in a sense, transgressions of the perfect law. And I believe that no one is clear of these till he lays down his corruptible body."—Ibid, page 741. "The perfection I teach is perfect love; loving God with all the heart, receiving Christ as Prophet, Priest and King, to reign alone over all our thoughts, words and actions.

From the above extracts it will be seen that Mr. Wesley believed in "three grand Scriptural doctrines—original sin; justification by faith and holiness consequent thereon." Volume 6, page 757.

Here is a very exact formulation of doctrine. Man is depraved; with him sin is an original element; by it he is guilty; on account of it he is condemned, but not beyond pardon. Jesus has died, "the just for the unjust," and "by faith in him" the sinner may be justified. Being justified, he may "grow in grace, and in the love and knowledge of our Lord, Jesus Christ," till he "grows up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ."—Eph. iv, 15.

This growth, this steadfastness in faith, this zeal for good, this pressing "toward the mark for the prize of our high calling of God," is our line of duty, and the highway to holiness.

"It is thus that we wait for entire sanctification." Mr. Wesley.

C. A. PARKER.

Colporiage Sketches—No. 9.

BY A. M. JONES.

"DEVIL DICK," AND DEAD HORSE.

Mr. Richard D. Penn, familiarly known among his acquaintances as "Devil Dick," lives in Lawrence county, Ala., near the corners of Winston and Morgan. The appellation of "Devil Dick" might indicate something bad on the part of Mr. Penn, but not so. He is simply good natured, playful, likes his fun and innocent amusement; nothing more. It is true he had no Bible until I supplied him, though he had been keeping house for fifteen or twenty years. This, however, he assured me, was not altogether his fault, as he had earnestly been trying to get one ever since the war. It is a shame to our boasted civilization, if not a sin against God, for country merchants, on whom their customers are dependent for everything else in the mercantile line, not to keep Bibles in their stores for sale. I have found hundreds of destitute families in my travels who would have had Bibles long ago if they had been kept within their reach. In addition to the misfortune of having no Bible, Mr. Penn also incurred the displeasure of the government, a few years ago, by making what is known, in mountain parlance, as wild-cat whisky. His infelicitous pursuit, however, was suddenly arrested, as the revenue officers, at an hour when he least expected them, came upon him, broke up his still, poured out his whisky, and took him a prisoner to Huntsville, where he rested quietly in jail for three days and nights. After paying out more than a hundred dollars, he was permitted to return to his home, a wiser and better man. In speaking of his trip to Huntsville, and his lodgement in jail, he said: "I had no inclination to go to jail, and insisted on not doing so, and it is the only time in my life that I ever remained three days and nights in a place where I didn't want to stay." By special invitation I went to Mr. Penn's, soon after first meeting him, and spent Saturday night. While on our way to church next day his horse became violently sick, and did not recover until late in the afternoon, though we doctored and worked with him as rapidly as possible for hours. In about three weeks after that time I left Danville with a fresh load of books, to make another trip through Winston county. A drive of ten miles, through mud, over rocks, and up the mountain, brought me to Mr. Penn's again. The sun was an hour high, but, knowing the scarcity of houses on my line of travel, I turned in for the night. Horse, buggy and baggage were soon stored away, and I had an hour to devote to reading and writing before my friend came in from his work. At sundown Morgan, for that was my horse's name, was watered, curried and rubbed from head to hoof, and supplied with a bountiful supper. At nine o'clock we were at the stable again. He had dispatched his feed, was quiet, and seemed to be perfectly well. At eleven o'clock, some time after we had retired, Mr. Penn heard a noise in the lot, and soon reported to me the alarming intelligence that my horse was sick. I was soon there, and we went to work as fast as possible, but, alas! it was too late; in an hour he was dead. He was a noble fellow, young, large and strong; was worth $100. He suited me better than any horse I had ever owned. During his short sickness Mr. Penn, wife and children all seemed concerned, and rendered every assistance in their power. The indifference of three great, strapping, lazy wagoners, who slept in the same room, and one in my bed, attracted my attention. Neither of these men got up, offered any advice or assistance, and seemed as much unconcerned as if Morgan had been a rat. I do not think that anything could have saved my horse, yet a willing mind, on their part, would have been highly appreciated by me on that memorable occasion. When it was all over we returned to the house, and to our beds, others slept, but I could not. I was on the mountain, in almost a wilderness country, among strangers, but few of whom seemed to take any interest whatever in my work, had only $2 of my own money in my pocket, and thought it extremely doubtful as to buying another horse on credit. To sleep under the circumstances was simply impossible. Mr. Penn had taken the precaution to make a large fire. I sat by it, thought, planned and meditated for hours. Having begun without money, and devoted my entire life to the preparation for the ministry, and in the work of the itinerancy, together with a few months soldier life, and almost two years service as chaplain to the Confederate army, I had passed through various scenes, braved many difficulties, but nothing of the kind had ever before so completely arrested me in my onward course; I was completely stalled; could not turn a wheel. Misfortunes are liable to overtake us all, and most men, during some period of their history, need sympathy and help. If those two high salaried officers of the "American Bible Society" should see this they will readily understand why it was that I, in my extremity, so earnestly appealed to them.

Just before the dawn of day, while feeling as gloomy as it is possible for a man to feel on account of losing a horse, and endeavoring to devise plans for the future, the passage of Scripture, "Be careful for nothing, but in everything, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God," (Phil. iv, 6,) came to my mind like an angel from heaven. Soon the burden was gone from my heart, darkness and anxiety gave place to light and peace, and I had an undefinable assurance that before the sun went down the next day I would be in possession of another horse, and fully prepared to go on with my work. Having experienced this happy mental and spiritual change, I could have slept, but day had dawned, and it was too late; the industrious people were getting up. Of course I did not feel communicative, having lost both my horse and the entire night's sleep, but could not help being amused at those lazy fellows, who were so very indifferent only a few hours before. With the curiosity of children, they hastened out to see the dead horse, and returned one at a time. The first who entered the room, after vacantly gazing into the fire a moment, turned to me and lazily drolled out: "Well, you have lost your horse." Yes, sir, I replied, he is dead. The second soon came in and remarked: "Your horse died last night, sure enough." Yes, sir, I have been conscious of the fact for several hours that he died "very dead." The third returned, rubbing his hands, in haste to get to the fire, and said: "I see your horse is dead this morning." Dead, was the response, I think, sir, he is one of the deadest horses I ever saw. After asking a number of questions, as to the age, value and qualities of the dead horse, and receiving answers in monosyllables, they applied themselves to telling dead horse stories, and highly entertained each other until breakfast. Drawn by two yoke of oxen, Morgan was carried over the hill, and left until the last day, or at least until his noble form is destroyed and decays. We would have buried him had it been convenient. Now it was that I felt more keenly than ever that my horse was dead. The buggy was rolled out, books, baggage, harness and bridle all packed in, and the shaft securely tied to the axle of the front wheels of Mr. Penn's wagon. Under the superior conductorship of Mr. Penn, the strong young oxen rapidly walked a mile, and drew up at the home of Mr. Mason, who kindly loaned me a pony for the next five miles. Adjusting the harness, and taking the reins, the pony, though small, soon trotted to the store of Mr. Sherald, at the foot of the mountain. Stowing away books, buggy and harness, and after a hasty dinner, though the rain was falling in torrents, by the kindness of Mr. Lovelady, a clever young man, a grandson of one of Jackson's old soldiers, who accompanied me, I was conveyed on horseback to the home of Mr. Wm. E. Baker, my boarding house near Danville. Having left home the day before, to be gone a month, of course my sudden return in the rain, with bridle in hand, startled the family. There I found loving and sympathizing hearts. My little boy, who was much attached to Morgan, hid his face on my breast and wept bitterly. When night came I retired to rest, with a trusting heart, fully expecting to get a horse the next day, though from where or when I had no idea, and slept soundly. The next morning, about eight o'clock, a gentleman hailed at the gate, and called me out. After a few words he said: "I understand that you have lost your horse, and I have brought you another." He was a fine looking fellow, good size and well conditioned. In less than ten minutes the trade was made, and the horse mine. Having lost but one day, I was prepared again to go on with my work.

Obituaries.

FARNELL. Mrs. CLARA ASTRUP FARNELL was born in Mobile, Ala., September 27, 1847, died May 22, 1881. She was reared by a pious Christian mother, and brought up in the First Street Sunday School, grateful memories of which she cherished through life. As a natural consequence these influences she was converted at an early age and joined the Methodist church, and at once, though yet a child was instrumental in bringing her father into communion.

Her first marriage was to W. F. Harsell, by whom she had several children, only one of whom survives her. Being left a widow she was married to Mr. Farnell, a devoted and consistent member of the Methodist Church, who with a family of children is left to mourn her loss.

Sister Farnell was modest and unassuming, but always ready to testify of the goodness of God and the power of his grace. When her health failed so that she could no longer attend church services, she was accustomed more frequently to retire for private prayer to her closet, and this secret place of power she often left with her face shining and her heart overflowing with peace. She was true to all the relations she sustained. God, in his providence, placed her as a wife and mother; she was faithful to her responsibilities. The large number who walked in her funeral procession and dropped their tears of sorrow upon her grave testified that the community was bereaved of a neighbor and friend. Her name is "precious ointment poured forth." In the hour of final conflict the cloud lifted not, and she stepped into the cold waters with the light from the golden city resting upon her heart, and the strength of the everlasting arms underneath and lifting her up.

God grant that the bereaved husband and children may fulfill her dying request, to meet her in glory.

MURPHEY. John W. Murphey, of Rapides, Miss., died May 31, 1881, in the forty fourth year of his age. Mr. Murphey, for some time previous to his death, had been afflicted with lung disease, though was confined to his bed only a few weeks during which time he suffered much pain, but bore it with patience, bearing his affliction like a man. During the time he was confined to his bed he read the Bible frequently, and he told me that when a young he joined the Methodist Church but neglected the influences by which he was surrounded, and the inclination of his nature to evil, he was not willing to give up his good intentions. He was not a member of the church at the time of his death.

A short while before he breathed his last he called his brother-in-law to his bedside and asked him what the physician thought of his condition. "You need have no fear of frightening me, for I am not afraid to die," and when informed that there was no hope of his recovery he said, "I see it all clearly." After giving some instructions as to the manner in which he would have his children brought up, and making some suggestions with reference to his burial, he exclaimed, "Jesus! Jesus!" and calmly fell asleep. God bless his orphan children, the bereaved relatives and friends, and may they meet him on the celestial shore. M. C. [illegible]

WILLIAMS—ORTH.—Miss. SARAH E. KIMBROUGH, daughter of Susan and Aaron Sanders, was born November 28, 1842; on the ninth of February, 1861, she was married to Mr. Zachariah Williamson, with whom she lived in peace and harmony until the hour of her death, which occurred March 24, 1881.

In 1871, under the ministry of Rev. J. W. Heidt, she attached herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; joined and professed to enjoy the witness of her acceptance with God, until at a camp meeting held at Smithville, in Wilcox parish, she obtained this blessing, and ever after led a consistent Christian life. Her hopes heightened as she neared the grave, and she died witnessing a good confession, leaving behind the odor of a life spent in the service of her Master. R. J. Fowler.

HUNT. By order of W. Hunt, a member of Bethesda Church, it is with a heavy heart we announce the death of his father-in-law, Mr. Thomas Hunt, which occurred on the fourth of May. He was born in Virginia, and was in the seventy-fifth year of his age. Mr. Hunt was unexpectedly stricken down with paralysis about four days previous. He leaves a wife and seven children to battle with the ills of life. His many friends and acquaintances will be pained to learn of his death, but will be consoled with the reflection that he met death with a hope full of immortality, and with resignation and an expressed desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better. He has gone to his reward, and has left behind him a rich inheritance in heaven. M. CHAPPELL, P. C.

Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JUNE 30, 1881.

"LOVEST THOU ME?"

BY M. T. TAYLOR.

Oh, brothers and sisters, growing old,
Do you remember the love
When your soul was strong and your heart was bold,
And your love was in its prime?

When you scaled the mountains of God in prayer,
And you carried the victor's palm,
All your praise rang out on the holy air,
And your life was one sweet psalm?

When every vision of earth seemed fled,
And grace did your being enthrall,
And passion and pride and sin were dead,
And the Saviour was all in all?

How the might of your loyal prayers prevailed
Till the dark one strove in vain;
And the King of Glory removed the veil,
And new Eden appeared again?

You said you would do more the Spirit grieve,
But keep the end in view:
You said you would never the Saviour leave,
And vowed to prove faithful and true.

Have you turned your back on the Crucified
Have you flung his cross at your feet?
Can you bear, with a heart all cold and dead,
That searching eye to meet?

Come back to the loving Lord once more;
Come home to his faithful arms;
The cup of bliss shall again run o'er,
And the world will lose its charms.

The golden doors on their hinges bright
Roll back and far within
The angels wait, in their robes of light,
And they cry, "Come in! come in!"

—Bible Banner.

Notes of Life.

BY BISHOP ROBERT PAINE, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

During several weeks immediately succeeding my conversion, the revival continued to spread, and following the impulse of mind and heart, I was constantly employed in trying to induce others to obtain what I had realized. To work for Christ and save souls from death was the instinct of my new nature. Every other object seemed of inferior importance. To become a Christian appeared to be so right, so necessary, and withal so simple and easy, that I must persuade others to try it. It surprised me when I failed to do so. If any friend had so kindly and plainly explained the subject and the process it looked to me then, I would have begun before. Alas! the Master himself did not always succeed. Evil deeds and evil hearts in free agents may successfully resist Omnipotence and Infinite love.

A crisis in my life was now upon me. Without intending it, or thinking much of the consequences as to my future vocation, I found myself taking a prominent part in all the religious meetings. Then I was soon called upon to pray in public, to speak in love-feasts and class-meetings, then to close services, after sermon, by exhortation. Finally, when the preacher failed to attend an appointment at a private house where a number of neighbors and old friends had met, I was urged to address the assembly; and as a refusal to lead the service would be a dismissal of the congregation, and virtually a break-down of the revival-meetings, I undertook the task; and as I never could talk without a methodical arrangement of my subject, I selected Matthews xi. 20: "Come unto me all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." The speaker, those addressed, what is required, and the motive, were the points simply and concisely dwelt upon. It was doubtless a very poor sermon, and poorly delivered; but I had done my best, and I felt relieved. I had not yielded, but had owned my Master. Had I preached? Had I been "called?" I confess these questions now perplexed me.

Once heard a preacher, who claimed, par excellence, to be "Primitive," proclaim to an immense congregation at an "Association" near Tuscaloosa, Ala., in 1820, that he knew God had called him to preach the gospel, for he had resisted in every possible way—even to swearing, gambling, intoxication, etc., but to no purpose. "And here I am willingly." This was in vindication and illustration of the doctrine of unconditional "election" and final perseverance of the saints. To one of his hearers, three thoughts occurred that the doctrine was bad, the illustration was worse, and the moral of the transaction a reflection upon the wisdom of God, as he did not, and could not preach after all. No doubt many are called who resist, and their disobedience is often a cause of protracted mental and spiritual disquietude. On the other side, my mind was occasionally disturbed for a year or two with the thought that I scarcely waited long enough to find out that I had been "truly called." But when the time drew nigh to start again to college, and my father reminded me of it, I calmly and deliberately informed him that I felt inclined to be a preacher and devote my life to that work. He was silent for awhile, and then finding that I was disinclined to go longer to school, at my request furnished me a horse, saddle-bags, etc., and left me to the dictates of my conscience. Here ended all my cherished dreams of professional distinction. Law yielded to gospel. One, and the main objection to my going through a college course was the want of an institution adapted to my condition. If I could have had access to a first-rate college where my religious status would have been conserved and my mental aspiration be gratified, I would most likely have gone to it. But we had no Vanderbilt or any other college then, and I feared to postpone a duty lest others as well as myself might be imperilled by so doing. Such reflections and feelings decided a purpose which I have never changed or regretted. I gave myself to God.

The Tennessee Conference began at Franklin, Tenn., October 3d, 1817. In company with H. H. and older brother, Sterling Coleman Brown, and several other young men recently converted, I went to Franklin. I had not been licensed nor baptized, no quarterly meeting having intervened since I had joined the church. We went by the advice of our preacher and presiding elder, Douglass, to become acquainted with the Conference, and willing to do whatever we could for the cause. The session was held in a narrow, long, low school house, near the old Methodist Church. Bishop Robert R. Roberts and Enoch George presided alternately. The former filled my ideal of a Bishop—large, weighing 240 pounds avoirdupois, with a noble physiognomy, and a remarkably sonorous and well-regulated voice. He was a most striking and lovable man. His sermon on Sunday in the Court-house, on Hebrews ii, 3: "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" was deeply impressive, and under it Mr. John Price, of Nashville, Tenn., was happily converted. Bishop George was a low, square-built, and darker-visaged man. His forehead was low, his eyes beneath protruding, and [illegible] with long and heavy lashes, gleamed keenly when not suffused with tears, as they frequently were. He had been held in high admiration for his pulpit pathos and success while stationed in Baltimore, and his sermon on Sunday, in the church, justified his reputation. His text was I John v. 4: "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." The pulpit was his throne; in the chair and on it he was not superior. The Conference was a large one, as it represented the whole of the States of Kentucky and Tennessee, excepting one small district, and included also a part of West Virginia.

A stern-looking door-keeper guarded the entrance to the Conference-room. No outsider, not even local preachers or probationers in the Conference, could enter the room. It was forbidden to divulge what was said or done. During the examination of character, I noticed that the member whose case was being considered often looked demure and uneasy, and well he might, if he had not answered satisfactorily the inquiries as to dress, secret societies, slavery, tobacco, intoxicating liquors, early rising, and many others, beside those relating immediately to his regular studies and work. The literary standard might be low, but woe betide the applicant for admission or ordination who affiliated with the Masons, or had a slave, or was prospectively an owner of one. Sometimes Cerberus slept awhile, and at the ensuing session some were allowed to enter whose parents had slaves, and while they were minors. We soon found out, however, there was a minority party more liberal in their views. The struggle between these parties continued until the Conference was divided, when most of the strictest sect fell into the new Conference, and in later years many into the Western free States. I take pleasure in saying, in this connection, that whatever diversity of opinion and action existed then and since between these parties, I hold that both were true to their convictions and entitled to be esteemed as equally honest and worthy brothren. The day has long since past when wholesale denunciations among Christians are in order. Mutual forbearance and charity is the order of the day, and ought to be. The official statistics of that year show that the whole number in the vast territory of that Conference, white and black, fell short of 20,000. At present it exceeds 200,000 whites!

Among the notables belonging to the Conference were Marion Lindsey, Henry Bascom, Thos. D. Porter, Wm. Adams, Andrew Monroe, T. L. Douglass, Wm. McMahon, J. Batcher, John McGee, Wm. Stribling, George McNelly, Jas. Axley, Peter Cartwright, Jesse Cunningham, John Henninger, John Bowman, John Johnston, etc. Henry Bascom had been admitted and ordained deacon in the Ohio Conference the previous year, transferred to the Tennessee Conference and appointed to Danville, Ky. He was not present. Ebenezer Hearn and Thomas Stringfield had passed their first year, and were present, dressed like all the other preachers, in the inevitable Quaker-fashion coats, and big-brim hats. Scarcely anything struck me so strongly as this costume on young men. We young converts looked like strange birds among these. Bascom was always rebellious in this respect, and that affected his popularity unfavorably with many of the "Old Times" brethren. Others who yielded did so under protest, for peace, and lest they might "offend."

Lindsey had a striking physique. His voice was harsh, his features and body large, his hands deformed, his intellect unusually strong, his will stubborn, and his manner domineering. He would have been prominent in any assembly. Axley was heavily built, rough in manners, and sometimes candid to boorishness. His instruments in church-surgery were the meat-axe and circular saw. He, too, was cynical and rigid in his views and administration, but a true and good man. Cartwright was blunt, fearless, outspoken, rustic, and although honest and generous, was liable to be misled by his prejudices. He likewise was a "stalwart" in church-politics. Cunningham and Henninger, and the majority of the others named, were genial and popular with the younger preachers, and the Southern people generally. I remember how admirably they preached during the Conference.

The impression made upon the community by the Conference was very great. A revival began early in the session and continued to the close. Few families of the town were unaffected by it, and scores were converted. In sixty years I have not known a Conference more marked by the Divine presence, either as regards the number of conversions or the character of the converts. Among many others who shared in its blessings were H. H. W. Bird, Maurice Bond and W. Johnson (father of the editor of the Western Methodist) and E. Saunders.

The preaching was plain, scriptural in doctrine, and with spiritual power, God was there.

—Nashville Christian Advocate.

FASHION IT IS. The first and most prevalent misconception of types is, that an article or a poem, to be brilliant, must be "dashed off." They have heard, of course, that Johnson wrote "Rasselas" in a week; that Byron was only thirteen days over the "Corsair;" that Scott was scarcely double that time in writing a volume of "Waverly;" and that Burns composed "Tam o' Shanter" between dinner and tea. But they forgot that before these tasks were accomplished, Johnson had composed and published what would fill volumes; Byron had already spent the best of his years in the constant practice of his pen; Scott had edited the Border ballads, the works of Swift and Dryden, and written the greatest of his poems; and that Burns was as expert and practised in verse-making as a long experience in the art could possibly make even him. Apart altogether from the question of super-eminent genius of all those men, they did not attain to this degree of literary celerity all at once. They did not jump into it as a man may get into a suit of new clothes. It was in each case the result of the unwearied practice of their art. There have been instances such as that of the poet Campbell, where the genius erupted early, and where the first work was the best; but this is very rare even in the ranks of genius. The rule in these ranks has rather been on the side of unmitigated labor in correcting and perfecting their compositions. Many of them, such as Tilldon, wrote and re-wrote the first of their productions three or four times over; and after all, when they see their work in print, have been known to declare that they thought they could still improve it were they to write it over yet again! It may be taken, therefore, as a fundamental rule in the attainment of literary excellence, to spare no labor in perfecting and polishing, and to leave no word, or sentence, or passage unimproved that still seems to admit of improvement. Attention to this would save many a young writer some of his bitterest disappointment.—Chamber's Journal.

Religious Intelligence.

MISSIONARY.

JAPAN.—Mr. De Forest has been touring again.—this time to the east of Osaka, in Ise, "a rich, and idolatrous province," noted for its shrine of the Sun-goddess, Dai-dingu. He was preceded, by a few months, by a native missionary, sent out by the Christians of Osaka. He had succeeded in awakening some interest in a few centers, and in forming several little bands for the study of the Bible. In one of the villages, Ogawa, a man who years ago stumbled upon a Chinese Bible, eagerly embraced the opportunity to inquire what this new religion might be. Out of this preliminary work grew the demand for a new missionary tour. So, with a Bible-seller who had just sold a thousand volumes in a week in the city of Okayawa, he started out for Ise. At the first meeting the native missionary and the Bible seller made the introductory "few remarks," each an hour long, so that Mr. De Forest began at ten o'clock, being assured by those present that "they loved protracted meetings," and finished in time for bed at midnight. Thus for a week, now in a theater, now in a school-house, and more privately in a hotel, they exposed idolatry and preached Jesus—to many who thought him an American or an Englishman—ninety-two times in six days. "In three of these cities no foreigner had ever been seen before. Our two hundred books were sold and many others ordered. Some gave up their concubines, some husbands and wives were reconciled; we also had several hours' talk with a priest in lineal descent of the great Sun-goddess, and he has been in secret a student of the Bible for a year; also with one of the teachers of the Shinto school, who has also the Scriptures in his closet." At a city of a former Daimio fifteen bright, thoughtful men followed him to the hotel, one of whom proved to be the Mayor, putting such questions as these: "What is this power in man that enables him to conquer? What is the soul? What is the ruin of the soul? Can a man love his enemies outside of Christianity?" At another hotel conference, after showing how the religion of Jesus answers the question, What is man?—with special reference to sins against the body—one said, "I have sworn off from any more sake, and want to be considered a Christian." Another said, "Count me in, too." Several others had already given it up, and among them an old man of sixty-four, who afterward accompanied me on foot some twelve miles; and everywhere worked up hearers, taking care at the same time to provide well for my body by carrying along the best rice it could buy!" Another man from Ise, where they were offered the great temple for his preachers, followed him for ten miles, supplying him with "sweet potatoes and oranges," having first brought his little boy of seven months, that the missionary might lay his hands upon his head and pray. The name of these bands of Bible study, "Christ's Ever-Persevering Company," may be commended to Sunday-schools and Bible-classes in this country, and to students of the Bible generally. "Ever-Persevering?" We can bear a strong infusion of that in this country. Some of the confessions of the people are significant: "Really, if one would think, there is not a statement or teaching in the whole Buddhist religion but that is loaded with nonsense;" "Just think of it! Here we have been in the midst of all this our whole lives, and never opened our eyes to this fully until a foreigner comes ten thousand miles to show it to us!" We give the following as a specimen of the preaching in one of the cities of Ise. Mr. De Forest says:

"Being a school-house, I took occasion to show how the true religion was not opposed to reason, but that as nations accepted and obeyed Christianity, science and law grew to occupy a prominence never attained under false religions. 'Your government has caused schools to be built all over the land—medical schools, law schools, and schools for scientific courses. Now where do they go for teachers to put over these schools? Have any of you ever heard that the government hired a single teacher from India, the country where Shaka's religion originated? Do you send to China, where the millions are forever saying, "Confucius, Confucius?" Think of it. All the sciences that are being taught in this land today, are taught by men educated in Christian countries, graduates mainly of Christian colleges. Your astronomy and geology, your system of law, your medical books all come from Christian countries. Do you suppose that among these scholars right before you, studying astronomy, twenty years from now, that there will be one worshiper of the sun? If there be, you might put burin in a box and exhibit him as a show for two cash a head. What is the sun? Why, it is a huge lantern that God hung up there for his children on earth. And for a man, endowed with the power of thought and speech, with free-will, placed by God at the head of visible creation, to worship a lantern that has no brains or tongue or eyes, that has no free-will really, what possible gain can there be?"

It looks as if Dr. Berry's prophecy "In twenty years Japan will be a Christian nation," might indeed prove true. The latest word is, seventy-two Protestant churches and 1,000 members. The King of Hawaii was welcomed at the Union Church at Yokohama, which Christians of the Sandwich Islands helped to build nine years ago.

Rev. E. W. Parker, presiding elder of Rohilcund district, North India, reports to the Secretaries: "One work is everywhere spreading and growing. I used to say I hope to see 10,000 Christians in the Rohilcund district before I give up the work, but now I say 100,000. The present openings look to such a result. Our native preachers are growing. We placed Mrs. Mellaby's work under a native preacher, and the work has lost none of its efficiency, but has rather taken a new start over the large circuit of 700,000 souls. Every native preacher's circuit is showing fruit well ripened." Mr. Parker also writes in a private letter: "My district never was so now; openings in every direction." —Central Christian Advocate.

—The Wyman Missionary Society of the General Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in the United States reports that during the two years which have elapsed since the organization, the Treasurer of the General Society has been paid and has disbursed $706,083. There are 125 local societies and over 3,000 members.

—Bishop Wiley has appointed Rev. L. N. Wheeler and Rev. Spencer Lewis as missionaries of our new mission in West China. Rev. [illegible] Gamewell to re-enforce the mission in Peking. Mr. Gamewell graduates this year in Dickinson College, and Brother Lewis has just graduated at Garrett Biblical Institute.

—Four native teachers employed in the New Guinea mission by the London Missionary Society, together with their families, were recently murdered by savages.

—The Baptists have in Asia 162 missionaries, 717 native preachers, 175 churches and 40,187 members. There were 3,194 baptisms last year.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The Episcopalian Church, in the diocese of Indiana, has just closed its annual convention. In the whole diocese there have been, in the past year, but 211 confirmations. Bishop Talbot says: "The condition of the diocese as a whole compared with what I found it sixteen years ago, is hopeful; compared with what it might be if all God's professed children were true to him and to his church, it is the very contrary of hopeful. Why? Because the spirit of worldliness which has crept into the church, and is the destruction of its life and its power over men. We can not hope to affect the world favorably to the church and religion of Christ while we walk in the world's ways, and live by no higher rule or standard than that which the world establishes." These last words might be read in other churches.—Western Christian Advocate.

—The United Presbyterian Church, recently in session at Alleghany, Pa., has 701 ministers, 82,857 church members and 72,030 Sabbath-school scholars. Total church contributions, $853,511. Average per member, $10 71. The Board of Foreign Missions received $75,107 97, expended chiefly for missions in Egypt and India. They have 21 missionaries and 119 native helpers. An overture on the subject of instrumental music was sent down to the Presbyteries for decision, by a vote of 131 to 22; report to be made to the next General Assembly. The General Assembly empowered a commission to consummate a union between it and the Associate Reformed Church of the South, with the understanding that neither church change its standard.—Christian Intelligencer.

—The Pittsburg Presbyterian Banner notices the recent action of the General Assembly of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in repealing the section prohibiting the use of musical instruments, says: "The law of this church excluding members of secret societies from its communion, while not officially repealed, has been pratically set aside. Now only two distinguishing characteristics remain—the use of a version of the Old Testament psalms to the exclusion of hymns, and close communion. How long will these continue to separate this church from the great body of Presbyterians throughout the world?"

The Presbyterian Church of England includes 273 congregations, with 135,886 sittings in churches, of which 63,227 are let. The churches and manses are insured for $3,810,000, with a debt against them of $621,000. There are 1,092 elders, 615 deacons, and 2,011 managers. The number of communicants in 1880 was 55,201, and in 1879, 54,857. There are 1,572 district visitors, 3,276 members of Dorcas societies, 6,139 Sunday-school teachers, 61,962 Sunday-school scholars 6,338 in young men's societies, and 6,852 in Bible classes. The total amount raised for all purposes in 1880 was $1,027,130, against $907,415 in 1879.

—A memorial, signed by nearly 21,000 laymen, was recently presented to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in opposition to the claim recently made for "the recognized toleration of wide diversities of ceremonial" in the Church of England. The memorialists enter their solemn and emphatic protest against the toleration within the church of England of any doctrines or practices which favor the resumption of the Romish mass or any colorable imitation thereof, any reintroduction of the confessional, or any assumption of sacerdotal pretension on the part of the clergy in the ministration of the sacraments.

—A novelty in connection with religious services has been introduced at Frodingham, England, by the Primitive Methodists. It took the form of a May morning breakfast, the chapel being tastefully decorated with flowers and plants, among which were plentifully introduced song birds in cages, parrots, etc. Breakfast was served at 5:30 and was followed by an appropriate sermon, after which a second breakfast was served at 7:30. The Primitive Methodists are devotedly attached to their breakfasts.

—The yearly income of the British and Foreign Society has risen to over one million of dollars. In 1876 the income of the Society was $37,779 35, and the number of copies issued 6,119. In 1880 the receipts were $966,183 95, and the number of copies circulated 1,133,719. There is hardly any habitable part of the globe unvisited by the agents of this Society.

The Moravian General Synod at Bethlehem unanimously adopted the terms of union with the Southern Province and elected two new bishops, the Rev. H. T. Bachman and the Rev. H. J. Van Vleck. A long series of resolutions (25 or more) on the finances of the Province were adopted.

—The statistics of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for 1880, just published show that there are 3,670 traveling preachers, a gain of 113; 328 superannuated preachers; 5,868 local preachers, a gain of 36,837,831 members, a gain of 15,355. Of the members, 4,981 are Indians and 1,081 colored.

—The Presbyterians have twice the number of missionaries west of the Mississippi River that the Congregationalists have, the latter having only one for 18,000 square miles and every 10,000 of population. The latter are not employing any more men there than in 1818.

—The General Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States, recently in session at Tiffin, O., unanimously adopted the report of the Peace Commission, which closes the chasm between the East and West branches of the denomination, and makes them a unit.

—The Presbyterian Sabbath-schools contribute annually to benevolent purposes $250,000, and a very small part of this goes to Presbyterian causes.

—Philip Phillips is to sing in the West Indies, and then till an extensive engagement with the London Sunday School Union.

—The Convocation of Canterbury has taken steps looking to the revision of the New Testament in Welsh, according to the text adopted in the English Revision.

Our Young People.

A SUMMER DAY.

BY MRS. ALICE C. WHITE.

Turquoise-breasted birds have sung the spring away
Pink arbutus leaves have blushed farewell to May
There's a soft sweet presence hovering on high
There's the whole of summer in the summer sky
When the daylight flutters from their swinging nests,
Rise enraptured welcomes from enraptured breasts
When the clouds of sunset stream like burning lights,
There's the fairy bow wedding of their soft good nights.

There are tears pin-lighting as they onward go
Thro' the pale spring loosened hair full low flow,
Now a wider glory in their sparkling lides
There's a summer's passion in their throbbing tides
Thro' wings, sunshine dusted, thro' the room hides go
Butterflies in silence fluttering to and fro.
There's the whole ripe sweetness of the spring gone by—
There's the whole in sum up in the summer sky

—Wide Awake.

Flint Creek, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: It has been some time since I have written for the ADVOCATE. Our paper has not been coming to us since we left Pearl river, please send it to Flint Creek, Harrison county, Miss. I miss it very much. I like to read the Young People's Department. I am not going to school now. I hope we will have one soon. I get my lessons every day. We have no Sunday-school here, but I get my lessons every Sunday.

Your little friend,

JOHN DANIEL MERCHANT.

June 27, 1881.

Lapland and its Ways.

In Lapland the sun never goes down during May, June and July; but in winter, for two months, he never rises at all. His place, however, is somewhat supplied by the wonderful Northern Lights, which dash and flicker in the cold gray skies. They look like fires of a thousand shapes and colors. Now like crowns, and now like domes, now like fishing-nets, and now like streamers of silk; now like arches, and now like banners—those welcome guests make a Lapland night beautiful.

As long as the unwearied sun goes around and around in the sky in summer, the Laplanders live in tents made of poles and skins; but when Jack Frost approaches with a scowl on his brow, the house of thick sods becomes a very snug home. The Laplander creeps into it on all-fours, along a sort of tunnel. A hole in the roof lets in a little daylight, or rather moonlight, and lets out what smoke there is from the sooty lamp. The lamp is made of stone, and filled with seal-oil; and it answers many ends. It cooks food, dries wet clothes, keeps the house warm, and affords light.

Trees are plentiful of certain sorts; and the soil of the forest is carpeted by reindeer moss, a sort of lichen, which grows on stone, trees, and earth. The moss will flourish where hardly any other grass will, and it affords gluten, or starch, which is very wholesome and nourishing. The reindeer will root under the snow for the moss, as a pig roots in the field. And if the animal browses on the moss which sticks to the trees, without digging beneath the snow, the Laplander takes it for granted that the ground there produces none.

The reindeer when he casts his coat is brownish-yellow. In the dog days he becomes white. His hair is close and thick. The horns are large and beautiful, but fall towards the end of November, and are turned into spoons or glue. This wonderful creature has been known to go at the rate of nineteen miles an hour, when yoked to a light sledge. After their most severe journeys, these deer require no more moss than can be held by a man in both his hands. Were it not for this admirable animal, who could live in Lapland? It is man's all in all there. "It feeds and clothes its master," says Goldsmith. "With its skin the Laplander covers his tents and makes his bed; of its milk he makes cheese, and uses the whey for his drink. Every part of this valuable animal is converted to some use or other. The sinews make bow-strings, springs for catching birds, and threads for sewing; the horns make glue; the tongue, a great delicacy, is sold, and the money comes back in luxuries. Yoked to a sledge, the reindeer carries his master, who guides it easily by means of a cord fastened around the horns; and it is encouraged to proceed by the driver's voice. The sledge is covered with a bear's skin, and at the back are two leathern girths, into which the traveler thrusts his arms so as to keep himself steady. He has also a pole to support the sledge in case it is in danger of being overturned."

The Laplander hunts the ermine and the squirrel, the hare, the otter and sable. Besides, he has fish in abundance in his waters: salmon, pike, tench, perch and smelts. The birds which always live with him are heathcocks, wood cocks and hawks. Other birds only stop awhile, such as swans and wild geese.

"Nobody dies of cold in Lapland," says a French writer, "except some persons perhaps, who is bewildered in the woods, or who, being fatigued with hunger or long journeys, has not strength enough left to return to his own home."

The people have some curious customs. When they have eaten a bear, and wiped their mouths and fingers, they solemnly bury all the bones; for they think the bear will rise again. They bury with the bones some spoons and a knife, for the bear will want to eat his bread and milk in another life. If a hungry dog carries off a bone, he is killed, and one of his bones is put in the grave.

The master of the house always does the cooking. Women are not allowed to make messes for the men. The Laplanders make little toys for sale, also boxes and baskets, snuff-boxes, spools of horn, shoes, garters, and gloves. The women make pewter wire, and adorn with it the reindeer harness. Hoops are made of tree-roots, and bows of fir and birch, glued together with glue made from fish-skins. This glue is so strong that pieces of wood joined by it never separate. —Chatterbox.

The Ratel.

After bagging a few franklin—partridges, as they call them over yonder—we walked on until my comrade, who was lame, proposed returning. Just at that moment a kordon called in a bend of the ravine ahead, and we stalked him cautiously. It was a long shot when at length he came in view. My friend took careful aim and fired both barrels. Quick as the sound, a fulvous, slender creature leaped from behind a rock and sped away, outstretched like a greyhound. I leveled my gun. But S——, more prudent, thrust it aside, and a puff of dust, a rattle of dry soil tumbling, marked where the shots had struck [illegible]. "You have a respect this unpatriotic cur on the veldt," he said, laughing. "Unless you had killed the lynx, which is improbable, seeing that your gun was loaded with small shot, he would certainly have attacked us, and a wounded lynx is an ugly customer; let me tell you! none more so, of our smaller animals, except a ratel." It was annoying, but my experience friend was right. After securing the kordon we turned, and on the homeward walk he gave me several anecdotes displaying the courage and tenacity of the lynx. I think I noted one or two of them, but worn old memoranda are fruitlessome to read, and the tales are not particularly striking. "You do not mean," I said, "that the funny little long-nose ratel is as dangerous as this savage creature?" "You will find that Sportsmen here don't often meddle with the ratel. For one reason, he is comical as you say; then, he is no use dead; and rather serviceable alive. But his safety is often due to a man's natural disinclination to interfere with an animal which has such an awkward way of fighting, and staggers to the charge with half his weight of lead inside of him. I once killed a ratel, it's many years ago, but I have never recovered full use of my feet. It was the first time I had a shot gun. My father was with me, but in returning home he staid to chat with a friend. I saw the ratel creeping round an ant hill. He cantered off, not very fast, and I fired at an easy range. The brute turned heels over head, just as they do for hours at a time when they are playing; if you have seen ratels in a cage you must have been amused by their performance. But it was no fun this time. He came back. I had no second barrel and no knife. It was awkward. The creature paused once, as if in pain, but never took his eyes off me. I did not think of running, but clubbed my gun and stood prepared to meet a spring. It was the oddest chance that no one had ever told me how the ratel fights. Almost every boy in the veldt knows it, but I didn't. To wait thus, expecting a leap breast high, is to give him exactly the chance he wants. Hesitating not a second, the beast glided swiftly in and seized my feet. I kicked him with the buttend, kicked him, shouted my loudest, but he gnawed with the pertinacity of a bull dog. At every blow his teeth closed like a vice. I seized his long tail, wretched and twisted it, but the ratel will not quit hold if he be cut in pieces. Not a moment, I suppose, the struggle lasted. The muscles of my instep were cut through, and I stumbled back not full length, but against the ant-hill. That saved my life, probably. The brute let go, as it does when its victim drops, to spring upon his throat, and rip his stomach with its hind claws. But I lifted myself upon my elbows, and lay across the summit of the mound. That might have only prolonged the struggle, but my father ran up at the moment. I was many months in bed, and many more on crutches."—Growing World.

MONSTER BATTLES. Among the extraordinary spectacles sometimes witnessed by those who go down to the sea in ships, none are more impressive than a combat for the supremacy between the monsters of the deep. The battles of the swordfish and whale are described as Homeric in grandeur.

The swordfish go in schools like whales, and the attacks are regular sea fights. When two troops meet, as soon as the swordfish have betrayed their presence by a few leaps in the air, the whales draw together and close their ranks. The swordfish always endeavors to take the whale in the flank, either because its cruel instinct has revealed to it the defect in the carcass, for there exists near the brachial fins of the whale a spot where wounds are mortal, or because the flank presents a wider surface for its blows.

The swordfish recoils to secure a greater impetus. If the movement escape the keen eye of his adversary, the whale is lost, for it receives the blow of the enemy, and dies almost instantly. But if the whale perceive the swordfish at the instant of a rush, by a spontaneous bound it springs clear of the water its entire length, and falls on its flank with a crash that resounds for many leagues, and whitens the sea with boiling foam. The gigantic animal has only its tail for defence. It tries to strike its enemy and finish him at a single blow. But, if the active swordfish avoid the fatal tail, the battle becomes more terrible. The aggressor springs from the water in his turn, falls upon the whale and attempts, not to pierce, but to saw it with the dentelli that garnish its weapon. The sea is stained with blood; the fury of the whale is boundless. The swordfish harasses him, strikes him on every side, kills and flies to other victories.

Often the swordfish has not time to avoid the tail of the whale, and contents itself with pressing its sharp saw to the the flank of the animal which is about to crush it. It then dies like Macenas, smothered beneath the weight of the elephant of the ocean. Finally the whale gives a few last bounds into the air, dragging its assassin in its flight, and perishes as it kills the monster of which it was the victim. The Growing World.

BEWARE OF TRIFLES. Beware of trifles, for you never can tell to what they may grow. Even a drop of honey has before now brought about the death of many men, as may be seen from the following Arabian tale, which represents a common state of matters in the East. "Petty wars," says Mr. Lane, "occasioned by events as trifling as that here related, have been frequent among the Arabs to the present day."

There was a huntsman who hunted the wild beasts in the desert, and one day he entered a cave in a mountain and found in it a hollow which was filled with honey. So he placed some of that honey in a water-skin which he had with him, then he carried it upon his shoulder and conveyed it to the city, having with him a hound that was dear to him. And the huntsman stopped at the shop of an oilman, to whom he offered the honey for sale; and the oilman, agreeing to buy it, opened the water-skin and emptied from it the honey in order to see it. But there dropped from the skin a drop of honey, and a bird pounced down upon it, and the oilman had a cat, and it sprang upon the bird; and the huntsman's dog saw it, and sprang upon the cat and killed it; and the oilman sprang upon the dog and killed it; and the huntsman sprang upon the oilman and killed him; and the oilman was of one village and the huntsman of another, and the people of these two villages heard of this event so they took up their weapons and rose against each other in anger; the two ranks met, and the swords ceased not to be brandished about among them until there died a great multitude, the number of whom none knoweth but God, whose name be exalted.

Christian Advocate.

ORGAN OF THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.

LINUS PARKER, D. D., Editor.

Corresponding Editors:

REV. J. W. HESS. REV. W. L. C. HOSSCOTT.
REV. C. E. GOLDWAY. REV. C. W. CARTER, D. D.

THURSDAY, JUNE 30 1881.

An Old Time Conversion.

In "Notes of Life," published in last week's ADVOCATE, our venerable senior Bishop tells of his conversion in this wise:

That meeting was the crisis in the religious history of our family. None of us, however, made a public demonstration of our feelings, but our prejudices against the doctrines and usages of the Methodists were removed, and we were deeply impressed. Emotions are contagious. Never had I listened before to such preaching—so earnest, so clear, so powerfully persuasive. Crowds of my acquaintances, young and old, rushed to the altar for prayer and instruction. I could not yet overcome my deeply-rooted repugnance to what I called religious sensationalism; for while I had never seriously doubted the truth and necessity of experimental religion, yet this did not accord with my plan of obtaining it. After awhile, abating myself seated in the outskirts of the congregation, having been left alone by the advancing ordinary, I arose and retired to the forest. Then and there I resolved to try and become a Christian, and rode home to read the Bible and pray. In a few days my father found peace with God, and on the ninth of October, 1817, I obtained forgiveness of my sins. But in vain had I sought this blessing while trying to do so secretly; yet when, in despite of my pride, I came forward openly and bowed down, asking publicly for prayer, in a few minutes 'the peace that passeth all understanding' filled my soul." This is substantially the history of thousands. Pride must be overcome, and there must be a public renunciation of sin and confession of Christ. This is not the whole philosophy of the Methodist altar, but it is an important part of it. Time, and thousands of conversions, have approved this method. There is no better place than this for the awakened sinner to find peace. It affords the opportunity and means of a public declaration of purpose to renounce the world and to come to Christ, and it is an act in which pride and self-will are crucified. Besides, it throws around the seeker a vast amount of moral and spiritual influence in the concentration of prayer, sympathy and instruction. As a means it is eminently reasonable and proper, and the principles which its use involves must be recognized in some way. God's blessing has rested upon the Methodist altar; and we have no doubt the cloud of glory will continue to come down and rest upon it. Modern evangelists have discovered nothing so good—certainly nothing better. When Methodism becomes too refined and respectable to call sinners to the altar, it will be a sad day, indeed. More revivals, and more thorough going, earnest altar work are among our greatest needs.

The Heated Term.

This is the sun's triumph. The clouds seem to have hidden themselves, and the sky, from dome to horizon, is all ablaze. During these longest days the sun does not waste, but grows stronger and fiercer. He rises early and sets late and greedily covets every moment. How grandly and irresistibly he begins his burning march, and with what lavish glories he adorns the scene of his evening adieu? "He rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race." How he seems to gather about him the glowing vestments of the morning, and at evening covers himself with the heat and splendors of the long, long day! Blessed sun!

And yet, shame on us to say, we are almost sorry when his burning eye looks in upon us in the early morning, and right glad we are when he goes down. To be rid of him for a few brief hours is an unspeakable deliverance. If he were to shine here all the time, at night skirting the northern rim of the earth with only half his fiery disk in view, how should we live at all? The midnight sun! We want none of it. It is not the perfect day that we long for, but the perfect night rather. Even if the stars were to disappear for a time it would be a relief. And the comet, now flashing in the northeastern sky, is a most repulsive visitor. With the thermometer up in the nineties a glow worm or a lightning bug is an unwelcome intruder.

How inevitably in this season of fervid heat everybody thinks of cool things, and calls up every scene and object and experience associated with flowing brooks, and living springs, and deep, deep wells, out of which come the overflowing bucket covered with dripping moss? The forest dells and ravines through which rivulets gurgle, and in which the notes of the birds are fresh and liquid, how vividly they come to us? We have some heart now to think of arctic explorations, and almost wish we were in the haunts of the walrus and the white bear, moving amidst the floes and ice bergs, and well on our way to solve the great problem, and to discover the open Polar Sea. Open Polar Sea! Would it not just now be a satisfaction to know that there is none, and that there is at least one spot that is perpetually frozen up? Arctic voyages are better summer reading than "Through the Dark Continent." We are almost tempted to think lightly of the fate of Sir John Franklin, and to regard it as a most rare and desirable euthanasy.

We would stand on the Alps, on the Appenines, but not with the thunder talk. We would climb to the regions of perpetual snow, and stay there until this torrid heat be overpast. Our walls, if it were possible, should be hung with pictures in which winter scenes predominate, fields covered with the drifted snow, an atmosphere flecked and dappled with the falling crystals, forests bowed beneath the weight of their snowy mantles, streams locked in icy repose, and railroads, towns and hamlets completely snowed in. It is thus that in sickness we dream of health, in poverty that we covet riches, and in delirium that the thoughts dwell upon the fountain.

The mercy of mercies, under this brazen sky, is the ice we have. The new South is in our ice factories. Who would not be fraternal, seeing what a surpassing blessing and comfort there is in Northern ice? Better than its politics, better than its literature, even better than much of its religion, is the ice. We are brethren, frozen together; and indissolubly united. Under the grateful influences of the muscle of the ice plicher, and the generous cooler, how our hearts warm toward our Northern brethren! Its effects are more magical than that of open purses, or the most gushing declamation. For the sake of a cooler climate we might be reconciled to a three months' sojourn in the White mountains, or the Adirondacks. We are free to confess that the North is the better country in the summer time, and that during the summer solstice their civilization has a better chance than ours.

The problems of the two civilizations are different. The one is how to estivate, the other how to hibernate, and this seems to be the point of contrast the world over. How to get through the winter, how to get through the summer. The easier task is ours, and yet it is not without its dangers and difficulties. The crops are growing and the bread, and raiment and wealth of the country are in the silk of the corn and the bloom of the cotton plant. The sun is making the sugar, the wheat and the rice. He is making all. And while we swelter in the city, and toil in the field, malaria is brewing, and there is death in the pot. God is over all; he has appointed the bounds of our habitations, and there is good in all, and blessings always for them that love him. In this melting and death dealing heat let us think of him who is "as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

To Live is Christ.

This is the briefest biography of a Christian that has ever been published, and it is the most comprehensive. The principle that should govern Christian living, and the object to be attained by a Christian life, are both prominent in these words of the apostle. The principle here brought forward, which should rule the whole life, is devotion to Christ. The aim, which should underlie and be the inceptive to every effort, is the possession of the grace of Christ. The love which should refine and intensify all the affections centers itself upon the person of Christ. The central controlling thought of the passage is that Christ is the object the only object of the Christian life. He is the moving principle of pious living, the supreme object of pious love, the great end of pious aims, the ultimate goal of pious hopes. If there is any object before or behind or beyond Christ, which rises higher than he does or which occupies more of the field of mental vision than he does, or the attainment of which possesses more of the desires of the heart than he does, in the light of this passage, that is not the true Christian living. A great many people make the acquisition of riches the main object of life. They live to heap up wealth; to accumulate treasures upon the earth. "Rich toward men" is their motto. Christian living puts a proper estimate upon material wealth, but that estimate falls far below the estimate placed upon "the unsearchable riches of Christ." While Christian living considers the riches of the world as good and helpful as a means of grace when properly used, it illustrates the truth of its own teaching by "making friends of the mammon of unrighteousness," and thus "lays up treasures in heaven" for future use. "Rich toward God" is the motto. Again, many people make pleasure-seeking the chief aim of living. All this search and strife to obtain happiness points to the solemn fact that the heart is empty of peace. And that asks the question, Why? And the answer involves all that the Scriptures teach in regard to the soul's separation from God. But worldly pleasures are like "snowflakes on the river, a moment white, then gone forever." Christian living secures the only peace of soul that is worth the name, because it reinstates a man into the favor and fellowship of an offended Father. What a contrast there must have been in the feelings of the prodigal when he remembered the last day he spent with the swine and the first day he spent under the roof of his reconciled Father! Again, many people make fame the principal end of existence. This has a fascinating charm, and, like an "ignis fatuus," leads the unwary "many a weary distance," only to leave them entangled in thorny thickets. How many have imagined that the "loudest blast that ever filled renown's obstreperous trump" would be blown for them. But, too late, they learn that this "blast" "fades with the lapse of ages," and disappointment is their doom. The Christian living is a struggle for the honors that come from God, and the fame of eternity. "They that honor me I will honor," says the Lord, and the Christian works for that honor. All other honor is perishable. He says with Paul, "for me to live is Christ." In Christ is all durable riches, all solid pleasure, all fadeless honor. Hence, he says, "Christ first, Christ last, and Christ forever."

C.

Jottings on the Wing.

The train rolled out of New Orleans at 4:30 P. M., the time appointed. Heat and dust combined made the trip south of Chicago anything but pleasant. While improvements are being perfected in sleeping cars it would not be an unappreciated achievement, if the sleepers were constructed for greater coolness and less dust for summer travel. A Pullman should mean comfort in all weather, as it is generally well paid for. On a $39 railroad ticket, $12 may be added for the luxury of a sleeping coach. May we not look forward to the time when in the order of general improvements, each passenger may find his bed and board furnished without extra pay? The tendency is towards cheapness. Eight years ago, a ticket to Boston, via Niagara, cost about $68, now it is $39. We say, hurrah for competition. It is the life of railroad travel. Tickets to San Francisco are still high, but the completion of the Southern Pacific, now being vigorously pushed, will reduce the rate of travel West, at least within moderation.

Before leaving Texas, we were informed that five miles and more of rail were being laid daily. Grand must be the future of a State where so much enterprise is exhibited. We are not surprised at the growing indisposition to divide the State as it increases in wealth and populousness. What railroads have done to the North and West in developing their resources and building immense cities, we may expect them to do in the South, when the work of building becomes general. As we proceeded through Mississippi, we noticed few changes by way of progress. There were the same woods and fields, looking as though they needed more life and energy.

The contrast between our Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi villages with those of the Western and Eastern section of the country, is so great, that we can but ask whether if these energetic sons of the soil could be induced to live South, our whole Southern territory might not receive an incalculable impulse forward. The fear yet dwells among the Northern people a feeling of distrust towards us. Multitudes of them would leave the hills, from which they eke out a bare subsistence, for our rich and productive lands, if they could feel sure of a warm and friendly reception. Of this, we should use every effort to assure them. Public spirited, influential men and capitalists in the South should arouse themselves to the importance of action in this direction, and by proper advertisement and business methods, our uncultivated acres would be blooming with life and beauty. Our route ran through a most beautiful and prosperous portion of the country.

Chicago was the first city of importance we visited. This is a city of magic. The soil is made as well as the buildings. Originally it was a strip of sand lying along Lake Michigan. Now it is a city of immense proportions, with a population of 503,000. It is intersected in all directions by railroads, beautified by magnificent buildings and graced by six delightful parks. Enterprise seems to find its stronghold, if not its exclusive abiding place here. We passed over the area known as the fire limits, and saw hardly a mark to indicate the terrible havoc of 1871.

It is about impossible to conceive of the panic which seized that immense population during the raging of fire and ruin. It is said one hundred children were given birth that night in the parks where refuge had been sought from the fire fiend, while the stars were cheerless, and the frost winds mercilessly blew. With constantly increasing population, and rise in value of real estate, it bids fair to be the great city of America, as it has long been of the West. Great is the contrast between the staid and way-worn methods of our Southland, and the push and vehemence which characterize this section. This people seem equal to any accomplishment. They have learned self-confidence under great trial. Indeed they have learned the art of living. They study to respond perfectly to every demand of the spirit of progress. Nature and art combine for their comfort. Lake Michigan, from its crystal depths furnishes abundance of sparkling water for table and other purposes. Mechanism has given two tunnels under their river, and prodigally arranged for the recreation of the people. Eighteen miles of boulevard connecting the city parks together, are now in process of construction. Solid blocks of stone are taking the place of the old wooden banquettes, and signs of improvement are everywhere manifest. I glory in American progress. This country is our country, and this people are our people. Possibly, in the not far distant future, some correspondent from this section may, with a kindred spirit, dilate upon the rapid development of the Crescent City, whose star now seems rising with every wave on her mighty river, while she is recognized the second most important seaport, east of the Rocky Mountains.

We noticed the solid masonry of Chicago's buildings, many of them fire proof. Her churches are constructed for endurance and elegance. All denominations and undenominations are strongly represented here. Prof. Swing and Dr. Thomas, who preached themselves out of what is usually denominated orthodoxy, entertain delighted thousands. Bishop Cheney of the Reformed Episcopal church exerts a strong influence toward the advancement of Reformed Episcopalianism, a cause not generally well known in the South; but which in time, will make its appearance and cause itself to be felt. It seems to meet with no little favor in Chicago. Whatever the general opinion concerning Prof. Swing may be in distant communities—here, in Chicago, he is a left power.

S. H. W.

National Temperance Convention.

MR. EDITOR: The National Temperance Convention met in the Methodist Episcopal Church at ten A. M. A very large attendance of delegates of both men and women were present. The number is variously estimated at from two to five hundred. It is difficult for the committee on credentials to get a correct report, as many of the delegates have neglected to get proper testimonials of their elections. At the opening of the convention a half hour was spent in a prayer meeting conducted by the Rev. A. G. Lawson, of Brooklyn, after which Mr. J. L. Bailey, of Philadelphia, was elected temporary chairman of the convention, and J. N. Stearns, Mrs. C. B. Buel and Mr. Kane were elected secretaries. The usual committees were appointed, and a permanent organization was effected by electing Dr. Gordon, of Boston, chairman, and J. N. Stearns and Mrs. C. B. Buel, secretaries, and J. L. Bailey, vice president. Then an address of welcome was delivered, or read, by Mr. Homer Eaton, pastor of the church; a response was made by an old Quaker-looking lady of Ohio that they all call "Mother Steward." Then for an hour the convention was occupied by stirring impromptu speeches made by different ones. Mr. Foster, of Canada, made a very timely speech with regard to this great convention and the magnitude of this great country; and pleasantly reminded the convention that there was a good deal of the world outside of the United States, and that a great deal of temperance work was being done by them. But, to cap the climax, J. B. Gough, the man who has a world wide fame as a temperance talker, was called out, and, amidst stamping and shouting "Gough! Gough!" a little old-looking man, with long white hair and beard, and with ruddy appearance, started from the audience almost in a run, and took the rostrum, and for about fifteen minutes he satisfied everybody that it was nobody else but J. B. Gough. The evening session was occupied in discussing the subject of prohibition. Mrs. Foster, a lawyer by profession, led the way. She read a carefully-prepared paper upon the subject, which showed that she had all the law points, and her talk was strong and masculine. Men from different portions of the country, even from Oregon, spoke on and in favor of absolute prohibition. The two prominent features of the temperance platform are total abstinence and prohibition. These are outspoken, and their advocates are unmistakingly in earnest. At night we had an address from Mrs. F. E. Willard. Her address was mainly made up of a detailed account of her visit to the South last spring. In reference to the South, she may be denominated a converted Yankee. She abounded in extravagant eulogies lavished upon the South and Southern people. Dr. Peck then gave a strong prohibition talk in a very strong and emphatic way. Then Gough again. His theme was: "Save the drunkard." His gestures and oratory are like Niagara Falls; they can not be described. We [illegible] communication from the Independent Order of Good Templars, of New Orleans, which we presented to the convention to be read.

Thus ends our first day at the National Temperance Convention. Our impression is, from what we see and hear, that a great reform upon the temperance question is inevitable right soon. The contrast between Eureka Springs and Saratoga would be a theme full of incidents.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, June 21, 1881. J. P.

Temperance in Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: Alabama may be a little slow in taking position in the fight for prohibition now being prosecuted throughout the country; but it is not because of lethargy or lukewarmness. The temperance hosts of Alabama are ready for the conflict and are only awaiting the appearance of a leader. The Grand Lodge of Good Templars, at its eleventh annual session, held at Union Springs, April 12-13 last, appreciating the situation, authorized and instructed its executive officers to assume the position, and to correspond with the friends of temperance reform throughout the State, and solicit their views with regard to the holding of a State mass convention during this summer for mutual conference, and with the hope of securing harmony and unity of action on the part of all friends of prohibition in the State. In pursuance of this instruction, I now address myself to the large number of Christian homes in Alabama, into which your excellent periodical is warmly welcomed, and ask them, each and all, to give this matter careful thought, and write me their views relative to the feasibility of holding such convention, and any suggestions they may feel inclined to make as to the time, place and character of such convention, without unnecessary delay.

The fields are white unto the harvest, and we only here need to enter and take possession. Certainly the time for action has come. The "cursed poison" makes no pause in its march of ruin, nor should we in our efforts for conquest. The fight will be a hard one, but the reward commensurate; the struggle great, but the victory glorious.

While we have assumed to lead in this matter it is only to advise, not to dictate, and we wait with impatience the views of your many intelligent readers.

Very respectfully yours,
MILLARD M. SWEATT, G. W. S.
MONTGOMERY, ALA., June 25, 1881.

Southern University.

MR. EDITOR: I was talking to a minister, the other day, about the Southern University. He said he had been laboring for years to support the school; that our people do not seem to appreciate the fact that it is the most important enterprise under the control of the Conference, and that he had sometimes thought we would have to abandon it for a time—let it die for a few years—that our people might learn, from the want of it, the value of a school in which the religious interests of our Methodist boys are conserved and their mental aspirations gratified.

From this the church may learn that its indifference discourages the friends of this enterprise, and endangers its existence.

I was also speaking to a layman, a few days since, on the same subject. He said he was glad I had mentioned the matter, that he did not know why it was, but that he had been thinking for some time about this school, and that he would be glad to co-operate in any scheme to build it up, for he felt it important to the future interests of the church that our young ministers should receive the benefits of a collegiate education, under the auspices of the church.

From this the friends of this school may argue that there is yet hope for it in the love which the people have for the church.

LAYMAN.

On the occasion of laying the corner stone of Seney Hall, Oxford, Ga., June 8, by Bishop Pierce, Dr. Haygood delivered a comprehensive and able address. We learn from the address that the new building will be devoted to the sub freshman department, to young men preparing for the ministry, and for a library. Referring to the last, Dr. Haygood says:

I come now to mention another most important use for "Seney Hall." The third story will be devoted exclusively to the use of our College Library. Besides one large and noble room, 60x70 feet, there will be two reading rooms for the use of our students, our Faculty and our friends. The main library room, both on the floor and in the gallery, is to be fitted with alcoves, in which may be placed many thousands of books; perhaps ten times, some day twenty times what we now have. And, as we are able to furnish it, this ample room will serve as an admirable picture-gallery.

It will be asked by a class of people, whose views are limited by the wants and possibilities of to-day, and whose [illegible] wants and possibilities, why so much more space devoted to library uses than are now needed? Some may go so far as to say—ignorance can go a long ways in its assertions—"There is no need of so many books any way; our fathers did very well without them; they were satisfied with their Bibles and hymn books." To such a critic—if so important a word may be applied to him—my answer is plain but without intentional disrespect: "You do not understand this subject; you know not of what you talk."

First, we must have done, once and for all, with College plans which consider only to-day and seek to provide only for present wants. Long and grievously have we suffered from this nearsighted, hand-to-mouth policy. We must think of the next hundred years and more. To our best and our plans will be but meagre and insufficient. Our grand children will find our large library room far too small. Nay, it will not be large enough for our children.

Secondly, we do need so many books. We need not merely three thousand or more—many of them meagre and out of date, but one hundred thousand books. Alas! there is no in all the South, one single library amply furnished with good books, new and old, that a student or author can fully investigate any large and important subject. This is one reason among others I care not to discuss to-day, why authorship in the South has yielded such small results. Now I say with confidence, it is worth gathering to "Seney Hall," a great library to make of it possible and thought begetting volume a possibility.

Thirdly, our fathers did not get on very well without libraries, for with them they would have done better. Whatever can do better than he does has an ill right he claim that he does well. Of many of our fathers it is easy to believe that they did their best with the chance they had. Had they been better furnished with educational facilities we should not be so far behind many others, whose American history is one auto life our own.

Fourthly, the fathers are slandered when it is said they were satisfied with their Bibles and hymn books. They were not satisfied; their souls hungered and thirsted for what they never had. There is a great deal of superstitious and fanatical nonsense about the fathers—specially about the Methodist fathers. As if their noble deeds were done in spite of what they did not have; as if a want of learning and plenty of educational advantages were the conditions of their success! They knew better, and therefore founded schools and colleges. I would not ignore the truth to say they succeeded in spite of these necessities, and I esteem their success very highly to spite of their lack of literary and educational advantages, as they knew them; the Holy Scriptures put no discount on, through the mental training and true learning. Nor does the history of God's Church. Such discounts are made by ignorance and impiety. Which is the greater blight to true progress, it were hard to say.

We will build this grand library to-day, with its reading room, alcoves, &c. We will prepare our shelves and alcoves. We will fill them as fast as we can. We will do the best we can and trust God will send us the help we need. Our brethren and children may not have to wait too long, wait till their golden youth and precious opportunity are gone forever, for the mental bread which they hunger for.

One thing is settled: "We will not subscribe to stitch, stitch, stitch in poverty for them." In all humble but earnest faith we pray for larger and better things; the Providence will, in due time, help us to gain them.

Bishop Fitz Episcopal Church, Rev. R. Collison, pastor of Washington Ave. Church, Houston, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, having declined to withdraw from the Methodist Conference and apply for orders in the Episcopal Church, announced that he would preach his reasons for so doing. We find in the Galveston News of the fourteenth the following account of the incident which transpired during the delivery of that sermon:

"After the introductory remarks of Rev. Mr. Collison prior to the delivery of his sermon, he, in order to define clearly what the subject of his discourse would be, read the words spoken in the Methodist creed that a majority, both of the clergy and laity of the church, were not satisfied with, but did not like to disturb, and thought they might be left as moral or sentimental relics that, in the course of time, would disappear. At this point he was interrupted by Mr. James E. Lucas, who said: "Bro. Collison, you say you are going to quit the Methodist and go back to the Episcopals. That is not perfect right. I wish you God speed on your journey. You have been a Methodist for two years and, I like the church. I have been a Methodist for forty years and do like the Methodist Church. I have no right to say to you, quitting the church it may think proper, but I have a right and do protest against your using a Methodist pulpit to abuse the Methodist Church or to condemn Methodist doctrine. Mr. Dumble's course was approved by several other brethren, and Mr. Collison confined his remarks to the address."

The action, spirit and language of Bro. Dumble will be commended by all right thinking men. His statement of the case is so just that we do not feel called upon to make any further comments on the matter. The Methodist Church having ever been able to provide its own preachers, can afford to contribute to the necessities of its neighbors.—Texas Christian Advocate.

The new Methodist Church, at Opelika, Ala., under the able pastorate of Dr. A. S. Andrews has been built and dedicated. The Opelika Observer, as quoted by the Alabama Christian Advocate, of June 22, says:

Last Sunday was a red letter day for Methodism in this city, for after over two years of toil and struggle their handsome church, of which they are justly proud, was formally dedicated by Bishop J. C. Keener, of New Orleans. A large number of visitors and several visiting clergymen were present, and the occasion was one that created wide-spread interest. At an early hour the church began to fill, and by the time services began the house was crowded; the congregation was estimated at about nine hundred persons. The music was superb, and embraced some of the finest modern classics; the floral decorations were tastefully arranged and with charming effect. Bishop Keener's theme was "The Church of God," the subject taken from Jacob's dream, in which he saw "a ladder standing from earth to heaven and the angels of God ascending and descending thereon." Jacob's ladder was likened unto the church of God as the plan of salvation, a means of grace, a stairway to heaven, through the portals of which the spirits of the blessed were ever ascending to their home above. The bishop's personal presence is imposing; in the spring of manhood, vigorous and portly; his voice was deep, clear and sonorous; his mind clear, logical and of grand grasp. The subject on which he dwelt, stood revealed and elucidated, palpable to the intellectual vision as the work of some great artist, places before the eye natural scenes. His gestures were appropriate, unbridled and always aided the profound impression produced by his oratory. He presented the truth not as a cold schoolman, but as a man who had power which he drew straight from the Bible, and his expressive countenance, his clear, ringing voice, the warmth and power which were imparted to his eloquence by the kindled fire within and the excellency of the doctrines he taught, at once impressed and charmed his hearers. After the sermon, a call was made on the congregation for the sum of $2,000. Two thousand dollars the balance due for building and furnishing the church; this amount was shortly raised, a number of wholesouled and liberal gentlemen of other denominations adding a handsome sum to the subscription. Then, while the large congregation knelt at prayer, the beautiful and impressive dedicatory service was read, and the benediction pronounced. The elegant church is now entirely completed at a cost approximating $12,000, out of debt and in a prosperous and flourishing condition.

New M. E. Church, South, in Richmond, Va.—The Richmond Christian Advocate gives the following account of it:

On last Sabbath the first service was held in the Laurel Street Methodist Church, of this city. The Sunday school assembled in the old Oregon Hill building and marched to the new structure. At 11 a.m. the Rev. A. L. Lafferty, and at 4 p.m. the Rev. W. G. Starr, D. D., preached. The pastor, the Rev. W. E. Wright, made a brief address after the morning sermon. A collection was lifted in the afternoon amounting to $1,06.

The building is of brick, occupies an eligible position near a growing part of the city. The lecture room will seat four hundred, and the audience room, when completed will seat six hundred persons. The corner-stone was laid a year ago. There is no debt upon it. The Sunday school numbers two hundred and fifty. The membership about the same.

The pastor and people have exerted themselves to bringing this enterprise to its present success with untiring zeal, going beyond their ability. It has been a noble achievement. The building will be an ornament to that part of the city, and of great public gain to the community.

Bad for the Methodists.—We suppose the following, from the Christian Intelligencer, refers to the Northern Methodists. Among Southern Methodists rending sermons is not much in vogue as yet, but there may be a slightly increasing tendency in this direction. We hope the day will come when sermon reading will be banished from all pulpits. The Intelligencer says:

Forty years ago, a written sermon in a Methodist Church was almost unknown. Now the rule is to preach from notes or full manuscript. Whereas, on the other hand, the moderators of both Presbyterian Assemblies preached this year without a manuscript; and at a public gathering held lately in one of our cities, at which a number of Presbyterian ministers and others spoke, the only persons who read their speeches were a lawyer and a Methodist preacher.

Moral Suasion and Legal Suasion. Which is best? Both. Moral suasion must be supplied. Moral suasion cannot suppress public crime. It cannot prevent open violations of law. It cannot protect public sentiment. Legal suasion must be supplied. Legal suasion cannot suppress private crime. It cannot change public sentiment. But where there is public sentiment enough to make it many portions of Virginia, Tennessee and North Carolina, there is no need of legal suasion. Public sentiment, backed by the power of that community, is all that is necessary, is all that public opinion ever is. Richmond Dispatch.

Legal suasion and legal suasion go hand in hand in Temperance reform. Public sentiment without law is an infant, law without public sentiment a cripple.—Southern Christian Advocate.

Moody, says the Christian Index, has said two good things recently. In the course of an answer to the question, "How may we secure a genuine revival of religion?" he said, "You must put aside all those distracting church fairs." And when asked, "How shall we train our converts?" he replied, "First, keep them out of fairs." These two things, we repeat, are good—so good that we say them over after him with emphasis. His reason for saying them is found in his belief "that the devil has a hand in every church fair." And we believe that, too.

At the Newark Conference, Bishop Harris severely reprimanded one of the ministers who reported that money raised for missions had been applied to other use. He said: "If money is raised for missionary purposes and is diverted to any other purpose, it is a fraud and a robbery. The funds is a mission fund, and must be held as such by the parties in whose hands it is placed. You might as well put your hand in another man's pocket and take his money, as to take money raised for missionary purposes and use it for other purposes."

We have received from the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, a copy of the minutes of the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the year 1880. We are glad that our Publishing House has resumed the publication of the general minutes. They are simply invaluable as materials for church history and for purposes of reference. Every preacher should procure a copy of these minutes, and file them.

The Annual Report of the Board of Missions, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, June 1, 1881, has been received. It contains a full account of our mission work, and of all funds raised and disbursed. Every Southern Methodist should procure a copy and give it prayerful and thorough study. It can be ordered from the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. George I. Seney has given $20,000 more to Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga. This makes $70,000 which the generous New York banker has given to this institution. We hope his example will become contagious, and that some of the rich men of the South will be provoked until a like liberal spirit.

We have received from the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, a copy of the minutes of the Annual Conferences, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the year 1880. We are glad that our Publishing House has resumed the publication of the general minutes. They are simply invaluable as materials for church history and for purposes of reference. Every preacher should procure a copy of these minutes, and file them.

The Annual Report of the Board of Missions, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, June 1, 1881, has been received. It contains a full account of our mission work, and of all funds raised and disbursed. Every Southern Methodist should procure a copy and give it prayerful and thorough study. It can be ordered from the Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. George I. Seney has given $20,000 more to Wesleyan Female College, Macon, Ga. This makes $70,000 which the generous New York banker has given to this institution. We hope his example will become contagious, and that some of the rich men of the South will be provoked until a like liberal spirit.

Moral Suasion and Legal Suasion. Which is best? Both. Moral suasion must be supplied. Moral suasion cannot suppress public crime. It cannot prevent open violations of law. It cannot protect public sentiment. But where there is public sentiment enough to make it many portions of Virginia, Tennessee and North Carolina, there is no need of legal suasion. Public sentiment, backed by the power of that community, is all that is necessary, is all that public opinion ever is. Richmond Dispatch.

Legal suasion and legal suasion go hand in hand in Temperance reform. Public sentiment without law is an infant, law without public sentiment a cripple.—Southern Christian Advocate.

Moody, says the Christian Index, has said two good things recently. In the course of an answer to the question, "How may we secure a genuine revival of religion?" he said, "You must put aside all those distracting church fairs." And when asked, "How shall we train our converts?" he replied, "First, keep them out of fairs." These two things, we repeat, are good—so good that we say them over after him with emphasis. His reason for saying them is found in his belief "that the devil has a hand in every church fair." And we believe that, too.

At the Newark Conference, Bishop Harris severely reprimanded one of the ministers who reported that money raised for missions had been applied to other use. He said: "If money is raised for missionary purposes and is diverted to any other purpose, it is a fraud and a robbery. The funds is a mission fund, and must be held as such by the parties in whose hands it is placed. You might as well put your hand in another man's pocket and take his money, as to take money raised for missionary purposes and use it for other purposes."

We have received one copy of the Nashville Christian Advocate, of June 25, from Bishop Kavanaugh, written from Petersburg, in which beautiful little city he takes an occasional rest of a day or two after his laborious itinerations hither and thither. His health, and the power of his pulpit-work, and the contagion of his cheerful faith in God and the gospel, are telling happily upon the church on the Pacific coast.

The Southern Christian Advocate, of June 25, says: Bishop Wightman has taken board on Sullivan's Island for a while, in hope of benefit from the change. We hope soon to mention decided improvement from the excellent tonic of the sea breeze.

At Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle on Sunday last, an enraptured hearer, says the Methodist, cried out, "Glory to you!" We have a decided preference for the Methodist, "Glory to God!" It may be that the reporter did not hear straight; but he evidently thought he had expressed "the sense of the meeting."

Seashore Postoffice.—We are informed by W. H. Foster, president of the Board of Trustees of Seashore Camp Ground, that a postoffice has been established at the camp ground, and will be opened July 1. The name of the office is Seashore. Letters should be addressed Seashore, Harrison county, Miss., or Seashore, Miss. James P. Hamilton has been appointed postmaster.

On our eighth page will be found full information in regard to fares on the railroads, accommodations on the grounds, and other matters. The New Orleans District Conference recommended that, in the prayer meetings of the several charges preceding the camp meeting, special prayer be made for the success of the meeting. The most of our prayer meetings are held on Wednesday night, so that we may say that on Wednesday, July 6, special prayer should be made in all our churches that God may be pleased to pour out his Spirit on the people at Seashore. The meeting begins Wednesday, July 13.

—Rev. Dr. Ahrens, of the German Mission Conference, left for Europe, via New York, Friday, June 24. He is a delegate to the Ecumenical Conference, but previous to that meeting he will visit his German fatherland, and see something of France and Italy. From him, as well as from other tourists and delegates, we expect letters for publication. We have no doubt the readers of the Advocate will be well supplied with foreign correspondence and Ecumenical items.

—L. P. L. sends us a communication which is acceptable, but he does not furnish us with his name and address. Our rule is inexorable; we must have the name. And we would remind all who write for our columns, if no more than an obituary or a marriage notice, that the name of the writer must accompany the communication. The name, if desired, will be withheld from publication, but the editor must have it. Although, in the case we have referred to, everything is clear, yet in other cases we might be imposed on, and a responsible name might be demanded. The rule must, therefore, be without exceptions.

—Rev. J. W. P. McKenzie, D. D., died, at Clarksville, Texas, June 20. Dr. McKenzie was widely and favorably known as a preacher and educator. In literary Texas Methodism he has lost one of its greatest and most useful men.

Fallen.—Rev. J. M. Johnston, presiding elder of the Opelousas district, Louisiana Conference, informs us that Rev. W. J. Picot, of the Attakapas French Mission, has been guilty of grave immoralities, and has left the work.

—Rev. N. H. Lee, D. D., of the Kentucky Conference, died, at Russelville, Ky., June 14. Dr. Lee was a great and good man, deservedly eminent in the church, and honored by it.

—Bishop McTyeire has changed the time of holding the North Alabama Conference, at Huntsville, from November 2 to November 23.

—Dr. Carlisle, president of Wofford College, has concluded not to go to the Ecumenical Conference.

We are glad to learn that Rev. Robt. B. Downer is rapidly recovering from his recent injuries. He sends us the following notice: "As I expect to have a supply of our Methodist books on sale at the Seashore, Crystal Springs and Providence Camp Meetings, I will be obliged if parties, desiring any particular book or books, Methodist or not, will give me timely notice, and I will accommodate them at regular catalogue rates. I will also be prepared to attend to Advocate business. Address me at Ocean Springs, Miss."

Books and Periodicals.

The Date-Keeper of Fusano: A tale of Italy and her Evangel. By Mrs. Julia McNair Wright. Philadelphia. The American Sunday-school Union.

The author declares the story to be historically true. A correct picture is given of the methods and progress of the Vaudois Church during the last twenty years. The book seems to be a careful study of Italian life, and of gospel work in that country. It is not therefore a mere ephemeral story to entertain young people, but a work abounding in information, and of interest to all who are awake to the religious movements of the day. It is well written and very entertaining. The volume is a 12 mo. 413 pages, illustrated and handsomely bound in cloth. Price $1 50.

The Rev. Rowland Hugh Prescher and Writer. By Edward W. Bradbury, with an Introduction by Rev. John Stoughton, D. D. Cassell, Petter, Galpin & Co. London, Paris and New York.

This is a brief biography of the celebrated English preacher. The author has done his work well, and has given us a life vividly portrayed, in which not only the eccentricities and brilliant wit and humor of the subject are brought out, but also the piety, consecration and power of the Christian preacher are well and forcibly exhibited. The volume is a 12 mo. 182 pages, with index, paper bound.

"Light and Life," is the title of a collection of new hymns and tunes for Sunday-schools, prayer-meetings, praise meetings, and revival meetings. Edited by R. M. McIntosh. Published by Oliver Ditson & Co., Boston. In glancing through the work we find a good many old and familiar hymns and songs. Some of them, however, may be new. They are generally good. Of the tunes we can not judge. The book is in the usual form and style of the Sunday-school song books. It is for sale by H. T. Lathrop, 112 Camp Street, New Orleans.

—Louisiana, her Resources, Advantages, and Attractions, is the title of a pamphlet issued by the South-western Immigration Company, Austin, Texas; and New York. Compiled by Wm. H. Harris, State commissioner of agriculture and immigration, State of Louisiana. The work contains much valuable information concerning the soil, climate, topography, and rivers and railways of Louisiana.

The Annual Catalogue of Emory College, Oxford, Ga., has been received. There was a total of 182 students in attendance during the past session. This is a growing and prosperous institution.

—We have also received a copy of Dr. Haygood's "Our Brother Slave, Samuel Hall," address, in pamphlet form. An extract of this able address is given in another column.

Scribner's Monthly for July, has: The Young Painters of America, III, illustrated; A Song Before Sight; The Sea horse, illustrated; A Day in the Mash, illustrated; The People's Problem; Beware; Mont Blanc; Dr. Dollinger and the Old Catholic Movements, illustrated; Decoration in the Seventh Regiment Armory, illustrated; Peter the Great as Ruler and Reformer, 9, illustrated; A Fearful Responsibility; Shadows; Railway, Church-yard, and Cemetery Lawn Planting, illustrated; The Levees of the Mississippi, illustrated; An Old Virginian; Underwoven; Madame Delphine 3, Continued; by George W. Cable; A Rainy Day with Uncle Remus; Owl against Robin.

St. Nicholas, July, 1881 is splendidly illustrated as usual. Among the articles are: A Day Under ground; The Story of a Bad Bird; Captain Sarah Bates; Stories of Art and Artists, Fourth Paper; My Aunt's Squirrels; How to Stock and Keep a Fresh water Aquarium; Le Marquis de Carabas; Silurio Boys; In Nature's Wonderland; Eugenie Mandelbert Pengremont; History of the Star-spangled Banner.

The Popular Science Monthly, July, 1881, has: The Roots of Mankind; Europe and Scholastic Forestry; Protection of Song Birds; Rudiments Energy; The Development of Political Institutions, by Herbert Spencer; How to Prevent Drowning; Improvements in Electric Lighting; The Phenomena of Death; Through the Telegraph and Postal Service, and other articles.

The Contemporary Review, June, 1881, George Munro, publisher, New York, has: 1. The Unity of Nature, Duke of Argyll. 2. Boyesetter. Expedition in Ireland. 3. An South National Characteristics of European Society. 4. Conversations with Carlyle. 5. Ferdinand Lassalle and German Socialism. 6. The Principles of '89. 7. A Last Word on Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield. At his grave.

The Fortnightly Review, June, 1881, George Munro, publisher, New York, has: 1. Comte's Definition of Life. 2. The Royal Academy. 3. English Horses. 4. The Visions of sane Persons. 5. The Irish Land Bill. 6. Hindu Household. 7. Mexico and Women. 8. On the Policy of Commercial Treaties. 9. Home and Foreign Affairs.

The North American Review, July, 1881, has: 1. Present Aspects of the Indian Problem. Carl Schurz. 2. The Religious Conflicts of the Age. A Yankee farmer. 3. The Power of Public Plunder. James Parton. 4. The Common Sense of Taxation. Henry George. 5. The Cost of Chivalry. Henry Beegh. 6. A Study of Tennyson. Richard Henry Stoddard.

Wide Awake for July, has its usual fine engravings, and articles adapted to entertain and instruct the young people. Among the articles are: The Story of a Horseshoe; Paul and the Cough makers; The Academy Boat-race; The Enchanted Story of Banbury Cross; Mr. Littlejohn's Annuals; What made Sam Spek; A Decorative Artist.

—The Nineteenth Century, June, 1881. Contents: 1. A Civilian's Answer to Sir Garnet Wolseley. 2. A Revise of the New Revision. 3. What is a Pound? 4. Ernest Renan. 5. Pawnbroking Abroad and at Home. 6. Intelligence of Ants. 7. Carlyle's Reminiscences. 8. Ireland.

—American Agriculturist for July, is replete with useful information. The illustrations are as usual numerous and instructive. Published by The Orange Judd Company, New York. Price $1 50 per annum.

"The Pastoral Visitant" is the title of a very beautiful monthly paper, Rev. J. L. Entrell, editor and publisher, Jonestown, Mississippi.

Plan of Episcopal Visitations for 1881.

Conference.	Date.	Place
FIRST DISTRICT—BISHOP KEENER.
Memphis	November 9	Bolivar.
North Mississippi	November 23	Grenada.
Mississippi	December 14	Brookhaven.
SECOND DISTRICT—BISHOP PEIRCE.
Western	September 7	Howard City
Missouri	September 14	Moberly.
St. Louis	September 21	St. Johns.
Southwest Missouri	September 28	Springfield
Indian Mission	October 5	Caddo.
Arkansas	October 19	Dardanelle.
Alabama	November 30	Selma.
South Carolina	December 14	Union
THIRD DISTRICT—BISHOP KAVANAUGH.
Columbia	August 25	Walla Walla
Los Angeles	September 13	Prospect ville.
Pacific	September 28	Petaluma.
Montana	October 11	Helena.
Denver	October 26	Denver.
Northwest Texas	November 16	Waxahatchie
North Texas	November 30	Greenville.
East Texas	December 14	Jacksonville.
FOURTH DISTRICT—BISHOP WIGHTMAN
Oxford	October 26	Wytheville
North Carolina	November 2	Durham
South Georgia	December 7	Columbia
FIFTH DISTRICT—BISHOP PEYTHEO.
Tennessee	October 19	Lebanon
North Georgia	November 16	Athens.
Virginia	November 16	Charlottesville.
North Alabama	November 23	Huntsville.
White River	December 7	Batesville.
Little Rock	December 14	Pine Bluff.
Louisiana	January 4	New Orleans.
Florida	January 27	Monticello.
Baltimore	March 10	Fredericksburg.
SIXTH DISTRICT—BISHOP KENNEDY.
Western Virginia	August 31	Ashland
Kentucky	September 7	Danville
Indiana	September 14	Gosport
Illinois	September 21	Ashley.
Louisville	October 12	Owensboro
West Texas	November 16	Gollad.
Texas	November 23	Houston
German	November 30	Houston.

Bishop McTyeire has charge of the Missions in Chile and Brazil.

Bishop Keener has charge of the Missions in Mexico.

Publisher's Department.

☞ We shall do our best to exclude fraudulent advertisements of every description from the Advocate, and trust our friends, in ordering goods from the leading merchants of New Orleans and elsewhere, as represented in our columns, will mention having seen the advertisement in the Advocate. We will also take pleasure in attending personally to any commissions for our friends in the country with which we may be favored, while endeavoring to merit our advertisers as being worthy of their patronage.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

W. C. Shepard & Co.—American China dinner, breakfast and tea set, 130 pieces, for $15. Equal to, looks and use fulness to French China.

[illegible]

It is the round nuts of the thing that makes a pedestrian so much better than a square meal.—Rambler.

Mark Twain admits having made a good many of his jokes, but says he regrets none of them so much as his promise of restitution.

A strolling joker is inviting a hundred people to a party at "Peters" where there are only fifty chairs.

Weigh others as you would be weighed yourself and the scales would have to be sure.

There is one town in Connecticut that has no fear of the meanest "Ku Kluxism."

In asking a man to settle his bill, the thing is no sooner said than done.

A gentleman named his dog penny, because it was sent to him.

Next to a clear conscience, for solid comfort, give us an easy boot.

A dressmaker should be careful of her habits.

The man who invented tight boots was Vain.

Business Notices.

To Consumptives.—Many have been happy to give their testimony in favor of the use of "Wilbor's Pure Cod-Liver Oil and Lime." Experience has proved it to be a valuable remedy for Consumption, Asthma, Diphtheria, and all diseases of the Throat and Lungs. Manufactured only by A. B. Wilbor, Chemist, Boston. Sold by all druggists.

Many Lose their Beauty from the hair falling or fading. Parker's Hair Balsam supplies necessary nourishment, prevents falling and grayness, and is an elegant dressing.

CANVASSERS make from $25 to $50 per week selling goods for E. G. RIDEOUT & CO., 10 Barclay St., New York. Send for Catalogue and terms

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS

SEND 25 CENTS

For a copy of the new

REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

Mailed post paid on receipt of price by

H. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans

WANTED, BY A YOUNG LADY OF EXperience a position as teacher of the English Branches. Best family references. Address P. O. Box 1183 this office.

WANTED, A FEMALE TEACHER, COMpetent to teach Music, advanced course of Mathematics, French and Latin, in a Female school. Apply to the undersigned. J. W. WORTHAM, Meridian, Miss.

Haywood White Sulphur Springs,

OPEN ALL THE YEAR.

WAYNESVILLE, N. C. Altitude 2717

SEASON OF 1881

This charming SUMMER RESORT in the very midst of the GREAT BALSAM MOUNTAINS, is now open for the reception of visitors.

It is in a beautiful valley, with smooth roads, delightful walks and within three hundred yards to ten miles of the most beautiful mountains in America, ranging in altitude from 5000 to 6,25 feet.

The Hotels and Springs are situated one mile from Waynesville, the county seat of Haywood county, thirty-two miles west of Asheville, thirty-eight miles from Warm Springs, with good roads to all directions. Daily stage lines to Asheville, and ample livery, accommodations will be provided. Visitors reach here via Henderson ville and Asheville, N. C.

TERMS: $1 25 per day, or per week, and from $7 to $25, according to size and location of rooms, per month of twenty eight days. Special rates for families and clubs.

For further information, circulars, etc., call on or address

THOS. A. MORRIS, Lessee, or
W. W. STRINGFIELD, Lessee,
Waynesville, N. C.

W. F. MELLEN,

Attorney at Law.

12 CARONDELET ST.

NEW ORLEANS, LA

GERMANIA SAVINGS BANK

No. 81 CAMP STREET.

Capital, $100,000.

This Bank is now ready to receive deposits of ONE DOLLAR and upwards at 4 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually.

DIRECTORS:

H. ZUERNER, A. HASSENGER
S. HERNSHEIM, A. T. MERRILL
FRANK T. HOWARD, EMIL MAYER.

H. ZUERNER, President
J. HASSENGER, Vice President.
J. H. HARRY, Cashier.

DR. EDWARD HARRISON,

112 Carondelet Street from 11 to 4 P. M.

NEW ORLEANS.

DR. C. J. BICKHAM,

DENTIST AND OPERATOR.

220 Jackson St., Bet. Chestnut and Coliseum

NEW ORLEANS

Office Hours: Eight, A. M. until three, P. M.

U. S. BONDS.

Registered 3 1-2 Per Cent.

Coupon and Registered 4 Per Cent.

BOUGHT AND SOLD BY

New Orleans National Bank,

58 CAMP STREET.

NEW YORK SHOPPING

Of every description for ladies and gentlemen. Housekeepers to be benefited with this notice, free of charge. For circular address

Mrs. M. C. ADAMS,
P. O. Box, 598, New York.

THE PORTABLE

COMMENTARY

On the Old and New Testaments.

By JAMIESON, FAUSSET and BROWN

Complete in Six Volumes.

This is the only available Commentary of great value published at a price within the reach of ordinary readers. It is printed from large clear type, on tinted paper, and contains over 1,500 pages. It is convenient in size, and is substantially bound in cloth. Price by mail, post paid, only $6 00.

H. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp Street, New Orleans

THE ATTENTION OF THE PUBLIC IS CALLED to the Patent Manufacturing Co's Ready Cleaned of New York Asbestos, an article for all house cleaning, scouring and polishing purposes. For sale by all grocers and by druggists. To the trade by

E. W. CLIFT, Agent,
55 & 57 Chesapeake Douglass Street, New Orleans.

SEASIDE! MOUNTAINS!

Wherever you go, take one of our sparkling Collections of the best Songs; or the best Instrumental Music. All are choice collections and will be invaluable for amusements on dull days, at evening entertainments, and at all hours of leisure.

GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG. Great favorites. Enlarged and improved. 80 glees and songs $2 00

SUNSHINE OF SONG. All bright ones. 60 Songs.

GEMS OF STRAUSS. Music always new, and inspiring Dance to it $2 00

GEMS OF THE DANCE. Great variety. Dance also to this $2 00

GEMS OF SCOTTISCHE SONG. Ten of the Sweetest ballads ever made $2 00

Also many other books. Send for List. Books mailed to any address for the retail price

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston

C. H. DITSON & CO.,

843 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Indian Turnip

COMPOUND

PECTORAL BALM.

For the Cure of Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, Asthma, and the various affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the relief of consumptive patients. Price, per bottle $1. Prepared and for sale by B. LAPLACE, Druggist, 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street. And the principle Wholesale and Retail Druggists of New Orleans.

Agricultural.

CARBOLIC ACID FOR INSECTS.—The time has almost come again when "the little busy bugs" will open up their campaign and dispute with the "lords of creation" for possession of the "fruits of the earth." Allow me thus early to call attention to an article, the merits of which everybody knows, but which many dare not use—I refer to carbolic acid. Prepared as indicated it can not, I think, hurt the most delicate house plants, and it is sure to kill insect life. My plan of preparing is as follows: I obtain crude carbolic acid, I use it in this form because it is stronger and better for the purpose, and costs but very little about twenty-five cents per gallon, I think. I pour a quantity of dark crude acid into a quantity of good strong domestic soft soap; stir well together and allow to stand for a few hours. I then test the compound by mixing a little of it with soft water. If too much acid has been added, oily particles of carbolic acid will be observed floating on the surface. This shows that more acid has been put in than the soap will incorporate or "emt," and more soap should be added to balance the excess of acid. No more definite rule can be given, as so much depends on the strength of the soap. Two or three tablespoonfuls of the acid to a quart of soap may be first tried. I prefer to make as strong with acid as the soap will perfectly cut. A very little practice will enable any one to compound it correctly. The refined acid may be used when the crude is not at hand. When prepared as above make a moderately strong suds and apply with syringe or sponge. In using on very delicate plants, should any fear be felt for the plants, they can be rinsed off after a few minutes. My first and eminently successful use of this compound was some years since on a block of young cherry trees some fifty thousand in number. The black aphis "came down like the wolf on the fold," only "they came not as single spies, but in whole battalions." It soon became an interesting question as to who was the proprietor of this particular block of trees—myself or the "bug Ethiopian." A disinterested observer of judicial turn of mind, judging from the general appearance of things and the very "at home" air assumed by the bugs, would have said they had the best case. He would at least have been compelled to admit they had "nine points of the law" possession in their favor. I never saw the like before. The trees were alive with aphis. The only sorry things on the trees were leaves, there being hardly enough to afford "standing-room" for all the dusky guests. However, not being a convert to the doctrine of "squatter sovereignty," I declared war, and failing to decrease the number by ordinary means, I compounded soft soap and carbolic acid, and with a single application exterminated the enemy. Gardener's Monthly.

MUTTON.—The Southern Farmer says mutton is better adapted for a food for persons living in the country than beef. Most farmers are situated so far from a market that they can not obtain fresh meat to eat during the summer, when the hard labor in the fields demands an excellent diet. They can not profitably dispose of the flesh of a steer slaughtered during hot weather even if they have an ice-house. One-quarter is as large a quantity as even a large family can consume before danger of spoiling occurs. It is difficult to cure beef in the summer so it will be certain to keep, even if one has a supply of ice. The like is true in relation to obtaining a supply of fresh meat from hogs during the summer. It is more difficult to cure pork than beef in the summer; and besides pork is not well suited for a general article of diet during very warm weather. The home supply of fresh meat in summer, however, can readily be obtained if a farmer keeps a flock of sheep. Mutton can be kept longer in a fresh state than either beef or pork. Besides even the largest varieties of sheep are so much smaller than steers or hogs that their carcasses can be disposed of in a much shorter time. If a family is too small to consume all the meat furnished by a sheep, a part can be salted. The meat is so thin, as compared with beef or pork, that every portion of it will absorb a sufficient amount of salt and sugar even when the weather is very warm. Many persons know nothing of the merits of corn beef. It has never occurred to some farmers that mutton could be cured for further use. They corn and dry beef, salt and smoke pork, but if necessary to eat mutton, if indeed they eat it at all, it must be fresh. Now, any part of a sheep furnishes excellent eating when it is salted and broiled. In many respects it is superior to corned beef. It is more highly flavored and better relished when eaten with potatoes and garden vegetables; stewed with sweet herbs it is a rare delicacy. The hams and shoulders of mutton are excellent when salted and smoked. The tongues of sheep are superior to those of cattle and pigs. Mutton is more easily digested than most kinds of meat, and in delicacy ranks next to the flesh of chickens and small game fowls.—Mobile Register.

DISEASE AMONG LAMBS.—Hundreds of lambs die annually here with the disease known as lamb cholera. Very few flocks escape without a loss of three or four, and many lose from twenty-five to fifty of their number. I think the name lamb cholera is a very improper one for this malady, as only the fleshy lambs are known to die with it. A thin lamb or one poorly suckled or hand fed, I have never known to die with the so called lamb cholera. My name for the disease is apoplexy. A very fair description of the disease will be found in Randall's "Practical Shepherd," under his article on apoplexy, as applied to the mutton breeds of England. Mr. Cattell's diagnosis of the subject is about as complete as any I have seen, except, he might have added, the staring condition of the eyes, the dilated pupils and sight apparently gone; the membrance of nose a deep red or violet color, as if ungorged with blood. It is seldom a remedy can be administered, as the lamb is usually found dead without a premonition of disease. One I found unwell, and administered two ounces of Epsom salts and effected a cure. I have observed the following treatment with my breeding ewes and find it a very successful preventive of this lamb disease: Stir as much salt into a half-gallon of pine tar as it will take. Smear bottoms of feed troughs with it liberally. Keep them in this condition and give salt in no other way. The lambs will soon learn to lick the tar. Many will be noticed at this before their age for dying with the disease. Feed sulphur, wood ashes and Epsom salts mixed in the feed daily, small quantities. If lambs are already dying, get pine tar, catch each lamb and put the tar well back in the mouth with a small paddle prepared for the purpose; the bulk of a hickory nut is enough. It may purge some or all of them, but they will get all right in a day or two, and no more will die for awhile, even if you quit at this. I am keeping one lot of ewes and lambs on a bare pasture where they are compelled to take hay each day, with a grain feed morning and evening. No sick lambs, but the ewes and lambs are fat as well as if on good grass.—Ohio Farmer.

DRY EARTH AS AN ABSORBENT.—If one will observe when the cows choose to lie down in the yard or pasture, it will be seen that they choose the bare ground, rather than the sod or bedding of straw. The same is true of sheep. We have taken this hint, and furnished the cow stables with dry earth bedding. Leaves and straw are poor absorbents in comparison. In the pig-pens dry earth has no equal. In very cold weather we add straw or leaves, but until the weather is very cold, the animals will be comfortable with a bed of fresh soil, or of soil changed once a fortnight or week. In the chicken-house we have learned its great value as a deodorizer. Our roosts are over a sloping floor, on which we occasionally scatter dry earth. The droppings roll down into a pile of dry earth. This is turned over with a shovel each week or oftener, and we can say the chicken-house is free from any offensive odor, and the bright combs and glossy feathers tell of the health of the fowls. Dry earth is a good preventive, too, of vermin on cattle, pigs and poultry. It must be procured at a dry time, and stored under sheds or in the stables. It not only promotes neatness and health, but saves the very elements of the manures which make them most valuable, and most of which would evaporate if not absorbed by the dry earth. We do not like it as a bedding in the horse stables, but it should be found in every stable, to sprinkle the floors with as soon as the bedding is removed in the morning. When removed from the stables, sties and coops, it should be kept under cover for spring use, or for drilling with the wheat in the fall.—Cincinnati Commercial.

AN AGRICULTURAL CREED.—1. Do not cultivate poor land. It is a feeble mother which can give no sustenance.

2. If your land is poor, you must limit the area of cultivation to your ability to manure—let it be ever so little—and you will be the gainer by it.

3. Exert yourself to produce manure on the farm. Such manure is the flour which makes the loaf, and a commercial fertilizer is only a heaven to it. Home-made manures cost some labor and but little money, while commercial fertilizers will bring you in debt, and are a kind of food which mother-earth can not entirely rely and fatten upon. We are not their enemy, but active friend, when they are judiciously used and can be had without too great a strain on the farmer's credit.

4. Bring to the aid of your manure pile green, fallow crops, and try to clothe the bosom of mother earth with the green verdure of grass, from which livestock can be fed.

5. Keep as much stock as can be fed well, for this adds to the manure pile, and their increase and a few fat carcasses afford a big interest on the investment.

6. Diversify crops as much as possible and do not rely on one staple. This will make your manure and labor pay a profit in some places when they fail in others.

7. Manure! manure! manure! and as before suggested, rely on the farm principally to produce it. It will "put money in your pocket."

8. "No grass, no stock; no stock no manure; no manure, no permanent improvement on the land."

FLOWERS ON WALLS.—Travelers in England and Scotland, always admire the showy wild yellow wall flowers that grow on the old walls. A late number of Gardening Illustrated, recommends the cultivation of flowers on walls. "There is a way of growing flowers on walls in various countries which deserves more attention than it has received with us. It consists of leaving the upper portion of the terrace or wall hollow, and using this for flowers. The crest of the wall is, in fact, a narrow flower border; but though narrow, with a space of two or three feet of soil from one foot to three feet through, thus giving ample root room for the production of a vigorous and graceful vegetation. The architect or builder can easily arrange for such wall vases. We have often seen very charming effects produced in this way on the Continent, even in the poor houses, where little evidence of other beauty was to be seen. By adopting the principles of variety instead of reputation in such cases, a beautiful garden of flowers might be grown on the crest of many a barren wall near, or part of a town-house. Hardy plants of a permanent character should always be chosen for such positions, and those with graceful foliage should have the preference. A top dressing of rich soil could be given yearly, and when established, such plants as the smaller Yuccas, Acanthuses, etc., would make a charming effect."

ROOT PRUNING.—The experiments were made on the apple and pear. A vigorous apple tree, eight or ten years old, which had scarcely made any fruit-buds, has done best when about half the roots were cut in one season, and half three years later, by going half-way around on opposite sides in one year, and finishing at the next pruning—working two feet underneath to sever downward roots. It has always answered well, also, to cut on such trees all the larger and longer roots about two and a half feet from the stem, leaving the smaller and weaker ones longer, and going half-way around as already stated. The operation was repeated three or four years later by extending the cut circle a foot or two farther away from the tree. By this operation unproductive fruit trees became completely studded with fruit spurs, and afterward bore profusely. This shortening of the roots has been continued in these experiments for twenty years with much success, the circle of roots remaining greatly circumscribed. The best time for the work has been found to be in the latter part of August and beginning of September, when growth has nearly ceased, and while the leaves are yet on the trees, causing a greater increase of bloom buds the following year, than when performed after the leaves have fallen.—London Garden.

GARDEN PESTS.—A subscriber asks a remedy for the cabbage worm and striped cucumber bug. The following are recommended: A thin coating of dry road dust while the dew is on, is the best cure for the green cabbage worm. A little rag tied on a short peg and saturated with kerosene or crude carbolic acid, stuck into a cucumber hill, will drive away the yellow striped bug. Fresh cow or hog dung applied about the plants will have the same good effect, besides stimulating the growth of the young plants.

Household.

VINEGAR.—While it is manifestly true that more of the acids are demanded in the warm weather, especially in the [illegible] than in the winter, it is probable that most persons—yielding to this natural desire—will either use them in excess, or make an injudicious selection. Now there are two kinds or classes of vinegar in the market, one of which we may call the chemical, an artificial product, and the other produced by nature, or the fruit acids, including that made by the fermentation and decay of fruit-juices. It would seem reasonable to infer that the very best acid for the spring must be that produced naturally, or in nature's grand vegetable laboratory, as that of the lemon, the currant, strawberry, apple, etc., manifestly intended to meet a want of the human system, particularly in the spring, when the gorged liver needs food-stimulus when the jaded stomach needs aid, and when the thickened carbonized blood demands nature's aid in its purification. Some of these are too concentrated and strong for ordinary use, and may be reduced, as that of the lemon, which, unlike that of the destructible fruits, seems intended more particularly for general use, in a reduced form.

Of the fermented kinds we may safely say that there is this objection, that they are produced by the last or putrefactive stage, as indicated by the presence of an innumerable collection of scavengers, sometimes called eels, as any one may see by holding vinegar up to a strong sunlight. This is as true of that made of cider as of any of the fruit juices. I am at a loss to see why there should be such a decided preference for vinegar made of cider, over that made of the juice of the blueberry, etc., so far as wholesomeness is concerned. From all of these during the last stage of fermentation, or putrefaction, the alcohol escapes, so that vinegar is not objectionable, like "hard cider," on temperance principles.

But the artificial vinegar is the most objectionable, that made by the use of very poisonous chemicals. It is quite certain that by far the largest part of that sold and used in our cities and larger villages is of this kind, since it can be made in a few hours and at a very cheap rate. Perhaps the cheapest article in market—and there is an abundance of it—is that made mainly of sulphuric acid, (oil of vitriol,) enough of which can be bought by the quantity for one cent to make a gallon of good "cider vinegar"—so called. This is also used to add acidity to common cider vinegar, when it is regarded as too weak. Of course such vinegar is exceedingly destructive to the teeth—much worse than common cider vinegar, which will soon dissolve any tooth if submerged in it, after the extraction. Now, since this is so easily made, and since so few know how to detect it, or take so little pains to examine it, provided it is pleasant to a vitiated taste, it is not strange that the market is flooded with a spurious article. If, however, one wishes to know when it is made in this way, it is not difficult to detect the fraud. Buy at the drug-store one dram of chloride of barium ("muriate of baryta") which may be dissolved in as little water as will fully dissolve it, allowing it to settle, if not perfectly clear. Put a tablespoonful of the vinegar in a cup and then add one-third or one-half as much of this clear liquid. If there is any of the sulphuric acid in it, a white powder will soon be seen at the bottom and sides of the cup.

A good substitute may be made by dissolving a teaspoonful of tartaric acid in a half-pint of water.—Watchman.

APPLE TOAST.—Peel six apples, core them and cut them into thin slices. Put in a saucepan an ounce of fresh butter; then throw over the apples a little pulverized white sugar; add two tablespoonfuls of water. Put the saucepan on the fire; let the fruit stew quickly, tossing it up with a spoon—a few minutes will be sufficient. When the apples are cooked tender, cut two or three slices of bread half an inch thick; put in a frying-pan two ounces of butter; put the pan on the fire; when the butter is melted, put in the bread, which fry of a nice brown color; when nice and crisp, take them up and place them on a dish; placing white sugar over the apples. Serve while hot.

FISH PUDDING.—Three pounds of boiled fish; a large lump of butter; a tablespoonful of flour, two cups of fresh milk. When boiled it must cool a little. Add to this the yolk of seven eggs, the whites beaten, and stir it round; then add salt, pepper and nutmeg. Put it in a buttered dish, and cook for one hour in a pretty warm oven, and then serve. Sauce—Flour and butter and a little broth capers. This will be found an excellent and toothsome dish.

CREAM SOUP.—Take a quart of good mutton or veal stock, cut an onion in quarters, slice three potatoes very thin and put them into the stock, with a small piece of mace; boil gently for an hour, then strain. The potatoes should by this time have dissolved. Add a pint of rich milk—half milk, half cream—with enough corn starch in it to make the soup almost thick as cream. Add also a piece of nice, fresh butter, and just before serving a little finely-chopped parsley.

CURRY.—To a pint bowl of chopped veal or chicken, which has been browned in a frying-pan, add a fried onion, one tablespoonful of Thompson's India curry powder, two tablespoonfuls of flour wet with cold water, two ounces of butter and a little salt. Stir together thoroughly and heat very hot, but stew only enough to cook the flour, as the meat has already been cooked. Serve as hot as possible.

NICE ROLLS.—Take one quart of sifted flour, one pint of fresh yeast, a little salt; mix all well together; let it rise, then add one pint of water, one-half pound of butter, flour enough to make a little dough, and, when raised again, cut out into small rolls and bake in a hot oven.

JOHNNY CAKE.—To one quart of buttermilk add one teacup of flour, half a teacup of molasses, a little salt and a beaten egg. Stir in corn meal enough to make a batter so thin it will almost run. Bake on a tin in a moderately quick oven. Be particular not to have the batter too thick.

MUFFINS.—Two cups sweet milk, half a cup of lard or butter, three-fourths cup of yeast, three eggs well beaten, a little salt, flour to make batter as stiff as can be stirred with a spoon. Bake in rings.

A good way to cook chickens is to parboil them and then drop them into hot lard, like doughnuts, and fry a few minutes. This will add variety to the bill of fare.

Educational.

—Howard University, Washington, D. C., has just held its anniversary exercises, graduating five colored students from its Law School and seven from its College Department. To these add twelve medical and ten theological graduates, and we have a total of thirty-four sent out this year to become educated leaders of their race. President Garfield attended the anniversary of the Law School, and, by request of President Patton, conferred the degree of LL.B. on the graduates. The trustees have made the instruction gratuitous in all departments but those of law and medicine.

—The report of State Superintendent Hinsley, of Florida, shows that the condition of the common schools in that State is encouraging. The total number of schools reported during the past year —1,131—shows an increase of 211 in the last three years. The aggregate attendance was 39,315. The total amount expended for school purposes was $114,-895 31. There were 675 males and 620 female teachers employed, with average salaries ranging in the different counties from $72 to $5 a month.

—Minnesota has a law, to go into operation July 1, to the effect that all school officers may introduce into the schools, daily instruction in social science, good morals and patriotism, no less than thirty distinct topics being specified, such as industry, health, honesty, etc. It may be required of the teachers to give a short oral lesson each day on one of the subjects named, and to require from the pupils some illustration of the same upon the following morning.

—The United States has double the number of school-children of any other country in the world. The number is stated by the Bureau of Education to be 9,421,086. The nearest approach to this figure is made by France, which has 4,716,935. Prussia follows with 4,007,176, and England and Wales, with 3,710,853. Of the total population, the school-children of the United States, form nearly 20 per cent.; of France, 12 per cent.; of Prussia, 16 per cent.; and of England and Wales, about 13 per cent.

—The Pennsylvania normal schools are all in debt, and have been asking the legislature for $260,000, with which to liquidate their indebtedness. They also ask for an appropriation of $100,000, to help them through their work for the next two years. One of the members of the legislature claims that these schools have failed in the purpose for which they were established, and that the number of pupils who have subsequently become teachers is small.

—The sixth session of the Summer School of Biology, held under the auspices of the Peabody Academy of Science, will open at the Museum of the Academy, on July 12th, and will continue for four weeks. The course of instruction is designed expressly for teachers of public and private schools, and the class is limited to twenty-four, preference being given to the teachers of Essex county, Mass.

—The leading spelling reformers of Germany are thinking of holding an International Congress in Berlin, at the same time as the Congress of Orientalists in September. The subjects suggested for consideration are the formation of a common alphabet for Europe, and a common alphabet for the East, and finally, of a universal alphabet.

—Mr. James T. Fields, gave unconditionally $3,000 to the boys' high school in Portsmouth, N. H., where he was born, to Dartmouth College 1,000 volumes to be selected from his library by the president, and to Harvard the manuscripts of his books and poems.

—The giving of more sleep, more fresh air and more exercise for young children is advocated by the Rochester Herald. It declares that they are kept in school too many hours, and shut up in an atmosphere of carbonic acid gas too much.

—Wabash College, at Crawfordsville, Ind., has a total attendance of 172 students, this number including 93 in the preparatory and normal schools. The faculty numbers 10, under the presidency of the Rev. Joseph F. Tuttle, D.D.

—The German universities during the past winter term instructed 21,161 students. Berlin had the largest number, 4,107. Heidelberg and Strasburg had the greatest number of foreigners.

—Carleton College, Northfield, Minn., awaits aid to complete its long-needed ladies' hall. Twenty-five thousand dollars would finish it and enable it to offer the best of educational advantages to the girls of the Northwest.

—The Germans universities are beginning to lay great stress upon the science of geography. During the present school year this branch is treated by twenty-two eminent professors at fifteen of the twenty-two universities.

—Sixty-seven young men have held the position of Fellow at Johns Hopkins University, and nearly thirty of them still remain there. Most of the others have been promoted to excellent posts elsewhere.

—Calcutta University is a remarkably prosperous and useful institution. Last year, out of 2,793 candidates for admission, 1,665 passed. Six women took the entrance examination and four were successful.

—The old buildings at Hudson, O., of the Western Reserve College, which will be removed to Cleveland, next year, will be used for a seminary, to be conducted in connection with the college.

—The first kindergarten started in Cincinnati a year ago, has proved to be thoroughly successful. About sixty children were admitted—all that could be accommodated in the available rooms.

—The "Christian Church," the sect to which President Garfield belongs, is about to establish at Des Moines an institution for the education of both sexes, to be called Drake University.

—There are now but 4,512 students in the ten colleges of the New England Association, while in 1875 there were 4,544. The only college showing an increase is Williams.

—The Khedive is interested in the education of women, and is about to build in Cairo, at his own expense, a school for the instruction of girls of the higher classes.

—President Porter of Yale, has announced his intention of using the Revised Testament hereafter, at the services in the college chapel.

—A retiring fund for Harvard's professors has now been fairly started. Twenty-one thousand dollars have already been contributed.

—The schools of British Columbia, had an average daily attendance last year of 1,293. Expenditures for the year amounted to $47,000.

—Revs. Dr. Patton and Elliott of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary in Chicago have resigned.

EDUCATIONAL.

HUNTSVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE,

HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.

The thirty-second year begins August 31. A more healthy location can not be found. The College was [illegible] A full Faculty of thorough teachers, splendid buildings and a complete outfit for all departments, literary, music, languages and art, offers the highest advantages. A delightful home for pupils. Prices reduced to suit the times. Special inducements offered. For terms and new catalogues address

REV. A. B. JONES, A. M., President.

Millersburg Female College

Is in one of the most beautiful and healthful parts of the blue grass region of Kentucky, and has more first-class teachers, larger number of pupils, and more moderate charges, than any other female school under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Miss Hattie Randle, whose father was a member, and whose two brothers are members of the Louisiana Conference, is a teacher in this College. I will be in Shreveport last of August, and will accompany any young ladies from Louisiana who may wish, to come to Kentucky. Let the preachers remember they pledged themselves by public resolution to send to Millersburg all young ladies under their influence who would leave the State for an education. Send for catalogue.

GEO. T. GOUGH, A. M., D. D.

Millersburg, Bourbon co., Ky.

EMORY AND HENRY COLLEGE.

This old and well known institution of learning is located at Emory, Washington county, Va., on the Norfolk and Western railroad, twenty-five miles east of Bristol, Tenn., and is the property of the Holston Annual Conference, M. E. Church, South.

FACULTY

D. Sullins, D. D., President.

Rev. E. E. Hoss, A. M., Professor Natural Science and Mental and Moral Philosophy.

T. W. Gordan, A. M., Professor Ancient and Modern Languages.

Rev. R. N. Price, A. M., Prof. Mathematics and English Literature.

Rev. G. R. Stewart, Tutor.

Rates have been so reduced that the unusually small sum of $150, paid in advance, will now meet all the charges for a term of ten months.

The college is now in the forty-third year of its existence, has matriculated about 5000 young men, has superior facilities for instruction and successful study, and is located in the healthful mountain region, twenty-two hundred feet above the level of the sea.

Fall term begins September 8, 1881; Spring term January 26, 1882. For catalogue and information address D. SULLINS, President.

Emory, Virginia.

AUGUSTA FEMALE SEMINARY,

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA.

MISS MARY J. BALDWIN, Principal.

Opens September 1st, and closes June 1st, 1882.

This institution continues to increase in prosperity from year to year. It offers superior advantages in location; in its buildings and grounds; in its general appointments and sanitary arrangements. Its full corps of superior and experienced teachers; its unsurpassed advantages in Music, Modern Languages, Elocution, Fine Arts, Physical Culture and Instruction in the Theory and Practice of Cooking. The successful efforts made to secure health, comfort and happiness, its opposition to extravagance. Its standard of solid scholarship. For full particulars apply to the Principal for catalogues.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA.

Owned, controlled and managed by the Louisiana Annual Conference.

Course of study equal to any College in the South. Its roll of pupils has nearly doubled in three months, and still they come. Noted for healthfulness of locality. All staying rates.

Total expense for Spring term, commencing February 14, 1881, only $75 in literary and classical course. Music $30. No extras. Let Louisianians build up their own schools.

A specimen copy of College News free on application. Address REV. J. EANE BORDEN,

President.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VA.

Its point of grounds, buildings, apparatus and faculty, this is one of the most thoroughly equipped schools in the South. It is located in one of the finest sections of Virginia, 2,000 feet above the sea.

Bishop McTyeire, Dr. Garland, Dr. Summers and Dr. A. W. Wilson give it their cordial endorsement.

Music is a specialty. The director of this department, Prof. V. Kuehringer, is a noted teacher and composer, and his assistants are thoroughly cultivated musical artists.

A full course of Ancient and Modern Languages, Mathematics, Natural Science, and Mental and Moral Philosophy is taught with great care.

The fare is good, and every care is taken of the health of the young ladies.

Parents living in the South would do well to send their daughters here to spend the summer.

$200 paid in advance will cover board, tuition, fuel, washing and lights for forty weeks. Music $50 additional.

Spring session begins February 4, 1881. A discount of twenty per cent. to Methodist preachers, and Publishing House bonds taken from them at par.

Send for catalogue to

REV. E. E. HOSS, President.

HAMBURG (ARK.) HIGH SCHOOL,

Thirty Miles North of Rastrop, La.

This Institution, for both sexes, now in its fourth year, has 65 months yet remaining. Its facilities for educating are peculiar, and its charges are moderate. All modern improvements introduced. Faculty full and experienced. The principal boards his teachers and pupils, regarding the latter as his own children.

One hundred and twenty-five dollars will cover all school expenses, except Music.

City inquiries are referred to Judge R. B. Todd, J. M. Bonner and J. M. Lewis, Esqs.; to Rev. Dr. C. W. Carter and Bishop Keener.

D. C. B. CONNERLY,

January 6, 1881. Principal.

READVILLA SEMINARY,

BATON ROUGE, LOUISIANA.

A home school for girls. Thorough training in all departments. Full corps of efficient teachers. Expenses moderate. Numbers limited.

For particulars address

MRS. MARY W. REED,

Principal.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next session of this school will begin September 29, 1880.

This is a family Boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

For circulars, with necessary information, apply to W. H. N. MAGRUDER, Baton Rouge, La.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

Opens September 6, 1880. The last session was the most prosperous one since the war. The whole cost of board and tuition need not exceed $141 in the Preparatory Department, nor $184 in College classes for the scholastic year. Send for a Catalogue.

C. G. ANDREWS, President.

JEFFERSON COLLEGE,

HIGH SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN.

Six miles from Natchez, Miss. Session begins September 16. Full corps of instructors. Course of study thorough and extensive. Nearly fifty boarders from abroad. Pupils from a distance board with the principal. Entire expense for ten months, $145. For catalogues address the principal,

J. S. RAYMOND,

Washington, Adams county, Miss.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.,

Will begin its forty-first session October 4, 1880. Great attention paid to the regular course. Teachers to the Music and Art departments selected with reference to special fitness. Charges moderate.

For further information address

H. M. MOSS, A. M., President.

HOMER MALE COLLEGE

THE TWENTY-FIRST SESSION

will begin the

FIRST OF SEPTEMBER 1880.

Address E. A. SMITH,

President.

MISCELLANEOUS.

B. J. MONTGOMERY. C. KIRSCH

R. M. & B. J.

MONTGOMERY FURNITURE

AND

MIRROR EMPORIUM,

Corner Camp and Poydras Sts.

After a sojourn of over six weeks among the Factories North, East and West, we open this Fall and Winter Trade with the largest and best selected stock of Furniture, French and German Plate Mirrors, Ornamental and Fancy Goods, Upholstery Goods and Cabinet Makers' Hardware ever brought to this city. We select our goods in person from the best factories, and are determined not to be undersold. Our assortment being too extensive and varied to be enumerated in detail, we request our customers and the general public to call and inspect for themselves.

On hand a full line of the celebrated Vienna Bent Wood Work and Invalid Wheel Chairs.

Goods packed and delivered F. O. B.

TEACHERS,

SCHOLARS

AND

DEALERS

Are hereby advised that the

Largest Stock and Most

Complete Assortment of

SCHOOL BOOKS

In the South-west is now in stock and ready to fill all orders, large or small at Publishers' prices at

112 CAMP STREET,

NEW ORLEANS.

All the books used in this section supplied at the office, and prices guaranteed as low as they can be had elsewhere. Catalogues mailed on application.

Also a general line of

School Supplies,

SLATED PAPER,

SLATED CLOTH,

LIQUID SLATING,

BLACKBOARDS,

BLACKBOARD RUBBERS,

CHALK CRAYONS,

MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS,

NUMERICAL FRAMES,

SCHOOL SATCHELS,

BOOK STRAPS,

WRITING PAPER,

DRAWING PAPER,

BLOTTING PAPER,

WRITING BOOKS,

COMPOSITION BOOKS,

SLATES AND PENCILS,

INK, INK STANDS, PENS,

PENHOLDERS, CALL BELLS,

Kindergarten Material,

ETC., ETC.

Send for anything you want or address for prices,

G. T. LATHROP,

New Orleans.

In addition to the above we keep a complete line of all the standard religious publications, for pastors, members and Sunday-schools. Prices quoted on application.

South-western Agency for

Readers' and Writers' Economy Co.

G. T. LATHROP,

New Orleans.

Christian Advocate.

Women As Ordained Ministers.

In the Christian Advocate, published in New York City, we have carefully read an essay by Mrs. Cynthia May, favoring the ordination and appointment of women to the pastoral oversight of churches, which the editor, Dr. Buckley, says is one of the best in style of any of the large number received by him on this subject. The comments of the editor on the essay are very true and judicious. The essayist blames the last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church for refusing to ordain a woman to the sacred office of the ministry. Of all the acts of that able body none were more praiseworthy than this refusal, and the one wherein they selected the best men for the office of bishop, and would not appoint an inferior man to the office because of his color, was equally sensible. Her censure of the Conference, and her effort to make a scriptural argument in favor of women preachers, are the two points made in the essay. The scriptures relied on are the account given of the woman who poured the alabaster box of ointment on the head of Jesus and the women who visited the sepulchre early in the morning of Christ's resurrection. These are all, and in them there is nothing more pertaining to the subject than the Master's appreciation of the loving kindness in the instance first named of the dear woman who was anointing his head without regard to the rest, and in the latter instance the request made by the angel to the women that they would tell the disciples the Lord was risen.

Women in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the desire on the part of women to be ordained as ministers of the gospel, or even to preach by license or permission, is almost unknown. In a ministry numbering forty years, we do not now remember one who was troubled with the impression that such a course was her duty. We have observed all this time a large and open field for the usefulness of women in the church, but it never reached a desire to enter the ministry. In the Sunday-school, as teacher and pupil, she is of great value; in the prayer-meeting, when asked to lead in prayer, her appeals to a throne of mercy are heard; in the class-room, as a leader of her own sex, or as relating her own experience in communion with others, she touches the heart of the listener; to the sick, she is a ministering angel; in the church, as a hearer of the gospel, she holds up the minister's hands as truly as did Aaron and Hurr the hands of Moses; as a writer, her words find a winning way to the heart; as an educator of her own sex, she holds the highest rank; in the missionary work, lately inaugurated by her, she passes beyond the brotherhood, and already is well known across the waters; and in the circle at home she rules and reigns, without a peer or rival. Her whole life is full of blessed work.

If God, intended in the economy of his grace that women should preach the gospel and administer the sacraments, how is it to be accounted for that among the many millions of good women who are now living, so very few should feel any call to this duty. We have neither known nor heard of one in our church. And in the North and East of our country, where the question has been agitated to some extent, how few women profess to be called to this work. Going into the very center of the land where the few women live who wish to be preachers, is it not true that one thousand women to one are wholly free from such impressions of duty? If the Lord really called women to the work of the ministry, would this be so? He always sends the conviction of duty with the call. "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," comes from a man and not a woman. There is not the least surprise when our sons are called to the ministry, but when a daughter or a wife professes to be called we are apt to examine the question, Whether they are not singular? The Lord always provides the means preparatory to the work intended to be accomplished. If women had been designed as ministers, some provision would have been made for a substitution or agency in their domestic and family life, so that they could leave home and ministerate as men are accustomed to do.

Examine this question from another standpoint. The Bible was written by some forty authors, each one of whom was so truly led by Divine direction that "all scripture is given by inspiration of God." Not one of these selected writers was a woman. It was not because she was incapable of the work, or unworthy of it, or because she was less beloved by her Lord, or that there was any intention to leave her without employment, but it was not her sphere. Again, under the Old Testament economy men and not women were appointed to the priesthood. It was befitting to them, and God so willed it. When Christ called the twelve apostles, and afterward the seventy ministers, and all subsequent ones, men were called, and not women, in every instance. Authoritatively and officially in the ministry, "I suffer not a woman to teach," was the law of Christ and will ever remain the law. Not for a moment is this inhibition intended as neglect or punishment, but as a gracious protection of the delicacy and modesty belonging in an eminent degree to all good and holy women. "If a man desire the office of a bishop he desireth a good work" is the statement of inspiration. Woman is excluded from the office of bishop. "Likewise must the deacons be grave, even so must their wives be grave." A woman may not be a deacon in the church of God. "Rebuke not an elder, but entreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren." No woman was called to the eldership. "Let the women learn in silence with all subjection" so far as the authority of the ministry is concerned.

In our brief pilgrimage we do not expect to see this question agitated in any of our ecclesiastical judicatories. And we feel confident that the Methodist Episcopal Church, the more she considers this and other innovations, will never forget all the precedents of the past, so far as to ordain a woman to preach and administer the sacraments in the church of God without a single precept or example in the scriptures. How could a woman, with any propriety, be a preacher among the Baptists or Reformers, and administer immersion. We need not specify all the delicate positions in which they would be placed if they were to attempt to execute fully the office of the ministry. The Lord has made the race, male and female, and there is much work peculiarly adapted to the one and not to the other. Let every good woman praise the Lord that the ministry is not laid upon her as one of the responsibilities of life. Her native modesty and mental intuition will suggest to her many reasons why her Saviour was showing her mercy and not neglect when he appointed men as his ambassadors to preach the gospel at [illegible] Church Methodist.

The Use of the Walrus.

In looking at this uncouth animal, the most natural question at once arises—What earthly service can such an ungainly, stupid beast render? What, indeed, is the use of its existence? But the answer is swift and satisfactory: were it not for the subsistence furnished so largely by the flesh and oil of the morse, it is exceedingly doubtful whether the Esquimaux of North America, from Behring Straits clear around to Labrador, could manage to live. It is not to be inferred that walrus-meat is the sole diet of these simple people, for that is very wide of the truth; but there are several months of every year when the exigencies of the climate render it absolutely impossible for the hardest native to go out and procure food, and then the value of the cache of walrus-meat is appreciated, when for weeks and weeks it forms the beginning and the end of every meal. The walrus responds to as many demands of the Innuit as the camel of the Arab, or the cocoa-palm of the South Sea islander. Its flesh feeds him; its oil illuminates and warms his dark hut; its sinews make his birdnets; its tough skin, skillfully stretched over the light wooden frame, constitutes his famous bayak, and the serviceable oomiak, or bidarrah; its intestines are converted into water-proof clothing, while the soles to its slippers are transferred to his feet; and, finally, its ivory is a source of endless utility to him in domestic use and in trade and barter.

Walrus famines among the Esquimaux have been recorded in pathetic legends by almost all of the savage settlements in the Arctic. Even now, as I write November, 1880, comes the authentic corroboration of the harsh rumor of the starvation of the inhabitants of St. Lawrence Island—those people who live just midway between the Old World and the New, in Alaskan waters. The winter of 1878-'80 was one of exceptional rigor in the Arctic, though in this country it was unusually mild and open. The ice closed in solid around St. Lawrence Island so firm and unbroken by the mighty powers of wind and tide that the walrus were driven far to the southward and eastward, out of reach of the unhappy inhabitants of that island, who, thus unexpectedly deprived of their main stay and support, seem to have miserably starved to death, with the exception of one small village on the north shore. The residents of the Poonook, Poogovellyak, and Kagallegak settlements perished, to a soul, from hunger—nearly three hundred men, women, and children. I was among these people in 1871, during the month of August, and remarked their manifold superiority over the savages of the north-west coast and the great plains. They seemed then to live, during nine months of the year, almost wholly upon the flesh and oil of the walrus. Clean-limbed, bright-eyed, and jovial, they profoundly impressed one with their happy subsistence and reliance upon the walrus-herds of Behring Sea; and it was remarked then that these people had never been subjected to the temptation and subsequent sorrow of putting their trust in princes; hence their independence and good heart. But now it appears that it will not suffice, either, to put your trust in walrus. Scribner for July.

WHAT MAKES A HOUSE BEAUTIFUL? It is an excellent thing to have a well-kept house, and a beautifully appointed table; but, after all, the best cheer of every home must come from the heart and manner of the home mother. If that is cold, and this ungracious, all the wealth of India can not make the home pleasant and inviting. Intelligence, too, must lend its charm, if we would have home and Eden. The severe style of house-order heatless seldom leaves much margin for intellectual culture. Even general reading is considered as out of the question for a woman so hurried and so worried with her scrubbing and polishing, and making up garments. A simpler style of living and housefurnishing would set many a bonded slave at liberty, and add vastly to the comfort of all in the house.

Hospitality rarely prevails in these spotless little and letter houses. Company disarrange the books, and disorder the house, which had work enough in it before. The mother can not throw off her household cares, and sit down for a real heart-to-heart converse with the old friend of her childhood. Still less can she enter into the joys and pleasures right and delightful to her own children, because of the extra work of clearing away it will be likely to make.

With all your toils to make a house beautiful, do not neglect the first element of all, to beautify yourself, body and soul. A sweet loving word, and a warm clasp of the hand, are far more to a guest than the most elaborately embroidered lambrequins at your window, or the most exquisite damask on your table. There are bare cabin homes that have been remembered with pleasure, because of the beautiful loving presence there; and stately palaces, which leave the impression of an iceberg on the mind. Baptist Weekly.

POISON RINGS. Poison rings still exist in many antiquarian collections. They are generally of two kinds: one intended as an engine of destruction to its wearer, the other simply as a convenient receptacle, or hiding-place, for poison. Some years ago a ring of the former description was purchased at a sale of curiosities. Its device was two sharp pointed claws holding a stone. The purchaser, slipping it on his finger, received a slight scratch from these claws, the points of which bent inward. His hand and arm very shortly became swelled and painful; a doctor was sent for, who pronounced the slight scratch poisoned. Examination of the ring showed that the claws were hollow, and that a poisonous matter had been contained in them; doubtless, when first made, the ring would cause death instead of merely inconvenience to its wearer. Rings intended to contain poison are frequently mentioned in ancient history; it was common to carry one as a convenient means of suicide. By such a ring Demosthenes probably destroyed himself, and some historians say Hannibal likewise. M. Cassius, the tyrannicide of the Temple of the Capitoline Jupiter, being arrested on a charge of purloining some of the gold deposited there, broke a hollow receptacle of his ring with his teeth, and fell dead on the spot. The Emperor Heliogabalus is said to have had a collection of these poison rings among his jewels. London Globe.

Dr. Dollinger says that converts to Mohammedanism are increasing.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—THE MILD POWER CURES.—
HUMPHREYS' HOMEOPATHIC SPECIFICS.

In use 30 years.—Each number the special prescription of an eminent physician.—The only Simple Safe and Sure Medicines for the people.

LIST PRINCIPAL NOS.	CURES.	PRICE.
1.	Fevers, congestion, inflammations	.50
2.	Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic	.50
3.	Crying Colic, or Teething of Infants	.50
4.	Diarrhea of Children or Adults	.50
5.	Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic	.50
6.	Cholera Morbus, Vomiting	.50
7.	Coughs, Cold, Bronchitis	.50
8.	Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache	.50
9.	Headache, Sick Headaches, Vertigo	.50
10.	Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Indigestion	.50
11.	Suppressed or Painful Periods	.50
12.	Whites, too Profuse Periods	.50
13.	Croup, Cough, Difficult Breathing	.50
14.	Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Eruptions	.50
15.	Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains	.50
16.	Fever and Ague, Chill, Fever, Ague	.50
17.	Piles, Blind or Bleeding	.50
19.	Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	.50
20.	Whooping Cough, violent coughs	.50
21.	General Debility, Physical Weakness	.50
27.	Kidney Disease	.50
28.	Nervous Debility	1.00
30.	Urinary Weakness, Wetting the bed	.50
32.	Disease of the Heart, Palpitation	1.00

Sold by druggists, or sent by the Case, or Single Vial, free of charge, on receipt of price. Send for Dr. Humphreys' Book on Diseases &c. (144 pages, also Illustrated Catalogue FREE. Address, Humphreys' Homeopathic Medicine Co., 109 Fulton Street, New York.

JOS. B. WOLFE & CO.,
Cotton Factors,
59 Carondelet, Street, New Orleans,
And General Agents for
DANIEL PRATT IMPROVED
Revolving Head Cotton Gin,
PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.
—AND—
Eclipse Hulling Cotton Gin,
WITH REVOLVING HEAD.
PRICES REDUCED.

THE REVOLVING HEAD GIN has been in use for the past eight seasons, and several improvements have been added. It obviates all friction at the ends of the cotton-box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint from the same quantity of seed cotton than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head Light in the draft and causes the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work when the same time, while consuming steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton, on this account, of greater market value. The improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every bale ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

SELF FEEDERS and CONDENSERS with latest improvements also made by the Daniel Pratt Gin Company, to work with these Gins. Send for descriptive circulars. JOS. B. WOLFE & CO., New Orleans, La.

Crescent Insurance Co.,
67 & 69 Camp Street,
NEW ORLEANS.
ORGANIZED 1849. REORGANIZED 1880
Cash Capital $100,000.
SOLICITS
FIRE, RIVER AND MARINE RISKS.
W. R. LYMAN, President.
S. R. NEWMAN, Vice President.
CHAS. E. RICE, Secretary.

OGDEN & RAYNE.
DEALERS IN
BAGGING, TIES AND TWINE,
AND AGENTS FOR THE
Celebrated E. Carver Gin Company,
AND
Shultz Belting Company,
18 UNION STREET. NEW ORLEANS.

SULLIVAN & BURGER,
97 CAMP STREET.
Plumbers and Gas Fitters,
DEALERS IN
Pipes and Gas Fixtures of all kinds, from Lead and Terra-cotta Pipes, Bath Tubs, Sheet Lead and Cooking Ranges, also offering a choice Gas Machines, for country use.
All Orders Promptly Attended to.

P. DUDLEY COLEMAN & BRO.
No. 12 Union St. New Orleans La.
DEALERS IN
MACHINERY
SEND FOR CIRCULARS COMPARE OUR PRICES
MILL STONES, IRONS & PORTABLE STEAM ENGINES.
MAKE FLOUR CORN SAW AND COTTON PRESSES MILLS

1000 AGENTS WANTED!
One in each town as Druggist in neighborhood, in Mississippi and Louisiana, to sell
Dr. Dutton's Vegetable Discovery.
It is sold only by certified agents.
It is the best BLOOD AND LIVER Medicine we ever used. Write for terms. It will pay you.
A. L. FUTRELL, General Agent, Jonesboro, Miss.

All Farmers, Mothers, Business Men, Teachers and mechanics, who are tired out by constant toil and worry, and all who are miserable with Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sleeplessness, or with Bowel, Kidney or Liver Complaints, you can be truly benefited and cured by using
PARKER'S GINGER TONIC!
If you are wasting away with Consumption, Female Weakness, age, dissipation or any sickness or grave complaint, and your blood needs purifying you will find PARKER'S GINGER TONIC the Best Health & Strength Restorer you can use, and an superior to Bitters, and other Tonics, as it builds up the system, but never intoxicates. It has Saved Hundreds of Lives and May Save Yours.
Buy a 50 ct. bottle and be sure the signature of Hiscox & Co., N. Y., is on outside wrapper.
PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM Restores Dark Gray Hair to Original Color. Prevents Baldness.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE INSURANCE COMPANY.

SOUTHERN DEPARTMENT:
OFFICE CORNER CARONDELET AND GRAVIER STREETS.

The capital of the Company is TEN MILLION DOLLARS, to which there must be added the unlimited liability of the proprietors.

Fire assets, excluding paid-up capital	$9,881,136 21
Paid-up capital	1,228,200 00
Total fire assets	$11,109,626 21
Fire liabilities	3,944,358 23
Making the surplus for policy-holders	$7,165,267 98

Losses by Chicago Fire in 1871 $3,239,091
Losses by Boston Fire in 1872 $1,120,729

Fire risks of all kinds respectfully solicited. The Board of Directors is fully empowered to adjust and pay all losses from this city, thus placing the Company on an even footing with the local companies chartered under the State laws.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
J. F. SCHRODER, Esq., Chairman, of Leopold Christ & Co.
NEWTON BUCKNER, Esq., of Buckner & Co.
PERRY NUGENT, Esq., of Nugent & Lallande.
PETER ANDERSON, Esq., of Anderson and Simpson.
HENRY V. OGDEN, Resident Secretary.
JULES B. ROUX, Asst Resident Secretary.
NEW ORLEANS, October 20, 1880.

25,000 SOLD!
FARMER'S AND MECHANIC'S MANUAL
Edited by GEO. E. WARING, JR.,
Author of "Elements of Agriculture," "Draining for Profit and for Health," and formerly Agricultural Engineer of Central Park, New York.

500 Octavo Pages—Over 200 Illustrations.
Worth to any Thinking, Working Farmer
$25 per Year.

This book is for the most part a work of facts and figures—assured analysis and demonstrations, about which there can be no dispute. The design was to produce a work of substantial and enduring value, and of universal application and use. This work is tolerated as containing matter that has been proven by long use to be of value; more that is most necessary for every farmer and mechanic to know, and more to furnish novelty, than any other that has ever been presented to the farmers and mechanics of America. It is complete in every particular in which it is possible for such a book to be complete, and, in addition to this, it is suggestively suggestive in many other respects to induce its readers to read more, to think more, to experiment more, and to become more intelligent and more successful in the management of their business as well as really happier and wiser men.

Price, in Extra English Cloth, Gilt Back, Only $3 50.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Address
G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

Unequaled Low Rates now Ruling at
JOHN GAUCHE'S
MAMMOTH QUEENSWARE HOUSE.

We announce to our patrons that we are now offering our celebrated ROYAL SEMI-PORCELAIN DINNER SETS, 100 pieces, for $12.

ENGLISH STONE CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $10.

REAL FRENCH CHINA DINNER SETS, 124 pieces, $17.

ENGLISH PRINTED TOILET SETS, $3 50.

ENGLISH CHINA PRINTED DINNER SETS, $20.

ENGLISH CHINA GOLD BAND and FLOWERED TEA SETS, 44 pieces, $6 50.

THE BEST SELECTION OF
CROCKERY
Glassware and Housefurnishing Goods
OF ANY HOUSE IN THE SOUTH.

The assortment for both city and country is very large, and the prices are guaranteed as low, if not lower than any establishment North or South.

REMEMBER THE PLACE, IT IS
JOHN GAUCHE,
AT THE MORESQUE BUILDINGS,
100, 111, 113 & 115 Camp Street,
Branch House, Nos. 108 and 110 Chartres Street.

40 ELEGANT CHROMO Cards, New Styles, 10c. Agents wanted. L. JONES & Co., Nassau, N. Y.

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.
New Edition of WEBSTER, has 118,000 Words, 3000 Engravings, 4600 NEW WORDS and Meanings, Biographical Dictionary of over 9700 Names.
Published by G. & C. MERRIAM, Springfield, Mass.

ADVANCE AND RETREAT!
Personal experiences in the
UNITED STATES and CONFEDERATE STATES ARMIES,
By J. B. HOOD,
Lieutenant General in the Confederate Army.
Published for the Hood Orphan Memorial Fund, by Gen. G. T. Beauregard.
Price in cloth binding, $1; in leather, $1 50.
Mailed, post paid, on receipt of price by
G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp Street.

AGENTS WANTED [illegible] Dr. [illegible] Sells at sight. You [illegible] Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

MENEELY'S BELLS.
For Churches, etc., known to the public since 1826. are made only at MENEELY BELL FOUNDRY, West Troy, N. Y. Illustrated Catalogue free.

MISCELLANEOUS.

D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street. 15 Bourbon Street.
Our Stock of Spring Goods is now complete, consisting of the latest novelties in
Silks, Laces, Dress Goods in Worsted Fabrics, Black Grenadines in Silk and Wool, Linen Lawns, Organdies and Percales,
HOSIERY in all Styles and Colors. A Complete assortment of MATTINGS.
SAMPLES SENT FREE OF CHARGE.
D. H. HOLMES,
155 Canal Street, New Orleans

WHEELER & PIERSON,
(Successors to Darcy & Wheeler and Pierson & Hewes.)
CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS,
Nos. 13 & 15 CAMP STREET, New Orleans.
Black Cloth Suits, $20 to 40. | Business Suits, $12 to $25
6 Shirts for $9 | Collars, $1.50 per Dozen.
Orders from Clergymen solicited, and liberal reduction made to them.
Rules for self-measurement sent on application, and goods sent C. O. D.
Plantation Clothing for Country Stores at very low prices in our Wholesale Department up stairs.

THE NEW DICTIONARY HOLDER.
These holders are so arranged that they press the book firmly together when it is closed. In short the Dictionary Holder is perfected in form, finish and operation, and will be found one of the most elegant and desirable articles for schools, library or professional reference and library use. Every one who uses a dictionary should have one of these patent holders, and have the unwieldy Unabridged ready for reference. Place the dictionary in the holder and keep it there. There is no more aversion to take it out of the holder than out of its binding. Children and grown people refer to a dictionary if mounted in one of these holders and the book does not become racked, soiled and spoiled. You have to, to open the book and it remains open; close it and it remains closed. If placed by your side when reading, or writing, the task of looking up words is not deferred and then forgotten, but done instantly, and easily. The holder is high enough if you stand, low enough if you sit, and has received unlimited praise from clergymen, and ten cents, and all others who have used it. The Unabridged Dictionary, either of Worcester or Webster, fits up them exactly.
Price finished in hardest black Japan, $1 00
" white, or pickle wash 1 50
Address G. T. LATHROP, Agent for the Southwest, 112 Camp Street, New Orleans.

CATARRH Is a Terrible Disease. Its fearful effects—corruption running down the throat, weak eyes, deafness, loss of voice, loss of smell, disgusting odors, nasal deformities, and finally consumption. From first to last it is ever aggressive. Ordinary treatments are worse than useless. If neglected while a cure is possible, it may rapidly develop into quick consumption. The most thorough, successful and pleasant treatment is

Dr. M. W. CASE'S CARBOLATE of TAR INHALANT
FOR CATARRH, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION, Bronchitis & Deafness.

It takes now no quire ten minutes to [illegible] A person using the Inhalant, the value of Carbolate of Tar, the most healing, remedial agent known to science, Balsams and Cordials in the most healing and soothing properties are so combined with the Pine Tar, that the mere breathing converts them into a dense smoke vapor. This is inhaled, taken right to the diseased parts. No heat, no hot water, simply, inhaling or breathing it; and you feel its healing power at once. The medical profession is endorsed by physicians everywhere, and highly commended by hundreds who have used it with perfect satisfaction. FULL TREATMENT—Circulars, etc., Sent Free—Satisfaction Always Guaranteed. Address, DR. M. W. CASE, 963 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

TO BE GIVEN AWAY!
I have decided to distribute the remainder of
My Stock of Pictures
among my customers, rather than sacrifice them. Any person buying $5 and upwards of other goods, will be entitled to select from a class of Pictures ranging in price according to the size of bill purchased. No additional price will be put upon the goods, as this is entirely a bonus to induce sales during the dull Summer months.
My stock is comprised in part of Carpets, Oil Cloths, Upholstery Goods, Mattings, Wall Paper, Window Shades, Cornices, Curtain Goods, Wire Screens, Fixtures, Mouldings and Mirrors.
C. HEATH,
97 and 99 Camp Street,
NEW ORLEANS

WATCHES.
LADY'S GOLD WATCHES, $30 and upward
GENT'S GOLD WATCHES, $45 and upward
GENT'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward
BOY'S SILVER WATCHES, $12 and upward
All guaranteed.
A. B. GRISWOLD & CO.,
Cor. Canal and Royal Sts.

HOW TO PAINT.
A new work by a Practical Painter, designed for the use of Tradesmen, Mechanics, Merchants, Farmers, and as a Guide to Professional Painters. Containing a plain common-sense statement of the methods employed by painters to produce satisfactory results in plain and fancy painting of every description, including formulas for mixing paint in oil or water, tools required, etc. This is just the book needed by every person having anything to paint, and makes

Every Man His Own Painter.

Full directions for using white lead, lamp black, green, yellow, vermillion, brown, whiting, glue, pumice stone, asphaltum and spirits of turpentine, oils, varnishes, varnishing furniture, milk paint, preparing kalsomine—

Paint for Out-Buildings,

—Whitewash, paste for paper-hanging, hanging paper, graining in oak, maple, rosewood, black walnut staining, decalcomanie, making rustic pictures, painting flower stands, mahogany polish, rosewood polish, varnishing furniture waxing furniture, cleaning paint—

Paint for Farming Tools,

and for machinery, and household fixtures.

To Paint a Farm Wagon,

to re-varnish a carriage, to make plaster casts.

The work is neatly printed, with illustrations wherever they can serve to make the subject plainer, and it will save many times its cost yearly. Every family should possess a copy.
Price by mail, post paid, $1.
G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

YOUNG MEN'S
Christian Association,
OF NEW ORLEANS.
ROOMS, 87 CAMP STREET,
Open from 8 A. M. to 10 P. M., except Sunday, and on Sundays from 2 to 6 P. M., where may be found the leading daily and weekly papers of the most important cities of the United States.
SERVICES.
Tuesday, 7.30 P. M.—Devotional.
Thursday, 7.30 P. M.—Singing Class.
NOON-DAY PRAYER-MEETING.
Daily, 12 to 12.30.
Rule.—Prayers and Remarks are limited to three minutes.

FURNITURE.
W. G. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,
desires to inform the public and his patrons that his Stock of Parlor Suits, Chamber Suits and Dining-Room Suits, both fine and medium, has never been as complete as at present, with prices lower than ever.
His stock of Furniture suitable for country trade is very large, and special inducements are offered to wholesale buyers.
Orders from the country will have especial care and prompt attention.
W. G. TEBAULT,
47 Royal Street,
New Orleans.

W. C. SHEPARD & Co.,
AMERICAN CHINA HOUSE,
49 Camp Street, New Orleans.
We append a few prices
The American China Dinner, Breakfast and Tea Set, comprising 160 Pieces, for $12.
A Real French China Dinner Set, 118 Pieces, for $17.
English Stone China Dinner Set, 124 Pieces, for $10.
English Stone China Chamber Set, comprising 10 Pieces, for $2 50.
Decorated Chamber Sets, with different Colored Bands, 10 Pieces, for $3 50.
Glass Goblets, from 40 cents to $1 per dozen.
Particular attention given to Novelties and Specialties pertaining to the House-Furnishing Department. Orders promptly attended to. We have just received a full and complete stock of holiday goods. Call and examine before purchasing.
W. C. SHEPARD & CO

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
EPPS'-COCOA.
BREAKFAST.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us, ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.
Made simply with boiling water or milk.
Sold only in tins (½ lb and lb) labelled
JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, London, England.
Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence for afternoon.

PRICES CURRENT.

REVISED AND CORRECTED WEEKLY.

[illegible] MARKET.

New Orleans, Monday, June 27, 1881.

Our readers should bear in mind that our quotations represent prices for round lots, and that in filling small orders higher prices must be paid.

SOUTHERN STAPLES.

	To-day.	Ans.
Cotton, ₱ lb.
Low ordinary	6¾	6¾
Ordinary	7¼	7¼
Good ordinary	8¼	8¼
Low middling	9¾	9¾
Middling	10¾	10¾
Good middling	11¼	11¼
Middling fair	12¾	12¾
Sales to-day	1	0 bales
Receipts since our last	1,191	bales
Receipts previously	1,5[illegible]1,045	bales
Sugar, ₱ lb.:
Fair	6	7¾
Fully fair		8
Prime	8¾	8¾
Choice		9¾
Yellow clarified	9	9¾
White clarified	9¾	10
Powdered
Crushed
Molasses, 10 lbs., ₱ gallon:
Common	20
Fair	26	35½
Prime	35	40
Choice
Rice, Louisiana, ₱ lb.:
Common		4¾
Fair	4¾
Prime	5¼
Choice	6

GROCERIES.

Butter, ₱ lb.:
Western	15	24
New York
Coffee, ₱ lb.:
Rio ordinary	9¾	9¾
Rio, fair	11¾	11¾
Rio, prime	12¾	13
Cheese, ₱ lb.:
Western factory
English dairy
Candles, ₱ lb.:
Best brands		11½
Corn Meal, ₱ bbl.:
Choice K D		3 00
Flour, ₱ bbl.:
Superfine	3 00
XX	4 25	4 50
XXX	4 75
Choice	5 50	6 00
Choice	6 75	7 00
Fish:
Mackerel, No. 1 in kits		75
Half kits		3 75
Kits		75
Mackerel, No. 2 in kits		75
Half kits		75
Kits		50
Mackerel, No. 3 in kits	5 00	5 75
Half kits
Kits
Codfish		1
Herring, ₱ box
Oils, ₱ gallon:
Coal, in cases
Coal, in bbls
Illuminating		55
Linseed, boiled		60
Linseed, raw		57
Lard	50	55
Soap, ₱ box:
Mottled	3 00
Olive	2 50
Palm
Castile		2 75
Soda, ₱ lb.
Starch, ₱ lb.
Salt, ₱ sack:
Coarse
Fine

GRAIN AND FEED.

Corn, in sacks, ₱ bushel:
Yellow		51
White		51
Mixed		51
Oats, ₱ bushel:
Western		45
Red rust proof	44	46
Bran, ₱ 100 lbs.
Choice		80
Hay, ₱ ton:
Prime	18 00
Choice	21 00
Cow Peas, ₱ bushel:
Mixed		1 00
All		1 00

PROVISIONS.

Bacon, ₱ lb.:
Breakfast	10¾	11
Shoulders		7
Sides, clear rib		9
Sides, clear		10
Hams, sugar-cured	10	12
Mess Pork, ₱ bbl		23
Dry Salt Meat, ₱ lb.:
Clear ribsides		8½
Clear sides		9
Shoulders		7½
Lard, ₱ lb.:
Choice, in kegs		12¾
Choice, in tierces	11¾	12¾

ESCULENTS.

Potatoes, ₱ bbl.:
Irish		3 25
Sweet		2 50
Onions, ₱ bbl		3 00
Apples, ₱ bbl		6 00
Cabbages, ₱ box
Sour Kraut, ₱ bbl

BAILING STUFFS.

Bagging, ₱ yard:
Jutella
Jute
Baling Twine, ₱ lb		12
Ties, ₱ bundle:
20 ties		1 75

SUNDRIES.

Poultry, ₱ dozen:
Grown chickens	4 00	4 50
Young do	3 00	3 50
Broilers	2 00	2 50
Geese	4 00	5 00
Turkeys	1 00	6 00
Eggs, ₱ dozen
Western	10	11
Southern	10	12
Honey, ₱ gallon
Strained
Comb, ₱ lb
Pecans, ₱ lb.
Louisiana
Texas	9	12
Oranges, ₱ box:
Louisiana
Foreign	4 00
Coal, ₱ ton:
Louisiana		2
Texas		2
Feathers, ₱ lb.:
Live geese
Hides, ₱ lb.:
Country green		5
Dry salted		11
Dry flint		12
Ox Horns, each		6
Tallow, ₱ lb	5½	6
Cotton Seed, ₱ ton:
In sacks
Meal		28 00
Oil cake
Cooperage, ₱ hoop:
Sugar hogsheads		3 25
Molasses barrels	1 45	1 85
Half barrels		1 05
Kegs		70
Oak Staves, per 120:
Kegs
Barrels
Extra barrel	95 00	100 00
Extra hogshead	135 00	140 00
Extra pipe	165 00	180 00
Tobacco:
Low lugs
Medium		4½
Good to fine
Low leaf
Medium	5½	6½
Good	6½	7
Fine	7½	8
Selections	9	12

A new company with a large capital was organized at Knoxville, Tenn., last Friday. It will employ 200 men, and has already orders for a year in advance. This is a sort of construction which everybody will rejoice in.

—The Baptist Ministers' Conference of New York City has decided to admit reporters to all the weekly meetings in each month.

AN OLD LADY writes: "I am sixty-five years old and was feeble and nervous all the time, when I bought a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic. I have used a little more than one bottle and feel as well as at thirty, and am sure that hundreds need just such a medicine." See advertisement.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

MACON, June 21.—George I. Seney of New York, has donated $25,000 to Wesleyan Female College, making $70,000 given by him to the college within two months. $45,000 will be expended at once in the erection of a new college building.

SARATOGA, N. Y., June 21.—The National Temperance Convention met in the Methodist Church here, this morning, and organized by the election of J. L. Bailey, of Pennsylvania, as temporary Chairman. Speeches were made by Rev. Dr. Homer Eaton, of Saratoga, Mother Stewart, John B. Gough, and Mrs. Thompson, of Ohio, and others.

Upon the report of the Committee on Permanent Organization, Rev. Dr. A. Gordon, of Massachusetts, was elected President.

Committee on Resolutions, Finances and Order of Business were then appointed.

After which, Miss Frances E. Willard, of Illinois, gave a glowing account of her temperance tour through the South and cordial reception she met with from the Southern people in every part from Virginia to Texas.

TORONTO, June 21.—The Southern delegation to the International Sunday-school Convention which opens to-morrow, comprising Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky, etc., arrived here this afternoon. Numerous delegations have already arrived. Gov. Colquitt, of Georgia, President of the Convention, is with the party. Col. Gizawski, Aide de Camp in Canada to the Queen, will entertain the guests at a garden party.

LEXINGTON, Va., June 22.—The commencement exercises of the Washington and Lee University took place to-day, including delivery of diplomas, prizes and honors. An able address was delivered by Hon. J. R. Tucker, before the literary society. Howard Houston scholarship conferred on W. S. Currell, of South Carolina; E. H. French endowed scholarship conferred on E. K. Cincbott, of Virginia; James Wilson endowment scholarship, conferred on Harry Kelly, of Virginia; Taylor prize scholarship, conferred on G. E. Junkin, of Texas; Young prize scholarship, conferred on H. C. Brownfield, of Louisiana; honorary degree of D. D. conferred on Rev. W. Shanks, of Virginia, and Rev. T. T. Everett, of Germantown, Pa.

The degree of Doctor of Letters was conferred on Prof. Rodes Massie, of Richmond College, and J. G. Watson Jones, Esq., of Richmond; degree of L. L. D., was conferred on Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar, of Mississippi, and Col. J. T. L. Preston, Virginia.

SARATOGA, June 22.—At the National Temperance Convention to-day the Committee on Organization reported a list of vice presidents, among whom were D. C. Miller, of Virginia; Gov. Jarvis, of North Carolina; Major B. H. Townsend, of South Carolina; Ex C. Millington, of Georgia; Rev. J. S. Rogers, of Florida; Miss E. F. Griffin, of Alabama; Gen. Alexander Stuart, of Mississippi; Rev. John Pipes, of Louisiana; E. L. Dudley, of Texas, and Prof. Fiddis, of Tennessee.

A long series of resolutions were adopted, insisting on the duty of total abstinence; recommending the instruction of children with regard to the effects of alcohol, considered from a scientific standpoint; urging that the churches work more actively in the good cause; condemning the sale of liquor on the Sabbath day; recommending the use of unfermented wine for sacramental purposes; calling attention to the responsible relations of the National Government to liquor traffic, and asking for amendments to the Federal constitution which shall forever prohibit the manufacturing and sale of all fermented or distilled beverages throughout the land, and insisting that the Government make total abstinence a condition of appointment in the public service.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—The Smithsonian Institute has received from Prof. J. Sturgiss, of Haverford College, Pa., and Prof. Louis Swift, of Rochester, N. Y., announcement of the discovery of a bright comet, eight degrees southeast of Capella. It is plainly visible to the naked eye, the nebulous being almost as bright as Venus.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 23.—A Tombstone, Arizona, dispatch says: Fire swept over a space of six blocks, destroying about 150 buildings, including a large part of the business portion of the town. The losses will probably aggregate $250,000. About 800 people have been rendered homeless. The buildings were mostly of a cheap, temporary character.

SHREVEPORT, June 24.—U. S. District Judge Alex Boarman returned this evening and will at once commence organizing the new court. He expects to hold the first term at Monroe, La., in October, as provided in the bill creating the Western District of Louisiana.

CINCINNATI, June 24.—Prof. Ormond Stone, of the Cincinnati Observatory, observed a new comet last night. He says it is moving rapidly north. He is quite positive it is not the comet of 1812, but thinks it may be that of 1807, the period of which was not expected by astronomers for 1700 years. He believes it is the same comet as seen about June 21, by Dr. Gould, in South America. The apparition is exceedingly interesting, and will be watched every night by corps of astronomers at the Cincinnati Observatory.

TORONTO, June 25.—The Sunday-school Convention, at the afternoon session, was addressed by J. W. Dailes, of Richmond, Gov. Colquitt and Rev. Cook Smith, on Sunday schools among freedmen of the South; by Rev. Arthur Mitchell, D. D., of Cleveland, on Sunday-school missionary work in the West, and by Rev. A. Sutherland, D. D., of Montreal, on Sunday-school work in the North. Dr. Vincent, of Chautauqua, delivered a speech which closed the session.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., June 24.—Observations made at the Warner Observatory to night show the offshoot of the tail is rapidly absorbing the main portion. This supernumerary part extended up to the North Star. The comet is receding from the sun and probably from the earth, and will be seen but some time yet, but undoubtedly grow dimmer.

Claimants for the Warner prize of $1,000 are pouring in by hundreds from all parts of America. A Connecticut man claims to have found it on the 19th.

HANOVER, N. H., June 27.—Observations taken at Dartmouth observatory last night, show that the comet was moving to or past Capella, two degrees from the Pole star, its position being about three degrees away. At lower culmination it was approximating ten degrees from the horizon. As seen through a three inch glass the comet was very cloudy defined, being circular on one side and fading away imperfectly on the other, 15 to 20 minutes the nucleus there was a dark spot. The comet is still passing over and increasing its eighth magnitude star, making a beautiful sight. The comet is less than a minute in width and about a minute and a half in length.

MACON, Ga., June 27.—A large comet was discovered about dark last evening in the northwest, about 30 degrees above the horizon. Its course is downward to the horizon, two degrees westward.

SHREVEPORT, LA., June 27.—Two comets are visible here—one in the northeast and the other in the northwest; the latter appeared last night about 7 o'clock, and soon disappeared below the horizon, while the former appears between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning, and is very brilliant. The one in the northwest is plainly visible to-night.

ALABAMA, June 27.—Prof. Bass, of Dudley Observatory is satisfied that the great comet now visible is Gould's comet.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, June 21.—On last Saturday the ceremony of inauguration of the Mexican and Cuanila Railroad took place, presided over by the President of the Republic. The length of the road is nearly 86 miles.

A train left here at 4 o'clock in the morning with about 200 invited persons, and arrived at Cuanila at 11 o'clock. A fine banquet was given in the afternoon.

CITY OF MEXICO, June 21.—According to the notice given by the official journal, the subventions to be paid by the Mexican Government for all granted railroads here, are said to be about $4,200,000 annually.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., June 23.—The American war ship Alliance, Com'r Cooper, arrived here to-day. After necessary delay she will proceed on her polar cruise with instructions to search the northern side of Spitzbergen, should the ice permit, for the Jeanette.

MEXICO, June 25.—A whole train of the Morlos Railroad tumbled down last night into the river San Antonio, near Cuanila, on account of the downfall of a stone bridge.

Nearly two hundred are dead and a great many wounded, the most of them soldiers.

There are some cases of yellow fever in Yucatan.

The Apaches killed this week five Mexican smugglers near Santa Clara.

CAMP MEETINGS.

Hinesburg Camp Meeting, Alexandria District, Louisiana Annual Conference, is appointed to commence on Thursday night, August 18. Preachers are cordially invited to attend.

DEO JACKSON.

The camp meeting at China Grove, Pike county, Miss. will commence on Friday night before the third Sabbath in September. All ministers are cordially invited to attend.

G. M. GILMORE.

The camp meeting at St. Matthews' camp-ground, four miles southwest of Hickory station, Vicksburg and Meridian railroad, will commence Friday before fourth Sabbath in August.

GEO. BANCROFT, P. C.

The Providence camp meeting will begin on the 12th of August, and continue six days. Ministers, both local and itinerant, are invited to attend, provision will be made for their entertainment. Visitors will be entertained at the public tents. All who may want to attend will get off the railroad at Hazlehurst, where they will find hacks in waiting to convey them out to the camp ground. The camp ground is fifteen miles east of Hazlehurst.

D. F. CANNON, P. C.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS CAMP MEETING.—The Camp Meeting at Beauregard Camp Ground, one mile from Crystal Springs, Mississippi, will be held August 4, and continue one week. Rev. H. F. Johnson, P. E. will have charge of the services.

J. A. SHARP, Secretary.

The camp meeting at William's Camp Ground, Pascagoula District, will commence Thursday night, August 4. Friends who made subscriptions for the benefit of the camp ground last year will please put their subscriptions as soon as possible, as it is greatly needed. Those good sisters who promised contributions for the preachers' tents will please bring their tents when they come to the camp meeting. Preachers are cordially invited to be with us, provision has been made for their entertainment.

The grounds have been improved, a new hotel built, and other provisions for the comfort of visitors made.

S. H. COX.

SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.

The Pascagoula camp meeting on Seashore Camp ground, Miss., will commence on Wednesday, July 13, and continue from eight to ten days.

The camp ground is situated two miles west of Biloxi, Miss., 80 miles from New Orleans, 60 miles from Mobile, fronting directly upon the Gulf of Mexico, less than one hundred yards from the sea, and less than five hundred from the New Orleans and Mobile railroad. Occupying an elevated position, it is dry, clean and healthful, free from fevers, agues and epidemics. Shaded by a grove of rich and various foliage, and looking out upon the wide, wide waves, it enjoys the cool refreshing breezes of the sea, while the flowing wells of pure, mineral springs furnish free supplies of pleasant, health giving drink.

The managers of the winter season have been reinforced, new piers and bath houses erected, a orderly architectural and convenient restaurant has been built, and other improvements have been made, and the grounds are more beautiful and inviting than ever.

Comfortable, plain wearing tents or cottages of various dimensions, for individuals or families are furnished on most reasonable terms, which can be partially supplied with furniture on the grounds, at moderate rates.

Comfortable lodgings are furnished at fifty cents per night, and good board had at the restaurant at fifty cents each, for breakfast and supper, and seventy-five cents for dinner; or $1 50 per day.

The restaurant is expected to be open during the season, and comfortable lodgings can be had by persons desiring to remain after the close of the camp meeting.

Reduced rates of fare and freight have been secured on the railroads.

On the Louisville and Nashville railroad, from New Orleans to the camp-ground, for the round trip $3, and at the same rate per mile, from Mobile to camp ground, for the round trip, from way stations at five cents per mile for the round trip.

Tickets will be on sale at the offices and depots from Monday, the eleventh to the twenty-third of July, inclusive, and be good to the twenty-fifth.

Freight will be transported at one half the current rates, and delivered at the freight depot, Gravier street and levee, by 5 o'clock P. M., will go the same day.

On the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans Jackson road from Canton and all points south to New Orleans, at four cents per mile, for round trip, tickets on sale from the eleventh to the twenty-second of July, inclusive and good to the twenty-sixth.

On the Shreveport Louisiana and Texas road, from Opelousas or any point east of that, regular tickets to New Orleans will be furnished at usual fare, and return on the same ticket; issued on the eleventh to the twenty-second of July, inclusive and good to the twenty-sixth.

On the New Orleans and Pacific road, to Donaldsonville, and back to Baton Rouge; from Baton Rouge, $1, and from Donaldsonville, $2 50, one fare and return on same ticket. Tickets issued on the eleventh to the twenty-second of July, inclusive and good to the 18th.

On the Mobile and Ohio road, for three cents per mile each way. Tickets issued from the eleventh to twenty-first of July, inclusive and good to the twenty-sixth.

All tickets must be stamped at the office on the camp-ground, to be good to return on.

Persons desiring information on any point in regard to the camp-ground will address J. P. Hamilton on the grounds, or any one of the trustees.

W. H. FOSTER, President.

PHILIP HALLIGAN, Secretary.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., June 20, 1881.

DISTRICT CONFERENCES.

The District Conference for the Mobile district, Alabama Conference, will be held at Jackson, Clarke county, Ala., beginning on Thursday, August 11, at nine o'clock, A. M.

25 D. R. BLUE, P. E.

Homer District Conference will convene at the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Arcadia, Bienville parish, La., on Wednesday, July 27, at eight o'clock, P. M. Opening sermon by Rev. J. E. Bradley. Thursday, 11 A. M., lecture on "Sunday Schools," by Rev. J. M. Brown. Friday, 11 A. M. lecture on "Missions," by Rev. J. W. Medlock. Saturday, 11 A. M., lecture on "Ministerial Support," by Hon. J. H. Chappell, of Homer, La. Sunday, 11 A. M., sermon on "The Integrity of the Methodist Church."

The usual business of the session will be attended to at other hours than those named. Who, that has been elected, will be too indifferent to the interests of Methodism to attend this Conference?

Let the preachers be ready to make all their reports the first day.

J. A. PARKER, P. E.

Greensboro District Conference will meet in Havana, July 28, (Thursday). There will be preaching Wednesday night. Delegates coming by the Alabama and Great Southern Railroad, will get off at Steward's station, six miles from Havana, where they will be met with conveyances, if they come on Thursday morning. Recording Stewards will forward names of delegates to Rev. A. Hood, and carry their Quarterly Conference Record Books with them, or send them. Delegates must be on hand at the right time, if they wish to be met.

B. CRUMBART, P. E.

WILLIAMSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Preachers in charge will please furnish me with a list of names of delegates, local preachers and visitors who will attend the District Conference of Williamsburg District, to be held at Columbia, Miss. Persons on arriving at Columbia will report at the hotel of Rev. W. J. Ball for assignment to their homes.

D. W. BROWN, P. C.

NOTICE.—The Woodville District Conference will be held in Aquite City, July 28 to 31, inclusive. Sunday School Institute will hold its annual session on the third day of the Conference, Saturday, at 10 o'clock, A. M., as a part of Conference business. Pastors will please have their reports in writing, upon subjects indicated in the Discipline, pp. 52, 54.

We would suggest that the report on item 3 (schools) be separate; they will be called for on Saturday of the session. Baptists will have their Quarterly Conference Journals at Conference for inspection. Public preaching each day of the session, at 11 A. M. and 7½ P. M.

Annual Sermon to the Conference on Thursday night by Rev. I. B. Roberson, of Clinton, La.

22 JAS. A. GRIFFEY, P. E.

Quarterly Conferences.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

GREENSBORO DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Greensboro station	July 2
Greensboro circuit, at Bethel	3, 4
Livingstone and Newbern, at Livingstone	9, 10
Green circuit, at Sardis	16, 17
New Prospect circuit, at Prospect Chapel	23, 24
Havana circuit, at Havana	30, 31
Forkland circuit, at Watson's Chapel	Aug. 6, 7
Collinsville circuit, at Snail Chapel	13, 14
Bethel circuit, at Brewerville	20, 21
Cuba circuit, at Reid Chapel	27, 28
Gaston circuit, at Sipsey	30, 31
Butler and Mt. Sterling, at Butler	Sept. 3, 4
Cedarbow circuit, at Pleasant Valley	10, 11
Demopolis station	17, 18
	24, 25

B. FLEURANT, P. E.

MARIANA DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Marianna station	June 11, 12
Calhoun mission, at Shiloh	18, 19
Cairo Gordo mission, at Bethlehem	25, 26
Geneva circuit, at Ebo	July 2, 3
Big Creek circuit, at Pleasant Grove	9, 10
Chipola mission, at St. Andrew's Bay	16, 17
Greenwood circuit, at Mount's Chapel	23, 24
Headland mission, at New Hope	Nov. 30, 31
Holmes Valley circuit, at Salem	6, 7
Freeport and Walton mission, at Black Creek	13, 14
	20, 21

J. C. COLEMAN, P. E.

MONTGOMERY DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Auburn station	June 8, 12
Tallassee station	25, 26
Hurtsville circuit, at Antioch	July 2, 3
Sleigh circuit, at Lebanon	9, 10
Elmore circuit, at Long Pine Chapel	16, 17
Crawford circuit, at Mt. Zion	23, 24
Tuskegee circuit, at Tabor	Aug. 6, 7
Loachapoka circuit, at Opelika Hill	13, 14
Lincoln mission, at Camp Ground	20, 21
Tallapoosa circuit, at Centerpoint	27, 28
Tuskegee station	Sept. 3, 4
Montgomery station	10, 11
Opelika station	17, 18

The District Conference will meet at Sofaulga, July 21, at nine o'clock, A. M. The introductory sermon by Rev. J. R. Peavy, at eleven o'clock, A. M.

The Recording Stewards will please send the names of delegates and members to Rev. M. P. Dickinson, Leachapoka, Ala., as early as practicable.

22 L. F. MANGHAM, P. E.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

ALEXANDRIA DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Bayou Rapides and Evergreen	July 30, 31
Cattle	Aug. 6, 7
Abbeville	Wednesday 10
Alexandria	13, 14
Spring Creek	20, 21
Gaphies	27, 28
Cenor	Sept. 3, 4
Columbia	10, 11
Jena	17, 18
Harrisburg	20
Shelly Island	24, 25
Little River	Oct. 1, 2
Shreveport	16, 16

P. G. HUCETT, P. E.

PENSACOLA DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Pensacola	June 4, 5
Warrington	5, 6
Molino	11, 12
Pollard	18, 19
Milton	25, 26
Powelton	July 2, 3
Perdido	6
Stockton	9, 10
Yellow River	16, 17
Gonzalez	23, 24
Evergreen	30, 31
Grand Ecore	30, 31
Monroeville	Aug. 6, 7
Monterey	13, 14
Sepulga	20, 21

23 S. H. COX, P. E.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

WOODVILLE DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Clinton	July 2, 3
Bayou Sara, at Tunica	9, 10
Wilkinson, at Mlewow	10, 17
St. Helena, at Darlington	23, 24
Amite City, at Amite City	30, 31
Franklington, at Parkers	Aug. 13, 14
Livingstone, at Camp Ground	20, 21
North Wilkinson, Mars Hill	27, 28
Amite, at Stoerea	Sept. 3, 4
Jackson, at Soleno	10, 11
Pickins and Port Hudson, at Pickins	17, 18
East Feliciana, at W. Cooper	24, 25
Whites, A. B. Miller	Oct. 1, 2
Baton Rouge, J. S. Parker	8, 9
Woodville, I. B. Roberson	15, 16

Note.—For changes without date, pastors will hold their quarterly meetings, assisted by brethren named, in July or August. Appoint the time best suited to your work, and give brethren indicated due notice.

Brethren will please keep me. The third round is nine weeks, leaving fourteen Sabbaths for the fourth round.

The District Conference will be in Amite City, July 28 to 31.

25 JAS. A. GRIFFEY, P. E.

VICKSBURG DIST.—THIRD ROUND.

Vicksburg	July 2, 3
Mt Olivet and Sunflower mission, at Shiloh	9, 10
Rolling Fork	16, 17
Clover Hill	23, 24
Warren circuit, at Redwood	30, 31
Port Gibson and Martin	Aug. 6, 7
Rocky Springs	13, 14
Onega, at Bear Creek	20, 21
Fayette, Cane Ridge	27, 28
Meadville	Sept. 3, 4
Natchez	10, 11
Kingston, at Linwood	17, 18

24 JOHN A. ELLIS, P. E.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ROYAL

BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Made from Grape Cream Tartar. No other preparation makes such light, flaky hot breads, or luxurious pastry. Can be eaten by Dyspeptics without fear of the ills resulting from heavy, indigestible food. Sold only in cans, by all Grocers.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER Co., New York.

No. 74 USE St. Charles St. THE

A WONDERFUL and SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY

THE MEDICATED GLASS.

YOU CAN GET A PAIR OF SPECTACLES THAT WILL KEEP YOUR EYES IN AS GOOD CONDITION forever after as when first you use them. These Medicated Glasses have been thoroughly examined and analyzed by Prof. Berger, the great French oculist, and Dr. Carl Hollander, the famous German medicist, and pronounced as far superior to any glasses yet made, and recommended as the only glasses to be used to save the eye. American oculists claim that the Medicated Glasses have no equal, and can, in some cases, restore the eye to its original sight, when used in time, and in no case can the eye become impaired by the use of these glasses, if properly adapted, for the following reasons:

1. The chemicals soften the light to the eye, completely doing away with that tiresome sensation that is usually experienced in using glasses after one or two hours' use.

2. The medicated properties contained in the glass make it as hard as a diamond. It will retain its polish and never become dull or dim, so dear you will always see through it as bright and clear as at first.

3. The chemicals keep the glasses cold as ice; result is, your optic nerves always cool, doing away with any feverish sensation to the eye.

4. These glasses have no equal for night reading or sewing. With them you can sit up all night and the light has no effect on the eye, with no tiresome sensation whatever, which necessarily continues to improve the eye.

We sell all over and warrant our work, or money refunded. Persons living at a distance desiring the Medicated Glasses can be fitted by sending address with postage stamp; when they will receive circular, mode of testing the strength of glasses wanted. The Medicated Glasses can only be had at 74 St. Charles street. We do not employ peddlers. AGENTS WANTED.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS. NONE GENUINE UNLESS STAMPED "MEDICATED."

HERC. HOUSAH,

CRESCENT CITY SPECTACLE COMPANY,

74 St. Charles Street, New Orleans.

In writing to them mention this paper.

Factors' & Traders' Insurance Company

37 CARONDELET STREET,

Paid-Up Capital $1,000,000.

ED. A. PALFREY, President.
JOHN CHAFFE, Vice President.
THOS. F. WALKER, Secretary.

Issues Policies Covering Fire, River and Marine Risks at the Lowest Tariff Rates.

DIRECTORS:

John L. Neville	John Chaffe
Richard Milliken	Samuel Hollander
F. McWaters	A. H. Mott
F. Lott Legett	Simon H. Fox
Wm. J. Behan	R. J. Tesheman,
Chas. Chaffe	J. C. Denis,
Wm. Hartwell	C. A. Lewis
A. F. Jonin,	A. M. Beckham,
Henry Abraham	Louis Dyer,
A. Roman	L. W. Seeligson
Wm. Cunningham,	Moses Lazarus,
R. T. Burkett	Wm. A. Gwin,

Chas. A. Black.

C:R:O:Q:U:E:T

Season for 1881.

A full assortment of Croquet Sets received, ranging from $1 50 to $12 per set.

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

KURSHEEDT & BIENVENU,

MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS,

MONUMENTS,

Tombs, Headstones, Cemetery Railing,

MARBLE SLATE,

And Iron Mantels and Grates.

111, 118, 120, 122 Camp St., New Orleans.

SPORTSMEN'S DEPOT,

RICHARD RHODES,

55 ST. CHARLES STREET 55

NEW ORLEANS.

Articles for Fishermen of all Kinds.

Rods, Nets, Hooks, Lines, and every desirable Article for the Angler, wholesale and retail. Guns imported to order. J. H. Cooper's Breech and Muzzle Loading Guns always on hand. All kinds of the proved artificial Baits. Repairing of Guns carefully done by experienced workmen, and Fishing Rod made to order. Address Postoffice Box 1509.

BEE CULTURE.

MANUAL OF THE APIARY.

By A. J. COOK,

Professor of Entomology in the Michigan State Agricultural College.

THIRD EDITION.

Revised, enlarged, mostly rewritten, and beautifully illustrated. Being now it is fully up with the times on every conceivable subject that interests the apiarist.

It is not only instructive but intensely interesting. This work is a masterly production, and one that no bee keeper, however limited his means, can afford to do without. It is printed in the best style on fine book paper. Price, bound in cloth, $1 25 post paid.

G. T. LATHROP,
112 Camp street, New Orleans.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PERRY TRADE MARK & CO'S

STEEL PENS

of superior English make; famous for durability and elasticity; great variety of styles suited to every kind of writing. For sale by dealers generally.

TWENTY-FIVE assorted samples for trial, including the "U" AND "FALCON" celebrated Pens, by mail, on receipt of Twenty-five Cents.

VISON, BLAKEMAN, TAYLOR & CO.,

SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U. S.

NEW YORK.

25-CENTS--SEND--25-CENTS

IN POSTAGE STAMPS FOR

A HANDY DICTIONARY!

Giving the spelling, pronunciation and meaning of the words, useful tables, the metric system of weights and measures, a list of foreign words and phrases, alphabetically arranged and many engravings.

A book of 320 pages, bound in cloth, and mailed postpaid on receipt of 25 cents, by

G. T. LATHROP,
New Orleans.

P. WERLEIN'S,

135 Canal Street,

NEW ORLEANS,

The Leading Piano House IN THE SOUTH!

SELLS

CHICKERING PIANOS,

MATHUSHEK PIANOS,

HALE'S PIANOS,

On more easy terms and at lower prices than any other house in the South.

Full guarantee. Will be sent for trial one month if desired. Catalogues on application. Letters cheerfully and promptly answered.

Old Pianos taken in exchange. Second hand Pianos very cheap.

A Fine Stock of Organs.

ESTEY'S,

MASON & HAMLIN'S,

STERLING'S.

Sold on other terms, at prices exceeding low. Please send for catalogues. Will send Organs on trial anywhere in the South. Organs as low as $30. Cannot be undersold.

MUSIC.

MUSIC INSTRUCTION BOOKS,

PIANO COVERS,

STOOLS in great variety.

1-3 Price on Music to Teachers.

Musical Instruments.

Imported direct from European factories. 50 per cent. discount to dealers.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

Catalogues sent on application.

For anything pertaining to Music call on or write to

P. WERLEIN,

No. 135 Canal Street.